

Xenometer's (Eddie Ryan) Manifesto

Yo, it's Xenometer/Eddie Ryan,

This ain't the easiest thing to drop, but here we go. Vibin' on VidLii has been a wild ride. From early mornin' caffeine boosts to suicidal thoughts, it's been a real rollercoaster. The laughs in the virtual break room, the annoying times when uploads were playing hard to get – all those little things that make this journey.

Life's nudging me in a different direction, whispering that it's time for a switch-up. That means saying peace to my channel, leaving behind a bunch of vids, like a digital archive on this platform's timeline.

Gonna miss the squad(Mainly YTPMaker, TrannyKiller), the last-minute video grind, and the support that felt more like fam than just online buds. It's kinda sad knowing I won't be in on the everyday shenanigans – the inside jokes, the shared sighs during arguments, and the silent agreement that we're all just winging it.

Big shoutout to everyone. It's been real hanging with this crew. We weathered storms together, high-fived for wins, and learned from the fails. Carrying those experiences with me, like a worn-out meme marking the twists and turns of our online journey.

I'd like to also say that the time I almost fucked my sister and dog were during a time I had serious issues with my mind and I sort of regret it(Not really because I'll be dead eventually)

As I log off for the last time, memories flooding in – the highs that felt like reaching the peak of a digital mountain, and the lows making me question if my gear was up for the grind. Y'all have been more than just online buds; you've been the characters in a story playing out in front of my screen.

No lie, there's a lump in my throat saying peace. It ain't easy letting go of this daily online rhythm. But sometimes, to find new edits, you gotta bounce from the usual tunes.

So, here's to the squad, the late-night convos, the edit shares on discord, and the growth within these virtual walls. May the next chapter be as wild and packed with online adventures as this one has been.

Goodbye lads.

Xenometer/Eddie Ryan