(Heb. olam) (30:8; 60:19, 20; Ps. 89:2; Amos 9:11) Strong’s #5769: This word is likely related to the one that means “to hide”; thus this term connotes “hidden, unknown time,” usually referring to the future but sometimes to the past. The word may speak of time that is limited by a single life, that reaches through several generations (Gen. 6:3, 4; Deut. 15:17; Neh. 2:3; Mal. 3:4), or that extends to the beginning of the created order (64:4; Gen. 49:26). Sometimes the word refers to a period of time beyond death (45:17; Prov. 8:23; Eccl. 12:5; Dan. 12:2). Thus the term is quite naturally used of God, who is eternal and hidden (40:28; Gen. 21:33; Ps. 90:2). It refers to God’s never-ending covenants, statutes, salvation, and love (Gen. 9:12; Lev. 16:29–31; Jer. 31:3). The Bible also describes the coming Messiah, His kingdom, and His priesthood as eternal (9:7; Pss. 45:6, 7; 110:4).

60:19, 20 These verses form the basis for the description of the New Jerusalem in the new heaven and earth (Rev. 21:1, 23; 22:5; 65:17; 66:22).

60:21 In the new Zion, people shall all be righteous (4:3; Rev. 21:27). Though the exiles were back in the land (49:8; 54:3), they looked to a new Zion, when Israel would inherit the land forever. The branch of My planting: For similar references to God’s people as a branch, see 4:2; 5:1–7; 61:3.

60:22 A little one shall become a thousand: The inhabitants of the new Zion will be prolific (54:3; Lev. 26:8).

61:1–11 This is the fifth of the Servant songs. In this song, the emphasis is on the Servant's mission.

61:1 The Spirit: For similar references, see 11:2; 30:1; 42:1; 48:16; 59:21; Luke 3:22. The Me featured so prominently here is the same Servant as in 42:1; 49:1; 50:4; 52:13. Several reasons point to this identification: (1) The Servant refers to God as His Master, the Lord (compare 50:4); (2) He has received the Lord's Spirit (compare 42:1); (3) He brings a word of healing and liberation (compare vv. 1–3 with 42:7; 49:9; 50:4); (4) He proclaims the "year of the Lord" (compare v. 2 with 49:8); (5) He is associated with an everlasting covenant (compare v. 8 with 42:6; 49:8); and (6) Jesus Christ inaugurated His ministry by identifying Himself as this Servant (Luke 4:17–21). The passage may also refer to Isaiah, but if so, he is only a pale shadow of Christ. the LORD has anointed: This phrase signifies that the Servant is more than a prophet, since only kings and high priests—with the exception of Elisha (1 Kin. 19:16)—were anointed (45:1). The name Messiah, or Christ in Greek, means the "Anointed One." Poor also means "humble," which like brokenhearted, indicates those who confidently hope in God in spite of their present distress (11:4; Pss. 34:18; 51:17). Proclaim liberty probably alludes to the official inauguration of the "Year of Release" or Jubilee (Lev. 25:10). Captives refers to those in bondage to the wicked (58:6) or to wickedness in general—not to the exiles as in 51:14. Those who are bound is translated "prisoners" in 49:9, where it refers in part to the exiles; here it means "captives."

61:2 The acceptable year of the LORD corresponds to "the day of salvation" (49:8) and "the year of My redeemed" (63:4). our God: For a similar use of this term see 25:9. To comfort all who mourn: For related passages see 12:1; 49:13; Matt. 5:4.

61:3 A host lavished on a guest the oil of joy (Ps. 23:5; 45:7; Luke 7:46). He may be glorified: For similar references see 44:23; 49:5.

61:4, 5 They refers to Jews (58:12) and Gentiles (60:10). desolations of many generations: See 58:12; 60:10.

61:6 priests of the LORD: With Christ, they will make intercession for sinners (53:12; Ex. 19:6; 1 Pet. 2:9; Rev. 1:6). Servants here means "ministers," a synonym for "priests." (1 Kin. 8:11).

61:7, 8 Everlasting joy: For other references to eternal joy, see 35:10; 51:11; 60:19, 20.

61:9 Shall be known has the sense of “shall be renowned.” among the Gentiles … whom the LORD has blessed: This section alludes to the fulfillment of the promises made to Abraham (41:8; 51:2; Gen. 12:3).

61:10 I and the parallel My soul refer to personified Zion. Rejoice is translated “joy” in v. 3 (65:18). Clothed signifies the Servant’s new glorified status or condition (47:2; 52:1; 59:17). Ornaments is translated “beauty” in v. 3. bride: For a similar image, see 49:18.

61:11 spring forth: This phrase is also found in 42:9; 43:19; 45:8 to describe the coming of God’s salvation. Righteousness here means “deliverance” (54:17). before all the nations: For related passages, see 52:10; 60:2, 3.

(Heb. tsedeq) (62:1; Pss. 45:7; 85:10; 132:9; Prov. 1:3) Strong’s #6664: This term denotes conformity to an ethical or moral standard. It occurs in reference to honorable business dealings (Gen. 30:33; Lev. 19:36; Deut. 25:15) and proper speech (Ps. 52:3; Prov. 8:8). The term is used most often in relation to one’s standing with legal authorities, either human or divine. The word is frequently found in the context of other legal terms such as judgment or justice (Lev. 19:15; Pss. 23:3; 72:2; 119:6–8). Righteousness, judgment, and justice are declared to be the foundation of God’s throne (Pss. 89:14; 97:2). God’s righteousness is associated with deliverance. It is in this context that one of the divine names of God is revealed: “The Lord Our Righteousness” (41:10; 51:5; Jer. 23:6; 33:16).

62:1, 2 The repetition of righteousness (v. 1) shows that the divine oracle and the prophet's comment are linked. A new name, like new clothing (61:10), signifies a new status (Gen. 17:5, 15; 32:28; Rev. 2:17). For the new names see vv. 4, 12.

62:3 Zion does not receive a crown of glory, or royal diadem, but is one in the hand of the LORD.

62:4, 5 The name Forsaken is a symbolic name for Jerusalem (the symbolic name Immanuel in 7:14). It appears as the name of a person in 1 Kin. 22:42. For related references see 54:6; 60:15. Desolate: The term is also found in 49:8, 19; 54:1. Hephzibah and Beulah are symbolic names, though Hephzibah does appear as a personal name at 2 Kin. 21:1. The names are explained in the end of the verse.

62:6, 7 I refers to the Lord (vv. 1, 8). Watchmen refers to prophets (56:10). You who make mention of the LORD is Isaiah's synonym for "watchmen" and shows that the prophets were intercessors. The phrases do not keep silent and give Him no rest relate the prophets' prayer to the Lord's promises in v. 1 (64:12; 65:6).

62:8 The LORD has sworn: For other examples see 14:24; 45:23; 54:9. no longer: This phrase gives assurance that the covenantal blessings will outlast the curses.

62:9 in My holy courts: This phrase anticipates the rebuilding of the temple (Lev. 23:39, 40; Deut. 12:17, 18; 14:22–27; 16:9–17).

62:10 For the double imperatives go through and build up, see 40:1; 51:17; 52:11. The prophets not only prayed for the people (vv. 6, 7), they encouraged them to worship. Gates probably refers to those in the "holy courts" (v. 9). The prophet commanded the worshipers of v. 9 to pass through the gates in order to praise the Lord. Prepare the way means to encourage the people to come to the temple for worship (40:3, 4; 57:14). Stones refers to any impediment to worship (57:14). Lift up a banner (5:26; 11:10) is an encouragement to all peoples to worship God.

62:11 Proclaimed to the end of the world links this verse with "a banner for the peoples" in v. 10. The Hebrew verb rendered say is plural, indicating that a number of people will declare this announcement of salvation to Jerusalem. your salvation is coming: For similar references to the coming of the Lord's salvation, see 40:9; Zech. 9:9; Matt. 21:5.

62:12 The pronoun they refers to the Gentiles (v. 2). The Holy People: For similar descriptions of the redeemed, see 4:3; Ex. 19:6.

63:1 The word comes links this verse with 62:11. Edom epitomized Israel's enemies (Ps. 137:7; Lam. 4:21, 22; Ezek. 25:12; 35:1–15; Obad. 13, 14); it was famous for its wine-making (v. 3 for a reference to wine). Note that the text does not say God vanquished Edom, but rather the "peoples" (vv. 3, 6). garments: See the warrior's garments in 59:17. Bozrah was the chief town of Edom (34:6; Jer. 49:13). The pronoun I refers to the Lord.

63:2 The apparel will be red from bloodstains.

63:3 The pronoun I is applied to Christ in Rev. 19:15. trodden: For this figure of judgment, see Lam. 1:15; Rev. 14:17–20. The winepress represents the battle.

63:4–6 year of My redeemed: This phrase alludes to the "law of redemption" of slaves and property (61:2; Lev. 25). A close relative of a slave had the right and duty to buy back the slave and rescue a family member from destitution.

63:7 I will mention: Isaiah, representing the people, publicly proclaims God's saving mercies (Pss. 77:12; 89:1). The plural words lovingkindnesses and praises refer to the Lord's many acts of love and loyalty to His people. The word lovingkindnesses is translated "sure mercies" in 55:3 (Ps. 89:1).

63:8 In the Hebrew Bible, the term rendered My people is used in two ways: (1) for those who were united nationally to God by blood and history through Abraham's flesh (48:1; Ex. 3:7) and (2) for those who were united to Him inwardly through Abraham's faith and obedience (Lev. 26:12; Deut. 29:13). The nation is in view here. Lie means "to deal falsely." Israel's rebellion was unexpected (1:2, 3). Just as godly parents expect godly children (Prov. 22:6), so God Himself expected godly spiritual children.

63:9 Their affliction probably refers to God's sympathy for His people in Egypt (Ex. 2:25; 3:7) and at the time of the judges (Judg. 10:16). He was afflicted: God shares the hurt of His people (Ex. 2:23–25). Paul's persecution of the members of the early church caused Christ to be afflicted (Acts 9:4). Bore and carried are allusions to Ex. 19:4 (Deut. 1:31; 32:10–12).

63:10 rebelled: The Hebrew verb means "to be contentious" (Num. 20:10; Pss. 78:40; 106:33, 43). The Holy Spirit is referred to from time to time in the Hebrew Scriptures, and several times in the Book of Isaiah (11:2; 42:1).

63:11 Days of old refers to the period of the Exodus and the Wilderness. The sea is an allusion to the Red Sea (50:2; Ex. 14:21–29). Shepherd, referring to Moses, is plural. Christ is the greater Shepherd (John 10:11; Heb. 13:20; 1 Pet. 5:4). Put His Holy Spirit within them is an allusion to Num. 11:17, 25.

63:12 Glorious arm is an allusion to Ex. 15:6 (41:13; 51:9). Dividing the water is a reference to Ex. 14:16, 21 (Ps. 78:13).

63:13, 14 The account of the Exodus and settlement of the land is concluded with two images. The first is a horse moving surefootedly across the sea bottom as through a wilderness—that is, a "desert"; the second is a beast, meaning "a domesticated herd," returning from grazing on mountainsides into the valley … to rest (Deut. 12:9; Josh. 1:13; 11:23; 21:44).

63:15 Heaven refers to God's universal rule over space and time (Ps. 11:4–6). The pronoun me is a personified Israel (59:9–15).

63:16 The people of Israel are the Lord's children (v. 8). He is their Father because He created them as a nation (Deut. 32:6; Jer. 3:4, 19). It is rare in the pages of the Hebrew Bible to find the explicit statement of the Fatherhood of God, though it is often presented implicitly. Abraham and Israel, the people's human fathers (51:2), were limited in their knowledge by time and space—in contrast to the Lord, the people's Father and Redeemer from Everlasting (41:14).

63:17 us: Isaiah identifies himself with his people (59:9–15). The Lord, confirming the people in their sin, hardened their hearts (6:10; Ex. 4:21; Ps. 95:8).

63:18, 19 Called by Your name signifies the Lord's ownership of the people (Deut. 28:10; Jer. 14:9).

64:1, 2 Oh, that … You would come down: This appeal for the Lord to appear and strike terror in the enemy is based on His appearances at Sinai (Ex. 19:16–18) and for David (Ps. 18:7–15). The image of fire often symbolizes God's presence (10:17; 31:9; Ex. 19:18; Heb. 12:18), especially in judgment (Heb. 12:29).

64:3 Awesome things: The appearance of God is a fearsome event (Ex. 19:16–21; Deut. 10:21; 2 Sam. 7:23; Ps. 106:22). for which we did not look: God's saving acts surpass human expectations (Eph. 3:20). The mountains shook: For a similar description see Ex. 19:18.

64:4 Paul cites this verse with some changes in 1 Cor. 2:9. Nor … seen any God besides You: For similar ideas see 43:11; Deut. 4:35.

64:5 You meet him … Who remembers You in Your ways: These words reinforce the idea of v. 4. does righteousness: For a similar phrase, see 56:1. The word indeed provides a transition from the petition (63:15—64:5) to the confession of sin (64:5–7).

64:6 Unclean means the people were unfit for God's presence. Filthy rags refers to garments stained during menstruation ("sins … like scarlet" in 1:18), making a woman unclean (Lev. 15:19–24; Ezek. 36:17). As a leaf signifies the people's worthlessness and separation from God.

64:7 No one who calls is an exaggerated phrase calling attention to the people's apathy. hidden: God is never really "in hiding," but He does obscure His presence because of human sin (1:15).

64:8 The prophet Isaiah, as a representative of the whole community, turned to God for aid. He called upon the Lord as Father, invoking the special relationship between Israel and God. The term Father should not be understood according to our modern conceptions of fatherhood. Father is not so much a term of endearment, as it was a word of authority and ownership. Under Israelite law, a parent's children where his or her property, over which he or she exercised much power. The covenant community was helpless before God as Father like clay in the hands of a potter. The prophet interceded for the people for forgiveness so that God's faithfulness might be revealed again in a restored Jerusalem.

64:9 Do not be furious claims God's promise in 54:7, 8. Nor remember claims God's promise in 43:25. Please look refers to God's "hiding" of Himself in v. 7.

64:10 cities … Zion … Jerusalem: The prophetic picture of the devastation of the land following the Babylonian invasion is used as a means of appeal to the heart of God.

64:11 Holy and beautiful may be rephrased as “exquisite beauty.” Our fathers praised You suggests that the speakers are at least a generation removed from the fall of the temple.

64:12 Will You restrain Yourself: The people use the language of love, of remembrance, of family, and of shared values in this section (vv. 8–12) to implore God to act again on their behalf.

65:1 I was sought literally means "I allowed Myself to be sought." I was found literally means "I allowed Myself to be found." This promise links this oracle with Isaiah's lament (64:7). Here I am (58:9) is repeated for emphasis (the repetition of the word comfort in 40:1). The Lord's glorious presence assures salvation. A nation that was not called by My name includes the Gentiles (42:1; 49:6, 22; 52:15) and the remnant who "sought" God (v. 10). Together they are the servants who will be called "by another name" (v. 15). Paul saw his ministry to the Gentiles as a fulfillment of this promise (Rom. 10:20, 21). Peter calls the church "a holy nation" (1 Pet. 2:9).

65:2 I have stretched out My hands pictures God beckoning Israel to respond to Him. All day long suggests the Lord's long-suffering patience. Rebellious describes Israel (63:10). Who, repeated six times in vv. 2–5, introduces a sorry catalogue of Israel's abominable religious practices: arrogance (v. 2), open defiance (v. 3), idolatrous fertility rites (v. 3), divination (v. 4), eating unclean foods (v. 4), and blasphemous self-righteousness (v. 5). their own thoughts: Contrast the Lord's thoughts in 55:8, 9.

65:3 To My face means "openly." The people did not hide their shameful practices or restrain their evil habits. The Babylonians would commonly offer incense to the "host of heaven" on the brick or tile roofs of houses (2 Kin. 23:12; Jer. 19:13; Zeph. 1:5).

65:4 Spend the night in the tombs may refer to the practice of seeking an oracle from a god or from the dead. The Law prohibited eating swine's flesh (66:17; Lev. 11:7; Deut. 14:8). Abominable things refers to other foods that were prohibited to Israel (Lev. 11). When the people of Israel ate the same foods as their neighbors, they ceased to be holy or distinct.

65:5 I am holier than you: The idolaters were like the worst of the Pharisees in the NT times. Jesus called the Pharisees children of the devil (John 8:44), but they regarded themselves as better than others (Luke 18:9–14). Smoke and fire stand for things that provoke God's anger.

65:6 It is written refers to the heavenly book that records sin. Royal courts in the ancient world recorded unpunished crimes. I will not keep silence: For a similar phrase, see 62:1. repay: For similar references to the Lord's vengeance see 33:10–14; 34:8; 59:18.

65:7 the iniquities of your fathers: For related passages, see Ex. 20:5; Ezek. 18:20. blasphemed Me: The Israelites rejected and offended God by offering sacrifices to the false gods of other nations on the hilltops (Ezek. 20:27, 28). Therefore: The punishment matches the crime (47:11).

65:8 New wine represents the servants (54:17); the otherwise unproductive cluster represents all Israel (5:1, 2). The association of wine and blessing here is common in the Scriptures. Servants include "the remnant," as well as foreigners (56:6). not destroy them all: For a related passage see 1:8, 9.

65:9 I will bring forth descendants is fulfilled in Christ and in all those who are found in Him (Gal. 3:16, 26–29). Jacob and Judah represent all Israel. An heir involves the Messiah (Gen. 49:10; Matt. 21:38; Gal. 3:16). My elect: For a related passage see 41:8, 9 (compare Gal. 3:26–29).

65:10 Sharon, the coastal plain in the west, and the Valley of Achor, near Jericho in the east, represent the whole land.

65:11 The word who occurs four times in this verse, introducing more (vv. 2–5) of Israel's sins. These sins involved forsaking the Lord, forgetting His place of worship, worshiping Gad, a god of good luck, and worshiping Meni, a god of fate.

65:12 When I called, you did not answer contrasts with "Before they call, I will answer" in v. 24.

65:13 Therefore logically connects this stanza with the first two, vv. 1–7, 8–12. Behold … But: The pattern here recalls the blessings and curses on Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal (Deut. 27), in the Beatitudes (Luke 6:20–26), and in Christ's picture of the Last Judgment (Matt. 25:31–46). Eat and drink: This is a festive meal accompanied by rejoicing.

63:14 Sing here develops the idea of rejoicing in v. 13 (12:1–6; 35:10; 61:7).

65:15 The chosen (v. 9) will use the apostates' name as a curse by invoking the terrible fate of the apostates upon others. The chosen will say, "The Lord make you like apostate Israel." See Jer. 29:22 for an example of how the Babylonian captives used the names of Zedekiah and Ahab as a curse. Another name signifies the launching of a new era (62:2); this name would be associated with blessing (v. 16), not with a curse.

65:16 He who blesses himself in the earth—Jew or Gentile—will invoke the Lord's name, because He is the God of truth.

65:17, 18 I create may also be translated "I am creating" or "I am about to create." new heavens and a new earth: As God fashioned the existing heavens and earth, so He will fashion a new cosmos that will be ready for

His presence and for the enjoyment of His people. Former encompasses everything up to the creation of the new cosmos (Rev. 21:4). Be glad and rejoice means "to be openly, deliriously happy." Saints are called upon to celebrate by faith the coming glorious salvation (66:10). Create Jerusalem signifies that it will be entirely new, with no resemblance to the old city (62:7). John also links the "new heaven and new earth" with the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:1, 2).

65:19 My people: This title for the citizens of Jerusalem is also used in 63:8. weeping shall no longer he heard: For similar ideas concerning God's coming salvation, see 25:8; 35:10; 51:11.

65:20 the child shall die one hundred years old: On one level, these words indicate a return in the coming kingdom to the extended life spans that are noted before the Flood (Gen. 5). It appears that people will not be affected by disease and aging in the same way as in our present world. Sinner can also mean "the one who fails" to live a long life.

New Work for a New World

Did you know that in the world to come you will have work to do, and that your work will be gratifying, fulfilling, and enduring? According to the glimpse of the future that Isaiah was given, people will build houses and cultivate vineyards (Is. 65:21, 22), an indication that God's new earth will be filled with meaningful activity.

This should come as a comfort to you if your present occupation seems insignificant, boring, or dissatisfying. In the world to come, you will "long enjoy the work of { your} hands" (65:22). That is, you will see the results of what you accomplish and enjoy the benefits of your efforts. You will not "labor in vain" (65:23) the way so many workers do now. Isaiah's vision has reference to this world as it was originally created. It was "very good" in God's estimation (Gen. 1:31), and the work of the world was good" as well. In His new world, God will restore work to its original purpose.

In the meantime, we can serve God as His coworkers, using the abilities and resources that He has given us to wisely manage this earth and meet the needs of people. We can also anticipate our future with God by walking with Him through life and learning what He has in store for us. And we can share our future hope with others, encouraging them to place their lives and future in the loving hands of Christ.

65:21, 22 These verses imply meaningful work in both the coming kingdom as well as in the new cosmos, along with a reverse of the curse (Deut. 28:49–52). houses … vineyards: The life of blessing in the coming kingdom is presented in terms that would have been readily understood by the people of Isaiah's day (Mic. 4:4). Industry will not be limited to these twin pursuits, but the happy, blessed life is indicated by them. As the days of a tree indicates longevity and stability (v. 20). The words long enjoy reinforces the idea of longevity.

65:23 They shall not labor in vain: These words speak of God reversing the curse on this cosmos (Gen. 3:17–22) and removing the curse that came in the time of Moses (Deut. 28:30). The Hebrew word rendered vain means "empty."

65:24 Before they call, I will answer expresses the truth that there will be no sorrow between petition and praise (30:19; 58:9). Praise will be continuous.

65:25 This verse condenses the promises of 11:6–9. The figures represent the reversal of nature and the coming of universal peace. Dust shall be the serpent's food is an allusion to Gen. 3:14 to indicate that this specific curse will be consummated.

66:1 The Lord has no need for a man-made temple, for heaven and earth—the whole cosmos—is His sanctuary (40:22). footstool: The resting place for the "feet" of the Lord is extended beyond the ark of the covenant (60:13) to the whole earth. Where is the house: No place on earth can accommodate the transcendent God (1 Kin. 8:27). The place of My rest refers to the temple (1 Chr. 28:2; Ps. 132:8, 14).

66:2 Those things refers to everything in the universe. I look: God seeks true worshipers (John 4:24). Contrite spirit … trembles at My word is similar to Jesus' phrase "in spirit and truth" (John 4:24).

66:3 The term He who, used four times in this verse, refers to those who worship according to the letter but not the spirit of the Law. Their worship in God's estimation is as unacceptable as if it consisted of abominable pagan practices (1:11–14; 65:3–5). God's harsh criticism of false liturgy is tempered with His promise of the coming true liturgy (vv. 20, 23). Slays a man may refer to child sacrifice (57:5). Breaks a dog's neck may refer to a pagan practice; in any case, the dog was regarded as an unclean animal, a detestable scavenger. The sacrifice of a bull, a lamb, a grain offering, and incense was considered to be their own ways because the worshipers lacked a contrite spirit. It was as if their soul delighted in their abominations.

66:4 So will I choose their delusions: For a related passage, see 63:17. their fears: This is the judgment spelled out in vv. 15, 16, 24. when I called … I do not delight: This passage echoes 65:12.

66:5 You who tremble at His word: These words link vv. 5–11 with vv. 1–4. Your brethren who hated you: These words intensify the opposition encountered in ch. 65. Let the LORD be glorified represents the false worshiper's hypocritical righteousness (v. 17). Cast … out of the temple, the true worshipers went into the world and brought back Gentiles (v. 18). Joy is spoken sarcastically (Ps. 22:8). The persecutors shall be ashamed and the persecuted shall "rejoice" (v. 10).

66:6 Isaiah heard the sound of battle noise proceeding from the city and the temple (13:4). His enemies refers to the self-righteous idolaters persecuting God's servants. This prophecy may find its fulfillment in the fall of the temple in A.D. 70. (Matt. 24:1, 2) or at the Lord's second coming (66:17; 2 Thess. 1:7–10).

66:7, 8 Before she … gave birth represents the birth of the community from the cast-out worshipers as coming so quickly that it will be without pain. At times, Zion is pictured as the daughter of the Lord (1:8); here she is the mother of His people. The male child and her children may refer to Christ and His church.

66:9, 10 The rhetorical questions introduced by the words shall I guarantee the prophecy of vv. 7, 8. God finishes what He begins (Phil. 1:6).

66:11 Through the joyful faith of v. 10, saints before Christ's coming ate figuratively at a banquet (65:13).

66:12 For links vv. 12–24 with vv. 5–11. The pronoun her refers to Mother Jerusalem (vv. 7, 8). You refers to true worshipers and their offspring (v. 22), the beloved children of Mother Jerusalem. On her sides … carried: For similar images see 49:22; 60:4.

66:13 I will comfort you: Here God Himself is the comforting "Mother" (2 Cor. 1:3, 4).

66:14 Heart and bones refer to mental and physical health (Pss. 6:2; 109:18).

66:15 For links the judgment with rebuke. This verse is a picture of God's judgment. The Lord's coming corresponds to Isaiah's prayer (64:1–3). Fire is the lightning; His chariots are the storm clouds (Deut. 33:26; Ps. 18:10). Like a whirlwind depicts the speed and strength of the Lord's coming (Jer. 4:13).

66:16 The Divine Warrior comes with fire (v. 15) and sword (27:1; 31:8; Luke 21:24; Rev. 19:11–15). All flesh refers to all of the false worshipers described in this chapter (Jer. 9:2).

66:17 This section summarizes the abominable practices of the false worshipers (65:2–5; 66:3).

66:18 Their works and their thoughts probably refers to the right acts and spirit of the true worshipers, on whom God looks with favor (v. 2), since reference is made to bringing salvation to the Gentiles (v. 19). My glory probably refers to God's presence in His temple (Ezek. 11:22, 23; 44:4).

66:19 The sign may be the deliverance of the true worshipers as judgment falls on the false. Those … who escape may refer to those who escape God's slaughter (vv. 16, 17), but more likely to those who escape persecution (Matt. 24:9–14). Those who escaped would bring God's glory to the nations (v. 18) and then give birth to the new age (vv. 7–11). to Tarshish … the coastlands: For similar references see 23:6; 60:9. declare

My glory among the Gentiles: For another prophecy by Isaiah of the spread of God's glory throughout the world, see 24:14–16.

66:20, 21 an offering to the LORD: For a related reference, see Deut. 12:5–7. horses … camels: Animals represent the diverse countries from which they come. The Gentiles are compared to a clean vessel (56:6, 7; Acts 10:28), a striking reversal of the dominant attitude towards Gentiles in the OT (52:1).

66:22 A prediction of the coming of the new heavens and the new earth also occurs in 65:17. Your descendants … remain guarantees the continuity of true Israel (65:9; Rom. 11:1–36).

66:23 From one New Moon to another refers to all time. All flesh refers to the blessed—Jew and Gentile—in contrast to the rejected (vv. 16, 24). Through all time and from all the earth, true worship will be offered to God.

66:24 Corpses refers to the rebels (5:25; 34:3). The word for transgressed is related to the word for rebelled in 1:2. Their worm … is not quenched depicts eternal punishment (48:22; 57:20). The imagery derives from the Valley of Hinnom that was Jerusalem's garbage dump, where unclean corpses decomposed and were burned. This verse is cited by Jesus in Mark 9:44, 46, 48. Though the Book of Isaiah depicts God's coming salvation, it closes with a strong statement of the judgment of the wicked.

The Book of Jeremiah

——————— PERHAPS MORE VIVIDLY THAN ANY OTHER BOOK of the Bible, Jeremiah reveals the inner struggles of a prophet of God. In “confessions” such as those in 15:10–21; 20:7–18, Jeremiah candidly discloses his inner turmoil concerning his call to prophetic ministry. Indeed, the prophet’s anguish over the message of judgment upon his people and the coming destruction of the land was at times overwhelming (4:19–22).

Yet despite his anguish, Jeremiah fulfilled his ministry of proclaiming God’s judgment against the people of Judah for their idolatry, their unfaithfulness to the covenant, and their obstinate disobedience of His will. Long acknowledged as one of the great prophets of the Old Testament, Jeremiah serves to this day as an example of someone who remained faithful to the word of God despite countless hardships.

Jeremiah’s ministry covered a critical time in the history of the ancient Middle East. When Josiah king of Judah died at the hands of the Egyptian army, Judah became subject to Egypt and its ruler Pharaoh Necho. The people of Judah chose Jehoahaz to succeed Josiah. However, three months later Necho appointed Jehoiakim (Eliakim) to rule as his vassal on the throne in Jerusalem. Having lost their freedom, the people of Judah turned not to God but to the idols they had worshiped in the days of Manasseh and Amon. This idolatry was the reason for Jeremiah’s proclamations of God’s judgment.

In 605 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar defeated Pharaoh Necho at Carchemish, and Jehoiakim immediately submitted to the Babylonian king, who permitted him to remain on the throne as a vassal. Three years later, Jehoiakim rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar and was deposed (2 Kin. 24:1, 2). Jehoiachin replaced Jehoiakim on the throne for a short time, but he was then exiled to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar. Thousands of political and religious leaders were carried to Babylon with Jehoiachin in 597 B.C. (2 Kin. 24:14–16).

Nebuchadnezzar made Jehoiakim’s brother Zedekiah the new ruler of Judah. In 589 B.C., Zedekiah led a rebellion against Babylon, and Nebuchadnezzar’s reprisal was swift. His army entered Judah and destroyed all resisting fortified settlements. Nebuchadnezzar's army turned aside from besieging Jerusalem when the Egyptian army appeared in southwest Palestine in the summer of 588 B.C. But the Egyptians soon withdrew, and Nebuchadnezzar resumed his siege. Several times during the siege of Jerusalem, Zedekiah came to Jeremiah for counsel from the Lord. The prophet advised him to surrender, but Zedekiah would not listen.

Jerusalem's walls were breached in the fourth month of 586 B.C. One month later, the temple was burned, along with the palaces, houses, and other administrative buildings. An additional 4,600 Jerusalemites were deported to Babylon. Gedaliah was appointed governor of Judah at Riblah. Jeremiah, who had been imprisoned by Zedekiah, was released and sent to serve under Gedaliah. Gedaliah was assassinated, and his supporters fled to Egypt, fearful of Nebuchadnezzar's revenge. Jeremiah went with them to Egypt against his will, and there he continued to confront the Jews for their idolatry and unfaithfulness.

The structure and organization of the Book of Jeremiah have perplexed interpreters for generations. A brief examination of passages with explicit historical notes proves that the material is not ordered chronologically. Instead, the organization of the oracles, prose sermons, and other material is based on content, audience, and connective links. The division is as follows: (1) the call of Jeremiah (ch. 1); (2) the judgment of Judah and Jerusalem (chs. 2—24); (3) Jeremiah's ministry to the nations (chs. 25—); and (4) an historical appendix recounting the fall of Jerusalem (ch. 52). This arrangement gives balance and unity to the lengthy prophetic text.

Jeremiah's prayers, confessions, laments, and dialogues reveal the depth of the prophet's understanding of the character of God and the nature of His relationship to people. For Jeremiah, the God of Israel was the incomparable God of all creation, the Lord over nature and history. He reigned not only over Judah and Israel but over all nations (25:13).

The thread that wove together Jeremiah's knowledge of God was his understanding of the word of God. It permeated the prophet's life and speech, for God Himself promised to touch Jeremiah's mouth and infuse His words into Jeremiah's mind and speech (1:9). From then on, God's words were like an unquenchable fire burning within the prophet's soul (20:9).

Jeremiah was keenly aware of the provisions of the covenant between God and Israel. The covenant bound Israel to God in a special relationship of love, faithfulness, and hope. But the covenant had two sides. Faithfulness to the Lord and the covenant would bring blessing; disobedience would result in punishment, destruction, and exile (Deut. 27:14—28:68). Jeremiah called the people to obey the words of the covenant and to turn from their idolatry and their unjust treatment of one another (11:6, 7).

Jeremiah's message of judgment also contained a word of hope: a righteous remnant would be restored. The land had been defiled by the people's idolatry. The leaders had brought the nation to the brink of disaster and the people were exiled. But based on His everlasting love for Israel, God promised to bring the people back from captivity and restore them to blessing (30:18—31:6). Israel's enemies would be defeated (30:16), and the people would sing joyfully of God's goodness (31:12).

Jeremiah was born in Anathoth, just three miles northeast of Jerusalem in the hill country of Benjamin. His father was Hilkiah. Jeremiah's ministry extended from 626 to 586 B.C., making him a contemporary of Zephaniah, Ezekiel, and Habakkuk. The prophet's writing ministry began in the fourth year of Jehoiakim's reign in 605 B.C. (36:1, 2), though portions of the book may have been written earlier. The book was completed sometime after the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

Commentary

1:1 The name Jeremiah probably means either “The Lord Exalts” or “The Lord Establishes.”

1:2 The word of the LORD came literally to Jeremiah. He did not speak out of his own imagination, as did false prophets like Hananiah (28:1, 2). Jeremiah spoke as God revealed His word and will. Jeremiah’s call to ministry came in the thirteenth year of Josiah, who reigned thirty-one years.

1:3 Jeremiah's ministry as a prophet lasted from the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim (608 B.C.) to the eleventh year of Zedekiah and the fall of Jerusalem (586 B.C.). Gedaliah was appointed governor over the peasant-populated Judah after the Babylonians, under Nebuchadnezzar, had deported the leading citizens of Jerusalem. Jeremiah continued ministering until he was taken unwillingly to Egypt following the assassination of Gedaliah.

1:4–19 These verses detail the call of Jeremiah. The record of his divine summons to the ministry is one of the most graphic of all the prophets, except perhaps that of Isaiah (Is. 6).

1:4 The word of the LORD came: A standard way of introducing a divine oracle at the beginning of a prophetic book (Ezek. 1:3; Hos. 1:1; Joel 1:1; Jon. 1:1; Mic. 1:1; Zeph. 1:1; Hag. 1:1; Zech. 1:1). We do not really know how the word of the Lord came to the prophets. It is possible that it would come in a variety of ways, such as visions, dreams, audible voices, visual impressions, or a deeply felt internal sense of things. Regardless of how it came, the prophets had a strong sense that the message was not their own; rather, it was the word of the Lord.

1:5 Jeremiah was keenly aware that the call of God in his life had been determined by the Lord from before the prophet's conception. As God's word became a reality in Jeremiah's life, he understood that God knew him and had called him to proclaim a critical message at a crucial point in the history of the nation. The Hebrew verb rendered knew refers to an intimate knowledge that comes from relationship and personal commitment. That intimate relationship was made apparent in God's sanctifying work, whereby Jeremiah was "set apart" (made holy) for special service. Jeremiah's role was to be a prophet to the nation of Judah as well as a messenger of God for all nations.

1:6 Like Moses, who was called to speak to the Pharaoh of Egypt at a decisive point in Israel's history, Jeremiah was called to address the kings of Judah and leaders of Babylon. Jeremiah's doubts concerning his power to speak before the nations' leaders were due to his youth. The word youth can refer to a wide range of ages—from infancy up to the teen years. The term can also refer to a servant of any age.

1:7, 8 Jeremiah would not go and speak alone or of his own accord, but according to the word of the Lord and with His powerful presence. The term deliver is used in Jeremiah to indicate the saving of the people from their captors (15:20, 21), the deliverance of the poor from their oppressors (20:13), and the safety of the prophet from possible harm before national leaders. I am with you: Twice in Jeremiah's call (v. 19), God reassured the prophet of His presence and protection. In moments of personal crisis, Jeremiah prayed these words back to God (20:11).

1:9 Jeremiah is commissioned for his task and the essence of his message is outlined. I have put My words in your mouth: The source of Jeremiah's message was clearly the Lord, but the message would be expressed through the personality, experience, and artistry of the prophet. This verse gives us an understanding of the dual nature of Scripture. The message is the Lord's; its expression is accomplished through His servants the prophets (Heb. 1:1).

(Heb. banah) (1:10; 24:6; Gen. 22:9; Is. 45:13) Strong’s #1129: Things described as built using this word are “a new house” in Deut. 20:5, “the altar” in Deut. 27:6, and “the house of the LORD” in 1 Kin. 6:1. The expression “build a house” can also refer to establishing a family (Ruth 4:11) or a dynasty (Ps. 89:4). The word may also be used in the sense of “rebuilding” or “restoring” something that has been destroyed or is in disrepair (Neh. 2:17). Jeremiah’s commission as God’s prophet included the task of building and planting (1:10). In the present context the term is used figuratively of the prophetic ministry of restoring the people of God, or spiritually rebuilding Israel as the people of God, after the Exile (31:4).

1:10 I have … set you over the nations: The nations were instruments in God’s purpose of revealing Himself. The Lord would use Babylon to punish Judah, and then He would use the Persians to punish Babylon. The phrasing here suggests the official appointment of a person to an authoritative position, as when Nebuchadnezzar appointed Gedaliah governor of Judah. With God’s words in Jeremiah’s mouth, the prophet had the authority to stand before any ruler. To root out and to pull down … To build and to plant: Judgment and restoration were the two messages of the prophet of God. The words root out, pull down, destroy, throw down, build, and plant are repeated at key points in the Book of Jeremiah to reaffirm Jeremiah’s call (18:7; 24:6; 31:28; 42:10; 45:4).

1:11, 12 God confirmed His call to Jeremiah with two visions. The first vision involved an almond tree, which blossoms when other trees are still dormant. The almond tree served as a harbinger of spring, as though it “watched over” the beginning of the season. In a similar fashion, God was “watching over” His word, ready to bring judgment on Israel.

1:13 The second vision God used to confirm Jeremiah’s call involved a boiling pot that was tilted toward the south, indicating the direction in which the pot’s contents would be spilled. The message of this vision derives from the common everyday meal preparation. It is also based on the fact that the principal direction of attack on Judah and Jerusalem was from the north. Occasionally the direction would be from the south (for instance, Egypt, Cush, Arabian tribes). To the west was the Great Sea, and to the east was the great desert. The north was the danger region. The world of the northern frontier was the homeland to little known tribes such as the Scythians, Cimmerians, and Urartu. The dark forces of Tubal and Meshech of Ezekiel were indigenous to this region. If they were not raiding villages and farmlands of the fertile crescent, they served as mercenary troops. Not until 20:4 does the prophet Jeremiah finally identify who the "terror from the north" will be against Jerusalem; it is Babylon.

1:14 The calamity suggested by this vision was an enemy attack on Judah and Jerusalem from the north. In 20:4, Jeremiah finally identifies this enemy as Babylon. Babylon itself was east of Jerusalem, but the road went around the desert and approached from the north.

1:15 The calamity from the north (v. 14) would involve a siege of Jerusalem and all the cities of Judah. I am calling: The use of the first-person pronoun indicates that it was God Himself who was at war with His people. Which tribal or ethnic group from the north Jeremiah had in mind in the original setting of this oracle is unknown. Ultimately, most of Israel's enemies came from the north. Egypt was weakened, and the peoples to the east and southeast did not pose much of a threat to Judah. By the fourth year of Jehoiakim, the obvious identity of the "foe from the north" was Babylon. Babylon, of course, is located to the east of Judah. But the intervening desert demands an approach from the north 1:16 One of the main reasons for God's judgment on Judah and Jerusalem was Israel's worship of other gods. God is not one among many; He alone is God of Israel (Deut. 6:4). Burned incense: The Hebrew term meaning "to burn" or "to make smoke" is used nineteen times in Jeremiah, all in the context of burning sacrifices to other gods. worshiped: The term means "to cause oneself to bow down" in honor or service of God or man. The first and foremost commandment (Ex. 20:3) had been broken.

1:17 Prepare yourself is literally "gird up your loins," or "tuck your robe in your belt so you can run" (1 Sam. 2:4). do not be dismayed: If Jeremiah shrank back in terror before the men God had commanded him to confront, God Himself would bring terror into the prophet's life.

1:18 Jeremiah's position is phrased in military language, emphasizing the certainty that God would fight for him. God made Jeremiah an impregnable fortified city with bronze walls. Jeremiah's defense system could not be battered down or tunneled under by people and armies. kings

… princes … priests … people: This list of the various types of people in Israel suggests that the entire nation would be against Jeremiah.

1:19 The people and their leaders would fight against Jeremiah and his message, but they would not overcome, for God Himself protects and fights for the faithful.

Jeremiah's Faith

Some might consider Jeremiah the model of faithfulness, while others might think of him as an example of failure and futility. He served as God's prophet for over forty years, yet the rulers and the people of Judah did not listen to his warnings. Jeremiah was put in prison, thrown into a well, and taken to Egypt against his will. He was not allowed to marry. He was rejected by his friends, neighbors, family, false priests and prophets, and kings. Jeremiah stood alone in his call for the people to repent and turn to God. He warned them time and time again of their impending punishment. And even though much of what he prophesied came true during his ministry, the people and the leaders continued to ignore him.

Yet through all the hardship and humiliation Jeremiah was forced to endure, he remained obedient and faithful to God. Though at first he questioned God's calling, once he accepted his position, he became a model of perseverance and devotion. After enduring decades of abuse, threats, and outright indifference, Jeremiah could easily have turned his back and walked away. But he knew that was exactly the problem God had told him to warn the people about. The people had turned away from God's will, and Jeremiah was not about to do the same.

Some may look back at Jeremiah's ministry and consider it a failure, for the people did not respond to the prophet's call. In reality, his life was a glorious success, for Jeremiah remained faithful to his God. He may not have seen immediate results, but his struggle to obey God in a world that had turned wholesale away from its Creator has inspired generations of believers.

2:1–3 Chapter 2 is presented in the form of a covenant lawsuit, that is, an indictment brought by God against His people (2:1–3:5). The lawsuit typically contained the following elements: (1) a recounting of the founding and benefits of the relationship; (2) a calling of witnesses of heaven and earth; (3) accusations and indictments versus the defendant; (4) a reference to futility of seeking aid from other sources; and (5) an announcement of threat of judgment and delineation of punishment. Jeremiah challenged the people of Judah to remember God. The betrothal period between God and Israel in the wilderness was a time when Israel went after, or worshiped, the Lord. The nation of Israel is referred to as the firstfruits, which rightfully belonged to God (Deut. 26:1–11) and holiness, something set apart for God's glory. In the time of Jeremiah, the people of Judah no longer remembered the days when their grandfathers and grandmothers had worshiped and obeyed God.

2:4 The message is addressed to all the families of the house of Israel. The message may have been proclaimed to the collective tribes late in the reign of Josiah, when reunification of Judah and the remnant of Israel had taken place (2 Chr. 34:6). Josiah's untimely death at Megiddo in 609 B.C. ended all hope of prosperity and unity.

2:5 Idols means "futility," "vapor," or "worthlessness." The Hebrew word translated followed is used in the books of Jeremiah and Deuteronomy to describe the worship of idols and other gods. They … have become idolaters: Those who serve idols, which are only vapor, become like vapor themselves.

2:6 In pursuing other gods, the people of Israel lost sight of their identity as the elect of God. They forgot how God had delivered them from oppression in Egypt and had given them food, water, and protection in the wilderness for forty years.

2:7 God's guiding hand had brought Israel out of the desert and into a bountiful country, the region of Carmel, with its luxurious trees and vineyards. Israel had enjoyed the bounty of the land flowing with milk and honey, but then turned God's beautiful heritage into a polluted abomination. The Hebrew word translated heritage refers to God's possession of the land that He bestowed upon the nation.

2:8 The people had not sought the Lord, nor had the priests, rulers, or prophets. Those who should have known God most intimately did not know Him at all. The rulers transgressed against God and His covenant. The prophets prophesied in the name of Baal rather than God.

2:9 Charges of apostasy and idolatry are formally presented in 2:9–13.

2:10, 11 The charges are more heinous than heaven and earth have ever known. In hyperbolic language, the prophet reveals the astonishing reality of the character of the people. The only nation whose god was truly God, was at the same time the only nation that exchanged its God for others. The hearer is challenged to search the world from east to west, from the coastlands of Cyprus and beyond, to the Arabian desert region of Kedar (49:28, 29) to see whether such an uncanny occurrence has ever transpired. The challenge is phrased in a negative rhetorical question: Has a nation changed its gods, which are not gods? Of course this has not happened among the nations. Each nation and city had its patron deity, whom the people served, even if other deities were incorporated into the local pantheon. Yet Israel, whose glory was the Lord, gave up her allegiance to Him to serve a host of pagan deities.

2:12 In the celestial court, the heavens stand appalled as witnesses to this unparalleled phenomenon. They are horrified and decimated. Frankly, the issue is simply unthinkable; yet it happened!

2:13 God's people had forsaken (1:16) Him and served worthless deities. God, the fountain of living waters, offered a limitless supply of fresh, life-giving sustenance. Instead the people chose broken cisterns, which were useless for storing water and useless for sustaining life.

2:14 Israel was not founded to be a servant or homeborn slave. Yet the nation that God set free from slavery and oppression had placed itself in the position of a servant, enslaved by Assyria and Egypt.

2:15 Assyria—the young lions—laid waste to Israel and Judah during several invasions between 734 and 701 B.C.

2:16 Egypt forced Judah into a vassal relationship. The Egyptians had broken the crown of Israel's head by killing Josiah. Noph is Memphis, the capital of Lower Egypt. Tahpanhes was in the eastern Nile delta.

2:17 The affirmative rhetorical question points to Israel's voluntary and forced submission that she has brought upon herself as a result of her forsaking the Lord. Seeking the ways of the world or those who claim allegiance to God will often have serious consequences.

2:18 Sihor means "Black" and refers to the Nile. The word River refers to the Euphrates, which is associated with Assyria. Tragically, the people of Judah had left the everlasting fountain of God for the broken cisterns of Assyria and Egypt (v. 13).

2:19 Backslidings means "turnings." Israel had turned in every direction for help except to the true source of safety and security. The phrase says the Lord GOD of hosts confirms the severity of the crime and the certainty of the punishment about to befall the people of God.

2:20 Israel had broken its yoke like a beast, even though the people had promised to be faithful when they came into the land (Josh. 24:24). Instead, idolatrous abandonment of God had pervaded the land: on every high hill and under every green tree. The term harlot is a figurative way of referring to unfaithfulness to God, and in addition it may refer to the ritual prostitution of Canaanite and Phoenician fertility cults.

2:21 Noble vine refers to the lush vines of the Sorek valley, which runs from Jerusalem to the Mediterranean through some of the richest farmland in the country. Judah became an alien vine, fertilized by foreign gods (Is. 5).

2:22 The imagery of a non-removable stain indicates the depth of Judah's sin. Her iniquity is indelibly etched.

2:23–25 The picture of the wild dromedary, a female camel in heat, and a wild donkey mad with lust vividly portrays the craving of Israel for foreign gods. Jeremiah warns the nation against this fruitless pursuit, but the response evidences the addictive, consuming passion of idolatry.

2:26 The accusation of idolatry is compared to catching a thief in the act of stealing. Several levels of leadership are delineated, conveying that the whole of Israel's leadership has disgraced itself.

2:27, 28 Jeremiah depicts the nation's leaders as so corrupt, that they confused sexual identities. The tree usually denotes the female deity (the Asherah) and the stone the male deity. But the Israelites addressed the female as father and the male as the one who gave them birth. (Confusion reigns when one rejects rather than seeks the Lord.) To these non-deities the people would seek refuge in time of despair, but the confusion will only intensify. They will seek help from innumerable gods, but there is no safety, no security, and no deliverance apart from the Lord.

2:29, 30 The term plead recalls the charges made by God against Israel in v. 9. The people tried to plead their case, but Jeremiah repeated God's charge of rebellion (v. 8). God, the Sovereign Lord, chastened His children repeatedly, but they devoured His spokesmen the prophets like hungry mountain lions.

2:31, 32 A virgin bride could hardly forget the wedding sash that was the sign of her new status. Yet God's bride Israel had forgotten her wedding adornment, namely, God Himself.

2:33 taught the wicked women: This phrase implies that the people of Judah had become so skilled in adulterous ways that they could have instructed prostitutes in new methods of seduction.

2:34, 35 The blood … of the poor innocents: Provision for the poor was specifically commanded in the Law (Deut. 15:7–11).

2:36, 37 Israel turned every direction but to the Lord. Appealing to Egypt would have been as fruitless as appealing to Assyria had been in the past. With your hands on your head: This was a gesture of grief and remorse—in this case, over Israel's futile pursuits.

3:1 Deuteronomy 24:1–4 forbids a man to remarry his divorced wife if she has remarried and been divorced in the meantime. The implication is that the woman has been defiled by the second marriage. After forsaking God, Israel had taken many other lovers—that is, the nation worshiped many other gods. Yet the Lord in His mercy still extended His loving hand to His unfaithful bride. The word return implies repentance (5:3).

3:2 desolate heights: This term parallels the high hills of 2:20. Upon these barren heights Israel committed physical and spiritual adultery. The word lain has strong sexual connotations. Like Arabs who were known for ambushing caravans, Israel lustily sought other gods.

3:3, 4 Showers and latter rain refer to the two types of rain that fall in Israel in the spring, from March to early April. These rains are vital in the dry land. Even the punishment of drought did not soften Israel's harlot's forehead. This term may refer to a distinguishing mark of slaves, or it may describe a person's character (Ezek. 3:8). Israel was like a prostitute who was totally unashamed.

“guide”

(Heb. ‘alluph) (3:4; Prov. 2:17; 16:28; Mic. 7:5) Strong’s #441: The Hebrew word translated as guide here means “friend.” Israel’s appeal based on God’s friendship with them will avail them nothing due to their hardness of heart (v. 3). This word is translated companion in Prov. 2:17 and Mic.7:5, where the subjects are human. In Ps. 55:13, the treachery of a false friend is reproached.

3:5 The plea for God’s mercy was a shallow one because the people’s deeds were evil.

3:6 The reign of Josiah (640–609 B.C.) followed the idolatrous reigns of Manasseh (697–642 B.C.) and Amon (642–640 B.C.). On every high mountain and under every green tree echoes the words of 2:20 (v. 2).

3:7 Return means to return to God in faith (5:3). Judah had witnessed Israel’s refusal to repent.

3:8, 9 Adultery is forbidden by one of the Ten Commandments (Deut. 5:18), the heart of the covenant. Because of Israel’s adultery, the Lord presented her with a certificate of divorce based on Deut. 24:1–4. As a consequence, in 722 B.C. Israel was taken captive by Assyria, and Samaria was destroyed. Judah looked on but did not learn from Israel’s example.

3:10 Judah pretended to repent in times of distress, but did not actually turn with its heart to the Lord (Deut. 6:5; 10:16). The heart means the people’s will, mind, and emotion.

Evangelism Through Repentance

Jeremiah's third chapter is a call for the nation of Judah to turn away from idols. In verses 9–13, the people are described as: • committing spiritual harlotry and adultery; • being treacherous; • backsliding; • transgressing against the Lord; and • disobeying the Lord's voice.

Yet despite these sins, God extended an invitation to the nation to be reconciled to Him, and to find mercy and healing. The way back was through confession of and repentance from sin, and a wholehearted return to the Lord (3:13, 22).

In the middle of this call to repent, the Lord also revealed His heart for the other nations of the world. First, Israel would return to Him, and then all nations would be gathered around His name at Jerusalem (3:17). People from all over the world would serve Him rather than following the "dictates of their evil hearts."

God's offer of hope and salvation still extends to everyone on earth. As before, His primary strategy for drawing nations to Himself is through His people. In light of Judah's history, believers today do well to consider whether their sins may be keeping others away from the Lord. Is there a need for repentance and spiritual renewal among God's people before evangelism can take place in any major way?

3:11 Because it had not learned from Israel's example, Judah was considered more treacherous than Israel.

3:12—4:4 This extended summons to repentance consists of a delicate interweaving of appeals, accusations, and promises: (1) summons 3:12, 13; (2) promise 3:14–18; (3) accusation 3:19–20; (4) confession of the people 3:21–25; and (5) recapitulated summons with promise 4:1–4. The final section also provides transition into the foe/nation cycle of 4:4—6:30. God made an appeal as the faithful Husband and Father to the faithless wife and children of Israel.

3:12 The cry toward the north may indicate a summons for the northern kingdom in the days of Josiah to repent. Return, backsliding Israel: If the people turned in repentance (3:1, 7; 5:3), God's anger would not come upon them. The basis of this appeal is that God is merciful, faithful to His covenant promise.

3:13 Iniquity refers to the breaking of the covenant commandments. Israel's rebellious iniquity is identified as the pursuit of alien gods, idolatry committed throughout the land.

3:14 To marry in this context means to become lord or master. In other words married describes the covenant relation between God and Israel. take you … bring you: The remnant of Israel would be united with the remnant of Judah on Mount Zion in Jerusalem.

3:15 shepherds: Throughout the Bible the image of the shepherd is an important one. God provides shepherds for His people to watch over them, guide them, care for them, and lead them. From Moses in the OT to Jesus in the NT, God provides faithful, devoted leaders after His own heart. God rules with a heart of knowledge and understanding, not falsehood and deceit.

3:16 God ordained that His shepherds would lead Israel through a time of blessing, increase in numbers, and material prosperity. In that future time, the highest symbol of God's presence, the ark of the covenant, would no longer be central to the true religion of Israel. God Himself would be central to Jewish worship.

3:17 Jerusalem, not the ark of the covenant, would be The Throne of the LORD and the focal point of the world's religion. The name of the LORD summarizes the essence of His character and His relationship with His people (Ex. 3; 14; 15).

3:18 Restoration and reunification of Israel, unknown since the days of David and Solomon, would be brought about by God Himself. From the north, the direction from which Israel's enemies typically came, God would bring back His people and bless them in the land of promise, under the Lord's chosen Shepherd—the Messiah.

3:19, 20 The possession of the land was always dependent on the covenant faithfulness of Israel to their God. The Lord's desire has always been to bless His people.

3:21 The confessions and prayers of the people are voiced in the midst of their idolatry. Their cries were but idle words, because they had forgotten their God.

3:22 The call to repentance of v. 14 is reiterated in words strongly reminiscent of Hos. 14:1–4. The confession begins with acknowledgment of the Lord as God in accordance with the First Commandment (Ex. 20:2, 3).

3:23 The term vain, meaning "falsehood," is found thirty-seven times in Jeremiah, often in reference to idolatry and false prophecy (5:2; 7:4, 9). The mountains were centers of idol worship and thus were strongholds of falsehood. True salvation or deliverance could be found only in the true God of Israel.

3:24 Shame is a euphemism for idolatry, which had consumed Israel's thoughts, their flocks and fields, and even their children. The reference to children recalls the human sacrifices in the Valley of Hinnom in the days of Manasseh.

3:25 The people acknowledged the shame and reproach that they had brought upon themselves. They had sinned against God since their days of youth in the wilderness.

4:1 The term abominations or "detestable objects" is usually used in the context of idolatry in the OT (7:30). You shall not be moved implies that repentant Israel would be unwavering in its faith in God.

4:2 The LORD lives: This phrase was regularly used in oaths. When spoken by those faithful to the covenant it should have been a sign of truth, judgment, and righteousness. These three terms summarize the ultimate and ideal demands of the covenant. They are the standards by which all people, from kings to slaves, were and will be judged. bless themselves: The results of Israel's justice and righteousness would have international consequences. See God's promise to Abraham in Gen. 12:1–3 that other nations would be blessed through his descendants.

4:3 fallow ground: This is unused soil, not a regularly plowed field. Israel needed a new field in which to sow its seed of faithfulness, a radical departure from its ways of sin and idolatry.

4:4 Circumcise: Circumcision was a sign of the covenant relationship between Israel and God (Gen. 17:10–14). The intent of God was always that the outward symbol should be a sign of an inward reality of total devotion to Him (Deut. 10:12–21). fury: Jeremiah's stern warning of judgment is given with the picture of an unquenchable fire (Joel 2:3). If the people did not repent of evil, destruction would come.

4:5 Jeremiah announced the judgment of Judah and Jerusalem with the alarming sound of a trumpet, literally a shofar made of a ram's horn. This was the instrument used to sound the alarm when an enemy attacked a city.

4:6 Standard may refer to signal fires that connected Jerusalem with the perimeter fortresses of Judah. Since the foe from the north was yet unidentified by Jeremiah, this prophecy probably dates from between 622 and 609 B.C. All of Israel's enemies except Egypt came from the north. Later on, Jeremiah identified this enemy as Babylon.

4:7 Destruction would come as a terrible surprise, like a lion … from his thicket pouncing suddenly upon its prey. The desolation of the land and the deportation of the people would be the result.

4:8 Sackcloth was a rough-textured fabric worn as a sign of mourning or distress (6:26). fierce anger: The burning wrath of God would come as an inextinguishable fire.

4:9, 10 Even Jeremiah was overwhelmed at what God was about to bring upon Jerusalem. This passage indicates the deep inner struggle Jeremiah faced in his proclamation of the divine message. Jeremiah challenged God's dealings with His people, claiming that God had deceived the people with a message of peace. False prophets like Hananiah foretold a time of peace when in reality despair was more in order.

4:11, 12 The sirocco wind comes from the deserts east and south of Israel, bringing scorching heat and whirling dust. The divine winds of judgment would bring destruction to Jerusalem, the daughter of God. This last phrase is particularly touching; Jacob is God's "son," and Jerusalem is His "daughter" (4:31; 6:2).

4:13 Judah had become the foe of God, and He would use the nation's international foes to discipline them. The imagery of clouds and chariots like a whirlwind portray the thoroughness and swiftness of God's judgment. The people would respond in horror to their fate.

4:14 The Hebrew word translated wash is used in Leviticus and Numbers to describe the cleansing of garments that had become defiled through contact with unclean objects or diseases. Cleansing of the heart is foundational to salvation (Is. 1:18–20).

4:15 Dan: The most northern city of Israel proper. Dan was conquered by Tiglath-Pileser III in 733 B.C. and was incorporated as part of an Assyrian province. The city continued to be occupied through the Assyrian period by remnants of the northern kingdom and by foreigners who had been settled there. Ephraim was in the southernmost region of the northern kingdom of Israel. The message is clear. Just as Israel had been subjugated, Judah was also in danger.

4:16, 17 Jeremiah, the prophet to the nations, announced the attack of foreign enemies who would raise their battle cries against Judah.

4:18 Recompense for wickedness that has been done is the order of God's just dealings with His people. Evil and bitterness reach to the heart, namely, the innermost depth of one's being. The heart of Judah needed cleansing and transformation. So does the heart of all people. Judah is not alone here; she is just the Lord's prime example.

4:19–22 The "confessions" of Jeremiah recorded in these verses reflect his deep inner conflict. They present him struggling with the reality of sin and an understanding of the necessity God's judgment over against his personal identification with the people of Israel and Judah. After all, he is a part of the nation; what God was about to bring upon Judah and Jerusalem would affect Jeremiah, his people, and his associates.

4:19, 20 Soul here means “bowels” or “belly,” a reference to the internal organs. In ancient Middle Eastern thought, the internal organs were the seat of emotions and feelings. The term describes Jeremiah’s inward anguish over the coming destruction of Jerusalem. The phrase makes a noise depicts the “groaning” of the prophet’s heart at the sound of the trumpet announcing Judah’s destruction (v. 5). The destruction of Judah extended to the entire land, even to Jeremiah’s own dwelling place, adding to his misery.

4:21 How long? The prophets often cried out, “How long?” (a phrase found also often in Ps. 13:1, 2). How long would God delay judgment? Jeremiah wonders how long he can endure the anguish of the battle cry. In this and in similar incidents we sense the deep feelings of Jeremiah. The prophets of Israel did not record words of judgment without feeling. The dire messages first affected them deeply; only then could they express these proclamations of doom adequately to the people.

4:22 Foolish describes the character of the people. The terms foolish and silly are contrary to the terms knowledge and understanding. God described His people as impudent children. They were wise in the ways of evil, but totally deficient in knowing how to do good.

4:23–28 Jeremiah compares the situation in Judah to a reversal of God’s creation. Sin has turned the earth into a desolate waste, like a sea without land, like a world without light, and like a desert without a creature.

4:23 without form, and void: This Hebrew phrase is the same one used in Gen. 1:2 to describe the chaos before the ordering of the cosmos. no light: The prophets spoke about darkness as part of God’s judgment on the world. Here the lack of light describes the disastrous effects of sin on creation, particularly on the land of Judah.

4:24, 25 The symbols of stability and of strength would be shaken as by an earthquake. Birds would disappear as Hosea had proclaimed (Hos. 4:3). In Gen. 1, the creation of the birds of the heavens depicts the fulfillment of the creative process. In Jeremiah and Hosea, the removal of the birds symbolizes the reversal of creation.

4:26 The term fruitful refers to the region of Mount Carmel, where there were productive vineyards, olive groves, and oak trees. The term is used figuratively to symbolize the productivity of the land as a “garden of God.” Yet this also would be turned to desert, namely, desolate and unproductive land.

4:27 Desolate refers to the uninhabitable devastation of Judah as a result of its unfaithfulness. Yet the land would not see total destruction. A slim ray of future hope still existed. God remembers His mercy in His wrath.

(Heb. ‘abal) (4:28; 12:4; Job 14:22) Strong’s #56: This term is one of several Hebrew verbs that refers to the outward acts involved in ancient mourning rites for the dead. Mourning often involved the appearance of an individual: a mourner would frequently wear sackcloth and ashes as a symbol of mourning (6:26)—sometimes even the head would be shaved (Amos 8:10). In the Bible, this Hebrew verb is also translated lament (Lam. 2:8). Often the verb is used figuratively of objects that cannot really mourn. Here Jeremiah uses the verb to describe the earth as mourning in reaction to the broken covenant. God’s people had neglected their obligations to the Lord’s covenant.

4:28 The black skies associate darkness with God’s judgment. The term relent, meaning “to repent” or “to be sorry,” parallels the term turn back. God’s judgment on sin and rebellion is inescapable (Num. 23:19).

4:29 Destruction by foreign armies was concentrated on the cities, which were the centers of insurgence and economic activity. The cities would be left abandoned as the people fled in fear.

4:30 Instead of turning to the Lord in its time of despair, Judah would turn to the idolatrous activity that had caused its dismal plight. To adorn oneself in crimson, gold, and eye paint depicts the seduction of clients by a prostitute. The Hebrew word translated lovers describes Judah and Israel’s history of physical and spiritual prostitution.

4:31 The voice of God called for repentance; but the voice of the people cried out in anguish and despair, but not to the Lord their Savior. Daughter of Zion: The term is an endearing way of describing Jerusalem as God’s beloved daughter (4:11; 6:2). The use of this warm phrase in such a terrible context heightens our appreciation of the horror of the moment. spreads her hands: This phrase portrays the agony of the impending death of Jerusalem. My soul is weary suggests dying words of agony and despair. Judah’s lovers had become her murderers.

5:1–9 These verses contain a description of wickedness. The depths of wickedness in Jerusalem have made her ready for judgment from God. The disintegration of the social, moral, ethical, and covenant life of the city provides the justification for the destruction that awaits.

5:1 Similar to Abraham's plea that Sodom be saved on account of the few faithful people among its inhabitants (Gen. 18:16–33), so Jeremiah summoned the people to search the city of Jerusalem for one just and righteous person. Judgment describes one who has done what is right and just before God and man.

5:2 Used at times by the prophets of Jeremiah's day to introduce divine oracles or by people in swearing oaths (4:2), the phrase as the LORD lives invokes God's name and character in the proclamation. falsely: This often used term in Jeremiah (3:23; 7:9) summarizes the total collapse of the covenant relationship between God and Israel. Instead of swearing in justice, truth, and righteousness, the people swear by falsehood.

5:3 God always looks for truth (v. 1) and faithfulness. When truth was found lacking in Judah, God punished the people of Jerusalem through foreign invasion. But rather than responding with remorse and repentance, the people reacted in rebellion. The Hebrew term translated correction means "chastisement" or "discipline." Sometimes it means "instruction." In the prophets it generally refers to God's attempt to teach His children faithfulness by means of discipline or punishment (7:28). But despite the words of Jeremiah and other prophets, Israel refused correction and continued down the path of self-destruction. The illustration of faces harder than rock emphasizes the rebellious attitudes of the people.

5:4 Here the term poor is paralleled by the word foolish, a rare term used by Isaiah (19:13) to refer to the nation as deluded and deceived. Thus the word poor refers to those who lack knowledge of God and are insensitive to His instruction and inattentive to His will.

5:5, 6 Greatness is achieved not by wealth and power but by the knowledge of God and obedience to Him. known: The word refers to intimate and practical knowledge. Here the knowledge is of the way of the Lord—the path characterized by truth, justice, and righteousness. Jeremiah paints a picture of Judah as oxen that have broken their yoke, wandering aimlessly through the field, guided by their own desires. Because they have broken the yoke, they are exposed to the elements and the wild animals of the forest and desert. The animals symbolize the foreign nations who would lay siege to their cities. The cause of the devastation is the many transgressions, meaning "rebellions," and backslidings, or "turnings," of Judah.

5:7 The message is still addressed to the leaders of Judah (v. 5). The word pardon means forgiveness that cannot be granted where there is no repentance, but only continual abandoning of the ways of the Lord. not gods: The use of this phrase, found also in 2:11 and 16:20, is tantamount to declaring the nonexistence of the foreign deities that Judah worshiped. The words your children refers to the children of the leaders, who are the leaders' children and not God's. I fed: The term means God had satisfied their every need. adultery … harlots' houses: These terms refer to physical adultery, though the source of this immoral sexual conduct may have been the presence of pagan cultic prostitutes. The prophets generally referred to cultic prostitution as adultery.

5:8 In the context of Josiah's reforms, the men may have turned from cultic prostitutes, whom the king had eradicated, to ordinary prostitutes. From the brothels they turned to one another's wives. Like stallions, their lust was uncontrollable.

5:9 The Hebrew word translated punish, literally meaning "to visit," can be used of the visitation of God in mercy (Ps. 65:9) or in wrath. Here it clearly refers to wrath.

5:10, 11 An unidentified adversary is called upon by the Lord to attack Jerusalem, but not to utterly destroy her. her branches: The degenerate, unfaithful limbs would be pruned because they were not His.

5:12 The people lied about the Lord, denying that He was about to inflict a horrible defeat. They had deceived themselves into thinking that God would not punish His own city and people, forgetting the negative effects of disobedience to the covenant (Deut. 27; 28).

5:13 False prophets like Hananiah (28:11) had foretold a time of peace and deliverance from the domination and destructiveness of their enemies. But their word was like an empty breeze. The very sword (v. 12) they denied would seal their fate.

5:14 LORD God of hosts: This phrase reminds the hearer that the true God of Israel controls all of the forces of heaven and earth. this word: This refers to the proclamation of Jeremiah, who voices the words of the Lord with the intensity of a blazing fire.

5:15 The true prophet Jeremiah announces the imminent coming of a mighty nation from distant lands who will carry out the divine purpose. The nation is not named, indicating that the oracle predates the advent of Babylon under Nabopolassar and Nebuchadnezzar. The only identification is that the enemy speaks a tongue unknown to the people in Jerusalem.

5:16 quiver … open tomb: The enemy archers are deadly; their arrows bring sure death to their enemies.

5:17 The word eat is used four times in this verse to paint an image of the enemy as consuming field, flock, and fortifications.

5:18 In the middle of a prophecy of judgment, Jeremiah includes a word of hope. The phrase in those days is indicative of the judgment God would visit upon His people. God would not destroy His people, but He would make them suffer greatly. One of the notable themes of the Bible is the doctrine of the "remnant," which is the part of the people that God preserves. Only what remained of the people after the devastation of Jerusalem by the Babylonians in 586 B.C. was able to return seventy years later. But it was foretold that there would be a remnant to return (46:28).

5:19 In summary, Jeremiah repeats two key words describing the sins of Judah and Israel: forsaken (abandonment) and foreign gods (idolatry; see 1:16; 2:13). Since Judah persisted in worshiping gods from foreign lands, God would allow them to be deported and serve their enemies.

5:20–31 These verses provide further elaboration and reiteration of the sins of Judah. The people are slack of heart, rebellious against God, and abusive of others.

5:20 house of Jacob: Even after the northern kingdom had been destroyed, the prophets still spoke of Israel. There was not a complete destruction of the northern tribes, as is commonly assumed.

5:21 foolish: This term emphasizes the people's ignorance of the ways of God. The parallel phrase without understanding shows the waywardness of the mind of the nation. Judah's blind eyes and deaf ears were a fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy more than one hundred years earlier (Is. 6:10).

5:22, 23 To fear God is to acknowledge His majesty and to submit to His will. The negative rhetorical questions highlight Judah's refusal to submit to and to serve God. Instead, they bowed to the many foreign gods who were entirely powerless. God controls the sea, the realm of the mythological Canaanite gods Yamm and Lotan (Is. 27:1). The people of Israel feared the sea, so they hired Phoenicians (worshipers of Yamm) to captain their ships (1 Kin. 10:22). They were ignorant of their own God's power over the seas (Ps. 93).

5:24, 25 The fear of the LORD is associated here with His creation of the natural world. our God: This title indicates the covenant affinity between the Lord and His people, which was sadly lacking in their heart and mind. Who gives rain: In the Canaanite fertility cult, Baal was viewed as the provider of the rains that enriched the soil and brought productivity (1 Kin. 17:1). Elijah's victory over Baal and Asherah on Mount Carmel demonstrated that the God of Israel was the true provider (1 Kin. 18). former: The former rains descend in the fall of the year, beginning in September or October. The latter rains come in the spring, lasting until March or April. Because no rain falls in the summer months in Palestine, water is a precious commodity. weeks: The underlying Hebrew term is also the name of the pilgrim festival that followed Passover by seven weeks. The Feast of Weeks (known as Tabernacles and New Wheat) served as a time for the people to celebrate God's rich blessings in the harvest. In the Passover ritual, sheaths of barley grain are "waved" before the Lord. In the Feast of Weeks freshly harvested sheaths of wheat are presented before the Lord as a sign of His mercy in the crops of the field. Sadly, the wicked people had not been acknowledging the Lord; they had become enamored with Assyrian and Moabite substitutes (such as Baal and Asherah). The living God of Scripture will not be one among others; He alone is God (Deut. 6:4).

5:26–29 the wicked: Those responsible for the welfare of the whole populace had abused their positions by exploiting the lesser elements of Israelite society. The picture presented is one of birds, or the poor, being ensnared by great men who were building wealth at the expense of orphans and the needy (Deut. 10:18).

5:30, 31 Jeremiah describes the moral depravity of Judah's leaders as an astonishing and horrible thing. The deterioration of the leadership of the land reached to the prophets and priests, the same people who were to be the mainstays of righteousness among the people. The prophets were charged with the proclamation of the truth, justice, righteousness, and the will of God. The priests were the teachers of the Law as well as sacrificial overseers. Both offices had succumbed to the temptation of abusing of their power, rejecting their responsible roles as messengers and servants of the Lord.

6:1–8 These verses contain an announcement of impending disaster. The prophet sounds the alarm of the oncoming enemy siege from the north and describes the incursion. The inevitable judgment was at hand, and only a glimmer of hope remained for a reprieve from total annihilation for the people of God.

6:1 The siege alarm was sounded to the cities surrounding Jerusalem. Jeremiah called his own tribe of Benjamin in the north to abandon the city for more secure territory. To the south in Tekoa, the watchman's trumpet was blown; to the west in the Beth Haccerem region, communication signal fires were sent. The offensives of Sennacherib in 701 B.C. and of Nebuchadnezzar in 586 B.C. brought siege forces from both the north and the south. The origin of the disaster is the north, the direction from which most of Israel's enemies approached Jerusalem.

6:2, 3 Jerusalem is compared to a lovely woman, the beautiful daughter … Zion (4:11, 31), against which armies (shepherds) would come and lay siege walls and camps.

6:4, 5 Prepare or "make holy" speaks of ritual sanctification performed in preparation for battle. The words are overheard in the camps of the enemies who are about to come against Jerusalem. Sorcerers and diviners were called upon to perform sacrifices to determine the will of the gods and assure a successful outcome in battle.

6:6 The terminology implies that God Himself was the true combatant against Jerusalem. Though the enemies were calling on their supposed deities for help in their siege against Jerusalem, it was the Lord who would fight for them and assure the defeat of Jerusalem. Cut down trees … build a mound: A siege mound was a ramp of wood, stone, and sand that sloped toward the wall of a city. Armored siege machines could go up the ramp and attack the city walls. The reason for the assault was the oppression within the city. The leaders were abusing their power, especially against the poor, widows, and orphans (Deut. 14:29).

6:7 Jerusalem had become a well of bitter and polluted waters rather than fresh and pure water. Violence and plundering characterized the city that was once overflowing with peace, justice, and righteousness. Grief and wounds describe the sickness and injury that would continually plague the inhabitants. The horrors of the siege of Jerusalem by the Babylonians in 588–586 B.C. were unspeakable (the Book of Lamentations).

6:8 Instructed can also mean “disciplined” or “chastened.” Jerusalem was advised to heed the discipline of the Lord or face imminent desolation as a result of His departure.

6:9 The LORD of hosts may also be translated “The Lord of armies” (2:19; 5:14). Those who cultivated grapes in ancient Israel were required by law to allow the poor to glean their vineyards. Gleaning was the process of going back over the vineyard after the main harvest to gather every last grape that the harvesters had missed. Jeremiah used this metaphor as a powerful image for what the Babylonians would do to the remnant of Israel. Not only would Nebuchadnezzar’s army capture the city—the main harvest, in a sense—but would then come after the survivors to thoroughly glean what was left. Every person among the remnant of Israel would know God’s judgment. put your hand back: Jeremiah had to return to his proclamation so that no one would be unaware.

6:10–15 This section deals with the false hope of an unfaithful people and takes the form of a dialogue between God and Jeremiah.

6:10 Because their ears were uncircumcised, meaning that their lives were not devoted to the Lord, the citizens of Jerusalem were incapable of keeping the covenant. Furthermore, their rebellion had become so ingrained that the word of the LORD had become a disgrace to them. The revelation of God’s divine will was no longer a delight to them.

6:11 Jeremiah’s own emotions reveal his identification with God’s feelings about Judah. The prophet was both angry and weary with the entire nation, from the youngest of children to the oldest of the aged men. God’s judgment, as well as His blessing, has no special regard for age or gender, class or position. The wicked are wicked together; the righteous are righteous together. The ground is even both beneath the Cross of the Savior, and on the battlefield of the avenging Divine Warrior (Rev. 19).

6:12 The entire land and its contents would be given to others by the power of the hand of God. God’s hand had saved the people; it would also bring about their judgment.

6:13 The accusation of covetousness suggests monetary gain by means of deception and fraud. Even those called to guide the nation in its covenant relationship had defrauded God and people.

6:14 The religious leaders sought to comfort the people with a message of hope and peace. But such words were not the word of God. Peace describes the wholeness of life, the safety, security, and tranquility of heart and mind that come from living by faith according to God's Word.

6:15 Nor did they know how to blush: The people had lost all sense of what was right before God. they shall fall: Everyone would experience the harsh hand of God's judgment.

6:16–21 This judgment oracle is structured as follows: (1) two indictments (vv. 16, 17); (2) the witness of the nations and the earth (vv. 18, 19); (3) the announcement of judgment (v. 19a); (4) a reiteration of cause (v. 19b); (5) a third accusation (v. 20); and (6) final judgment (v. 21).

6:16, 17 Old paths probably refers to the Sinai covenant and the Book of Deut-eronomy, as Jeremiah called the people back to former days of steadfast devotion. The people obstinately refused to walk rightly and find rest. They also refused to listen to the alarming sound of the trumpet, denying that any danger existed.

6:18, 19 The nations and the earth are called to witness the stubborn character of Judah (Is. 1:2; Mic. 1:2). My words … My law: The revelation of God through Moses and the prophets was rejected by the people for whom it was prepared and given.

6:20 Even if the people used the most expensive offerings available in the markets of that day, their sacrifices were still neither acceptable nor sweet. The burnt offerings were the "holocaust" offerings, in which the entire animal was consumed by fire. The sacrifices were those that were partially consumed by the offerers. The people performed these sacrifices incorrectly, making themselves the primary beneficiaries of their own worship.

6:21 The entire nation will reap the judgment.

6:22–26 This section is the sixth oracle featuring the foe from the north (1:13; 4:5, 15; 5:10; 6:1); each is presented with growing intensity. The foe is depicted as cruel and merciless, bringing anguish and sorrow upon the people of Judah and Jerusalem.

6:22 The people from the north are as yet unidentified, except that they come from the farthest parts of the earth. From this phrase, some have identified the foe as the Scythians, a nomadic marauding tribe from the region of modern Ukraine. The Scythians were a powerful force in seventh and sixth centuries B.C., as Assyria declined and the Medes ascended.

6:23 This marauding foe is skilled at warfare with the bow, spear, and cavalry, striking with merciless cruelty. The divine pathos echoes from this verse. God loves His spiritual children, even though they are flagrantly disobedient.

6:24, 25 Anguish or distress overwhelmed the people. Their pain is compared to childbirth. The people were prisoners in their own city.

6:26 Daughter of my people may be rendered "O Daughter, My people" (4:11, 31; 6:2, 23). Jeremiah used an endearing word for Jerusalem even in the middle of this warning of coming judgment. The most dreaded loss for an ancient Israelite family was that of an only son. Sackcloth was a dark, coarse fabric of goat or camel hair (4:8). To roll about in ashes symbolically expressed sorrow and despair.

6:27 The Lord describes Jeremiah's role. The prophet would act as the nation's assayer, the one who tests or evaluates quality or purity. fortress: An alternative translation of this term is tester or assessor, which might fit this context better as a synonym for assayer.

6:28 Jeremiah gives his assessment of the people. Rebels speaks of their defiant attitudes. Slanderers refers to those who tell tales. Corrupters refers to those who destroy.

6:29, 30 Jeremiah assesses Judah as a refiner purifies silver, using lead to remove impurities (9:7). The lead is consumed, so the dross in the silver ore cannot be purged. This results in the refiner discarding the ore because it is so impure that the smelting process is not worth the energy it takes. Similarly, God rejects those whose wickedness cannot be refined.

7:1–15 This passage (called the Temple Sermon) marks the advent of a series of four prose oracles dealing with false religion, from the Jerusalem temple cult to the aberrant worship of foreign deities. The Temple Sermon counters the popular theology of Jeremiahday that Jerusalem and the temple of the Lord were inviolable. We speak about this today as "the temple cult heresy." The sacrificial activity flourished, and prophetic activity was thriving. The people presumed that the copious cultic activity secured the sanctity and safety of Jerusalem and its worship center. But their ritual was devoid of heart devotion, as the ethical demands of the covenant were neglected. The date of this proclamation is generally accepted as 609 B.C., in the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim (the parallel passage in 26:1–24). The passage is structured as follows: (1) introduction and setting (7:1, 2); (2) a call to repentance (vv. 3, 4); (3) stipulations (vv. 5–7); (4) an accusation (vv. 8–11); and (5) a warning of disobedience (vv. 12–15). With the death of King Josiah, Jeremiah recognized that the religious reforms initiated by the godly king were dead. The people returned to their idolatry.

7:1, 2 The word that came to Jeremiah was a direct message from God in His temple courts. Stand in the gate: The parallel in 26:2 suggests the proclamation was made in the outer court of the temple, where Jeremiah would have been guaranteed a large audience. Worship suggests bowing prostrate in service and obedience to a god, king, or priest. In bowing down, the worshiper pledged himself or herself to obedience in adhering to the demands of the one being honored (22:9).

7:3 The LORD of hosts can also be translated "God of armies" (2:19; 5:14; 6:9). Amend: The call to repentance here uses a different term (26:13) from the usual word translated "return" (3:1). A complete transformation of the people's ways and doings, lifestyle and beliefs, was necessary.

7:4 Trust conveys the sense of security and confidence that the people had in their holy place. They believed that since God had chosen Jerusalem as His dwelling, had promised that a Davidic king would remain on the throne forever, and had delivered the city from attack in the days of Hezekiah and Isaiah, He would never allow the city or the temple to be destroyed. Lying words may refer to the unfounded reliance on the temple as an idolatrous symbol or to the worship of foreign gods. The temple of the LORD had become a good luck piece to the Israelites. They believed the building guaranteed their security, regardless of whether they obeyed the provisions of the covenant. This false hope was a lie (3:23; 7:9; 8:8).

7:5, 6 The only true hope for dwelling in the context of the temple was a radical restructuring of Judah's society. Thoroughly amend, or "make good" or "do good," emphasizes the necessary transformation of Jerusalem's inhabitants. thoroughly execute judgment: The emphatic phrase form implies the depth of corruption that existed in the land; there was no justice. Stranger refers to resident aliens who were dwelling in the land. The fatherless and the widow were accorded special treatment in the Law, but they had been abused by the leaders of Jerusalem. Innocent blood refers to those convicted of capital crimes on false charges, such as Urijah the prophet (26:23). Humanitarian concern for all persons was a central element of the covenant. To walk after other gods is to serve and worship them.

7:7 I will cause you to dwell: This phrase emphasizes the will and work of God to establish the nation of Israel in the land. In order for the nation to dwell in the land, it had to be faithful to God (Deut. 7:6–11).

7:8 The refrain of v. 4 is complemented here by the phrase cannot profit (2:8, 11). The idea that the temple was inviolable was as profitless as the powerless gods that Israel idolized.

7:9 The covenant stipulations that Jerusalem's inhabitants had violated are listed here (Ex. 20:1–17). burn incense: Jeremiah uses this phrase nineteen times in the context of worshiping deities other than God (1:16). Know refers to an intimate, purposeful relationship—like that between husband and wife.

7:10 Stand before means "to place (oneself) in submissive service to someone." Entering the temple of God in such a manner while worshiping other gods was incomprehensible. Furthermore, for the people to think that they were secure (delivered) enough to perform perverted abominations (2:7) was the ultimate hypocrisy. Paul builds on this concept in Rom. 6:12–16.

7:11 den of thieves: Like robbers hiding in a cave for safety, Judah attempted to hide behind the sanctuary of the temple for protection from the divine hand of judgment. But the Lord had seen the hypocrisy of Israel's ways. Jesus quoted this verse when He cleansed the second temple (Matt. 21:13).

7:12 Shiloh was the site of the tent of meeting and ark of the covenant in the days of the judges. Leaders in the family of Eli had abused their priestly position for personal gain, and idolatry was rampant in the land. When the Israelites attempted to use the ark as a victory-giving good luck piece, the ark was captured (1 Sam. 4) and the sanctuary was destroyed by the Philistines. The Philistines were instruments of divine punishment for the wickedness of God's people. God's love for His people does not prevent Him from chastising them for their wickedness.

7:13 All these works are the sins listed in vv. 6, 8, 9.

7:14, 15 The earlier dwelling place of the ark of God, Shiloh, served as an example of the impending destruction of Jerusalem. The temple had to be destroyed to vindicate the name of God; the people had to be removed from the land in order to purge it of wickedness.

7:16–20 These verses detail the idolatry of Ishtar (Astarte, the Assyrian goddess of love, fertility, and war). Condemnation of the decadent cultic practices of Judah continues with a judgment oracle set forth as an address from the Lord to Jeremiah.

7:16 God's instruction to Jeremiah, do not pray for this people, indicates the extreme depravity of Jerusalem's inhabitants (11:14; 14:11). No manner of intercession was to be made on behalf of Judah. God would not hear Jeremiah's appeals.

7:17, 18 The queen of heaven refers to Ishtar, who was worshiped in open-air cultic centers throughout the eastern Mediterranean region and Mesopotamia. Worship of Ishtar involved the preparation of special cakes that bore the goddess's image, as well as drink offerings (44:19). The family cooperation in the idolatrous worship of Ishtar stood in direct opposition to the covenant demands that a father instruct his children in the ways of the Lord (Deut. 6:4–9).

7:19 Provoke, meaning "to vex or irritate," describes the effects of Israel's continual unfaithfulness on God. Furthermore, they were bringing harm upon themselves.

7:20 God's judgment on the abominable idolatry of Ishtar worship is described in terms of a fire that cannot be quenched. The devastation of the fire would extend to man, beast, field, and fruit.

7:21–27 The keyword of this passage is obey. The psalmists and prophets were unanimous in declaring that God required obedience rather than sacrifice (Pss. 40:6–8; 51:16, 17; Hos. 6:6; Amos 5:21–24; Mic. 6:6–

8). Sacrifice could never achieve communion with God apart from a repentant or devoted heart. On the other hand, sacrifice (rightly done) was an absolute necessity in the worship patterns the Lord demanded (Lev. 1—7).

7:21 Add your burnt offerings to your sacrifices: Because the people had missed the true meaning of the Lord's worship, they could multiply their offerings as much as they liked and it would do them no good. The Lord cared for none of their sacrifices. To Him they were simply meat.

7:22 All sacrifices were not rejected, only those offered without true repentance and a commitment to obey the Lord.

7:23 God required that His people obey His voice. that it may be well with you: Obedience would bring blessing. When the prophets lashed out against sacrifice, it was not against the sacrificial system as God had established it, but against the corruption of that system as the people practiced it. The same emphasis is found in the NT passages that seemingly speak against the Law. Both the NT writers and the Hebrew prophets denounce the abuses of divine systems in human hands.

Which Way Are You Headed?

Faith is not a one-time, sensational event in one's life, neither is it a state of moral and spiritual perfection to which a handful of super-saints attain. Faith is a dynamic, lifelong journey that each believer is on. At any given moment, we are either moving toward God or turning away from Him.

The people of Jeremiah's day stood under God's judgment because they turned away from Him—they "went backward and not forward" (Jer. 7:24). Rather than cultivate a growing relationship with the Lord based on sustained, faithful obedience, they went their own way and followed the "dictates of their evil hearts" (7:23–24).

May that not be true of you! The only way to make progress in your journey of faith is to keep moving toward God as best you know how. You may fail and fall at times, but the main thing is to keep turning back toward God, not away from Him. Paul described this dynamic in his own spiritual experience: "Forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forward to those things which are ahead, I press toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:13–14).

7:24 The history of Israel is seen in terms of disobedience rather than faithfulness to the covenant, reflecting the people's evil hearts (4:14). The result was a worsening or backward direction rather than an improving or forward walk.

7:25 From the days of Moses, God sent His servants the prophets to call the nation of Israel to obedience based upon the covenant. Daily rising up early and sending them indicates the persistence and urgency of God's message through His prophets.

7:26, 27 Incline their ear suggests eager listening and readiness to obey. Stiffened their neck suggests a cold rebuff to the will and work of God. Jeremiah, like Isaiah before him (Is. 6:9, 10), was told that the people would not respond to his message.

7:28 The people were stubborn, rejecting the laws of the covenant. They were persistently disobedient to the voice of the LORD revealed through His prophets. Correction refers to the instruction of the Law and the prophets (5:3). Truth refers to the faithfulness and fidelity that was characteristic of God but absent among His people.

7:29–34 This judgment oracle continues the theme of idolatry and takes the form of a lament, having the following outline: (1) introductory lament (7:29); (2) accusation (vv. 30, 31); and (3) judgment announcement (vv. 32–34).

7:29 To cut off one's hair was a way of expressing mourning and grief. The act may also have symbolized that Judah had rejected the covenant relationship just as if they had broken a Nazirite vow, a sign of personal devotion that required the hair not to be cut (Num. 6:1–21). desolate heights: The place of lamentation was the very place where Judah carried on its idolatrous practices (3:2). The Lord had rejected this generation, even as they had rejected His Law (6:19) and had been rejected by their "lovers" (4:30).

Some of the people of Judah in Jeremiah's day had fallen so deeply into idolatry that they actually practiced child sacrifice to the pagan god Molech. This despicable practice, condemned vehemently by Jeremiah, was conducted at this site known as the Valley of Hinnom, southwest of Jerusalem (Jer. 7:30–34).

7:30, 31 The evil doings of this generation, which had continued since the days of Manasseh, included the placing of abominations or "detestable objects" such as idols and pagan altars in the temple of God. The Tophet sacrifices, adopted from Phoenician and Canaanite practices, involved the ritual sacrifice of children in times of national crisis or disaster. burn … in the fire: This took place in the Valley of Hinnom southwest of Jerusalem (called Gehenna in the NT). I did not command: In their perverted confusion of God's will, the people perhaps thought that they could alleviate foreign domination, famine, and disaster by sacrificing their children. into My heart: The awful concept was totally alien to the mind and will of the living God.

7:32 days are coming: This phrase signifies the advent of a divine intervention in history, usually in judgment. With the phrase Valley of Slaughter, Jeremiah uses the prophetic device of changing a name to express the Lord's assessment of the Valley of Hinnom.

7:33 Unburied corpses left to the elements and animals were regarded as a horrible desecration in the ancient Middle East.

7:34 Prayer would avail Judah nothing on account of its great sin. The nation would be devoid of all joy and gladness. The land would be desolate. The word desolate is used extensively in Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel to refer to the devastation in Jerusalem.

8:1–3 In the day when Jerusalem's judgment was fulfilled at the hands of its enemies, the bones of its people and their leaders would be desecrated by being removed from their graves. the sun and the moon and all the host of heaven: The gods and goddesses to whom Jerusalem looked for deliverance would stand over the people's desecrated corpses, which are pictured here as refuse or "dung" (9:22). Those who survived the siege and attack as exiles and slaves would prefer death over life.

8:4–17 In light of the people's continual disobedience, they are foolish to maintain a false hope of peace. This ill-founded confidence is framed around a series of rhetorical and absurd questions, known as a disputation speech.

8:4, 5 The questions in these verses emphasize the absurdity of Judah's lifestyle. Instead of correcting their erroneous behavior, the people were engaged in perpetual backsliding, falling deeper and deeper into sin and despair. hold fast: In stubborn defiance, the people clung to their lives of deceit or "treachery."

8:6 No righteous or repentant person could be found in the city of Jerusalem. Rather than turning from sin, every person pursued his or her own course, a lifestyle leading to destruction. Judah is compared to a horse running mindlessly headlong into battle.

8:7 Jeremiah contrasts the citizens of Jerusalem with the birds in the heavens who understand the approach of the seasons and appointed times. Whereas the birds follow their instincts to migrate, the people of Israel refused to follow God's promptings to obey His covenant. Note that God still refers to the people of Judah as My people even though they continued to rebel against Him. do not know: Like his northern counterpart Hosea (Hos. 4:6), Jeremiah identified the people's major deficiency as their lack of knowledge of the Lord and His judgment.

(Heb. sheqer) (8:8; 23:25; Prov. 6:17; 31:30) Strong’s #8267: This word refers to all actions meant to deceive others, such as fraud, lying, betrayal, and unfaithfulness. It is sometimes translated lying (7:4), vain (3:23), or deceitful (Prov. 31:30). One of Jeremiah’s greatest tasks as a prophet was to speak out against the deceitful schemes of lying prophets (23:9–40). These prophets were prophesying relief for Judah from suffering when God was actually handing Judah over to the Babylonians for judgment (23:17–19). Their deceptive ways made them enemies to the truth, the truth of God’s word (Ps. 119:20, 30).

8:8, 9 Jeremiah contended with fraudulent scribes and wise men whose understanding of the Law Jeremiah deemed falsehood. False pen describes the idolatry and errant beliefs of the Jerusalem’s leadership. The wisdom of the scribes and wise men was folly and shame, for it was not founded on a true knowledge of God’s word and law.

8:10–12 The people had interpreted the Law unwisely, believing that peace and prosperity would be granted to them. They were grossly mistaken (6:12–15).

8:13 No fruit can be found among desolate vineyards and trees that have been consumed by the Lord’s judgment. In His wrath He has taken away the sustenance He had provided.

8:14 Assemble … enter: Judah’s inhabitants would gather within the citadel and walls of Jerusalem for protection from an oncoming army. Silent can also be translated “perish.” The people believed that God was judging them with bitter, poisoned water, by which they would surely die.

8:15 The search for peace and health was hopeless and full of trouble —”terror” or “dismay.” God’s hand of judgment strikes terror in the hearts and minds of those who continue in sin and rebellion.

8:16, 17 Dan lies at the northern border of Israel. In 1:14, 15, Jeremiah warned that calamity would come from the north. The snorting of enemy horses would sound the fury of the impending invasion. His horses: The enemy’s horses were instruments of divine judgment.

8:18—9:1 After the series of judgment oracles, Jeremiah is overwhelmed by his emotions in concern for God’s people. The prophet’s lament echoes the voices but not the heart of the unrepentant inhabitants of Judah. The outline of the lament is as follows: (1) the introduction (8:18, 19a); (2) an accusation (v. 9b); (3) judgment (vv. 20–22); and (4) the lament recapitulated (9:1). The dominant theme is that of healing.

8:18 The hopelessness of Judah was so overwhelming to Jeremiah that his heart was faint. The word faint describes an illness or sickness that results from great sorrow.

8:19 Cry refers to great grief resulting from God's rejection or foreign oppression (Ps. 18:6). Far country or far places probably refers to the outer reaches of the land of Judah. Is not the LORD in Zion? Is not her King in her: These rhetorical questions expect an affirmative response. God, the King, had not abandoned His people; it was the Israelites who had rejected the living God for other gods. Provoked vividly describes the defiant attitudes of the people toward the pure worship of God. Carved images generally refers to stone idols. The phrase foreign idols in Hebrew is "foreign futilities." The people were looking for deliverance in useless and motionless images. Excavations in Jerusalem dating back to Jeremiah's time have uncovered numerous images and household idols.

8:20–21 Harvest and summer represent the two successive phases of the harvest season. The grain harvest was from April to June. The fruit harvest was later. If the former failed, the people could still look forward to the latter. But if both failed, famine was inevitable. For Judah, the harvest season was over; and no fruit had been stored for the winter ahead. Therefore, we are not saved. This proverb reflects the sense of helplessness in the early fall. The harvest was meager and the oppression persisted. Even Jeremiah was deeply hurt—this translates a Hebrew word derived from the verb meaning "to break" or "to shatter"; in other words, the prophet's spirit was broken over the fate of his people.

8:22 Is there no balm in Gilead: The region of Gilead was known for its balsam ointment (Gen. 37:25). There is no healing, physical or spiritual, for a people intent on rebelling against God.

9:1 my eyes a fountain of tears: Jeremiah, who is known as the "weeping prophet," identified personally with the suffering of his people. Here he expresses his desire for a reserve of tears that would flow without stopping.

9:2–11 This section presents judgment juxtaposed against the previous lament. Jeremiah was constantly torn between remorse and wrath, sorrow and anger over the impending destruction of God's people. The theme of this passage is deceit, which characterized interpersonal relationships among the people of Judah. This section probably dates to early in the reign of Jehoiakim, about 609 B.C.

9:2, 3 Jeremiah desired a wilderness refuge where he would be free from the agony, sorrow, bitterness, and degradation of Jerusalem. The word adulterers refers literally to unfaithful husbands or wives, but here to idolaters as those who are spiritually faithless.

9:4 take heed to his neighbor … do not trust any brother: The personal affairs of the people were characterized by deceit, slander, and mistrust. Ethical standards had collapsed. Supplant, which means "to defraud," is the basis of the name Jacob. As Jacob deceived his brother Esau, so the people of Judah defrauded their brethren (Gen. 27).

9:5, 6 They weary themselves to commit iniquity: The people had literally worn themselves out with perversions. Deceit here is the same term used of Jacob's trickery toward Esau (Gen. 27:35). The term refers to swindling by false speech or false scales. they refuse to know Me: The essence of Judah's problem was its lack of knowledge of God.

9:7 Jeremiah returns to the imagery of metallurgical refining (6:28–30). God would refine and try the people by fire to see if any were faithful to Him.

9:8, 9 Jeremiah returns to the imagery of bow and arrow to depict Judah's deceit (v. 3). The picture is of a person speaking peaceably to his neighbor while lying in wait to ambush him.

9:10, 11 weeping and wailing for the mountains: The entire land would be laid waste by destruction. Even the animals would abandon the land because not a crumb of food would remain for the birds and beasts. The holy city of Jerusalem would become a den of jackals where no man or woman lived. Jackals are desert creatures who live far from people. The only way Jerusalem could become home for jackals was for it to be no longer inhabited by God's people.

9:12–16 The explanation for the judgment and lament outlined in 9:2–11 is set forth in prose form in three parts: (1) the introduction (v. 12); (2) the accusation (vv. 13, 14); and (3) the announcement of judgment (vv. 15, 16).

9:12 The wise man observes and understands the natural order and the working of God in the world He has made. No wise person could be found among the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.

9:13, 14 The people's lack of adherence to the covenant they had forsaken is indicated by the phrase have not obeyed … nor walked. The word obey, which comes from the Hebrew verb meaning "to hear," implies an active response to the hearing of God's word. Instead of walking according to God's law, the people walked according to the dictates or "stubbornness" of their own hearts.

9:15, 16 Water of gall, used in 8:14 to describe God's judgment, refers to some kind of poisonous or salty drink. scatter them … send a sword: The people of Judah would be exiled from their promised homeland and even killed as they ran away because they rejected God.

9:17 Skillful wailing women refers to professional mourners, women who attended funerals to express the emotions of those in sorrow. Jeremiah called women to sing laments when Josiah died (2 Chr. 35:25). Here they are called to weep over the collapse of Jerusalem.

9:18 make haste: There is urgency in summoning the skilled mourners to lead the people in tearful lament over the imminent destruction of Judah.

9:19 plundered: This verb, which means "to devastate," is used frequently in Jeremiah to refer to the impending devastation of Jerusalem.

9:20–22 Teach your daughters wailing: The impending disaster in Jerusalem would be so great and the dead would be so numerous that multitudes of trained mourners would be needed. Death has come like the Canaanite god of death Mot, who was believed to enter a household through an open window to bring adversity, destruction, and death. children … young men … men: Death claims its victims without respect to sex or age. Corpses would remain in the open field like refuse or dung (8:2), or like cuttings left in the field to decompose.

9:23, 24 wise … mighty … rich: The people with whom Jeremiah contended were depending on their own capabilities rather than on God. Glory may also be translated boast, meaning "to praise oneself." The idea is that people should find their real meaning and true worth in the fact that they know God and may celebrate His attributes. True knowledge of God resulting from an intimate relationship with Him will be demonstrated in a person's character. Three attributes of God that He demands of people called by His Name are lovingkindness, meaning "loyal love"; judgment, meaning "justice"; and righteousness, meaning "uprightness."

Sin is Sin

Jeremiah presents a sobering message, both to the people of his day as well as to people today: God is against all sin. His judgment of wrath falls on the sin of all individuals and all nations, without exception (Jer. 9:25–26). It doesn't matter whether one is Jew ("circumcised") or Gentile ("uncircumcised"). No group is exempt. No one has special privileges. As Paul put it, "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men" (Rom. 1:18). All have sinned and stand under God's judgment (3:10–18, 23).

Jeremiah leaves no room for bargaining. He says that God will punish Egypt, Judah, Edom, Ammon, Moab, and every other nation, even those living in the farthest corners of the earth. That includes all the nations that have ever existed or will exist. Apparently the Lord sees no difference between the sins of Judah and the sins of Egypt, the sins of ancient cultures or the sins of modern culture. Sin is sin. There are no good sins. The sins of one people are as evil as the sins of another.

This is the "bad news" that makes the message of Christ's work on the Cross good news indeed. Yet even the bad news shows that God is as evenhanded in His judgment as He is in His mercy and grace (Rom. 3:29–30). He warns of judgment on all, but He also offers life to all. No one can hide from the all-seeing eyes of the Lord. But no one needs to lose out on His salvation unless that person rejects God's provision, Christ.

9:25, 26 God would punish or "visit" Judah, along with its uncircumcised neighboring nations. Circumcision, the sign of God's covenant with Abraham, was meaningless without a heart faithfully devoted to God. Here Judah is listed as just another nation. In fact, it is not even at the head of the list. The point of this text is similar to the concept of temple inviolability (ch. 7). Just as God would destroy even the temple (7:12–14), so He would ignore even circumcision when it was merely an outward symbol (Deut. 10:12–22).

10:1–25 This text has two major sections: (1) the absurdity of idolatry (vv. 1–16) and (2) punishment by exile (vv. 17–25).

10:1–16 In this poetic satire, the prophet confronts the utter falsehood, absurdity, and futility of idolatry. There are some parallels between this passage and Isaiah 40:18–20, 44:9–20, and 46:5–7. The structure of the section is as follows: (1) introduction (vv. 1, 2a); (2) the powerless gods (vv. 2b–5); (3) the incomparable Lord (vv. 6, 7); (4) the vanity of the false gods (vv. 8, 9); (5) the living Lord (v. 10); (6) the perishable false gods (v. 11); (7) The Lord, the Creator (vv. 12, 13); (8) judgment on the makers of the false gods (vv. 14, 15); and (9) The Lord, the God of Israel (v. 16). The four polemical cycles serve to contrast the Lord and the foreign idols according to various attributes of deity. Idolatry is seen as a rejection of Israel's essential identity. Incidentally, Jer. 10:12–16 is duplicated in 51:15–19, in the oracle against Babylon, the city of innumerable idols.

10:1, 2 The way of the Gentiles was worshiping natural phenomena by means of handmade icons and symbolic imagery. The signs of heaven were the astral deities (8:1–3) worshiped in the days of Manasseh and reinstituted following the death of Josiah and the collapse of his reforms. dismayed: The heavenly realms held a certain awe or terror for the nations, but Israel was to worship God who held the heavenly realm under His control.

10:3, 4 Customs refers to the practice of constructing deities for worship. Futile, which means "vapor," "vanity," or "worthlessness," describes the utter uselessness of idol worship. The process for manufacturing idols begins with the felling of a tree for wood, which the workman carves. Then the wood is overlaid with silver and gold ornamentation to give it "quality." Nails are utilized to provide stability, so that it would not topple. But the idols are not always stable. For example, the statue of the grain god Dagon toppled on successive nights before the ark of the covenant in the Philistine temple at Ashdod (1 Sam. 5:3, 4).

10:5 The upright idols were dumb and motionless; they required attendants to care for them and carry them from place to place. Do not be afraid: There is no reason to fear—let alone worship—objects that are completely powerless, unable to do good or evil.

10:6, 7 there is none like You, O LORD: This phrase expresses one of the great teachings of the prophets—the "incomparability of God." God is not simply "better" than other gods; He alone is the living God. He is great in might, not powerless and motionless like the fabricated gods of the nations. Furthermore, the answer to the rhetorical question expressed in v. 7 is that all would fear Him. The idols cause no one to fear them. King of the nations: This title reminds us that there is no power in all the universe that may compare to the power of the living God. A righteous king is a wise ruler, and none compares to God's understanding of nature and history.

10:8 Dull-hearted can mean " brutish," "stupid," or "unreceptive." The idea here is that instruction received from idolaters is as worthless as the idols themselves.

10:9, 10 Silver came from Tarshish, which some scholars have identified with Tartessus in southern Spain. The wooden and metallic idol was adorned with blue and purple fabrics, whose dye probably originated with the Phoenicians. However, even the most skillful or "wise" craftsmen could not manufacture true gods for there is but one true, living, and everlasting God. The fabricated icons were lifeless, deteriorating, false gods who were no more powerful or wise than their makers.

10:11 This verse was originally written in Aramaic rather than Hebrew, the usual language of the OT, but the reason for this change of language is not known. (Aramaic also occurs in Ezra and Daniel.) The message is clear that the helpless so-called gods would be destroyed.

10:12, 13 Jeremiah emphasizes the creative power of God, drawing from the imagery of Job 38 and Ps. 8. By God's power, wisdom, and discretion or "understanding," the earth and the heavens were brought into orderly existence. By the command of His voice, at Creation (Gen. 1:1—2:4), the waters, lightning, and wind are summoned. Jeremiah reminded the people of Judah that their God not only created the universe but also governs its ongoing life.

10:14, 15 True knowledge is found only in relationship to God. metalsmith: The craftsmen who used silver and gold for the images they constructed were put to shame by their handiwork. The lifeless and useless objects that they fashioned showed that their efforts were futile.

10:16 The Portion of Jacob: The Lord is the portion or share of His people, sufficient for their every need. His inheritance: Israel belonged to God; God is the sufficiency of His people.

10:17–25 This section completes the collection of oracles addressing the problem of false religion, which has contrasted the wisdom and understanding of people with that of God. The passage moves from judgment (vv. 17, 18), to lament (vv. 19, 20), to judgment (vv. 21, 22), and finally to prayer (vv. 23–25).

10:17, 18 gather up your wares: The Assyrian stone reliefs of Shalmaneser III depict captives transporting household goods on their heads as they go into exile in the eastern reaches of the empire. Soon, this would be the fate of the people of Judah.

10:19 Woe is me: Jeremiah personally identified with Judah and the destruction of Jerusalem. my hurt … My wound: The injuries inflicted upon Judah were severe; the Hebrew text suggests "incurable wounds." infirmity: Supplementing the words hurt and wounds, the word infirmity completes the threefold imagery of the damage done to Judah. Writing in triplets was a Hebrew technique to symbolize fullness.

10:20 Like the Bedouin whose tent had been destroyed by marauding bandits, Judah lay plundered while its children were murdered or deported. No one remained to pitch the tent and reestablish the nation.

10:21 In the Book of Jeremiah, shepherds usually refers to the national leaders to whom God gave the responsibility of maintaining justice. Judah's leaders had become dull-hearted, dumbfounded by the chastisement that God had brought upon them. Because the leaders had not sought God with a whole heart, they would not prosper with the growth of their flocks. Instead the shepherds would lose their flocks. The people would be scattered like sheep.

10:22 The advance of the foe from the north is announced (1:14, 15; 8:16). The armies of this foe would destroy the towns of Judah, reducing it to a desolate … den of jackals (9:11).

10:23 The theme of humankind's limited understanding of the ways of God is renewed. The one who would direct his own steps stands to reap the fruitlessness of his labors.

10:24 The Hebrew verb rendered correct, which means "to discipline" or "to instruct," has as its goal conformity to the word and will of God. Jeremiah pleaded with the Lord to deal with the nation according to His justice, but to withhold His anger.

10:25 The passage ends with a prayer to God to bring judgment upon those who destroyed Judah. Though the Gentile nations were not heirs to God's covenant, they would be judged according to His ethical standards.

11:1–17 This section evidences Jeremiah's knowledge of the Deuteronomic covenant and its stipulations for blessings and curses. A covenant is a legal treaty or relationship between individuals, between nations, or—in the case of Israel—between a nation and its God. The covenant specified rights, obligations, and responsibilities of the parties entering into the agreement. The outline of the passage is as follows: (1) exhortation to obedience (vv. 1–7); (2) Judah's disobedience (vv. 8–10); (3) judgment of Judah (vv. 11–14); and (4) the rejection of the Lord's beloved (vv. 15–17). The passage likely dates to the early years of the reign of Jehoiakim, or about 609–605 B.C., when the people ceased obeying the Mosaic covenant.

11:1, 2 Jeremiah's message from the Lord here is strongly associated with the Book of Deuteronomy. The term rendered words is the Hebrew name of the Book of Deuteronomy; it is also used to refer to the terms of the covenant.

11:3 Cursed suggests the negative provisions of the covenant as summarized in Deut. 27:26 (all of Deut. 27; 28).

11:4 iron furnace: This terminology comes directly from Deut. 4:20, which is set in a context of a warning against worshiping idols. Obey: Obedience is the key to blessing (Deut. 27:10; 28:1–14).

11:5, 6 that I may establish the oath: The blessing of the land, as promised to Abraham, was dependent upon the covenant loyalty of the people. The words Judah and Jerusalem are a standard way of referring to the entire nation of Israel. Hear … and do: These terms set forth the correct response to God's law.

11:7, 8 The emphatic form of the Hebrew phrase earnestly exhorted highlights the history of God's continual urgent—rising early—pleas for loyalty from His nation, from the Exodus until the present. The message had been the same from the beginning: obey. Incline their ear also means "obey." The Hebrew word translated dictates means "stubbornness" or "obstinance."

11:9, 10 A conspiracy is a plot with treacherous intent. turned back: The people had returned to the ways of their forefathers, who had rebelled against God and the covenant. Gone after means "to serve" or "to worship." Both the northern and southern kingdoms had practiced idolatry and broken the first of the Ten Commandments.

11:11 Because the heart of the nation was evil, God would bring calamity upon the people. God's justice is inescapable when sin is intrinsic to one's character. Even if the people were to cry out in distress, God would not listen.

11:12, 13 Rather than accept God's punishment and repent of their evil ways, the nation preferred to cry out to other gods for deliverance. The altars of their incense (1:16; 7:9) and sacrifices would become shameful objects.

11:14 Judah's status was decided. Jeremiah's prayer would be to no avail (7:16; 14:11).

11:15, 16 My house: The nation had no right to worship in God's temple while paying homage to other gods.

11:17 The term planted recalls the theme of 2:21, the idea that God had established Israel as His choicest vine. However, here the context is the impending doom that would result from the evil done by the Lord's people.

11:18–23 The disobedience and obstinacy of the nation is exemplified by the people from Jeremiah's hometown. The faithful prophet, who is rejected by his own, is echoed in Jesus' banishment from Nazareth (Matt. 13:53–58). In this section, Jeremiah typifies the life of our Lord. Jeremiah answers with a judgment oracle against the people of Anathoth. The oracle is then followed by Jeremiah's own reflective words of despair (12:1–6).

11:18, 19 the LORD gave me knowledge: God revealed to Jeremiah a plot against the prophet's life. a docile lamb brought to the slaughter: This imagery is reminiscent of Is. 53:7 and the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ. The fellow inhabitants of Anathoth had devised schemes for the assassination of the Lord's prophet. destroy … cut him off … remembered no more: The plot is delineated in a trilogy of phrases, which is typical of Jeremiah's literary style. Rejection by friends and the threat of murder are reasons for deepest depression.

11:20 Jeremiah appealed for vindication to God, as the one true righteous Judge. Mind is literally the internal organs of the body, and is a way of referring to the seat of human emotion. Heart refers to the seat of the intellect and will. Vengeance describes God's fury and anger against sin that demands punishment.

11:21–23 The death threats that the men of Anathoth made against Jeremiah must have been particularly alarming to the prophet, in that Anathoth was his hometown. Thus, he was betrayed by those who were probably closest to him. The men of Anathoth insisted that Jeremiah not prophesy in the name of the LORD. If Jeremiah had yielded to their demand, he would have repudiated his calling, his person, and his God. The threat of death to Jeremiah was answered by punishment of the young men as well as their children. The prediction of death by famine was fulfilled when the city was besieged by the Babylonians in the days of Zedekiah.

12:1–4 In this section, Jeremiah asked why the evil people of Judah prospered. This confession of the prophet reveals his deep personal struggle with one of the questions that faced the wisdom writers of the ancient world: Why do the wicked prosper? The soliloquy unveils the thinking and feelings of Jeremiah.

12:1 Plead means "contend legally." While no legal grievance can be brought against God, Jeremiah could pose legal questions to the righteous Judge.

12:2 The theme of God's establishing the nation of Israel is also found in 2:21; 11:17. The plant had taken root, but was producing bad fruit. near in their mouth … far from their mind: Pious phrases, such as "as the Lord lives," were often spoken by the rebellious leaders of Israel, but without a commitment of their mind (11:20). Sacrifices, oaths, and prayers are ineffectual without a full heart commitment.

12:3 You, O LORD, know me: God's intimate relationship with Jeremiah is evidenced here. The prophet had faced becoming like a sheep for the slaughter (11:19); here he calls for his enemies to be judged in the same way.

12:4 How long: Jeremiah's question related to God's delay of judgment on the people of the land. land mourn … herbs of every field wither … beasts and birds are consumed: These three elements are recurring themes in Jeremiah and other prophetic texts (4:28; Is. 40:7; Zeph. 1:3). Despite past chastisement, the people believed that God would not bring their country to an end.

12:5, 6 God's response to Jeremiah's question (v. 4) comes in the form of two metaphorical questions. The first metaphor, foot racing, was designed to teach Jeremiah that the obstacles he faced in his hometown were meager compared to those he would encounter before the kings of Judah and Babylon (the horses). The second metaphor, peace, was designed to remind the prophet of the impending turmoil he would have to endure in proclaiming the message of judgment to an unrepentant leadership. The relatively peaceful setting of Anathoth, with its minor opposition from treacherous family members, served to prepare Jeremiah to struggle against greater antagonists.

(Heb. ‘azab) (2:13; 12:7; Is. 1:4; 54:7) Strong’s #5800: The prophets frequently used this term to describe the people’s relationship to the covenant God made with them. Israel is described as “forsaking” God and His covenant by turning to idols (22:9; Ezek. 20:8). Moses warned the Hebrews about breaking God’s covenant and forsaking Him. Because of their unfaithfulness, God would in turn forsake His own people (Deut. 31:16, 17). Here the prophet Jeremiah indicates that this divine threat had become a reality for the nation of Judah (12:7).

12:7–13 The precise setting of this lament is unknown. Yet the context would fit the period after Nebuchadnezzar seized control of Palestine and the vassal kingdom of Jehoiakim. Edomites, Moabites, and others attacked the perimeters of Judah, plundering towns and fortresses and taking captives.

12:7 dearly beloved: God’s love and concern for His people does not preclude discipline when their sin makes it necessary.

12:8, 9 Judah had become like a lion roaring against God, resulting in His beloved becoming His hated.

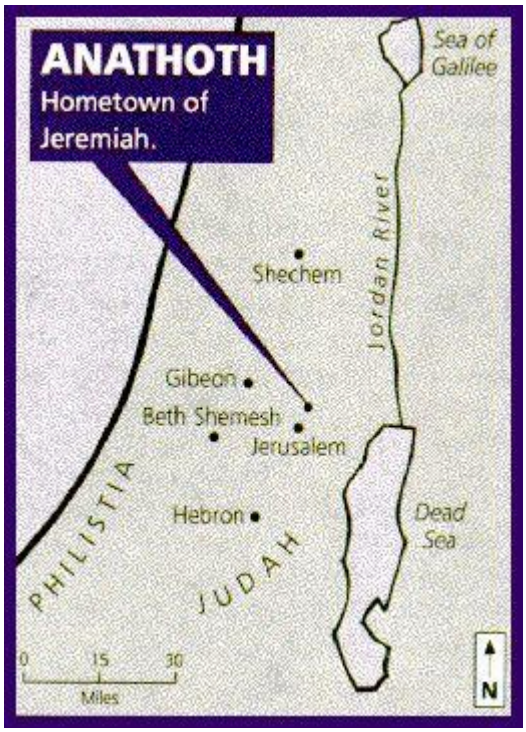
IN PLACE

Anathoth, Jeremiah's Hometown

Located less than five miles northeast of Jerusalem, Anathoth was a Levitical city (Josh. 21:1–3). It was the hometown of Abiathar the priest (1 Kin. 2:26) and two of David's mighty men (2 Sam. 23:27; 1 Chr. 12:3).

As a Levitical city, Anathoth should have been a model of justice and righteousness. It should have been among the first to respond with repentance to Jeremiah's warning of the Lord's impending judgment. In fact, the city had already been captured once before, by the Assyrians under Sennacherib, in fulfillment of God's judgment (Is. 10:30). Yet despite this history, Anathoth rejected both the message and the messenger of God.



12:10, 11 Rulers here refers to the foreign kings who had come as agents of God to judge Judah. The repetition of the word desolate three times in v. 11 describes the complete devastation of Judah (Is. 6:11). Because of sin, the land that once saw God's bounteous blessing would experience His devastating judgment.

12:12 Destruction would come to the desolate heights where Israel and Judah performed their idolatrous deeds (3:2; 3:21; 4:11).

12:13 The imagery turns to the fields, which the Israelites believed were endowed with fertility by Baal. Because of the people's idolatry, their fields were overgrown with thorns.

12:14–17 Following the extensive condemnation oracles, the concluding section provides assurance to Jeremiah and the faithful remnant that God will judge even those nations that He has utilized against His own people. The exiled Judah is promised restoration, but is warned about the consequences of future sins.

12:14 Evil neighbors included the powerful nations of Babylon and Assyria, as well as opportunistic kingdoms like Edom, Moab, and Ammon. These latter kingdoms seized land, crops, and hostages when Judah was weakened by invasion. The inheritance refers to the land that God gave His people under specific conditions. Pluck … out, which means "to root out, destroy," is often used in the Book of Jeremiah in the context of God's retribution on evil nations. Judah would be "plucked out" from among those who were plucked out.

12:15 This verse offers a glimmer of hope in the middle of a prophecy of judgment. In the midst of His judgment, God would remember His covenant with Abraham. Eventually He would return and have compassion on His people. Land portions would revert to their original owners.

12:16 The nations are given a stern condition regarding their survival and blessing. They are advised to learn the ways of Israel more diligently than they had taught Israel their own ways of Baal worship. If the nations would do this and place themselves under His covenant—swear by His name, they would be established. This is a call for the nations to share in Israel's salvation.

12:17 The negative condition is rendered with the same stress as the positive. If the nations refuse to submit to God's sovereignty, He will utterly pluck up and destroy them.

13:1, 2 linen sash: This article of clothing was like a short skirt or kilt worn by men. Jeremiah was not supposed to wash it.

13:3–5 Jeremiah was commanded to take his linen sash to the Euphrates River and hide it between the rocks. Since this would have meant a round-trip journey of some seven hundred miles—a trip that would have taken two to three months—some scholars have suggested that the river, generally translated as Euphrates, was within Palestine, perhaps the springs at the head of the Wadi Farah.

13:6, 7 Because Jeremiah's sash was dirty and then was exposed to the elements, it was ruined and profitable for nothing.

13:8–11 As Jeremiah's waistcloth was ruined (v. 7), so Judah's pride would be reduced to ruin. Pride describes the self-exalting conduct that characterized Israel in its love for idols. This pride is explained in a triplet of verbal phrases: refuse to hear … follow the dictates of their hearts … walk after other gods. Jeremiah's undefiled waistcloth in v. 1 symbolized unspoiled Judah in its early days of devotion to God, tightly bound to Him in covenant faithfulness. But as the waistcloth became ruined near the Euphrates, so Judah defiled itself by its allegiances to Assyria, Babylon, and their national deities.

13:12 Jeremiah's quotation of a well-known proverb on the blessing of plentiful wine would be met with a derogatory response. The bottle was a clay storage jar used for wine, water, and oil.

13:13 Blessing turned to debauchery among the leaders and citizens of Jerusalem. The listing of kings, priests, prophets, and inhabitants is a means of depicting the entire religious and political nation by listing the different parts.

13:14 The wine jars of God's wrath would be smashed and broken together, a picture of a devastated nation. The triplet of synonyms for compassion—pity, spare, and have mercy—heightens the effect of hopelessness in Judah's situation.

13:15 Proud here refers to self-exaltation and contempt for the spoken or revealed word of God.

13:16 To give glory to God is to exalt and worship Him. This verse warns of the consequences of failing to glorify God. Four Hebrew synonyms for darkness are found in this verse, deepening the impression of divine displeasure meted out against God's people. In the rugged mountains that dominate the landscape of Judah, where walking in the dark is hazardous, no hope or light would be discerned.

13:17 Jeremiah had been told not to pray for the rebellious and unresponsive people of Judah (7:16; 11:14; 14:11), but here he expresses in secret his deep lament for the LORD's flock, who had been carried away into exile.

13:18, 19 The king and the queen mother are Jehoiachin and his mother Nehushta, who were exiled by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kin. 24:8–12) after only three months on the throne in Jerusalem. Humble yourselves: Jeremiah advised the royal household to submit to Babylon. Judah had established a series of fortresses in the South that were an important line of defense from the days of Solomon to Zedekiah. They were a source of pride for the military but were destroyed by the Assyrians and again by the Babylonians.

13:20 Those who come from the north refers to the Babylonians.

13:21 you have taught them … to be head over you: This verse seems to indicate that Judah had cooperated with its enemies as they began to dominate the nation. The metaphor of childbirth portrays Judah reaping the fruits of its labors in pain and anguish.

13:22 Your skirts have been uncovered: Judah would be shamed by its conquerors in the same way that a prostitute was publicly disgraced.

13:23 The negative rhetorical question confirmed Judah's inability to change its own ways. The nation had reinforced its habit of doing evil (4:22) for so long that it did not know how to do good.

13:24, 25 The consequence of Judah's continual rebellion would be the scattering of its inhabitants like chaff or stubble driven by the desert wind. The word rendered falsehood is one of the key terms Jeremiah uses to refer to the fraudulent worship of foreign deities.

13:26, 27 Uncover your skirts refers to public exposure (v. 22). Since Judah had lustfully sought adulterous relationships with foreign gods and goddesses, God would expose and bring to shame its actions. Adulteries are literally sins against marriage. Applied to Israel the term means involvement with another nation's gods. Neighings refers to animals in heat pursuing mates. The lewdness of your harlotry describes both physical and spiritual prostitution.

14:1—15:21 This extended lament over Judah is composed of a series of short dirges, judgment oracles, and confessions, concluded by a word of assurance to the prophet from the Lord.

14:1–10 This lament over the drought and pestilence that have befallen Judah is outlined as follows: (1) an introduction (v. 1); (2) the drought situation depicted (vv. 2–6); (3) a cry to the Lord for deliverance (vv. 7–9); and (4) an accusation (v. 10).

14:1 Droughts were viewed as indicators of divine displeasure, as in the idolatrous days of Ahab, Jezebel, and Elijah.

14:2 Four short clauses using four words for lament profile the mourning of the country. The Hebrew word translated mourns is a general term for grief over the dead. Languish means "to wither" or "to shrink back." The Hebrew word for mourn describes the dark gloom of weeping and wailing. Finally, cry describes a clamoring cry of joy or sorrow.

14:3, 4 nobles: The men of renown, who could have afforded any price for water, sent out servants to search in all the normal locations for water, but no water could be found. The rain-starved farmlands were scorched by the sun, and the farmers covered their heads in mourning.

14:5, 6 The drought of Judah affected even the wild animals. The doe abandoned its fawn for lack of forage. Wild donkeys stood on barren hills, sniffing the wind for the scent of moisture—to no avail.

14:7 Jeremiah echoes the sentiments of his people in his plea for forgiveness and deliverance for the nation. The Hebrew word translated iniquities refers to the accountable guilt that results from continual unconfessed sin.

14:8, 9 Jeremiah pleaded with God on the basis of His name and character, particularly His role as the Hope and Savior of His people. Instead of having an intimate relationship with Judah, God had become like a stranger or a traveler in the land, for the people worshiped other gods.

14:10 Unlike the troubled Jeremiah, the people were unrepentant and in need of correction. Jeremiah realized that judgment was inevitable because God offered no hint of deliverance. they have loved to wander: Loved describes voluntary desire. Wander describes a repetitive back and forth movement—in this case, of seeking every possible occasion for sin. Because no one displayed any restraint from sin, God could not violate His holy character and accept the people of Judah.

14:11, 12 Because divine discipline was inevitable, Jeremiah was instructed not to pray for the good of Jerusalem. fast … offer burnt offering: These methods of expressing penitence and establishing communion with God were ineffective because of the people's disobedience. The doom of Judah was sealed.

14:13 Jeremiah complained to the Lord about false prophets who were proclaiming a message of peace instead of war and pestilence. These pretentious prophets presumed upon God's mercy and promise of deliverance as demonstrated in the days Hezekiah and Isaiah, when Jerusalem was miraculously rescued from the siege of Sennacherib's army.

14:14 The prophet who truly speaks in the name of God will see his words come to pass. The false prophets who promised peace (v. 13) spoke lies of their own device (2 Pet. 1:19–21). Divination is prohibited in Deut. 18:14. Worthless thing is a degrading description of the idols that were worshiped in the days of Isaiah (Is. 2:8) but condemned by the Law (Lev. 19:4).

14:15, 16 God's condemnation would fall first on the false prophets because of their prophecies of peace (v. 13). Next in line for judgment would be the inhabitants of the city who had been deceived by the false prophets. Individual responsibility for one's sins is one of the key developments in Jeremiah. Destruction and desecration will befall them; none will survive to properly dispose of the bodies. This imagery of exposed corpses—the ultimate desecration—occurs earlier in 7:33, 8:3, and 9:22.

14:17–22 This section continues themes from vv. 1–16 of God's relentless judgment, lament of prophet and people, and the futility of intercession on behalf of the nation.

14:17, 18 The setting for this lament over the desecrated city may be either 597 B.C., when Judah was invaded, or 588–586 B.C., when Jerusalem fell. Jerusalem is broken by a great blow from the Lord. field … city: The entire region is laid waste. Corpses cover the fields, a continuation of the imagery of verse 16, and the city is filled with famine. The religious leaders wander aimlessly in an unidentifiable land.

14:19 A series of questions probes the issue of God's total rejection of Judah. The concept was foreign to the peoples' minds, evidencing an obliviousness to the potentiality of the covenant curses. The latter part of the verse is a duplicate of 8:15. The people begin to understand their hopeless situation.

14:20 The people of Judah acknowledged their wickedness, meaning "rebellion," their iniquity, meaning "perversity," and the fact that they had sinned. This triplet of terms indicates the pervasiveness of sin in the land.

14:21, 22 The people's plea for God's mercy was based on His character —His name's sake, His glory, His covenant relationship with Israel, and His power over creation. Entreaties based on divine character and attributes are common in the Psalms. At stake was God's reputation and the blessing that would come to the people, but here the obligations of the people to the Lord are disregarded.

15:1–9 The message of judgment is resumed, with the present oracle building upon the theme of the people's plea in 14:17–22. Despite the request for relief on the basis of the covenant, the Lord is bringing destruction and devastation based upon the same covenant.

15:1 When Moses and Samuel interceded with God on behalf of the nation, God responded favorably. However, not even these men of God could alter the Lord's intended purpose for the people of Judah—namely, that they should be driven from the land.

15:2 Death, sword, famine, and captivity would be the outcome of God's judgment. He would use foreign armies as instruments of judgment (14:11, 12).

15:3, 4 The four forms of destruction describe the complete judgment of Judah. The imagery of dogs, birds, and beasts devouring human flesh vividly illustrates not only death, but desecration. The basis for this desecration is the defilement of Jerusalem that took place during the reign of Manasseh, when idolatry reigned in the temple courts and children were sacrificed to Molech (7:31).

15:5 Rhetorical questions set the tenor for the mournful state of affairs in the once holy city. Desecrated and defiled, Jerusalem is a town without pity; there is none to console her.

15:6 Forsaken means "cast down" or "rejected." The people threw off the yoke of the covenant and went backward instead of forward in obedience. My hand indicates the active power of God in accomplishing His will for His people (Deut. 26:8). I am weary of relenting: Relenting refers to God's restraining from totally demolishing Israel and Judah. For hundreds of years, the Lord had refrained from fully punishing Israel for its idolatry and unfaithfulness.

15:7, 8 Like wheat chaff that is scattered by the winnowing fork and the wind, the people of Judah would be dispersed. The population would be decimated. The further ravaging of the land is revealed in the numerous widows who would be left in the wake of the death of the men of Judah.

15:9 The blessing of seven sons was the ultimate hope for ancient mothers and fathers. But the utmost horror was to lose all seven in death, resulting in the loss of an heir.

15:10, 11 Every one of them curses me: To curse someone in ancient Israel was to invoke condemnation on that person with a prescribed formula. Jeremiah now comes to the lowest point in his career. Friendless, forsaken, discouraged, frustrated, he even despairs of life itself. But God had not forsaken him. Eventually good would come of this hopeless situation.

15:12 Iron here may symbolize Jeremiah, who was called an "iron pillar" in his call in 1:18. The iron of the north could then refer to the high quality iron from Asia Minor or the Balkans. Otherwise the imagery is that of a powerful foe from the north.

15:13, 14 Judah would be taken captive and exiled to an unknown land, as had happened to Israel a century before. Fire is often used in the books of the prophets as a symbol of divine wrath and judgment (4:4; 11:16).

The Persecuted Prophets

Throughout his ministry, Jeremiah had to endure intense persecution because of his stand for the Lord (Jer. 15:15). In this he was not alone. Another prophet named Urijah also spoke out against the wicked policies and practices of the leaders in Jerusalem. For this he was sentenced to die, but fled to Egypt. However, King Jehoiakim was able to have him extradited back to the city, whereupon he was put to death (26:20–23).

Later the leaders turned on Jeremiah, launching a campaign of verbal attacks against him and plotting ways to destroy him (18:18). Eventually they put him on trial for speaking against Jerusalem, a charge for which they demanded the death penalty (26:10–11). Fortunately, an official named Ahikam intervened and was able to spare the prophet's life (26:24). Nevertheless, Jeremiah was imprisoned for his message. Yet eventually he was vindicated when his prediction that Jehoiakim would not die peacefully in Jerusalem (22:18–19) came to pass in about 598 B.C. (2 Chr. 36:5–6).

15:15 God's patience was shown in the way He endured for a long time the sin of His people. Jeremiah requested God to be patient with him and not take … away his life because of his own rebellion (Jeremiah's lament in v. 10).

15:16 Eating the words of the Lord means to internalize them and allow their meaning to become a reality in one's life. Inner joy and rejoicing, or "abundant joy," are the endowment of the one who knows and is known by the Lord. To be called by the Lord's name is to be recognized as belonging to Him as a servant.

15:17 Jeremiah's isolation and indignation were the results of his obedience to the word and calling of God.

15:18 My pain refers to Jeremiah's internal agonizing over his prophetic role. The unreliable stream is a vivid picture of the arid regions of the Middle East, where water is at a premium and streams can run dry without warning.

15:19 The Lord responded to Jeremiah's impassioned inquiry (vv. 15–18) with a message of repentance and reassurance of Jeremiah's call. return: Jeremiah is admonished to "repent" (3:1, 7, 12), after which God would restore him to his prophetic position as God's spokesman. Stand before means "to serve"; repentance and divine appointment are necessary for genuine prophetic service.

15:20, 21 I will make you … a fortified bronze wall … they shall not prevail: Jeremiah was recommissioned with words similar to those of his original calling (1:18, 19). The term deliver suggests bringing out from danger, bondage, and oppression. Redeem means to rescue from danger. The wicked refers to people such as Jehoiakim and the people of Anathoth who had opposed Jeremiah so vehemently (11:18–23). God promises His presence in times of opposition, persecution, and imprisonment for His sake.

16:1–13 Jeremiah's own life became a symbolic act representative of the nation's struggle. This section is an autobiographical message from the Lord evidencing the prophet's own self-understanding. The message is formulated around three prohibitions to Jeremiah (vv. 2, 5, 8), each followed by an explanatory word about the people, and concluded by a standard judgment oracle against the rebellious and idolatrous acts of the people.

16:1, 2 In the case of Jeremiah, the prohibition against marriage was both a sign to the nation and a blight against his name among the people. Celibacy was abnormal; large families were indicative of God's blessing upon a household. Jeremiah faced life with God as his sole comfort and support.

16:3, 4 Had Jeremiah married and had children, they might have experienced the terrifying horror of destruction, famine, death, and desecrated corpses. Death would reach such proportions that mourners would be lacking. Sword, famine, and exposed corpses are three of the common means of judgment in Jeremiah (7:33; 14:11, 12). The ultimate desecration and abuse of humanity in the ancient Near East was to allow a body to go without proper burial.

16:5 God's prohibition against participating in the customary grief process reveals the abnormal nature of Jeremiah's life. The trio of terms for sorrow—mourning, lament, and bemoan—is followed by a trio of terms referring to God's faithful care—peace, lovingkindness, and mercies—from which Judah had been removed.

16:6, 7 The pagan mourning practices of cutting oneself and shaving oneself bald were strictly forbidden in the Law of Moses (Lev. 19:28; 21:5; Deut. 14:1). The bread of mourning and cup of consolation probably refer to food and drink brought for the family of the deceased.

16:8, 9 The house of feasting was a banquet hall often used for wedding celebrations. Jeremiah was restricted from participating in all meaningful family ceremonies. Jeremiah's life was symbolic of the state of Israel and the estrangement between God and Judah.

16:10 The trio of questions posed by the people indicates their lack of understanding of God's word. The people of Judah had missed the purpose for which they were chosen, to manifest to the world the nature and character of God by living as the people of God.

16:11, 12 Judah had forsaken its covenant LORD and pursued other deities. Abandoning God and His Law or "instruction" led to disaster. listens: This term is foundational to the nation's existence; it recalls Deut. 6:4, the central creed of Israel's biblical faith.

16:13 The blessing of devotion to God was freedom, prosperity, and large families in the land. Blessing was dependent on obedience; the consequence of disobedience was a dreaded life out of the land, in a world the people did not know.

16:14, 15 the days are coming: The future restoration of Israel would surpass the ancient deliverance from Egypt (23:7, 8).

16:16, 17 The fishermen and hunters refer to the Babylonian armies that would scour the land for Judah's rebels. Hunting and fishing imagery as a metaphor for deportation is also found in Ezek. 12:13; Amos 4:2.

16:18 Defiled is used sometimes to refer to combined ethical, physical, and spiritual uncleanness. God's land or inheritance had been profaned by numerous cultic objects, which Jeremiah scathingly refers to as the carcasses of their detestable and abominable idols.

16:19, 20 A message of hope begins with a trio of honorific terms for God: strength, fortress, and refuge. Strength and fortress are related words in Hebrew, like the English "strength" and "stronghold." A refuge is a place of safety from danger. Jeremiah knew that his only place of strength and safety was in God. The scope of Jeremiah's hope is universal. The Gentiles, among whom the people of Judah would be exiled, would come to the God of Israel in fulfillment of the promise of Gen. 12:1–3.

16:21 know: The message of the collected oracles of chapter 16 is the revelation of the will and work of God. He will personally cause the people to know Him and thus enter into an intimate relationship with Him. To know His name is to understand His nature and His ways.

17:1–18 This section is composed of four miscellaneous sections (vv. 1–4, 5–8, 9–11, 12, 13) centered on the word heart, with a literary bracket formed on the word written. Like the collection in chapter 16, the section is concluded by a personal heart confession of Jeremiah (vv. 14–18).

17:1, 2 Judah's sin had become so deeply engraved that it could not be removed. The point of a diamond on a pen of iron indicates the permanence of the engraving. The heart of the people, the center of their spiritual, emotional, and mental well-being, was inextricably entangled in stubborn rebellion against God. horns of your altars: Excavations in Israel have uncovered horned altars at sites such as Dan, Beersheba, and Arad. On some altars bloodstains can still be detected after more than 2,500 years.

17:3 Jerusalem and the other cities of Judah were demolished and plundered by the Babylonians. The remaining treasures of the temple of God were carried by Nebuchadnezzar's army to Babylon. Even the idolatrous cultic centers were destroyed (15:13, 14).

17:4 let go: This phrase, when used in the context of land, usually refers to letting the land lie fallow during the sabbatical year (Ex. 23:10, 11). Judah's captivity would provide rest for the land from the idolatrous activities of its people.

17:5, 6 cursed: This term is used extensively in Deuteronomy. Two different words for man are used in this passage. The first refers to a strong and capable male; the second is a generic term for humankind as made in the image of God (Gen. 1:26–28). One cannot trust in both God and humankind; to turn one's heart toward people is to turn away from God.

17:7 The term blessed is used often in the Psalms and Deuteronomy to describe the benefits that accrue to one who is devoted to the Lord and His word. The words translated trusts and hope are related in Hebrew.

17:8 planted: The imagery of a fruitful tree derives directly from Ps. 1:3. This verse teaches that one who trusts in God will not be free from trials and adversity, but that God will bring fruit and blessing in and through those difficulties (14:1–9; 15:19–21).

17:9, 10 The heart refers to the mind, the source of thinking, feeling, and action. It can betray a person in basic issues concerning the reality of God, His will, and His word. The heart can belie the truth. No one can comprehend its true character but God Himself, for only He can discern the motives and the reasoning behind it. God can know the heart, for only He may search and test the mind. This is a most powerful statement about the process of God's discernment of the inner person. The Lord's justice is evidenced in all His ways, giving people just recompense for all their ways and doings. God rewards or punishes according to faith, namely, trusting in Him and His name.

17:11 The teaching of vv. 1–10 is supported by a proverb based on the common belief that the partridge hatched eggs other than its own. When the young birds recognized that the partridge was not their mother, they would leave her. Similarly, a person who unjustly gains wealth will be abandoned by that wealth and then be known as a fool. Fool here refers to a person without moral, ethical, or spiritual character.

17:12, 13 A glorious high throne refers to the temple in Jerusalem and the ark of the covenant, the symbol of God's presence and sovereignty over the nation. The hope of Israel refers to the expectation of deliverance and the restoration of the faithful (14:8). Judah had nowhere to turn because it had forsaken God and His lordship. There is only one source of life and hope for Israel and all nations—the LORD, the fountain of living waters.

(Heb. rapha) (17:14; 2 Chr. 7:14; Is. 19:22; 53:5; 57:18) Strong’s #7495: This word applies literally to the work of a physician. Occasionally it refers to inanimate objects and can be best translated repair (1 Kin. 18:30). But more commonly this word connotes the idea of restoring to normal, as in 2 Chr. 7:14, where God promises to restore the land if His people pray. In the Psalms, God is praised for His role in healing disease (Ps. 103:3), healing the brokenhearted (Ps. 147:3), and healing the soul by providing salvation (Pss. 30:2; 107:20). Isaiah declared that the healing of God’s people results from the sacrificial wounds of His Son (53:5–12).

17:14 Though Jeremiah struggled with difficulties, including persecution and loneliness, he continually turned in praise to the Lord who can heal and save. Likewise, the only hope of healing and salvation for the nation of Judah was divine intervention.

17:15, 16 Some scoffers dared to defy God and the message revealed through Jeremiah, taunting the Lord to bring the judgment threatened by His spokesman. Jeremiah pointed out that he took no pleasure in proclaiming judgment. He remained a devoted shepherd who was intimately concerned for his own people.

17:17 Terror may refer to physical, emotional, or mental horror. The Hebrew word translated hope, meaning “refuge” or “shelter,” refers to a position of safety and security in the face of danger and helplessness, such as Jeremiah faced in Judah and Jerusalem.

17:18 Jeremiah called for his persecutors to be ashamed and dismayed, to be dishonored and demoralized. The prophet also called upon the Lord to confirm the message of judgment in the day of doom and double destruction.

17:19–27 The tenor of the chapter changes abruptly with a specific message on the sanctity of the Sabbath. Unlike many of Jeremiah’s oracles, this one is conditional upon the people’s response. But in light of previous judgment passages, the likelihood of repentance is remote. The outline is as follows: (1) instruction to Jeremiah (vv. 19, 20); (2) a call to keep the Sabbath (vv. 21, 22); (3) the example of the disobedient ancestors (v. 23);

(4) blessings of obedience (vv. 24–26); and (5) the curse of disobedience (v. 27).

17:19, 20 The particular gate is not mentioned, though the description would place it in the area of the Davidic citadel. Jeremiah's message was to be proclaimed throughout the city. From kings to peasants, all of the inhabitants of the city were to hear—and obey—the word of the Lord.

17:21, 22 Take heed: This same phrasing is used in Deut. 4:15 in a warning against idolatry. The sanctity of the Sabbath was a most serious matter. The Sabbath stood as a sign of creation and the covenant relationship between God and Israel. To hallow it is to set it apart, to distinguish it from other days.

17:23 Abuse of the Sabbath was apparently commonplace throughout the history of the nation.

17:24, 25 If the Sabbath was kept holy, signifying the covenant faithfulness of Israel, the nation would retain its sovereign kings and princes. In other words, the promise of unending Davidic succession in kingship would be fulfilled (2 Sam. 7:16).

17:26 If the stipulations of v. 21 were followed, the temple would once again become the center of worship for the nation. People would travel from throughout the land to Jerusalem to worship God with their sacrifices.

17:27 The consequence of disobedience would be total destruction of the city. If the stipulations of 17:21 were not followed, the Lord of the covenant would bring an unquenchable, destructive fire against the city and its palaces (4:4; Hos. 8:14; Amos 1:4–2:5).

A potter practices his craft at a revolving turntable. Jeremiah watched a potter like this at work as he refashioned a marred vessel, and he compared it to God's ability to remake the nation of Judah (Jer. 18:1–11).

18:1—20:18 This extended section has three parts: (1) a judgment parable of the potter (18:1–23); (2) a symbolic act: the broken flask (19:1–15); and (3) Pashhur imprisons the prophet named Magor-Missabib (20:1–18).

18:1–23 This section is also divided into three parts: (1) the parable of the potter (vv. 1–12); (2) the people rejected by God (vv. 13–17); and (3) the persecution of Jeremiah (vv. 18–23).

18:1–12 The parable of the potter is the first of several prose autobiographical sign-actions, similar to the symbolic act account, which provide further demonstration of Judah's rebellion against God. Those that are undated belong to the period between the beginning of Jehoiakim's reign to the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. The potter is a symbol of the Lord, and Israel is the clay in His hands.

18:1, 2 Arise and go down is a common formula for divinely directed service.

18:4–6 The potter's vessel was marred and thus unsuitable for its intended purpose. The potter's remolding of the clay into an acceptable and unblemished work symbolized God's action in reforming Israel. The people had become marred and defiled and had to be reformed into a vessel fit to be identified with the Lord.

18:7, 8 If a nation threatened with destruction would turn from its evil, God would relent of the promised disaster. God the Potter was more than willing to forgive the iniquity and stubborn rebellion of Judah. Unfortunately, the people continued in their stiffnecked ways. In Gal. 4:19, Paul uses this imagery to depict the formation of the image of Christ in the obedient Christian.

18:9, 10 A nation to whom God has promised His blessing may forfeit its preferred status through disobedience. In such a case, God would relent of the good He had promised and bring calamity upon the rebellious people.

18:11 God was fashioning a disaster, a calamity, for Judah if it did not repent or return to Him and change its actions from evil to good.

18:12 The people's response to God's warning (v. 11) is similar to that in 17:23: They rebelliously pursued their own ways. Hopeless describes the despair the people felt concerning obedience to God. These feelings were the direct result of the evil heart that is characteristic of people who continually turn away from the Lord and His ways.

18:13–17 Building upon the rebellion theme of v. 12, Jeremiah emphasizes by means of lessons from nature how unnatural are Israel's actions. This approach develops further the role of the prophet as a wise person who observes and understands nature and humankind (1:11–13; 2:21; 5:22). The form of the passage is the disputation speech, which is composed of rhetorical questions, an indictment, and the delineation of judgment.

18:13, 14 Negative rhetorical questions show the absurdity of Israel's rebellion. The snow water of Lebanon describes the Mount Hermon watershed that erupts in numerous springs, providing most of the water for the Jordan River. God's blessing was often demonstrated in the provision of water from rocks in arid regions (Ex. 17:6). No one would trade cool spring water for strange or "alien" waters.

18:15 The principal indictment brought against Judah was idolatry, which had resulted in the people's wayward lives and the humiliating destruction of the land. forgotten: This term is used in the same way in 3:21; 13:25. worthless idols: Foreign deities such as Baal and Asherah were represented by empty and ineffective cultic figurines. they have caused themselves to stumble: The people had brought upon themselves the droughts and disaster that they faced because they had strayed from the ancient paths, the way of the Law and the covenant relationship to God.

18:16, 17 make their land desolate: For similar descriptions of the destruction of Judah, see 4:27; 6:8; 9:11.

18:18–23 Outward proclamation of God's truth can lead to strong opposition, even persecution leading to death. Jeremiah learns about a plot to slander and denigrate him because of his insistence on proclaiming a message of harsh judgment.

18:18 Similar to the situation in 11:18–23, the people devised plans to counter the words of Jeremiah. They reasoned that with their own priests, wise people, and prophets in Jerusalem, they did not need to listen to Jeremiah.

18:19, 20 Jeremiah reminded the Lord how he had interceded for the people and had asked God to turn away His wrath and judgment. But instead of showing their appreciation for Jeremiah's intervention, the people dug a pit in anticipation of his demise.

18:21, 22 Jeremiah's cry for personal revenge may not be as easily justified as those of the psalmists (Ps. 137). Nonetheless, he had been falsely charged with misrepresenting the truth of God. All the imprecations, or calls for divine cursing, in the Bible have one element in common: though strongly worded, they await the work of God rather than speaking of initiating revenge. Famine was one of the curses of breaking the covenant (Deut. 28:48).

18:23 You know: As God had known Jeremiah's heart (12:3; 15:15), so He was keenly aware of the people's plots against the prophet. The Hebrew word translated atonement is the same term used in Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. The word emphasizes total cleansing and removal of sin and its effects. The word blot out is also used to refer to the removal of sin and guilt by God. Jeremiah's appeal was for God to condemn in anger rather than to forgive his enemies.

19:1–15 This section has two parts: (1) the broken flask in Hinnom Valley (vv. 1–13) and (2) a message in the temple court (vv. 14, 15).

19:1, 2 A flask was a small, narrow-necked water bottle made of clay, six to ten inches tall. The elders were summoned to follow Jeremiah to the Valley of the Son of Hinnom (7:31, 32), a dumping area where children were ritually sacrificed in the days of Manasseh. The Potsherd Gate accessed the valley on the southern side of the city since the days of Hezekiah's expansion.

19:3 Hear: This key word of the Deuteronomic code (Deut. 6:4) calls for a decision regarding the content of the message. his ears will tingle: This expression is used to refer to a harsh, ringing judgment announcement (1 Sam. 3:11).

19:4–6 made this an alien place: The people, through their idolatry, had prevented the once-holy city of Jerusalem from being the place where God chose His name to dwell. The city had become a place of alien gods and goddesses. neither they … nor the kings of Judah have known: The word know speaks of an intimate, personal knowledge that it is impossible to have with inanimate physical objects. The blood of the innocents refers to the murderous act of child sacrifice (7:31). Human sacrifice was known among the Phoenicians, Moabites, and Canaanites. This abominable practice, performed in the name of religious worship, was explicitly forbidden in the covenant (Deut. 12:31).

19:7 Babylon was the agent who would make void, or "lay waste," the counsel of the elders who rebutted the Lord's message through Jeremiah and continued in idolatry. The desecration of corpses by allowing birds and wild beasts to consume the flesh would be the ultimate defilement among peoples of the ancient Near East (7:33; 9:22).

19:8 God would allow Jerusalem to be made an object of derision and humiliation in order to vindicate His name (18:16). Plagues would strike the city according to the covenant curse of Deut. 28:58–61 (Lam. 2:15; Zeph. 2:15).

19:9 The gruesome practice of cannibalism appears, recalling the words of Deut. 28:53. After years of siege resulting in severe famine, the people would resort to eating human flesh in order to survive. This prophecy was literally fulfilled in 586 B.C. when Nebuchadnezzar invaded Judah, and again in A.D. 70 when Titus destroyed Jerusalem.

19:10 After the proclamation of this horrifying message of judgment, the symbolic act is performed before the summoned elders and other inhabitants of Jerusalem.

19:11 As pottery breaks into pieces when it is thrown on the hard ground, so God's judgment would shatter the city and scatter those dwelling there. Restoration would be impossible. The number of corpses would outnumber possible burial sites (7:32, 33).

19:12, 13 As the inhabitants of Jerusalem had made the Valley of the Son of Hinnom a place of death, so the Lord would make the entire city of Jerusalem a place of death (vv. 4–6).

20:1–18 This section has two parts: (1) Jeremiah's message to Pashhur (vv. 1–6) and (2) Jeremiah's complaint and lament (vv. 7–18).

20:1 Pashhur … chief governor: A person in this position had to be a priest. He had oversight of the temple, the temple guards, entry into the courts, and so on. Jeremiah's proclamations against the city and the temple were of grave concern to Pashhur because of the threat to the continuation of the cult in which he was involved.

20:2 Jeremiah was beaten and confined to a stockade by Pashhur. This was not a normal prison or dungeon, but a holding cell for those who might defile the area by uncleanness or aberrant behavior. The high gate of Benjamin was also called the Upper Gate, to distinguish it from another city gate of the same name. This portal provided access into the temple courtyards from the north, the direction of Benjamin's territory.

20:3, 4 The name Magor-Missabib means "Terror on Every Side." As Pashhur had been a terror to Jeremiah, so he would become a terror to himself, his family, and his associates. The foe from the north described in earlier passages (1:13–15) is here identified as Babylon.

20:5 The four resources of Jerusalem that would be transported with the exiles to Babylon were wealth, produce, precious things, and treasures. This list is balanced by four terms for the confiscation of Jerusalem's valuables: give, plunder, seize, and carry. The use of these terms for both the plunder and the confiscation indicates comprehensiveness.

20:6 Pashhur, his family, and his close associates who had opposed Jeremiah would be deported to Babylon because Pashhur had prophesied lies. Pashhur apparently had announced that Jerusalem would not suffer destruction.

20:7–18 Jeremiah's despair deepens as he accuses God of luring him into this position of ridicule (vv. 7–10), then breaks into an expression of faith and praise (vv. 11–13), followed by a relapse into despondency over his birth and call (vv. 14–18). This outline follows closely the form of the individual lament that is found in the Book of Psalms.

20:7 induced … persuaded: A play on words is intended by using two forms of the same Hebrew verb, which means "to entice." Jeremiah claimed that the Lord had seduced him and that he had succumbed to the temptation.

(Heb. dabar) (1:2, 13; 7:2; 20:8; 26:5; Deut. 24:5) Strong's #1697: This Hebrew word is derived from the verb "to speak," and it signifies the word or thing spoken. Often it refers to the idea or content of what is said, and is translated matter (2 Sam. 11:19), thing (Ex. 16:16), or business (Deut. 24:5). The phrase "word of the LORD" is used by the prophets at the beginning of a divine message (1:13). In the case of prophetic literature, word can be a technical term for a prophecy. In the Bible, the word of revelation is associated with prophets (26:5), just as wisdom is associated with wise men and the law with priests (18:18). Jeremiah used dabar more than any other prophet in order to clarify the authority given to him by God.

20:8 Jeremiah had faithfully proclaimed the Lord's word of judgment and destruction, but the prophecy had not been fulfilled, thus opening the prophet up to reproach and derision.

20:9 Jeremiah decided to refrain from declaring God's word or speaking in His name. But the divine message could not be held within or in any way hindered from accomplishing God's purpose (Is. 46:10, 11; 55:11). God's word was like a consuming fire in Jeremiah's heart and bones; unless the word was unleashed, the prophet would perish. Unlike the heart of the people, Jeremiah's mental, physical, emotional, and spiritual life was overwhelmed by God's word and will for His people.

20:10 Jeremiah was mocked with his own words, fear on every side (v. 3, 4). Report … and we will report it: Whatever Jeremiah announced or denounced, the leaders of Judah turned back against him until he was devastated and demoralized.

20:11 Most psalms of individual lament contain a confession of trust in God (Ps. 13). Jeremiah turned to God in prayer and praise in his hour of deepest need. with me: In his call, Jeremiah was promised God's presence to deliver him (1:8, 19). mighty, awesome One: God was Jeremiah's powerful warrior. Jeremiah's enemies would not prevail (vv. 7, 10), but would stumble and fall before God. Their punishment would be shame and everlasting confusion (23:40).

20:12 You who test: God tests (6:27; 17:10) and judges the righteous, those who walk uprightly in His ways and truth. see the mind and heart:

God can see the innermost being of a person and discern his or her attitude and spirit. vengeance: Jeremiah cried for the Lord's promised judgment and destruction to be fulfilled without delay.

20:13 Jeremiah's confession of trust turns to praise as he quotes or paraphrases a psalm or hymn. The context and content of the psalm closely parallel Ps. 35:9, 10 (Ps. 109:30, 31).

20:14–18 This section is an expansion of the woe lament 15:10.

20:14, 15 In ancient Israel, to curse God or one's parents was an offense punishable by death. Jeremiah avoided committing a capital offense by cursing his conception and birth, and hence his call from God.

20:16, 17 Jeremiah's intense dejection caused him to call for the death of the man who told Jeremiah's father the good news of his son's birth. did not relent: Jeremiah, in his distress, thought it would have been more merciful for him to die before birth than to endure the hardship of rejection, persecution, and imprisonment that he faced.

20:18 Jeremiah's crying question goes unanswered in this context. The explanation would be found in the words of his call and the imminent fulfillment of the words he had faithfully and diligently proclaimed.

21:1—23:40 This section begins a series of oracles based upon Jeremiah's encounters with the kings and religious leaders of Judah, concluded by a vision account (24:1–10) parallel to the previous section, which ended with a symbolic act account.

21:1–10 This chapter is linked to the previous by the name Pashhur (21:1; 20:1), though not the same person. The date of the prose judgment oracle is 589 B.C. or 588 B.C., when Nebuchadnezzar began the siege of Jerusalem in reprisal against the rebellion of Zedekiah. In conjunction with promised support from Egypt, Zedekiah sought freedom from its vassalage to Babylon. But as Jeremiah declared, the rebellion would result in the final devastation of Jerusalem.

21:1 Pashhur the son of Melchiah had Jeremiah cast into a dungeon for the prophet's alleged disloyalty to the kingdom (38:1–6). Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah was a temple officer who, with others, sought divine guidance through Jeremiah's counsel (37:3, 4).

21:2 To inquire of the Lord means to seek His will. Nebuchadnezzar was king of Babylon from 605–562 B.C. wonderful works: This phrase is primarily used of God in His cosmic activity and mighty acts in history on behalf of Israel (Ps. 40:5). God had delivered Jerusalem from destruction during the siege of Sennacherib of Assyria in 701 B.C.; King Zedekiah was hoping for a similar divine deliverance.

21:3, 4 Jeremiah's response to Zedekiah was demoralizing. Instead of turning back the forces of the Babylonians, God would thwart what little strength Jerusalem could muster against them.

21:5 Because the people of Judah had become God's enemies, the Lord would fight against them. outstretched hand … strong arm: The divine instruments by which Israel had gained freedom from Egypt (Ex. 15:6; Deut. 6:21) and deliverance from their enemies would be used against them.

21:6, 7 The pestilence that would strike man and beast recalls one of God's plagues on the Egyptians prior to the Exodus (Ex. 9:1–7). Nebuchadnezzar … enemies … those who seek their life: Not only did the Babylonians inflict damage upon Judah, so did constant enemies like the Edomites, who raided and then settled in the dry regions to the south. God would not spare or have pity on the stubborn and rebellious inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.

21:8, 9 way of life … way of death: Death would come to those who attempted to survive the siege of Jerusalem; life was possible through surrender to the Chaldeans (Babylonians). Prize usually refers to the booty and spoils of war. Those who submitted to the Babylonians were on the side of God, and their "booty" would be their lives (38:2). In some ways, the Book of Jeremiah reads like a political tract. There were two parties competing for attention in Jerusalem. There was the pro-Egypt party, who believed that an alliance with Egypt would protect Judah from the threat of Babylon. Then there was the pro-Babylon party, who believed that the fall of Jerusalem was inevitable. Indeed it was the will of God. Thus, the best thing to do was to prepare for the inevitable. Jeremiah, who advanced the cause of the latter group, found himself as an enemy of the state when the pro-Egypt party gained the dominant hearing.

21:10 I have set My face: This phrase describes the fixed intention of God, which in this context was against Jerusalem. The result would be adversity rather than good.

21:11–14 This oracle in language reminiscent of 7:6 and Deut. 17:18–20 establishes the basis for judgments against the kings of Judah in subsequent chapters. The king was to be devoted to the commandments of God and was to mete out judgment, or justice. The ultimate test of the king was measured in his judicial response to those who were oppressed and plundered (Is. 1:17; Amos 4:1–3).

21:13, 14 inhabitant of the valley … rock of the plain: These phrases refer to Jerusalem. come down: Attacking armies generally approached Jerusalem from the north along an elevated ridge. Punish means "to visit in judgment" in this context.

22:1–10 This section expands upon the seed oracle in 21:11, 12 concerning royal justice. It anticipates the direct messages to the three kings Shallum (Jehoahaz), Jehoiakim, and Jehoiachin in 22:11–30.

22:1 One goes down to Jerusalem by coming from the north in Anathoth and descending slightly in elevation. The house of the king was the royal palace located just south of the temple courtyards.

22:2 Jeremiah's prophecy was addressed to three groups: kings who sit upon the throne of David and thus are of David's lineage, the kings' servants (royal officials and attendants), and the people who enter these gates. The last phrase may refer to the citizens in general or to personnel who regularly entered the palace gates.

22:3 According to Is. 11:1–5, the ideal Davidic king would execute judgment, or justice, and righteousness, or uprightness, fairness, and conformity to standard. This description anticipates the "Branch of righteousness" in 23:5. The wisdom and prophetic writers echoed the same sentiment concerning the righteousness of kingdoms—that they must be measured according to their protection of the three segments of society who were unable to defend themselves: the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow.

22:4, 5 If justice and righteousness characterized the leadership of the land, the continued prosperity of the Davidic dynasty would be assured. However, if the Lord's words were not heeded, the house of David would be made a desolation—that is, a ruin or waste.

22:6, 7 Gilead and Lebanon were sources for timber for the royal palaces. These luxurious residences would be reduced to deserted wilderness and set ablaze if the kings disobeyed the covenant.

22:8 Even the nations—the Gentiles—would recognize that the punishment described in vv. 5–7 was the work of the Lord, the result of His displeasure with His people.

22:9, 10 The pagan nations would recognize that the destruction of Jerusalem was the result of Judah's violation of its covenant with God. The people of Judah had exchanged their God for alien deities, whom they worshiped and served.

22:11–30 Three messages to kings of Judah and a lament over Jerusalem are found in this section: (1) a message concerning Shallum (vv. 11, 12); (2) a message concerning Jehoiakim (vv. 13–19); (3) a lament concerning Jerusalem (vv. 20–23); and (4) a message concerning Coniah (vv. 24–30).

22:11, 12 This is the first of three messages directed at specific kings of Judah. Josiah died at Megiddo in 609 B.C. while attempting to block Pharaoh Necho of Egypt from coming to the aid of Assyria. who went from this place: This is a reference to Jehoahaz, also called Shallum. This fourth son of Josiah was placed on the throne by the people of Judah, but he was dethroned after three months by Pharaoh Necho. Shallum was imprisoned and taken captive to Egypt (2 Chr. 36:1–4). Eliakim (Jehoiakim), Shallum's brother, was placed on the throne as an Egyptian vassal. Necho maintained control of Palestine until Nebuchadnezzar defeated Egypt at the Battle of Carchemish in 605 B.C. Shallum (Jehoahaz) died without returning from Egypt, in fulfillment of Jeremiah's words (2 Kin. 23:34).

22:13–23 The second message is directed at Jehoiakim, who embellished his palace with forced labor, according to the content of this message. The prophecy is to be dated between 609 and 605 B.C., while Jehoiakim was under Egyptian control. His actions are characterized by the qualities opposite to a faithful Davidic king: unrighteousness and injustice.

22:13, 14 unrighteousness … injustice: The key terms for true, biblical leadership quality—righteousness and justice—were negated by the king's actions. uses his neighbor's service without wages: The king was supposed to be the guardian of his people, but Jehoiakim enslaved his fellow Israelites to build his self-aggrandizing palaces.

IN CONTEXT

Knowing God

People speak about “knowing God.” But what does that mean? Scripture seems to suggest two related ways in which a person can “know God.” The first is to have a personal relationship with Him. We can know God in that sense because of what Christ did on the Cross to remove the barrier of sin that separated us from God (Gal. 4:3–9; Heb. 8:11–12). However, knowing God in the sense of having a relationship with Him goes hand in hand with another sense of “knowing” Him—living a godly lifestyle. If we say that we ” God, then our actions should show it (1 John 1:6; 4:7). It was on this point that Jeremiah challenged King Jehoiakim (Jer. 22:15–16).

Jehoiakim was appointed king by the Egyptians, who deposed his brother Jehoahaz after only three months on the throne (2 Kin. 23:31–34). Judah became a tributary of Egypt, paying one hundred talents of silver and one talent of gold, probably annually. To raise that sum, Jehoiakim levied taxes (23:35), which apparently were particularly hard on the poor (Jer. 22:16–17). Meanwhile, he launched extravagant building projects, again in a way that oppressed the working class (22:13–14).

In addition to these sins, Jehoiakim brought back the idols that his father Josiah had removed (Ezek. 8:5–17), and even hunted down a prophet of the Lord and had him executed (Jer. 26:20–23). In general, God’s assessment of this king was that he was committed only to his own covetousness (22:17).

Perhaps Jehoiakim thought that because he was an Israelite and because his father had known the Lord that he automatically “knew” the Lord as well. If so, he was mistaken. Josiah had matched his words with actions, actually doing justice and righteousness and not just talking about them. In that sense, he truly “knew” the Lord (22:15–16).

How about you? Do you have a personal relationship with God on the basis of faith in Christ? If so, does your life reflect that relationship through what you do—especially the way you treat others, particularly those who are at a disadvantage? Would your life and character influence an unbeliever toward God, or drive them away from Him? Be careful of claiming to “know” the Lord if you act as if you’ve never even heard of Him (Luke 6:46–49).

22:15, 16 Did not your father … do justice and righteousness: This rhetorical question identifies Josiah, father of Jehoiakim, as a model king. knowing Me: Israel perished because of its lack of knowledge of God (Hos. 4:6). Knowledge of God here is related to concern for the poor and needy (20:13).

22:17 Jehoiakim did not follow in the footsteps of Josiah. covetousness … shedding innocent blood … practicing oppression and violence: This triad of sins characterizing the reign of Jehoiakim would hammer home a resounding message to Judah concerning the collapse of its kingship. Covenant violations would not go unpunished.

22:18, 19 A king of such despicable character as Jehoiakim deserved no lament. burial of a donkey: Instead of proper funeral rites due a king, Jehoiakim would receive an ignoble burial, like an animal, alone and unlamented.

22:20–23 In this lament over the holy city, Jerusalem is depicted as an abused and humiliated woman with many foreign lovers.

22:20 Jerusalem was called upon to mourn its destruction in the mountainous regions of the north—Lebanon, in the northeast—Bashan, and in the mountainous regions of the southeast—Abarim. Lovers here probably refers to Judah’s past and present political allies, such as Phoenicia, Aram, Moab, and Egypt.

22:21 God had spoken to Israel and Judah in times of prosperity, as in the days of Azariah, Jeroboam II, and Josiah, but the people would not hear and obey the words of the prophets, righteous kings, priests, and other leaders.

22:22, 23 The wind shall eat up: The winds of adversity and invasion would carry off Judah’s leaders and allies alike. The nation would be ashamed that it had entered into such futile associations. Lebanon refers to Jerusalem here (in contrast to v. 20). Cedars refers to the luxuriant royal palaces in the city (Ezek. 17:1–10).

22:24–30 Coniah, also known as Jehoiachin, succeeded his father in 598 B.C. under the threat of siege from Babylon as a result of Jehoiakim’s rebellion. The king’s signet ring, a symbol of his power and authority, was used to seal official court documents. Jehoiachin could not serve God in such a capacity because of his evil reign (2 Kin. 24:9). Jehoiachin reigned for three months until he and his family were exiled to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kin. 24:6–16). Your mother refers to Nehushta, the queen mother of the eighteen-year old Jehoiachin. Eventually Jehoiachin was released from prison, after the death of Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kin. 25:27).

23:1–8 The kings of Judah had failed to live up to the Davidic and divine standards for kingship, so deliverance and restoration could only come through divine intervention. The first section (vv. 1–4) provides a transition from the condemnation of the kings (shepherds) of Judah (22:11–30), to the proclamation of a coming Righteous and Just King (vv. 5, 6), and the restoration of the remnant to the Israelite homeland (vv. 7, 8).

23:1, 2 Woe usually introduces a harsh message of judgment. shepherds: In the ancient Middle East, the ideal of kingship was often presented in the imagery of a shepherd. For Israel, the ideal of the Good Shepherd was found in its Great King (Ps. 23) and was reflected in the reign of David, the shepherd-king. But instead of protecting and nurturing the nation, the shepherd kings of Israel had scattered and not attended to or "visited" the people.

23:3 The kings of Israel had caused the dispersion of the nation; but the Lord would mercifully bring about the restoration of the remnant. The concept of a reestablished remnant is prominent in the prophets (Is. 1:9; 10:20–23; 11:16; 46:3). The blessing of restoration and prosperity as a consequence of repentance is outlined in Deut. 30:1–10.

23:4 God would raise up a new generation of kings who would place the people's welfare and God's will above all other considerations.

23:5 Branch: Beginning with Is. 4:2, this term is used of the promised Messiah (33:15; Zech. 3:8; 6:12). This great king will reign with judgment, or justice, and righteousness. This ideal was founded on God's promise to David (2 Sam. 7:16). The necessity for the Lord to send His own king is based on the failure of Israel's monarchs to live up to the standards of kingship (21:11, 12; 22:1–4).

23:6 The days of the Messiah's reign would bring salvation. Both Judah and Israel would be restored. The name that characterizes this ideal king is THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. Contrast that to the name Zedekiah, which means "The Lord Is My Righteousness" (21:1). Zedekiah's name was a gross misnomer compared to the One who would establish the true, righteous rule—God's appointed king (Is. 9:7; 11:1–10). This verse is one of the texts in the Hebrew Bible that speaks specifically and surely of the coming of the glorious Savior and King.

23:7, 8 the days are coming: The future restoration of Israel would exceed anything in the past; it would surpass even the first Exodus, the deliverance from Egypt. A similar text is found in 16:14, 15, following a judgment oracle.

23:9–40 Jeremiah's thematic addressing of the leaders of Judah now turns to the prophets who abused their divinely appointed position and proclaimed false hopes of peace and deliverance. Because these false prophets had associated themselves with foreign cults, they knew not the counsel of God. Comparison with the extended oracles against the false prophets in 26:1—29:32 would suggest a date during the reign of Zedekiah. This lengthy section has four parts: (1) the adulteration of leaders and land (vv. 9–15); (2) a false message of peace (vv. 16–24); (3) hopeless dreams (vv. 25–32); and (4) oracles of reproach (vv. 33–40).

23:9, 10 Heart here refers to the mind more than the emotions. Jeremiah's dismay over the false prophets weakened him mentally and physically, so much so that he felt drunken from the inner turmoil. The prophet also felt unrest from his being consumed by the holy words of God. adulterers: This term could apply to those who practiced immoral sexual behavior, those who committed spiritual adultery by pursuing other gods, and those who were involved in cultic prostitution. The effects of the adultery reached to the land. Instead of experiencing the God-given fertility and productivity of crops, the pleasant places were dried up. Wilderness refers not to the desert in this context, but to pasture land. Might here refers to royal power.

23:11, 12 Prophets were to be spokespersons for God in directing the nation. Priests were to teach the Law, to distinguish between the clean and the unclean, and to oversee religious ceremonies (Lev. 10:8–20). Profane means "unclean" or "corrupt." My house: Like the prophet and priest, the temple of God had become polluted by the wickedness of the spiritual leaders.

23:13, 14 The prophets of Samaria, rather than speaking in the name of God, prophesied by Baal. They caused the people of Israel to err—that is, to stray morally, mentally, and spiritually from God's norms. Samaria had been the capital city of the northern kingdom of Israel. Founded by the Israelites, it almost immediately turned to what Jeremiah called its folly, namely, the wholesale worship of idols. Eventually, God let the Assyrians conquer it. Horrible thing here refers to "something utterly disgusting" (5:30). God found that the prophets of Jerusalem were committing adultery (v. 10) and walking in lies. The term lie is used commonly by Jeremiah to refer to idolatry. The leaders of Judah had supported evildoers who, like the kings, had abused the power of their position. The nation had become like Sodom and Gomorrah and thus deserved the same judgment those cities suffered (Gen. 19:12–29).

23:15 Wormwood and water of gall refer to bitterness and death by poison. According to Deut. 18:20, the consequence of false prophecy was death.

23:16 Worthless is used to describe the futility of listening to those who speak a vision of their own heart. Visions were commonly understood to be a means of receiving a message from God (or the gods). The term vision used here and in 14:14 is also found in Daniel (Dan. 1:17; 8:1); plus it is used in other prophetic books to describe a divine revelation (Is. 1:1; Mic. 3:6).

23:17 The false prophets proclaimed a false hope of peace and security to those who despised Jeremiah. However God's intention was to bring evil or calamity (6:14).

23:18 God's counsel is available to one who walks in the fear of the Lord according to His word, who understands God's working in nature and history.

23:19, 20 God's counsel to Jeremiah's audience was not peace but harsh judgment. Whirlwind is used as a symbol of God's judgment (Is. 29:6). thoughts of His heart: This phrase denotes God's plans and purposes by which He was bringing punishment (contrast Ps. 40:5).

23:21, 22 A true prophet must be sent by God with a word from God. A true prophet of God calls people to repentance of sin or evil and to renewed faith.

23:23, 24 The section closes as it began (vv. 18–24), with rhetorical questions that contrast the nature of God with the errant views of the people. God is not a distant unconcerned deity, like Baal (2 Kin. 18:27), but one who is ever near to His people. Nothing can be hidden from Him; nothing goes unnoticed.

23:25–32 The content of this oracle is rooted in Deuteronomy 13:1–6, in which the "dreamer-prophet" is condemned to death for leading the people away from God and His Law.

23:25–27 Lies here is singular, referring to the quality of the word the false prophets spoke. I have dreamed: Dreams were prized among the Assyrians, Egyptians, and Babylonians as a means of divine revelation. But in Israelite law and tradition, dreams were received cautiously. the heart of the prophets: The character of the false prophets was based on lies and deceit. Their deception was apparent because their goal was to draw the people into idolatry with their fanciful dreams, leading people to forget God and follow Baal (2:8).

23:28, 29 This poetic interlude compares dream and word. A dream is fleeting, like chaff in the wind. God's word has the force of fire and a hammer.

23:30, 31 steal My words: Lacking true knowledge and a word from God, the false prophets repeated false hopes and twisted God's words. use their tongues and say, "He says": The false prophets spoke on their own, lacking a true word from God.

23:32 The counterfeit spokespersons of God prophesied false dreams, deluding the people. Recklessness further indicates the perverse character of the false prophets.

23:33–40 This section consists of an extended pun (play on words) centered upon the term oracle and the question of divine or human origin. The Hebrew rendered term oracle denotes a harsh prophetic speech that was a burdensome issue to the prophet.

23:34–36 No true oracle would come from the false prophets. The sharing of oracles among neighbors (v. 27) would involve perverting the words of the living God. Perverted means "overturned." The false prophets turned God's words around to their own desired benefit.

23:37 Jeremiah belittles with biting sarcasm those claiming to have received a word from God.

23:38–40 Speaking the oracle of the LORD was forbidden for the false prophets. everlasting reproach … perpetual shame: The disgrace that resulted from the false prophets would last for an extended period of time; its memory would endure forever (20:11).

24:1–10 The first major cycle of Jeremiah's oracles (2:1—24:10) is concluded with a vision reminiscent of those that confirmed his call (1:11–16). The message is concerned with the interpretation of two baskets of figs, one ripe and ready for consumption, the other inedible.

24:1–3 The LORD showed me: This phrase suggests a visionary experience like those of Amos and Joel. The historical setting is the 597 B.C. exile of Jeconiah (Jehoiachin).

24:4–7 The good figs are identified with the deported exiles, including Jeconiah's royal household, whom God set apart for good. God would bring … back the captives, establish them in the land, and multiply their crops. Above all, God would give them a heart to know Him. This verse anticipates the new covenant message of 31:31–34.

24:8–10 According to chs. 28, 36—38, the people who remained in Jerusalem treated Jeremiah harshly, subjecting him to beating and imprisonment. Zedekiah and his entourage, along with Jews who fled to Egypt, would see the trouble, meaning "trembling fear" or "horror," and harm, meaning "calamity," from the Lord.

25:1—51:64 The second half of the Book of Jeremiah begins at this point. In chs. 2—24, Jeremiah spoke principally against the sins of Judah and Jerusalem. Beginning in ch. 25, he speaks not only to Judah and Jerusalem, but to the nations of the earth.

25:1–38 The entire chapter serves as a transitional passage between the two major collections of the oracles of Jeremiah. Many scholars see this chapter as a summary discourse of the first section (chs. 2—24) of judgment oracles against Judah. But it also introduces the second section (chs. 26—51) of oracles against the nations, beginning with Judah. Chapter 25 has two parts to it: (1) the seed oracle: judgment versus Judah and Babylon (vv. 1–14) and (2) judgment on the nations (vv. 15–38).

25:1–14 Judgment against Judah and Babylon functions in chs. 25—51 in the same manner that 2:1–3 functioned for chs. 2—24, namely, to provide in kernel form the essence of the larger context. The key themes in seminal form are: (1) the Lord's judgment against Judah (vv. 1–11), which anticipate chs. 26—45 and (2) the Lord's judgment against Babylon (standing for the nations; vv. 12–14, 15–38), which anticipates chs. 46—51. The date is given as the fourth year of Jehoiakim (the first year of Nebuchadnezzar), or 605–B.C.

25:1, 2 the first year of Nebuchadnezzar: In 605 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar succeeded his father on the throne of Babylon. He quickly moved his army to Carchemish and then defeated the Egyptians and some Assyrians. The following year Nebuchadnezzar's forces gained control of all of Palestine, reaching southward to the Brook of Egypt.

25:3 Starting from the time he was called in 626 B.C., Jeremiah faithfully proclaimed the message of the Lord for twenty-three years. The idiom rising early and speaking describes Jeremiah's diligence and persistence.

25:4, 5 Other prophets, such as Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Urijah (26:20), and those of previous centuries, had persistently proclaimed the message of repentance so that the nation might remain in the land. Security, prosperity, and long life in the land were directly related to the nation's covenant faithfulness to God (Deut. 28; 29).

25:6, 7 The phrase go after is used throughout Jeremiah to mean resorting to other gods in worship. The works of your hands refers to the man-made idols used in pagan worship, a breach of the covenant (Ex. 20:3–5) that provoked God to anger.

25:8, 9 behold, I: The Lord was the One bringing judgment; the Babylonians and tribes from the north were merely agents of His destruction. families of the north: The Babylonian army employed Scythian and Cimmerian mercenaries from Asia Minor. Nebuchadnezzar … My servant: This expression does not imply that the Babylonian monarch worshiped Israel's God, but simply that he was used by God to fulfill His purposes (as in the case of Cyrus, who is called the Lord's "anointed" in Is. 45:1).

25:10, 11 take: This term means "cause to perish" and indicates harsh judgment. Life as they knew it would cease. These nations refers to Judah and the surrounding nations, such as Moab and Phoenicia, who would be subjected to enslavement and captivity. Seventy years is the approximate length of the Babylonian captivity. According to 2 Chron. 36:17–22, it marks the period from the destruction of the temple (586 B.C.) to the proclamation of Cyrus for the restoration of the temple and the return from exile (538 B.C.), a period of forty-nine to fifty years. In Zech. 1:12–17, it marks the period between the destruction of the first temple (586 B.C.) and the building of the second temple (520–515 B.C.), or about sixty-six to seventy-two years. The period between the accession of Babylon under Nebuchadnezzar (605/604 B.C.) and the fall of the city to Cyrus (538 B.C.) also approximates the number. In the Book of Daniel, the period is reinterpreted as seventy weeks of years until God's plans for the nations are fulfilled. Attempts to force the exactness of this number have proved unsuccessful. The phrase "seventy years" is best viewed as an approximate period for the Babylonian captivity; it is a number with potent elements: ten sevens. It is also a number that caught the attention of Daniel in captivity (Dan. 9:2).

25:12–14 punish the king of Babylon … nation … land of Chaldeans: Jeremiah's role as a prophet to the nations (2:5) is fulfilled in the seminal form of an address to the mightiest nation known in his day. Like Judah, Babylon will be brought to desolation. in this book: After a short period of approximately seventy years, Babylon under Nabonidus and Belshazzar would fall to Cyrus and the Persians, and then Alexander the Great would conquer the city. according to their deeds … the works of their own hands: Babylon is condemned because of her immoral and unethical treatment of people in conquered lands and because of her multitudinous idols (51:33–50).

25:15–38 This section has three parts to it: (1) the cup of judgment (vv. 15–29); (2) a lawsuit against the nations (vv. 30, 31); and (3) a lamentation over desolation (vv. 32–38).

25:15–29 The oracles against the nations served a dual purpose: to deliver a warning to the nations against injustice to Israel and other nations and to provide Israel assurance that God cared for her and would punish her enemies. The key word in this section is the term cup containing God's wine, a symbol of fury that was about to be poured out upon the nations. This imagery occurs in Is. 51:17–22, Hab. 2:15–17, and Jeremiah's oracle against Edom (Jer. 49:12).

25:15–17 The triad sequence drink … stagger … go mad depicts the judgment process by which the sword of the Lord subdues those opposed to Him. The state of drunkenness was condemned in the OT; to drink the cup and stagger was to display one's guilt (Num. 5:19–28). Then I took the cup: Jeremiah responded faithfully to God's commands.

25:18 The list of nations that would be made to drink from the cup of the Lord's judgment begins with Judah and Jerusalem, which would be made a source of derision (19:8; 25:9).

25:19 The first foreign nation condemned by God through Jeremiah was Egypt. The expanded oracle is found in ch. 46.

25:20 The land of Uz is generally interpreted as the region of Edom or northern Arabia. Ashkelon was captured by Nebuchadnezzar in 604 B.C. Gaza and Ashdod are also mentioned in Nebuchadnezzar's Babylonian chronicles (ch. 47).

25:21, 22 The states of Edom, Moab, and Ammon, and the Phoenician coastal territories of Tyre and Sidon, suffered heavily under Nebuchadnezzar's attacks (48:1–49:22; Ezek. 27; 28).

25:23, 24 The Arabian desert kingdoms of Dedan, Tema, and Buz were condemned. Dedan and Tema were in Edomite territory (49:7, 8). The location of Buz is unknown.

25:25, 26 Elam and Media were located east of Babylon (49:34–39).

25:27, 28 The triad of terms for progressive inebriation—drink, be drunk, and vomit—emphasizes the extent of judgment that would flow from God's cup of wrath. Those who refused the cup would be forced to drink.

25:29 God's judgment would begin with His own people and their holy city. God would bring calamity on the city that was called by His name. In doing so, God would vindicate His name and His holiness. From Jerusalem, God's sword of judgment would go forth to the ends of the earth.

25:30–32 The universal judgment of God is depicted in poetic imagery of a mountain lion roaring from the hill tops. The contention with the nations is described in terms of a covenant lawsuit with introduction and setting (v. 30), indictment (v. 31), and announcement of judgment (vv. 32, 33).

25:30 on high … from His holy habitation: Generally these phrases refer to God's abode on Mount Zion (Joel 3:16; Amos 1:2).

25:31 A noise refers to a thunderous judgment resulting from God's controversy or "covenant lawsuit" against the nations. Though they had not received the Law like Judah and Israel, the Gentiles would be judged, for they were wicked. The word wicked refers to the guilt associated with the breach of ethical standards, including violating the poor and needy and abusing the oppressed.

25:32, 33 As with Judah's horrifying calamity of unburied corpses (7:33), the nations would experience massive death and extensive destruction. The neglect of the dead is described in a triad of terms: not be lamented … (not be) gathered … (not be) buried. This desecration would be finalized by the decay of bodies into refuse or "dung" (8:2; 9:22; 16:4).

(Heb. raah) (23:1; 25:34; 31:10; Gen. 49:24; Ps. 23:1) Strong’s #7462: The Hebrew noun for shepherd refers to someone who feeds and tends domestic animals. David spoke of God as His shepherd, for God provided, sustained, and guided him (Ps. 23). Kings and other leaders were also seen as shepherds of their people, and the title “shepherd” was frequently applied to kings in the ancient Middle East. David was a true shepherd-king, responsibly leading and protecting his people (2 Sam. 5:1, 2). Jeremiah rebuked the leaders of Israel, who were false shepherds and failed in their responsibility of caring for the spiritual well-being of God’s people (23:1–4).

25:34–36 The triad of lament, wail … cry … roll, serves to stress the seriousness of the coming judgment, which will result in slaughter (death) and dispersion (captivity and exile).

25:37, 38 Homes and pastures that once were peaceful and secure would be devastated. The Oppressor is a surprising designation for the Lord.

26:1–24 This section has four parts to it: (1) a call to repentance at the temple (vv. 1–11); (2) a reiteration before Jerusalem's leaders (vv. 12–15); (3) the example of Micah the prophet (vv. 16–19); and (4) the example of Uriah the prophet (vv. 20–24). The circumstances of this account of Jeremiah's temple sermon and subsequent confrontation with Judah's leaders is the accession of Jehoiakim to the throne following the deportation of Jehoahaz to Egypt by Pharaoh Necho (thus, late 609 or early 608 B.C.). The sermon in the temple (vv. 2–6) is an abbreviation of 7:1–15, perhaps the work of Baruch, which is part of a series of oracles against Jerusalem and set in the context of idolatry (7:1—8:3). The temple sermon here serves to introduce the conflict between Jeremiah and the religious and political leadership in Judah and Jerusalem.

26:1 In the beginning: This expression technically refers to the part of the year between the day the king ascended to the throne and the beginning of his first full year of reign, which began in the spring month of Nisan (March through April), 608 B.C.

26:2 The court of the temple may refer to one of the inner courts connected by the gate mentioned in 7:2. Come to worship describes the normal worship there or perhaps more specifically the pilgrimages to Jerusalem for festival and fast days. Do not diminish: Jeremiah was told to speak unsparingly with unwavering boldness.

26:3–5 The introduction to the judgment oracle is expressed in conditional terms. If the people repented of evil, the Lord would relent from the calamity He was threatening to bring on them.

26:6 Shiloh was not far from Jerusalem. The people could see the effects of its destruction by the Philistines in 1050 B.C.—a destruction that overtook it even though it was the first resting place of the ark of the covenant. Jeremiah uses Shiloh as an illustration of the coming judgment of Jerusalem even though the temple of God had been built there.

26:7 The account of the hearing of Jeremiah's message by the three constituent elements of Judah's society serves to anticipate the confrontations to follow.

26:8, 9 The priests and the prophets and all the people refers to the collective worship assembly. The religious leaders responsible for overseeing the temple considered Jeremiah's words blasphemy, for he spoke of the destruction of the temple itself. The people rejected Jeremiah's prophecy and tried to kill him (see John 8:59 for the similar rejection suffered by Jesus).

26:10, 11 Jeremiah's words were reported to the princes, the royal administrators and kingdom officials, who came to the New Gate to carry out an official inquiry. The prophets and priests presented an accusation against Jeremiah, calling for the death sentence for speaking against Jerusalem.

26:12, 13 Jeremiah called the assembly to amend, or make good, their evil ways and to obey God's voice, here referring to the covenant and the words proclaimed by Jeremiah.

26:14, 15 Held captive by the hostile crowd, Jeremiah pointed to the potential sin of shedding innocent blood. Jeremiah had already accused the leaders of Jerusalem of shedding innocent blood with child sacrifices in the Hinnom valley (2:34; 19:4). truly the LORD has sent me: Sentencing God's prophet to death would result in greater judgment, in addition to the people's other offenses against heaven.

26:16 This man does not deserve to die: Jeremiah's self-defense gained acceptance from the crowd, against the objections of the wicked religious leaders.

26:17–19 After Jeremiah's hearing, one of the elders from the people cited the precedent of the eighth century prophet Micah of Moresheth. In the reign of Hezekiah, Micah had announced the impending destruction of Jerusalem by the Assyrians (Mic. 3:12). Yet because of the repentance of Hezekiah and the inhabitants, the city was spared from the onslaught of the Assyrian army under Sennacherib (701 B.C.).

26:20–23 Urijah, whose name means "My Light Is the Lord," was from Kirjath Jearim, about fifteen miles west of Jerusalem (1 Sam. 7:1, 2). Like Jeremiah, Urijah had prophesied in the name of the LORD about judgment against Jerusalem. When Jehoiakim and his administrators heard of Urijah's declarations, they sought to seize the "blasphemous" prophet, who escaped by fleeing to Egypt. Since Jehoiakim was a vassal to Necho of Egypt, Urijah was extradited and executed. Elnathan the son of Achbor was among the princes in Jehoiakim's court who heard the reading of Jeremiah's first scroll of oracles (36:11–19) and protested Jehoiakim's burning of the scroll (36:20–26).

26:24 Jeremiah was sheltered by Ahikam the son of Shaphan who, along with his father, served as a scribe under Josiah when the Book of the Law was found in the temple (2 Kin. 22:8–14). Ahikam's brother Gemariah also opposed Jehoiakim's burning of Jeremiah's original scroll (36:25). This faithful family was supportive of Jeremiah and was instrumental in saving his life.

27:1—29:32 In the days of the monarchy and divided kingdoms, court prophets like Nathan and Isaiah guided the kings in decision making with a counsel from the Lord. As the nation departed from the covenant with the Lord, prophets arose claiming divine inspiration, but in fact their words might have been of their own initiative, self-interest, politically and religiously. Conflict with a true prophet of God like Jeremiah was inevitable. These three chapters contain such confrontations with Zedekiah and some unnamed prophets (ch. 27), Hananiah (ch. 28), and Ahab, Zedekiah, and Shemaiah (ch. 29).

27:1–22 This section has four parts to it: (1) yokes sent to nations allied against Babylon (vv. 1–11); (2) a message to Zedekiah of Judah: submit to Babylon (vv. 12–15); (3) beware of false prophets of peace (vv. 16–18); and (4) the deportation of the temple vessels (vv. 19–22).

27:1–11 The form and setting of the first address is the symbolic act account of an ox yoke sent to the Transjordan kings of Edom, Moab, and Ammon, and the Phoenician kings of Tyre and Sidon. The performance of the instructions from the Lord by Jeremiah is implicit, for Jeremiah has faithfully fulfilled each divine charge in the past.

27:1–3 Bonds and yokes are wooden bars or beams that attach to a pair of oxen with leather bands. The symbolic act of wearing the yoke would communicate bondage, restraint, and enslavement. The messengers were foreign ambassadors in Jerusalem.

27:4, 5 The foreign ambassadors were to announce to their masters that the God of Israel is the true sovereign Lord over creation and the affairs of humans. The whole of creation is summed up in the triad earth … man … beast. Unlike the gods of the nations, whose power was often believed to be geographically limited, the God of Israel reigned over all the earth, granting territorial rights and power to nations and kings as it seemed proper to Him.

“Nebuchadnezzar, My Servant“

Who is the most treacherous, dangerous world leader you can think of? Who would you say is the greatest threat to world peace and stability today? Whoever it is, you probably cannot regard that person with greater suspicion and disdain than the people of Judah had for Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon. Yet God described this pagan king as His own “servant” (Jer. 27:6; compare 25:9). That had to be unimaginable for the people of Jeremiah’s day. To them, Nebuchadnezzar was a great evil. He ruled a ruthless superpower that was poised to overrun their lands and destroy their cities. How could he possibly be God’s servant?

Interestingly, the description of Nebuchadnezzar sounds a lot like the description of Cyrus, the Persian king, given through Isaiah: “My shepherd” and “His anointed” (Is. 44:28—45:1). Both of these rulers had power over vast territories in the ancient Middle East. Their decisions determined much of what happened in history at that time. From the human perspective, they were the ones in charge.

But the prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah show that ultimately these rulers were not in control of the final outcomes. Whether they knew it or not, they were only finite human beings placed in positions of authority by the hand of God. As such, they were God’s servants, God’s agents. Through their decisions, they ended up serving God’s purposes—even if they didn’t realize they were doing so!

God is the King of all the kings—then and now. Because that is so, what does it say about the leaders of the world today? Perhaps the ones we dislike the most are in fact “servants” of the living God! And like Nebuchadnezzar and Cyrus, God seeks not merely to use them, but also for them to know Him. Are you praying and working toward that end (1 Tim. 2:1–2)?

27:6, 7 My servant: With all of his military might and conquests, the king of Babylon was still a servant of the God of Israel, carrying out the Lord’s purposes—namely the judgment of Judah. son’s son … time of his land: Following the death of Nebuchadnezzar in 562 B.C., his heirs and successors retained control of Babylon for only twenty-four years. Babylon fell without a battle to Cyrus and the Persian armies in 539 B.C., and later to Alexander the Great of Greece.

27:8 The symbol of the yoke is explained to the foreign ambassadors. Those who would not submit as vassals to Babylon would be punished.

27:9, 10 The way kings summoned various prophet-diviners to give them direction is well known from the Book of Daniel (Dan. 2:2; 5:7). Besides prophets, there were diviners, like Balaam (Num. 22—24), who were prohibited from practicing their craft in Israel (Deut. 18:9–14); dreamers, a class of fortune-tellers prohibited by the Law (Deut. 13:1–5); as well as soothsayers and sorcerers, both common among the nations but forbidden to practice their trades in Israel (Deut. 18:9–14). The collective effort of these diviners to determine the future of their nations failed. Like the false prophets of Judah, they heralded a message of rebellion and resistance against Babylon. Only Jeremiah stood for the truth: the Lord would punish Judah through Nebuchadnezzar.

27:11 bring their necks under the yoke: To submit to Babylon was to submit to the will and purposes of God.

27:12–14 Jeremiah's message to Zedekiah was the same as his message to the foreign ambassadors (vv. 4–11): submit to Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonians and live, or rebel against Nebuchadnezzar—and God—and die. The message of death is delineated in the same triad of destruction as that of v. 8 to the foreign nations. Jeremiah spoke against not only the religious leadership but also the political leadership, espousing a position tantamount to treason. Despite the opposition he faced, he stood firm in his understanding of the message of God.

27:15 I have not sent them: Divine call and commission are prerequisites to fulfilling a true prophetic role. False prophets such as Hananiah (ch. 28) gave hope to Zedekiah's aspirations for freedom from Babylon's yoke, but Jeremiah calls their words a lie, spoken in the name of the Lord. Because they had profaned His name, both the king and his prophets would perish. When Jerusalem fell in 586 B.C., Zedekiah attempted to flee to the desert by means of the road to Jericho. He was captured and taken to Riblah, where his sons were killed in front of him, and then his eyes were put out (2 Kin. 25:4–7). This particularly barbaric act meant that the last sight he had in this life was of the deaths of his boys.

27:16–22 Jeremiah's third address is given as a warning to the priests and people who listened to the false prophets concerning the future of themselves and the temple.

27:16, 17 Do not listen: For the priests to listen to the false words of the prophets concerning the inviolability of the temple was to seal their own doom and that of the temple. Many vessels (v. 19) had been carried off by Nebuchadnezzar in the exile of Jeconiah (Jehoiachin). The false prophets said that Babylon would be defeated and the temple furnishings would be returned.

27:18–20 Jeremiah proposed a test to verify the words of the contentious prophets. if the word of the LORD is with them: If the prophets truly spoke for the Lord, their intercession—the survival of the remaining temple implements—would come to pass. vessels which are left: Many of the furnishings of the temple of the Lord were transported to Babylon in the exile of Jehoiachin and his entourage (2 Kin. 24:13). According to Jeremiah, the vessels that remained would be taken in the final destruction of the city. Events would demonstrate whose word was from the Lord.

27:21, 22 Jeremiah's message from the Lord is presented in detail. The remaining vessels in the temple, as well as in the king's palace, would be carried to Babylon until the Lord restored His people. In the midst of a prophetic message against the false prophets, Jeremiah spoke a message of hope and restoration. Destruction was imminent, but God does not forget His people. He would restore the righteous remnant.

28:1–17 The oracles against the false prophets turn to focus on the confrontation between Jeremiah and Hananiah, which took place not long after the events outlined in the previous chapter, perhaps immediately after. The autobiographical account consists of four movements: (1) Hananiah's prophecy of deliverance (vv. 1–4); (2) Jeremiah's response: judge the results (vv. 5–9); (3) Hananiah's rejoinder: two years until deliverance (vv. 10, 11); and (4) Jeremiah's response: Babylon comes, Hananiah dies (vv. 12–16), and the epilogue concerning the death of Hananiah (v. 17).

28:1 The same year refers to the time of ch. 27 (593 B.C.). The fifth month was the month of Ab (JulyAugust). Hananiah was from Gibeon, six miles northwest of Jerusalem and about five miles west of Jeremiah's hometown, Anathoth. Hananiah's name means "The Lord Is Gracious."

28:2–4 Hananiah spoke in the name of the LORD of hosts, using the name of God as Jeremiah did to introduce a solemn message of judgment against Babylon. Building on Jeremiah's imagery of the yoke (ch. 27), Hananiah proclaimed the contradictory message that the yoke of … Babylon would be broken by God. Hananiah believed that God's message for Judah was one of imminent deliverance—within two full years—from servitude to the king of Babylon. Hananiah also prophesied the return of the holy vessels taken by Nebuchadnezzar from the temple of God. Furthermore, Hananiah espoused the popular belief that the kingship of Zedekiah was illegitimate and that God would restore Jeconiah (Jehoiachin) to the throne in Jerusalem.

28:5, 6 Jeremiah's words may seem sarcastic, but he truly would have wished that Hananiah's words were God's words. Jeremiah longed that the temple of the Lord would not be destroyed and that its furnishings would not be carried away into captivity. The burning message inside though was contrary.

28:7–9 war and disaster and pestilence: Hananiah's message of peace and prosperity ran contrary to the long tradition of the genuine Hebrew prophets. Amos, Hosea, Micah, Joel, and Nahum spoke words of judgment and destruction against great kingdoms like Assyria and Egypt. Peace in this context refers to the well-being and wholeness resulting from God's restoration of the nation.

28:10, 11 Seizing the yoke from Jeremiah's neck (ch. 27) and breaking it before the people, Hananiah made a resounding proclamation: Even so I will break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar … from the neck of all nations within the space of two full years. This announcement reversed every statement by Jeremiah and advanced the cause of rebellion against Babylon by Judah and the surrounding nations, something King Zedekiah had desired all along.

28:12, 13 After an indefinite period of time, the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah. God's prophet was instructed to return to Hananiah with a new interpretation of the yoke motif. Because Hananiah had broken the original yokes of wood, God would replace them with yokes of iron that could not be broken.

28:14 All these nations against which Jeremiah originally had spoken (in 27:1–11) would serve Nebuchadnezzar.

28:15, 16 Hananiah had not been sent by God, but he had led the people astray with a lie. As a result, Hananiah would be cast … from the face of the earth and die that very year.

28:17 The seventh month: Two months after Hananiah prophesied about Judah's captivity (v. 1), the false prophet was dead.

29:1–32 Various letters comprise this assemblage of correspondence with the exiles who were taken captive in 597 B.C., including Jehoiachin and the royal household. The grouping of these letters with the oracles against false prophets of chs. 27 and 28 would suggest a similar date, or 594 B.C. The Babylonian Chronicles and other contemporary documents indicate that territorial unrest was plaguing Nebuchadnezzar's empire. Jeremiah advises the exiled Jews to settle down and not expect an immediate return to their homeland. The chapter has the following sections: (1) an introduction (vv. 1–3); (2) settle down and be content (vv. 4–7); (3) beware of false prophets of early return (vv. 8–10); (4) seek the Lord and He will restore (vv. 11–14); (5) destruction and plague against Judah (vv. 15–19); (6) false prophets in exile to be executed (vv. 20–23); and (7) a word against Shemaiah the prophet (vv. 24–32).

29:1 words of the letter: A written document was carried from Jerusalem to the Jews in Babylon. remainder: This may imply that some of the elders were executed in the 594 B.C. revolt alluded to in vv. 21–23.

29:2 This parenthetical passage provides background from 2 Kin. 24:12–16 concerning the deportation of Jeconiah (Jehoiachin), the royal family, and chief artisans of Judah to Babylon in 597 B.C. This method of eliminating leaders and leaving the peasant population to pay taxes to the kingdom was learned from the Assyrians and was designed to reduce the likelihood of rebellion.

29:3 The messengers were Elasah the son of Shaphan, perhaps a brother of the sympathetic Ahikam (26:24), and Gemariah the son of Hilkiah, a member of Jehoiakim's administration (36:10). The purposes of the visit may have been several: normal official business, to bring tribute from Judah, and perhaps to assure Nebuchadnezzar of Judah's allegiance to Babylon in the light of the rebellion of the states in Transjordan and Phoenicia.

29:4 Jeremiah reminded the exiled community that ultimately it was God, not Nebuchadnezzar, who had caused them to be carried away captive … to Babylon.

29:5, 6 Jeremiah had proclaimed a period of seventy years (25:12) of Babylonian exile. For the meantime, he counseled the people to settle in and carry on their normal daily activities. The terms build and plant are significant because they fulfill the particulars of Jeremiah's call (1:10). Exile did not necessarily mean imprisonment or enslavement, but displacement and resettlement in unknown lands. be increased … not diminished: If the people were faithful in the circumstances of captivity, God would cause them to prosper with children and with fertile crops.

29:7 The exiles were instructed to seek and pray for the peace, or well-being of Babylon and the other towns where they were deported. As a result, they themselves would live in peace as beneficiaries of God's gracious sovereignty over the nations (27:5, 6).

29:8, 9 Jeremiah issued a warning against following the advice of prophets, diviners, and dreams. A similar warning was issued to the nations surrounding Judah in 27:9, 10 and to Judah in 27:14, 17.

29:10 The concept of the seventy years of Babylon captivity is reiterated from 25:12. The number seventy symbolizes completion and fulfillment of God's sovereign plans for creation and human history. The completion of the years of the kingdom of Babylon would also be the completion of Judah's exile.

29:11 I know the thoughts that I think: The Lord here places considerable emphasis on His unchangeable plan to bring peace and not evil. a future … a hope: God had not terminated His relationship with Judah; He remembered His covenant promises of restoration (Deut. 30:1–10).

29:12, 13 The promised response of the Lord to the people's prayers stands in contrast to His refusal to hear in 7:16. all your heart: The picture here differs greatly from the usual depiction of the heart of the people of Judah as stubborn and wicked (3:10; 4:14; 7:24). God would search the people's heart and reveal its true character (11:20).

29:14 I will be found: Those who seek God with a whole heart will find Him and experience His renewal. I will bring you back … gather you … bring you to the place: God was the captor, and He would restore His people from captivity.

29:15–20 The cause of Jerusalem's shame was its failure to heed the words of God, revealed through the covenant stipulations and the diligent —rising up early—proclamation of the prophets (25:3; 26:5).

(Heb. shereqah) (29:18; 2 Chr. 29:8; Mic. 6:16) Strong’s #8322: The Hebrew word translated hissing is from a verb meaning “to whistle” (Is. 5:26) or “to play a pipe” as a signal for flocks (Judg. 5:16). This word may refer to a superstitious practice among ancients: they would shake their head and whistle when passing by the ruins of a village or a deserted city, as a charm against suffering the same fate. The OT prophets used this word to warn the Israelites of the ridicule and scorn they would endure as part of God’s judgment on their sins (Lam. 2:15, 16; Zeph. 2:15). Jeremiah often used this word in connection with “astonishment” over a calamity (19:8; 29:18; 51:37). Zechariah used the same word to describe God’s gracious regathering of the Israelites from the Exile (Zech. 10:8), using the image of a shepherd whistling for his sheep.

29:21 Ahab the son of Kolaiah, and Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah were the prophets spoken of in 29:15. The two were accused by Jeremiah of a deplorable crime: prophesying a lie in God’s name. Their lie was prophesying the imminent collapse of Babylon and the restoration of the captives to Jerusalem. Such false prophecy urging rebellion against God was a capital offense (Deut. 13:5–10). The prophetic punishment of Ahab and Zedekiah was death by command of Nebuchadnezzar.

29:22, 23 This term curse may be a play on the name Kolaiah (“called of the Lord”; v. 21). He claimed to be called of God, but was cursed along with those who supported his position. These Jewish leaders had compounded their sin by doing disgraceful things (Deut. 22:21).

29:24–28 Jeremiah addressed Shemaiah the Nehelamite concerning his correspondence with Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah and the Jerusalem priesthood. Shemaiah had challenged Zephaniah’s apparent leniency in dealing with the problem of Jeremiah’s prophecies about the exiles’ immediate future.

29:29, 30 When Zephaniah received the letter from Shemaiah, he read it to Jeremiah, who then received a word of judgment from God against Shemaiah and his family.

29:31, 32 prophesied … caused you to trust in a lie: The accusation against Shemaiah parallels that of numerous judgment oracles in Jeremiah (5:31; 14:14; 23:16; 27:10). The ensuing sentence against Shemaiah is like those against Pashhur (20:6), Jehoiachin or Coniah (22:30), and Hananiah (28:16).

30:1—33:26 This collection of oracles has been called the Book of Consolation or Comfort. It contains two sections, the first dealing with the physical and spiritual restoration of Israel and Judah (chs. 30, 31), and the second with the faith and assurance of God's future blessing of His people (chs. 32, 33). The first twenty-nine chapters contain primarily oracles of harsh judgment against Israel, Judah, their leaders, and the nations. The precise setting and date of chapters 30, 31 is not readily evident. Chapter 32 dates to the end of the reign of Zedekiah.

30:1, 2 The oracles of Jeremiah were recorded by the scribe Baruch (ch. 36). Book refers to any type of writing medium, from a clay tablet to a parchment scroll. Jeremiah's oracles were recorded on a scroll (36:2).

30:3 they shall possess it: Possession of the land, as in the original possession under Joshua's leadership, would be the responsibility of the faithful remnant living according to the covenant relationship.

30:4–11 This poetic section recounts the travail of God's people in exile and the impending act of deliverance from captivity. A date of 588 B.C. has been suggested, but any precise dating remains inconclusive. Verse four heads the collection of oracles from vv. 5–24.

30:5, 6 voice of trembling … fear … not of peace: Jeremiah's audience was the whole nation of Israel and Judah, which had experienced the dread and horror of the day of the Lord (Joel 1:1—2:11; Amos 5:18–20). Hands on his loins symbolizes the agony of God's people, who had become like defenseless pregnant women in the midst of delivery before their enemies (4:31; 6:24).

30:7–9 The incomparable day of God was an ordained time of horror and distress for Israel and Judah, out of which the Lord would save them. Jeremiah expressed the hope of release from the bondage of the yoke of Babylon according to the Lord's timing (25:12) and not that of people (28:11). Then Israel would no longer serve foreigners in foreign lands or in their own. Instead, the people of God would serve the LORD their God, and David their king. God would raise up a messianic king from David's line to rule over the nation (Is. 9:7; 11:1; Hos. 3:5).

30:10, 11 My servant: The use of this terminology for Israel and Judah parallels that of Is. 42:1; 44:1. The hope of the nation was rest, tranquillity in the absence of external and internal distress, and quiet, security and ease resulting from trust in the Lord.

30:12 Your affliction is incurable, Your wound is severe: God's hand of judgment had brought serious harm to the nation, a mortal wound unless God intervened.

30:13 Healing here refers to the growth of new skin over an open wound.

30:14 Israel's lovers were nations like Assyria, Egypt, Phoenicia, Ammon, and Edom, with whom it had made political and religious alliances. These nations had quickly forgotten Judah; they shrank back or were defeated by Nebuchadnezzar. Egypt, for example, had supported Zedekiah's rebellion, but was defeated in 588 B.C. by Nebuchadnezzar. When the Egyptian army retreated beyond the Brook of Egypt, the army of Babylon laid siege to Jerusalem and destroyed it, in 586 B.C. (37:1–5).

30:15 iniquities … sins: These terms are repeated from v. 14, emphasizing the character of the people and echoing the reasons for harsh judgment. The lament applied to both the sin and its results.

30:16, 17 Restoration and healing of Israel came in two forms, retribution against its enemies and healing of its wounds. Four sets of terms designate God's retributive justice: those who devour would be devoured; adversaries would go into captivity; those who plunder would become plunder; and all who prey would become prey. Healing was promised in response to the people's repentance (3:22; 33:6), a reversal of their incurable position (8:22; 30:12).

30:18–22 Restoration is described in more concrete terms than in previous contexts. Recovery is outlined as to dwellings (v. 18), much joy and thanksgiving (v. 19), community (v. 20), and local leadership (v. 21). Israel will be the Lord's again (v. 22).

30:18 Jacob's tents … dwelling places … city … palace: These phrases emphasize God's work in rebuilding the homes and cities of His returning exiles, from the peasant population to the administration.

30:19 Instead of the voice of lament, fear, and trembling echoing throughout the land (4:31; 30:5), the sound of thanksgiving and merrymaking would reverberate. The word thanksgiving refers to a manner of appreciative praise. Merry suggests the joy of laughter and play.

30:20 The collective community with children and congregation will be reassembled for carrying out their purpose as God's chosen. Any oppressor who violates the societal order will be chastised.

30:21, 22 Israel's leaders would no longer be appointed by foreign kings, and foreign rulers would not preside over Israel's lands.

30:23, 24 These verses are essentially a reiteration of 23:19, 20. In this context, they attest to Israel's new understanding of its God and assure the people of God's judgment on their enemies and oppressors.

31:1–22 The section is composed of several restoration oracles with the northern kingdom Israel (Ephraim) in focus, though they are applicable to Judah as well. Some have suggested that certain portions may date to Jeremiah's early ministry in 626–597 B.C., and were combined with later oracles during the early exilic period.

31:1 Coinciding with the restoration of the nation to its land would be the fulfillment of the covenant between God and His people, all the families of Israel.

31:2 survived the sword … found grace in the wilderness … give him rest: These phrases describe Israel's deliverance from Egypt and God's victory over the army of Pharaoh. God's grace, or favor, was manifest in the desert as He provided sustenance, shelter, and rest for His people.

31:3 Of old, which may also be translated "from afar," may refer to the betrothal days of Israel in the wilderness (2:1–3) or to the distant lands of Assyria and Babylon to which Israel and Judah had been exiled. The phrase everlasting love is paralleled with lovingkindness, which means "loyal love" or "covenant loyalty." Out of His faithfulness to the covenants He established with Abraham and Moses, and out of His great love, God established the nation Israel for His glory and for hers. The Lord would also deliver His people from captivity and reestablish them by His love.

31:4 There will be rejoicing as village life is restored. I will build: In Ps. 127:1, the psalmist says that unless God builds a house, the labor is in vain. O virgin of Israel: Earlier in Jeremiah, this expression was used sadly in depicting the departure of Israel from faith in God (2:32; 14:17). Here the image is reversed; Israel is rebuilt in the manner of her former betrothal (2:2), having become again like a virgin bride to God. adorned … go forth in the dances: Joyful celebration of marriage and festival throughout villages is in view here (v. 13).

31:5 Originally Samaria was the name for the capital of the northern kingdom of Israel. The city had been built by King Omri in the early ninth century B.C., presumably to establish his kingship after a period of civil war and unrest in Israel. Previous Israelite kings had ruled from Tirzah. Later the name Samaria would also be associated with the northern kingdom itself. The mountains of Samaria: The hill country of Samaria is a harsh, mountainous land full of fissures and valleys. Mountain passes make Samaria's hills accesible. Jeremiah declared that the hill country, which was ravaged by the Assyrians in 733–722 B.C., would be replanted with vineyards. The hills would produce fruit for consumption rather than tribute for foreign powers. The plantings would be for regular, normal enjoyment—a gift of God in the lives of His people.

31:6 The day would come when the nation would be united once again, with northern kingdom Israelites making pilgrimages to Zion (Jerusalem) for worship, instead of continuing to visit the rival sanctuaries of Dan and Bethel (1 Kin. 12:27–29). The purpose of the watchmen would be not to warn the people about oncoming armies but to call them to come with joy to the holy city.

31:7–14 The joyful homecoming of Israel from the many lands to which she was exiled is in view. The poetic elements often constitute a reversal of the situation in the early periods of Jeremiah's ministry. Terms for praise, rejoicing, and gladness emanate throughout.

31:7 The chief of the nations would be Jacob, meaning Israel. In 15:9 the remnant is described as all but vanquished. Here the restored community shouts for joy.

31:8 In 6:22 and 25:32, Israel's enemies came from the north country and the ends of the earth. Now Israel herself is brought back by the Lord, with even the infirm, weak and fragile.

31:9 weeping … supplications: Phrases from the Songs of Ascents (Ps. 120—134) are found here. In Ps. 126, those who are weeping are filled with gladness at the Lord's return of exiles from captivity. rivers of waters: This imagery of God's provision of life-sustaining water through the desert is like Is. 35:5–7. The reference to the straight way parallels Is. 40:3–5. Father: This text is one of the few cases in the OT where the fatherhood of God is portrayed directly (Deut. 32:6; Is. 63:16). Israel was familiar with the idea of God as Father, but it was not until the teaching of Jesus that the phrase took on the importance that we understand it to have in our lives today. Firstborn conveys the concept of preeminence (31:7; Deut. 32:9).

31:10–12 God would be the people's good shepherd, unlike past kings (23:1–4). redeemed … ransomed: These two terms for redemption describe the transfer of ownership of Israel from the mighty Babylon to the incomparable God. Israel's freedom was gained by God, its great "kinsman redeemer" (Is. 51:10, 11).

31:13 The theme of joy in the restoration continues with jubilation in the dance (Ps. 149:1–4). The "dance" in Hebrew culture is a world away from what many people think of in contemporary western culture. Dance is movement of the body in response to music; it is music made visual. To dance in joy before the Lord was regarded as a natural, spontaneous response of the people of God in the culture of ancient Israel.

31:14 The theme of joy is summarized in God's intention to fill the priests and the people with abundance. Jeremiah gave the people hope and comfort in facing the poverty and oppression of exile and captivity.

31:15–22 Joy turns to lament among the exiled of Ephraim over her chastisement from the Lord. The oracle is clearly intended for the northern kingdom of Israel, with references to Rachel, Ramah, and Ephraim. The passage outline is as follows: Rachel's lament (v. 15); God's call to cease lamentation (vv. 16, 17); Ephraim's repentance (vv. 18, 19); and God's compassion for Ephraim (vv. 20–22).

31:15, 16 According to 1 Sam. 10:2, 3, Rachel's tomb was near Zelzah, which was near Ramah in Benjamin. This may have been a memorial for Rachel, located in the tribal allotment of the descendants of her son Benjamin (Gen. 35:16–20). Genesis says that Rachel was buried in Ephrath, near Bethlehem (Gen. 35:19; 48:7). Rachel was the mother of the northern Israelite tribes of Benjamin and Joseph, whose sons were Ephraim and Manasseh. Rachel's bitter weeping was caused by the exile and captivity of her children. She refused to be comforted in her sorrow and loss.

31:17 Hope describes a faith that waits expectantly for God's redemptive and eternal blessing. their own border: Ephraim would be restored to its God-ordained territories.

31:18, 19 struck … on the thigh: This indicates an outward demonstration of remorse over sin and change of life (Ezek. 21:12).

31:20 My heart yearns: This phrase describes the Lord's deep love and concern for the welfare of His children.

31:21 The signposts and landmarks would point out the way to the people's homeland. More importantly, Israel was instructed to set its heart toward the way that is the path of faith in its God.

31:22 Backsliding was a major theme in 3:6—4:4, describing the continual waywardness of the nation. Here the Lord was bringing about the re-creation of His people. A new thing probably refers to the fact that virgin Israel would encompass or cling to her divine Bridegroom.

31:23–26 Mountain of holiness refers to the ideal city of Jerusalem, the holy mountain home of God, the Righteous One, and Judah, His righteous remnant. As with Israel, Judah's reestablishment would see renewed productivity of its crops and flocks (31:5, 12). The people would be satiated (31:14).

31:27, 28 sow: God would plant and multiply the seed of man and animal in the land of Judah. To build and to plant are the same terms used in Jeremiah's call (1:10).

(Heb. nata) (1:10; 18:9; 31:28; 2 Sam. 7:10) Strong’s #5193: Aside from references to the planting of crops (Gen. 9:20), this verb is used to describe the placement of tents and other objects on the ground (Dan. 11:45). Jeremiah uses this word to testify of God’s sovereignty not only over Israel but over the establishment and eventual overthrow of all powers great and small on earth (12:2). Since God planted and established every nation, He could also uproot them whenever He wished (1:10).

31:29, 30 The proverb in this passage is also found in Ezek. 18:2. The contexts in both books indicate that this proverb is not original to Jeremiah or Ezekiel. In Israel and other ancient Middle Eastern communities, corporate responsibility was emphasized in legal and moral matters (Deut. 5:9), though individual accountability was not overlooked (Deut. 24:16; 2 Sam. 12:1–15). In Jeremiah and Ezekiel, focus is placed on the responsibility of the individual for his or her own iniquity.

31:31 days are coming: In Jeremiah, this phrase usually introduces a special occasion of divine intervention in history. new covenant: As contrasted with the Mosaic and Deuteronomic covenant. One problem that we encounter in both the OT and the NT is the mistaken idea that merely keeping the law (in an external manner) may bring about justification. But according to the NT as well as the OT, the law could not accomplish salvation and forgiveness of sins apart from a heart of faith and humility (Mic. 6:6–8; Rom. 4:1—5:2; 7:13–25). The Law of God was never designed as a means of justification, but rather as a pathway for the redeemed to walk (in other words, a means of their sanctification). house of Israel … house of Judah: According to 11:10, both kingdoms had broken God’s covenant by rejecting His words and by worshiping other gods.

31:32 The old covenant demanded adherence to stipulations (Ex. 19:1—23:33) that the people were unable to keep. Above all other commandments, the people were commanded to love and serve God and abandon all others (Ex. 23:33; Deut. 6:4, 5). This they did not do. fathers: From the wilderness period (Ex. 32:1–10; Num. 25:1–9) until the days of Manasseh, the history of Israel was permeated with idolatrous activity, only occasionally broken by periods of true faithfulness to God. The people seemed incapable of acting in sustained obedience to the covenant. husband: As Hosea was to Gomer, the Lord had been a faithful and devoted husband to Israel.

31:33 I will make: The new covenant would be initiated by God Himself, assuring its effectiveness. after those days: This expression looks forward to the time of fulfillment of the New Covenant, which found fruition in the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. put My law in their minds … write it on their hearts: Together the mind and heart describe the total inner motivations of mind, will, emotion, and spirit.

The New Covenant

Jeremiah is the only OT prophet who speaks about the New Covenant that Jesus inaugurated (Matt. 26:28). Some readers, desiring to celebrate what is "new" in the New Covenant, might be tempted to disparage the former covenant, the Mosaic covenant. But we should be careful to avoid any implication that there was something wrong in the covenant God had graciously bestowed on Israel.

God had never designed the Law of Moses as a means to obtain salvation. Instead, forgiveness of sins has always been God's gracious gift to those who have humbled themselves before Him in faith (Gen. 15:6; Mic. 6:6–8; Rom. 4:1–5:2; 7:13–25). The Law was God's way of pointing out the pathway that believers should walk. Thus, the problem with the covenant at Mount Sinai was not in God's provision, but in Israel's response.

The Israelites had continually broken the covenant. Time and again through priests and prophets God called His people to repent, but any change of heart they underwent they soon abandoned. In the days of Jeremiah, King Josiah destroyed the idols that were in the land. But soon after this godly king died, the people turned back to worshiping the idols of the neighboring countries. The hearts of the people remained unchanged. Only God Himself could change hearts and minds: thus a new covenant was needed.

The announcement of a new covenant by the prophet Jeremiah would have been alarming to godly Israelites. After all, the old covenant had come from the hand of God and had been accompanied by miracles and wonders. But the New Covenant would also be accompanied by the miracle of changed hearts and lives. The Spirit of God would enter people's lives in order to assure their adherence to the covenant (31:34; see Acts 2). No longer would intermediaries such as priests or prophets have to stand between the people and God. The Spirit would teach the people the knowledge of God—a knowledge that would demonstrated by faith, obedience, and devotion to the Lord.

Jesus fulfilled Jeremiah's prediction of the coming of a New Covenant through His work on the cross. By His death, the giving of His blood for many, redemption and forgiveness of sins were attained (31:34). While Jesus was on earth, He instructed His disciples in His Father's ways (Luke 24:13–27). But after Jesus ascended to heaven, the Sprit of God was poured out on the believers gathered in Jerusalem, fulfilling the promise spoken by Jeremiah.

31:34 No more shall every man teach: No longer would intermediaries like priests or prophets be needed to show the people how to know the LORD. From youngest to oldest, from peasant farmer to kings and princes, all would know God. Knowledge of God is a major theme of Jeremiah (2:8; 4:22; 5:4; 8:7) as well as of other prophets (Hos. 5:4). This knowledge is an intimate relationship with God evidenced by faith, obedience, and devotion. God will forgive and will purposefully not remember the sin and iniquity of His people who come to Him in repentance and faith. Jesus the Messiah fulfilled this promised New Covenant through His work on the Cross (Matt. 26:26–28; Mark 14:22–24; 1 Cor. 11:25).

31:35 sun … moon … stars: God, the Creator of all things, entered into covenant with His people. sea … waves: The Hebrew people learned from their Canaanite neighbors to fear the sea (Ps. 93). But God is Master of the sea, as He is Master of all things (Is. 51:15).

31:36, 37 Ordinances here are the natural laws that govern creation. The foundation of the New Covenant is as sure as the God who maintains creation. measured … searched out: At the peak of Judah's apostasy, shortly before the destruction of the nation by Babylon in divine judgment, the Lord emphatically reaffirmed His covenant relationship with the Jewish people in such strong terms that the promise was unbreakable, even by Him. When we see a rainbow in the sky, we should recall God's promise to Noah, even as God does (Gen. 9:16). When we observe the sun, moon, or stars in the sky (v. 35), we should remember God's promise to the Jewish people, even as God does.

31:38–40 days are coming: This expression introduces a new era in the history of God's dealing with His people. A survey is made of the environs of the new Jerusalem, a city built for the LORD in its entirety. The Tower of Hananel (Neh. 3:1) was located at the northeast corner of the city. The Corner Gate (2 Kin. 14:13) was to the northwest. Expansion of the northwest side of the city took place under Uzziah and Hezekiah. The valley of the dead bodies is probably a reference to the Valley of Hinnom, where children had been sacrificed in times of terrible apostasy (7:32). The fields as far as the Brook Kidron are the slopes of Mount Zion bordered by the Valley of Hinnom. plucked up … thrown down: The destructive terms of Jeremiah's call are employed again (1:10). No longer would the city see devastation, for it would be holy to the LORD.

32:1–44 The hope for restoration is solidified in the symbolic act of Jeremiah's purchase of a field in his hometown of Anathoth. The chapter has these divisions: (1) Jeremiah's purchase of a field (vv. 1–15); (2) Jeremiah's confessional prayer (vv. 16–25); and (3) God's answer of assurance (vv. 26–44).

32:1, 2 This verse relates the chronologies of Israel and Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar's eighteenth year was 588 B.C., at the beginning of the siege of Jerusalem. The siege resulted from Zedekiah's revolt against Babylonian rule. The insurrection was instigated in part by Egypt under Psammetichus II and Hophra (or Apries), as well as Tyre and Ammon, in mid-589 B.C. By January, 588 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar had established his Levantine headquarters at Riblah in Syria and began to attack the Shephelah fortresses of Azekah and Lachish. Then Jerusalem was blockaded from the south and the north, cutting off all supplies to the city. In the summer of 588 B.C., the Egyptian army advanced to the coastal plain and the Babylonian army suspended its assault long enough to drive back the Egyptians. This brief respite may have afforded Jeremiah the time to complete the deed transfer, and Zedekiah the reason for questioning Jeremiah, who had been placed in a guardroom of the palace court.

32:3–5 Jeremiah was imprisoned for his declaration that Jerusalem would fall to the Chaldeans and Zedekiah would be taken captive. face to face … eye to eye: The one-on-one confrontation with Nebuchadnezzar would result in the removal of Zedekiah's eyes (39:5–7).

32:6–8 The Lord instructed Jeremiah to purchase a field in his hometown of Anathoth, three miles north of Jerusalem, when Jeremiah's cousin Hanamel came to visit. right of redemption: According to Lev. 25:25–30, a person had the right to redeem property when a relative found it necessary to sell land because of debt or financial failure.

32:9–11 The land transaction was conducted according to the legal customs of the day. The price of seventeen shekels would amount to about seven ounces of silver.

32:12 Baruch the son of Neriah: This friend of Jeremiah is first mentioned here (ch. 36); he may have brought the silver for the land to Jeremiah in prison.

32:13–15 earthen vessel: Examples of storage jars that served as safety-deposit vessels have been excavated Judah. The Dead Sea Scrolls were also stored in ceramic vessels, aiding their preservation for almost two thousand years. The illustrated message of the purchase was assurance and confirmation that restoration of the land was certain. shall be possessed again: Jeremiah realized that the end of the city was near (v. 2); his action in purchasing land was a remarkable demonstration of faith in God that the people of Judah would return one day to their land.

32:16–25 Jeremiah's prayer of praise concludes the deed transaction. The prayer consists primarily of a rehearsal of God's past deeds in creation, the Exodus, and the conquest, leading up to Jeremiah's reminding God of the present Babylonian siege and the prophetown recent purchase of property. The prayer expresses both confidence in God's power and bewilderment at His purpose.

32:17 There is nothing too hard for You: Affirming God's power in creation (27:5) bolstered Jeremiah's faith in God's ability to deal with the siege of Jerusalem.

32:18, 19 The Lord's mercy and devotion to His people was demonstrated in His extending lovingkindness, or loyal love, to thousands (Deut. 5:9, 10). The Lord's faithful love far outweighs His punishing judgment, but the seriousness of sin is not to be overlooked (Ex. 20:5, 6; 34:7). everyone according to his ways: Every person will be judged individually on the basis of their own actions (17:10).

32:20, 21 The great historical demonstration of God's loyal love was the exodus of Israel from Egypt. This was accomplished with signs and wonders (Ps. 78:43) by which the name of God was made known among nations such as Moab (Num. 22—24), and peoples such as those in Jericho (Josh. 2:8–14). strong hand … outstretched arm: These expressions are found in Israel's confessional statement regarding the Exodus (Deut. 26:8). The addition of great terror indicates the mighty acts done against the Egyptians.

32:22, 23 The final step in this rehearsal of history was the gift of the Promised Land. not obeyed: The nation responded to God's grace with disobedience and breaking of the covenant, resulting in the calamity of the Babylonian siege and the eventual destruction of Jerusalem.

32:24, 25 You see it: What Jeremiah had prophesied in the name of God, the attack of the Babylonian foe from the north and the ensuing sword, famine, and pestilence (21:7), was now being fulfilled. Buying a field in a disintegrating land seemed out of line with Jeremiah's previous messages of destruction. Why buy land in a region overrun by Babylonians?

32:26–44 The answer to Jeremiah's bewilderment comes in the form of a speech from the Lord. The structure is closely parallel to that of Jeremiah's previous prayer but is lengthier. The history portion (vv. 26–35) contains extensive terminological parallels to several earlier judgment oracles. The restoration section (vv. 36–44) likewise derives much of its phraseology from earlier restoration oracles. In this speech there is a dramatic contrast of Israel's sinful past and the future of God's blessing in restoration.

32:26, 27 God of all flesh: God was Lord over Israel and Judah, and Lord over the nations (27:1–11)—including mighty Babylon (25:15–26). too hard: Nothing is impossible to God. This expression connects the present section with the previous one.

32:28–31 The Lord reassures Jeremiah of His intentions in judging Judah and Jerusalem with fire and destruction, for they had worshiped other gods. Condemnation of the worship of foreign gods is one of the key themes in the Book of Jeremiah, with the phrase "other gods" occurring eighteen times, along with numerous references to specific deities such as Ba'al, Milcom, Nabu, Chemosh, and Marduk.

32:32–35 kings … princes … priests … prophets … men of Judah … inhabitants of Jerusalem: This exhaustive list indicates the rebellion of the entire nation against God.

32:36–38 This verse serves as a summary of the situation in Jerusalem, described by the regular triad of devastation: sword … famine … pestilence.

32:39 one heart … one way: Because the Lord had written on the heart of the people a New Covenant (31:33), no longer would they worship other deities and turn to foreign nations for help. The word way is often used in Jeremiah to denote the character of a person's life, whether evil (4:18; 7:3, 5; 10:2; 18:11) or good (7:23). fear Me: To fear God is to submit to His sovereign majesty and walk according to His way.

32:40 The expression everlasting covenant is also found in Is. 55:3; Ezek. 16:60; 37:26. In Ezekiel it is equated with a "covenant of peace" that God will establish with His people. This covenant will be everlasting, unlike the Sinai covenant that had been broken and ignored for so long. My fear in their hearts: This phrasing closely parallels in meaning and purpose that of the New Covenant of 31:31–34.

32:41 plant: This term from Jeremiah's call (1:10) depicts God establishing His people back in their homeland with a restoration of peace and prosperity. My heart … My soul: These terms describe God's total devotion of heart, will, and emotions to His faithful children.

32:42–44 calamity … good: God would act to reverse the manner in which He dealt with His people after they had been punished by the Babylonians. Men will buy fields: Final assurance is given to Jeremiah, who had purchased a field in perilous and disastrous times. Fields would be bought and sold again throughout the land when the captives had been brought home.

33:1–26 This section is composed of two collections of restoration speeches, the first (vv. 1–13) describing the healing and cleansing of Judah and Jerusalem, and the second (vv. 14–26) composed of messianic teachings related to the Jerusalem leadership.

33:1–13 The setting of this speech is the court of the guard, where Jeremiah was kept during the Babylonian siege in 588 B.C. The contents closely parallel chapter 32. Here the emphasis is placed upon the joy and glory of restored Jerusalem. This section is outlined according to the three occurrences of the messenger formula: (1) restoration and cleansing of Jerusalem (vv. 1–9); (2) the joy in the restoration (vv. 10, 11); and (3) the restoration of Judah (vv. 12, 13).

33:1 while he was still shut up: A chronological tie is made to 32:2 (588 B.C.). Jeremiah had been placed under palace court guard because of what his enemies regarded as "seditious speeches," announcing the fall of Jerusalem and giving advice to Zedekiah to surrender to Nebuchadnezzar.

33:2 Jeremiah appealed to God's power in creation as the basis for his proclamation about the coming demonstration of power in restoration. Previously the creative power of God provided the foundation for the authority of the Lord to announce the destruction of the nation (2:12; 4:23–25), as well as the future restoration (32:17). The renewal of the nation is tantamount to a new creation.

33:3 Jeremiah urged the people to call out to the Lord, pointing out that this time the Lord would hear and answer (7:16) their cries. Mighty things has the abstract meaning of "inaccessible" or "unfathomable." God had done great things in creation; here the people were invited to observe anew the unfathomable greatness of God's work on their behalf.

33:4, 5 Houses that were built along the city walls could be torn down and filled with rubble to produce a wider, more solid wall. This was one means of combating the sloping earthen siege ramparts that armies constructed opposite domestic quarters rather than at heavily fortified towers or gates.

33:6–8 Three beneficent acts of the Lord will bring renewal to Judah: healing, rebuilding, and cleansing.

33:6 Judah and Jerusalem in their idolatry and rebellion were without peace and health (8:15, 22). The Lord promised healing in response to their repentance (3:22; 30:17).

33:7 as at the first: Return and rebuilding will bring security to both Israel and Judah, as well as restore the glory of their former days.

33:8 Forgiveness is described with two terms, cleanse and pardon. The word cleanse describes ritual purification of what is physically or spiritually unclean or defiled, such as Israel and Judah (2:23; 7:30). Pardon means "to forgive" and in the OT is used only with God as the subject as He forgives people. This fact helps us understand the reaction of the scribes when they heard Jesus forgiving sins (Mark 2:7).

33:9 As the citizens of Moab (Num. 22:1–6) and Jericho (Josh. 2:8–14) were full of fear and trembling before the nation that had benefited from the Lord's mighty works, so all would fear and tremble in amazement at God's new masterwork.

33:10, 11 Jerusalem would be made an object of derision, humiliation, and horror (25:9), but after the years of judgment and abandonment were fulfilled, the voices of sorrow would be turned to joy. This prophecy was partially fulfilled when Ezra and later Nehemiah led exiles back to rebuild, beginning with the temple and the city walls. However, Jerusalem's joy would come about ultimately as a result of a new covenant (31:31), which would be initiated at the coming of Christ (Heb. 8:6–13). That New Covenant would provide a lasting basis for hope and joy—knowing God.

33:12, 13 The focus turns to the regions within the nation of Judah that would experience God's mighty restoration. desolate: Note the parallel judgment in 7:34; 25:9. The regions listed are similar to those in 17:26. The six locations are organized around two triads: one introduced by the words mountains (the hill country), lowland (the Shephelah), and South (the Negev); and the second moving in a north-south direction: Benjamin, around Jerusalem, Judah. The term flocks is used to depict the Israelites as they returned from captivity into the fold of the holy city of Jerusalem.

33:14–26 This section is a collection of messianic oracles outlining the benefits that will accrue to the nation of Israel from her kingly and priestly leadership (vv. 14–18) and from the Davidic covenant (vv. 19–26).

33:15, 16 These verses closely parallel 23:5, 6, which has as its focus the royal leadership of the nation, the combined restored Israel and Judah. Branch of righteousness: God would raise up a messianic king of Davidic lineage who would rule according to the divine ideal, with judgment, meaning justice, and righteousness. saved … dwell in safety: Following the devastation of the Babylonian onslaught, Jerusalem would exist under divine protection.

33:17, 18 The Davidic covenant of divine succession is reiterated (2 Sam. 7:12–16). The Levitical priesthood would likewise be heirs to a divine succession in overseeing the sacrificial system in the Jerusalem temple. Jesus, as Priest and King, fulfills both offices in the New Covenant.

33:19–26 Assurance of the continuance of the Davidic covenant is conveyed through comparison to the divine order of the universe (an argument from the absurd). Davidic succession on the throne is as certain and constant as the cycle of day and night.

33:20, 21 My covenant: The divine order in the universe is readily evident in the day and night cycle from creation; it was confirmed in the covenant with Noah and again in the Decalogue (Gen. 1:14–18; 8:22; Ex. 20:8–11). This covenant is immutable for as long as earth exists. So also is the covenant with David and the Levites. As the Levites demonstrated their faithfulness in the wilderness and their leadership was confirmed (Ex. 32:25–29), so their descendants would have dominion over the sacrificial system.

33:22 The promise to Abraham and Jacob of innumerable posterity is confirmed to the Davidic throne and Levitical leadership (Gen. 13:16; 15:5; 28:14).

33:23, 24 The two families in this context are the houses of David and Levi (Zech. 12:12, 13). Because of their sins of rebellion against the covenant and their idolatry, Israel and Judah were despised (6:30; 7:29) by God and ridiculed among the nations.

33:25, 26 Ordinances refers to the laws that govern the divine order of the cosmos (5:22; 31:35, 36). If day and night should cease, only then would God cast away the great multitude of the descendants of Jacob. The promise of leadership succession is extended to the nation in terms of its existence as the people of God. The evidence of that promise and God’s mercy would be the return and restoration of the exiles to the land of God’s inheritance.

(Heb. maas) (8:9; 33:26; Lev. 26:43). Strong’s #3988: This Hebrew verb means “to despise,” “to hold without regard,” or “to refuse, reject” (Lev. 26:43; Job 30:1; 1 Sam. 16:10). Like the Hebrew verb ‘azab (meaning “to abandon”), this term has reciprocal connotations when used in covenant contexts. When the people of Judah rejected God’s Law (6:19), the Lord rejected that generation (7:29). As part of the New Covenant, the Lord promised that He would never again reject His people, but would forgive their sin and remember it no more (31:34, 37).

34:1—39:18 This collection of material dates from the reigns of Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, concluding with the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. The section is organized in a chiastic structure (an inversion of order), beginning with Zedekiah (ch. 34), moving toward back in time to Jehoiakim (chs. 35, 36), and then returning to the reign of Zedekiah (chs. 37—39). The high point of the chiasm is the burning of Jeremiah's first scroll by Jehoiakim, an act tantamount to rejection of the Lord as God of the nation and assuring the fulfillment of Jeremiah's judgment oracles against Judah. The section begins with a judgment oracle against Zedekiah during the Babylonian siege, and it ends with the destruction of Jerusalem by the Babylonians.

34:1–22 This chapter commences with the judgment against Zedekiah in the midst of Nebuchadnezzar's attack upon the fortified cites of Judah. The Babylonians' assault on Judah in late 589 B.C. was the result of Zedekiah's alliance with Egypt and Phoenicia in rebellion against Nebuchadnezzar. In the spring of 588 B.C., when only the two Shephelah fortifications of Azekah and Lachish remained, Pharaoh Hophra of Egypt brought his army across the northern Sinai to fight against Nebuchadnezzar. When Nebuchadnezzar temporarily withdrew his siege to go out to meet the Egyptians, there was a brief respite for the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem. When the Egyptians had been driven back, the siege was renewed with even greater intensity.

34:1 all his army … all the kingdoms … all the people: Jeremiah pictured all the armed forces of Babylon and its vassals arrayed simultaneously against Judah and Jerusalem.

34:2, 3 you shall not escape: Though Zedekiah attempted to flee to Jericho, Nebuchadnezzar's forces captured him and brought him to Riblah for a face to face meeting with Nebuchadnezzar (32:3, 4).

34:4, 5 In 21:4–7, Jeremiah proclaimed the destruction of Jerusalem and the death of its inhabitants by sword, pestilence, and famine. The particular implications for Zedekiah are outlined here. The king would die in peace in Babylon, meaning that he would not be executed by the sword. According to 2 Kin. 25:6, 7, his sons were killed before his eyes and then his eyes were put out.

34:6, 7 The background of the siege of Judah and Jerusalem is outlined. The fortifications at Azekah and Lachish in the lowlands were the avenue through which possible aid from Egypt would have come. They were the last to fall before Jerusalem was destroyed.

34:8–22 During the siege of Jerusalem in the spring of 588 B.C., Zedekiah proclaimed the freedom of slaves according to the message of the Lord through Jeremiah and the teaching of Law (Deut. 15:12–15). But when the Babylonian siege was temporarily halted, the policy was reversed and those set free were taken back by their masters. Jeremiah condemned Zedekiah for this breach of the covenant.

34:8, 9 covenant: A legal agreement was made between Zedekiah and the people of Jerusalem during the Babylonian siege to release from bondage all Hebrew slaves. Liberty is a technical word for the release of Hebrew slaves every fifty years in the Year of Jubilee (Lev. 25:8–10), when slaves were freed and indebted land was returned to its original owners. In Deut. 15:1, 12–15, a similar release during the sabbatical year is outlined.

34:10, 11 The princes concurred with the king's covenant (vv. 8, 9) and released Jews in bondage to them, but then reversed their decision when the siege was briefly withdrawn (vv. 21, 22). This opportunism in a moment of crisis demonstrated the leaders' contempt of the covenant.

34:12–14 Jeremiah, a faithful steward of the word of God, began his attack against Judah's leaders by recounting the teaching of the Law on the matter of emancipating slaves (Ex. 21:2–6; Deut. 15:12–15). He reminded the people that their ancestors were slaves in Egypt, and that God had freed them from slavery and oppression.

34:15, 16 When the princes of Judah emancipated their Hebrew slaves, it demonstrated their covenant faithfulness and devotion to God (v. 10). But when the righteous decision was reversed (v. 11), the name of God was profaned. The name of God sums up and represents His attributes, character, and work. That name had been defiled by the breach of covenant in the same way that the people had defiled the land with their idolatry (16:18).

34:17 Because the leaders of Judah had disobeyed the covenant by revoking the liberty granted to Hebrew slaves (v. 11), the Lord declared that He would grant liberty to the leaders—liberty from their disobedience and liberty to the sword, to pestilence, and to famine.

34:18, 19 The covenant ceremony is outlined. The main ritual of the two-party covenant began with cutting the sacrificial animal in half, after which the two participants would walk together between the parts (Gen.

15). The divided animal portrayed the potential fate of one who broke the covenant stipulations.

34:20 I will give them into the hand of their enemies: The slaves who had been wronged by the leaders of Judah would be vindicated by God, using the Babylonian army as His instrument.

34:21, 22 gone back: Nebuchadnezzar had withdrawn from Jerusalem to meet the Egyptian army of Pharaoh Hophra. Zedekiah had hopes that Hophra would be successful in delivering Israel from its impending doom. However, Nebuchadnezzar soon renewed the siege of Jerusalem and destroyed the city.

35:1–19 The setting of Jeremiah's encounter with the Rechabites, as indicated by v. 11, is near the end of the reign of Jehoiakim who died in December, 598 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar had ordered troops from the Ammonites, Moabites, Aramaeans (Syrians), and Chaldeans to attack the rebellious Judah under Jehoiakim (2 Kin. 24:2). These raids provide the background for the Rechabites leaving their territory and seeking refuge in Jerusalem. The account is similar in form to the symbolic act account. The placement of the Rechabite encounter in connection with the account of Zedekiah's reversal of freedom of the slaves (ch. 34) was to illustrate covenant faithfulness with a concrete example.

35:1 in the days of Jehoiakim: Jehoiakim reigned from 609 to 598 B.C.

35:2 The Rechabites were a tightly knit group of descendants of the Kenites (Judg. 1:16; 1 Chr. 2:55). This group is known first from the story of Jehonadab the son of Rechab, who assisted Jehu in purging the Baal prophets from Samaria (2 Kin. 10:15–28). The Rechabites lived as nomads, rejecting all forms of urban and agrarian life. They refused to drink wine or strong drink and would not cultivate vineyards. They also would not plant any other crops. Many scholars believe that they were a clan of metalsmiths. The Rechabites were invited by Jeremiah into one of the chambers surrounding the courtyard of the temple of God for a symbolic demonstration.

35:3–5 Man of God refers to a number of named and unnamed prophets, emissaries from God who delivered specific messages (1 Sam. 2:27; 1 Kin. 12:22; 13:1; 2 Kin. 1:9). Hanan was apparently sympathetic to Jeremiah's preaching. In the temple and in the presence of leading temple personnel, Jeremiah tested the Rechabites' faithfulness to their tradition by putting wine in front of them and telling them to drink.

35:6–10 The faithful Rechabites refused to drink wine, on the basis of the teaching of Jonadab their forefather. obeyed the voice: This is the language of faithfulness, often used in the negative by Jeremiah to refer to Judah's failure to obey the covenant (3:13; 7:23, 24).

35:11 The present military threat from Nebuchadnezzar had brought one change. Though not in keeping with their tradition, the Rechabites had now sought protection from the Babylonians within the confines of the walls of Jerusalem.

Everybody's Doing It!

People sometimes excuse or justify their immoral behavior with the attitude that "everybody's doing it." But that notion is false. Not everyone is doing it. Not everyone is giving way to popular opinion. Some people maintain their moral convictions—even those that are not based on specific biblical teachings.

For example, the Rechabites showed that it is possible to remain faithful and obedient to God, no matter what other people may be doing. After all, if this family could remain loyal to convictions that were not even prescribed by God, then surely the rest of the people could hold fast to beliefs and standards that God had commanded (35:12–16).

The same principle applies today. Here and there in modern society, we find groups of people who steadfastly maintain traditions or lifestyles that they have inherited from their ancestors. They go about their business seemingly undeterred by the fads and fashions of the surrounding culture. But if these groups are able to hold onto their convictions, is there any reason why those of us who claim to follow Christ should not maintain the moral standards and doctrinal truths that the Lord has established in Scripture?

35:12–15 receive instruction … obey My words: This phrasing comes from the words of the Rechabites (v. 8) and from Jeremiah's oracle in 7:28. The Rechabites had obeyed the instructions of their ancestor Jonadab. In the case of Judah, though God Himself had instructed the Israelites in the covenant and had presented His message repeatedly through many faithful prophets, the people had not obeyed Him. Rising early and speaking … sending describes the persistence of the many prophets in the Israel's history.

35:16, 17 The Rechabites had not wavered in keeping the commandment of Jonadab, but the Israelites had continually rebelled against the teaching of God.

35:18, 19 Blessing is pronounced over the faithful household of the Rechabites. Their complete obedience is outlined in a triad of verbs: obeyed … kept … done.

36:1–32 The Book of Jeremiah provides more insight into the nature, recording, composition, and history of the word of God in its formative periods than perhaps any other book of the Bible. There are more than 250 references to the word of God in Jeremiah in phrases like “the word of the Lord,” “My word(s),” and “the Lord spoke,” Jeremiah the prophet was the vocal instrument in the revelatory process, speaking as God revealed His message to him. In this chapter, Jeremiah’s early oracles are recorded on a scroll (vv. 1–4); Baruch was instructed to read it in the temple (vv. 5–8); the scroll was read during the fast (vv. 9, 10); Micaiah reported the pronouncement to the royal palace (vv. 11–13); Baruch read the scroll in the palace (vv. 14–19); the scroll was read before Jehoiakim, who then burnt it (vv. 20–26); the scroll was rewritten (vv. 27, 28); and the resulting judgment oracle was pronounced against Jehoiakim and the royal household (vv. 29–32).

36:1 The narrative recounts the interaction with Jehoiakim concerning the word of God during the king’s fourth year, 605–604 B.C. In late spring as the year began and the river was “at flood stage,” Nebuchadnezzar crossed the Euphrates and defeated the Egyptians at Carchemish. it came to pass: The original scroll of Jeremiah’s oracles, which had been prepared with the scribal assistance of Baruch, was read in the temple in the ninth month of the fourth year of Jehoiakim in November through December 604 B.C. (v. 9). This was at the same time as the attack of the Babylonians on Ashkelon.

36:2 scroll of a book: The usual material for a scroll was parchment (a kind of leather), though Egyptian papyrus was also available. The contents of the scroll were the oracles dating from the days of Josiah, at the advent of Jeremiah’s ministry (626 B.C.), to this day (604 B.C.).

36:3 The reasons for Jeremiah’s dictation to Baruch are several: (1) divine instruction; (2) Jeremiah was prohibited from speaking in the temple so that an emissary was needed to transmit the Lord’s message to the people; (3) Jeremiah was compelled to proclaim the message of God by any means possible in hope of Judah’s repentance; and (4) the precedent of the scroll discovery in the days of Josiah that resulted in national reformation.

36:4 Baruch the son of Neriah was a trained scribe and close friend of Jeremiah (32:12). at the instruction: This phrase refers to the process of dictation from Jeremiah to Baruch.

36:5 Confined can refer to physical imprisonment, being placed under guard (33:1; 39:15); a mental or spiritual constraint; or some other form of restriction. No prison is mentioned in this chapter. It is possible that Jeremiah was somehow prohibited from entering the temple courts, perhaps after his temple sermon (7:1–15; 26:1–19).

36:6, 7 The scroll of Jeremiah's early oracles against Israel and Judah was to be read on a day of fasting, a time aside by official declaration of the king or priests (v. 9) in a period of national crisis.

36:8 Baruch, a faithful disciple like Jeremiah, read from the book of God's words in the temple of the Lord. This act closely parallels the reading of the Book of the Law in the temple of God after it was discovered there (2 Kin. 22; 23).

36:9, 10 The official proclamation of the fast came in November through December of 604 B.C. People from all over Judah assembled in the temple of the Lord for the fast, providing Baruch and Jeremiah a sizable audience. Gemariah was the son of Shaphan, the scribe who read the scroll found during Josiah's reign (2 Kin. 22:1–20). It seems Gemariah was sympathetic toward Jeremiah, allowing the use of the room in the upper court, a room overlooking the temple courts and giving access to those gathered for the fast.

36:11–13 Gemariah's son Micaiah reported the occasion and words to the royal princes, including Gemariah and Elnathan. Elnathan's father Achbor also played a role in the reading of the scroll in the days of Josiah's reform. The parallels between Josiah's reform and Jeremiah's desire for national revival were included by Baruch deliberately, to remind the people of the earlier event.

36:14 Jehudi: The list of three ancestors is unusual. The last name Cushi may indicate that Jehudi was a Cushite, thus of foreign ancestry. Jehudi was the messenger appointed to summon Baruch to the court of the princes.

36:15–19 looked in fear: Alarmed at the words of the scroll, the princes felt impelled to inform the king. wrote them with ink: Baruch told the princes how and when the scroll was written. The leaders told Baruch to go with Jeremiah and hide until the matter could be investigated.

36:20–24 Baruch and Jeremiah would have learned later that the original scroll was destroyed, since they were in hiding when it happened. winter house: The royal palace had rooms with fireplaces for use in the winter. As the scroll was read, Jehoiakim showed no signs of fear or lamentation, unlike Josiah when the Book of the Law was read in his hearing (2 Kin. 22:11–13).

36:25, 26 The king's son could mean: (1) the literal son of Jehoiakim; (2) the son of a man named Hamelek, which means "the king"; or (3) an office title for a person with the function of a deputy or policeman. The third view seems to be indicated in this context.

36:27, 28 The Lord told Jeremiah and Baruch to prepare a second scroll of the earlier oracles. Verse 32 notes that additional material was included.

36:29–32 Indictment and judgment against Jehoiakim is pronounced. The indictment was declared because he destroyed the scroll of the word of the Lord. First, the Davidic lineage would not continue through him. His son would rule for only three months before Nebuchadnezzar deported Jehoiachin to Babylon, where he died. Second, the king's body would be treated disgracefully after his death. As the king had cast the scroll into the fire, so his body would be cast from the royal palace. Third, the royal household would experience the destructive judgment that had been proclaimed in the words of the original scroll.

Children of Rebellion

While Scripture urges parents to raise their children "in the training and admonition of the Lord" (Eph. 6:4), it makes no guarantees about how one's children will turn out. Nor can it: each individual decides whether to follow the Lord or depart from His ways. Parents can point their children in the right direction, but once young people become adults, they determine which way they will go.

That helps to explain why some godly parents have children who are spiritually rebellious. By the same token, people of great faith and compassion have been known to come from homes where God was dishonored or even unknown. Josiah was a man of faith and a conscientious ruler of Israel (2 Chr. 34:1). Nevertheless, all three of his sons, including Zedekiah (Jer. 37:1–2), turned away from God, and paid a tragic price as a result.

37:1–21 The text returns chronologically to the period of the respite from the Babylonian siege in 588 B.C., when Nebuchadnezzar went out to meet the Egyptian army under Pharaoh Hophra. Jeremiah's interaction with Zedekiah during this period began with the abuse of Hebrew slaves. In chapter 37, two further encounters with Zedekiah are recounted: (1) the prophecy that the Babylonians would return and besiege the city (vv. 1–10) and (2) the accusation and imprisonment of Jeremiah for treason (vv. 11–21). The chapter begins the series of narratives recounting events leading up to the fall of Jerusalem (ch. 39).

37:1, 2 Zedekiah, like Jehoiakim and so many other kings before him in Israel and Judah, had rejected the word of God and its warnings of judgment, though it was communicated tirelessly and faithfully by God's messengers the prophets. The end of rebellion was in sight. Jerusalem would soon fall to the Babylonian armies, the instruments of divine discipline.

37:3, 4 Jehucal was a friend of Pashhur (21:1). Together they eventually called for Jeremiah to be executed (38:1). Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah was a member of the delegation who had sought a word from God at the beginning of the Babylonian siege (21:1–10). He was sympathetic toward Jeremiah, as reflected in the letter from Shemaiah (29:24–28).

37:5 In late spring or early summer 588 B.C., Pharaoh Hophra led the Egyptian army into southern Palestine. The Babylonian forces withdrew their siege of Judah and Jerusalem to confront the Egyptians. Zedekiah hoped the Babylonians would be defeated, but his hopes proved to be in vain.

“prophet”

(Heb. nabi) (37:6; Deut. 13:1; 1 Sam. 3:20; 2 Kin. 19:2) Strong’s #5030: The probable root word for nabi means “to announce” or “to proclaim” (19:14; Ezek. 37:4). Another possible derivation is from a Hebrew word meaning “to bubble up” or “to pour forth.” Prophecy can be compared to the “bubbling up” of the Holy Spirit in a person who delivers a divine message (compare Amos 3:8; Mic. 3:8). In OT times, prophets were heralds or spokesmen who delivered a message for someone else (1:5; 2:8; 2 Kin. 17:13; Ezek. 37:7). In the case of the Hebrew prophets, they spoke for God Himself. This is the reason the prophets introduced their messages with “thus says the LORD of hosts” on countless occasions (9:7, 17).

37:6–8 Jeremiah’s response to Jehucal and Zephaniah (vv. 3, 4) was the same unchanging word from the LORD he had always proclaimed. The Babylonians would soon return to destroy Jerusalem.

37:9, 10 Do not deceive yourselves: To think that the brief respite caused by the Egyptian appearance in the southern coastal plain was proof of imminent deliverance, as the false prophets declared, was an exercise in self-deception and futile imagination.

37:11, 12 The lifting of the siege by the Babylonians afforded the people in Jerusalem some opportunity for movement outside the city. The precise chronology of events associated Jeremiah’s intended visit to Anathoth, three miles to the north and in the direction of one of Nebuchadnezzar’s original siege camps, and the purchase of the field from Hanamel (32:1–14) is not clear. A possible interpretation of parallel events in 32:2 (“in the court of the prison”) and 37:21 (“commit Jeremiah to the court of the prison”) would seem to indicate that Jeremiah may have had prior knowledge of the availability of the property in Anathoth before he was arrested.

37:13 Irijah, a captain of the guard and a royal military official, arrested Jeremiah at the Gate of Benjamin on the north side of the city. The charge of defection was not unreasonable. Jeremiah had advised the people of Jerusalem to defect to the Chaldeans so that their lives would be spared (21:9). A number of them followed his advice (38:19).

37:14–16 Jeremiah denied the accusation of defection but to no avail. Irijah arrested the prophet and arraigned him before the court of princes. Prison space was lacking in Jerusalem due to the crowded conditions of the siege, so a prison was devised in the house of Jonathan the scribe. the dungeon and the cells: Jeremiah's prison seems to have been a cistern with vaulted ceilings in Jonathan's house.

37:17–19 Fearing possible exposure and opposition from his courtiers, Zedekiah secretly summoned Jeremiah and asked of him a message from the Lord. The several encounters between Jeremiah and Zedekiah indicate the weak character of Zedekiah. He seems to have earnestly desired a message from God but could not come to grips with the reality and respond appropriately.

37:20, 21 Jeremiah appealed to Zedekiah's sense of justice and decency and asked to be released from prison. Zedekiah consented and committed the prophet to the court of the prison, a place near the royal palace where limited mobility was possible, such as in the transaction to purchase the field (32:1–15; Neh. 3:25).

38:1–28 Based on a general comparison of the contents, scholars are divided as to whether this chapter is a duplicate of the Jeremiah-Zedekiah encounter of 37:11–21. Both contain similar outlines of arrest scenarios with charges of treason, arraignment before the court princes, imprisonment in a cistern structure, a private meeting with Zedekiah, and subsequent confinement to a less inhumane, alternative prison facility. Differences include several personnel involved, the name of the place of confinement to the cistern, and numerous details exclusive to either account. Since variant duplicate accounts of events are not uncommon in the Book of Jeremiah (for instance, the temple sermons in 7:1–15 and 26:1–15), these could well be the same event with different emphases.

38:1 Jucal (Jehucal) was one of the emissaries sent by Zedekiah to Jeremiah in 37:3. Pashhur came to Jeremiah with a group when the Babylonian siege began in January 588 B.C.

38:2, 3 Verse 2 is almost an exact duplicate of 21:9. Jeremiah said the choice was between life under the Babylonians and death among the ruins of Jerusalem. Such a statement was treasonous, as was the statement that Jerusalem must fall.

38:4 The princes accused Jeremiah of demoralizing Judah and seeking the harm of Jerusalem. weakens the hands: This expression describes the discouragement or demoralization of soldiers (Ezra 4:4).

38:5 the king can do nothing: Zedekiah was powerless before the court of princes. The fate of Jeremiah was placed in their hands.

38:6 Jeremiah was imprisoned in the basement cistern of Malchiah the king's son. Probably due to the length of the Babylonian siege, the cistern had no water sufficient for drinking, only mire of muddy lime clay. This particular cistern had a narrow circular opening, and could be entered and exited only by means of ropes. The court princes probably expected Jeremiah to die a slow and quiet death in an unpleasant environment.

Africans in the Bible

Ebed-Melech the Ethiopian, the official who unexpectedly came to Jeremiah's aid (Jer. 38:7), was one of a number of Africans mentioned in the Bible. The fact that Africans often played a significant role in biblical history was largely the result of Israellocation at the intersection between Africa and Asia.

The majority of Africans with whom the Israelites had contact were Egyptians. This began when Abraham visited Egypt to find food during a severe famine (Gen. 12:10). Later, the family of his grandson Jacob would relocate to Egypt for the same reason (41:53—47:31). The Israelites remained there for 430 years before returning to Canaan (Ex. 12:41). Throughout the rest of Israel's history, Egypt served alternately as either a resource or a menace.

Other Africans mentioned in the Bible represented Ethiopia (or Cush or Nubia), a term that designated both the country and the unknown lands south and southwest of Egypt; and Libya, probably the same as Put, the lands west of Egypt. The land of Ophir, renowned for its gold, may also have been located on the African continent (1 Kin. 9:28).

Beginning after the fall of Judah, many Jewish colonies were started in Africa, mostly in Egypt, but also at Cyrene. This led to the recruitment of numerous proselytes to Judaism, some of whom were present at Pentecost (Acts 2:10). The gospel probably came into Africa first by way of the African Jewish colonies. For example, tradition holds that John Mark (Acts 15:37) was the first evangelist to Alexandria, Egypt, and the first bishop of that city.

38:7–10 Ebed-Melech the Ethiopian: The name means "Servant of the King." Gate of Benjamin: Jeremiah had entered and left the city many times through this northern gate. The king was likely performing his normal function of mediating disputes and settling legal questions. no more bread: A siege cut off water and food supplies from a city, hoping starvation would force a surrender.

38:11–13 Ebed-Melech took special care to obtain rags for Jeremiah to cushion his armpits, preventing the ropes from cutting his skin. A foreigner, a once-despised Cushite, cared more for the prophet of God than did the king and princes of Jeremiah's own people.

38:14 This meeting between Jeremiah and Zedekiah is parallel to the account in 37:17–21. The location of the third entrance is unknown. The secrecy of the meeting may indicate that it was a private access for the king from the royal palace into the temple courts. Zedekiah's request to ask Jeremiah something is asked with sincerity. He wanted the prophet to be honest and open in his answer.

38:15, 16 will you not: Jeremiah was fearful of being returned to the dungeon, of being turned over to the Egyptian courtiers who would do him further harm, or of being executed for speaking boldly against the king. Zedekiah swore by the name of God that no harm would come to the prophet from any source.

38:17, 18 Jeremiah repeated to the king the message recorded in vv. 2, 3. Surrender would spare the life of the king and the city; failure to surrender would bring death and destruction.

38:19 I am afraid: Zedekiah revealed he was afraid to surrender to the Babylonians because he feared retaliation by early deserters (21:9; 39:9; 52:15) from Jerusalem. His unfitness to be king is proven by his concern for his personal safety above that of the city and its inhabitants.

38:20–23 Jeremiah tried to settle Zedekiah's fears and to resolve his moral and ethical dilemma by reassuring him that surrender would result in his personal safety. But if the king refused to surrender to Nebuchadnezzar, the word of judgment would fall. Women and children would be handed over to Nebuchadnezzar, and Jerusalem would be destroyed.

38:24–26 Zedekiah instructed Jeremiah not to tell the pro-Egyptian princes about their conversation lest the prophet be executed. Together they constructed an account of their meeting that might be used if Jeremiah was questioned about what had been said. It is clear that Zedekiah was afraid of a revolt from within his royal court.

38:27, 28 As expected, the princes questioned Jeremiah. The answer he and Zedekiah had prepared proved satisfactory.

39:1–10 The fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. was one of the most lamentable events in the history of the nation. On the Fast of the ninth of Ab the Book of Lamentations is read in the synagogue during the special service commemorating the fall of the city in 586 B.C. under the Babylonians and the second time in A.D. 70 under the Romans. With the exception of v. 3, this section is duplicated or adapted in 52:4–16 and in 2 Kings 25:1–12.

39:1 The Babylonian siege began in the tenth month of the ninth year of Zedekiah's reign, that is, in December 589 or January 588 B.C. Today the tenth of Tebeth is a fast day in the Jewish calendar.

39:2 eleventh year of Zedekiah … fourth month … ninth day: The walls of Jerusalem were breached about the time food supplies were exhausted, in June or July 586 B.C.

39:3 sat in the Middle Gate: The Middle Gate was probably in the north wall of Jerusalem, the direction from which the city was taken. The Babylonian princes sat in the gate to assert their authority in the conquered city. Nergal-Sharezer ruled Babylon from 560 to 556 B.C. Nebo may be a short form of Nebushasban. When combined with Sarsechim, the resulting name is probably a variation of the name Nebushasban Rabsaris (v. 13). Rabmag and Rabsaris are titles.

39:4 When Zedekiah saw the Babylonian officers enter the gate on the north side of Jerusalem, he and his men left at night through a gate between the two walls, probably near the union of the Kidron and Tyropoeon valleys on the south side of the city. Plain refers to the Jordan valley.

39:5–7 Zedekiah and his military escort were captured near Jericho and taken to Riblah, a city in Aram. Hamath was a region of Aram. There Zedekiah met Nebuchadnezzar face to face, as Jeremiah had prophesied (34:3). Zedekiah's sons and his men were killed before his eyes just before he was blinded. Bronze fetters refers to the pairs of shackles placed on his wrists and ankles. Zedekiah died in prison in Babylon (52:11).

39:8–10 In addition to the royal palace and homes of the inhabitants, 52:13 includes the "house of the Lord" among the buildings burned in Jerusalem. poor: Typically the Babylonians deported the upper classes, such as court officials, merchants, artisans, and craftsmen, and left behind peasants to work the fields.

39:11 Nebuchadnezzar had given special instructions to Nebuzaradan regarding the treatment of Jeremiah. The positive teaching of the prophet regarding the king of Babylon had come to his attention in some way, perhaps through deserters or spies.

39:12–14 During the destruction of Jerusalem, Jeremiah was released from the court of the prison and brought to Mizpah to be under charge of Gedaliah, whom Nebuchadnezzar had appointed governor over the peasant population of Judah and Benjamin. A more detailed account of Jeremiah's trip from Jerusalem to Ramah to Mizpah is found in 40:1–6. One way of harmonizing the accounts is the suggestion that Jeremiah was gathered by the soldiers along with others in Jerusalem for transport to Babylon, taken to the holding camp at Ramah, and then released from Ramah by Nebuzaradan.

39:15–18 Ebed-Melech, who had carefully rescued Jeremiah from the muddy cistern in the prison court (38:11–13), was promised safety and deliverance by the Lord because of his assistance to Jeremiah and because he had put his trust in God.

40:1–6 The destruction of Judah and Jerusalem by the Babylonians was massive and complete. Cities lay burned, the leading citizens had been exiled, and a peasant population of farmers, herders, and the like was left to produce an agrarian tax base for the empire economy. A new district capital was established at Mizpah, and ruled by the puppet governor named Gedaliah. The material in 40:1—43:13 relates to the rule of Gedaliah, from the release of Jeremiah to the assassination of Gedaliah, and then to the aftermath leading up to the Jews' flight to Egypt. The present section provides an introduction to this Gedaliah material.

40:1 Ramah was about five miles north of Jerusalem, along the ancient road leading from Jerusalem to Shechem. With the destruction of Jerusalem still in process, Ramah served as a way station for captives going to the eastern provinces of the Babylonian Empire.

40:2, 3 Nebuzaradan knew about Jeremiah's predictions regarding the demise of Jerusalem and the victories of the armies of Babylon. Prophets whose words were deemed verified were generally treated well by peoples of the ancient Middle East. The LORD your God has pronounced this doom: Consider the irony of a foreigner stating the truth concerning the reason for Jerusalem's destruction.

40:4, 5 Jeremiah was released from bondage and given three options: (1) to go with Nebuzaradan to Babylon and enjoy special treatment and protection there; (2) to remain in the care of Gedaliah, the district governor at Mizpah; or (3) to live in the land as he chose. Nebuzaradan gave Jeremiah rations and gifts because of the prophet's proclamations about Babylon and Nebuchadnezzar (25:9; 27:6).

40:6 Jeremiah chose to go to Mizpah to serve under Gedaliah son of Ahikam, staying with his people not far from his hometown and the property he had purchased while in the court of the prison (32:1–15). Mizpah was about eight miles north of Jerusalem.

40:7–10 The captains of the armies refers to the surviving Jewish commanders of the armies in the towns throughout Judah who had fled into the rugged hill country. Among the list of escaped leaders was Ishmael, a member of the royal family and a court officer (41:1); Johanan, who would become the leader of the assembly (vv. 13–16); and Jezaniah (Jaazaniah) whose father was a Maacathite.

40:11, 12 The Jews who had escaped the Babylonian onslaught into neighboring states returned home and began working the fields, vineyards,

40:13, 14 Johanan led a group of leaders to Gedaliah to warn him of a plot by Ishmael and the Ammonite king Baalis to assassinate the governor.

40:15, 16 Johanan secretly asked Gedaliah permission to kill Ishmael secretly, fearing reprisal from Babylon that would surely destroy the reconstruction efforts and lead to further bloodshed. Unfortunately, Gedaliah was far too trusting of Ishmael, the royal descendant who seems to have coveted Gedaliah's position.

41:1–3 The year of the assassination of Gedaliah is not given, only the month—the seventh month or Tishri, September through October. The murder of the governor could have taken place as soon as three months after the fall of Jerusalem. Others associate the third deportation of 582 B.C. with this rebellion. Ishmael's act was especially despicable since it took place during a banquet.

41:4–7 Two days after Gedaliah's death a group of faithful pilgrims were on their way to Jerusalem, probably with grain rather than animal offerings. Ishmael and his followers falsely led the worshipers aside, massacred them, and cast their bodies into a pit.

41:8 Ten men with treasures of agricultural goods were spared at their own request. Why these ten were not slain is unknown. Perhaps Ishmael left them to tell the story, or perhaps they bargained their goods for their lives.

A potter practices his craft at a revolving turntable. Jeremiah watched a potter like this at work as he refashioned a marred vessel, and he compared it to God's ability to remake the nation of Judah (Jer. 18:1–11).

41:9–12 When Johanan, who had warned Gedaliah about the assassination plot (40:13–16), heard of the atrocities of Ishmael, he mustered his captains and forces and confronted the rebel army at Gibeon. The pool at which Johanan and his men found Ishmael was a large, circular pit cut into solid rock to a depth of about thirty-three feet. The pool was six miles northwest of Jerusalem and three miles from Mizpah, and was the site of the famous battle between Joab and Abner's men (2 Sam. 2:12–29).

41:13–15 When they saw Johanan, the captives Ishmael had taken from Mizpah ran over to join his forces. Ishmael and eight of his men escaped to Ammon.

41:16–18 Fearing imminent reprisal from the Babylonians on account of the rebellion, Johanan gathered the inhabitants of Mizpah, including Jeremiah, together with those he had rescued and began a trek toward Egypt, seeking a place of safety. Egypt was the only country in the region that was free from Babylonian control. Johanan and his group went south toward Bethlehem, camping at Chimham.

42:1–6 After the initial stage of the flight from Mizpah, Johanan and other leaders consult Jeremiah for a word from the Lord with regard to their future direction.

42:1–3 said to Jeremiah: The people asked Jeremiah to intercede with the Lord on their behalf. The small remnant had a leader, but needed direction and guidance.

42:4–6 I will pray: Jeremiah cautiously agreed to pray to God. He asked the people to agree to abide by the answer he received. The people responded with an oath of obedience, calling upon the Lord as witness.

42:7–10 after ten days: God's response to Jeremiah's prayer on behalf of the people did not come immediately. Jeremiah convened the assembly and declared the answer from God in terms reminiscent of his call: build you … not pull you down … plant you … not pluck you up (1:10).

42:11, 12 Jeremiah assured the people with the same words the Lord had used to give him assurance in his call: I am with you, to save you and deliver you (1:8). God's promise to bring His people through a time of trial to experience His restorative power would show His great mercy. God had promised this restoration in earlier oracles (12:15).

42:13, 14 If the people disobeyed God and fled to Egypt, they would suffer the consequences. The people's hope for safety in Egypt is presented in a triad of phrases: see no war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor be hungry. The people seem to have had their minds made up before they sought the word from the Lord (vv. 2, 3).

42:15–17 set their faces: This expression indicates the fixed intentions of the people. The announcement of judgment against the disobedient evacuees echoes Jeremiah's earlier pronouncements against Judah. The very thing they were trying to escape from would meet them in Egypt. sword … famine … pestilence: This common triad indicates the completeness of God's judgment upon the disobedient.

42:18–22 The message was succinct and clear: Do not go to Egypt! Again Jeremiah felt he had been deceived by a people speaking words of empty oaths and promises. He reiterated the triad of judgment terms of v. 18 that describe the end that would befall the rebels in Egypt.

The Reluctant Refugee

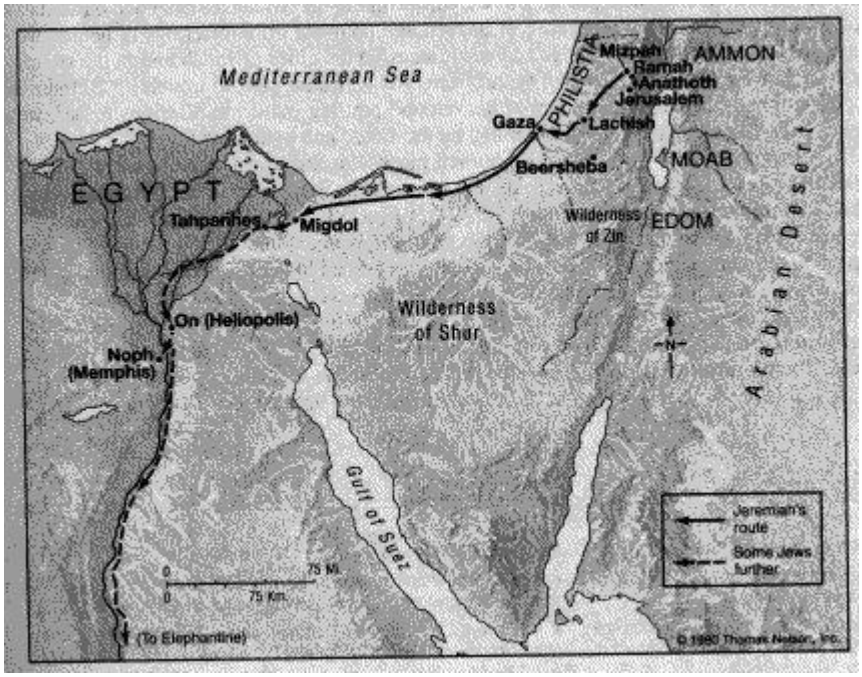
Terrified of the Babylonians after the fall of Jerusalem, and fearful of the Ammonites after the assassination of the appointed governor Gedaliah, the survivors of Jerusalem made preparations to flee to Egypt (41:16–18). Before departing, however, they made a pretense of asking Jeremiah for a word from the Lord (42:1–3).

Despite Jeremiah's warnings to remain in the land (42:9–22), the people insisted on leaving (43:1–7). Apparently Jeremiah and his secretary Baruch were compelled to go along, reluctant though they were. Jeremiah may have spent his final days in Egypt, for there is no record that he returned to Jerusalem.

43:1–3 The people had already intended to go to Egypt to escape the perceived danger of Babylon. Azariah and Johanan spoke out against the counsel given by Jeremiah in 42:9–22. As the leaders of Jerusalem had spoken before the fall of the city, the new leaders of the remnant indirectly call the message of the Lord “false” as revealed through His prophet. Baruch is accused of influencing Jeremiah to declare a deceptive message that would lead to their capture. Baruch is seen in a different light than in earlier passages, where he was simply a scribal agent or legal emissary. Here the faithful scribe Baruch is portrayed in his own right as an influential and effectual leader.

43:4–9 Johanan led the migration to Egypt, against the direction of the Lord through Jeremiah. The caravan journeyed as far as Tahpanhes, a city on the eastern edge of the Nile Delta (2:16).

43:10, 11 This judgment oracle echoes earlier pronouncements against Judah, with Nebuchadnezzar identified as the servant of God (25:9; 27:6). The stones symbolized the strong foundation of Nebuchadnezzar’s empire, the point from which he would spread his royal pavilion (tent, or canopy). death … captivity … sword: Severe judgment is pronounced on Egypt, including judgment on the disobedient people of Judah.



Jeremiah's Journey to Jerusalem

When Jerusalem fell to Nebuchadnezzar, Jeremiah was taken in chains to Ramah and then released. He went on to Mizpah to support the people left in the land. When the governor was killed, Jeremiah prophesied that people should not leave the land, but he was taken against his will to Tahpanhes in Egypt. His further prophecies to Jews living in Migdol, Noph, and Tahpanhes may have contributed to establishing Jewish settlements in other parts of Egypt, as far as Elephantine.

43:12, 13 The destructive judgment was extended to the temples of Egyptian gods and goddesses. Destruction of Egyptian temples was carried out by Esarhaddon of Assyria in the seventh century B.C., and again by Cambyses of Persia in the sixth century B.C. Beth Shemesh ("House of the Sun") was the temple of the sun god Re. The temple was known for its two rows of pillars, or inscribed obelisks.

44:1–30 This chapter consists of an extended prose discourse concerning the Jews in Egypt. The chapter outlines as follows: (1) judgment oracle against Jews living in Egypt (vv. 1–14); (2) the response of the Jews living in Egypt (vv. 15–19); and (3) Jeremiah's rejoinders in condemnation of idolatrous practices among the Jews (vv. 20–30). The language derives from earlier prose sermons such as the Temple Sermon in 7:1–15. Jeremiah's messages from the Lord had become highly stylized, reflecting consistency from the beginning of his ministry under Josiah to the exilic period. Idolatry and covenant rejection remain the center of his proclamation of the word of God. These are the last known words of Jeremiah.

44:1 Migdol is a common Semitic term meaning "Watchtower." Here the term is identified with a small fortress twenty-five miles east of Tahpanhes. Noph is another name for Memphis, the capital of Lower Egypt. Pathros is Upper Egypt. Since Jehoahaz had been deported to Egypt in 609 B.C., a number of Jews had settled there in the fertile lands along the Nile.

44:2, 3 Jerusalem was brought to desolation because the people broke God's covenant by worshiping other gods, rejecting the lordship of God, and thus provoking Him to anger.

44:4–7 prophets, rising early and sending: Jerusalem had been warned time and again by faithful and tireless messengers from God (7:25; 25:4; 26:5). they did not listen or incline their ear: The reference here is to the people's disobedience in continually worshiping foreign deities.

44:8 provoke: This term indicates willful, stubborn rebellion against God, which roused His anger.

44:9, 10 They have not been humbled … nor have they feared: The present generation of Jews had learned nothing from the past failures of the nation. The people were not broken in heart, only more stubborn.

44:11, 12 I will set My face against you: This expression describes the will of God, here pronouncing judgment upon the rebellious Jews in Egypt. set their faces: God had set His face against the remnant of Judah because they had set their face to enter Egypt against His will (43:7).

44:13, 14 The Jews in Egypt would suffer the same judgment as those in Jerusalem. Only a small remnant would survive to tell their story.

44:15–17 The people countered Jeremiah's words with an argument from experience. They rejected God by saying that when they worshiped the queen of heaven—that is, the goddess Ishtar or Astarte, they had plenty of food, were well off, and saw no trouble.

44:18 Queen of heaven refers to Ishtar, a goddess of war and fertility who was worshiped with explicit sexual activity. The people reasoned that when they stopped worshiping the queen of heaven in the days of Josiah's reform, their king was killed and their land was overrun and destroyed.

44:19 Women were leaders in the Ishtar rites, which included incense burning, drink offerings, and special ceremonial cakes marked with the symbol of the goddess (7:18).

44:20, 21 remember: This term is often used in contexts describing the basis for God's judgment.

44:22, 23 no longer bear it: The long-suffering of the Lord had reached its end. The cause of the judgment was the people's evil … doings and abominations. When the covenant was broken, the covenant curses came to bear.

44:24, 25 The focus here is on the stubbornness of the women who persisted in their idolatry. Nothing could make them abandon their vows to worship Ishtar.

44:26, 27 The name of God reveals His quality and character in dealing with humankind. No more would His name be spoken in vain oaths. He had been loving, gracious, and long-suffering, providing every opportunity for repentance. But now His holiness and justice must be vindicated through punishment of sin and rebellion.

44:28–30 A small remnant would survive and see the fulfillment of God's word as revealed through Jeremiah. Their own hopes of prosperity in Egypt would vanish, and the sign of God's work against them would be the fall of Pharaoh Hophra of Egypt. In 570 B.C., Hophra was overthrown in a military coup by his own general Amasis. Three years later he was executed in fulfillment of Jeremiah's prophecy.

45:1–5 The importance of Baruch in the life of Jeremiah and in the proclamation and preservation of the word of God has been noted earlier. In this passage, allusion is made to the actual words of Baruch. They form a confessional lament, to which the Lord responds with words of blessing upon his livelihood, in spite of the disastrous circumstances he experiences.

45:1 Baruch assisted and encouraged Jeremiah when he was imprisoned. In this passage Jeremiah replies with a personal word of encouragement from the Lord for his scribal friend. The date of the passage, 604 B.C., identifies it with the circumstances of ch. 36. Baruch had read Jeremiah's oracles before the temple crowd and the princes of Judah, before Jehoiakim burned the original scroll. A second scroll was prepared by Baruch, and he remained an assistant to Jeremiah throughout his ministry, including the journey to Egypt.

45:2, 3 Jeremiah addressed Baruch in light of the scribe's sorrow. Woe: Baruch lamented his plight in the same manner that Jeremiah had done (15:10). added grief to my sorrow: Baruch suffered mental anguish and personal rejection from his people due to his association with Jeremiah (36:15–19; 43:3).

45:4 The judgment against the land that had persecuted the faithful scribe and prophet is presented in telescopic fashion. The words echo the adverse terms of Jeremiah's call (1:10).

45:5 great things: Baruch apparently had hopes for position, honor, and distinction. However, these dreams were lost through his association with Jeremiah. Yet Baruch would be spared the judgment that would befall the land, for the Lord would give him his life as a prize, or booty (21:9; 38:2).

Words of Judgement, Words of Hope

Jeremiah announces specific judgments that the Lord vowed to bring on nine nations (chs. 46—51). In reading these sobering words, it is important to remember two truths: (1) Gods wrath was not without cause. There was definite justification for God's wrath: every single one of the nations listed had turned away from their Creator to worship and serve false gods. Every one of them was guilty, and God's holy nature required judgment on their sin.

(2) Gods wrath was not without remedy. Even as the Lord had called Judah to repent of its sins throughout the years of Jeremiah's ministry, so He had called the nations to turn to Him and be saved. Tragically, they had refused God's gracious offer. Now they faced His wrath.

Yet even the Lord's judgment is redemptive in its purpose. He is willing that no one should perish (2 Pet. 3:9), and repentance is always available as an alternative to wrath, right to the end. There was always the possibility that the nations listed in Jer. 46—51, or even a handful of individuals in those nations, would fear the judgment of the Lord and turn toward Him.

46:1, 2 This verse introduces a collection of oracles against the nations. The text moves generally from the west—Egypt—to the east—Elam and Babylon. Scattered throughout the oracles are brief messages of the restoration of Israel and Judah. Internal evidence indicates a date prior to the fall of Jerusalem for most of the material. In v. 2, the first oracle is dated specifically to 605 B.C. In other oracles, the contents reflect events dating from Nebuchadnezzar's southern campaigns (604 B.C.) to his subsequent campaigns in 586 or even 582 B.C. The main message of these oracles is the sovereignty of God over all the nations of the earth. He rules over them, and they are responsible to Him for their sins against His Law and order in the cosmos. Those nations that do not adhere to ethical and moral standards of justice and righteousness will be judged severely. Those who do exercise righteous quality in leadership and rule will profit from His grace and beneficence.

46:3, 4 Buckler and shield are two different sizes of shields (1 Kin. 10:16, 17).

46:5, 6 The strong Egyptian army was overpowered suddenly by the mightier Babylonians. fear … all around: This expression was also the name given to Pashhur by Jeremiah in 20:3, 4, and to Jeremiah's persecutors in 20:10.

46:7–9 Egypt had been weak for three hundred years (1 Kin. 14:25), but was still known for producing and exporting chariots. Ethiopians, Libyans, and Lydians were apparently mercenaries under Necho.

46:10–12 The day of the Lord is described here as a day of vengeance in which Egypt is punished for the death of Josiah. The imagery of a devouring sword is also found in 2:30. Egypt's demise is pictured as a sacrificial feast. As there was no healing balm for sinful Judah, so now Egypt was mortally wounded, stumbling to its death.

46:13 This verse is a prose introduction to a poetic description of Nebuchadnezzar's attack on Egypt. After the battle at Carchemish, the Babylonian march through Palestine was resumed in 604 B.C. They attacked Ashkelon and then pursued the Egyptians.

46:14–17 Why are your valiant men swept away: The fall of the gods before God in judgment is a prominent theme in the oracles against the nations (v. 25). the LORD drove them: Babylon is depicted as the instrument of God's judgment.

46:18, 19 King … LORD of hosts: The term hosts can also be translated “armies.” God is the true and sovereign King over all the armies of heaven and earth. Tabor … Carmel: The mountains stand for the certainty of God’s kingship. Like Judah, Egypt would face God’s destructive judgment.

46:20–24 Egypt’s destroyer invaded from the north, the same direction from which Judah’s adversary attacked. fat bulls: Egypt’s well-paid mercenaries were frail before God and the Babylonians, who came like lumberjacks cutting down the forest and chopping the fleeing serpents, the Egyptians. Egypt’s demise is parallel to Israel’s; the virgin daughter had been violated and stood ashamed (2:26), soon to be taken captive by Babylon.

46:25–28 do not be dismayed: Israel would be preserved. These verses are like 30:10, 11 with only slight variation.

47:1–7 The setting of the oracle against the Philistines is problematic. From the description of the judgment, it seems clear that the agent is Babylon. The reference in v. 1 to an attack of Pharaoh on Gaza is problematic. Gaza may have been assaulted by Psamtik about 611/610 B.C., prior to his capture of Ashdod, or by Necho in 609 B.C. on his way to aid Assyria at Haran, the same campaign in which Josiah died at Megiddo. This would place the oracle in the reign of Jehoiakim, like the previous proclamation against Egypt. Nebuchadnezzar destroyed Ashkelon in 604 B.C., after which Philistia was no threat as an independent state. The text may refer to Necho's attack on Gaza about 601 B.C., before Nebuchadnezzar returned in reprisal attack against Judah.

47:1, 2 The metaphor of rising waters is found in Is. 8:7, 8; 28:17 in reference to the Assyrian army; here the foe is Babylon (1:13; 4:6; 6:1, 22; 25:9). The destructive overflowing of the river is more typical of the Euphrates in the north than of the Nile floods, which bring beneficial nutrients to the fertile valley.

47:3 Lacking courage is literally "from weakness of hands," describing the paralyzing terror felt by parents as they abandon their children in flight.

47:4, 5 Philistines and Phoenicians are associated through their origins among the sea peoples who came from the northern Mediterranean and Aegean islands to the coastlands of Palestine in the twelfth century B.C. Caphtor is identified with Crete. Tyre and Sidon were the largest Phoenician ports. Gaza and Ashkelon were the last of the Philistine strongholds to fall, along with Ashdod, which is not mentioned. Baldness … cut yourself: Shaving the head and self-inflicted wounds were mourning customs forbidden in Israel (16:6).

47:6, 7 The image of the sword of the LORD is often used to portray divine judgment (12:12; 46:10, 14, 16). quiet … Rest … be still: The judgment had long been withheld; the long-suffering of the Lord had reached its end.

48:1–47 This chapter is composed of several poetic sections broken by short messenger formulae: thus says the Lord (vv. 1, 8, 40) and says the Lord (vv. 12, 25, 30, 35, 44, 47). There are a number of parallels with Is. 15:16, 24, indicating a possible dependency by Jeremiah on thematic characterizations there. Sections of this poetic discourse are adaptations of older material. The unifying theme is the destruction and humiliation of Moab, a nation known for its great pride. The contents highlight the major cities and towns of the Moabite plateau, which extended along the eastern side of the Dead Sea from Heshbon and Mount Nebo southward toward the Wadi Zered. The location of several of the cities is unknown, though extensive archaeological surveys have been carried out. Contemporary records of Babylon's involvement in Moab are meager, though it is generally assumed that Moab submitted to Babylonian rule about 604 B.C. Moab sent mercenaries for Babylon into Judah during the rebellion of 598/597 B.C. (2 Kin. 24:2). In Zedekiah's rebellion of 588–586 B.C., Moab pondered the idea of joining Judah, but refrained.

48:1, 2 The name of the Moabite capital, Heshbon, means "stronghold." It was not especially appropriate, in that the city changed hands numerous times throughout its history, from the Amorites to the Israelites to the Moabites (Num. 21:26).

48:3–10 The juniper ekes out its stunted growth in the wilderness, hiding in crevasses of rock. As the apostate people of Judah trusted in the queen of heaven (44:17, 18), Moab trusted in its patron deity Chemosh, a god of fertility and storm. captivity: Taking a deity captive was a well-known Middle Eastern custom. The national statue of the patron deity was seized and it was believed that the captured god could no longer protect its people.

48:11–13 not been emptied from vessel to vessel: Though Moab was subject to Israel in the ninth century B.C., it had never experienced exile and had become complacent in its security. God would empty Moab's vessels, causing the Moabites to be taken captive. break the bottles: Moab's cities would be destroyed. Chemosh (v. 7), the great protector of Moab, would become powerless before God, as Bethel fell with Israel (Amos 3:14).

48:14–17 Jeremiah assured Moab that there is but one true King, Whose name is the LORD of hosts, the all-powerful "God of armies." Bemoan: A note of sarcasm is communicated. The nations around Moab, like Judah, who was attacked by Moab's mercenaries, were called upon to lament Moab's destruction.

48:18–20 Dibon was the capital from which King Mesha ruled (2 Kin. 3:4–27). The haughty Moab was shamed by the destruction of its mighty fortresses.

48:21–25 Mephaath was one of the Levitical cities (Josh. 21:37). Bozrah refers not to the capital of Edom, but to Bezer, one of the cities of refuge (Josh. 20:8). Kerioth is mentioned in Amos 2:2. Horn and arm are symbols of the power and strength that was broken.

48:26–29 Make him drunk: Judgment is portrayed in the form of drunkenness to the point of vomiting, the result of Moab's mockery of Israel (25:15–29). Pride refers to the self-indulging, self-honoring haughtiness by which one thinks of oneself as greater than others.

48:30–33 The scene in Moab turns to mourning and intense lamentation over the failure of the crops and vineyards. Kir Heres, also called Kir Haraseth (2 Kin. 3:25; Is. 16:11), may be a name for the capital city of Moab (Kir of Moab; Is. 15:1). The joy once heard echoing from the vineyards and winepresses had vanished before the horrifying sound of horses' hoofbeats and clashing weapons.

48:34 The waters of Nimrin empty into the Jordan opposite Jericho. A lament from Heshbon and Elealeh to Horonaim and Zoar would cover all the Moabite plateau from north to south, from the Dead Sea to the desert.

48:35–39 offers sacrifices … burns incense: Idolatry would end; the people could no longer worship Chemosh and other deities. head … beard … hands … loins: Every kind of lament would be used to mourn for Moab, as the proud Moab became a derision and a dismay like Judah.

48:40–44 The imagery is that of Babylon spreading its ravaging armies over Moab like an eagle spreading its wings (49:22; Deut. 32:11; Ezek. 17:7). exalted himself: Moab's chief sin was pride, considering itself greater than the God of Israel. Its pride would be turned to fear and terror, and then the nation would be taken captive.

48:45, 46 The last view of Moab is that of fire destroying her cities as she flees in terror. Chemosh has fallen to defeat.

48:47 Bring back means "restore the fortunes of." Moab would see its people restored to their homeland. Their crops and vineyards would once again be productive. Moab, Judah, and Israel returned home in 538 B.C., during the reign of Cyrus.

49:1–6 The setting of the oracle against Ammon is based on the historical conflict between Israel and Ammon, particularly over the territory of the tribe of Gad. The oracle probably dates to the period before the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C., but after the raids of Moab, Ammon, and others into Judah (2 Kin. 24:2).

49:1, 2 Milcom, the patron deity of the Ammonites, is pictured as taking possession of the land formerly belonging to the Gadites, a process that began in the days of the judges.

49:3 Heshbon (48:2) was at one time possessed by the Ammonites, but later lost to the Moabites. Ai is not the Israelite city of the same name. Rabbah was the capital city of the Ammonites. The captivity of the patron deity Milcom was tantamount to his defeat, visible in the exile of leaders and people, together with his statue, from their homeland.

49:4 Valleys … flowing valley may be a reference to the Jabbok valley on the northern border of Ammon.

49:5 no one will gather those who wander off: Those who fell by the wayside during the flight from Ammon would be abandoned.

49:6 The restoration of Ammon, as in the case of Judah, Israel, Egypt, and Moab, is alluded to briefly in stereotyped fashion.

49:7–22 The oracle against Edom is closely related to the Book of Obadiah and to portions of the oracle against Babylon (ch. 50). The territory of Edom extended from the Wadi Zered (modern Wadi al-Hasa) in the north to the Gulf of Aqaba in the south. The capital city was Bozrah, modern Buseira about twenty-five miles southeast of the Dead Sea. Strife between Israel and Edom dates to the conflict between Jacob and Esau. The oracle is based upon the events leading up to and following the Babylonian invasion of Judah, during which Edom took the opportunity to move into the Negeb region in southern Judah, eventually dominating the region south of Hebron by the end of Nebuchadnezzar’s reign.

49:7, 8 Edom was known in the Bible for its wisdom (Obad. 8). Teman was the name of a city or district of Edom in which the capital city Bozrah was located.

49:9–11 grape-gatherers: This imagery derives from 6:9, but there was no real remnant left in Edom. The nation had been totally ravaged and stripped bare, with only women and children left alive to work the land. These workers were invited to trust in God.

“cup”

(Heb. kos) (25:15; 49:12; Ps. 23:5; Is. 51:22) Strong’s #3563: The Hebrew word translated cup refers to a drinking goblet. In the OT prophetic books, the word is usually associated with imagery of God’s wrath, such as “the wine cup of fury” or “the cup of horror” (25:15; Ezek. 23:33). In other places the cup can have a positive significance: it indicates a close relationship with a powerful person. Moreover in both the OT and NT the cup can be symbolic of fellowship because of the cup’s association with togetherness. The cup is an important image in the NT, especially in the celebration of the LordSupper (1 Cor. 11:25–28).

49:12, 13 drink of the cup: The imagery of the cup of divine wrath is found in 25:15–29. Here it is particularly applied to Edom and more specifically to its capital city, Bozrah.

49:14–16 The imagery in these verses is that of the nations being mustered by God to besiege Edom. Edom would be reduced from a proud people of mighty mountain fortresses to one that was small among the nations.

49:17–19 an astonishment … hiss: Like Israel, Judah, Egypt, Moab, and Ammon, Edom would be destroyed and would become an object of derision. Like the lion that emerges from the thickets along the lower Jordan and seizes its prey, God would attack the Edomites through His appointed instrument.

49:20–22 The two things on which Edom most prided itself, its wisdom and its fortresses, would vanish before the judgment of the Lord. As the strongholds collapsed, the earth would quake; its tremors would be felt all the way to the Red Sea. The imagery of the broad wings of the eagle, representing the all-encompassing power of God and His agents of destruction, is also found in 48:40, 41.

49:23–27 The oracle against Damascus, the chief city of the Aramaeans, is brief probably due to the fact that its last period of strength was in the last half of the eighth century B.C., one hundred years before Jeremiah’s ministry. Apparently Damascus experienced a brief period of independence like Judah after the collapse of Assyria in 612–610 B.C., and before the incursion of Nebuchadnezzar in 604 B.C. In the days of the kings of Israel and Judah, Aramaean kings like Ben-hadad II and Hazael raided their villages. Amos (1:3–5) condemned their inhumane practices.

49:23–25 Hamath and Arpad were major towns located west and north of the capital of Damascus.

49:26, 27 The same themes occur here as in other oracles against the nations: fear and weakness like a woman in childbirth, war and destruction, and lamentation and shame. Ben-Hadad was the name (or title) of several earlier kings of Aram-Damascus (Amos 1:4). No restoration is envisioned here.

49:28–33 The oracle against the Arab tribes of Kedar and Hazor is introduced by the messenger formula, thus says the Lord and is composed of three short sayings.

49:28 The region of Kedar was the most important Arab tribal group in the biblical period. Kedar was in northern Arabia and was known for its sheepherding and merchant caravans (2:10; Is. 60:7; Ezek. 27:21). The phrase men of the East is associated with the Arameans, Midianites, Amalekites, and other nomadic desert tribes (Gen. 29:1; Judg. 7:12).

49:29 The various items listed in this verse are typically those of nomadic peoples. The panic-filled shout, fear is on every side, is common in Jeremiah's oracles (6:25; 20:10; 46:5; 49:5).

49:30–33 Nebuchadnezzar's destructive army would attack the tent villages of Kedar and Hazor. The oases would be left to the jackals for habitation (9:11; 10:22). The Bedouin peoples would be scattered afar, as if by the hot desert winds.

49:34–39 The final oracle of the collection is against Elam, dated to the accession year of Zedekiah, in the spring of 597 B.C. The capital city of Elam was Susa, about 250 miles east-southeast of Babylon.

49:34–36 break the bow: The Elamites were famous for their skilled archers (Is. 22:6), who became an important part of the Persian army under Cyrus. The expression four winds indicates the military might that the Lord musters against His enemies (Ezek. 37:9; Dan. 8:8).

49:37–39 I will set My throne: This expression depicts the establishment of the kingdom of the God of Israel, the great conquering King in the land of the Elamites (1:15; 43:10). Elam would experience the restorative power of God, as its people were returned and its fortunes restored (48:47; 49:6).

50:1—52:64 The last oracle is against the greatest nation of the day, Babylon of Nebuchadnezzar. The extended treatise is composed of numerous short poetic proclamations against the nation that on one hand was the servant of the Lord (25:9), and on the other hand was the archenemy of God's people. The previous chapters focused upon the role of Babylon as servant of the Lord in judgment on the nations. These two focus upon: (1) the imminent overthrow of Babylon and the defeat of her many gods, particularly Marduk, the patron god of the city and nation and (2) the restoration of the Jews to their homeland.

50:1 The Chaldeans, or Babylonians, were vassals of Assyria until the revolt of Nabopolassar, who gained control of Babylon in 626 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar, the son of Nabopolassar who succeeded his father to the throne in 605 B.C., was the strongest and longest-reigning Chaldean monarch. After Nebuchadnezzar died, the nation declined steadily. In 539 B.C. it was conquered by Cyrus, apparently with little effort.

50:2, 3 Bel was a title like Baal, meaning "Lord," for Merodach, another name for Babylon's patron deity Marduk. idols … images: The oracle begins with a defamation of the gods of Babylon. The term translated images means animal droppings. The Hebrew prophets are openly contemptuous of idols and speak of them with ridicule. out of the north: The invading nation is not defined, yet from historical records it is known that Cyrus attacked Babylon from the north after defeating the city of Sippar.

50:4, 5 Israel and Judah would be restored as they sought the Lord in mournful repentance, looking for help to return home. They would enter into a perpetual covenant with the Lord that they would not forget or reject (Ezek. 16:60).

50:6, 7 Shepherds refers to the national princes, priests, and prophets who led the people to sin against the Lord, their true source of hope and sustenance (23:1–4).

50:8–10 The train of thought turns to the Jews, who should flee from Babylon like rams of a flock.

50:11–13 Babylon's plunder would be its punishment for gloating over Judah's demise and the abuse of God's heritage. Great Babylon would be reduced to the least of the nations. Defamation, drought, dehabitation, desolation, and derision were Babylon's destiny (18:16; 19:8; 49:17).

50:14–16 against her all around: Assault forces would press hard on every side, as what had been the instrument of God became the object of His wrath.

50:17–20 The Lord had used Babylon to punish Assyria for deporting Israel; He would use another foe from the north to inflict punishment on Babylon. The result would be the restoration of Israel and Judah and the pardoning of their iniquities and sins, the very reason for their demise (5:25; 16:10, 18; 31:34; 33:8).

50:21–28 utterly destroy: The tables would be turned on Babylon, the soon-to-be-broken hammer and future heaps of ruins. The LORD God of hosts had launched His vengeful weapons upon the city through His anointed servant Cyrus (2 Chr. 36:22, 23; Is. 45:1).

50:29–34 The wise and righteous Ruler would plead the case of the oppressed children of Judah and obtain their redemption. A redeemer was one who secured the freedom of a kinsman, protecting family rights. Here God, the Redeemer of Israel (Is. 47:4), offers to obtain the legal freedom of His people from captivity.

50:35–46 The sword of God would overturn all elements of Babylon's greatness—its leaders, its weapons, and its wealth. A drought is against her waters: Babylon was built on both sides of the Euphrates, and the region of southern Mesopotamia was networked with irrigation canals. The Lord would carry out His judgment against Babylon as He had in the days of Elijah.

51:1–14 The oracle against Babylon continues amassing image after image of destruction, bringing to bear upon the mighty nation every form of judgment possible within the language. The message is occasionally broken by a message of hope for the exiles of Israel and Judah.

51:1–5 Though Israel and Judah had forsaken the lordship of God, He had not forsaken His sinful people.

51:6–10 The imagery of Babylon's cup of fury from 25:15–29 is reversed. Here Babylon's cup is broken by the Lord. balm: As in the case of Judah (8:22), decadent Babylon was beyond healing and had to be abandoned. The destruction of Babylon was the vindication of the justice of God. Jeremiah's prediction (25:12–14) would be realized: Israel would be made righteous through God's work.

51:11–14 vengeance: The Lord would avenge Babylon's fierce abuse of Israel and other conquered nations. The covetousness of Babylon is typified in the taking of temple treasures from Jerusalem (2 Kin. 25:13–17). locusts: The locust plague depicts the swarm of enemy soldiers pouring into the magnificent city.

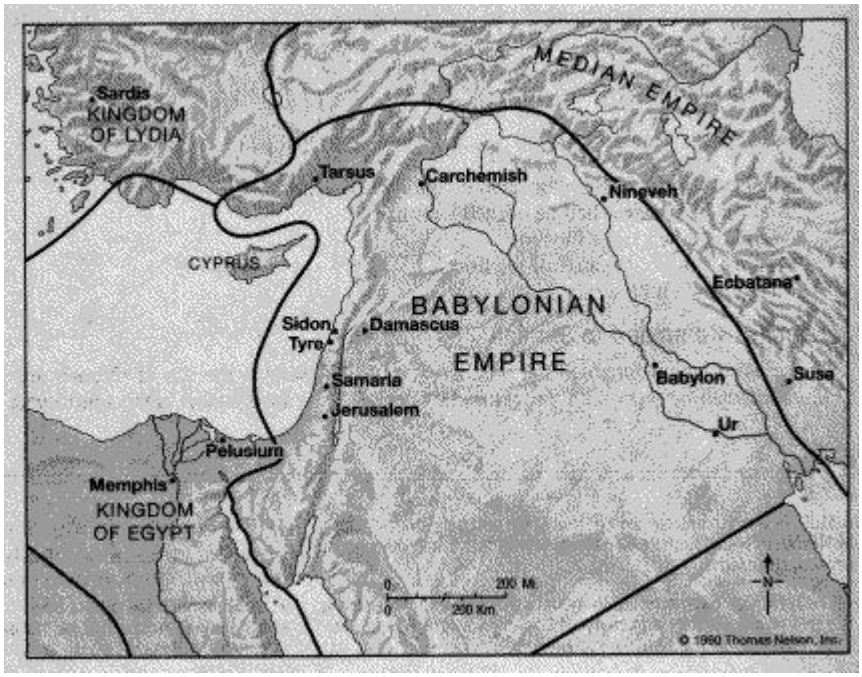
51:15–19 These verses are almost verbatim from 10:12–16. The text is inserted here to demonstrate the futility of Babylon's idols against the power of the Lord, the God of Israel.

51:20–26 Babylon had been God's battle-ax for judgment against the nations, and Judah in particular. I will repay: Babylon would experience God's battle-ax of punishment for the evil it inflicted on Jerusalem. The seemingly invincible mountain of Babylon would be crumbled by the power of God's outstretched arm.

51:27–32 Babylon's enemies from the north (50:3) are summoned by the trumpet to prepare for the assault on the heavily fortified city.

51:27, 28 Ararat, Minni, and Ashkenaz were mountain tribes from what is today eastern Turkey and Armenia. The Medes were from the Zagros mountain region in present-day central Iran.

51:29–32 The mighty men of Babylon have ceased fighting: The Nabonidus Chronicle, a text describing the fall of Babylon, reports that "Cyrus entered Babylon without a battle." By the time Cyrus reached Babylon, he had conquered all of Babylonia except for the capital city, cutting off roads and supply routes.



The (Medo-) Babylonian Empire (560 B.C.)

In 605 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar successfully concluded a two-year siege of Carchemish, and most of the Assyrian Empire rapidly became the Babylonian Empire. In 586 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar conquered all of Judah, besieging and destroying Jerusalem and the Jewish temple. At its zenith in 560 B.C., Babylon ruled the entire fertile crescent and Arabia as well, although Egypt regained its autonomy.

51:33–35 The harvest threshing floor depicts the punishment of Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar had become like a gluttonous warrior, devouring the nation of Judah and the temple and people of Jerusalem.

51:36–40 plead your case: The imagery here involves a legal proceeding. Babylon had been arraigned, indicted, and convicted. Here it is sentenced to punishment by the Lord. The lions of Babylon would be slaughtered like lambs.

51:41–48 This section continues the theme of the overthrow and denigration of the proud and mighty city of Babylon.

51:41–44 The primeval sea, conquered by Marduk according to the Babylonian creation myth, would overflow Babylon in the form of enemy nations. Bel is an honorary title for Marduk, the patron deity of Babylon. I will bring out … what he has swallowed: Nebuchadnezzar had swallowed up nations like a glutton (v. 34); those very same nations would be returned.

51:45–48 The release of Israel from captivity is foreseen. The people would be called upon to flee the city because of its impending destruction. In Jeremiah, the expression days are coming usually introduces a message of divine intervention into history. carved images: Babylon was known for its thousands of images of its numerous gods and goddesses. As the king claimed to conquer nations in the name of his patron deity, so the gods of the defeated would be punished along with their worshipers. The devastation of decadent Babylon would be no cause for mourning among the nations. Instead, the nations would sing joyfully of Babylon's fall.

51:49–58 The Hebrew term rendered plunderer provides a link from v. 48 to this section, in which emphasis is placed upon the plunder of the city known for its merciless plundering of others, particularly Judah and the temple of the Lord. Several themes recur here: the crushing of idols (v. 52; see v. 47; 50:2); tumultuous waters (v. 55; v. 42); broken bows (v. 56; 49:35); and drunkenness (v. 57; v. 7; 48:26).

51:51 The prophet expresses feelings of shame for himself and his people as he recalls how their sin was ultimately responsible for Nebuchadnezzar's destruction of the LORD'S house in 586 B.C.

51:59–64 The oracles against the nations are concluded by a symbolic act that was enacted after the deportation of the Jews. The scroll Jeremiah wrote probably had contained many of the individual oracles of chapters 50 and 51, or material from earlier chapters (25:12–14). Jeremiah instructed Seraiah, a brother of Baruch who was about to be taken captive to Babylon, to read a scroll within the walls of Babylon. (Babylon was proud of her great and numerous walls, built with the slave labor of her captives, which made the city almost impregnable. Today the city lies in ruins of stone, mudbrick, and rubble.) The scroll that Jeremiah gave to Seraiah contained a list of the various evils that would befall Babylon as a result of God's judgment. After reading the contents of the scroll, Seraiah was to tie a stone to it and cast it into the Euphrates, which bisected the city. Notably, it was by means of the river that Cyrus conquered the city in 538 B.C. The message of the symbolic act was that as the scroll and stone sank in the river, so would Babylon sink in the silt of the river and surrounding desert sands.

52:1–34 The closing chapter of the Book of Jeremiah is an appendix of historical material related to the fall of Jerusalem, the destruction of the temple of Lord, the subsequent deportation of leading citizens of Judah to Babylon, and an epilogue recounting the release of Jehoiachin from prison. The contents are based upon 2 Kings 24:18—25:30, excluding the portion in Kings concerning Gedaliah's brief governorship. The purpose of the chapter is to relate the fulfillment of many of the prophecies included in the previous chapters.

52:1–3 Zedekiah reigned as king of Judah from 598 to 586 B.C., until God finally cast him out of Jerusalem for doing evil in the sight of the LORD (23:1–4).

52:4–6 The siege of Jerusalem began on the tenth day of the tenth month (Tebeth)—probably in December 589 B.C. The siege of Jerusalem lasted over two years. In June through July 586 B.C., as food supplies were exhausted, the walls of Jerusalem were breached (39:2).

52:7–11 The attempted escape, capture, and ultimate fate of Zedekiah are also described in 39:1–10.

52:12–23 The destructions of Jerusalem, the royal palace and the temple of the Lord are described in 2 Kings 25:8–17. Jeremiah provides additional details.

52:13–16 The entire city of Jerusalem was burned, from the temple to the royal palace to the houses. The city walls were demolished. Leading citizens and some of the poor were deported under Nebuzaradan's command, leaving only a remnant of peasant farmers to work the fields, vineyards, and orchards.

52:17–23 Sacred implements and furniture from the temple of God were taken as booty to Babylon. Most of these items are described in 1 Kin. 7:15–51. The bronze bulls had been removed by Ahaz and presented to Tiglath-Pileser III (2 Kin. 16:10–18), but apparently had been returned or remade.

52:24–30 Certain persons were chosen for execution. Seraiah was the grandson of Hilkiah, the faithful priest under Josiah. Zephaniah is possibly the person of the same name in 29:25. Doorkeepers were key temple personnel. Leaders of Judah's forces were executed.

52:31–34 Jehoiachin was released from prison soon after Nebuchadnezzar died in 562 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar's son Evil-Merodach became king but reigned only two years (562–560 B.C.). lifted up the head: A Hebrew phrase expressing the kindness and good will that Evil-Merodach showed toward Jehoiachin in pardoning him. Jehoiachin was provided food and given a seat of honor in Babylon. This restoration was symbolic of the future restoration of Israel and Judah to their homeland.

The Book of Lamentations

———— THE BOOK OF LAMENTATIONS REVEALS THE broken heart of the prophet Jeremiah. In forceful poetry, Jeremiah expresses his grief over the national tragedy that had unfolded before his eyes: Jerusalem, God's city, had fallen to the Babylonians. Jeremiah's sorrow and tears were not for his own personal loss, however, but for the sinfulness of the Israelites. The people of Israel had chosen to reject God. Yet even in this time of suffering there was hope. The Lord would not discipline His people forever; He would eventually restore those who waited on Him.

The five chapters of Lamentations are five poems with ch. 3 as the midpoint or climax. Accordingly, the first two chapters build an "ascent," or crescendo, to the climax, the grand confession in 3:23, 24: "Great is Your faithfulness. The LORD is my portion." The last two chapters are a "descent," or decrescendo, from the pinnacle of ch. 3.

Chapters 1 and 5 provide summaries of the siege and fall of Jerusalem, while chs. 2 and 4 offer more detailed and explicit descriptions of the devastation. Chapter 3 moves from a mixture of lament and hope in vv. 5:1) and ends with "Turn us back to You, O LORD" (5:21). In this way, Jeremiah's lament moves from mourning to praise and then from praise to a prayer for restoration.

The poetry of the book enhances its purpose and structure. Chapters 1 through 4 are composed as acrostics of the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet. Each verse or group of verses begins with a word whose initial letter carries on the sequence of letters in the Hebrew alphabet. This would be similar to an English poem in which the first line begins with A; the second line begins with B, and so on. One purpose of this device was probably to aid in memorization of the passage. The acrostic also suggests that the writer has thought things through and is giving a complete account of the subject.

Like the Book of Job, the Book of Lamentations addresses human suffering. Unlike Job, Lamentations focuses on national suffering—specifically, the suffering of Judah. Along the way, the book tackles some of the toughest questions faced by God's people: How can God's love and justice be reconciled with our pain? If God is in control of history, how could a nation suffer so much so soon after it had been led by such godly leaders as King Josiah and those involved in that revival? Where was God during His people's unhappiest hour?

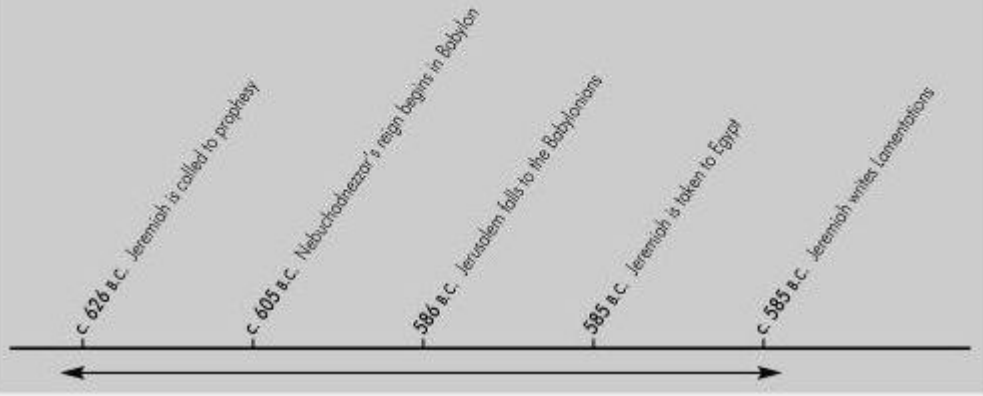
The Book of Lamentations offers some practical theological reflections on the purposes and results of suffering. Rather than explaining away pain, the book helps us face pain. By avoiding cheery cliches, the Book of Lamentations provides companionship for those who are suffering and plants seeds of hope for rebuilding after the suffering is over.

In fact, the anger of God is a sign that He cares. The Lord's anger is never capricious or unreasonable. His discipline is a sign that He has not abandoned us. Even in His display of anger, God is still full of mercy and grace. The beacon light in the midst of disintegration is found in 3:22–24. Come what may, God remains faithful. His faithfulness is the greatest comfort to those who suffer; His compassions are new every morning.

Though no author is named in the book, the prophet Jeremiah has been traditionally identified as the writer of Lamentations. In fact, some copies of the ancient Greek Septuagint translation begin the book with these words: "And it came to pass, after Israel had been carried captive, and Jerusalem became desolate, that Jeremiah sat weeping, and lamented this lamentation over Jerusalem." Crediting Lamentations to Jeremiah is based on the following considerations: (1) Jeremiah was known as a composer of laments (2 Chr. 35:25). (2) Jeremiah was the prophet who mourned, "Oh, that my head were waters, and my eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!" (Jer. 9:1). (3) In 3:1, the author seems to identify himself with Jeremiah when he says, "I am a man who has seen affliction by the rod of His wrath." (4) There are many linguistic similarities between Lamentations and Jeremiah.

IN TIME

The Time of Lamentations



Outline

I. Grief after the destruction of Jerusalem 1:1–22
II. Personal suffering after the destruction of Jerusalem 2:1–22
III. Hope in the face of adversity 3:1–66
IV. The pain of the destruction of Jerusalem 4:1–22
V. Remembering that God still reigns 5:1–22

Commentary

1:1–22 The first poem in Lamentations has four movements to it: (1) in its loneliness (vv. 1–7); (2) in its causes (vv. 8–11); (3) in its purposes (vv. 12–17); and, (4) in its confession (vv. 18–22).

1:1 How: This exclamatory word is used frequently in laments and funeral songs. It expresses astonishment, sorrow, and dismay (2:1; 4:1; Is. 1:21; 14:4; Jer. 9:19; 48:17; Ezek. 26:17). lonely: This is a stranded individual, one who is like a widow. Jerusalem is personified, or portrayed as a person (Is. 1:21). Beginning in v. 12, Jerusalem "speaks" of her own troubles in the first person. princess … slave: This is a terrible reversal of fortune.

(Heb. bakah) (1:2, 16; Job 30:31) Strong’s #1058: This verb describes the act of wailing, which expresses emotions ranging from grief to happiness. While the word is often associated with lamentation, the “bitter wailing” of ancient people who were mourning their dead (2 Sam. 1:12), it is also used with expressions of joy (Gen. 29:11). The ancients wept when saying farewell (Ruth 1:9), over impending doom (Jer. 9:1), to express their joy over the rebuilt temple (Ezra 3:12), and at the burial of an individual (Gen. 50:1). In Lamentations, Jeremiah weeps over the sins of the people, the sins that would eventually result in the destruction of Jerusalem (1:1, 16).

1:2 Among all her lovers (v. 19) describes Judah’s sin of turning away from God and toward the gods of Canaan (Jer. 3:1–6). Also, the sins of Judah often involved the sexual forms of pagan worship that characterized the Canaanite people.

1:3 The southern kingdom Judah is personified here as Jerusalem was in v. 1. captivity: The implications of v. 1 are made clear. The reference here is to the Babylonian captivity suffered by Judah following the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

1:4 When the temple was built, Zion was used to describe the hill on which the temple was located. Later the name came to stand for the whole city. mourn: The roads “mourned” because there would no longer be throngs of pilgrims traveling to Jerusalem to worship at the temple. her gates: The image of sad gates is also found in Ps. 24:7–10, which indicates that the gates would not always mourn. priests … virgins: These two words indicate people from all elements of the city; everyone in the city experienced bitterness.

1:5 the LORD has afflicted her: God punished Jerusalem because of the people’s transgressions. The suffering described in the Book of Lamentations was fully deserved (v. 1). Her children have gone into captivity: God had warned Israel in Lev. 26:41 that captivity in a foreign land would be the result of continued sinning (Deut. 32:23–27). The foreign nation was God’s instrument of punishment.

1:6 Daughter of Zion is an endearing term for Jerusalem that speaks of God’s extraordinary love for the city (Ps. 87:2). All her splendor has departed: Israel's glory was found in the presence of the Lord (Ps. 96:8). But that glory had been removed from the Most Holy Place (Ezek. 9:3; 10:19; 11:22).

1:7 In this verse the name Jerusalem is a comprehensive term that alludes to the "widowed" city of Jerusalem in v. 1; the nation "Judah" in v. 3; and the center of worship on "Mount Zion" in v. 4. The nation, the city, and the temple were ravaged by the invading Babylonian armies in 586 B.C. The emphasis is on Jerusalem's utter helplessness as her enemies ridiculed her miseries (v. 21). Her pleasant things refers to objects of value in the temple (v. 10), and perhaps objects in the people's homes as well (v. 11).

1:8 they have seen her nakedness: It was an extreme humiliation for a woman to be stripped of all her clothing in public. Such exposure was reserved for prostitutes (Ezek. 16:35–39; 23:29), which Judah had become in a spiritual sense (vv. 2, 8, 9).

The Peril of Ignoring Consequences

From time to time newspapers carry tragic stories of people who have fallen into serious trouble by failing to consider the consequences of their actions. Often they admit to the error of their ways with a statement such as, "I didn't think anyone would get hurt"; "I didn't know it was loaded"; "Things just got out of hand"; "I guess we didn't think it through."

The people of Judah failed to think through the consequences of their choices (Lam. 1:9). For generations they ignored the Law's warnings against idolatry, oppressing the poor, cheating in business, relying on foreign governments (especially Egypt) for security, and other sins of public life. They maintained a pretense of worshiping the Lord by keeping up temple rituals, but the reality was that they had turned their backs on God. The Lord sent numerous prophets to warn His people of impending disaster, but the Judeans routinely ignored them (2 Chr. 36:15–16). As a result, they were shocked when the Babylonians finally came and destroyed their way of life.

As you consider your own life, what consequences are you perhaps ignoring? Is there a relationship that needs healing, a problem that needs to be solved, a habit that needs to be broken or established, or a decision that needs to be made? Procrastination will only invite sudden disaster and ruin. Why not get started today on making changes—before it's too late?

1:9 Judah is pictured as a "dirty harlot" because of her involvement with the sins of Canaanite worship. In fact, Judah was so engaged in dishonorable behavior that she had lost her sense of decorum and would not clean her skirts. She did not consider her destiny despite Moses' warning, "Oh, that they were wise, that … they would consider their latter end!" (Deut. 32:29).

1:10 Since God's people had not preserved the sanctuary of their hearts from pollution, they had no reason to be amazed when their enemies desecrated the earthly sanctuary. As a rule, Gentiles were forbidden to enter the congregation of the Lord. (Ammon and Moab are mentioned specifically in Deut. 23:3, 4; the command was extended to all nations in Neh. 13:3; Ezek. 44:7, 9.) 1:11 They seek bread: Moses had predicted a famine in Deut. 28:17, 38–42. See, O LORD: The call for God to pay attention is very similar to those found in the Psalms of Lament (Ps. 142:4).

1:12 Passersby are asked rhetorically to look, listen, and compare Jerusalem's grief to any other grief experienced by mortals. God's fierce anger is put in the context of the day of the Lord (Joel 2:1–11; Zeph. 1:14–18).

1:13 Jerusalem's suffering is portrayed, using several metaphors: (1) fire from heaven, (2) a hunter's net spread to trap animals, (3) an animal yoke fastened about the head of a person (v. 14), and (4) the crushing of grapes in a winepress (v. 15). turned me back: The purpose of Jerusalem's suffering was to bring about a turning or repentance.

1:14 yoke of my transgressions: The idea here is sinful patterns of life becoming compulsive, burdening people like a yoke on a beast of burden. woven together by His hands … He made my strength fail: God imposed a yoke until all of Zion's strength failed. With no power of their own left, weary people are more likely to listen to God. Those whom I am not able to withstand refers to the Babylonians.

1:15 The virgin daughter of Judah: Jerusalem (Judah) was supposed to be the chaste bride of God. Instead she had become a polluted harlot because her people worshiped other gods than the God with whom they covenanted (vv. 2, 8, 9).

1:16 The people of Jerusalem wept because the fate Jeremiah had prophesied had come to pass. comforter … Is far from me: The real Comforter of Judah is God. But because of Judah's sin, God would not come to their assistance.

1:17 Spreads out her hands is a reference to prayer (2:19). an unclean thing: The Israelites were supposed to be God's holy people (Deut. 7:6). However, they had become worse than their pagan neighbors.

1:18 The LORD is righteous: Verses 5 and 17 establish that ultimately it was the Lord who permitted Jerusalem's collapse. Yet God remained just and right in what He did (Ex. 9:27; Ezra 9:15; Neh. 9:33; Jer. 12:1). virgins … young men: Pairs of opposites usually indicate totality in Hebrew ("priests … virgins" in v. 4); these particular groupings suggest the "best of the nation" (2:4, 21).

1:19 priests … elders: The people who should have been a help were themselves in trouble.

1:20 While the roads leading to Jerusalem “mourned” because there would be no more pilgrims traveling to the city (v. 4), the sword of Judah’s enemies mourned because there were no more Jews to kill.

1:21, 22 All my enemies: Those who previously had been friends of Judah (v. 2) became Judah’s enemies. Bring on the day: Several times the “day” of God’s wrath is mentioned in the Book of Lamentations (2:1, 21, 22). The term is used to refer not only to the time of Jerusalem’s fall in the past, but also to a future day when God would rectify all of the wrongs that the nations had committed against Israel and God.

2:1–22 The second poem of the book has four movements to it: (1) because it comes from the Lord (vv. 1–10); (2) because it affects God's messenger (vv. 11–13); (3) because it provokes such personal responses (vv. 14–19); and, (4) because it makes its complaint to the Lord (vv. 20–22).

2:1, 2 His anger is a firm expression of God's displeasure with wickedness and sin. Yet God's anger never shuts us off from His compassion (Ps. 77:9). The beauty of Israel was found in its temple (Is. 64:11) and its ark of the covenant (1 Sam. 4:21, 22; Ps. 78:60, 61). In 1 Chr. 28:2 God's footstool is identified with the ark of the covenant. Occasionally God was pictured as enthroned and seated between the cherubim that were over the ark (1 Sam. 4:4; 2 Sam. 6:2; Pss. 80:1; 99:1, 5; 132:7). This passage says that God, in His wrath, had abandoned His footstool.

2:3 The horn was a symbol of strength and power (1 Sam. 2:1; Pss. 75:5; 92:10; 148:14; Jer. 48:25). drawn back His right hand: Usually the right hand of God is understood as the instrument of help for God's people stretched out against their enemies (Ex. 15:6; Ps. 20:6). Here God's hand is withdrawn from the enemies, leaving the people of God at their mercy.

2:4 like an enemy: The Lord did not simply relax His protection of Judah (v. 3). He purposely worked against His people with His right hand. All who were pleasing to His eye refers to virgins and young men—the pride of the nation (1:18).

IN CONTEXT

How Far Will God Go?

The destruction of Jerusalem revealed an astonishing fact about God: He will go to great lengths to draw His people back to Himself. The people of Judah strayed far from the Lord. It was not that they were irreligious. On the contrary, they were pious and devout. For the most part they maintained the religious rituals detailed in the Law, gathering in the temple week after week to offer sacrifices and observe the Sabbath. But during the rest of the week, they ignored the Law. They forgot what Jesus later called the "weightier matters" of the Law—justice, mercy, and faith (Matt. 23:23; compare Mic. 6:8).

In essence, the people confused means with ends. They forgot that the sacrificial system, the Sabbath, the temple, and even the Law were all merely means to a far more important end—the end of knowing and serving God (Jer. 22:15, 16). So eventually God took these means away (Lam. 2:5–9), important and valuable as they were: • God destroyed Jerusalem.

• God pulled down the temple and its furnishings.
• God did away with the religious rituals.
• God removed the king and the high priest.
• God allowed the written Law itself to be destroyed.
• God stopped giving visions to the prophets.

The removal of these things must have been unthinkable to the ancient Israelites. But God took them away in order to regain His people's attention and affection.

God's people today must also beware of confusing means with ends. Religious activities and resources have value, but they are not what life is all about. God Himself is what matters, and He will go to whatever length is necessary to help us remember that.

2:5 swallowed up: Sheol, or death, is sometimes portrayed as "swallowing up" people (Prov. 1:12; 27:20; 30:16); here God is described as doing the swallowing (v. 2).

2:6, 7 Tabernacle means "booth" or "hut," a structure found in a garden. The point seems to be that the glorious temple of God had become similar to the dilapidated house of David (Amos 9:11). The temple of God had become a booth of branches similar to those used for the Feast of Booths (Succoth). altar … sanctuary … walls … house: Each of these terms refers to the holy temple (v. 6).

2:8 Four weeks after the capture of Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar had destroyed the temple, the palace, the homes of the people, and the city wall (2 Kin. 25:9, 10; Jer. 52:13, 14).

2:9 The Law is no more: These words do not suggest the end of the Law, but rather the ceasing of the work of the Law in the lives of the people for their blessing (Deut. 6:1–3). her prophets find no vision: Divinely appointed instruction ceased for both the nation and the individual. This is not to say that the Law or prophecy were no longer available. God spoke to Jeremiah ten days after the prophet requested a word from God (Jer. 42:4–7); furthermore Ezekiel and Daniel prophesied during the 70 years of the Exile.

2:10 Throwing dust on the head (Job 16:15; Is. 29:4; Mic. 1:10) was a common sign of mourning in Israel and in other countries of the ancient world. virgins of Jerusalem: Their sadness was increased by the knowledge that this was not a time for marriage and family. Even though their lives had been spared, they had lost their futures.

2:11 My eyes fail with tears: This is the response of the author Jeremiah who suffered with the afflicted (1:2). Bile is literally “liver,” a symbol of deep emotion.

2:12 Grain and wine are used here merely as a synonym for food.

2:13 How shall I console you: Jeremiah had no words to help the grieving women of Jerusalem as they looked helplessly on their dying babies.

2:14 false and deceptive visions: False prophets spewed forth their “utterly valueless” lies.

2:15, 16 Shake their heads was a common expression of derision (Pss. 22:7; 109:25; Jer. 18:16; see also 1 Kin. 9:8; Job 27:23; Jer. 19:8; 49:17; 50:13; Ezek. 27:36; Zeph. 2:15). Losing face in the ancient Middle East was a terrible evil. In the Psalms (Pss. 48:2; 50:2), Jerusalem was the joy of the whole earth, the source of spiritual blessings for all the nations of the earth (Gen. 12:3). Now Jerusalem was profaned (v. 2) and unclean (1:17).

2:17 The LORD has done what He purposed: God had promised Moses that He would judge sin (Deut. 28:15, 16). The destruction of Jerusalem was a fulfillment of that promise. Jeremiah used the same language to affirm that God had planned to deal with Babylon as well (Jer. 51:12).

2:18, 19 The wall of the people's hearts was more impenetrable than the wall of the city of Jerusalem (2:7, 8).

2:20 Should the women eat their offspring: So desperate were the scenes of starvation in Jerusalem that women actually fought over whose deceased child would be eaten next (4:10). priest and prophet: Many godly people in Jerusalem perished.

2:21 Young and old: The punishment of Jerusalem affected everyone. virgins … young men: The punishment of Jerusalem extended even to the "pride of the city" (1:18; 2:4).

2:22 The terrors that surround me: The people mocked Jeremiah with the slogan "terror on every side," for in the people's eyes he saw catastrophe everywhere.

3:1–66 The third (and climactic) poem in Lamentations has three parts to it: (1) the Lord's love and mercy to us are unending (vv. 1–24); (2) the Lord's goodness and control of all our lives are reassuring (vv. 25–39); and, (3) the Lord's forgiveness and answers to our prayers are encouraging (vv. 40–66).

3:1 I am the man: Jeremiah's personal testimony paralleled the experience of the city of Jerusalem as a whole (2:11). The rod of His wrath here refers to the Babylonians as instruments of God's judgment (2 Sam. 7:14; Job 9:34; 21:9; Ps. 89:32; Prov. 22:8). In Is. 10:5, Assyria is referred to as "the rod of (God's) anger."

3:2, 3 The imagery of darkness in this verse represents adversity and God's judgment (Job 12:25; Is. 9:2; Amos 5:18).

3:4, 5 He has aged my flesh: This imagery suggests the ebbing and wasting away of Jeremiah's life and that of the nation.

3:6, 7 like the dead of long ago: So hopeless did the situation seem that he felt like he had died long ago. Dark places may imply the grip of death itself (Ps. 88:6, where the same Hebrew word is used in parallel to the word pit).

3:8 He shuts out my prayer: On occasion, God had forbidden Jeremiah to pray for the deliverance of Judah (Jer. 11:14; 14:11).

3:9 He has blocked my ways with hewn stone: A common practice of the Assyrians was to wall up prisoners in extremely confined places and leave them to die.

3:10, 11 Jeremiah compared God to a bear or lion waiting to ambush (Hos. 13:8; Amos 5:19). God had permitted Judah to be attacked and mangled.

3:12, 13 He has bent His bow: This verse echoes Job 16:12, 13, in which Job compares God to an archer who makes human beings His target (2:4).

3:14 I have become the ridicule of all my people: Jeremiah was made the butt of scoffing and mockery (Jer. 20:7).

3:15 Wormwood was a bitter herb used to flavor some drinks.

3:16, 17 He has also broken my teeth with gravel: The people had sensed that they were so associated with dust and sackcloth—symbols of mourning—that it was as though they fed on dirt. The dust became gravel that broke the people's teeth. The people were also covered with ashes, another symbol of mourning (Jer. 6:26).

3:18 My strength and my hope have perished from the Lord: All of vv. 1–18 could be summed up by the impression that everything seemed to be lost. There was nothing but mourning, anger, and disappointment.

3:19, 20 Remember: Jeremiah attempted to change his mood by recalling his past experiences. However, what he remembered only made him feel worse.

3:21 This I recall to my mind: Jeremiah's remembrance of God's faithfulness brought about a change in the prophet's emotions. As long as we contemplate our troubles, the more convinced we will become of our isolation, our hopelessness, our inability to extricate ourselves from the present trouble. But when we focus on the Lord, we are able finally to rise above, rather than to suffer under, our troubles.

3:22 This verse seems to contradict all that had been written up to this point (2:1–5). Yet the fact that there was a prophet left to write these words and a remnant left to read them show that not every person in Jerusalem had been consumed. The fact that there was a remnant at all was due to the mercies and compassions of God. Even in His wrath (2:1–4), God remembers to be merciful.

3:23 new every morning: Every day presents us with a new opportunity to discover and experience more of God's love. Even in the midst of terrible sorrow, Jeremiah looked for signs of mercy. Great is Your faithfulness: Here is the heart of the Book of Lamentations. The comforting, compassionate character of God dominates the wreckage of every other institution and office. God remains "full of grace and truth" in every situation (Ex. 34:6, 7; John 1:14).

3:24 The LORD is my portion: This expression is based on Num. 18:20, in which Aaron was denied an inheritance in the land but was told instead that the Lord Himself was his portion and inheritance. The same idea is also found in Pss. 16:5; 73:26; 119:57; 142:5. I hope in Him: Hope is not a wishful thought, but a confident expectation in Lord. The Hebrew verb rendered hope suggests the idea of a "waiting attitude" (v. 21).

God's Unfailing Mercy—Our Only Hope

What has been the deepest, darkest experience in your life, the time when you felt the worst emotions, perhaps to the point of utter despair? For Jeremiah and his contemporaries in Judah, it was the destruction of Jerusalem. The death of the city was absolutely crushing. The Israelites' magnificent temple was reduced to ashes, the city walls were pulled down, the main part of the populace had been either killed or deported, and only starving elders, women, and children remained (Lam. 2:10–12).

Only one truth kept hope alive—the knowledge of the mercies of the Lord (3:22–24). God's mercy (Hebrew chesed; see Deut. 7:9) involved His undying love and loyalty toward His people. Having committed Himself to Israel through His covenant with them, the Lord could be expected to follow through on that commitment. He might discipline His wayward people, allow them to be ravaged by their enemies, and even let their temple and the Law be destroyed (Lam. 2:9), but He would never ultimately forsake His people.

Neither will God forsake His spiritual children today. His mercy and grace have been extended to those who are in Christ Jesus (Rom. 8:1), and nothing can separate us from His love (8:31–39). As a result, we can have hope (5:1–5; 1 Pet. 1:3–5), even in the midst of the gloomiest circumstances (2 Cor. 1:8–11).

3:25 those who wait: The idea here is the acceptance of God's will and His timing (Ps. 40:1; Is. 40:31). The Hebrew word for hope here translates another verb meaning "to hope," "to wait" than the one in v. 24 (Ps. 40:1; Is. 40:31).

3:26 good: Not only is God good to those who wait and hope on Him (v. 25), but it was also good for the people. hope and wait quietly: A quiet confidence in the salvation of the LORD is always in order. Verses 22–26 focus on the renewal of hope in the midst of terrible distress.

3:27, 28 Youth here refers not to age, but the sense of still-unbroken strength, as opposed to diminished vitality.

3:29 Put his mouth in the dust is a figure of speech for conquest. The phrase pictures a captive lying face down with the conqueror's foot on his back. Hope refers to the confident expectation that the Lord will deliver (v. 26).

3:30 give his cheek: Submission to the Babylonian oppressors is advised; the troubles will not last forever.

3:31, 32 The promises that God made to the patriarchs (Gen. 12:1–3; 15:13–21; 22:15–18) were not cast off, but were still in force. The wickedness of God's people delayed but could not frustrate the complete fulfillment of His promises.

3:33 He does not afflict willingly: It is not God's purpose to bring trouble to humankind (Is. 28:21). Yet one may ask a question: What about the evil that comes from the malice of individuals and not from God? It is this question that the next two triads answer, vv. 34–36 and 37–39. There is no wrong done on earth that falls outside the control of God.

3:34–36 before the face of the Most High: God is offended when a person deprives another human being of his or her rights. God is omniscient and notices everything.

3:37–42 These verses present a plan for repentance and renewal. turn back: Repentance in the OT prophets is often expressed by the verb meaning "to turn" (5:21; Jer. 3:1). lift our hearts and hands: Lifting hands was a common posture in prayer (2:19).

3:43–46 So long as sin festered, God's wrath was a cloud (2:1) or veil through which no prayer could penetrate—including the prayers of the people (Jer. 14:12) and the prayers of Jeremiah (Jer. 7:16; 11:14; 14:11).

3:47, 48 Desolation and destruction may be rephrased as "utter devastation."

3:49–51 The imagery of weeping continues from v. 48 (1:2; 2:11). Daughters of my city refers to the people of Jerusalem.

3:52–54 silenced my life in the pit: Jeremiah speaks not only of his own experience of being cast into a pit (Jer. 38:4–6), but also of his pain and grief over the wretched condition of his fellow countrymen. The pit is a metaphor for the grave or extreme danger (Pss. 28:1; 30:3; 40:2). The waters is another danger symbol (Ps. 69:2).

3:55–57 The Lord's name is the term by which He delights to reveal His mercies to His people (Ex. 3:14, 15).

3:58–60 pleaded the case: Jeremiah used the terms of God's formal accusation (Jer. 2:1–3:5); however, here the words are used for the people rather than against them. You have redeemed my life: Here is a hint of the light of the NT gospel in the dark pages of the Book of Lamentations. The only way that God would be able to plead the case of His people was if He Himself paid for—or redeemed them from—their sinfulness.

3:61–63 Jeremiah here turns to the enemies who treated God's people so poorly during their weakened state (1:21).

3:64–66 Repay them, O LORD: The request for divine vindication is an expression of a longing for God's righteousness and the success of His kingdom and His truth.

4:1–22 The fourth poem of Lamentations has three movements to it: (1) in its costs (vv. 1–11); (2) in its causes (vv. 12–20); and, (3) in its conclusion (vv. 21, 22).

4:1, 2 The Babylonian army looted the temple and overturned all its huge stones. precious sons: The people of Jerusalem were of more value than the temple. Elsewhere these people are referred to as "My son, My firstborn" (Ex. 4:22) and "a special treasure to Me … a kingdom of priests and a holy nation" (Ex. 19:5, 6). The bodies of the brave defenders of Jerusalem were thrown out like broken pieces of clay pots.

4:3 Jackals were the dogs of the desert, disreputable beasts. However, even these animals cared for their young. Ostriches, on the other hand, seem to care little for their young.

4:4 The tongue of the infant: The theme of thirsting and starving children is revisited (2:11–13).

4:5, 6 People who formerly could have eaten any delicacies they wanted groveled in refuse heaps during the terrible days of the Babylonian siege of Jerusalem.

4:7, 8 Nazirites were men and women who specifically committed themselves to God for periods of special devotion (Num. 6:1–21). Like sapphire … soot: The siege of Jerusalem was so terrible that no one was exempt, not even the truly godly people like the Nazirites.

4:9 Dying early in the siege was perhaps better than living through all of its horrors.

4:10, 11 This verse describes the horrible effects of the long siege that were alluded to in 2:20. The women who were forced to eat their own children began as compassionate women. cooked their own children: This unimaginable horror could only have occurred in the most inhumane conditions of human suffering.

4:12 Would not have believed: Jerusalem had been entered by conquerors before, but none had wrecked the havoc Babylon did. This was something so horrible that neighboring kings would gasp in wonder.

4:13, 14 The same people who should have been agents of righteousness became agents of sin (Jer. 8:10; 14:18).

4:15, 16 Wherever the wicked wandered, they were treated as lepers, people who were not welcome in any place. the LORD scattered them: The priests and prophets were separated from the face of the LORD because they had helped cause the people of Judah to stumble.

4:17–19 a nation that could not save us: After the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C., the survivors in Judah turned to Pharaoh Hophra of Egypt to deliver them, thereby breaking covenant with Nebuchadnezzar and the specific word of God (Jer. 42—44; Ezek. 29:16).

4:20 The heir to the Davidic line was "the breath of life" to the nation. But King Zedekiah was captured while trying to escape, put in chains, blinded after watching his sons massacred, and marched off to Babylon to die.

Feeling Wicked Satisfaction!

Do you celebrate the misfortunes of your enemies, especially when you feel that they are only getting their "just deserts"? It's a natural human tendency to gloat over the downfall of the high and mighty. But is that an attitude that God desires?

The people of Edom, Judah's neighbor to the south, were delighted to hear the news of Jerusalem's fall (Lam. 4:21; compare Ps. 137:7). But God rebuked the Edomites for their derisive attitude. His exhortation to "rejoice and be glad" (Lam. 4:21) was spoken ironically. In effect, the Lord was saying, "Enjoy your gloating while it lasts"—because it won't last for long. Soon it will be Edom's turn for judgment (compare Jer. 49:17, 18).

Scripture never encourages God's people to be happy when others suffer, even if they deserve to suffer. The love that God calls us to "does not rejoice in iniquity, but rejoices in the truth" (1 Cor. 13:6). Instead of gloating over the misery of our enemies, we should pray that somehow their circumstances will turn them toward the Lord and away from evil (Rom. 12:14–21).

4:21, 22 It is possible that the phrase daughter of Edom is a sarcastic, judgmental phrase. Edom may have thought so highly of herself (Obad. 3) that she believed she could assume the place of privilege her father Esau had lost, once Judah was destroyed.

5:1–22 The fifth poem (and last) in Lamentations has four movements to it: (1) our condition (vv. 1–9); (2) our individual suffering (vv. 10–14); (3) our feelings (vv. 15–18); and, (4) our questions (vv. 19–22).

5:2, 3 The Promised Land had been a gift from the Lord to Abraham. This inheritance was a kind of "down payment" on the future reign of God that would include the restoration of His people to that land. God demonstrated that He owned all nations and that Israel was to be His instrument for blessing all the nations on the earth. Yet in their present condition, the people of Israel seemed to be the most helpless of all peoples.

5:4–7 The survivors of the Babylonian siege were reduced to servitude, caught between the Egyptians and the Assyrians (4:17–19).

5:8, 9 The small harvests that were obtained from the land after the destruction of Jerusalem were vulnerable to nomads from the desert who occasionally took the lives of the people of Judah as well.

5:10 Our skin is hot: Disease would have been rampant during the siege.

5:11–13 The suffering of Jerusalem left no one unscathed—women, princes, elders, and young men.

5:14 gate … music: Ordinary events and pleasures were no longer appropriate or even possible for the people of Jerusalem.

5:15 joy … dance: This verse illustrates Eccl. 3:4. This was a time to weep and mourn, not to laugh and dance.

5:16 The crown has fallen from our head expresses the loss of Judah's position of honor.

5:17 our heart is faint … our eyes grow dim: The normal zest for life was gone. Death would be better than a horrible existence during the siege of Jerusalem.

5:18 foxes: The idea of wild animals roaming the holy city where the people of God once came in glad worship was the final indignity.

5:19, 20 You, O LORD, remain forever: God's eternal rule and reign are a hope and support during the bleakest moments of suffering and despair (Pss. 80:1, 2; 89:3, 4; 103:19).

(Heb. chadash) (5:21; 2 Chr. 24:4; Ps. 103:5) Strong’s #2318: As a verb, the term can mean “to renew” (Ps. 51:10) or “to repair” (Is. 61:4). As an adjective, the word identifies something new in contrast to something old (such as the “old harvest” versus the “new harvest”; see Lev. 26:10), or something different when compared to the status quo (such as “a new spirit”; Ezek. 11:19; 18:31). The Bible teaches that God alone is the One who makes things new, whether a new song in the heart of the faithful (Ps. 40:3), a new phase in His plan of redemption (Is. 42:9; 43:19), a new name (Is. 62:2), or a new heaven and earth (Is. 65:17).

5:21 The one word turn (1:13; 3:40) can summarize God’s message to His rebellious people. In one of Jeremiah’s earlier messages, he had exhorted the people to turn to God no less than seven times (Jer. 3:1, 7, 12, 14, 22; 4:1).

5:21, 22 Unless You have utterly rejected us: What is stated as a possibility actually emphasizes that the occurrence is completely out of the question: The Lord cannot reject His own people forever. The same literary technique is found in Jer. 14:19.

The Book of Ezekiel

THE PROPHET EZEKIEL HAD THE THANKLESS JOB of proclaiming God's message on the crowded and hostile streets of Babylon. At the same time that Jeremiah was warning the citizens of Jerusalem about the coming destruction of that holy city, Ezekiel was preaching the same message to the exiles in Babylon. Though these exiles were hundreds of miles away from the promised land and the temple, God would not leave them in the dark. Instead He sent Ezekiel to warn, exhort, and comfort the weary exiles.

Unlike most biblical prophetic books, Ezekiel gives considerable attention to chronology and exact dates throughout his book. No other prophet provides so many dates (thirteen). By utilizing the data from archaeology and the most recent research into the calendar systems of the ancient Middle East, a precise dating of many events in Ezekiel is possible.

The key to dating the opening chronological notice and the other specific dates in Ezekiel is the reference in 1:2 to the "fifth year of King Jehoiachin's captivity." In 2 Kin. 24:12, this deportation is equated with the "eighth year of (Nebuchadnezzar's) reign" or 597 B.C. Ezekiel began prophesying in 593 B.C. calling attention to the Babylonian captivity of Judah. He ended in 571 B.C. with a message on God's coming judgment upon Egypt at the hand of the same Babylonian monarch. Ezekiel prophesied during four different periods: 593–588 B.C. (1:1—25:17); 587–585 B.C. (26:1—29:16; 30:20—39:29); 573 B.C. (40:1—48:35); and 571 B.C. (29:17—30:19). In all, Ezekiel prophesied from 593 to 571 B.C., a period of twenty-two years surrounding the climactic fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

During Ezekiel's life and ministry, Israel (the northern kingdom) was corrupt politically and spiritually. Their idolatry led to captivity by Assyria in 722 B.C. The leadership of Judah (the southern kingdom) at that time was righteous; but eventually they too, though experiencing brief revivals at times, fell into the idolatry of the neighboring nations. The people refused to heed the prophets' reminders about the curses and blessings promised by God in the Mosaic covenant. Ezekiel prophesied that there would come catastrophe and captivity for Judah and Jerusalem. Yet he also had a message from God concerning eventual restoration and renewal, based on God's faithfulness to the promises of all the covenants made with His people since the Abrahamic covenant.

In speaking to his fellow exiles in Babylon, Ezekiel experienced and then employed visions (chs. 1—3; 8—11; 37; 40—48). These visions are similar in structure to "dream visions" known from Mesopotamian literature of the seventh and sixth centuries B.C. These texts have two main sections: (1) an introduction to the setting and general situation, including time, place, circumstances, and the person involved; and, (2) a description of the vision. In chs. 37; 40—48, Ezekiel uses such a format to introduce apocalyptic visions—revelations that symbolically describe the end times. Living in Babylon, both Ezekiel and his audience were familiar with this type of literature.

Elsewhere, Ezekiel employs themes and illustrations from the religious life and literature of the societies whose judgment he predicts. Typically the nations under God's judgment were those that had mistreated Israel or had led them into idol worship. The exiles and those Israelites still living in Judah knew the religious behavior and beliefs of their neighbors and would not be puzzled by the prophet's language. In addition to visions and religious themes, Ezekiel uses many literary techniques to communicate God's message to the exiles: both prose and poetry, parables and proverbs, lamentations and dirges, allegories and puns.

Ezekiel ministered in Babylon, at Tel Abib near the Chebar River. This is in the southeastern section of modern Iraq, northwest of the Persian Gulf. The Babylonians settled the Jewish exiles in this region to colonize them. Ezekiel's ministry was primarily to those Jews deported from Judah by the Babylonians and any Israelites that remained in exile from previous deportations by the Assyrians. Still his messages had great instructional and practical significance for the Hebrews remaining in Israel and for the surrounding pagan nations, whose future he foretold. Though Ezekiel was transported in visions to Jerusalem (chs. 8; 11), those revelations were always for the benefit of him and those to whom he was speaking in exile.

Ezekiel's oracles of national calamity include warnings of disease, death, destruction, and deportation. Yet because of God's unconditional promises and through the people's repentance, God's spiritual and material blessings would return to the people. Ezekiel's purpose was to remind God’s people about their spiritual unfaithfulness (ch. 16) and about God’s faithfulness to His own promises. Ezekiel showed the people how judgment was a natural outcome of a holy God’s wrath against sin. It was also a loving God’s means of disciplining His people: to correct their beliefs, redirect their behavior, and restore intimate fellowship between Himself and them. Thus Ezekiel preached to the exiles the imminence of God’s judgment and the need for individual and national repentance.

The Book of Ezekiel stresses the ultimate aim of God’s charity and chastisement: that “they shall know that I am the LORD.” This refrain is repeated 65 times in the book and emphasizes that the purpose of God’s actions is always to bring about the spiritual renewal of all people. Ezekiel teaches both individual and corporate responsibility for sin before God (chs. 18; 23). While themes of idolatry, social injustice, public and private immorality, imminent judgment, and future blessings of restoration and redemption are not unique to Ezekiel, his prophecies relate these themes to the centrality of the temple and the influence of the sacrificial system in the life of Israel. Past defilement and disobedience by the priests and people had led to the present dispersion and would lead to further judgment (chs. 4—32). The people’s behavior was intrinsically connected to how they approached their God in worship. Insincere worship would led to immoral behavior and judgment; proper worship of the living God would led to moral behavior and blessings. Yet in the end, Ezekiel concludes with the comforting news that a day would come when God’s rule and practical righteousness would return with a new temple and city and a renewed land and nation (chs. 33—48).

Ezekiel received and reported revelations from the living God as an exile in Babylon during 593–571 B.C. All that is known about this solitary prophet comes from his written prophecy, and no compelling data exist for the acceptance of any author other than the one named in the book itself: Ezekiel, son of Buzi (a priest), who was taken captive with Jehoiachin and other Hebrews in 597 B.C.

Since he was from a priestly family, Ezekiel was a priest as well as a prophet. Therefore he was well acquainted with the Levitical laws and rituals as well as the temple and its regulations. This becomes evident when he writes about his apocalyptic vision of the future messianic temple. Furthermore, he had a detailed knowledge of the Mosaic covenant, including the ethical, moral, and spiritual requirements of God’s revelation and the inevitable results of obedience or disobedience to God's law. Though his exiled audience was cut off from the temple, the priesthood, and the related ceremonies and feasts, the prophet Ezekiel informed the exiles not only about these details, but also about the importance of obeying God's Law and seeking after Him.

The Book of Ezekiel reveals that the prophet was married (24:15–18) and had a house (3:24; 8:1). Overall, he enjoyed a large measure of freedom in captivity. The Babylonians had not captured the Jews in order to make them slaves in Babylon; instead they wanted to displace the population of Israel, especially its leadership and nobility, and settle their own citizens and other foreigners in the land. As for his personality and abilities, Ezekiel appears to have been articulate, intelligent, and dramatic. He was a person that could withstand great opposition in order to obey the demands God placed on his life.

Ezekiel's Obedience

Ezekiel resembles many of the other prophets of the Old Testament, for like them, he seemed strange to his neighbors and friends. It is one thing to prophesy about impending judgment and warn people to repent; it is quite another to lie on your side for 390 days to illustrate a point. But Ezekiel did not worry about how he looked to others, for he owed his obedience to God. So if God told him to do something he did it.

Some of Ezekiel's actions may have seemed peculiar, such as imprisoning himself in his own house. Others, like lying on his left side for 390 days and his right side for 40 days, may have appeared almost comical. Some, such as not mourning his own wife's death, must have appeared callous, even abhorrent according to the rituals and traditions of his day. But God had a purpose in having Ezekiel perform each of these acts. A point was illustrated and a lesson was taught. Some may have laughed at the prophet, and many ignored him—to their own peril.

Modern believers can relate to Ezekiel's being out of step with his contemporaries. Obedience to the will of God can be difficult in any generation. It is a struggle to live the way God wants you to live while the rest of society continues in its sinful ways. While our actions may not be as dramatic as Ezekiel's, their consequences can be important, both as examples to others, and as indications of our obedience to God.

1:1—3:27 God's call and commission of Ezekiel to a prophetic ministry is set forth in three stages: (1) a revelation of God's character through a supernatural, symbolic vision (1:1–28); (2) a description of the chosen audience concluding the vision (2:1—3:15); and, (3) an explanation of God's charge and challenge to the prophet (3:16–27).

1:1 Ezekiel was preparing to become a priest when the Babylonians attacked Judah in 597 B.C. and carried him and many others into captivity (2 Kin. 24:10–14). The thirtieth year most likely refers to Ezekiel's age. At that age, a man could become a priest (v. 3) and begin serving in the temple (Num. 4:1–3). In this case, it was the time when God called him to be a prophet. as I: Of all the writing prophets, Ezekiel alone refers to himself at first with a pronoun ("I"), not using his name until v. 3 (Is. 1:1; Jer. 1:1; Hos. 1:1; Jon. 1:1; Zeph. 1:1). River Chebar: A branch of the Euphrates flowing southeast from Babylon. heavens were opened: As with all the true prophets of ancient Israel, the visitation of God was at His initiative, calling certain people to special responsibilities (Jer. 1:1–9). visions of God: The word vision is derived from the common Hebrew verb meaning "to see," rather than from the specific verb used for prophetic vision as in Is. 1. The plural of this word also calls attention to Ezekiel's visions, which were unparalleled both in nature and quantity.

1:2 This was the fifth day of the fourth month (v. 1). Ezekiel's "thirtieth year" was 597 B.C., when King Jehoiachin was deported to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kin. 24). The year 593 as the fifth year of … captivity is arrived at by using the Babylonian calendar, which begins in March. Jehoiachin's deportation to Babylon took place after he decided to surrender rather than subject Jerusalem to a Babylonian siege. He was imprisoned for 36 years (2 Kin. 25:27) before being released by Nebuchadnezzar's successor, Evil-Merodach. Throughout Jehoiachin's captivity, he received rations from the government. He may have even been able to retain his lands in Judah, which were placed under the management of a trustee.

1:3 Ezekiel uses the introductory phrase the word of the LORD came 50 times in this book. It always introduces a divine message and sometimes a new section. The name Ezekiel comes from the verb meaning "to seize," "to hold fast," coupled with the term meaning "God." Thus Ezekiel's name indicates that he was a man whom God had seized. See also 3:8 for another dimension of meaning in this name, "the one whom God has strengthened." the hand of the LORD was upon him: The divine origin of Ezekiel's message is emphasized in these first few verses.

1:4–14 This is a vivid and powerful image of God's all-powerful, all-knowing, all-seeing, and all-present characteristics. Bible students can be comfortable with such symbolic revelation (apocalyptic literature) if they remember to: (1) focus on the main thrust of the vision and not on the details; (2) be guided by any divine interpretations given in the immediate context and by parallel passages; and, (3) treat it as figurative language not to be taken in a rigid literal sense.

1:4 whirlwind … great cloud … raging fire: Compare the descriptions of divine appearance in Ex. 19:16–20; Ps. 18:7–15; Mic. 1:2–4. See also v. 13 below. north: quite frequently indicates the direction from which the majority of Israel's enemies approached them. For example, the Babylonian Empire extended from the land of the Chaldeans to the north of the holy land. The Hebrew term translated amber may also be understood as something like "glowing metal" (v. 27).

1:5 In ch. 10, these living creatures are related to the cherubim—celestial beings associated with God's holiness and glory and sometimes poetically with storm winds upon which God travels (Ps. 18:10). There are two basic approaches to understanding the four living creatures: as a highly symbolic representation of deity, or as highly symbolic representations of angelic beings who serve in God's presence. Probably they are angels, for God Himself is not revealed until the end of the section (v. 26). These stunning angelic creatures are dazzling attendants to God's majesty.

1:6 four faces: This image may suggest complete awareness; nothing is "behind" or "beside" these creatures. See vv. 8, 10. four wings: Contrast the six wings of the seraphim in Is. 6:2; the wings are further described in vv. 9, 11.

1:7 legs … feet: The imagery portrays strength and beauty.

1:8 The "humanlike" representation includes hands and presumably arms.

1:9 did not turn: This seems to follow from the four faces (v. 6).

1:10 man … lion … ox … eagle: Composite fantastic figures in these classic combinations have been found in Mesopotamian and Egyptian iconography. The idealized strengths of each figure were thus presumed to reside in the living creature so described. The face of man may well represent the realm of intelligence among God's creatures; the face of the lion, the majesty of His creation; the face of the ox, the patient service that creation returns to Him; and the face of the eagle, swiftness to see and bring judgment where needed.

1:11, 12 One pair of wings was stretched upwards, as if in reverence; the other pair was used to cover the body as if in submission. Compare the description of the seraphim in Is. 6:2.

1:13–15 fire … lightning: These phenomena regularly attend descriptions of the appearances of God to His people (Ex. 19:16–20). See also v. 4. Coals of fire is used here as a symbol of judgment and holiness. By such means, Isaiah's lips were purged (Is. 6:7). Note the coals of fire upon the altar to burn the sacrifices as substitutes for the sinners. The fire of judgment seen here in the vision was soon to be exercised upon the unrepentant remnant still in the land.

1:16, 17 beryl: This may be chrysolite, a yellow or gold-colored stone. wheel in the middle of a wheel: The composite wheels were able to go in any direction without pivoting. A wheel symbolizes movement. In His government, God never is static, but is always moving. The idolatrous remnant was saying judgment would not come. However, God's reward or judgment will never fail to come.

1:18 rims … full of eyes: The wheels had an exquisite beauty and an animate intelligence. awesome: The word means "compelling wonder."

1:19–21 The prophet stresses the association of the wheels with the living creatures, as well as the creatures' ability to travel wherever they wished. The mysterious phrase the spirit … in the wheels emphasizes the significance of the wheels. It appears that the wheels represented the flexibility and mobility of the living creatures. This is a pictorial representation of God's omnipresence.

1:22, 23 firmament: The same Hebrew word is used in Gen. 1:6. It means an "expanse" or "platform." Compare also the "sea of glass, like crystal" of Rev. 4:6. An awesome crystal: Like the brilliant sparkling of ice when the sun shines upon it.

1:24 Noise of their wings. The symbolism is that of unlimited strength and power. Nothing can deter God from accomplishing His plans of judgment, and even angels have frequently been used in executing His judgment (2 Kgs. 7:6; Dan 10:6). Almighty: This is the divine name Shaddai, most likely based on a Hebrew word meaning "mountain," to suggest God's omnipotence and majesty (10:5).

1:25 This voice connects with the "man" of v. 26. In Gen. 1 the voice of God summons light from the darkness (Gen. 1:3). Here above the din of angels' wings there is a voice. In John 1:1 is revealed the apostle's term for the Savior: the Word.

1:26 While Isaiah describes the elevation of the Lord's throne (Is. 6:1), Ezekiel focuses on its beauty. sapphire: This is precious lapis lazuli, a deep blue stone with golden specks. The same stone appears in Rev. 21:19. The enthroned figure with the appearance of a man is the culmination of this vision.

1:27, 28 Fire like burning metal (amber, v. 4) and rainbow-like brightness surrounded the One on the throne (v. 26). the likeness of the glory of the LORD: Human likeness here may reflect the personal nature of God's revelation of Himself. Further, it points forward to the plan of a more personal revelation of God coming as the Messiah (John 1:1–18). The glory indicates the wonder, majesty, and worthiness of the living God. Amid the wheels, the creatures, the colors, and the dazzling light was a figure who appeared like a man (v. 26). Compare the vision of Daniel who saw One "like the Son of Man" (Dan. 7:13). I fell on my face: The prophet's response was to fall down in worship and submission. All believers should recognize God's great glory and fall down in humble submission before Him (Phil. 2:10, 11).

(Heb. ben adam) (2:1; 3:1; 17:2; 24:16) Strong’s #1121; 120: The expression son of man is used nearly one hundred times as a title for Ezekiel (2:1). It serves both to emphasize the difference between God the Creator and His creatures, and to mark the prophet Ezekiel as a representative member of the human race. Ezekiel’s life was a living parable or object lesson to the Hebrew captives in Babylon (compare 1:3; 3:4–7). In word and deed, Ezekiel was a “sign” to the house of Israel (12:6). Jesus adopted the title Son of Man because He too is a representative person—the “last Adam” who became a life-giving spirit (Matt. 8:20; 1 Cor. 15:45). The title of Son of Man for Jesus also alludes to Daniel’s vision of the heavenly being who is “like the Son of Man” (Dan. 7:13). Thus the title Son of Man for Jesus highlights the mystery of the Incarnation, the fact that Christ is both divine and human. As the God-man, Jesus became a glorious sign for all of sinful humanity (Luke 2:34).

2:1 Son of man: Ezekiel uses this phrase more than ninety times to refer to himself. It emphasizes his humanity in his God-given role as a spokesman for God. The meaning of the phrase is "human one." In the OT, only Dan. 7:13 and 8:17 also employ this phrase. In the NT, Son of Man is used frequently by Jesus for Himself. With this phrase Jesus was calling Himself "the Human One," the long-awaited Messiah who came as God in the flesh (Luke 21:27; John 1:14; 2 John 7). Thus the expression Son of Man is not a contradiction of Jesus' divinity, as is sometimes alleged. stand on your feet: Ezekiel had been bowing before the glorious One (1:28). Perhaps his initial thoughts were similar to those of Isaiah (Is. 6:5). The commandment to stand suggests that he had no reason to be afraid.

2:2 the Spirit: This reference to the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in God's prophet is of great importance. The visions and messages of Ezekiel revelations from the living God. In contrast to the Holy Spirit indwelling all believers of our present age, in OT times He came upon some individuals by sovereign choice for the divine enablement needed for superhuman tasks. It was not universal among those who trusted in God, nor was it a permanent indwelling.

2:3, 4 Ezekiel was called to speak God's message to the children of Israel. God describes them as a rebellious nation and more specifically impudent and stubborn—literally "stiff-of-face and hard-of-heart children" (3:7). The Hebrew term for rebellious indicates a breaking of the covenant relationship. Thus says the Lord GOD: GOD told Ezekiel to emphasize the divine origin of his messages by using these words. Like Moses (Ex. 3; 4), Ezekiel would speak in God's name only what God commanded him. The term Lord GOD combines a title indicating God's sovereignty (Adonai) and His personal name (Yahweh, conventionally translated with GOD or LORD in small capital letters).

2:5 If the rebellious people refused to listen to Ezekiel's message, Ezekiel would still prove himself a true prophet of God by continuing to proclaim God's messages (v. 7). Read 2 Kin. 21 for an example of the nature of the rebellion that had led to their captivity.

2:6, 7 briers and thorns … scorpions: These images vividly portray the nature of the rebellious opponents of Ezekiel's warnings. God told Ezekiel not to allow fear to hinder his message, whether or not the message was wanted (v. 7).

2:8, 9 eat: In contrast to rebellious Israel, Ezekiel was to set an example by being receptive and listening to God's message. hand … scroll: Compare Jer. 1:9.

2:10 The unusual feature of writing on both sides of a scroll indicates the magnitude of the nation's transgressions and its need for lengthy lamentations (Zech. 5:3; Rev. 5:1). Tough Ezekiel would later bring words of comfort and consolation (chs. 33—48), his first prophecies from God contained only sorrow and sadness.

3:1–3 eat: The symbolic act of eating the scroll demonstrated that Ezekiel internalized the message in preparation for speaking to the people.

3:5–7 Though no linguistic barrier existed between Ezekiel and the nation, Israel would pay less attention to the prophet than foreigners would. Israel's rejection of the prophet's message was the symptom of a prior and more fundamental revolt against God's rule (1 Sam. 8:7). All Israel was characterized as impudent—literally "hard-of-head"—and hard-hearted (2:4). Those who have had generous exposure to the truth and reject it can be harder than those who hear it for the first time.

3:8, 9 I have made your face strong: There may have been an intentional pun on Ezekiel's name, which means "strongly seized by God" (1:3) or "God strengthens." Double meanings in biblical names are common (Cain; Gen. 4:1). The prophet was adequately equipped by God for his calling.

3:10, 11 A necessary prerequisite to God sending Ezekiel as His messenger was Ezekiel's reception of all God's words. God told Ezekiel that he was to make it clear that his message and authority came from the Lord, and that he must continue to speak regardless of his audience's responses and reactions.

3:11 get to the captives: Two groups of exiles had already been brought to Babylon, one in 606 B.C., and another in 597 B.C. Ezekiel was sent to them to show God's justice in their being chastened. The fact of Ezekiel being sent to them indicates God's love and compassion by pleading with them to repent and turn to Him.

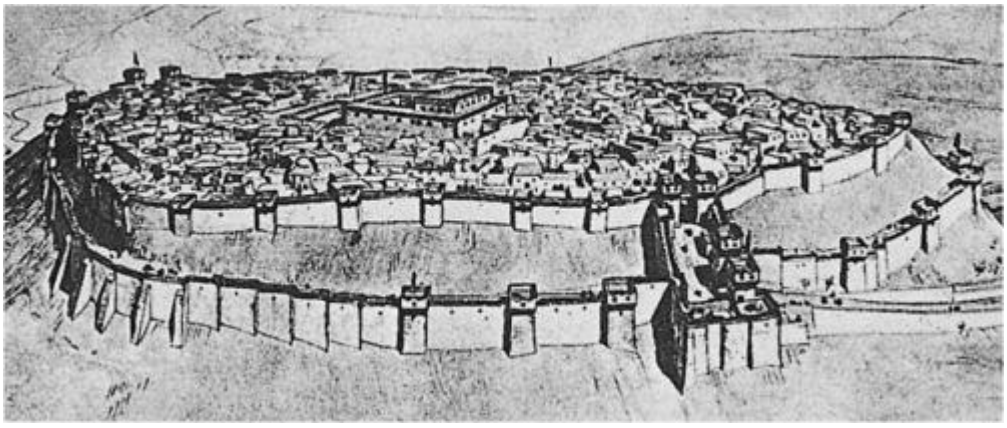
3:12, 13 Blessed … from His place: This thunderous acclaim in praise of the living God came from His myriad of angelic armies (compare Is. 6:3). glory: The word suggests "weight" or "significance," indicating the wonder, majesty, and worthiness of the living God.

3:14 Bitterness means "distress" and "anguish." Ezekiel's human perspective caused him to focus on the distasteful calling of delivering a message no one would listen to. The prophet was angry—heat of my spirit—and appalled. But the hand of the LORD was present to help him deal with these feelings and then move him on to live and work among the captives (v. 15).

3:15 The Israelites who had been exiled to Babylon lived in Tel Abib, meaning "hill of flood." Seven days is the time normally taken for mourning the dead, as well as the time set aside for a priest's consecration

(Gen. 50:10; Lev. 8:33). Ezekiel sat astonished with these captives for seven days as evidence that he had experienced a unique encounter with God (Job 2:13). At the end of the seven days Ezekiel would be ordained for the priesthood and would be ready to proclaim mourning for Israel.

3:16–21 Ezekiel's prophetic service was basically that of warning and reminding the people about the beneficial consequences of turning from evil and the disastrous results of refusing to live by the stipulations of the Mosaic covenant, which would rescue them from a wasted existence.



Drawing of the ancient city of Lachish, showing its outer and inner defensive walls. Ezekiel compared himself to a watchman on such a wall who warned of approaching danger, but his task was to warn the people of moral and spiritual danger (Ezek. 3:17).

3:17 The watchman stood on the city wall guarding against any external or internal threat. He would sound an alarm upon sighting impending danger (2 Sam. 18:24). God made Ezekiel a spiritual watchman over His people.

3:18, 19 his blood: Doubtless, this severe warning given to Ezekiel was similar to that given to a military watchman in ancient times. If the watchman failed to give the alarm to the city in a time of peril, the blood of the city would be required of him. But if the watchman sounded the alarm and the city did not respond, the watchman could hardly be blamed. delivered your soul: As a faithful watchman, Ezekiel would not have placed his own life in jeopardy by failing in his critical duty. A watchman who was "asleep at the switch" would forfeit his life. The word soul often merely means "life" in Hebrew. See also v. 21.

3:20, 21 The stumbling block is interpreted by some as a death sentence. If the person continued repeatedly in sin, then death would result. The reference to "life" and "death" in this section is to physical, not eternal, realities. delivered your soul: See v. 19.

3:22, 23 The word glory suggests "weight" or "significance." The emphasis is on the central significance and awesome wonder of the living God.

3:24 Ezekiel wrote more of the indwelling of God's Spirit than any of the prophets (2:2).

3:25–27 This God-ordained muteness was a restriction: (1) from moving about publicly to speak (v. 25); (2) from proclaiming just the theme of divine judgment (v. 26); and, (3) from communicating only in God's authority and when God opened his mouth (v. 27). A comparison of the dates in 1:1–3 with 33:21–22 shows the length of this silence to have been seven and one-half years, until the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. Ezekiel clearly orated other messages during this time (11:25; 14:1; 20:1).

3:26 The phrase not be one to rebuke them qualified what was meant by Ezekiel's being mute. The idea may be better stated as "not be a legal mediator." During his "mute" period, Ezekiel would not be allowed to speak as a mediator on behalf of the people before God, their Judge.

3:27 He who hears, let him hear: Jesus used this warning often in His teaching (Mark 4:23). The phrasing emphasizes individual responsibility and readiness to accept the divine message.

4:1–3. This first of the symbolic and speechless demonstrations—probably enacted outside the prophet's house (3:15, 16)—portrays the success and certainty of the coming siege of Jerusalem by Babylon.

4:1 The clay tablet was unfired mud or clay soft enough to be inscribed with a stylus. The Hebrew term rendered portray means to scratch or mark on the tablet.

4:2 Lay siege: The city of Jerusalem would come under siege, meaning that the Babylonians would surround the city and cut off its outside supplies. The purpose was to starve the inhabitants into submission (vv. 9–12; 16, 17). By his symbolic drawing, Ezekiel may have been commanded to do what other "prophets" of the nations might do. That is, the hired "prophets" of the pagan nations might use such a drawing as a device for invoking the gods to bring about the event graphically described. In Ezekiel's case, the drawing was the opposite of what the people wanted. As they sat in captivity, the worst news would have been that the holy city had been destroyed. In this case, the drawing showed the people the horrible truth of what God already had sovereignly ordained.

4:3 The iron plate or pan was a utensil that Ezekiel possessed as a priest; it was for baking grain for the cereal offerings (Lev. 2:5; 6:21; 7:9). Here its purpose was to represent a wall between Ezekiel and the city. The first three verses of the chapter dramatize to the house of Israel the inevitable and inescapable siege that would come against the holy city.

4:4–6 bear their iniquity: The prophet represented Israel—the northern kingdom—and Judah—the southern kingdom—and the length of time each was going to be punished for its sin. Since Ezekiel set the deportation of Jehoiachin (597 B.C.) as his chronological reference point (1:2), the most straightforward interpretation of vv. 4–8 pictures the punishment of exile and Gentile rule inflicted upon the Hebrew nation over a 430–year period as extending from 597 to approximately 167 B.C. This was the time Jewish rule returned to Judah, through the Maccabean revolt.

4:7 The arm … uncovered, used in connection with God's command that Ezekiel set his face toward the siege (4:3), most likely refers to the siege as a set and certain event (Is. 52:10, and the modern idiom of "rolling up one's sleeves"). As horrible as it was, the siege ultimately showed God's faithfulness to His covenant established in the days of Moses: that idolatry and disobedience would bring curses, which would include being conquered, captured, and removed from the land (Deut. 28:15–68).

4:8 Restrain you more literally reads “place ropes on you.” Ezekiel was bound while lying on either side for the entire 430 days; but the activities described in 4:9–17 show that his lying down and being tied up occurred only during parts of each day.

4:9–11 The recipe of six mixed grains for the bread indicates the limited and unusual food supply while in bondage in a foreign land. The small amounts of these grains vividly picture the short supply of food in a city under siege. Because a city under siege was cut off from outside supplies, the people had to ration their food and water. If it ran out, they would be forced to surrender. In Jerusalem, the people would be allowed daily only a half pound of bread (twenty shekels) and less than a quart of water (one-sixth of a hin).

4:12–15 The bread is called defiled (v. 13) in light of what is said in v. 12. In order to portray the fate of the unfaithful nation, God wanted Ezekiel to temporarily eat food made unclean by being cooked over a fire fueled by human waste (Deut. 23:12–14). God at first commanded Ezekiel to use human excrement because it would most accurately and forcefully symbolize the horror of the coming siege of the city. But cow dung, a common fuel then as now, was allowed as a substitute in light of Ezekiel’s prayerful insistence and practical faithfulness to the ceremonial law (Deut. 12:15–19; 14:3–21).

4:16, 17 The terrible conditions of the siege of Jerusalem would fulfill Ezekiel’s symbolic acts (vv. 9–12). Both water and bread would be rationed. Anxiety and dread (12:19) would be rampant. The Hebrew term for dread could also be rendered “horror” or “shuddering.” All this would occur because of Judah’s iniquity. The people had broken their covenant with God, and He had no choice but to bring upon them the promised consequences of their disobedience (Lev. 26:14–29; Deut. 28:47–53; 2 Kin. 25:1–3).

5:1 Shaving the head was an act showing shame or disgrace in Hebrew culture (7:18; 2 Sam. 10:4). It also represented a type of pagan mourning forbidden by the Law (27:31; Deut. 14:1; Is. 15:2; 22:12). Shaving the head was a mark of defilement, making a priest like Ezekiel ritually unclean, and so unable to perform his duties in the temple (Lev. 21:5). This message was telling the people that they were about to be humiliated and defiled.

5:2 Each citizen of Jerusalem would suffer one of the three fates depicted by each of the three mounds of the equally measured shorn hair: (1) some would be burned along with the city or would die from plague, famine, or other siege conditions (5:12; 2 Kin. 25:9); (2) some would be murdered by the sword during the attack (5:12; 2 Kin. 25:18–21); and (3) some would be scattered in the wind—referring to the Exile (5:12; 2 Kin. 25:11–17, 21).

5:3, 4 a fire will go out: A remnant from the group sent into exile would be saved from death and merged into the foreign culture. Other exiles would be killed.

5:5–7 This is Jerusalem: The words were being said in anguish. The personal God of the Hebrews had given them the city as an inheritance. God loved it and established it as the center of the world, because His temple was there. Here, however, He describes the extent of its people's abominations. She has rebelled refers to the people of the favored city who had not only stubbornly refused to keep the Law, but whose sin was even worse than that of the nations around them—they had failed to follow even the moral laws that were common among the pagans.

5:8 therefore: Here is the solemn announcement of the sovereign judge. I, even I, am against you: The solemn, emphatic pronoun is sad indeed.

5:9–17 The elements in God's judgment on the people for their sins can be enumerated in this way: (1) a judgment that will be worse in extent than ever before; (2) a terrible famine that will lead to cannibalism; (3) pestilence, meaning plagues and diseases associated with famine; (4) violent death by sword or wild beasts; and, (5) the scattering and killing of a remnant. These punishments would come as the result of the people's idolatry—they had defiled God's temple with detestable things and abominations (v. 11), evidencing their complete disregard for the Law (vv. 6, 7; 11:18). The Ten Commandments were the foundation of all Mosaic legislation, and they prohibited idolatry (Ex. 20:3). Further, these judgments would be accomplished: (1) without pity and with no hope of escape (v. 11),

(2) with a full expenditure of God’s wrath (v. 13), and (3) with the result of making God’s people an object lesson of warning among the onlooking neighbor nations (v. 15). In His covenant with His people, God had promised to send these curses if the people chose to rebel against Him (Deut. 28:15–68). The disobedient and rebellious people should not be surprised at the horror they were soon to face.

6:1–3 The mountains of Israel may signify the land in general (36:1–6); however, the hills could be especially condemned because in their wooded areas the people had built altars and shrines to Canaanite idols (v. 13). High places were originally elevated locations for the worship of the god Baal and other deities of the Canaanite pantheon. The term high place could be used of any location, whether hilltop or valley (v. 6; Jer. 7:31) where Canaanite gods were worshiped (1 Kin. 11:4–10). The Israelites adopted the use of these and associated worship practices including sexual misconduct, sorcery, spiritism, snake worship, and child sacrifice. Before entering the Promised Land, the Hebrews had been commanded to abolish all the high places where idols were worshiped (Num. 33:52).

(Heb. gillulim) (6:4; 20:16; 30:13; 2 Kin. 23:24) Strong’s #1544: This Hebrew noun is related to a verb that means “to roll” (Gen. 29:3; Josh. 10:18). The word refers to “shapeless things” like stones or tree logs of which idols were made (6:9; 20:39; 22:3; 1 Kin. 21:26). The prophet Ezekiel uses this Hebrew term for idols nearly 40 times, always contemptuously, for these false gods had led Israel away from the true God (14:5). The word gillulim may be related to a similar Hebrew expression meaning “dung pellets.” Later Jewish commentators mocked the gillulim as the “dung idols,” idols as worthless as dung.

6:4–6 The phrases cast down your slain, lay the corpses, and scatter your bones refer to God’s judgment. Dead people lying unburied and bones scattered around signify the ultimate defilement of the land. God would bring this upon them because they had defiled and desecrated themselves by worshiping in the pagan high places (2 Kin. 23:20; Ps. 53:5).

6:7 you shall know that I am the LORD: Ordinarily, one would come to know more to experience the reality of the living God through encounters with His mercy. But because of the evil path that the people of Judah had taken, they would experience His reality in a dreadful manner—through His judgment (Is. 28:21).

6:8–10 Not only would God prove His justice and faithfulness to His past promises and warnings about the consequences of idolatry (5:13), but He would leave a remnant of His people so they would remember the One true God among the nations. God had promised that, despite any future destruction of the nation that might occur because of sin, He would always preserve a portion from annihilation (Deut. 28:61–64). The chief purpose of even calamitous punishment was the production of a repentant and spiritually restored remnant.

6:11, 12 Alas: This word, also translated “Ah!” (21:15) and “Aha!” (25:3), is meant sarcastically. Either God was displaying His delight over the destruction of idolatrous places and practices (vv. 1–7, 13) or He was having Ezekiel enact the mocking role of a jealous neighbor nation, such as Ammon (25:1–7).

6:13, 14 Then you shall know that I am the LORD: As in vv. 7, 10, the Lord states the purpose of the coming destruction of His city and many of its people. The use of God's personal name further emphasizes the intent to bring His people back to a personal, intimate relationship with Himself.

Then You Will Know

Ezekiel was sent to the Hebrew captives in Babylon (Ezek. 2:1–5; 3:14–15). Despite the fact that the Babylonians had invaded Judah twice, fulfilling the warnings of the prophet Jeremiah, the exiles still did not understand why God had allowed these events to happen, nor why they had been deported to Babylon. They still had not grasped the fact that their nation's troubles were the result of their idolatry and other sins against the Lord.

God used Ezekiel to make this truth clear. Time after time, over a period of at least 20 years, the prophet spelled out the people's sins and warned them of the certainty of God's wrath. Nevertheless, the people remained willfully blind to their condition. This hardness of heart helps to explain why the phrase, "You { or they} shall know that I am the Lord," is repeated some 60 or 70 times in the book (6:7, 10, 13, 14). Quite often, these declarations can be found in the middle of a promise of God's wrath: slain shall fall" (6:7); "I would bring this calamity" (6:10); "thus will I spend My fury" (6:12); "I will … make the land desolate" (6:14).

We will either know the Lord in His grace and mercy, or in His wrath and fury. The choice is ours. But regardless of our response, God makes it clear that "You shall know that I am the Lord." God is determined to be heard. He is the Lord—and sooner or later, we will know that He is.

7:1–4 The three uses of the key word end stresses that the fulfillment of the prophecy was at hand. The word has come denotes certitude. The four corners of the land suggests that all the people of Judah would be affected, not just those in Jerusalem.

7:5–7 As in vv. 2, 3, key words in these verses include end (used two times), in parallel with doom. There now is an added stress on disaster (used two times); the coming disaster will be unlike any other (5:9). The word doom is a rare term and may be better explained as "mourning."

7:8, 9 Again at the end of this oracle (vv. 4, 27), God states His purpose in disciplining Israel: to cultivate in His people a better understanding of Himself.

7:10–12 The flowering of the rod and pride indicates that the time to bring judgment was ripe. These words describe one whose time had come, a person marked by arrogance. In this case, it pictures the chosen instrument of God (Num. 17:5) with whom He would discipline Jerusalem and Judah —namely, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon and the characteristic representative of the arrogant and evil Babylonians (v. 21). Rod of wickedness refers to a stick or club (Ex. 4:20; Is. 10:5) used for punishing wickedness.

7:12, 13 Let not the buyer rejoice: The fact of coming judgment was so certain, and its effects would be so lasting and devastating, that transactions of buying and selling would be concluded improperly or not at all.

7:14, 15 No one goes to battle for Judah because the nation and land would be so devastated by death and diseases brought on by warfare and famine (5:8–17).

7:16–19 Those left alive would hide in the hills and be characterized by four things: (1) mourning—moaning like doves in shame, displaying their humiliation over sin by wearing sackcloth and shaving their heads (Is. 15:2, 3); (2) weakness; (3) horror; and, (4) disgust and disillusionment over wealth.

7:20–22 This section describes the judgment that would come on the people for taking the treasures of the temple to make pagan images. Beauty of his ornaments and My secret place both refer to Jerusalem and its temple. The people had sinned horribly when they crafted idols out of the temple treasures and then worshiped what their hands had made (Rom. 1:25).

7:23–27 The punishment will fit the crime—God promised to do to them according to … what they deserve. Because Judah had been so bloodthirsty, God would send the worst of the Gentiles to possess their houses, defile the temple, and bring violence to the land. This section predicts Nebuchadnezzar's desecration of the Jerusalem temple in 586 B.C. As a last resort, peace at any price would be fervently sought from false prophets, priests, and politicians, but without success. The deadline for decisive action would have passed.

8:1 sixth year: This second exact date given in Ezekiel is 592 B.C., when Ezekiel was acting out the siege of Jerusalem (1:1; 4:1–8).

8:2 The first word translated fire may also be read in Hebrew as the word meaning "man." In the second instance fire is the expected meaning. This description parallels 1:26, 27.

8:3, 4 The north gate of the inner court, called the "altar gate" in v. 5, was near the sacrificial altar (Lev. 1:11). There Ezekiel saw the image … which provokes to jealousy. All idolatry was forbidden, and any idol represented a violation of the loyalty that belonged to Israel's God. the glory of the God of Israel: See 3:12.

8:5, 6 to make Me go: The people thought that just because the temple stood among them, whatever wrong they might do could not bring ultimate disaster. They thought the temple guaranteed their security. They did not realize that their evil had actually caused God to leave His temple, which would then no longer be their protection. See ch. 10.

8:7–9 A view through a hole in the temple wall, this next scene of the vision gives a glimpse of even worse idolatrous acts. The people's abominations (vv. 6, 9, 10, 13, 15, 17) were not limited to a periphery. They extended deeply into the hierarchy of Israel's religious leadership.

8:10 all around on the walls: In conformity with surrounding pagan nations (primarily Egypt), God's people were worshiping images of clean and unclean creatures that represented various gods. Polytheistic idolatry was being practiced in Israel.

8:11 The seventy elders represented the nation's leaders (Num. 11:16–25). The censer each man carried (a vessel for holding burning incense) and the burning incense would not necessarily be evil, but here they were being used to worship idols. Jaazaniah: Nothing more is known about this person.

8:12 The emphasis is on the elders' pagan beliefs as well as their resultant secret behavior—in the dark. Ironically and inconsistently, they thought of God in limited, human terms, much as their neighbors viewed the gods of the nations. They thought He was not omniscient and omnipresent.

8:13, 14 Tammuz was a fertility god. The women were crying out to the idol because they had no children or because the crops were failing. In the sixth month, August-September, Tammuz was thought to "die" with the scorched land. Worshipers would wail over his death and cry for his resurgence.

8:15, 16 The location for the sun worship was in the inner court … between the porch and the altar. These 25 men must have been Levites if temple regulations were being followed; otherwise, the area was forbidden (Num. 3:7, 8; 18:1–7; 2 Chr. 4:9; Joel 2:17). Whether priests or not, they were turned in the wrong direction—their backs were to God's temple and they were worshiping the sun.

8:17, 18 trivial thing: There is similar wording in the Lord's condemnation of Ahab (1 Kin. 16:31). put the branch to their nose: This action is not mentioned elsewhere. In the context it appears to be (1) a ritualistic gesture used in idol worship, or (2) an action indicative of the extensive violence which was occurring in Judah as a result of idolatry.

9:1–11 The guilty idolaters are killed: a vision of the coming destruction of Jerusalem.

9:1 He is the God of Israel, who has been speaking since Ezekiel saw the glory of God (8:5). those who have charge over: This is the sense given to a Hebrew word that is frequently used of a vengeful visitation (Is. 10:3).

9:2 One man among them was probably one in addition to the six, making six men equipped as executioners and one representing the presence and purity of the holy God, who is worthy to mark out some for judgment and to omit others (vv. 3–7; Ex. 12:1–13; Rom. 9:14–29; Rev. 7:3; 9:4). his battle-ax: Literally, “the implement of his shattering” (compare Jer. 51:20). The upper gate from which these seven came was equivalent to the north gate of the inner court (8:3; 2 Kin. 15:35). The bronze altar was the sacrificial altar.

9:3 It is not clear whether the term cherub here indicates (1) the cherubim on the ark of the covenant in the Most Holy Place, or (2) the cherubim of the throne with wheels in 10:1–5, 18. Either way, this pictures the departure of God’s glory from the temple, then from Jerusalem, and then from Judah, as seen in chs. 9—11. The threshold refers to the entryway.

Mercy to the Repentant

God's forgiveness has always required repentance on the part of sinners. It did in ancient times; it still does today. In Ezekiel's vision of Jerusalem, the Lord commanded angelic executioners to place a special mark on the foreheads of those who were moved to repentance over the "abominations" being committed in the city. The rest were to be slain (Ezek. 9:4–7). The justification for this slaughter was that the sins of the wicked—bloodshed and perversity (idolatry)—were "exceedingly great" (9:9). By contrast, citizens who demonstrated a deep concern for holiness were shown mercy.

This vision recalls a similar judgment in Egypt, in which the Lord killed the firstborn children of the Egyptians, but spared the Hebrew households that had marked their doorposts with blood (Ex. 12:1–36). In both cases, God marked out those to whom He would show mercy on the basis of their heart attitude toward Him.

It is interesting to note that the "mark" referred to by Ezekiel is the Hebrew letter taw, the last letter of the Hebrew alphabet. Today, taw is the equivalent of "T," but in Jeremiah's day it was written like an "X" and was often used as a signature (Job 31:35). Early Christians pointed out the similarity between Ezekiel's "mark" and the sign of the cross. Both indicated God's mercy and redemption of sinners.

The judgment foreseen in Ezekiel's vision applies to people today. It demonstrates that God shows mercy, but He always looks for repentance. Those who resist Him and remain committed to sin can expect His wrath. But those who "sigh and cry" over their own sins and the sins of others will know His comfort and forgiveness (compare James 4:8–10).

9:4 Mark translates the Hebrew name for the last letter of the Hebrew alphabet, which in Ezekiel's time looked like an X. Those so marked are people who sigh and cry over the abominations of idolatry so far mentioned. Those who demonstrated a righteous attitude through true repentance and remorse were marked out from the hardened rebels. These would be the remnant (v. 8), the ones who continued to follow God's commands (Rev. 7:2–4; 9:4; 14:1).

9:5, 6 Go after him: The universality of this judgment is shocking to us; but this is in line with divine judgments from the time of the Flood in Genesis to the final judgment described in Revelation.

9:6, 7 My sanctuary: The corrupt spiritual leaders had been practicing idolatry and immorality in the temple itself (8:3–16). Judgment would begin with them because they had led the nation astray (1 Pet. 4:17). Defile the temple: This means to carry out the execution and leave dead bodies in the temple environs (Lev. 21:1; Num. 19:11).

9:8 The prophet was horrified by what he saw. The true servant of God always sorrows over the destruction that people bring on themselves by their rebellion. The word Ah was sarcastic in 6:11; here it is a sincere gasp of pain (as in 11:13). The remnant, a group chosen and saved from destruction by a sovereign God, is a recurring theme in the Bible (2 Kin. 19:31; Ezra 9:8; Is. 1:9; 10:20–23; Amos 5:15; Rom. 9:27–29; 11:1–8).

9:9, 10 Three reasons are given as to why the nation deserved this terrible outpouring of God's wrath—serious and undeniable (1) iniquity, or guilt of sinful offenses (4:4–8); (2) bloodshed, or violence (8:17); and, (3) perversity, or more precisely injustice. The people and especially rich rulers willfully chose to believe that God did not see or care what injustices went on.

9:11 I have done: The report of judgment was brought by one man (vv. 3, 4) appearing as a righteous accountant.

The Ultimate Tragedy

Readers of Ezek. 10 are likely to focus on the spectacular vision of the cherubim and the wheels within wheels. But the real story in this passage is the Lord's departure from His temple at Jerusalem (Ezek. 10:18). Given the history and significance of the temple, nothing could be more tragic for Judah.

The temple was designed by David and built by Solomon to be the "house of the Lord" (2 Chr. 5:1). When it was completed, God blessed the magnificent structure by filling it with His glory and presence (5:14). From then on, the temple was regarded as a hallowed symbol that stood for God (6:20). Yet now Ezekiel saw God departing from the temple. There is little wonder why. The people had turned the "house of the Lord" into a house of idolatrous abominations. As a result, God decided to leave His temple and go "far away" from His people (Ezek. 8:5–17; compare 11:23). Clearly, the end of Judah was at hand.

Can there be a greater tragedy—to enjoy the Lord's presence, only to have it withdrawn because of a willful, long-term commitment to sin and rebellion? If that is the picture of your life, then Ezekiel's vision should serve as a warning and an appeal to repentance. Nothing could be worse than to drive God away when He longs to bless you with His presence (Heb. 6:4–12).

10:1 See ch. 1 for an understanding of the several terms in this verse. The cherubim here are the living creatures of 1:5. sapphire stone: This was probably lapis lazuli, a dark blue, opaque stone found mainly in Afghanistan. It was a most valuable gemstone in ancient times. The modern sapphire is a translucent blue aluminum silicate, chemically the same as ruby. It is extremely hard and could not have been cut or polished by ancient craftsmen. Lapis lazuli is approximately as hard as glass.[L&T]

10:2 Coals of fire (1:13) are sometimes related to a chastisement for cleansing (Is. 6) and at other times to judgment by fiery catastrophe (Gen. 19:24, 25).

10:3–5 The cloud represented God's glory (as in 1:4), which was seen moving from the inner court to the threshold of the temple. From there it filled the temple (house). glory: See 3:12, 23. sound … Almighty: See 1:24.

10:6 when He commanded … he went in: These words display the man's unquestioning obedience to God (v. 5; 1:24; 8:2–5).

10:7, 8 A particular cherub handed the coals to the man in linen (v. 2). Though not stated explicitly, it is implied that all the directives of v. 2 were now carried out. The coals were then scattered on Jerusalem.

10:9–17 Ezekiel describes the wheels (vv. 9–14) and then the cherubim (vv. 15–17). See ch. 1 for details in this vision. Only in v. 14 is something different from the description in ch. 1. Whereas one of the four faces in 1:10 is an ox, here it is a cherub. There are ancient sculptures with animal bodies and wings but human faces, sometimes called "cherubs." The difference of the faces between 1:10 and 10:14 should not be called an error; it is possible that the images that Ezekiel saw were changing from time to time.

10:18, 19 God's glory continued moving gradually but progressively away from the temple (vv. 3, 4): from the entrance door of the temple to the wheeled cherubim throne, and then with the throne to the east gate of the temple. The Lord's departure suggests that He was reluctant to leave. Though His holiness had been rejected so that He would not stay, He left with sorrow over the end His people had brought upon themselves.

10:20–22 The cherubim sometimes serve as guardians (Gen. 3:24). They are associated with God's throne and presence (the mercy seat on the ark; Ex. 25:18–22; 1 Chr. 13:6). They are also associated with God's chariot-like throne (v. 1; 1:20–26; Ps. 18:10).

11:1–13 In this section, the public and political leaders, who should have modeled godliness in the community at home and work, have a judgment of death by sword prophesied against them.

11:1, 2 Ezekiel saw twenty-five civic leaders at the temple. Princes of the people denotes public and political officials often serving in judicial, military, or royal posts (2 Sam. 8:15–18; 20:23–26). Jaazaniah: Son of Azzur, and not the same Jaazaniah as in 8:11 (son of Shaphan). These men had been giving wicked counsel, and even stooped so low as to devise iniquity against their own people. Because they were trying to combine Hebrew and heathen religions, these leaders had deceived themselves and their followers into thinking that they were speaking for the true God. On Pelatiah, meaning "The One Delivered by the Lord," see v. 13.

11:3 The time is not near to build houses can be rephrased, "Is it not now time to build houses?" These officials were proclaiming that the inhabitants of Jerusalem were as secure behind the city's walls as meat was safe in its cooking pot (caldron). There was no impending doom, they said; therefore, new construction projects were encouraged.

11:4 prophesy … prophesy: The repetition is for emphasis, a literary technique common in Hebrew style. Son of man means "human one." This phrase appears 90 times in Ezekiel and emphasizes Ezekiel's humanity in his role as a spokesman for God. In the OT the phrase is used also for Daniel (Dan. 8:17) and for the coming Messiah (Dan. 7:13). In the NT the phrase Son of Man is used frequently by Jesus for Himself (2:1).

11:5–12 God's message to the corrupt officials of Jerusalem and Judah is declared, pinpointing the justifications for divine anger (vv. 5, 6, 12) and predicting a judgment of death (vv. 7–11).

11:6 slain: Jerusalem's official leaders had been accused of wicked activities and giving unrighteous advice (v. 2); here we discover that they had killed fellow countrymen.

11:7–12 The verdict of a death penalty is announced. Contrary to the leaders' false beliefs, the ones they killed were the godly people whose presence might have offered protection in the caldron—that is, Jerusalem. Those who had gained power by the sword, knowing the dread of such force, would experience defeat and death the same way. They would be dragged out of the city and slain by strangers, referring to the Babylonians.

11:13 Ezekiel's reaction showed that Pelatiah, one of the corrupt city leaders (v. 1), was struck dead by God as undeniable proof that the prophet's message would come true. Ezekiel himself was awestruck and asked whether this meant that God would not after all preserve a remnant (9:8).

11:14–25 In this section, God responds to Ezekiel's concern over a saved remnant. He tells Ezekiel that a remnant is being preserved that will be regathered to the land of Israel and will receive a new outpouring of God's Spirit (vv. 14–21). God's Spirit then leaves Jerusalem (vv. 22, 23), and Ezekiel's vision returns him to Babylonia, where he tells what has happened to the exiles (vv. 24, 25).

11:14–21. God gives promises to the remnant of Israel with present (11:14–16) and future (11:17–20) aspects.

11:15 Ezekiel's brethren were those in exile with him. The people in Jerusalem (representative of Judah) regarded the exiles as sinners because they had been deported to Babylon.

11:16 God explained to Ezekiel that the Hebrews taken captive and spread among foreign lands were actually the remnant whom God was protecting. God Himself would continue as their sanctuary—a word in Hebrew that literally means a "holy place" or a "set-apart place."

11:17 I will give you the land: God promises that Israel will be restored to the promised land. This is in keeping with the unilateral and unconditional nature of the covenant made with Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3; 15:13–21; Deut. 30:1–6), and renewed with David (2 Sam. 7:12–16) and Jeremiah (Jer. 31:31–34).

11:18–20 When the remnant returned to the land, they would abolish idolatry. At that time, God would establish a new covenant with them (Jer. 31:31–34). Then God would pour out His Spirit (36:26, 27; Joel 2:28, 29) so that His people would become united in purpose and empowered to maintain their righteousness—walk in My statutes. They would finally and truly become His people (Ex. 6:6–8).

11:21 As with Pelatiah, God promised to continue judging idolaters whose affections were for detestable objects—that is, idols. Such recompense was fully deserved because ample warning had been given; the people were personally responsible for the choices. From His giving of the Law at Mount Sinai, the Lord had continually expressed His abhorrence of idolatry (Ex. 20:1–6). Praise and worship belonged only to the Lord—their Creator and Deliverer.

11:22, 23 God's glory continued to move away from the city to the Mount of Olives—the mountain. See 10:3, 4, 18, 19. The Hebrew term for glory literally means "weight" or "significance" and refers to the wonder and majesty of the living God.

11:24, 25 the Spirit: Ezekiel's visions are not merely dreams; they were inspired by God Himself and thus were prophetic. Chaldea: This is an alternate term for Babylon. So I spoke: Presumably the telling and retelling of Ezekiel's visions (8:2–11:23) led to the more permanent record that makes up his book.

12:1–20 Ezekiel acts out a prophecy as if he were in Judah preparing to go into captivity after the fall of Jerusalem.

12:1, 2 The exiled community among whom Ezekiel was ministering was described twice as a rebellious house. This is further defined by the phrases: eyes to see … and ears to hear (Is. 6:10). The Israelites' hardness of heart was sustained for over a year (1:1, 2; 8:1). They would not listen to the prophet's words or his dramatizations of coming judgment (chs. 4–6).

12:3–8 Ezekiel's next visual demonstration warned the captives already in Babylon that they should not expect a quick return to Jerusalem. He had already shown that the city would soon fall (chs. 4; 5); those not killed would be led into exile. These exiles should have understood Ezekiel's meaning, for they had done what he was displaying only six years before, when they had been brought into exile. a sign: The Hebrew term here does not mean a miracle but a visible symbol (v. 11; 24:24, 27). I did as I was commanded: In contrast to the inattention and disobedience of the people, God's prophet Ezekiel was always obedient to Him (chs. 2—5).

12:9, 10 Ezekiel's audience was composed of people who had already experienced exile; but the people were so rebellious and so resistant to the message they continued disdainfully to ask the prophet, What are you doing? The prince in Jerusalem was Zedekiah (vv. 12–14), the ruler of Judah (2 Kin. 24:17–20). burden: The message a prophet proclaimed is often called a burden (Is. 13:1; 15:1).

12:11–14 Speaking in 592 B.C., Ezekiel predicted the deportation of Jerusalem's population to Babylon six years later, and prophesied exactly what would happen to their leader Zedekiah. The king would attempt to escape by night, secretly and in disguise (cover his face); but he would be caught and blinded by the Babylonians, then carried off to Babylon where he would die (2 Kin. 25:1–7; Jer. 52:1–11). Ezekiel was a sign to his audience already in exile as he symbolically and verbally foretold the fate of the Jews still living in Jerusalem. The land of the Chaldeans is Babylonia.

Scattered and Gathered

God always finds a way to assert His sovereignty and accomplish His purposes, regardless of whether we as human beings cooperate with His plans. The Israelites had to learn that lesson the hard way. They resisted God's intention of establishing them as His people in their own land, with His Law to guide them. As a result, He determined to "scatter them among the nations" (Ezek. 12:15).

This promise of dispersion was a major theme for the prophet Ezekiel. Several other times he declared that the Lord would scatter His people abroad (5:10, 12; 6:8; 11:16; 12:15; 20:23; 21:15; 34:6; 36:19). This began when the Assyrians captured Israel in 722 A.D., and continued with a series of deportations from Judah to Babylon in the early sixth century A.D. Yet the scattering of God's people was not the end of the story. Ezekiel also declared numerous times that the Lord would "gather" His people from the countries of the world and return them to the land (Ezek. 11:17; 20:34, 41; 28:25; 34:13; 36:24; 37:21; 38:8, 12; 39:27). Thus God demonstrates His sovereignty, whether scattering His people abroad or gathering them together again.

If God is going to accomplish His purposes one way or another, then the ultimate question we need to consider is how we can cooperate with His plans. To do otherwise is to miss out on what He is doing, or worse, to cause Him to proceed in spite of us.

A stone carving from the palace of Tiglath-Pileser of Babylon, showing the deportation of conquered citizens of Judah. The Lord declared through Ezekiel that His people would bear witness of Him to the Gentiles during their years in exile (Ezek. 12:15–17).

12:15, 16 The LORD translates God's personal name. It appears in this prophecy to indicate God's special relationship to the Israelites. Ezekiel instructed the exiles that their difficult situation did have a purpose. God would use it to demonstrate that He was a personal, caring Lord. Its aim was corrective and instructive: Then they shall know. Furthermore the Exile would be a testimony or sign to the Gentiles. The defeat of God's people would not indicate the Lord's lack of strength, but the serious consequences of sin against Him. Yet He would demonstrate that His purpose had always been to restore His people to Himself (Heb. 12:1–11). Through the difficult experience, His people would learn that their God was both holy and loving. Sin offended Him, but He still would reach out to restore the sinner.

12:17–20 A dramatized prophecy of the fear and food shortages in Jerusalem during the siege.

12:18, 19 To the people of the land (that is, his fellow exiles), Ezekiel was to demonstrate and declare God's warning about the devastating conditions that would befall the people in Judah and Jerusalem.

12:20, 21 For the fulfillment of the prophecy that Jerusalem and Judah would be laid waste, see 2 Kin. 25:8–21; Jer. 39:8–10; 44:1–6; 52:1–30;

Lam. 1:3, 4.

12:22 The proverb or popular saying among the exiles indicates how hardened they were to Ezekiel's prophecies. The days are prolonged, and every vision fails: Though already captive, the people were cynical and apathetic, mistakenly thinking that a delay in judgment meant no judgment, at least in their lifetime (vv. 25, 27, 28; 2 Pet. 3:3, 4).

12:23–25 The days are at hand, and the fulfillment of every vision: An antithetical proverb would replace the old one (v. 22), and false prophets opposing Ezekiel would cease to speak. in your days: The exiles would live to see the judgment on Jerusalem fulfilled.

12:26–28 The people still thought that judgment would be delayed; Ezekiel was told to assure them a second time that the judgment would not be postponed any more.

13:1–23 In this passage, Ezekiel prophesies judgment against false prophets, both male (vv. 1–16) and female (vv. 17–23). In each case he first vividly characterizes their sin (vv. 1–7, 17–19) and then gives God's verdict of condemnation (vv. 8–16, 20–23).

13:1–4 The false prophets were foolish and like foxes in the deserts. The Hebrew word translated deserts conveys the idea of open, desolate places. In the immediate context (v. 5), the foxes are pictured roaming amid the rubble of ruined city walls. The prophets were fools because they confused their own thoughts with God's. They were like foxes among the ruins because they scavenged for themselves while causing, ignoring, and profiting from the human wreckage surrounding them. They were racketeers instead of reformers.

13:5 to build a wall: Of spiritual protection. They contributed neither prayer, example, nor advice that would turn Judah back to God. The day of the LORD refers to times when God triumphs (7:19; 30:3). The phrase is particularly used by the prophets to describe those periods in which God is unusually active in the affairs of His people, either for deliverance or for judgment (Joel 2:1; Zeph. 1:7). In that day, God will actively bring about His purposes for the world: He will rescue the righteous and judge evildoers.

13:6, 7 The false prophets, such as Balaam, practiced divination (Josh. 13:22). This was the pagan art of finding "divine" guidance through such means as astrology, reading sheep livers and other animal organs, and consulting spiritists or witches to communicate with the dead (1 Sam. 28:3–19). These prophets hoped to receive some kind of revelation. But they did not find the truth for they were not searching for it where God had clearly pointed it out—in the Law and the prophets. By prefacing their predictions with the LORD says, these false prophets were deceitfully claiming that God had spoken to them when in fact He had not. God's prophets never sought visions through the methods of divination (Deut. 18:10; Mic. 3:6), instead they received their visions and prophecies through the Spirit of the Lord.

13:8 The divine judgment on all false prophecy and knowledge is given in this verse; it is nonsense. The Hebrew word for nonsense is translated "in vain" in Ex. 20:7.

13:9 Because these false prophets had prophesied messages that contradicted God's truth (v. 10), they were condemned. The Lord would separate them from God's people, from membership in the nation of Israel, and from life in the land. enter into the land: The false prophets would not participate in the future restoration of the people to the promised land.

13:10–16 These prophets would experience God's wrath—just as the walls of Jerusalem which were being constructed at that time would be destroyed. Jerusalem would be conquered and captured for the sins of its inhabitants. The preaching of a false peace had prompted people to build for a "certain" future; but only the opposite was certain. The false prophets had deceived the people with false hopes of comfort and prosperity (v. 10). Their deception placed them not only at odds with God's truth, but also with God Himself. Their destruction was certain.

13:17–19 the daughters: The Hebrew women who were false prophetesses were confusing their own ideas with God's and casting magic death spells through sorcery or witchcraft (Lev. 19:26). The charms and veils were elements used in occult rituals in the ancient Middle East.

13:20–23 These prophetesses were sowing discouragement and doubt among those not involved in demonic divination and were offering encouragement to those already initiated: the righteous … the wicked. They would be stopped through the same judgment that was to come on the rest of the false prophets.

14:1–3 God revealed to Ezekiel that this group of the elders of Israel consisted of double-minded people (1 Kin. 18:21; Matt. 6:24; James 1:5–8). Outwardly, they came to seek a message from God through His true prophet Ezekiel, but in their hearts they harbored loyalties to other gods. let Myself be inquired: God knows all hearts and minds (Ps. 139:1–6), and He asks Ezekiel a rhetorical question about whether He ought to give revelatory guidance to such religious hypocrites (vv. 4, 5).

14:1 In at least one respect, the Babylonian exile turned out to be a blessing in disguise by encouraging a new form of Judaism that was more mobile, cross-cultural, and knowledgeable than it had been in Judah. One of the key factors of this development was the invention of the synagogue. In Judah, the Israelites had looked to the temple at Jerusalem as the center of their cultural and religious life. But the loss of the temple in 587 B.C. called for a new approach to maintaining Jewish identity. Building a temple in Babylon was out of the question, so the captives began meeting in local assemblies for worship, education, and political discussion. It was probably leaders from one or more of these groups that gathered before Ezekiel. Before long, these groups, known to us by their Greek name as synagogues ("gatherings" or "assemblies"), began to take on formal responsibilities as they were vested with authority from the Jewish communities in exile.

14:2–4 answer … according to the multitude of his idols: God responded to these hypocrites by allowing them to experience the practical consequences of disbelief and disobedience. Their idolatry consisted not only of the theological error of worshiping other gods, but also the immorality that was a natural result of a heart turned away from the living God. Evil is never caused by God (Ps. 5:4), but He permits the suffering it brings to the world (Job 1; Rom. 6:23). This process punishes the unrepentant, encourages sinners to repent (v. 5), and purifies the righteous (James 1:2–4).

14:5 seize the house of Israel by their heart: These words announced God's restorative purpose (Prov. 3:12; Rev. 3:19) in allowing sin to run its course.

(Heb. shub) (14:6; 18:30; Gen. 8:3; Ps. 85:4) Strong’s #7725: The Hebrew word translated repent means “to turn back” or “turn around.” The word refers to a reversal or a change of direction, as when the word is used of the receding floodwaters (Gen. 8:3). The prophets commonly used this word to call the Israelites to a radical, conscious rejection of their past sin. A psalmist used the word to describe God’s restoration of a believer (Ps. 85:4). Repentance implies a complete turnaround: to change one’s mind about one’s former sinful ways, to reject one’s past conduct, and turn in obedience to the Lord (Deut. 4:30; Is. 10:22; Jer. 3:14; 22:10).

14:6, 7 Idolatry was condemned whether practiced by an Israelite (one of God’s chosen people) or by strangers (Gentiles) spending time in Israel. Anyone from any culture who had come into contact with specific revelation about the Hebrew God was held responsible for his or her response to the truth.

14:8 The unrepentant idolater would be separated not only from God but also from God’s people (13:9). This experience would be a strong visual warning—sign—and an international example—proverb—of God’s absolute honoring of His promise to punish disobedience with cursing (Lev. 20:1–7).

14:9–11 The relationship between God’s sovereignty and human responsibility is implicit in these verses. God allows false preaching for His own inscrutable purposes, but the preacher is held accountable for the content of the message. These were Israelite false prophets who deliberately ignored the truth and mixed it with falsehood. Their punishment would be the same as the one who inquired (the elders; vv. 1–3). But they would also have the same redemptive plan (v. 5).

14:12–20 Jerusalem’s “persistent unfaithfulness” was so offensive to God that the presence of spiritual giants could not stay judgment by famine, wild beasts, military invasion (sword), or disease (pestilence). Noah, Daniel, and Job: Compare Jer. 15:1, where the names Moses and Samuel are invoked in a similar manner to these names. In this list, Daniel seems out of place among the other two men of faith, Noah and Job. Daniel was a younger contemporary of Ezekiel in Babylon (Dan. 1), whose greatest exploits were likely still to come. The Hebrew spelling of the name in Ezekiel is Dan-El, rather than Daniel, raising the question whether a different person is meant than the biblical Daniel. There are some stories preserved about an ancient hero named Dan-El, but he was a worshiper of Baal, and would not have had the righteousness about which Ezekiel speaks. It is possible that the first hearers of Ezekiel's message knew of a righteous Dan-El who is not known to us.

14:21 These judgments, though stated hypothetically so far, would actually come on Jerusalem (Lev. 26:22–26).

14:22, 23 A remnant would be brought out from Jerusalem. When the exiles observe their ways and their doings—that is, their wicked actions, they will be reminded of God's justice and grace. This is a remarkable use of the term remnant. Ordinarily the term is used of the righteous. Here it is used as a sample of the wicked people, whose deeds justified the actions of God in sovereign judgment: I have done nothing without cause.

15:1–5 The wood of the vine is depicted as useless. Unlike an olive tree, whose wood is also useful, the vine has only one use, to bear grapes. The regular use of vine imagery in the Bible (Ps. 80:8–19; Is. 5:1–7; John 15) demonstrates the importance of grapevine cultivation in Israel.

15:6–8 In this instance the vine is symbolic of the Israelites still in Jerusalem (Ps. 80:8–19; Is. 5:1–7). God had designed the people of Israel for a particular purpose, to bring glory to His name by living faithfully to His covenant and by bringing the nations to the knowledge of the Lord. Instead, Israel had become like the pagan nations around them. Israel had persisted in unfaithfulness and had failed to trust in God's power. Jerusalem, and by implication the entire nation, had not faced exile before but now would be disciplined with another fire. This refers to additional destruction and deportation to be brought by Nebuchadnezzar, whose armies burned Jerusalem in 586 B.C. (7:23–27). The Judeans had already endured two deportations to Babylon, in 605 and 597 B.C.

16:1, 2 to know her abominations: The Hebrew word translated abominations describes that which makes one physically ill. What follows is an animated development of the dreary story, designed to teach errant Jerusalem the real nature of her character in the eyes of God.

Skeletons in the Closet

Some people go to great lengths to hide their background. They feel ashamed of certain details about their origins which they regard as "skeletons in the closet," ugly facts that they feel would harm their reputation if brought out into the open. God rebuked the people of Jerusalem and the surrounding country by revealing three "secrets" about their past that called into question their proud self-image. The Lord said that: • They were born to Canaanite parents (Ezek. 16:3).

• They were abandoned at birth (Ezek. 16:4–5).

• They were adopted (Ezek. 16:6–7).

The humiliating facts about Jerusalem's past are basically no different from the "skeletons in the closet" of any Christian today. We, too, were born outside the family of God. We, too, were once lost apart from His grace. We, too, have been adopted in God's family. Therefore, we, too, need to evaluate our lives and consider whether we are living with humility and gratitude, and honoring the Lord with our attitudes and behavior. Otherwise we raise questions as to whether we really belong to God.

16:3 your father was an Amorite and your mother a Hittite: These shocking words refer to the cultural and moral origins of Jerusalem. Ancient Canaan was inhabited by Semitic and non-Semitic peoples. The Amorites and Hittites are associated in Scripture with the southern hill country, where Jerusalem is (Num. 13:29). The point is that non-Israelites founded this city. Jebusites controlled it when the Israelites entered the land under Joshua (Josh. 15:8, 63). Israel did not fully control the city until David conquered it (2 Sam. 5:6, 7).

16:4, 5 Rubbing a newborn baby with salt was a Palestinian custom. In caring for a baby during the first days of life, the parents and their society take possession of the child through traditional procedures, such as rubbing. In particular giving the child a name is highly important. In Israel, God took possession of the firstborn male children on the eighth day of life, through circumcision. God reminds Jerusalem that He had rescued them from being like an abandoned newborn child, unwashed, unsanitary (not rubbed with salt), and exposed to the elements to die. God alone had given her glory.

16:6 In contrast to Israel's apathetic disdain—which led to disobedience including idolatry (Judg. 1, 2)—God had wanted Israel to live, having purposed and planned to impart His life and glory to them.

16:7–9 breasts were formed: The city is compared to a young woman, mature and lovely. Yet the city was naked and bare until God covered it with a relationship of covenantal love. This began when David moved the ark of the covenant there and God established the covenant with David (2 Sam. 6:1–7:17; Ps. 132). Jerusalem became God's dwelling place (2 Sam. 7:12–17; 1 Kin. 5; 6).

16:10–14 The adornments listed here are gifts from a groom to his bride. Figuratively they express the beauty and bounty God gave to Jerusalem under Solomon. badger skin: The exact meaning of this Hebrew term is unknown, but it refers to a kind of fine leather. One suggestion is "dolphin skin." The idea is that God clothed Jerusalem in the finest materials available. During the reigns of David and Solomon, Jerusalem achieved significant status as the capital of a nation rich in wisdom and wealth (1 Kin. 10:23). But this was only because God bestowed it. perfect: This does not mean perfect in a moral sense, but complete, finished.

16:15 trusted in your own beauty: These words indict God's people for forgetting that their fame and fortune were God's gifts and not their own doing (v. 14). They relied on themselves and their gifts instead of on God. They came to believe that their material health and wealth as a nation absolutely demonstrated God's approval of their spiritual life, even through they were becoming spiritually corrupt. Solomon, who was king when Israel reached its zenith of power and prosperity, is a conspicuous example (Eccl. 2:1–11). played the harlot: This phrase refers to spiritual prostitution—idolatry, trusting in false gods. The metaphor works in a powerful way, however, because the worship of these gods often involved literal sexual misconduct (v. 16; Hos. 4:11–19) and other immoral acts (vv. 20–22).

16:16–21 These verses list the particular acts of idolatry engaged in by the spiritually unfaithful in Jerusalem and Judah. Mesopotamian and Canaanite pagan rituals are featured. The people's unfaithfulness to God consisted of: (1) building altars to idols and decorating the high places with their garments (1 Kin. 11:7, 8); (2) fashioning male images (phallic or sexually perverse statues) from gold and silver that God had provided; (3) giving what belonged to the true God to these false gods; and, (4) practicing human sacrifice to appease these gods (2 Kin. 16:1–4).

16:19 My food: This charge is an explicit denial of Baalism. Baal was the Canaanite god of fertility, who was thought to provide the grain in the field, the young of the flock, and even the children of the marriage. Israel forgot that God, not Baal, had fed them.

16:20–22 The Israelites did not remember how much God had done for them since rescuing them from a dirty, destitute, and dying condition (vv. 1–14).

16:23–26 Egypt is called a fleshly neighbor because that nation wanted alliances with Israel, who committed harlotry by eventually reciprocating (1 Kin. 10:28; 2 Kin. 17:4; 18:21; Hos. 7:11).

16:27–29 Jerusalem's kings had sought political alliances with Assyria (2 Kin. 15:17–20) and Babylon (2 Kin. 20:12–19) instead of relying on their God for security. Probably a part of the treaty-making ceremonies was to worship the other nation's gods. For Israel to do this would be a violation of the First Commandment. In fact, King Ahaz dared to replace the bronze altar of the temple at Jerusalem with a copy of an Assyrian altar (2 Kin. 16:5–18). In this way, foreign alliances led the Israelites away from God. The Lord judged the city for this: He allowed Sennacherib to give some of Jerusalem's lands to the Philistines (2 Chr. 21:16, 17).

16:30–34 Jerusalem was denounced as being less like a prostitute and more like an adulterous wife. She was deemed worse than the typical prostitute because instead of receiving payment for services rendered, she sought out strangers (foreign nations) and hired them for the privilege.

16:35, 36 Jerusalem was filthy spiritually because the city had soiled itself by worshiping foreign idols and practicing infanticide (vv. 20, 21; Deut. 12:29–32).

16:37–43 As a result of its sin (compared to harlotry, vv. 25–30), Jerusalem would be punished. God would use her foreign lovers to expose Jerusalem's hypocrisy and bring international shame (uncover your nakedness). According to the Law, adultery was punishable by death (Lev. 20:10). The people deserved death because they had committed spiritual adultery and had murdered their own children through child sacrifice. The city would be looted and burned, and its people slain. The tangible material riches gained as a result of God's favor (v. 8) would be lost. All this would culminate in the Babylonian invasion of 586 B.C. led by Nebuchadnezzar.

During the ensuing captivity, Israel would abandon idolatry and polytheism, as Ezekiel predicted. God's anger over the people's sin would be satisfied. My jealousy: God's covenantal love and loyalty to His people would continue even though they had been unfaithful and forgetful of God's grace in their lives.

16:44–47 This allegory describes Jerusalem as the sister of two cities—Samaria and Sodom. All three were presented as the characteristic offspring of the religiously and morally corrupt cultures in Canaan (v. 3). Thus the proverb Like mother, like daughter applied to Jerusalem. The condemnation of the mother—that is, the Hittites—and the sisters—Samaria and Sodom—for loathing husband and children is difficult to explain. It probably refers to idolatry—God being the hated husband (Hos. 2:16)—and infanticide. Sodom no longer existed at this time—its evil had been so great that God had wiped the city off the face of the earth (Gen. 19:24–25). Samaria, the capital of the northern kingdom, had already faced destruction and exile (2 Kin. 17:5, 6). Jerusalem, the very city of God, had become "more corrupt" than even Sodom and Samaria. Clearly this passage emphasizes the people's great sinfulness and the certainty of their punishment. sister of your sisters: This is a superlative statement like "King of kings" meaning "the greatest king." Thus with this phrase, Jerusalem is described as the "sister" most conformed to Canaanite corruption.

16:48–52 Ezekiel names the sins for which the cities of Sodom and Samaria were renowned. Jerusalem was pronounced even more guilty—the other evil cities did not commit half of Jerusalem's sins. Spiritual, moral, and social sins are all listed. Jerusalem justified the other cities because when they compared themselves to Jerusalem, and they were more righteous than her.

16:53–59 As Jerusalem had arrogantly poked fun at Sodom, so Jerusalem would be despised by Syria and Philistia. Hope and humiliation would be hers because when the people returned from captivity, they would return alongside others whom they considered horribly wicked. Although restoration was promised, the people still had to pay for their sins by living in exile. This punishment was consistent with God's past and persistent promises to repay disobedience with specific curses (4:16, 17; 5:8–17). Syria is rendered Edom in some translations because this alternative exists in the Syriac version and in many Hebrew manuscripts. Historically Syria

(or more literally the ancient nation of Aram) no longer existed. Therefore that nation could not ridicule the exiles in Ezekielday. The people had despised the oath by breaking the covenant that God had made with Moses; thus they would receive the punishments for disobedience that were written in that covenant (Ex. 24; Lev. 26; Deut. 28; 29). Blessings or curses were dependent on Israel's obedience or disobedience.

16:60–63 Nevertheless: Despite Jerusalem's disobedience to the Mosaic covenant and the resulting punishment (v. 59), the covenant with Abraham—My covenant—would still be honored: I will remember. Fulfillment of the covenant with Abraham did not depend on the people's faithfulness; God had made the promise and He would keep it (Gen. 15; 17:7, 8; Lev. 26:40–45; Ps. 145:13; Phil. 1:6). The everlasting covenant had been made with Abraham before the Hebrew nation even existed. This covenant would be remembered and reestablished with the exiled Judeans. At that time, God's people would be ashamed by the contrast between their faithlessness and God's faithfulness and the fact that they were being exalted over those who were less sinful—Sodom and Samaria. The people of these other sinful nations would also inherit land, but only by God's grace, because no such covenant was made with them. Further, God would provide atonement through the New Covenant (Jer. 31:31–40), which pointed ultimately to the Cross of Christ.

(Heb. meriy) (2:5–8; 3:9; 12:2; Is. 30:9) Strong’s #4805: This Hebrew noun is derived from a verbal root that means “to resist authority” or “to be contentious” (Deut. 1:26; Jer. 4:17; Neh. 9:26). It depicts someone opposing an authority figure out of stubborn pride (Deut. 21:18) and commonly describes disobedience (1 Kin. 13:21). Ezekiel identified Israel as a “rebellious house” a dozen times, meaning they were willfully disobedient, refusing to listen to the word of God (2:5–8). Ezekiel was addressing an audience chafing under God’s authority (3:9). Samuel equated this kind of rebellion with witchcraft (1 Sam. 15:23).

17:1–21 In this section, the ways of kings and their people are revealed to be in the hands of the Lord.

17:1, 2 The Hebrew words translated riddle and parable can both be used to refer to allegory. The parable primarily refers to a comparison between two things. A riddle was sometimes used as political contests of mental competition between kings, in which the loser would submit to the winner and be killed. Some take the following riddle as a contest posed by God to Zedekiah, Judah's king.

17:3–10 This allegory is focused around a main point and is followed by an explanation to guide the reader (vv. 11–21). In light of vv. 11–21, the great eagle is the king of Babylon (v. 12); Lebanon symbolizes Canaan, of which Jerusalem (v. 12) is the major city; the highest branch is the king of Jerusalem and Judah (v. 12); the topmost young twig refers to the nobility of Judah (v. 12); the land of trade is Babylon (v. 12); the seed is a member of the royal family (v. 13); the fertile field is the land where this royal offspring would rule (vv. 13, 14); the other great eagle is the king of Egypt (v. 15); and the vine is the remnant and ruler left in Judah. This remnant failed to prosper because they made a treaty with the Egyptian pharaoh. As a result, even the remnant was slain and scattered by Babylon's army (vv. 15–21).

17:11–21 Since Ezekiel had preached earlier about Jerusalem's past abominations (ch. 16), the people were likely charging God with unfairness in punishing the present population. Ezekiel points out that present and past sins make God's actions just and fair. In this section, the LORD explains His grounds for using Babylon to judge Judah. The prophecy predicts that: (1) Nebuchadnezzar will capture Jehoiachin and the princes of Jerusalem and take them to Babylon (v. 12); (2) Zedekiah, Jehoiachin's uncle, will be made ruler of the Judean remnant as a result of a political alliance with Nebuchadnezzar, but this will stifle growth (vv. 13, 14); (3) Zedekiah will rebel against Babylon and God by making a treaty with Egypt (588 B.C.) leading to his unexpected defeat and death (vv. 15, 16; Is. 30:1–5); and, (4) Zedekiah will not be protected by Egypt but will be punished through Babylon according to the stipulations of the Mosaic covenant: death, destruction, and dispersion (vv. 17–21; 12:13, 14). The historical background of this story is found in 2 Kin. 24; 2 Chr. 36; and Jer. 37; 52.

17:22 I will take: The Hebrew is emphatic: "I Myself will take" In contrast to human kings, God declared that He personally would pick out, plant, and make prominent a tender one—that is, a twig or a sprig. Cedar branches are symbolic of rulers on the Davidic throne (17:3, 4, 12, 13), and elsewhere of a line of David's descendants prophesied to produce the Messiah (2 Sam. 7:16; Is. 11:1–5; Jer. 22:24–30; 23:1–6; Zech. 6:9–13; Matt. 1:1–17). If not directly messianic in intention, vv. 22–24 at least have strong messianic implications. Thus, with reference to His humanity, we discover a new title for the Savior Jesus. He is the Tender One.

17:23, 24 What was accomplished in the restoration under Zerubbabel was a fulfillment of this promise. But as is often the case in biblical prophecy, the greater fulfillment is still to come in the reign of the Savior King. The establishment of the cedar twig, the Messiah, over Israel will make the nation a fruitful and majestic cedar where diverse people will live in unity and harmony. all the trees of the field: All nations will realize that the LORD is their sovereign God and that He has accomplished what He said He would do.

18:1–3 The Hebrew word (Eccl. 10:10) rendered set on edge is literally “made dull” but can refer to a sour sensation. The main idea of the proverb is clear: children are affected by their parents’ behavioral choices just as eating sour grapes produces a bitter taste. However, the people were interpreting and applying this proverb incorrectly; therefore, God said they should not use it any longer.

Accountability

Sometimes warnings get twisted into excuses. The people of Ezekiel's day, suffering from the consequences of a history of rebellion against God, found it easier to blame their ancestors for sin than to take responsibility for their own offenses. We can understand their predicament. Their immediate circumstances held little hope. News had reached Babylon about the fall and destruction of Jerusalem. Plans to return to the promised land would be marred by descriptions of devastation. The wreckage of God's judgment seemed too great to be restored. It was easier to sink into pessimism. The bitter proverb about sour grapes and teeth set on edge (18:2) became a slogan of resentment for the people. Instead of examining their own behavior before God, they excused their sin by blaming their parents.

The law of cause and effect may be obvious, but the exact connections sometimes elude us. Sin always has consequences. The second commandment (Ex. 20:4–6; Deut. 5:8–10) points out that the sin of idolatry (a sin from which flow many others) causes effects that can last generations. But Ezekiel had to remind the people that experiencing hardship as a consequence of the sins of ancestors was not the same as judgment for one's own sins. Suffering caused by another's sins does not excuse willfully sinful behavior.

God made it clear to the Israelites and also to us: We may suffer for someone else's misdeeds, but we will be judged for our own. "I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways" (18:30). What should be our response? "Repent, and turn from all your transgressions" (18:30). This will lead to "a new heart and a new spirit" (18:31). Perhaps the clearest evidence of our fallen human nature can be heard in our quickness to blame others when we ought to examine ourselves and remember that we are accountable to God. His message to us is persistent: "Therefore turn and live!" (18:32).

18:4 The exiles' problematic doctrines and attitudes became evident from God's corrective teaching. Apparently the exiles were filled with despair and had a fatalistic approach to such truisms as the proverb quoted in v. 2 (as also in 16:44) and to related Scriptures (Ex. 20:5; 34:6, 7; Deut.

5:9). Their false belief was that they were being punished for the sins of previous generations. Their sin was that of becoming insensitive and irresponsible, since they thought judgment would come regardless of what they might do. God's reply reminded them that it had always been otherwise: only the individual person who sins will die. In this verse, the physical, earthly consequences of sinful behavior are being addressed (3:16–21; 33:12–20; Deut. 30:15–20).

18:5–9 A righteous man—a father or the first generation—is lawful. He does what is morally right according to the Law of Moses. He does not participate in the following sins: (1) idolatrous ceremonial meals, (2) sexual misconduct, (3) mistreatment of the poor, (4) theft, or (5) usury, charging interest on debts owed by fellow Hebrews (Deut. 23:20). His reward is life (Ex. 20; Lev. 18:1–5; Deut. 5; 11). during her impurity: In ancient Israel, intimacy during the woman's menstrual period was prohibited. The OT does not explain the reason for this, but it may be tied to the special role of blood for the atoning of sin (Lev. 15:19–33). The principal point in this passage is that the person was observing the standards laid down by the Law.

18:10–13 The unrighteous son of the righteous man of vv. 5–9 (the second generation) breaks and rejects the laws and ethics that defined his father's lifestyle. His punishment is death (vv. 13, 18; Rom. 6:23) and his blood shall be upon him. Clearly the point of this passage is personal responsibility for sin.

18:14–18 The grandson of the righteous man of vv. 5–9 (third generation) purposely chooses to live by God's laws, imitating his righteous grandfather and not his sinful father. The grandson, like the grandfather, shall surely live as a result of his own righteousness; but the father dies due to his own disobedience and depravity (vv. 9, 13, 18).

18:19–32 In this passage, Ezekiel further clarifies his teaching on individual responsibility for sin by answering certain questions that reflect what his audience might be thinking in response to his previous message. God's response to their questions through Ezekiel is in part also composed of questions. Live and die refer to physical death and not eternal death, since this passage relates to the standards and stipulations of the Mosaic covenant (16:6; Lev. 18:5; Deut. 30:15–20; 2 Pet. 3:9). turn … and live: Everyone is judged equitably and individually. God never enjoys condemning a person, but is just and righteous in dispensing His judgments.

(Heb. qiynah) (19:1, 14; 2 Sam. 1:17; Jer. 9:10) Strong’s #7015: This Hebrew noun refers to a type of poetic song with a distinctive meter, a dirge that was sung to express grief over someone’s death. It is derived from a Hebrew verb that means “to sing a song of lament” (2 Sam. 1:17). Such songs would be sung during funeral rites. The prophets’ use of the word was intended to suggest the coming death of Israel and other nations because of the inescapable condemnation they had incurred for their sin (Amos 5:1).

19:1 The princes were Judah's kings. Ezekiel likely turned his attention to these kings because he had just spoken (in ch. 18) of the relationship between fathers (leaders) and children (followers), and of the sins committed in Judah by powerful people.

19:2–10 Most likely the lioness and the vine in your bloodline (v. 10) both represented the nation of Israel since each was a "mother" of kings—the cubs and the branches. The vine and lion images are common symbols for Hebrew royalty and nationality (15:1–6; 17:1–10; Gen. 49:9; Num. 23:24; Ps. 80:8–16; Is. 5:1–7; Mic. 5:8). The first cub brought … with chains to the land of Egypt was Jehoahaz, who was captured and imprisoned by Pharaoh Necho in 609 B.C. (2 Kin. 23:31–34; 2 Chr. 36:1–4). The second cub that was trapped in their pit was the destructive Jehoiachin, who gave out false hopes of revival and was taken captive by the king of Babylon (Nebuchadnezzar) in 597 B.C. (2 Kin. 25:27–30; 2 Chr. 36:9, 10).

19:10–14 These verses mention the fruitful monarchical period of the past, but the focus was on the present distress and promised judgment. At this time, Judah had already experienced two invasions by Babylon, called the east wind (15:1–8; 19:5–9). Ezekiel and the other exiles were presently living in that desert land. Neither the current king Zedekiah (the rod of her branches) nor any other leaders were fit to rule. Judah's rulers were responsible for the nation's horrible condition (Jer. 22:10–13). The immediate source of rebellion and the cause of imminent judgment was Zedekiah, who would be deported when Jerusalem was destroyed in 586 B.C. (2 Kin. 24; 25). wilderness … dry and thirsty land: To anyone who loved the covenantal promises focused on God's worship in Jerusalem, any alternative to Jerusalem was akin to living in the desert.

20:1 The chronological note suggests a date of July-August 591 B.C. and the start of a new section and series of messages (8:1, which was eleven months earlier). The political context of this prophecy was Zedekiah's foolish and sinful alignment with Egypt against Babylon in hopes of deliverance from Nebuchadnezzar's attacks. The social context was that of exiled elders coming to Ezekiel to obtain a divine explanation of current events. They wanted to know whether Egypt would save Judah from the Babylonians.

20:2–4 God explains to Ezekiel that the elders of Israel (v. 1) had forfeited any right to inquire of Him due to the abominations of their fathers. All people are responsible for their own sins, and this does not mean that these Hebrews were paying for sins their ancestors had committed. Instead, the present generation of Hebrews in exile had clearly shown their failure to learn practical lessons from history, and thus had condemned themselves to repeat many mistakes. These leaders came to God with questions, but the questions were foolish and demonstrated the people's sinfulness. They showed that they were oblivious to the inconsistencies between what they were asking, their past practices, and God's revealed promises and principles. In this chapter God gives a remedial review of their past.

20:5–9: In Egypt, God promised to make the Hebrew people into a nation (v. 5) and to move them to a specific homeland (v. 6), which involved management by law (v. 7) leading to the Mosaic covenant given at Sinai on the way from Egypt to Canaan. But the Israelites rebelled by following false gods; so God judged them by prolonging their captivity (v. 8) in Egypt, which lasted over 400 years. Then God graciously released them as He had promised (v. 9; Gen. 15:13–16).

20:5, 6 I chose Israel: Here is the only use of this elective verb in Ezekiel. It signifies Israel's sovereign selection for God's eternal and temporal purposes. raised My hand: This image refers to the unconditional vows made by God to Abraham and later renewed with the nation He formed in Egypt from Abraham's descendants (v. 9). That God "raised His hand" reveals His determination to maintain His covenant promise.

(Heb. shiqquts) (20:7, 30; Dan. 12:11; Hos. 9:10) Strong’s #8251: The Hebrew noun translated abomination is from the verb meaning “to detest” (compare Lev. 7:21; 11:11). Typically it refers to ceremonially unclean foods and animals (8:10; Lev. 11:23; Is. 66:17). But it may also describe the detestable practices associated with pagan idol worship, including child sacrifice and ritual prostitution (1 Kin. 11:5–7; 2 Kin. 23:13; Jer. 7:30; 13:27). Hosea rightly observed that those who love abominations become like the unclean practices they love (Hos. 9:10). But the Lord had called the Israelites to a different and higher purpose: they were to remain pure and holy, for their God was holy (Lev. 11:45).

20:7 abominations: Elsewhere in Ezekiel this Hebrew term is translated “detestable things.” See vv. 8, 30; 11:18.

20:8 the idols of Egypt … in the midst of the land of Egypt: Here God spoke about something not explained in the Book of Exodus; that is, the Israelites had engaged in the idolatry of the Egyptians during their sojourn there. Thus, though not mentioned elsewhere, there was the threat of divine retribution against the people before the time of the Exodus (which is mentioned in v. 10).

20:9 acted for My name’s sake: God vindicated His grace, power, and trustworthiness before the Egyptians by fulfilling His promises to defeat Egypt and deliver even His disobedient people (His people who were supposed to worship God). On God acting for the sake of His name and honor, see also Is. 48:9–11 (compare 2 Tim. 2:13).

20:10–11 Following their exodus from slavery in Egypt, God began to sanctify the Israelites by revealing to them a code of law and entering a covenant relationship with them on a Creator-creature basis. if a man does, he shall live: This does not teach that eternal salvation can be earned by good works, but that the quality of the believer’s physical and spiritual life on earth are related to his or her obedience to the living God. God’s statutes and judgments were given to His people as a means of maintaining their walk with the living God, not as the basis for establishing their salvation.

20:12–19 My Sabbaths: This is an important verse (emphasized again in v. 20) for understanding the Sabbath (Ex. 20:8–11; Deut. 5:12–15). Sabbath means “rest.” In other words, the Sabbath was a day to cease all ordinary work or labor, as clearly emphasized in Ex. 20:8–11; Deut. 5:12–15. This verse explains the purpose of the Sabbath; it was to serve as a sign or a potent symbol of God’s covenantal relationship with His people Israel.

God's Reputation Is at Stake

How does God make Himself known to the nations and people of the world? Aside from the witness of Scripture and the life and work of Jesus Christ, His primary means is through people who are dedicated to Him and live as He wants them to live. They are the light of the world, whose good works light the way to the Lord (Matt. 5:14–16).

That means that God's reputation is at stake when it comes to how His people conduct their lives. That was certainly true for ancient Israel. He made a covenant with them to be His people (Ezek. 20:5–6). Yet three times before they even got to the promised land, they reneged on their commitment and turned back to the idols that they had learned to serve in Egypt. Each time the Lord threatened to pour out His fury on them (20:8, 13, 21), but each time He spared them for one reason: He wanted the rest of the world's nations to know who He is (20:9, 14, 22).

If Israel were destroyed, the pagan nations would have lost an important witness to the living God. In fact, Moses pointed this out at Mount Sinai, when the Lord wanted to destroy the idolatrous Israelites and start a new nation from him. Moses argued that then the Egyptians and other nations would misinterpret God's purpose for bringing the people out of Egypt (Ex. 32:9–14).

In light of this history, believers today need to think about the reputation of our lives, and whether it is worthy of the Lord. Would people be attracted to God or repelled by our conduct? Are we winsome? Is God honored by unbelievers because of the things we do and say?

20:20–26 hallow: This Hebrew word means "to treat as holy," "to observe as distinct," and "to consecrate." God commands that His Sabbaths be continually maintained by His people as sacred—distinct and separate from all ordinary days.

20:27 During the conquest and settlement of Canaan (the period described in Joshua and Judges), Israel inherited the promised land. Yet again God's people were obstinate and guilty of blasphemous disloyalty because they served false gods (Num. 15:30, 31).

20:28, 29 high hills … thick trees: These phrases refer to the locations of altars in Canaan for idol worship. Many of the exiles had visited such places in the past, and many in Judah were still doing so. high place: The name Bamah is a transliteration of the Hebrew word for high place (16:15–34).

20:30 defiling … committing: These participles stressed the continual, ongoing nature of Israel's disobedient disloyalty.

20:31, 32 like the Gentiles: Chosen to be a nation separate from sin and secular ways—a special instrument to reveal God's glory—Israel's consistent tendency was to identify with the neighboring, ungodly nations and to take on their idolatry (Ex. 19:5, 6; Deut. 17:14; 26:16–19; 31:21; 1 Sam. 8:5; Ps. 135:4).

20:33–36 The judgment of captivity in Babylon had begun in the deportations of 605 and 597 B.C. and would be continued with Jerusalem's fall in 586 B.C. However, God also promised to restore Judah and to judge her enemies with fury (Deut. 4:34). This refers to the Persian conquest of Babylon in 539 B.C. and to the three returns of the Jews to their land and the rebuilding of their homeland (538—c. 330 B.C.; see the books of Ezra and Nehemiah). Yet Israel would again be taken captive and made to wander throughout the nations: wilderness of the peoples. This section refers to the time of Roman domination, which began with Pompey taking Jerusalem in 63 B.C. mighty hand … outstretched arm: The language repeats the phrasings used in the Exodus from Egypt (Ex. 7:5; 15:6). I will bring you out: Leaving Babylon would be a second Exodus, celebrated prophetically by Isaiah as well (Is. 40:1).

20:37, 38 pass under the rod: This is the way a shepherd counts and controls his sheep (Lev. 27:32; Jer. 33:13). A rod sometimes speaks of discipline (Ps. 89:32), but here it is parallel to the idea of bring you into the bond of the covenant. God's lordship of His people for personal, purposeful relationship is in view. This future bonding with God will be a time when Israel is cleansed of spiritual idolaters (v. 39; 16:15–34). At that time, the people will finally know that God is the LORD (16:63; 36:25–38; Jer. 31:31–34; Dan. 12:10).

20:39 The command Go, serve every one of you his idols is an ironic command; the rest of the verse indicates that God was giving the stubborn people over to what they had decided. God grants each one a destiny consistent with his or her decisions. Then God looks to an unspecified future time when Israel will glorify His name, meaning “His reputation” among the nations (vv. 40–44).

20:40–45 The future repentant, renewed, and regathered Israel will be characterized by: (1) a return to the land of Israel and an acceptable, sacrificial system of worship (chs. 40—48); (2) a revived, personal knowledge of its sovereign and faithful Lord; (3) a renunciation of former sins; and (4) a recognition that God’s grace governs the nation’s history of sin and salvation. My holy mountain: Reference is made to the glorious central location for worship in Israel—Mount Zion in Jerusalem (Pss. 2:6; 78:68; Is. 35:10; 60:14).

20:46–49 The forest land, the South refers to the land of Judah—the southern kingdom—which had more trees then than now. from the south to the north: This figure of speech expresses totality, meaning “everywhere.”

21:1–5 both righteous and wicked: This pairing shows that God was going to allow the dreadful temporal consequences of sin to affect everyone in the land, both faithful and unfaithful.

21:6 breaking heart: The phrase translates words that literally mean "breaking loins," suggesting great emotional upheaval.

21:7 when they say: This means "when they ask" (12:9).

21:8–11 The Babylonian army led by Nebuchadnezzar—the sword—is pictured as ready and moving swiftly. While vv. 9–17 are written as Hebrew poetry, the lines actually meant to be sung may have been limited to these in vv. 9–11. My son: In this context, the words refer to Judah ("My people" in v. 12). If the people reacted with mirth, it would show that they mistakenly believed that such judgment would never come on God's people and must therefore be meant for an enemy nation.

21:12 Cry and wail … strike your thigh: Ezekiel was told to add verbal groans and a physical gesture to his musical message. In that culture, these actions displayed great grief and sorrow (Jer. 31:19).

21:13 Israel failed a test. The sword would strike God's people, specifically the nation's rulers (the meaning of the word scepter). These words drew upon the messianic implications of Gen. 49:9, 10 and the promises of the Davidic covenant in 2 Sam. 7. The Jews had misinterpreted these promises to mean that their nation would never fall. Because of their sin, however, the Davidic line of kings would be interrupted. False messianic hopes related to Judah were corrected when Jerusalem was overthrown in 586 B.C. by Nebuchadnezzar (vv. 25–27).

21:14–18 Ezekiel was commanded to clap (6:11). The order the third time let the sword do double damage was a numeric device (Prov. 6:16) used here to emphasize the extent and effectiveness of the sword's (or Babylon's) employment against Judah. I also will beat My fists pictures God clapping along with Ezekiel. God would applaud the fact that even evil events can be made to serve His purposes and plans (Jer. 27:5).

21:19, 20 Ezekiel was instructed to draw a map to depict the path of the coming conquerors. The king of Babylon is Nebuchadnezzar; the same land is Babylon. Make a sign: Ezekiel was to place a signpost at a fork in the road leading to the capital cities of Ammon—Rabbah—and Judah—Jerusalem.

21:21 Three ancient pagan arts for seeking divine guidance would be used by Nebuchadnezzar to determine which city to attack. shakes the arrows: This was a method of casting lots using arrows inscribed with names. They were shaken about in the quiver and then dropped to the ground like throwing dice. consults the images: This refers to the teraphim or household idols (Gen. 31:19; Judg. 18:14; 1 Sam. 19:13; Hos. 3:4). looks at the liver: Sheep livers from sacrificed animals were studied. The shades and shapes of various sections of the organ were the basis for a positive or negative prediction.

21:22 That Nebuchadnezzar's answer coincided with God's promises and predictions for Jerusalem did not mean that his divination was acceptable. It merely demonstrated that God is sovereign while individuals remain responsible for all choices, good or bad (Gen. 45:4–8; 50:20; Job 2:10; Dan. 2:20–23; 4:34–37; Rom. 8:28).

21:23, 24 The Judeans in their pride and false sense of security in the treaties (sworn oaths) would conclude that the king received a false divination (vv. 21, 22; 2 Kin. 24:20). However, the verdict had been pronounced: Jerusalem would be taken. Nebuchadnezzar would be God's instrument to punish the people's rebellion (7:3, 4).

21:25 The prince of Israel Zedekiah would come to its end by being captured in 586 B.C. (7:27; 12:9, 10, 11–14).

21:26, 27 The turban (Ex. 28:4, 37–39) and the crown stand for the priesthood and the kingship. Both would be removed from Judah. overthrown: This word means "wrecked" or "ruined" and is used three times consecutively in the Hebrew text to underscore the comprehensive and intensive nature of the destruction. The priestly and kingly offices would not return until the coming of Him whose right it is—the Messiah (Gen. 49:10; Heb. 5—7).

21:28 Ammon was east of Judah between the Jabbok to the north and the Arnon to the south. While Jehoiakim was king (608–598 B.C.; 2 Kin. 24:2), the Ammonites joined other nations east of the Jordan in raiding Judean territory, in return for protection from Nebuchadnezzar. Later, during the reign of Zedekiah (about 593 B.C.), Ammon, Moab, Edom, and others conspired against Babylon, but with false hopes of help from Egypt (Jer. 27:3–11). their reproach: This was the Ammonites' ridicule of Judah and delight over the destruction of Jerusalem, especially the temple (25:3, 6; 36:15; Obad. 10–14; Zeph. 2:8). The sword bringing judgment was either Nebuchadnezzar's army (vv. 9, 10, 19, 20; 25:4) or the Ammonites who had been led to believe they would be involved in Judah's defeat (v. 29).

21:29 Ezekiel pronounced that Ammonite prophecies of victory and security from a fate similar to Judah's were false visions. The slain Judeans would be joined by Ammonite corpses.

21:30 I will judge you: This is God's prediction for Ammon and the Ammonites. How it would be done is the subject of vv. 31, 32.

21:31, 32 The brutal men are defined as "the men of the East" in 25:4. The fall of Jerusalem meant only that Judah would be judged first. Some Judeans took refuge in Ammon (Jer. 41:1–3). God remembered Ammon's animosity and foretold its future as a place that shall not be remembered. The events of Jer. 41 led to a Babylonian expedition against Ammon in which the capital city Rabbah was sacked and many inhabitants deported (25:1–7). Ammon was later invaded by Arabs and its autonomy ceased. Eventually it was absorbed into the Persian Empire.

22:1–5 These verses focus on the sins of Jerusalem, principally bloodshed (social sin) as a result of idolatry (spiritual sin). A problem in the vertical relationship with God inevitably leads to some degree of injustice and injury in horizontal, human affairs. You have caused your days to draw near: The city was ripe for judgment. When such hypocrisy is exposed and punishment is executed before the world, God's people become lasting objects of ridicule.

22:6–12 Jerusalem's princes had shed the blood of innocent people (7:27; 11:1; 12:10; 19:1; 21:13; 2 Kin. 21:16; 23:36–37; 24:1–4, 18, 19). These evil leaders had been: (1) taking advantage of parents and the weak (Ex. 20:12; 22:21–24; 23:9; Lev. 19:3; Deut. 24:17); (2) rejecting God and His covenant, leading to ungodliness and inhumanity (Ex. 20:8); (3) murdering the innocent by slandering them (Lev. 19:16); (4) preferring idolatrous religion and its immoral rituals (22:1–5; Deut. 12:1–2; 16:21, 22); (5) engaging in sexual immorality with neighbors, family, and relatives (Lev. 18:6–23; 20:10–21); and, (6) loving money and using it to get ahead of fellow citizens (18:5–9; Ex. 23:8; Deut. 23:19, 20; 24:6, 10–12; Matt. 6:24; 1 Tim. 6:5–10).

22:13–16 God reveals His planned actions against Jerusalem and Judah. The expression beat My fists (21:14–17) shows great anger. Defile yourself refers to the desecration and destruction of Jerusalem by the Babylonians (2 Kin. 24:13; 25:9, 13–21).

22:17–23 These verses are primarily about God's chastisement of His sinful people through the burning of Jerusalem by the Babylonians (2 Kin. 25:9). Yet the verses also point to the fiery ordeals and trials that force all of us into a more perfect relationship with our Lord (v. 22; Ps. 66:10; Jer. 9:7; Dan. 11:35; 12:10; Zech. 13:9; Mal. 3:1–3; James 1:2–4).

22:24, 25 This verse echoes the promises of Deut. 28:12, 24, where the abundance or absence of rain in the land is associated with obedience or disobedience to the Law.

22:26, 27 The priests were not examples of separation from worldly ways (Ex. 19:6; Lev. 11:44; 22:32). Some at least were motivated by monetary gain (Mic. 3:11).

22:28 plastered them: This probably refers to the prophets themselves. untempered mortar: The Hebrew word means "mud-plaster" or "whitewash." These prophets were involved in "whitewashing" the sins of the nation's leaders (Matt. 23:27; Luke 11:39). If the proper antecedent for them is “princes” (v. 27), then the priests were also guilty of approving murder. divining: The false prophets used sheep livers in the hope of finding the will of the gods (13:7; 21:21).

22:29 As go the leaders so go the followers (12:18, 19). The people of the land were average citizens or commoners.

The Go-between

Perhaps as you look at some of the tragedies of the world—the armed conflicts, the political breakdowns, the crimes of injustice or indifference, the ethical compromises—you wonder why some good and strong person cannot be found to lead the way out of the trouble. The Lord wondered the same thing as He surveyed wicked Judah. Having enumerated the sins of the people, He told Ezekiel that He had searched in vain for someone who could "stand in the gap" between their guilt and His righteous wrath (Ezek. 22:30). No worthy go-between could be found.

Ultimately, only Christ is righteous enough to serve as the go-between to connect a holy God and sinful humanity (1 Tim. 2:5; Heb. 9:15). Apart from Him, none of us would be free of God's wrath, for all of us have sinned (Rom. 3:21–26). However, because Jesus took on Himself the judgment for our sin, we can have unimpeded access to God.

We can also act as go-betweens in the troubles around us, "standing in the gap" to bridge chasms of indifference and oppression. We can do what we can to stem the tide of evil and tell others of the opportunity to know God through Christ. And we can intercede for others in prayer.

22:30, 31 sought for: God could not find a spiritual leader to guide the people in godliness. Why not Ezekiel? (3:17–21; 33:1–6.) A qualified leader is useless if people refuse to be led. stand in the gap: The figure is of a wall with a section broken down by a siege. If no soldier stands in the gap to repulse the enemy, the city surely will be taken. God represented Himself as against His people. Unable to find anyone who, by life or by intercession, could turn aside that judgment (14:13–20), He will pour out His indignation on the city.

23:1, 2 The one mother of the two daughters was the Hebrew nation—Israel. The two daughters are the northern kingdom—Israel, or Samaria—and the southern kingdom—Judah. Though they did not split apart until after the death of Solomon, the allegory speaks from that later time and perspective as it presents a pictorial review of Israel's past.

23:3 It was during the formative years of the Hebrew nation in Egypt (its youth) that the Israelites began practicing political and spiritual prostitution by conforming themselves to the ways of the world, worshiping idols, and trusting in an earthly instead of heavenly power (16:26; 20:7, 8).

23:4 In Hebrew, the names Oholah, meaning "Her Own Tabernacle," and Oholibah, meaning "My Tabernacle Is in Her," seem to refer to God's sanctuaries in each land or, in a distinct usage, to the tent shrines for Canaanite idols as opposed to God's true temple (2 Sam. 6:17). Samaria is the elder (literally the "greater") because she first made political and idolatrous alliances with foreign nations and was the first to be punished by foreign captivity. They were Mine: The Lord identified both cities as a part of His chosen nation. sons and daughters: This phrase refers to the growth of the nation of Israel. They would become a powerful nation, but with pagan allies and a proliferation of idolaters.

23:5, 6 played the harlot: This word may be used for any immoral sexual acts. Here it refers to the nation placing its faith in and seeking strength and security from alliances with political powers instead of God (2 Kin. 15:17–20; 17:1–4; Hos. 12:1–2).

23:7–10 Ezekiel reminds his audience of how God already had judged Samaria through Assyrian conquest and captivity in 722 B.C. (2 Kin. 17:5–41). Uncovered her nakedness means to be stripped bare and so put to great shame. Became a byword means people began using the name "Samaria" as a synonym for "immoral nation."

23:11–14 Judah increased her harlotry by engaging in political and spiritual intercourse with first the Assyrians (vv. 12, 13; 2 Kin. 16:7–9) and then the Chaldeans (a regional term used for the entire Babylonian Empire; vv. 15, 17, 23). The last two lines tell how Judean envoys to Babylon became enamored of Babylonian rulers and their power through pictures (Jer. 22:14) on their palace and temple walls. Vermilion is a red color.

23:15–18 alienated herself: This is an allusion to Judah's turning in disappointment and disgust from relying on Babylon to relying on Egypt (2 Kin. 23:28–24:1). God's alienation from Jerusalem is an allusion to the city's coming defeat by Nebuchadnezzar in 586 B.C.

23:19, 20 Judah renewed its alliance with Egypt (Jer. 37:5–7), which is strikingly symbolized in this verse as a lustful, illicit lover (v. 3; 16:26).

23:21–27 God's verdict was that He would judge Jerusalem through Babylon, formerly an ally but now an enemy. Pekod, Shoa, Koa, … the Assyrians with them: These were tribal vassals of Babylon that would join the assault on Judah. A buckler was a large rectangular shield. Removing the nose and ears was an ancient punishment for adultery.

23:28–31 This "lover" was one whom the Judeans came to hate as an enemy. God explains that He would use the Babylonians as an instrument of His wrath: (1) to expose the extreme unfaithfulness of Judah and (2) to punish Judah for its idolatry that had resulted from forbidden political alliances (Ex. 20:1–6; 34:10–17; Deut. 18:9–14). The sister is Samaria (vv. 4, 33) with whom Jerusalem would share a similar destiny of destruction—her cup.

23:32–34 The cup is often symbolic of God's judgment (Ps. 75:7, 8; Jer. 25:15–29; Matt. 20:22; Rev. 14:10). break its shards: The phrase vividly portrays how completely Judah would drink the cup of wrath, breaking what was already broken. Tear at your own breasts pictures the resultant agony and anguish.

23:35 This verse summarizes why God was going to punish Jerusalem with such vengeance: you have forgotten Me. The people had intentionally ignored God, pictured by the parallel phrase cast Me behind your back.

23:36–39 adultery … defiled … slain: These themes have been developed previously (v. 8; 16:20, 21; Ex. 20:3–13, 22–26; 22:20; Lev. 18:21; 19:30; 20:1–5; Deut. 4:15–40). The religion of Judah had become so adulterated that the people did not recognize that child sacrifice to an idol and worship of the Lord wee totally incompatible.

23:40–42 Sabeans: This Hebrew word may also be read as "drunkards." The nomadic peoples east and south of Israel were considered uncivilized and repugnant by the Hebrews.

23:43–49 Alarmingly, those God would use to judge Samaria and Jerusalem (Assyria and Babylon, respectively) are here called righteous. Obviously this does not describe their standing before God or their way of life. Instead, it underlines their role as instruments of God's just judgment (vv. 46, 47; Deut. 22:13–30).

24:1, 2 This is the fourth chronological reference given by Ezekiel (1:2, 3; 8:1; 20:1). The date is January 588 B.C., the very day that Nebuchadnezzar—king of Babylon—began his attack on Jerusalem (2 Kin. 25:1–3; Jer. 39:1, 2; 52:1–6). Ezekiel was commanded to write down the name of the day. This would be a bitter reminder of God's trustworthiness to do what He promised through the prophets. Nebuchadnezzar's siege was God's judgment on Jerusalem.

IN CONTEXT

The City as a Melting Pot

Many cities today are called “melting pots” because of their large number of immigrants and the tendency of ethnic groups to assimilate into the larger culture over time. Jerusalem was, and always has been a melting pot of cultures. But around 588 B.C., the city became a melting pot of a different kind.

The Babylonians began a siege then that lasted for about two years, with one brief respite, and culminated in the fall of the city. Hundreds of miles away in Babylon, the Lord told Ezekiel to utter a parable about a pot of stew (Ezek. 24:3–5). Jerusalem was portrayed as a stew pot full of water, choice meats, and spices, with “fuel bones” (logs) blazing underneath. Some believe that Ezekiel’s parable was based on a folk song commonly sung by women as they prepared their food. The Lord may have turned a well-known ditty into a powerful spiritual lesson.

The illustration provided a recipe for cooking up a yummy stew. But the parable introduced a problem in the preparations. Scum (or rust) in the pot was spoiling the stew so that no one would want to eat it (24:6). By analogy, the sins of God’s people in Jerusalem had made them odious and distasteful. The Lord’s remedy was to “turn up the heat” (24:9), so much so that the water would eventually evaporate, the meat would burn up, the pot would turn red hot, and the scum would burn off (24:10–11). Thus God would cleanse the city of its impurities. That was essentially what the Babylonian siege accomplished.

In thinking about cities today, the image of the boiling pot is still appropriate. If a city is relatively healthy, it can stand a certain amount of “heat” and even profit from it. To some extent, heat and pressure necessary to fully cook the diverse ingredients and meld them together into an enjoyable, nutritious meal. On the other hand, when a city ignores its problems and allows spiritual and moral decline to go unchecked, an increase in heat can be explosive. In the worst case, it can lead to melt-down. That is what happened to Jerusalem when Babylon conquered it. What steps are you and your community taking to ensure that you avoid a similarly bad outcome?

24:3–5 The subject of this parable is explained in v. 2. The audience was again the rebellious house (2:3–8; 3:5–7; 11:3–12; 12:2, 22–28). Flock was symbolic of God's chosen people (compare ch. 34). Bones were sometimes used as a fuel for fire.

24:6 Bloody city explains why Jerusalem—the pot—must experience the heat of God's wrath (v. 9; 22:2–12) through the Babylonian siege that had now begun. The remainder of this verse announces the verdict: exile. Bring it out piece by piece refers to individual inhabitants, the "choice cuts" of meat in vv. 4, 5. no lot has fallen: God does not play favorites; His judgment would fall equally on all inhabitants of the city, for they all had sinned.

24:7, 8 These verses elaborate on the city's sin of bloodshed (v. 6). The people failed to deal with the sin, so God declares that it would remain exposed to His judgment (Gen. 4:10; Lev. 17:13; Is. 26:21).

24:9–15 have cleansed you, and you were not cleansed: This probably refers to the deportations of 605 and 597 B.C., whose cleansing effects were incomplete.

24:16, 17 the desire of your eyes: This refers to Ezekiel's wife (vv. 18, 21, 25). one stroke: This phrase is used elsewhere of a plague reflecting God's wrath (Ex. 9:14; Num. 14:37; 16:46). you shall neither mourn nor weep: This solemn command of God may be one of the hardest ever given to one of His servants. The picture of Ezekiel's wife dying and Ezekiel not being allowed to grieve illustrated God's pain over the death of His wife—Jerusalem—and His inability to mourn because the nation deserved the punishment. Ezekiel was called by God to "be a sign to the exiles" by demonstrating what they should do (vv. 21–23) in response to the "death" (destruction) of their desire and delight—their nation and its capital city. What Ezekiel was commanded to accept and do illustrated the degree of personal sacrifice and separation from ordinary life that the prophetic ministry often required. A long period of mourning was the normal, ritual response to the death of a loved one in the ancient Middle East (1 Sam. 4:12; 2 Sam. 1:12, 17; 3:31, 35; 15:30; 19:4; Is. 58:5; Jer. 16:7; Mic. 1:8, 10). The expression of those in mourning was not to bind the turban, but to remove it and replace it with dust. cover your lips: This alluded to the practice of covering the lower half of the face with a veil. The bread of sorrow was food given to a mourner after fasting.

24:18 did as I was commanded: Ezekiel had been given a revelatory command that was extremely hard for him personally. He faithfully communicated it to the people. His absolute obedience to the harshest of God's commands contrasted with the disobedience of his fellow citizens.

24:19, 20 tell us: When obedience to God demanded unusual actions, the people's curiosity about the reasons for such behavior was aroused, creating an opportunity for verbal witness about God's revelation (12:9; 21:7 for the two previous times of similar response).

24:21 the delight of your soul: The meaning "affection" is likely intended here. The entire phrase means something like the "object of your affections." The Judeans had the wrong kind of pride about the temple. Instead of the temple being a place of worship and house of God—My sanctuary—the Judeans took pride in the building as a sign of their importance. Therefore, God was going to profane it by allowing the Babylonians to capture the city and destroy the temple (v. 25; 2 Chr. 36:15–21; Lam. 1:10, 11). With no city or temple to boast about, the humbled Israelites could boast only in God's mercy.

24:22–24 The Judeans should or would respond to the death of the nation as Ezekiel had been told to respond to the death of his wife (vv. 15–18): they would not mourn their loss. The consistent purpose of divine discipline is seen again: you shall know that I am the Lord GOD (6:8–10; 12:15, 16). The trials would prompt the Israelites to depend on the Lord and know that He is holy. sign: See 12:3–7; 24:16, 17. When Jerusalem fell, God would prove Himself as trustworthy and righteous, and Ezekiel as His true prophet (v. 27).

24:25–27 When the one who escapes on the day Jerusalem falls (586 B.C.) arrives to give Ezekiel the news (perhaps about three months later), Ezekiel would be relieved of his inability to speak anything except judgment, and would be allowed to preach hope (vv. 1, 2, 24; 3:25–27; 33:21–39:29; 2 Kin. 25:8, 9).

25:1—32:32 These oracles serve as an interlude between Ezekiel's prophecies of judgment upon Judah in chs. 1—24 and his prophecies of restoration in chs. 33—48. Similar oracles appear in Isaiah (chs. 13—23) and Jeremiah (chs. 46—51). They are a reminder that though God would use the Gentiles to punish His people, those nations too must pass before the bar of divine justice.

25:1, 2 On Ammonites, see 21:20, 28. Ammon corresponds roughly to the present-day country of Jordan with its capital Amman.

25:3 For further background on the Ammonites and Ammon, see 6:11; 21:15; 26:2; 36:2; Neh. 4:7–9; Ps. 35:19–21; Jer. 49:1–6; Amos 1:13–15; Zeph. 2:8–11. Aha! An expression of mocking and delight.

25:4, 5 Men of the East is another title for the Babylonians (21:31). Ancient historical records mention Ammon's subjugation by Nebuchadnezzar five years after the fall of Jerusalem. Arab invaders came to dominate the territory, and Persian control began about 530 B.C.

25:6, 7 The Ammonites rejoiced at the destruction of Jerusalem and its temple; therefore, they would also be punished. The Ammonites were eventually to perish as a people.

25:8 Moab was south of Ammon, east of the Dead Sea and between the Arnon and Zered rivers. The Moabites descended from the incestuous relationship between Lot and his first daughter (Gen. 19:30–38). Seir (Edom) is mentioned because it was guilty of accusing Israel of being like all the nations (35:15; 36:5; Gen. 32:3; 36:8, 9). This accusation reflects Moab and Edom's malicious misinterpretation of Judah's misfortune as a proof that God was powerless (Gen. 12:1–3; Ex. 19:5, 6; Num. 22:12; Deut. 7:6–8; Jer. 48:27; Zeph. 2:8, 9).

25:9–11 the territory: This expression, literally meaning "shoulder" or "side," describes the northwest corner of Moab, the area most difficult to conquer due to its topography (a mountain plateau high above the Jordan valley). Apparently the attack would culminate in the ruin of Moab's glory, its frontier cities.

25:12 Edom was located south of Moab, from the Zered River south to the Gulf of Aqaba. The Edomites descended from Esau. On this vengeance of Edom see 35:10; 36:1–7 (compare Gen. 36:6, 7; Ps. 137:7; Lam. 4:21, 22; Amos 1:11, 12). The transgressions most characteristic of Edom were its perpetual animosity and repeated, vindictive acts of violence against Israel.

The Hebrew words rendered greatly offended (“be guilty”) may indicate continuous or repeated rather than intensive behavior.

25:13 The precise locations of Teman and Dedan are not known, but they probably are mentioned to convey the idea of Edom from one end to the other (Joel 3:19).

25:14 Since Edom had taken their revenge on the Judeans and showed them hostility when they needed help, God would show Edom His vengeance.

25:15 The Philistines were in southwest Palestine along the Mediterranean coast. They had a long history (the old hatred) of constant competition for control of Judah (Judg. 13—16; 1 Sam. 4; 13; 31; 2 Sam. 5:17–21). The Hebrew verb meaning “to take revenge” is found three times in this verse, indicating the great vengeance of which Philistia was guilty.

25:16, 17 Cherethites: This term (probably meaning “Cretans”) was used here as a substitute term for some or all of the Philistines, who migrated from Caphtor (understood to be Crete). Their more remote ancestors were Aegeans. See 1 Sam. 30:14; 2 Sam. 8:18; 15:18; Jer. 47:4; Amos 9:7; Zeph. 2:5.

26:1 The date places the prophetic pronouncements against Tyre, the Tyrian monarch, and Sidon somewhere in March or April of 587–586 B.C. (the eleventh year). This was at or just after the fall of Jerusalem (v. 2).

26:2 Tyre, in competition with Sidon (1 Kin. 16:31; Is. 23:2, 12), was a major seaport and leading city in Phoenicia (present-day Lebanon). has said: The past tense could refer to an event that had not yet taken place, using a Hebrew idiom which describes a future event as so certain that it can be expressed as having already been accomplished (Is. 9:6, 7; 52:13—53:12). I shall be filled was evidence of Tyre's greed and materialism, desiring any wealth of Jerusalem that could be found in its ruins after the Babylonian conquest.

26:3, 4 The armies (many nations; vv. 4, 7–14) that would attack Tyre are appropriately compared to waves of the sea, because the city of Tyre was an island fortress.

26:5 midst of the sea: Tyre was originally a rocky islet. Fortified, it proved impregnable for centuries, but now would be plundered.

26:6–14 The fulfillment of this prophecy of Tyre's fate began with the long siege of the city by the Babylonian army under Nebuchadnezzar (between 580–570 B.C.). Nebuchadnezzar ruled the Neo-Babylonian (Chaldean) Empire from 605–562 B.C. The second phase came with the Persian conquest in about 525 B.C., followed by the final and famous siege of 332 B.C. by the Greeks under Alexander, which completed the predictions of this passage (especially vv. 5, 14; 47:10). Note the switch from he to they (v. 12; v. 4) as well as the use of the pronoun "I" by God, which explains His sovereign control over all the nations (28:7; 29:8). Alexander literally fulfilled the words break down your walls (v. 5) when his army built a causeway half a mile long between the shore and the city on its island. He tore down defensive walls to build the causeway.

26:15, 16 The princes of the sea (27:35) were the rulers of various settlements in Phoenicia that were connected with Tyre. They would surrender and submit to Babylonian rule when they saw what happened to Tyre: be astonished at you. They would mourn in song (vv. 17, 18) after they took off their robes and embroidered garments (Jon. 3:6).

26:17–19 The deep is the same Hebrew word as in Gen. 1:2. Imagery of the chaotic waters of creation picture the coming catastrophe.

26:20, 21 The Pit is probably a synonym for hell (Is. 14:15; 38:18). never be inhabited: Ancient Tyre would cease to exist.

27:1–3 perfect: The proud citizens of Tyre saw themselves as the finest example of a merchant "ship" in the ancient world.

27:4–11 A description of the building, outfitting, and manning of the trading vessels that symbolized Tyre's glory. Material came from many points in the eastern Mediterranean world. Her shipbuilders, sailors, and mercenary soldiers came from as far as Africa, Asia Minor, and Persia.

27:5 Senir is an Amorite term used for Mount Hermon or another peak in its range. Fir is rendered elsewhere "pine," "cypress," or "juniper."

27:6 Bashan (39:18) was the broad and fertile plateau east of the Sea of Galilee and the upper Jordan.

27:7 Elishah has coasts and is associated here with Egypt; therefore it may be Italy or Sicily.

27:8 Sidon was a Phoenician seaport about thirty miles north of Tyre. The two cities were rivals, but Tyre tended to dominate Sidon (28:21, 22; Gen. 10:15, 19; Judg. 18:28; Is. 23:2; Matt. 11:21, 22). Like Tyre, the city of Arvad was on an island off the coast of Phoenicia. It was Phoenicia's northernmost town (28:11; Gen. 10:18; 1 Chr. 1:16).

27:9 Gebal was another successful Phoenician port, between Sidon and Arvad (Josh. 13:5; 1 Kin. 5:18). It was called Byblos by the Greeks and Romans, and Gubla by the Assyrians and Babylonians.

27:10, 11 Lydia and Libya are literally Lud and Put, usually understood to be in western Asia Minor (Lud) and Africa (Put).

27:12 Tarshish was possibly in Spain.

27:13 Javan is Greece (Gen. 10:4). Tubal and Meshech are thought to have been in eastern Asia Minor (modern Turkey).

27:14 On the house of Togarmah, see Gen. 10:3. This phrase may refer to the people of Armenia in eastern Asia Minor (38:6).

27:15 Dedan may perhaps be understood as "Redan" (Rhodes), because the written forms of the Hebrew letters for d and r are easily confused. Rhodes was a major trading center in the southern Aegean Sea.

27:16 The Hebrew term for emeralds may also be translated "turquoise."

27:17 Minnith was in Ammon (21:28) and presumably was famous for its fine wheat. Millet translates a Hebrew word that apparently stands for some type of food, but exactly what kind is not known today. Balm was an aromatic resin or other gummy substance that may have had medicinal value (Jer. 8:22).

27:18 Damascus was and is the capital of Syria (v. 16). Helbon is north of Damascus, a region still recognized for its wine production. The phrase rendered white wool is understood by some to mean “wool from Zachar,” a place possibly associated with modern Sachra, also north of Damascus, where goat and sheep are common.

27:19, 20 Dan seems out of place in this context, so some transliterate the Hebrew as Wedan. Others argue that the name Dan is another title for Greece. Cassia (Ex. 30:24; Ps. 45:8; Song 4:14) was either a type of cinnamon tree or a plant from which perfume and incense were made. Cane refers to an oil-producing reed found in swamps.

27:21 Kedar was a nomadic tribe in Arabia.

27:22 Sheba and Raamah were located near Arabia (Gen. 10:6, 7).

27:23, 24 Ancient Haran was a merchant city along the important Euphrates trade route (Gen. 11:27–32), in what is now eastern Turkey. Canneh (Is. 10:9), Eden, and Chilmad were probably in Mesopotamia, most likely south of Haran (2 Kin. 19:12). The verse seems concerned with cities, so Assyria is better translated Asshur, a city south of Nineveh; but the term could stand for the citizens of Assyria. On Sheba, see v. 22.

27:25, 26 The east wind was often powerful and potentially destructive (Gen. 41:6; Job 27:21; Ps. 48:7; Is. 27:8). Thus it symbolizes the destruction the Babylonian army would bring on Tyre. In 26:7, Babylon would come from the “north.” This was the direction from which the army would invade Phoenicia.

27:27, 28 The common-land was the pastureland controlled by a city.

27:29–36 The final verses of the chapter present a remorseful and revengeful lament to be chanted, perhaps over and over, by Tyre’s trade partners. Tyre’s nearest neighbors (26:16–18) would be greatly troubled by Tyre’s defeat, but soon they would turn against Tyre themselves in the vain hope of escaping a similar fate at the hands of the Babylonians.

28:1–10 Because Tyre's great splendor and sin were the by-products, primarily, of the influence and intentions of its king, Ezekiel is led by God to proclaim the reasons for (vv. 2–6) and means of judgment (vv. 7–10) against its chief ruler and most prominent citizens.

28:1–3 you are wiser than Daniel: The Hebrew name Daniel is spelled here the same way as in 14:14: Dan-El. It might refer to a different person otherwise unknown in Israel's ancient history.

28:4–7 The strangers are the Babylonians (7:17–19; 23:23; 30:11; 31:12; 32:12).

28:8, 9 The phrase midst of the seas parallels the word Pit and reinforces its meaning, for it too signifies the place and fact of death.

28:10 the death of the uncircumcised: This term denotes a disgraceful death (31:18; 32:19).

28:11–19 Interpretations of this difficult passage explain the unusual wording in one of three ways generally: (1) Satan being symbolized by the "king"; (2) the historical king(s) of Tyre being compared to Adam; or, (3) the king(s) being addressed with hyperbolic language and described through allusions to Phoenician religious, mythological literature and/or religious and social practices common in Canaan and the ancient Near East. The first approach is popular and sensational but satisfies the understanding of only a few pieces of the entire passage. The second and more so the third approaches answer the most questions about the nature and import of the language in light of: (1) the immediate and larger literary contexts (chs. 26—27; 28:1–10); and, (2) what has been learned about the historical, cultural, and mythological contexts. To see Satan is not the most normal, natural, logical, and expected reading of this text consistent with the various contexts.

28:12 Seal of perfection is more literally "the one sealing a plan" (the same Hebrew word for "plan" or "pattern" appears once more at 43:10). In effect, the king affixed the official seal of his signet ring to the plans that made Tyre one of the leading centers of commerce in that day. wisdom … beauty: These descriptions mark out the king of Tyre as an exceptional ruler, displaying the ideals of kingship in the ancient Middle East.

28:13 in Eden, the garden of God: This is possibly an exaggerated comparison: this king invaded a place like Eden in its beauty. created: The Hebrew verb for created is the same as the one used in Gen. 1:1. Just as in Genesis, the word emphasizes God's active work in history. It was God's sovereign plan and purpose to allow this man to become king.

28:14 The holy mountain of God could be "the holy mountain of gods." According to Canaanite beliefs, the "seat of the gods" was in the "mountains," or the "mountains of the north" (Ps. 48:2). The focus here seems to be on the king of Tyre's attempt to enter into the council of the gods. So instead of the verse referring to the king's presence in Jerusalem, it could refer more logically to a Phoenician ritual, the celebration of their patron god Melqart's fiery resurrection. This king wanted to imitate Melqart.

28:15 The Hebrew term rendered perfect does not mean sinless, but complete or flawless. The king of Tyre had been in complete control and was unchallenged until he was filled with prideful iniquity.

28:16–19 The king's pride led to materialism, violence, and sinfulness in business and religion. abundance of your trading: The expression is most easily and appropriately applied to the human king who was the driving force behind the development of Tyre's commercial empire. The true God—the pronoun I—dethroned the king, derailed his unholy ambitions, and destroyed the source of his pride in order to make his example a deterrent to others. The king's commercial empire collapsed and his machinations to resemble a god were crushed in the sight of local rulers who would gaze in astonishment.

28:20–23 Sidon was Tyre's sister city, but its lesser importance may explain the brevity of treatment here (27:8). As commercial "sisters," the cities had similar characters and concerns, so they shared similar crimes. The LORD displayed justice through deserved judgment so the people would recognize that He is the true and righteous God.

28:24 God would free Israel. The brier and thorn refer to the nations around Israel who had been enemies and evil influences. When the judgments were executed fully, these nations would no longer be able to harass and oppress Israel.

28:25, 26 God promised that Israel will someday be gathered from its dispersion among the nations to return and dwell in their own land, the land that God had given to Jacob (the land of Canaan; 11:17; 20:41, 42; ch. 33—39; Gen. 12:7; 26:3; 28:10–13; 35:12; Jer. 30:10). The end of the foreign nations' ability to attack Israel will lead to a time of peace, prosperity, and protection.

29:1 tenth year … tenth month: This is December 588 or January 587 B.C. This introduction of another date by Ezekiel (his sixth) is a chronological break, but not a thematic break, with 26:1—28:26 (1:2; 8:1; 20:1; 24:1; 26:1).

29:2 The Pharaoh was Hophra (around 589–570 B.C.; Jer. 44:30). The prophecy against him was also a prophecy against all Egypt (30:22; 32:2), like the previous prophecy against Tyre and its king (28:1–19). The context suggests that literal, human kings were meant in chs. 28 and 29.

29:3 O great monster: The Pharaoh is pictured here as a crocodile. My river refers to the Nile. Pharaoh's arrogant pride is described by his words about the Nile River, I have made it for myself (compare with the words of the king of Tyre, 28:2). In the Egyptian religion the crocodile god Sebek was a protector (32:2).

29:4, 5 Whereas v. 3 explains why Pharaoh would be punished, these verses explain how the punishment would be accomplished. The imagery pictures a crocodile being caught, carried out of the water onto land, and left as carrion. The fish represent the Egyptians, who would be judged along with Pharaoh (v. 2). Pharaoh's destiny to be food may have been an intentional insult to the rulers famous for their burials and pyramids.

29:6, 7 God's purpose for judging Egypt was to encourage the nations and individuals to come to know Him (6:14; 7:27; 12:20; 14:11; 22:16; 23:49; 25:7, 11, 17; 28:24). Staff of reed refers to the people of Egypt. This alludes to Egypt's weakness as an ally and the worthlessness of that country's protection (Is. 36:6). Israel was foolish to rely on Egypt for protection. They should have turned to God for their security and strength.

29:8 sword: Here is another reference to the Babylonian army under Nebuchadnezzar, the predicted human instrument of God's coming wrath (21:1–7, 9–11, 19, 20; 26:7–14).

29:9 The nation was indicted as a result of what he—that is, Pharaoh—boasted. Often national monuments were inscribed in ancient times with the exaggerated and arrogant boasts of kings.

29:10 Migdol to Syene refers to places most likely near the northern and southern boundaries of ancient Egypt, indicating the totality of the land (Judg. 20:1). The desolation would extend to the land south of Egypt—ancient Nubia which is modern Sudan.

29:11, 12 The Egyptians would experience a scattering to other lands for forty years (4:4–8). A Babylonian chronicle suggests that Egypt was conquered around 568 B.C. Forty years after this date, the Persians instituted a policy of resettlement for many of the peoples who had been dispersed by Babylon.

29:13–15 The land of Pathros is southern Egypt. This kingdom would thereafter be lowly and the lowliest, never again to dominate other nations.

29:16, 17 came to pass: Ezekiel received this oracle from God (vv. 17–21) and apparently the following message also (30:1–19) in March-April 571 B.C., the latest date in the book (v. 1).

29:18 labor strenuously: This recalls the difficult siege of Tyre. Heads were made bald and shoulders rubbed raw in the protracted siege, which took thirteen or more years. yet neither: The fact was that neither Nebuchadnezzar nor his army received much of a reward for their efforts.

29:19, 20 God affirms that He is sovereign over the coming fall of Egypt to Babylon to make up for the wages they had not received from their conquest of Tyre. God specifically named Nebuchadnezzar as his instrument (Jer. 43:8–13). The Babylonian chronicles imply that Babylon invaded Egypt in approximately 568 B.C.

29:21 In that day: This refers to the day when Egypt would fall to Babylon, and a prophecy about the Messiah should not be read into this text. Cause the horn … of Israel to spring forth means that the nation would renew its strength. Renewal and encouragement would come to God's people in exile when they heard about Egypt's downfall orchestrated by the hand of God, who is holy and sovereign. I will open your mouth was God's promise to restore Ezekiel's speech (33:22) and therefore to magnify Himself and His ways: know that I am the LORD.

IN CONTEXT

Under Siege!

From ancient times, large cities have often protected themselves by building massive walls that would be difficult if not impossible to breach. An enemy might try pushing down or burning the city gates or tunneling under the walls, but these strategies were not always prudent. An alternative was to build siege ramps and mounds next to the walls—an approach that Jeremiah predicted would be taken against Jerusalem (6:6).

A siege ramp was an earthen incline made by piling up dirt, boulders, trees, and other debris against the besieged city's wall. When preparations had been made for an assault, soldiers could march up the ramp to the top of the wall and fight their way over. An example of such a ramp built by the Romans is still in place at the ancient fortress of Masada in southeastern Israel.

30:1–3 The phrase the day of the LORD here refers to the period of divine wrath on the nation of Egypt. This term suggests God's personal involvement in His judgmental work. In this context (vv. 4–19) God would use Babylon under Nebuchadnezzar to punish Egypt and her allies (Gen. 12:3; Jer. 25; 46). the time of the Gentiles: That is, the time of God's wrath on the nations.

30:4, 5 Ethiopia is the Hebrew Cush, and refers to the area south of Egypt toward modern Ethiopia; see 29:10. Libya and Lydia were in Africa and Asia Minor; see 27:10. Mingled people may be read as "all of Arabia." Chub is an obscure term that was understood as the "Libyans" by the Septuagint translators of the Hebrew OT. The allied lands were lands to the south, east, and west of Egypt that would also fall to the Babylonian army.

30:6, 7 Migdol to Syene means the whole land of Egypt; see 29:10.

30:8 Fire is often symbolic of judgment (20:47; Is. 4:4).

30:9 This day of Egypt—the day that Egypt and her allies would be conquered—was part of a larger period of God's judgment on the nations outside Israel by means of Babylon; in fact, Ezekiel describes the Babylonians as messengers sent from God Himself. No one could prevent the coming day of judgment, for the Almighty had ordained it: for indeed it is coming.

30:10–12 These verses add extra details to the more general predictions about Egypt's doom in the preceding verses (vv. 3–9). Most terrible of the nations was applied to the Babylonians, for their cruelty was legendary (2 Kin. 25:7; 2 Chr. 33:11; 36:17; Jer. 39:4–10).

A portion of a pagan temple at Luxor, Egypt, a city referred to as No in the Bible. Ezekiel predicted that Egypt and its cities would fall to the Babylonians as a result of God's judgment (Ezek. 30:13–19).

30:13–19 This fourth and final message adds more detail to the description of the coming destruction of Egypt. Emphasis seems to be placed on the fall of major cities. Noph was ancient Memphis, a significant city in Egypt. It was capital of the Old Kingdom in the third century B.C. On Pathros, see 29:14, 15. Zoan, the classical Tanis, was a city in the northeastern delta. No was ancient Thebes, the capital of Upper or southern Egypt. Thebes was destroyed by the Assyrians in 661 B.C. Sin was ancient Pelusium, a fortress town on the northeastern border where the ruling Egyptian dynasty of Ezekiel's day had a residence: the strength of Egypt. Aven (or Heliopolis, "the City of the Sun") was ancient On, a center for worship of the sun-god Re. Aven was north of Memphis at the southern tip of the delta. Pi Beseth, or Bubastis in Greek form, was once the capital of Lower Egypt (the northern or Nile Delta area). Tehaphnehes was also a fortress town on the northeastern border, the place where the Babylonian army would enter Egypt to bring this dark day. A cloud would arise from burning the city, and its vassal villages—her daughters—would be attacked and set ablaze also.

30:20 first month: March-April 587 B.C. (29:1, 18–20). Ezekiel returns to a chronological sequence for the prophecies.

30:21 I have broken the arm of Pharaoh: The prophecy refers to Pharaoh Hophra's unsuccessful attempt to relieve the siege of Jerusalem just a few months earlier (29:2, 6, 7). God used Nebuchadnezzar to defeat the Egyptian army. A muscular arm, as a symbol of the king's (and thus the army's) strength, often appeared in Egyptian art and architecture. Even Hophra took the title "He Who Is Strong-Armed." That God had broken Pharaoh's arm symbolized his complete defeat.

30:22–26 I will scatter: These verses predict the continued weakness of Hophra against Nebuchadnezzar and the coming catastrophe for all Egypt when its cities would be defeated and the people deported (beginning around 568 B.C.).

31:1, 2 third month: May-June, 587 B.C. See 1:2; 8:1; 20:1; 24:1, 2; 26:1; 29:1, 17; 30:20.

31:3 Egypt was compared to Assyria in greatness and presumably in its great pride over its achievements. Ezekiel uses another allegory (15:1–8; 17:1–10): Assyria as a cedar in Lebanon. This image pictures the nations as trees in a forest in Lebanon (a country prized for its cedar trees; vv. 15–18; 1 Kin. 5:7–10; 7:2, 3; Ps. 29:5). Assyria at one time was the highest tree, but it had been cut down. Its capital city Nineveh fell in 612 B.C., signaling the end of Assyrian domination and the beginning of neo-Babylonian control of the ancient Middle East.

31:4 The waters were the Tigris and Euphrates rivers. These mighty rivers brought agricultural fertility and fostered the development of great cities along trade routes (vv. 8, 9; 15–18; Gen. 2:10–14).

31:5–9 The unparalleled greatness of Assyria is portrayed with vivid poetic images. There is both comparison and contrast with Egypt. Before turning to the mostly narrative explanation in vv. 10–18, the prophet indicates that though Egypt was great, it was not the greatest nation. If Assyria had fallen to Babylon, no hope would remain for Egypt (31:18).

31:10–14 Because Assyria gloated over her greatness, God sentenced this cruel nation to harsh treatment and subjection under Babylon, the mighty one of the nations. I will deliver: The past tense, "I delivered," would be more accurate for this context. The meaning is that Babylon, the terrible nation, had cut Assyria down. The picturesque conclusion to this second message of ch. 31 indicates that all the other nations (birds, beasts, and trees) that observed Assyria's ruin would share its destiny of death, depths, and the Pit, and would never attain its heights of power.

31:15–17 Hell renders the Hebrew word sometimes transliterated as Sheol, which often merely speaks of the grave or death (Gen. 37:35; Ps. 6:5; Jon. 2:2). God had dried up or devastated Assyria, and all the nations were caused to mourn for it and shake because of its death and burial, as it was cast into hell, the Pit, and the depths of the earth. Those nations, the trees of Eden, who were guilty of a similar, sinful pride in their achievements would receive the same punishment.

31:18 If Assyria, the greatest nation, had fallen to the Babylonians, surely a nation less great would also fall. This pointed to Egypt—Pharaoh and all his multitude (vv. 2, 3, 5–9).

32:1 twelfth month: February-March 585 B.C. (31:1), after the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. (2 Kin. 25:8), but about twenty years before the Babylonian invasion of Egypt (29:19–20). However, the record of the fall of Jerusalem is given in 33:21. This section (32:1–33:20) is placed before 33:21, though it reports events that follow the fall of Jerusalem. Ezekiel's arrangement is thematic. He can first record his lament, and then explain the events that inspired it. Though the Egyptians arrogantly thought that they, unlike Judah, would not fall to Babylon's forces, they would eventually experience the same fate as the citizens of Jerusalem.

32:2 The words lion and monster depict Egypt as proud and powerful.

32:3–10 These poetic lines picture Egypt and its ruler, Hophra, as a crocodile who is going to experience the judgment ordained by God. Egypt will be caught, killed, and consigned to darkness—a recognizable element of the day of the Lord (30:1–5; Amos 5:18–20; Acts 2:20).

32:11–15 This section interrupts the flow of vv. 3–10. The king of Babylon was Nebuchadnezzar. the most terrible of the nations: That is, the Neo-Babylonian Empire (30:10–12). rivers run like oil: This phrase, not used elsewhere, pictures the time following massive killing when the Nile and its tributaries would experience a "deadly" calm. The waters will be clear because there will be no human or animal life.

32:16 Such a scene of judgment will produce mourning and great grief; but God is to be seen as just and doing what was necessary to stop the people's arrogance. The daughters of the nations: These were among the "many peoples" in vv. 9, 10 who shall lament and be astonished over Egypt's destruction.

32:17 This is fifteen days later than v. 1, still in 585 B.C.

32:18–21 Depths of the earth, the Pit, and hell refer to the grave or death, not the place of eternal punishment for God's enemies.

32:22, 23 Assyria was the master of the ancient Middle Eastern world until the rise of the neo-Babylonians around 612 B.C., early in Jeremiah's career and about 20 years before Ezekiel's first vision.

32:24, 25 Elam was east and southeast of Assyria, in what is now Iran. The people of Elam were descended from one of the sons of Shem (Gen. 10:22; 1 Chr. 1:17).

32:26, 27 Meshech and Tubal: These peoples were located in ancient Anatolia or Asia Minor, present-day Turkey. These names are mentioned as sons of Japheth (Gen. 10:2; 1 Chr. 1:5).

32:28, 29 Ezekiel switches suddenly to the second person singular—you—as a wake-up call or reminder to Pharaoh, the representative of Egypt. Yes is an emphatic use of the conjunction otherwise translated as “and.”

32:30 The princes of the north are lands north of Israel such as Tyre and Sidon in Phoenicia. The Sidonians were from Sidon, a seaport on the coast about 30 miles north of Tyre (27:8).

32:31, 32 Pharaoh: Now the message (vv. 17–32) comes full circle. The point is that Egypt and Pharaoh will die like the other nations at the hand of the living God, who judges every nation with justice.

33:1–11 This passage is concerned with Ezekiel's responsibility as a watchman as it relates to the nation's depravity and captivity: (1) his call and culpability (vv. 1–6); (2) his commission (vv. 7–9); and, (3) his concluding words of conviction (vv. 10, 11).

33:1–6 The watchman is not responsible for the consequences of disobedience if he faithfully sounds the warning as God has instructed him.

33:1, 2 The children of your people refers to fellow Israelites in exile with Ezekiel, now including the people of Judah deported to Babylon after Nebuchadnezzar's third invasion.

(Heb. tsaphah) (3:17; 33:2; 1 Sam. 14:16; Hos. 9:8) Strong’s #6822: This Hebrew noun is derived from the verb meaning “to watch in anticipation.” This verb is used to describe the actions of individuals waiting in ambush as they watch for their prey (Ps. 37:32). Watchman was an official military position. They were stationed on the towers of a city and were responsible for spotting approaching armies and sounding the alarm to warn the city (1 Sam. 14:16). The imagery behind the watchman is much like that of the shepherd, though watchman as a symbolic title was limited to the office of a prophet (Hos. 9:8). A watchman’s failure was punishable by death. In the case of Ezekiel, punishment would come directly from God if he failed to report to the people the messages God gave him (33:8).

33:3–9 Ezekiel’s duty as a watchman is defined. Compare also the responsibility of the elders of the church in the NT to “watch” (Acts 20:31; Heb. 13:17; 1 Pet. 5:1–4).

33:10 pine away: This phrase means to rot, waste, or dwindle.

33:11–20 In punishing Israel, God was being faithful to the covenant stipulations. This covenant had been approved by the Israelites. They had agreed to its commands and accepted the consequences of breaking them, corporately and individually (5:8–17; 12:15, 16; 16:60, 61; 18:19–32; 20:5; Ex. 19:1–9; Deut. 27). God presents His rationale in these verses for deciding who would be rewarded with life and who would suffer death: He would save those who repent and turn to Him, but would condemn those who trust in themselves and do evil. After presenting His rationale, God declares that His judgment is just and fair—certainly more just than the practices of the Israelites.

33:21—48:35 The final, large collection of messages in Ezekiel communicates comfort and consolation to the exiles in Babylon following the shock of the destruction of Jerusalem. Until Jerusalem had fallen, Ezekiel’s message was predominantly negative, insisting that the city would be destroyed. But after news about that event came (33:21), God’s message immediately turned to hope: hope for a new leadership (ch. 34), a new spirit (chs. 36, 37) a new victory (chs. 38, 39), and a new temple (chs. 40—48).

33:21, 22 In January 585 B.C., Ezekiel received the news that Jerusalem had been taken. The city had been under siege by Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonians for two and a half years (2 Kin. 25:1–10). These two verses introduce six oracles (33:23—39:29). Ezekiel received a message from the LORD and reported it to the exiles in Babylon.

33:23 Ezekiel's introductory formula—identical or similar to this verse—marks the beginning of the messages received from the LORD in this section of the book (33:21—39:29).

33:24 they who inhabit those ruins: This refers to the people who had remained in Jerusalem. They thought they were the remnant—the faithful ones. But they experienced the final siege of the city by King Nebuchadnezzar, for reasons God will give in the following verses.

33:25–29 Ezekiel confronted his people with specific examples of their past and present refusal to obey God's revealed will for their lives (18:6, 10; 22:11; Ex. 20:4, 5, 13–14; Lev. 7:26, 27; 17:10–14; 19:26; Deut. 12:16, 23). Was it not then reasonable that God would punish the present generation by removing them from the land, at least temporarily? The writer of Hebrews, after using the example of Israel's failure to enter the land (ch. 3), admonished the church in a similar way (Heb. 4:1).

33:30–33 This section contrasts the actions and attitudes of the exiles with the life of God's prophet Ezekiel. The exiles had claimed to go to the prophet to receive God's revelation, but their behavior was inconsistent with their stated beliefs. Their true desire was for entertainment, not for divine enlightenment. If the fall of Jerusalem failed to awaken them spiritually, nothing would. Yet it certainly would open their eyes to the divine truth of Ezekiel's preaching. In these verses then, God also comforted and consoled Ezekiel. The musical terms may relate to the lyrical nature, and Ezekiel's singing or chanting, of some of these oracles (19:1; 21:9–12).

33:31 hear … do not do: See James 1:21–25 for another condemnation of those who hear God's word but do not put it into practice.

34:1–31 In this section, God fingers the failures of Israel's leaders (vv. 1–6) and then forcasts: (1) their end (vv. 7–10); (2) His own shepherding style (vv. 11–16), which is marked by condemnation (vv. 17–19) and salvation (vv. 20–24); and, (3) a covenant of peace and prosperity (vv. 25–31).

34:1–6 The shepherds of Israel is a metaphor for Israel's political rulers, but it could include spiritual leaders also (even kings were supposed to be spiritual examples). The shepherds were accused of forsaking the key feature of godly leadership: selfless, sacrificial service (Is. 52:13—53:12; Matt. 23:11; Mark 10:45; Luke 22:24–30; Acts 20:17–38; Rom. 12:1–5; Phil. 2:1–11; 1 Tim. 3:1–7; 1 Pet. 2:18–25; 5:1–4). The results of self-serving leadership for Israel are seen in vv. 5, 6. there was no shepherd: This means that having leaders who seek to be served, rather than to serve, is tantamount to having no leader at all; therefore, the people of Israel were like sheep without a shepherd (Matt. 9:36). They were aimless—wandered—and easily attacked—became food. Scattered alluded to Israel's deportations and dispersion among the nations.

34:7–10 did not feed My flock: The crimes of Israel's leaders come under review before their punishment is pronounced.

34:11–16 Compare the Lord's persistent shepherding and guiding of His people with the faithlessness of Israel's leaders in v. 6 (vv. 25–31; Jer. 23:1–6; John 10:1–30). See also Ps. 23, where similar ideas pertain to God's shepherding of the individual rather than corporate Israel. The cloudy and dark day was the day Jerusalem fell (30:1–5; Zeph. 1:15). It may also speak of the future day of deliverance when God will seek out His sheep (36:16–36). Israel, though guilty and misguided, would eventually be rescued by the divine Good Shepherd and restored to the promised land (chs. 33—39).

IN DEPTH

Shepherds

Throughout the Bible, the image of the shepherd is important. From David, the shepherd boy who became the first king of Israel, to Jesus Christ, who said of Himself, “I am the good shepherd” (John 10:11), the shepherd represents one who loves and cares for his flock just as a leader or ruler cares for those under his charge.

Some characteristics of a good shepherd include feeding the flock, tending the weak and sick, searching for the lost, guiding with love, gathering and protecting the sheep, and giving one’s best to them. On the other hand, a bad shepherd is more concerned about feeding himself, worrying about his own health, guiding with a heavy hand, abandoning or scattering his flock, and keeping the best for himself.

It’s easy to see in these comparisons why the Scriptures often exhort leaders to be shepherds to their people. A good leader is concerned that the people’s physical needs are being met and that care is provided for the sick and injured. A true leader looks for those who have fallen away. He leads like a shepherd by providing direction and correction, not with a fist but with a loving hand. A good leader protects those under his care and does not leave them to the wolves—to those who lead them astray. And finally, a good leader gives of himself to those under his charge. He cares about them and their well-being.

Because Jesus called Himself the Good Shepherd, it’s clear that He is the One about whom Ezekiel prophesied. He is the One who searches after His followers (34:11), saves them (34:12), guides them (34:13), and supplies their needs (34:14; John 10). Jesus’ self-sacrificing life provides the perfect blueprint for making a good shepherd and leader.

34:17–22 The rams and goats were the leaders of Israel who had failed to lead properly. They had used their positions of power to their own advantage and to the disadvantage of the people.

34:23, 24 The change from the pronoun I to he in this verse indicates that God would continue operating as the Chief Shepherd through this chosen future ruler from the Davidic line. He is the Messiah—God’s only Son and His servant.

34:25–31 The exiles were encouraged through this promise of a covenant of peace (37:26–28; 38:11–13; 39:25–29; Is. 54:10), which was characterized by these promises: (1) security from foreign aggressor nations, the wild beasts; (2) showers of blessing, meaning productivity and prosperity; and, (3) the certainty that the LORD is Israel's God and desires reunion with His people and a lasting relationship built on a new covenant (Jer. 31:31–34; Heb. 8:6).

35:1, 2 Mount Seir is Edom (v. 15; 25:8; Gen. 36:30; 2 Chr. 20:10). It was the rugged and mountainous area south of the Dead Sea inhabited by the descendants of Esau. The enmity between Esau and Jacob began with the selling of his birthright for a mess of pottage. However, he had been a rebel at heart before the incident. Edom's hatred against Israel continued until Jerusalem's destruction.

35:3, 4 God reveals the nature and the purpose of His judgment on Edom (Seir, v. 2). These verses are poetry and perhaps were used as a song.

35:5 at the time of their calamity: This refers to how Edom took advantage of the people of Judah during and after the Babylonian invasion (Obad. 11–14).

35:6–9 Having stated why Edom deserved judgment, Ezekiel explained how the nation would be punished. The punishment would include widespread death and unrelieved destruction (Is. 34:6–8; 63:1–6; Jer. 49:7–13; Obad. 18).

35:10 A second reason for God's revenge on Edom is given, in addition to that in v. 5—Edom expected to take over Judah and Israel after their destruction by the Babylonians. These two nations refers to Israel and Judah (37:15–28).

36:1–7 The land of Israel itself was addressed—the mountains—because the nations desired to own it and, in seeking possession, destroyed it physically and defamed it verbally. Israel was termed the ancient heights because of the hill country central to its geography. God is glorified and the exiles comforted by the following: (1) exposing the crimes of the enemies of His nation; (2) exonerating His land from false charges (vv. 13–15); and, (3) executing judgment and justice against the foreign nations. Edom: This nation was singled out because of its long history of animosity toward Israel (35:5). The rest of the nations were the others who in some way had mistreated Israel and thus received a sentence of judgment (chs. 25—32).

36:8, 9 they are about to come: This was spoken to the land, picturing it as eagerly awaiting the quick return of its rightful and most respectful owners. The first return from exile would come under the Persian king Cyrus, about fifty years later (538 B.C.).

36:10, 11 This restoration would involve all the house of Israel.

36:12–14 My people Israel: Despite all their sinfulness, which the book has taken enormous pains to detail and describe, the nation was still referred to as the people of God. They would finally and forever take possession of their land, symbolized by the mountains and the central hills of Palestine, which are personified as you in this verse.

36:15, 16 The mountains addressed as you would no longer cause the nation to stumble, for God would make the nation secure from foreign armies. God Himself would reestablish the nation and place His prince on its throne (34:24).

36:17 like the uncleanness of a woman: The uncleanness of the blood of menstruation (not the woman herself) was compared to the past behavior of Israel in Canaan (18:6; 22:10; Lev. 12:2–5; 15:19–30).

36:18 Israel had defiled God’s territorial gift in two main ways: (1) The nation had shed innocent people’s blood. (2) The nation had worshiped idols by mixing the true worship of the Lord God with involvement in the idolatrous and immoral practices of pagan religions.

36:19 God judged them according to their ways. Israel had been hypocritical and unholy; they had not separated themselves or made themselves distinct from the pagan world around them (v. 18). God had given His people the promised land as a place where they could show the world the difference it makes to follow the true God (Deut. 7:1–11). They failed to follow God, so He forced them out of the land. Through either their obedience or their disobedience, God would demonstrate to the watching world His personality, power, and plans.

36:20, 21 The most tragic outcome of Israel's sin (vv. 18, 19) was that the nation profaned God's holy name. Defeat and dispersion, especially in the ancient world, were negative reflections on the character (or the name, see 20:9) of a nation's god. God's reputation as wholly set apart from other so-called gods in power and purpose was compromised by Israel's refusal to trust in His ways, whether in their own land or in exile. To rescue His holy reputation and His rebellious people, God remained faithful to His promises in the Mosaic covenant.

36:22–32 This section concerns the restoration of God's people to the promised land The same features and format of restoration seen in Deut. 29:1—30:10 also appear here: (1) preservation/restoration (vv. 22–24); (2) purification (v. 25); (3) regeneration/empowerment (vv. 26, 27); and, (4) abundant provision and production (vv. 28–30).

36:22–24 The preview of the return to the land in the Mosaic covenant is related to the promise of perpetual—but not necessarily uninterrupted—possession of the land of Canaan in the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 12:1–3; 13:14–18; 15:12–21; Hos. 3:4).

36:25 Sprinkle clean water on you symbolizes cleansing from sin (v. 17; 11:18; 37:23; Jer. 33:8). This is God's forgiveness based on a blood atonement (Ex. 12:22; Lev. 14:4–7, 51; Num. 19:14–22; Ps. 51:7; Zech. 13:1; 1 Cor. 6:11; Heb. 10:22.).

36:26, 27 The ritual of purification from sin would be empty and meaningless apart from true repentance and the regenerating and empowering work of the Holy Spirit on the inner spirit of individuals. God would not only restore the people physically to the land, but would restore them spiritually, by giving them a new heart and new spirit to help them follow Him and do His will. (11:19–20; 18:31; 37:14; 39:29; Jer. 31:31–34; Joel 2:28, 29; Acts 2:17, 18; Rom. 7:7–8:11; 2 Cor. 3:3–18; Heb. 8:6—10:39.) 36:28–30 you shall be My people: See vv. 1–15; 34:29. The purpose of the Mosaic covenant would finally be realized (Deut. 26:16–19; 29:13; 30:8). The Israelites would become a people dedicated to God's ways.

36:31, 32 These verses restate the reasons for the planned restoration and renewal of God's people. The restoration from the Exile would recover God's glorious reputation among the nations and erase the guilt of the Israelite's sin. This is all a product of God's favor on the Israelites—even though they had done nothing to merit such mercy.

36:33–35 The garden of Eden is mentioned here to suggest beauty, fertility, and productivity so great that people would be reminded of the "garden eastward in Eden" (Gen. 2:8; contrast 28:13).

36:36–38 Like a flock … flocks of men: Animals offered for sacrifice had to be free from any observable impurity or disfigurement. The returned people of God will be living sacrifices (Rom. 12:1, 2), pure and unblemished. I am the LORD: This is the constant refrain of Ezekiel; God would make Himself known as the one true God in both His judgment and His restoration of His people.

IN COMPARISON

The Visions of Ezekiel

Vision	Reference	Significance
God	1:1–28	Ezekiel is called, commissioned, and empowered with an overwhelming vision of divine glory.
Abominations in the temple	8:1–18	Ezekiel is transported to Jerusalem where he sees pagan idols in the temple and Israelites worshiping these false gods. God reveals His anger to Ezekiel over such sinful behavior.
People slain in Jerusalem	9:1–11	Ezekiel witnesses a violent vision in which Israelites of all ages are judged and killed because of their rebelliousness and idolatry.
The temple and the cherubim	10:1–22	Ezekiel watches God's glory and the mysterious cherubim depart from the temple because of the sinfulness of the people.
Twenty-five wicked rulers	11:1–12	Ezekiel is transported to the East Gate where he sees twenty-five Israelite leaders plotting evil. He condemns them for their evil ways.
Valley of the dry bones	37:1–14	Ezekiel is transported to a valley where he sees dry, bleached bones come together, recover flesh, and come to life. This vision depicts God's power and promise to restore and revive a dead people.
The temple	40:1—43:10	Ezekiel sees a detailed vision of a new temple and the return of the Lord. This vision encourages the Israelites that God will return to bless His people.

37:1–14 In this vision of the dry bones God reviews the method and and means of restoring and rebuilding His nation in their land. The vision illustrates the blessing and security promised in the covenant of peace and the new covenant. In vv. 1–6, God introduces the vision and instructs the prophet; in vv. 7–10, Ezekiel interacts with the vision; and in vv. 11–14, God interprets the vision.

37:1, 2 The wording recalls the past visionary experiences of Ezekiel (1:1, 3; 2:2; 3:12, 14; 8:1, 3, 7) though the word vision is not employed in these verses. bones: Not only do the bones speak about death, indeed about many deaths, but for bones to be left in the open was an indignity and indecency according to Jewish custom. To leave bodies unburied until the bones were exposed was unthinkable.

37:3 You know: The prophet placed his faith completely in the living God. Ordinarily, one would say "no" to the question God posed. But Ezekiel did not limit God; he knew the Almighty could make bones live.

37:4 Prophesy to these bones: Ezekiel's prophecies had often been directed to people as deaf as these old, dry bones.

37:5 The word rendered breath is translated in other places as wind or Spirit. The breath sent by God into the lifeless bodies symbolizes the Holy Spirit (v. 14), who brings renewal, regeneration, and rebirth (vv. 6, 9; John 3:5–8; 6:44; 7:37–39; 16:5–15; Rom. 8:9–11).

37:6 you shall live: This passage is not about resurrection from physical death, but rebirth from spiritual death brought about by divine power. Psalm 87 is another text in the Hebrew Scriptures that speaks about spiritual rebirth. The point of Jesus' words to Nicodemus in John 3:1–16 was that he should have known and understood the concept of a second birth.

37:7, 8 The dramatic noise and then coming together of the bones with new flesh must have been chilling and thrilling to the prophet. This was a prophetic portrayal of the rebirth of Israel (Rom. 9–11).

37:9 The Hebrew word rendered breath is the same as the one translated winds. It can also be translated "spirit."

37:10 an exceedingly great army: The dead bones in the valley (vv. 1, 2) must have looked like the aftermath of a horrible military defeat in which there were no survivors even to bury the dead. But now the army stood upon their feet.

37:11–15 The bones symbolize the whole house of Israel. This identification picks up on imagery already used: (1) those identified as dry or spiritually dead (vv. 2–5); (2) those identified as despondent and dejected, with no apparent hope of being "resurrected" as the people of the living God; and, (3) those described as disassembled and dispersed before being rejoined and rebuilt (vv. 6–10). The major thrust of this passage is the coming spiritual rebirth of God's chosen people through the agency of His Spirit (vv. 15–28; 36:22–32). The spiritual rebirth would miraculously revive and restore human beings to what God had intended them to be in the beginning. The same body-breath sequence occurs in the creation of Adam (Gen. 2:7).

37:16 a stick: This is Ezekiel's final symbolic drama employing an object (4:1, 3, 9; 5:1).

37:17–22 Many citizens of the northern kingdom had been carried into exile by the Assyrians nearly 150 years before. Yet some of their descendants too would join in the return, when the two nations again would become one.

37:22 mountains of Israel: This phrase represents the promised land (36:1–7, 12). The one king refers to the future ruler, the promised Messiah, also called Shepherd, Servant, and Prince (vv. 24, 25; 7:27; 34:11–31; John 10).

37:23 The Hebrew word translated dwelling places is backsliding in other ancient manuscripts. In Hebrew, the two words differ in the placement of one letter.

37:24, 25 The title David My servant refers to the Messiah and King who would come from David's line to save Israel (v. 22; 2 Sam. 7:8–16).

37:26–28 The Lord had made an everlasting covenant with Abraham, the nation of Israel, and David (16:60, 61; Gen. 9:16; 17:7; Num. 25:12, 13; 2 Sam. 7:13, 16; 23:5; Jer. 32:40). My sanctuary in their midst: The sanctuary or holy place of the living God is His dwelling place among His people (Zeph. 3:15–18). My tabernacle: This term meaning "dwelling place" is a synonym for sanctuary. Both can be used of God's dwelling in the midst of His people in the wilderness. Here they point to the future dwelling of the living God in the midst of His people forevermore. We may also compare the use Paul makes of these verses in 2 Cor. 6:16.

38:1, 2 Son of man is a title for Ezekiel emphasizing his humanity, even though his message was from God. The proper names in this prophecy do not have to be specifically identified for an understanding of the main message. The term Gog appears in only one other place in the OT (1 Chr. 5:4), but not in reference to the same person (compare Rev. 20:8). The term could be a name or a title. Magog (or the "land of Gog"; Gen. 10:2; 1 Chr. 1:5) is usually understood to be an area near the Black Sea or the Caspian Sea. In Gen. 10:2, Magog is one of the sons of Japheth, whose descendants occupied lands from Spain to Asia Minor, the islands of the Mediterranean to southern Russia. Some connect Magog with the Scythians. Rosh: There have been some expositors in recent years who have argued that the word Rosh means "Russia." However, this is highly unlikely, for usually the Hebrew word means "head" or "chief." The phrase could be read "the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal." Concerning Meshech and Tubal we also have no knowledge. Geographically, these last two are thought to be near Magog. All that is known is that Gog, from Magog, was the leader over two or three regions or countries located near the Caspian or Black seas.

38:3, 4 God is sovereign over the invasion (vv. 14–17). hooks into your jaws: Here Gog is portrayed as a huge animal, perhaps a crocodile, that will be controlled by hooks. horses, and horsemen: When the biblical prophets speak of battles in the distant future, they use descriptions of weaponry and tactics known to them ("sword" in v. 8; "bow arrows" in 39:3).

38:5, 6 Nations will ally with Gog from all directions: from the east—Persia; south—Ethiopia; west—Libya; and north—Gomer. The people of Gomer were the Cimmerians, a people from what is now southern Russia. Togarmah was near the Black Sea (Gen. 10:3; 1 Chr. 1:6).

38:7–9 dwell safely: This phrase (vv. 11, 14) indicates that the Israel of this passage is secure; the nation is not safe from attack, but it is safe from defeat. The time of the invasion is suggested by two temporal phrases—After many days … In the latter years—and the overall context. The second phrase appears only here in the OT. The first phrase usually denotes an indefinite time period, sometimes extending into the distant future or the end times (Dan. 8:26). See also v. 16, where "the latter days" is used, a phrase that frequently points to messianic times or to the times when Israel is regathered. From Ezekiel's viewpoint, he was predicting a time in the very distant future—the end times. Unless the passage refers to spiritual warfare, the invasion of Israel and the subsequent time of confident and carefree peace are still future events.

38:10–13 Gog's evil plan will be to attack an unsuspecting, unprepared, and peaceful people in unwalled villages. I will go up demonstrates that Gog will decide to attack Israel even though God foresees, predicts, and controls Gog's evil actions. On Sheba, Dedan … Tarshish, see 25:13; 27:12, 15, 22. Young lions represent their rulers; however, a few ancient versions translate the Hebrew as "villages."

38:14–17 On far north, see v. 2. riding on horses: In early biblical history, horses were not ridden in battle, but were used to pull chariots (v. 4). may know Me, when I am hallowed in you, O Gog: These words show that God is determined to bring glory to His name in this unusual battle and even in this evil person. The question are you he suggests that previous prophets had foretold Gog's invasion. The prophecies in mind could be general references to a time when enemies of God and His people would be defeated (v. 21; Deut. 30:7; Is. 26:20, 21; Jer. 30:18–24; Hag. 2:20–23; Zech. 14:12–15).

38:18–23 These verses speak about God defending His nation against Gog and his army with supernatural and earthshaking methods. Unusually strong language concerning the wrath of God is found in these verses. The piling up of intense phrases indicates more than an "ordinary" future battle. fire … brimstone: A rare phrase, reserved only for the greatest catastrophes (Gen. 19:24 when a similar phrase is used for the destruction of Sodom). This judgment would rival the magnitude of the judgment Sodom experienced. Then they shall know: This terrible battle will reveal God's might to the entire world and His concern for His people (39:6).

“Gog”

(Heb. gog) (38:2; 39:1) Strong’s #1463: Ezekiel prophesied God’s judgment against “Gog, a prince of the land of Magog” (38:2). The land of Magog is named with Meshech and Tubal, regions near Asia Minor (38:2; Gen. 10:2). But more than as a specific person and territory, Ezekiel uses Gog and Magog as a metaphor for vast armies invading Israel from the north in the end times (38:8). They oppose God and seek to destroy His people Israel, but God promises to deliver them (38:14–23). In the Book of Revelation, Gog and Magog become symbolic names for evil nations deceived by Satan and opposed to God and the kingdom of Christ (Rev. 20:8).

39:1–3 I will knock … out: This pictures God fighting for His people (38:21).

39:4, 5 mountains … open field: The rout will be total; there will be no place for the enemies of God to flee for safety.

39:6, 7 Fire from the Lord often refers to lightning bolts (1 Kin. 18:38). they shall know: There is a significant emphasis in chs. 38; 39 on God's purpose in demonstrating the central truth that He is the LORD (vv. 13, 21, 22, 28; 38:16, 23). God's battle with Gog will demonstrate His sovereignty and majesty in His universe.

39:8 Surely it is coming … This is the day: The language throughout this section seems unusually grave, and the outcome is announced with unusual solemnity and certainty.

39:9, 10 The seven years could be, but does not have to be, equated with the "seven months" of vv. 12, 14. If symbolic, the number would suggest the completeness and finality of the war. The point here is not that modern armored vehicles must be made of some combustible material. What is emphasized is God's utter destruction of Israel's enemies, despite their having soldiers and weapons so vast as to be humanly invincible.

39:11 That day is the time after Gog's defeat. Burial will be necessary for reasons of sanitation as well as consecration (Lev. 5:2, 3; 21:1; Num. 6:6). East of the sea is unclear, but because the valley will obstruct travelers, a likely candidate is the area of southern Galilee that leads toward the Dead Sea (called the Valley of Jezreel in Josh. 17:16).

39:12 cleanse the land: The Law of Moses prescribed the sacrifice of a heifer to cleanse the land if a murdered person was found in a region (Deut. 21:1–9).

39:13 gain renown: This verse implies that the burial of Gog would become a memorial day to glorify God. Consider the parallel in 1 Cor. 15:24–28, which speaks of the inauguration of the new heavens and the new earth after all of Christ's enemies are defeated.

39:14–16 A complete purification is emphasized (Lev. 11:45). Hamonah means "Horde," indicating a multitude of corpses.

39:17–20 A poem or song is addressed to the scavenging birds and beasts who come to the multitude of dead bodies (vv. 14–16). Whether figurative or not, the passage powerfully pictures God's sovereign control over the complete conquest of Israel's future and most ferocious enemies (Rev. 19:11–21). The meal would be a divinely prepared sacrifice served at God's table—the land or mountains of Israel. The main course would be the mighty rulers of the earth. The fatlings of Bashan portray the might of these men. The herds of Bashan—rams and lambs, … goats and bulls—were the strongest and most important animals of ancient Israel, fed in the rich pasturelands east of Galilee.

39:21, 22 My glory among the nations: The universal knowledge of the living God of Israel will be based finally on the outcome of the battle described in chs. 38; 39. Ezekiel followed the great theme of biblical theology begun in Gen. 12:3 that the ultimate purpose of God in His choice of Abraham and Sarah was to make His blessings known to all the families of the earth. God will demonstrate His glory both among the nations and among His chosen people Israel.

39:23–29 The Hebrew term rendered captives (Jer. 30:3) can also mean "fortunes" (Deut. 30:3).

40:1 This date is about 573 B.C., twelve years since the six messages of hope delivered the year following the fall of Jerusalem (33:21—39:29) and twenty-five years after the deportation of Jehoiachin (1:2; 33:21, 22; chs. 33—39).

40:2 Ezekiel was taken in a vision to a very high mountain from which he could see a city to the south. The sight seems somewhat vague, something like the structure of a city. Since the temple is there (v. 5), Jerusalem is suggested; but neither the mountain nor the city is named. Such a high mountain north of Jerusalem does not correlate with the geography of Israel, then or now. Mount Hermon, north of Galilee, is possible if the boundaries of the land are understood as extending that far.

40:3–5 The special circumstances of these final visions are noteworthy. Ezekiel saw a messenger with a bronze appearance (1:27, 28) who was equipped with tools for measuring. Ezekiel was commissioned to minister the complete revelation to the house of Israel. A cubit was about 18 inches, or the distance from fingertips to elbow. A handbreadth, the width of the hand across the widest part, was approximately three inches. Both a long cubit (a cubit of around 21 inches) and a short cubit (the standard 18 inches) existed. Based on these measurements, the measuring rod was six long cubits in length, about 126 inches or 10.5 feet, the height and width of the wall around the temple.

40:6–16 The thresholds of the eastern gate measure 10.5 feet wide; each gate-chamber or guard room is 10.5 by 10.5 feet, separated by a space 8.75 feet wide. The stairs apparently lead up to the outer threshold, and the rooms (three on each side) line a walkway to the inner threshold leading to a vestibule (or porch) that is 14 feet wide. The gateposts are 3.5 feet square; and the distance across the gateway of the outer threshold is 17.5 feet. The distance from the beginning of the gate through the outer threshold is 22.75 feet: 10.5 feet of this being the threshold. A space in front of each guardroom is 1.75 feet wide (21 inches or one long cubit). The overall dimensions of the east gate, and of the two identical north and south gates, are 43.75 by 87.5 feet. The gateposts are 105 feet high. These gates have some similarity to those excavated in Israel from the time of Solomon.

40:17–27 The lower pavement is equal in length to the gateway: 87.5 feet; and the distance between the outer gateway and the corresponding inner gateway (across the pavement) is 175 feet. chambers: Rooms, probably for storage or priests' quarters, line the inside of the northern, southern, and eastern walls.

40:28–37 The archways are 43.75 feet long by 8.75 feet wide (vv. 8, 9, 14; apparently the porches of the gate systems in the inner court have different dimensions, though these gates are said to be like the others). Also in contrast to the outer gates, these have their porches (vestibules) on the outward side (entrance), where seven steps go up (vv. 22, 26).

40:38–43 Ezekiel observes a room near the entrance of the northern gate of the inner court where animals are slaughtered and washed for sacrificial offerings. These sacrifices point to the ultimate sacrifice: the sacrifice of God's only Son on the Cross once for all. Christ's sacrifice of His own life paid for our sins and provides salvation to all those who believe on Him (Heb. 7:20–28; 9:23–28).

40:44–46 On the inner side (facing the inner court) of the northern and southern inner gateways are rooms for priests whose principal work is singing (1 Chr. 16:4–6; 2 Chr. 29:25–30). Those housed at the northern gate serve at the sacrificial altar. These sons of Zadok would be the only Levites permitted to serve God directly (44:15–31). The priests of the southern (inner) gate minister in the temple.

40:47–49 The inner courtyard is 175 feet square. On altar and temple see chs. 41–43. The width of the entrance—vestibule—to the temple sanctuary can be determined: twenty cubits (35 feet) with a three-cubit (5.25 feet) extension of the five-cubit (8.75 feet) doorposts on each side, leaving an entrance with a width of fourteen cubits (24.5 feet).

IN DEPTH

Measuring the Future

Ezekiel could be called one of the most visionary prophets. God showed him spiritual insights that still stir the imagination twenty-five centuries later. Like other prophets, Ezekiel's ministry among his people had two distinct phases: condemnation and consolation.

The first thirty-two chapters of Ezekiel catalog the sure and future judgment of God on His own people and seven other nations. Incredibly, though Jerusalem had been defeated and many of her people had been deported, the exiles clung to the vain hope that God would never let His city and temple be destroyed. They missed the point that God's ultimate commitment was to people—not places or buildings. In order to purify and preserve the people, God allowed the devastation of the promised land and the temple itself. Yet God also held responsible those nations that used their temporary domination of Israel as an opportunity to mock the living God. Ezekiel's early messages focused on the coming of God's judgment and the urgent need for repentance.

The last part of Ezekiel represents a sudden change of tone. With the fall of Jerusalem, God's terrible judgment had finally come. The weary and disillusioned exiles had lost all hope. But God filled Ezekiel with a new message. Though all immediate evidence pointed to hopelessness and despair, God invited His people to return to Him and to place their confidence in Him. Whatever their temporary setbacks and suffering, God was still in control. His purposes would win out, and His plans were specific. In fact, His plans were so definite they could be measured. Ezekiel received a vision of the dimensions of a new temple (recorded in 40:1—48:35) to demonstrate that fact.

Many efforts have been made to understand the details of Ezekiel's vision in such a way that the prophecy might be described as fulfilled. However, attempts to do this have failed. Those who eventually returned from exile did not use Ezekiel's plans to rebuild Jerusalem. It is also difficult to interpret this prophecy as a symbolic description of the church in our age. The most confident statement we can make about the vision and its accompanying instructions is that it is a prophecy yet to be fulfilled. At the same time, we can apply these chapters to the present as examples of God's planning, precision, and sovereignty. He maintains control of the events of history. When events seem chaotic, God reminds us to rest in His ability to bring order. Ezekiel's vision of a new temple when the temple in Jerusalem had just been destroyed reassured the exiles: God would create beauty out of ashes. The people in Ezekiel's day needed that vision of hope, and we still need it today.

41:1–4 The outer area, the holy place (Ex. 26:33) and the inner area, the Most Holy Place (1 Kin. 6:16–20) of the temple itself are described. Overall, the outer room is 70 feet long by 35 feet wide and has an entrance 17.5 feet wide. The inner sanctuary is 35 feet square with an entrance 10.5 feet wide. Doorposts for the outer room are 10.5 feet square and for the inner sanctuary 3.5 feet square. Walls on each side of each entrance protrude from the side walls 8.75 and 12.25 feet. The height of the entrance to the inner room is 10.5 feet.

41:5–11 Next the dimensions are given for the wall surrounding the temple. Its width is 10.5 feet. Running along the inside of the western, northern, and southern walls (but not attached) are three levels of ten rooms (90 total; perhaps these are storerooms), each 7 feet square with an outer wall 8.75 feet thick. They sit on a foundation 10.5 feet high. A space of 35 feet is apparently between these rooms and the priests' chambers north and south of the temple (42:1–14). A terrace that is 8.75 feet wide is on all three sides.

41:12 Behind the temple, between its western end and the western wall of the outer court is a building 122.5 feet wide and 157.5 feet long with walls 8.75 feet thick. Its purpose is not given.

41:13–26 Like the temple, the western building is 175 feet in total length (its inside length plus the width of the walls on each side plus 8.75 multiplied by 2; v. 12). The full width of the eastern side of the temple proper is the same, as is that of the inner courtyard and the courtyard separating the temple and the western building. Various decorations are described in vv. 16–20. Some likely have symbolic meanings (28:13, 14 regarding cherubs), but no explanations are given here. A wooden altar (v. 22), the only piece of furniture mentioned in this passage, is 5.25 feet high and 2 feet square (the dimensions of the stone tables of 40:42 and the altar of sacrifice in 43:13–17). The purpose and position of this altar is not known; but it is called the table that is before the LORD, to which some compare the altar of incense in the tabernacle (Ex. 37:25–28).

41:23, 24 The temple here means the holy place. The sanctuary means the Most Holy Place. Each door had two panels, but only one panel had to be opened to enter either room.

42:1–14 To the north and south of the courtyard separating the temple and the western building (41:12–14) is a building for the priests 175 feet long and 87.5 feet wide, with three stories (vv. 5, 6) and a door along the length facing the outer courtyard. The entrance has a walk 17.5 by 1.75 feet. Mainly the northern building is described, but apparently the southern building is the same or very similar. Parallel to the eastern wall (the width) and its door is a wall 87.5 feet long (vv. 7–9). These are places for certain priests ("sons of Zadok" in 40:46) to eat and change clothes, indicating that the rooms also provide storage facilities for the holy food offerings and priestly garments.

42:15–20 measured it all around: Ezekiel was taken through the eastern gates outside the entire temple and courtyard structure and shown the size of the land area prescribed for the temple complex. Whether rods in v. 16 is correct or whether "cubits" is meant is debated by many scholars. Five-hundred rods square is 5,250 feet per side, nearly a mile, which to some seems too large. The cubit is the most frequent measure used to this point, but the rod has been introduced as the standard for measuring the temple (in 40:5 the rod is equated with six cubits). It makes sense that the larger unit should be employed for the greatest dimensions. The large bordering area around the temple complex might be there in order to set it apart and to stress the temple's holiness (43:12).

43:1, 2 came from … the east: In 11:23, God's glory had left the temple and gone east over the Mount of Olives as His presence left the city. Here His presence is pictured as returning to the city from the east. See 1:24; 10:4 (compare Rev. 1:15; 14:2; 19:6; 21:11, 23).

(Heb. kabod) (43:2; Ex. 24:16; 1 Kin. 8:11) Strong’s #3519: This word is derived from a Hebrew verb that is used to describe the weight or worthiness of something. It can refer to something negative. For example, in reference to Sodom, it depicts the severe degree of sin that had reached the point of making that city worthy of complete destruction (Gen. 18:20). But usually the word is used to depict greatness and splendor (Gen. 31:1). The noun form is translated honor in some instances (1 Kin. 3:13). God’s glory is described in the OT as taking the form of a cloud (Ex. 24:15–18) and filling the temple (1 Kin. 8:11). The appropriate response to God’s glory is to reverence Him by bowing before Him, as Ezekiel did (3:23; 43:3).

43:3–6 I came is “He came” in a few Hebrew manuscripts, referring to God’s judgment on Jerusalem.

43:7–9 This temple is God’s residence from which He will rule and reign over the children of Israel forever (37:26–28). The second half of this verse appears to predict an absolute end of the idolatrous and immoral practices of the house of Israel, which had taken place around the temple (2 Kin. 23:1–20). their harlotry: This is either an allusion to their spiritual adultery in general or, more specifically and literally, to their participation in the religious prostitution of Baal worship (16:15). carcasses: This is taken by some as a metaphor (“lifeless idols,” Lev. 26:30) because of the context, but it could refer to memorial graves of kings buried near the temple mount (2 Kin. 23:30), perhaps near the royal houses just outside the southern wall (v. 8; 1 Kin. 7:1–12). high places: This phrase came to refer to any place of idolatrous worship, whether on a hilltop or not.

43:10–12 God explains to Ezekiel the purpose of revealing the detailed description of the future temple (vv. 8, 9; 42:15–20; Lev. 20:7; Ps. 11:4; Is. 6:3).

43:13–17 The cubit described here is the long cubit—a cubit and a handbreadth, or 21 inches. The altar has a base 1.75 feet (21 inches) wide and high. A rim around the edge of the base is one span, or about 9 inches, wide. On top of the base is a lower section 3.5 feet high, having a 1.75–foot ledge. The distance between the smaller and larger ledges is 7 feet. The altar hearth, the top section of the altar where the sacrifice is offered, is 7 feet high. The four horns are on top of the corners (1 Kin. 1:50, 51). Overall the hearth is 21 feet square. Apparently the middle section is 24.5 feet square with a rim about 10.5 inches wide; and the lower section extends 3.5 feet beyond the middle one, 28 feet square (vv. 14, 16, 17 where —assuming the symmetry of the altar—the middle section extends two cubits beyond the top). The height of the altar is therefore about 11 cubits or 19.25 feet. Assuming an 18cubit square (hearth and middle section in vv. 16–17) and one-cubit-high base, the foundation is 31.5 feet square. Steps, previously forbidden for an altar (Ex. 20:26), are necessary for this altar because of the great size of the structure. The huge altar is positioned in the center of the inner court in front of the temple entrance.

43:18, 19 These ordinances relate to the cleansing and consecration of the altar. See Ex. 29:36–37; Lev. 8:14–17 regarding the tabernacle altar and 2 Chr. 7:9 for the temple altar.

43:20–27 Atonement and sin offering suggest purification and cleansing from sin. Because of the sinlessness—without blemish—of the sacrifice, the people for whom the sacrifice is made are declared acceptable before God (v. 27; Ex. 29:14, 16, 36, 37; Lev. 3; 4:12, 21; 5:9; 8:14–17; Heb. 13:10–13).

44:1–3 The outer gate of the sanctuary is the eastern gate of the outer court (40:6–16; 43:1) which must remain shut. The eastern gate known today as the "Golden Gate" dates from several centuries after Christ. It is walled shut today in accordance with an Islamic tradition. the prince: The identity of this prince is unknown. The Hebrew term does not always mean a king or a member of royalty (Gen. 23:6). It is not the Messiah, for 45:22 indicates that this leader must make a sin offering for himself. He may be one of the Zadokite priests (vv. 15, 16).

44:4–9 Ezekiel experiences another awe-inspiring vision of God's glory leading him to bow in worship (1:28–2:1). God demands that His renewed people follow His regulations exactly. He emphasizes the necessity of holiness and righteousness, especially in light of Israel's past abominations related to rules regulating who was to enter the temple sanctuary. Specifically, they had allowed foreigners without evidence of faithfulness to God to serve in the sanctuary (Josh. 9:23–27; Ezra 8:20): these people were uncircumcised in heart and uncircumcised in flesh. This was in disobedience to God's commands (Ex. 19:8; Lev. 26:41; Num. 3:10; Deut. 10:16; 30:6; Neh. 13:8; Jer. 4:4; 9:25), but was in conformity with the practices of foreign pagan religions, which God's people had been forbidden to imitate (Ex. 34:12; Deut. 18:9; compare Rom. 12:1, 2).

44:10 See Lev. 21; 22 for a description of the duties of the Levites. Unfortunately, during the history of Israel, Levites had not obeyed the commands Moses had given them and had even encouraged idolatry (compare ch. 8; 14:1–11; Deut. 33:8–11; Judg. 17–19).

44:11–14 God explains to Ezekiel why the Levites would be limited to certain types of temple ministry. The Levites (with the exception of the sons of Zadok, v. 15) could not be priests but could be ministers (servants or attendants). They could not serve in the inner court or temple, where the holy things are located; but they could oversee the general operation of the temple complex.

44:15, 16 The Levites, the sons of Zadok were descendants of the priest Zadok in the Levitical line who remained faithful when others did not (1 Sam. 2:27–36; 2 Sam. 8:17; 15:24–29; 1 Kin. 2:26–35; 1 Chr. 6:7, 8, 50–53). While salvation is never earned (Rom. 3; 4; Gal. 2; 3; Eph. 2:8, 9), God does reward faithfulness and righteousness. Here He rewarded His faithful priests and Levites with the opportunity to minister before Him. Responsibility and recognition have to be deserved, but never demanded (1

Sam. 26:23; Matt. 5:12; 25:21–23; Rev. 2:10). Again there is an emphasis on holiness and righteousness. The Zadokites were honored for their special obedience. The table is not identified, but could be similar to the wooden altar of 41:22.

44:17–19 These verses speak of holiness as linen garments (42:14; Ex. 28:42; 29:37; 30:29; Lev. 6:11, 27; 16:4; 21:10; Hag. 2:12). Common things were to be kept distinct from what was consecrated.

44:20–22 These verses speak of holiness in conduct. These regulations continued practices already prescribed in the Law of Moses (Lev. 10:6, 9; 21:1–6, 7, 10, 14). Their aim was to help the priests avoid conformity to the immoral and idolatrous religious rituals and conduct among the pagan nations. The priests, then and in the future, have the responsibility of modeling and maintaining the highest standards of morality, self-control, self-denial, discipline, and obedience to God's will. In Israelite culture, shaving the head indicated mourning (7:16–19), and growing long hair could mean the taking of a special vow (sometimes connected with complete or controlled abstinence from wine; Num. 6:3, 4). The point is the priests' clear separation from the rest of society.

44:23, 24 they shall teach My people: The priests were to demonstrate verbally and visually before the people how to distinguish between what is godly and ungodly. They also served as judges in disputes and debates (22:26; Lev. 10:10, 11; 11:47; Deut. 17:9; 19:7; 21:5; 33:10).

44:25–27 This section deals with holiness regarding death among the people (Lev. 21:1–3; Num. 19:11–19; Hag. 2:13). Contact with a dead body was forbidden; however, a partial exception was made for immediate family members. The act still defiled the person, causing ceremonial uncleanness for a certain time. God's concern over purity in practice and procedures is seen in that the priest was to submit to a cleansing ritual and then personally present a sin offering. He was to publicly declare and deal with his own uncleanness, though what he had done was not forbidden. The circumstances that allowed touching a dead body did not overturn its consequences according to the Law. God was preserving the sanctity of His temple and statutes.

44:28–31 These verses explain holiness in the priests' provisions (Lev. 17:5; 22:8; Num. 18:10–13, 20, 23–24; Deut. 10:9; 14:21; Mal. 3:8–12). I am their possession: God was to be the priests' possession in all respects; they were not to inherit land or cities. The dedicated thing (Lev. 27:21, 28;

Num. 18:14; Judg. 11:29–40) was something wholly and irrevocably devoted to God as a sacrificial gift. The giver would be blessed in giving (Acts 20:35). God's laws are governed by His love and goodness, and they are given as guides to holy and healthy living (John 10:10). God is truthful and trustworthy; His codes of conduct are blessings, not burdens (Matt. 11:28–30). They can be followed with confidence because of His revealed character, even though all the specific reasons for His rules are not spelled out.

Holiness—It's Not Just a Place

For many, the word "holy" brings to mind special places such as cathedrals and temples. It would be easy to limit our concept of holiness to such concrete examples, especially when we see so many such cases in the OT. At various times throughout their history, God called the Israelites to dedicate various places (and persons) in a way that would remind God's people that they were His own. Certain monuments, the tabernacle, the temple, and even certain mountains, along with some of the leaders, the priests, and the prophets were designated as "holy," consecrated, or set apart to the Lord.

This pattern was continued in Ezekiel's vision of the new temple, access to which was to be highly restricted (Ezek. 44:1–19). Likewise, a certain "holy district" was to be established in the restored land (45:1–5). So holiness was attached to certain places, but we shouldn't forget that the call to holy living is not confined to one place or another. All of life is to be holy, no matter where one is. Ezekiel pinpoints some practical and even mundane dimensions of holiness: • Stop the use of violence and oppression (45:9).

• Cease the pattern of evicting people (45:9).

• Restore honest dealing in business, using standards of value that have integrity and can be trusted (45:10–12).

• Donate a percentage of each business transaction to God, whether one is a prince or one of the common people (45:13–17).

• Mark all of life with monthly festivals and celebrations that include everyone (45:18–25).

• Restore the six-day work week, and protect the Sabbath rest, with the prince providing substantially for this observance (46:1–15).

• Follow careful guidelines in the matter of inheritances and boundaries, maintaining fair treatment of aliens and strangers (46:16–18; 47:13–23).

• Provide an area for the common people, for homes and common space (48:15–20).

• Name each of the commercial centers—the exits or gates of the city—after a portion of the citizenry (tribes) (48:30–35).

• Name the city itself “THE LORD IS THERE,” reflecting a inclusive view of holiness: everything that goes on there pertains to the Lord (48:35).

All of life is to be holy. One might be more reverent in certain settings and on certain occasions, but one is made neither more nor less holy by entering or exiting a particular place. Christ has already invited us into the most holy place there is, so that we will live as His holy people in everything we do (Heb. 9:11–15; 10:19–25).

45:1–5 A distinct—set apart, holy—section was to be allocated for God. This area would be divided into two equal sections. One would be the portion for the Zadokites—priests, the ministers of the sanctuary. In the center of this part of the holy district is the holy square-mile environs for the temple—the sanctuary, the Most Holy Place. The other half of the holy district would be the portion given to the Levites. All this is holy; God owns it. The twenty chambers is read "towns to live in" in the Septuagint.

45:6 The city is not named, but Jerusalem is most likely. Its allotted property is 25,000 by 5,000 cubits. This area is located adjacent to and south of (according to 48:18) the Zadokite district—the holy section. See 48:15–19, 30–35.

45:7, 8 The identity of the prince is unknown (44:3). But his allotted area is on both sides (east and west) of the holy district. He will own this land bordering a tribal territory to the north and south, where the west and east border suggest respectively the Mediterranean Sea and the Dead Sea or Jordan River. The prince and God's princes of messianic period—in contrast to previous leaders of Israel (11:1–13; 14:1–11; 20–22; 34:1–10)—will not be greedy for riches and real estate but will give the land that remains to the people (48:1–29; contrast the descriptions of the evil behavior of the rulers of Israel in 1 Sam. 8:10–18; 1 Kin. 20; 21; Is. 3:13–23; Mic. 3:1–4; 7:3; Zeph. 3:3).

45:9–11 The merchants were exhorted to use accurate measures of the ephah (estimated to be around a bushel) and the bath (from six to nine gallons), both defined as one-tenth of a homer (five to ten bushels or 60 to 90 gallons). Merchants must not cheat anymore when weighing produce (Lev. 19:35, 36; Amos 8:5; Mic. 6:10–12). God called for an end to dishonesty and deceit; a time is coming when all such scheming will end (vv. 16, 17; 37:15–).

45:12 Ezekiel also demanded fair weights. The shekel weighed about 11.5 grams or four-tenths of an ounce. In Babylon, 24 gerahs made one shekel while Ezekiel sets the standard at 20; but 60 shekels made one mina, which conforms to the standard prescribed in this verse. In Ezekiel's system this mina is thought to weigh about 1.5 pounds.

45:13–17 These verses describe an offering to be given to the prince (v. 7) who, unlike previous rulers, will be just and truthful (v. 8). The prince, in turn, will make offerings to God in order to make atonement for the house of Israel (v. 17), symbolizing cleansing from sin (40:38–43). Instructions regarding the temple sacrifices can be found in Ex. 25:2–7; 30:13–15; 35:4–29; 36:2–7; Lev. 1:4; 9:7; 10:17. The Law of Moses also included extended instructions on feasts (Lev. 23:1–44; Num. 28; 29).

45:18–20 This is an annual day of purifying the temple sanctuary. In the light of Jesus' death on the cross, the actions of the prince symbolize and emphasize that God has made atonement for all through the sacrifice of the Messiah (vv. 15–17; 18–22). The forgiveness of individual sins is illustrated through daily sin offerings (vv. 23–25). The pronoun you in you shall take and you shall do is singular, while the pronoun in you shall make atonement is plural. The prince represents the people in these actions of worship (Lev. 16:15–17, 33, 34; 22:19–21; 2 Chr. 7:1–7; 29:20–24.) The way the day is specified suggests an act to be performed annually.

45:21–25 In this passage the feasts of Passover and Tabernacles are observed (Ex. 12:1–14; Lev. 23:5–8; 33–43; Num. 28:16–25; 29:12–38). The dates are in relation to the Levitical calendar, the Jewish religious year. The procedures as well are similar to those of the Mosaic system. These feasts commemorate God's faithfulness to His promises.

46:1–8 The prince shall enter: What the rituals signified under the Law was fulfilled by the Messiah. At the time of this prince, certain promises were being fulfilled and the covenants consummated in the messianic age (40:6–16, 28–37; 43:18–27; 44:1–2; Ex. 20:8–11). hin: This was a liquid measure about one-sixth of a bath, approximately one gallon (4:11; Ex. 30:24; Lev. 19:36).

46:9–11 the people of the land: This phrase describes the citizens of the promised land during this messianic period (v. 3; 12:18, 19; 22:29; 39:13; 45:16, 22). The prescribed protocol was probably to ensure an orderly procession and service. Such regulations would be needed on the special feast days due to the participation of large numbers of people.

46:12 The preparation and presentation of this offering is the one exception to 44:1–3 (vv. 1, 2). The voluntary or freewill offering was given beyond what was required (Lev. 22:17–30).

46:13 shall daily make: This is a change from the provisions in the Law (Num. 28:3–8; 2 Kin. 16:15).

46:14 perpetual ordinance: This is a change from the provisions in the Law (Num. 28:5). God's people cannot be reminded too often of God's provisions for them; nor can they thank Him too much or too frequently.

46:16–18 The language of this passage speaks clearly and concretely about descendants, servants, and property, so a spiritual or allegorical meaning for this passage is difficult to defend (44:3). Likewise, the prince has sons and servants, so he cannot be the Messiah. Inheritance laws and family claims related to property continue as an important feature of life in Israel (Lev. 25:8–15, 23–34; 27:24; Num. 27:1–11; 33:54; 34:18; Josh. 14—21; Mic. 2:1, 2). Again, the prince's character is described in sharp contrast to many of Israel's previous leaders (34:1–10). This civil ruler is to be fair both to his children and to his subjects; neither is to be turned out of his inheritance. Justice, not power, should be the goal of all who exercise authority.

46:19, 20 The setting is one of the two buildings for the priests on the western end of the temple complex (42:1–14). The place is something like a kitchen. Sanctify the people: Food from the sacrifices reserved for the priests' use was not even to approach the people, who had not been consecrated to God's service in the same way the priests had been.

46:21–24 The setting switches to the outer court (40:17–19), where each of the four corners has an enclosed kitchen court. These kitchens are distinguished from those for the priests (vv. 19, 20); these belong to the Levites: ministers of the temple, see 44:11–14.

Ezekiel’s Vision of the Restoration of the Land

The boundaries of the restored nation of Israel approach the boundaries of the land as it was under David and Solomon. However, the area east of the Jordan—Gilead and Transjordan—will not be a part of this new inheritance. It was not part of the land that had been promised.

The tribes are not arranged as they were historically when the land was divided under Joshua (Josh. 13—19). God will do something new in the restoration. The central portion of the land around Jerusalem will be set apart for religion and government. To the north of the central district are seven tribes—Dan, Asher, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, and Judah. To the south are the remaining five tribes—Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, and Gad.

47:1 He is the “man” of v. 3 (40:3; 46:19).

47:2–6 One thousand cubits is approximately 1,750 feet (40:3–5). Four times the man uses the measuring line to mark off this distance across the stream, which progressively gets deeper from ankle depth, to knees, to waist, and finally too deep and wide to cross except by swimming. The water flows eastward from the south side of the temple.

47:7–12 The water becomes a river of healing and the source of abundant life for everything and everyone (Gen. 2:8–10; Zech. 14:8; John 4:13, 14; 10:10; Rev. 22:1, 2). It continues flowing southeast: through the dry, rocky region between Jerusalem and the Dead Sea—that is, the Arabah or eastern region—and south along the Jordan valley and the Jordan Rift, as far as to the Dead Sea. When it reaches the sea (the Dead Sea), the salty sea becomes fresh and able to sustain life so that fishermen can fish there: its waters are healed. This is an amazing picture—the Dead Sea is the saltiest body of water (approximately 25 percent saline content) and is presently unable to support life. It is also the lowest point on earth, with its surface 1,300 feet below sea level and the water itself 1,300 feet deep. The living water that God will provide has immeasurable power to renew, restore, and resurrect life. This sea which is dead will teem with life all along its shores—from En Gedi to En Eglaim. Great volumes and variety of vegetation, everlasting and perpetually productive, will result from this river which flows from the sanctuary (v. 1). See John 7:37–39 for Jesus’ use of the image of living waters for the life that He gives to those who believe in Him.

47:13 The priestly tribe of Levi had already received a special area (45:1–8; 48:8–14). The tribe of Joseph was divided into two tribes to replace Levi and thus maintain twelve tribes.

47:14 Equality of inheritance is stressed. raised My hand in an oath: This phrase recalls 20:5; 36:28 (Gen. 12:7; 15:7, 18–21; 17:8). The unilateral and unconditional nature of the Abrahamic covenant is suggested; this inheritance is a free gift of God’s grace which God’s people did and could do nothing to deserve.

47:15–17 The northern boundary of the land extends from the Mediterranean Sea—the Great Sea—to a border north of Damascus. The other place names are not certainly known. Damascus is the capital of Aram (modern Syria). Hamath is thought to have been north of Damascus, about half the distance to Carchemish. Zedad: This is believed to have been east of Hamath and Hazar Enan (the eastern point of this border). Hauran appears to be an Israelite region east of the Jordan River and north of Gilead.

47:18 The eastern border runs from the Damascus region southwest through Hauran to and along the Jordan River (Num. 34:10–12). eastern … sea: The Dead Sea.

47:19 The southern border goes from the eastern side of the Dead Sea to Tamar (a town to the southwest) to the waters of Meribah by Kadesh (Num. 20:13, 24; 27:14) along the brook (of Egypt; the Wadi el-Arish) and on to the Mediterranean Sea (Num. 34:3–5; 1 Kin. 8:65). This line runs from the Dead Sea southwest across the Negev to the Brook of Egypt, a river bed in west Sinai.

47:20 The western border runs along the coastline of the Great Sea (the Mediterranean Sea) north to a point directly west of Hamath (Num. 34:6; Rev. 21:1).

47:21–23 The treatment of strangers or aliens in the land is considered. Non-Israelites who married and settled within the Jewish communities were to be accepted as native Israelites, qualified to share in the territorial inheritance of whatever tribe they joined (Lev. 19:34; Is. 56:1–8).

48:1–7 From the northern district south to the priestly portions, the tribes in order are Dan, Asher, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, and Judah. Each district is bordered north and south by another tribe. The east-west borders for each are the same as in 47:18, 20. The tribes resulting from the offspring of Jacob and his wives' servants are given lands farthest from the most holy areas (45:1–8), while the descendants of Jacob's wives occupy a central position (Gen. 35:23–26). The tribe of Judah is most favored, for it produced the Davidic and messianic line (37:18–28; Gen. 49:8–10; Is. 11). Historically, the tribe of Dan had occupied the northern limits of the land (Judg. 20:1). Its idolatry was well known—Jeroboam had placed a golden calf there (2 Kin. 10:29).

48:8–15 The district has the city in its center surrounded by housing, farming, and grazing lands for general use.

48:16–22 shall belong to the prince: See 45:7, 8. The tribal territories of Judah and Benjamin are immediately north and south of the holy district (vv. 1–7, 20). Benjamin like Judah is favored (Gen. 35:24).

48:23–29 Continuing southward in order are the tribal allotments for Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, and Gad. Gad is the southern border of the land.

48:30, 31 The gates are named after the original twelve tribes (Rev. 21:12, 13). The gate for Joseph represents the two tribes of Manasseh and Ephraim (v. 32; 47:13). The northern gates are Reuben (the firstborn), Judah (the tribe of the messianic line), and Levi (the priestly tribe)—all descendants of Jacob and Leah (Gen. 35:23).

48:32 On the eastern side the gates represent Joseph, Benjamin, and Dan. While the first two were children of Jacob and Rachel, the third was the child of Jacob and Rachel's servant Bilhah (Gen. 35:24, 25).

48:33 South of the city, the three other offspring of Jacob and Leah have gates named for them: Simeon, Issachar, and Zebulun (Gen. 35:23).

48:34 The three western gates are named after Gad and Asher—the sons of Jacob and Leah's maidservant Zilpah—and Naphtali—a son of Jacob and Bilhah (Gen. 35:25, 26).

48:35 The designated name for this city from that day is THE LORD IS THERE (Is. 60:14; 62:2–4, 12; Jer. 3:17; 33:15, 16). This return of the Lord and the regathering of His people is predicted by Ezekiel in 11:17; 20:33–44; 37:15–28; 39:21–29. The Lord was forced to depart from the city and the temple because of the wickedness of the Israelites (8:6; 10:18). But here, Ezekiel foresees the return of God in all His glory to His people, His temple, and His land.

The Book of Daniel

IN 626 B.C., NABOPOLASSAR BECAME KING OF Babylon and altered the course of ancient history. He quickly overthrew the domination of long-standing rival Assyria, and by the time of his death in 605 B.C. he had eliminated the Assyrian Empire and swallowed it into what became known as the Neo-Babylonian or Chaldean Empire. This course of events had significant implications for Judah, the surviving remnant of the nation of Israel. Judah had been largely under Assyrian domination from about 670 B.C., but now found itself serving a new master. In the same year as Nabopolassar's death, King Jehoiakim of Judah became a vassal of Nebuchadnezzar, the son of Nabopolassar (2 Kin. 24:1). Nebuchadnezzar brought his father's empire to even greater heights, eventually deporting many Jews to Babylon.

Daniel lived in the midst of all these momentous events. What direct impact he had on the community of exiles cannot be known, but he was a force for good as far as the Babylonians were concerned. Daniel was a close confidant of Nebuchadnezzar throughout the Babylonian king's reign (605–562 B.C.). Later Daniel served with equal distinction Cyrus, the enlightened Persian ruler who conquered Babylon. One of the first policies Cyrus implemented after subduing Babylon was to allow the Jews to return to their homeland and rebuild their way of life. It is more than likely that Daniel had some influence on Cyrus's decision. The Book of Daniel is a testimony to how God works out His purposes through His servants even in the courts of pagan rulers (2:21; 4:18).

Daniel wrote his book with two purposes in mind. First, he wanted to assert that the God of Israel was sovereign, even over the powerful nations that surrounded His people. God's chosen nation had been conquered and dispersed by a mighty empire that did not acknowledge the Lord. What would happen now? Would Babylon's yoke remain forever on Israel's shoulders? Would God's people never see their homeland again? Had God forgotten His promises? Daniel's answer was that Babylon would fall to another empire, which in turn would fall to yet another great kingdom. History would continue in this pattern until God judged all Gentile nations and established His everlasting rule. Daniel's message was obviously meant to uplift and encourage the weary hearts of the exiled Jews.

Yet Daniel also looked forward to the day when God would restore and reward Israel. Israel was suffering punishment for its disobedience; but when would the punishment end? Daniel's message was both discouraging and encouraging. He predicted trouble ahead; Israel would suffer under Gentile powers for many years. But the encouraging news was that the time of trials would also pass away. The time was coming when God would gather His children to Him again. He would establish His messianic kingdom, which would last forever. The God who directs the forces of history has not deserted His people. They must continue to trust Him. His promises of preservation and ultimate restoration are sure.

Daniel claims to have written the book that bears his name (12:4) and uses the first person singular from 7:2 to the end of the book. The Jewish Talmud agrees with Daniel's testimony. Christ Himself mentions Daniel by name in His predictions concerning the last days (Matt. 24:15). There is no reason to doubt either that Daniel was a historical person or that he wrote the book that bears his name. A well-educated Jew, chosen for special training in the palace in Babylon, Daniel possessed all the linguistic skills and the historical and cultural knowledge needed to write a book of this depth and complexity.

Since Daniel refers to the reign of Cyrus (6:28), a date of 530 B.C. or so is reasonable for the book's composition. Critical scholars, however, deny that this is possible mainly because the book appears to predict events that did not come to pass until the third and second centuries B.C. These predictions are so precise and detailed that some believe them not to have been prophecy at all but a record of the events after they transpired. Thus according to some, Daniel must date from the second century in order to account for at least those passages that predict later times.

If one concedes the possibility that Daniel was inspired to write prophetically about events two or three hundred years in the future, there is no reason to deny Daniel's authorship of the book in the sixth century B.C. The accuracy of its historical information, the form and style of its Hebrew and Aramaic passages, and the unanimous testimony of ancient tradition all confirm the witness of the book itself concerning its authorship and date.

Commentary

1:1 Jehoiakim king of Judah reigned from 608 to 598 B.C. The third year was 605 B.C., according to the chronological system used by Daniel in which only whole years were counted. Jeremiah, on the other hand, followed a system in which any part of a year was counted as a full year. Therefore, he designated 605 B.C. as the fourth year of Jehoiakim (Jer. 25:1; 36:1; 46:2). Jehoiakim was an evil king who sided first with the Egyptians and then with the Babylonians until 602 B.C. when he rebelled. His independence was short-lived, however, and Jehoiakim remained under Babylonian domination until his death. The son of Nabopolassar, the founder of the Neo-Babylonian (Chaldean) Empire, was Nebuchadnezzar, who reigned from 605 to 562 B.C. In the summer of 605 B.C. when his father died, Nebuchadnezzar was leading the Babylonian armies. He returned to Babylon to secure the throne, but not before he besieged Jerusalem and seized loot and prisoners, including Daniel. Nebuchadnezzar greatly enlarged the empire begun by his father and revived the worship of the ancient Babylonian gods, especially Marduk.

1:2 the LORD gave: The Book of Daniel emphasizes the sovereignty of God in the affairs of nations. Jerusalem did not fall merely because Nebuchadnezzar was strong, but because God had judged the people of Judah for their disobedience and idolatry. some of the articles: The remainder of the articles were removed later when Jehoiakim surrendered (2 Kin. 24:13; 2 Chr. 36:18). Shinar—that is, Babylon—was located on the Euphrates River fifty miles south of present-day Baghdad in Iraq. into the treasure house: The articles taken from the house of God appear later, on the night of Belshazzar's feast (ch. 5). Eventually they were returned to Zerubbabel who brought them back to Israel (Ezra 1:7).

1:3 eunuchs: In ancient Middle Eastern monarchies, royal harems were typically superintended by men who had been emasculated and were considered reliable to serve in that capacity. A eunuch was often regarded as a privileged official. He enjoyed the personal friendship of the king, and his advice was frequently sought. Some have speculated that Daniel and his friends were eunuchs or at least that they were set apart to advise the king (v. 9), but there is no specific statement in the book to this effect. The children of Israel refers to the general population of the nation of Israel.

1:4, 5 Possessing knowledge refers to the young men's previous education. the language and literature of the Chaldeans: The language of most of Mesopotamia was Akkadian, which was written in cuneiform script, usually on clay tablets. Over the centuries the Babylonians and Assyrians produced a massive body of literature of all types. Though Aramaic had begun to replace Akkadian by 600 B.C., Babylonian scholars continued to study and even write literature in their classical tongue. For Daniel and his friends to be truly educated required that they be familiar with these literary traditions. The term Chaldeans was commonly applied to the Babylonians in general, and also to the guild of astrologers, diviners, and other practitioners of wisdom to which Daniel was being introduced (1:17; 2:2, 4, 5, 10; 3:8).

1:6 According to the first-century Jewish historian Josephus, all four of these young men were members of Zedekiah's royal family.

1:7 The name Daniel means "God Is My Judge." Daniel's Babylonian name Belteshazzar means "Lady Protect the King," referring to the goddess Sarpanitu, wife of Marduk. The name Hananiah means "The Lord Is Gracious." Hananiah's Babylonian name Shadrach means "I Am Fearful of the God." The name Mishael means "Who Is What God Is?" Mishael's Babylonian name Meshach means "I Am of Little Account." The name Azariah means "The Lord Has Helped Me." Azariah's Babylonian name Abed-Nego means "Servant of (the god) Nebo."

Stand for What Is Right!

Perhaps in no other area do we as Christians today have as great an opportunity to influence people around us than in our ethics and morality in the workplace. How we behave on the job tells others everything they need to know about our values and commitments. The question is, are we standing for what is right?

Daniel and his three companions made up their minds to stand for godly values right from the start of their careers (Dan. 1:8). As ambassadors-in-training in Babylon, they declined to eat the specially prepared food provided by the government. The exact reasons why they found the food objectionable matter little. The important point is that once they realized that eating it would result in "defilement," they took a stand. They refused to just "go along to get along."

Therein lies the real challenge of workplace ethics today. Occasionally we may struggle to discern the right from the wrong, which is a matter of the intellect. But most of the time our need is to summon the conviction and the courage to do what we know is right, which is a matter of the will. Ultimately, ethics and morality have less to do with the head than with the heart. Daniel and his friends settled in their hearts what they needed to do and not do, based on biblical principles. As a result, they were able to carry out a plan with tough-minded resolve. In other words, they showed some moral backbone.

As you face ethical choices where you work, you can choose to stand for what is right. It may cost you, but God will give you the strength to deal with whatever consequences come your way. Furthermore, the cost of losing your integrity is infinitely greater than whatever it costs you to keep it.

1:8 defile himself: Daniel's refusal to eat the king's delicacies had nothing to do with the consumption of rich food or wine. There were two problems with the king's menu: (1) It no doubt included food forbidden by the Law and food not prepared according to Mosaic regulations (Lev. 11). (2) The meat had probably been dedicated to idols, as was customary in Babylon. To partake of the food would have been to recognize the idols as deities.

1:9 This verse implies that the chief of the eunuchs was over Daniel, leading some scholars to conclude that Daniel himself was a eunuch.

1:10, 11 In the Hebrew text, your is plural. Daniel's friends joined him in refusing to eat from the king's menu (vv. 7, 17, 19). Endanger my head suggests that the king might have had the chief of the eunuchs put to death for accommodating Daniel and his friends.

1:12, 13 Vegetables means things grown from seed and includes vegetables and grains. The request for water indicates that Daniel and his friends did not want to drink wine, probably because, like the food, it was dedicated to idols (v. 8).

1:14–16 Better and fatter indicates that Daniel and his friends were healthier than the young men who ate … of the king's delicacies.

1:17 God gave them knowledge and skill in all literature: As Moses was educated in the knowledge of Egypt, so Daniel and his friends acquired a Chaldean education. The wisdom of the Chaldeans consisted of sciences current at the time, including the interpretation of omens communicated through astrology, the examination of livers, kidneys, and other animal entrails, and the examination of the organs and flight patterns of birds. Daniel had the additional advantage of understanding visions and dreams. In the ancient Near East dreams were considered a source of divine revelation, and thus their interpretation was highly valued. Daniel's gift from God in this area put him far beyond the abilities of the Chaldean interpreters (4:5–9).

1:18 The end of the days refers to the end of three years (v. 5). The chief of the eunuchs was Ashpenaz (v. 3).

1:19–21 Daniel served as counselor to the king from the completion of his training under Nebuchadnezzar (about 603 B.C., v. 5) until the first year of King Cyrus (539 B.C.). Thus Daniel held his position until the very end of the Babylonian Empire.

2:1 second year: Nebuchadnezzar's reign commenced in 605 B.C., so this is likely 603 B.C., given Daniel's preference for a "full-year" chronological system (1:1). The king was troubled because he did not know the future of his kingdom (v. 29).

2:2, 3 The Hebrew word translated magicians refers to those who use the pen—most likely, those learned in the sacred writings of the Babylonians. Astrologers studied the stars. Sorcerers received power from evil spirits. The Chaldeans were probably a class of wise men.

2:4 the Chaldeans spoke to the king in Aramaic: Daniel 2:4—7:28 is written in Aramaic, the common language of the day.

2:5, 6 Cut in pieces refers to the ancient practice of dismembering a body (3:29; 1 Sam. 15:33).

2:7–9 tell me the dream: Nebuchadnezzar reasoned that if the wise men could supernaturally interpret his dream, they should first be able to tell him the content of it.

2:10–12 Babylon here probably refers to the city, not the whole province.

2:13, 14 they began killing the wise men: Nebuchadnezzar's penalty was excessive and extreme (v. 15).

2:15 Urgent means sharp or severe (v. 13).

2:16–18 Daniel, despite his education and expertise, still knew that prayer to the omniscient God was the first step in a crisis situation. However, Daniel did not pray alone. He sought the counsel of friends who would raise petition to the Lord with him. God of heaven is a favorite title for the Lord in late OT literature (vv. 37, 44; 2 Chr. 36:23; Ezra 1:2; 5:11, 12; 6:9, 10; 7:12, 21, 23; Neh. 1:4, 5; 2:4, 20). The title emphasizes the universality of God's dominion over all nations.

2:19, 20 night vision: Normally visions occurred in the daytime (8:1–14) and dreams occurred at night.

IN COMPARISON

Dreams and Visions in Daniel

Daniel's God-given ability to interpret "visions and dreams" (1:17) served him well in his role as advisor to King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon, a man noted for his mysterious and troubling dreams. The following brief comparison of a dream of Nebuchadnezzar and a dream and vision of Daniel reveals a common theme in the Book of Daniel—the successive rise and fall of four kingdoms.

Nebuchadnezzar's Dream	Daniel's Dream	Daniel's Vision	Interpretation
An image with a head of fine gold (2:32)	A beast like a lion with eagle's wings (7:4)		Babylon would establish itself as the first world empire (2:38; 7:17).
An image with a chest and arms of silver (2:32)	A beast like a bear with three ribs in its mouth (7:5)	A ram with two horns, one of which was higher than the other (8:3)	Medo-Persia would defeat Babylon and establish itself as the second world empire (2:39; 7:17; 8:20).
An image with a belly and thighs of bronze (2:32)	A beast like a leopard with four wings (7:6)	A male goat with a large horn, later replaced by four horns and a little horn (8:5–9)	Greece would defeat Medo-Persia and establish itself as the third world empire (2:39; 7:17; 8:21).
An image with legs of iron and feet of iron and clay (2:32)	A beast with iron teeth and ten horns (7:7)		Rome would defeat Greece and establish itself as the fourth world empire (2:40–43; 7:17).

2:21 Seasons here refers to the events of history.

2:22–27 Deep refers to something inaccessible (Ps. 92:5, 6). What is in the darkness is hidden from sight.

2:28–30 The latter days is an expression used frequently of the end times when God will intervene in human history to establish His eternal kingdom (Is. 2:2; Hos. 3:5; Mic. 4:1–3).

2:31–33 Image here means statue, not idol. gold … silver … bronze … iron: The metals are listed in descending order of weight and value. The strength of the metals, however, increases from head to legs.

2:34 Without hands signifies supernatural activity.

2:35, 36 In biblical imagery, a mountain is often a metaphor for a kingdom (Ps. 48:2; Is. 2:2; 11:9; Jer. 51:25; Ezek. 20:40; Zech. 8:3). The same is true in this case, as the later interpretation makes clear (v. 44).

2:37 God … has given you a kingdom: The God of Israel is the God of all nations. Though the rulers of those nations may not have recognized Him as Lord, that did not nullify God's ultimate sovereignty nor did it alleviate the rulers' responsibility to Him.

2:38 The head is a reference to the Babylonian Empire, personified in Nebuchadnezzar.

2:39, 40 The image that Nebuchadnezzar saw (vv. 31–35) represented four kingdoms that would rule over all the earth. The first worldwide empire—the head of gold (v. 32)—was Babylon (v. 38). The second empire—the chest and arms of silver (v. 32)—was Medo-Persia (5:28; 8:20; 11:2). As silver is inferior to gold, so Medo-Persia was inferior to Babylon, not in size but in its effectiveness in governing its people. The third empire—the belly and thighs of bronze (v. 32)—would be Greece (8:21). The fourth empire—the legs of iron (v. 33)—is the only one not identified within the Book of Daniel. Rome is the most likely choice, for it succeeded Greece. Strong as iron: The focus shifts from the value of the metals to their comparative strength. The Roman Empire was marked by strength, but it was destructive strength. Iron replaced bronze as the most common metal for tool and weapons, starting about 1200 B.C. The process of replacement lasted some time. For one thing, iron has to have some carbon in it; then it can be hardened by heating and quenching. Weapons were known to bend during use and the soldiers had to straighten them in the midst of battle. Yet in the end iron was recognized as the common symbol of war.[L&T]

2:41–45 The kingdom shall be divided may be a reference to the fourth kingdom, the Roman Empire (v. 40). Differences about what is meant by the ten toes (v. 42) and the kingdom that filled the earth (represented by the stone in v. 45) has resulted in widely varying interpretations. Some believe that vv. 41–45 point to future events that have not yet been fulfilled. In this scenario, the Roman Empire will one day be revived (v. 41), will be ruled over by ten rulers (the toes of v. 42), will feud over internal problems (v. 43), will witness the return of Jesus Christ (v. 44), and will be destroyed by Christ at the Second Coming (v. 45).

2:44 The kingdom which shall never be destroyed is the kingdom of God. There are at least two views as to what form this kingdom will take. Amillennialists suggest it is a spiritual kingdom introduced by Jesus Christ at His first coming. Premillennialists suggest that it is a literal kingdom to be established by Jesus Christ at the Second Coming, at which time He will destroy the kingdoms of this world (Rev. 19:15).

2:45–49 your God is the God of gods: One should not conclude from Nebuchadnezzar's confession that he had been converted. Since the Lord had enabled Daniel to interpret the king's dream, Nebuchadnezzar was willing to admit that Daniel's God was supreme, at least in matters of divine knowledge. The king gladly promoted Daniel as a result (v. 48).

3:1 sixty cubits … six cubits: A cubit in Israel was approximately 18 inches; in Babylon it was about 20 inches. Therefore Nebuchadnezzar's image was 90 to 100 feet tall. The 10:1 ratio of height to width, however, suggests that the image was standing on a high pedestal so that the proportions of the figure itself would be closer to the normal ratio of about 4:1. The image most likely served as a symbol of the cohesion and monolithic character of Babylon under the rule of its glorious king Nebuchadnezzar. Since the state and its king could not be separated from its gods, however, to bow down before the image was to worship it (vv. 5, 12, 14, 18, 28). The plain of Dura was probably about six miles southeast of Babylon.

3:2, 3 The officials of the kingdom are listed in descending order of rank. Satraps were the chief officials of the provinces of the empire. Daniel was one of the administrators (2:48). In later times, Zerubbabel (Hag. 1:1) and Nehemiah (Neh. 5:14) were appointed governors.

3:4, 5 harp … psaltery … symphony: These three words appear to be Greek in origin. Greek words of a cultural or technical nature appeared throughout the ancient Middle East well before 600 B.C.

3:6, 8 Accused means "ate the pieces of, devoured piecemeal." The term suggests slander and malicious accusations, which devour the accused piece by piece.

3:9–12 No explanation is given for Daniel's absence.

3:13–16 we have no need to answer you: Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-Nego were not being arrogant; they were admitting their guilt.

3:17 God … is able: The response of the Jewish young men is a model of confidence in God and submission to His will. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-Nego recognized God's sovereignty and power.

3:18 But if not: While the faithful men knew that God could deliver them (v. 17), they were also aware that God may have chosen not to do so. Faith in God may not translate into victory in every circumstance (Heb. 11:32–39). To these men the outcome was irrelevant, for what was at stake was not God's ability or their own lives, but their faith and obedience to serve Him regardless of the cost.

3:19, 20 The mighty men of valor were Nebuchadnezzar's personal bodyguards.

3:21 bound in … garments: Criminals were normally stripped before execution. The fact that the fine clothes of the Jewish men were not removed implies that the king's command was carried out with great haste (v. 22).

3:22 killed those men: The price of Nebuchadnezzar's rage was the loss of capable men.

3:23–25 walking: The enormous number of bricks demanded in Babylon required kilns large enough to permit people to walk in them. The fire burned off the men's bonds (v. 21), but did not hurt them.

IN DEPTH

The Trinity in the Old Testament

When King Nebuchadnezzar exclaimed that the fourth man walking about in the fiery furnace with Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego was "like the Son of God" (3:25), it may be an overstatement to say that he recognized Jesus. Yet even though he worshiped other gods, Nebuchadnezzar somehow knew that this mysterious fourth figure was divine (3:28).

Though the doctrine of the Triune God was not fully revealed until Jesus' time, we find clues that God was preparing humanity for this truth. In the OT, such foreshadowings of God or the preincarnate Christ in a visible form are called theophanies, meaning "appearances of God." These theophanies include the Angel who comforted Hagar (Gen. 16:7–13), the visitor who revealed to Abraham and Sarah that they would have a son (Gen. 18:1–15), the Lord's appearance to Moses in the burning bush (Ex. 3), the pillars of cloud and fire that led the Israelites from Egypt (Ex. 14:19, 20), and Moses' glimpse of God on Sinai (Ex. 33:11). Some people would also include as a theophany the appearance of Melchizedek, the priest-king of Salem, who gave wine and bread to Abram (Gen. 14:18–20).

The OT contains nearly eighty references to the Spirit of God and anticipates the arrival of God's Son, the Messiah, who would deliver His people. Daniel also calls Christ the Son of Man (Dan. 7:13). These theophanies were temporary, however. They were hints of the incarnation of Christ, fully human and fully divine, who would live among and redeem His people.

3:26, 27 the fire had no power: The God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-Nego saved them completely, so that there was not the slightest evidence that they had ever been in danger. The salvation offered by the Lord is so effective and complete that nothing of the lost condition remains.

3:28–30 no other God: Pagan cultures did not deny the existence of other gods, even those of other peoples. Nebuchadnezzar declared only that the God of the Jews was a god who is able to deliver; the king forbade others to despise Him.

4:1–3 These verses are a royal proclamation by Nebuchadnezzar concerning the God of Israel in which the king celebrated what God had done for him and extolled His power and universal dominion.

4:4 rest … and flourishing: Nebuchadnezzar had peace at home and prospered in his work.

4:5, 6 This dream of Nebuchadnezzar occurred thirty years after the dream in ch. 2. Troubled means terrified.

“interpretation”

(Aram. peshar) (2:4; 4:6, 5:12, 16) Strong’s #6591: This verb literally means “to untie” or “to loose.” In other words, Daniel could unravel the mysteries of dreams and visions: he could explain or solve them. Yet he was always quick to give God the credit for his ability (2:28). By the time of Jesus, rabbinic Judaism had interpreted much of the OT allegorically. These “pesher” explanations of the Scriptures might have been what Jesus was addressing when He said, “you have heard that it was said” (Matt. 5:21, 27, 31, 38).

4:7 I told them the dream: In ch. 2, Nebuchadnezzar did not tell his wise men the content of his dream (2:5).

4:8 My god refers to Marduk. Nebuchadnezzar was still a pagan at this point.

4:9 Daniel, also known as Belteshazzar, was chief of the magicians, a position given to him years earlier (2:48).

4:10–17 In ch. 2, Nebuchadnezzar dreamed of a great image, of which he was a part. His second dream involved a tree, which represented him (v. 22). A tree is often a symbol of towering strength, providing shade, food, fuel, beauty, and the raw materials for some buildings.

4:15 let him: At this point it becomes obvious that the tree is a symbol of a person.

4:16 Seven times could refer to years, months, weeks, days, or hours. Most take it to mean years, based on the usage of “times” elsewhere in Daniel (2:8; 3:5, 15; 7:25). Seven is the blbical number for completeness.

4:17 The point of Nebuchadnezzar’s dream is that the Most High rules supreme in the world.

4:18 Spirit of the Holy God: The doctrine of the Triune God—the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—is evident in the OT (Gen. 1:26; 11:7; Is. 48:16), but is not developed (3:25). Nebuchadnezzar was merely saying that Daniel’s ability to interpret dreams was the result of God’s giving Daniel the spirit of interpretation.

4:19 astonished … troubled: Having come to an understanding of Nebuchadnezzar’s dream, Daniel was so upset by its content that he hesitated to divulge its meaning. may the dream concern those who hate you: Daniel wishes that the awful message of judgment were somehow intended for the king's enemies and not the king.

4:20 In the OT, a tree is a common symbol for a ruler (Judg. 9:7–15; Ezek. 31:2–14; Zech. 11:1, 2). Since few trees were present in Babylon, a tree of the gigantic proportions described here would have been impressive and unique.

4:21 leaves were lovely … fruit abundant: Daniel indicates that Nebuchadnezzar was the source of abundant blessing for all. The beasts and birds represent the happy citizens of Nebuchadnezzar's realm.

4:22 heavens … earth: These terms convey the idea of totality. Using deliberate exaggeration, Daniel says that Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom extended from heaven to the ends of the earth, and so was universal.

4:23, 24 Watcher means "a waking one," one who is constantly alert. The parallel holy one suggests that the watcher is either the Lord Himself or one of His angels (3:28; 6:22; 8:16; 10:13; 12:1). stump and roots: The tree—Nebuchadnezzar—would be cut down but not uprooted. The stump would produce suckers and the roots would produce new growth that would eventually give rise to a new tree, one as grand as before (v. 26). Seven times means seven years (7:12, 25).

4:25–28 beasts of the field: The affliction of Nebuchadnezzar is known technically as boanthropy, that is, man acting like animal. It is a disease well attested to in historical and scientific literature. Many critics view this account as a fable or tale without historical substance since nothing is known of this malady of Nebuchadnezzar apart from the account here in Daniel. It is important to remember, however, that there is virtually no information about the reign of Nebuchadnezzar from 594–562 B.C., the year of his death. His madness could easily have fallen within that period.

4:29–31 twelve months: The reference here is to a "grace period" between the prediction of Nebuchadnezzar's madness and its occurrence. Perhaps Nebuchadnezzar was allowed a full year in the hope that he might repent and avert the judgment of God for his arrogant pride.

4:32, 33 until you know: Nebuchadnezzar would become insane, animal-like in his habits and senses. Yet in that condition he would learn more of God than he ever had before. In fact, the purpose of the judgment was that Nebuchadnezzar might know who God is and how He sovereignly creates kingdoms and distributes them to whom He wills. Nebuchadnezzar had to be humbled before he could be exalted again. The chastisement of God is always for a holy and helpful purpose.

4:34–37 Nebuchadnezzar praises the Most High, recognizing that God lives forever and rules forever. The king unmistakably acknowledges Daniel's God as the omnipotent, eternal Sovereign of the universe.

5:1, 2 Belshazzar is called the king and the son of Nebuchadnezzar (v. 22). Other ancient records, however, seem to dispute both facts. These records indicate that Belshazzar was the son of Nabonidus, the last king of Babylon. Two possible explanations can reconcile these differing accounts: (1) Belshazzar served as vice-regent during his father's frequent absences from the capital. Thus he would have been in charge when Nebuchadnezzar's insanity began. Note that Darius the Mede was also called king even though he served Cyrus (5:31; 6:6). (2) Belshazzar was the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar; hence, the term father in v. 2 indicates that Nebuchadnezzar was an ancestor of Belshazzar.

5:3, 4 gold vessels … from the temple: Belshazzar's use of the sacred vessels at a drunken orgy was a blasphemous act of sacrilege (v. 23). praised the gods: Belshazzar's actions demonstrated deliberate defiance of the true God (v. 23).

5:5–7 Nabonidus the king was in Arabia. Belshazzar was his vice-regent. The third ruler would have been next in line to the throne.

5:8–10 The queen was not Belshazzar's wife, but the queen mother. She was either the wife of Nebuchadnezzar or the daughter of Nebuchadnezzar who had married Nabonidus, the current king.

5:11, 12 The Spirit of the Holy God is the same expression used by Nebuchadnezzar (4:8, 9, 18).

5:13–16 This event took place in 539 B.C. (v. 30). Daniel was an old man at this time, possibly eighty years old or older.

5:17–24 When Daniel refused Belshazzar's gifts and rewards, he was not being ungrateful or showing disrespect. He was simply saying that he would interpret the writing regardless of reward.

5:25–28 MENE means numbered. The repetition is for emphasis. God had numbered the days of Belshazzar's kingdom; its time was up. TEKEL means weighed. God had weighed Belshazzar, and the king did not measure up to God's standard of righteousness. UPHARSIN, the plural of PERES in v. 28, means divided. That very night (v. 30) Babylon would be divided and defeated by the Medes and Persians.

5:29, 30 That very night (October 12, 539 B.C.) Babylon fell to the Persian army commanded by Gubaru.

5:31 Darius the Mede is mentioned by name only in the Book of Daniel (6:1, 6, 9; 9:1). He is not the famous Darius I Hystaspes because Darius I was not a Mede and he lived too late (522–486 B.C.) to be a contemporary of Daniel. There are two principal suggestions as to the identity of Darius the Mede: (1) He was Cyrus the king of Persia. However, it is unlikely that Cyrus would be called a “Mede” since he was in fact a Persian. (2) He was Gubaru, a governor appointed by Cyrus. Both Daniel and ancient literary sources indicate that a certain official (“Darius the Mede” in Daniel, “Gubaru” in Persian texts) took over immediately in Babylon until Cyrus appointed his own son Cambyses as viceregent around 538 B.C. This figure is most likely identified with Darius. Why he is called Darius is uncertain, though ancient rulers often took other names for themselves.

6:1, 2 Daniel had previously been appointed a governor in Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar (2:48). Here he was governor in the new Medo-Persian reign. Suffer no loss refers to taxes.

6:3, 4 Excellent spirit probably refers to Daniel's surpassing ability to do his job and perhaps includes a commendable attitude.

6:5–7 Daniel had been circumspect in obeying the laws of the land, but his enemies knew that when the law of the land conflicted with the law of his God, Daniel would break the former in favor of the latter.

6:8, 9 the law of the Medes and Persians: Once a royal decree had been issued, it could not be revoked—even by the king himself. It remained in force until its time of expiration. The practice of creating an unchangeable law may follow from the idea that changing a decree was an admission that it had been faulty.

IN CONTEXT

The Medes and Persians

The kingdom of Media is first mentioned in Assyrian sources describing the ninth-century campaign of Assyria's Shalmaneser III (858–824 B.C.) into the land of the Medes. Media was apparently situated in the area of modern west-central Iran and flourished for the next two centuries, according to the same Assyrian sources. In the Assyrian texts the Medes are pictured in these centuries as comprised of a group of small autonomous tribes. The Greek historian Herodotus (484–425 B.C.) gives a legendary account of a unification of Median tribes occurring during the seventh century B.C. By the late seventh century the unified Median tribes, led by Cyaxares (around 625–585 B.C.) were allied with the Chaldeans against Assyria. The united Medes thus contributed to the downfall of the Assyrian capital of Ninevah in 612 B.C.

The Median kingdom continued under Astyages (about 585–550 B.C.), successor of Cyaxares, until the middle of the sixth century B.C. In 550 B.C., Cyrus of Persia successfully united the Persian and Median tribes, though it is uncertain whether the Medes were conquered or were peacefully incorporated into the empire of Cyrus. The ruler was apparently related to the royal hourse of both Media and Persia. Thus the union of the two nations may have been accomplished as a result of the legal claim of Cyrus to the throne. Media continued to be geographically distinct even under Persian government, and the Medes were second only to the Persians in the empire. So even after Persian absorbed Media in 550 B.C., the Medes continued to be recognized as a distinct people. This situation is evident in the recurring phrase "the law of the Medes and Persians" (Dan. 6:8, 12, 15).

6:10–12 Undeterred by the royal proclamation (vv. 6–9), Daniel resumed praying by the windows of his house that opened toward Jerusalem—that is, toward the west. His enemies were correct in assuming that if Daniel was forced to choose between the decree of an earthly king and the eternal word of the King of heaven, he would choose his God (v. 5).

6:13–15 Daniel's accusers did not describe him as governor (v. 2), but as one of the captives from Judah, in order to implicate him in a treasonous act.

6:16 The Aramaic word for den means “pit,” implying that it was underground.

6:17–20 sealed it: To ensure that the den remained closed and that no effort could be made either by the king or his officials to intervene, the lid of the den was impressed with the royal seal and with the seals of the king’s lords. The lid of the den could not be removed without breaking the seals.

6:21, 22 Though this is a standard way of greeting a king (2:4; 3:9; 5:10; 6:6), it is ironic here because Daniel, who has just been made alive by the God whom even Darius confesses as “the living God” (v. 20), blesses the king with the wish that he should live forever. That is literally possible for the king, of course, only if he comes to know Daniel’s God, who is the source of life as the lion’s den episode shows so clearly.

6:23 because he believed in his God: Daniel’s faithfulness got him into trouble (v. 10); his faith got him out of it (Heb. 11:33).

6:24, 25 children … wives: The entire families of the wicked conspirators were destroyed because the Persians, like the Hebrews and other Semites, considered guilt a collective responsibility, especially in families. The examples of Korah (Num. 16:1–35) and Achan (Josh. 7) illustrate this principle well.

6:26, 27 I make a decree: Darius’s original thirty–day decree (vv. 6–9) had probably expired.

6:28 Daniel prospered throughout the reign of Darius and in the reign of Cyrus. Gubaru, or Darius, served Cyrus for about one year (539–538 B.C.), after which Cyrus appointed his son Cambyses as vice-regent over Babylon. Cyrus himself continued as king until 530 B.C.

7:1—12:13 Here we find a series of visions that teach a similar truth to the experiences of the first six chapters. In chs. 1—6, God is portrayed as being in control of the present. In chs. 7—12, He is seen as also controlling the future.

7:1–28 Daniel has a vision of four beasts. The general tenor of this vision is much like that of the dream in ch. 2. There, Daniel was shown a vision of four successive empires that would rule the world in which God's people lived.

7:1 the first year of Belshazzar: Chapter 5 records Belshazzar's death, indicating that the Book of Daniel is not arranged chronologically. The date of Belshazzar's first year cannot be stated precisely. However, since Nabonidus appears to have spent at least ten years in Arabia and since Belshazzar reigned for Nabonidus in Babylon during that time, a date of 550 B.C. for Belshazzar's first year cannot be far off. This date coincides with the inauguration of the Medo-Persian Empire under Cyrus, an occasion that may have prompted Daniel's vision.

7:2 Four winds seems to refer to winds from every direction, covering the whole earth. The Great Sea is probably a reference to the Mediterranean Sea (Josh. 15:12; 23:4; Ezek. 47:10, 19), here used figuratively of the nations of the world (Is. 57:20; Rev. 17:15).

7:3 The beasts represent kings (v. 17) or kingdoms (vv. 18, 23).

7:4 lion … eagle's wings: It is commonly recognized that these two animals are the king of the beasts and the king of the birds respectively, a fitting description of Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonian Empire (Jer. 49:19, 22). There has been almost universal agreement from the early centuries until today that this beast represents Babylon. It is also agreed that the vision of ch. 7 and that of ch. 2 speak about the same four kingdoms. Plucked off is a reference to Nebuchadnezzar's humiliation (4:28–33).

7:5 If the lion with eagle's wings represents Babylon (v. 4), the bear—in line with Nebuchadnezzar's first dream—represents Babylon's successor, the Medo-Persian Empire (2:38, 39). Raised up on one side suggests that the Persians were greater and more powerful than the Medes. The three ribs represent the three kingdoms that the Medo-Persians devoured—Babylon, Lydia, and Egypt.

Bust of Alexander the Great, Greek military conqueror. Many interpreters believe the leopard in Daniel's prophecy (Dan. 7:6) refers to the future Greek Empire and its dominance under Alexander's leadership.

7:6 If the second beast of Daniel's dream represents the Medo-Persian Empire (v. 5), the leopard represents Greece (2:39). Four symbolizes universality (see "four winds," v. 2); wings are synonymous with speed. The Greeks under the leadership of Alexander the Great rapidly conquered the known world. Four heads describes "heads" of government. After Alexander's death, his empire was divided among his generals into four different parts.

7:7 The fourth beast did not look like any known animal. Since this beast follows Greece (v. 6), it may represent Rome (2:40).

7:8 The horns here represent rulers. Though the little one begins small, it would become the greatest of all (v. 20).

7:9 Ancient of Days is a reference to God the Father as certified by the submission of "the One like the Son of Man" to Him (vv. 13, 14) and His role in judgment (v. 22). Fiery flame symbolizes judgment. Its wheels refers to the chariot in which God rides to battle to exercise His sovereignty and to appear as Judge (Ezek. 1:15–21; 10:1–22).

7:10 A thousand thousands … Ten thousand times ten thousand: The reference here is to innumerable servants. The books record the names and deeds of those who will be judged (Rev. 20:12).

7:11 The horn here is the same as the one in v. 8. the burning flame: The idea that the end of the wicked is fiery destruction is apparent in the OT (Gen. 19:24; Is. 66:24; Mal. 4:1, 3), but reaches its fullest expression in the NT teaching about hell (Matt. 5:22, 29, 30; 10:28; 2 Pet. 2:4).

7:12 The rest of the beasts is a reference to the three beasts of vv. 3–6—Babylon, Medo-Persia, and Greece. they had their dominion taken away: Though these nations passed away, their "dominion" was inherited by their respective successors. A season and a time is an idiom for an indefinite period.

7:13 Son of Man is Semitic for "human being." Daniel saw One like the "Son of Man," indicating that He is not a man in the strict sense, but rather the perfect representation of humanity. Jewish and Christian expositors have identified this individual as the Messiah. Jesus Himself used this name to emphasize His humanity as the incarnate Son of God (Matt. 9:6; 10:23; 11:19; 12:8, 32, 40; Mark 8:31; 9:12; Luke 6:5; 9:22; John 3:13, 14; 5:27). Coming with … clouds: John uses the same expression to speak of Jesus coming in judgment (Matt. 24:30; Rev. 1:7).

7:14, 15 Him refers to the Son of Man (v. 13), who will reign over all things as the regent of Almighty God (1 Cor. 15:27, 28; Eph. 1:20–23; Phil. 2:9–11; Rev. 17:14; 19:16). In contrast to the vanishing nature of the previous empires, His dominion is … everlasting.

7:16 One of those who stood by refers to an angel standing by the throne of God (v. 10).

7:17 These kings represent kingdoms (8:21). Thus each beast represents both a king and a kingdom.

7:18–20 saints of the Most High: Saints means "holy ones," a term that can refer either to angels (Job 15:15; Ps. 89:5, 7; Zech. 14:5) or to redeemed men and women (Pss. 16:3; 30:4; 31:23; 37:28; Prov. 2:8; Rom. 1:7; 12:13; Rev. 5:8). The kingdom received and forever possessed by the saints must be the same as the dominion of the Son of Man, which is also everlasting (v. 14). The Son of Man thus rules through His saints, a fact proclaimed frequently in the NT (Rev. 2:26, 27; 20:4–6).

7:21–23 Daniel's vision reveals the hostility waged by the little horn against the saints. The little horn's militaristic character is seen also in 11:38, 39 and particularly in Rev. 13:1–10. There, in the guise of a beast, this blasphemous enemy of the saints prevails for forty-two months. The connection between Daniel's "little horn" and John"beast from the sea" is unmistakable.

7:24, 25 There are three common interpretations as to the ten kings who shall arise from this kingdom: (1) The fourth beast is Greece and the ten horns are ten divisions of the Grecian Empire. (2) The fourth beast is Rome and the ten horns are the fragments of the Roman Empire. (3) The fourth beast is a revived Roman Empire and the ten kings are members of a future realm. Another refers to the little horn of v. 8 (vv. 20, 21). This king will subdue three others, blaspheme God (11:36; 2 Thess. 2:4; Rev. 13:5, 6), persecute the saints (v. 21; Rev. 13:7), attempt to change times and law, and dominate the saints for a limited time. time and times and half a time: Time can refer to a year, times to two years, and half a time to one half of a year, for a total of three and one-half years. Some suggest that the expression does not indicate a specific number of years but instead a period of time that God in His mercy would shorten.

7:26 The dominion of the little horn will come to a violent end when he submits to the court of God (v. 10).

7:27, 28 the kingdom … to the people, the saints: The kingdom of God, governed by His saints, will exercise rule over all the earth.

“vision”

(Heb. chazon) (8:1; Is. 1:1; Prov. 29:18) Strong’s #2377: The Hebrew word for a dream or a vision is derived from a common Hebrew verb meaning “to see.” Dreams and visions were often recognized by the ancients as revelations from the gods, or from God Himself in the case of the Hebrews (Is. 1:1). Daniel received a visionary message from God that spoke about the future of the kingdoms of Persia and Greece. His dream was encoded in symbols which required the interpretive assistance of the angel Gabriel (8:15–27). The author of Proverbs insists that revelation from God is essential to the well-being of a society. Without God’s Law revealed in Scripture, the foundation of a society crumbles (Prov. 29:18).

8:1 After writing in Aramaic from 2:4–7:28, Daniel returns to writing in Hebrew.

8:2 Shushan was about 230 miles east of Babylon. Ulai was an artificial canal located a few miles from Shushan.

8:3 The ram represents Medo-Persia (v. 20). The two horns symbolize the people of Media and the people of Persia.

8:4 Cyrus and his successors conquered westward including Babylon, Syria, and Asia Minor, northward including Armenia and the Caspian Sea region, and southward including Egypt and Ethiopia.

8:5, 6 The goat represents Greece (v. 21). The notable horn symbolizes Alexander the Great (v. 21), who launched his attack against Persia in 334 B.C. By 332 B.C., he had essentially subdued the Persian Empire. without touching the ground: Alexander's conquest was so rapid that it seemed as if he flew across the earth.

8:7 The Persian forces outnumbered the Greeks. But in two decisive battles, the Medo-Persian Empire collapsed.

8:8 the large horn was broken: Alexander the Great died at the height of his career, before he was thirty-three years old. four notable ones: After Alexander's death, four of his generals carved up the Macedonian Empire. Antigonus ruled from northern Syria to central Asia; Cassander ruled over Macedonia; Ptolemy ruled in Egypt and southern Syria, including Palestine; Lysimachus ruled over Thrace.

8:9 The little horn here is not the same as the little horn of ch. 7. The former horn comes out of the fourth beast, Rome, whereas this one comes out of Greece. The little horn here refers to Antiochus Epiphanes, the eighth king of the Syrian dynasty who reigned from 175 to 164 B.C. Thus, this prophecy skips from 301 B.C., the time of the division of Alexander's empire, to 175 B.C., when Antiochus became king. toward the south: Antiochus invaded Egypt. The east is Parthia and the Glorious Land is Palestine.

8:10 The host of heaven and the stars both refer to God's people (12:3; Gen. 15:5). Cast down some describes Antiochus's conquest.

8:11 The Prince of the host refers to God Himself. The little horn, like Lucifer (Is. 14:12), aspires to be like God. sanctuary … cast down: Antiochus desecrated the house of God by erecting a statue of Zeus on the bronze altar.

8:12 Truth is a reference to the Mosaic Law.

8:13 A holy one and another holy one both refer to angels (4:13, 23).

8:14 Two thousand three hundred days refers to the time between Antiochus's pollution of the temple and the Maccabees' cleansing of it.

8:15 the appearance of a man: This person is not identified. It could be the voice of God, or Christ, or and angel.

8:16 This is the first mention of the messenger Gabriel in the Bible. The angel is mentioned three other times in Scripture (9:21; Luke 1:19, 26).

8:17, 18 The time of the end is a reference to a time that may already be underway (1 John 2:18) in some respects, but will not find its fulfillment until the Second Coming of Christ (Matt. 24:14).

8:19 The indignation is that of the Lord against those who have rebelled against His dominion. The end (see "the time of the end" in v. 17) indicates that this judgment is against all those in rebellion against God, especially those living at the time just before the coming of Christ.

8:20 The two horns represent the two countries of Media and Persia. It is significant that the two are regarded as one empire, represented by the ram.

8:21 The first king of Greece was Alexander the Great.

8:22 not with its power: None of Alexander's four generals ruled with the strength of Alexander (v. 8).

8:23 When the transgressors have reached their fullness means when the sinful actions of the Jews have reached the point where God cannot permit them to go any further without bringing punishment (Gen. 15:16; Matt. 23:32; 1 Thess. 2:16). A king refers to Antiochus IV Epiphanes, the king of Syria who made his capital at Antioch.

8:24 Not by his own power indicates that Antiochus would be energized by Satan, as will the Antichrist (2 Thess. 2:9).

8:25 Without human means: Antiochus died without human intervention. According to the apocryphal Book of Second Maccabees, Antiochus (v. 23) died of a painful disease.

8:26 seal up the vision: Most documents of Daniel's time were written on scrolls that could be rolled up and sealed to protect their contents. This document pertained to a time many days in the future.

8:27 I … fainted and was sick: Daniel suffered a severe emotional reaction to the vision of ch. 8, apparently even greater than the reaction he had experienced after his first vision (7:15, 28).

Responding to Prophecy

Modern-day readers of the Bible have a variety of reactions to the prophetic passages of Scripture. Some find them fascinating and revealing, others puzzling and enigmatic. Some regard them as a clearly marked roadmap for the future, others as writings whose meaning generally remains hidden and mysterious. For quite a few, the question is this: What difference do these prophetic passages make?

In thinking about an appropriate response to biblical prophecy, it helps to understand that the prophets were less concerned with prediction than with revelation. That is, regardless of whether a prophecy pertains to the future, it is significant because it reveals something that the Lord wants His people to know. It has been said that prophecy is not just foretelling the future, it is forthtelling the Word of the Lord.

Daniel's response to the prophecies of Jeremiah is instructive. When the kingdom of Babylon was taken over by the Persians, Daniel recognized that more than political change was involved; he perceived the hand of the Lord. Apparently he had access to Jeremiah's prophecies (Dan. 9:2). Perhaps he had a copy of the letter that Jeremiah sent to the exiles in Babylon, telling them to expect a seventy-year captivity (Jer. 29:10).

As Daniel reflected carefully on this information, he was moved to repentance (Dan. 9:3–7). This is a remarkable response, given other reactions that one might expect. For example, he could have hailed the fall of Babylon as the prophetic event signaling the end of Judah's captivity. He could have taken the information to Darius and demanded his people's immediate release, in the style of Moses. He could have become complacent in his duties, figuring that he was on his way home.

Daniel did none of these things. Instead he repented. His focus was not on dates and timetables, but on his own heart attitude toward the Lord. He was less concerned with how soon the captivity was going to end than with why it had to happen in the first place. The question for him was not "When are we going to return?" but "Are we ready to return?"

Perhaps Daniel's response is worth emulating today. Prophecy can be a fascinating study, but the point is not to solve riddles; it is to hear what God has to say and respond accordingly. Daniel shows that one of our first responses to God’s revelation should be repentance and remorse for sin.

9:1 The first year of Darius was 539 B.C., the year he was appointed by Cyrus as administrator of Babylon.

9:2, 3 The books refers to Scripture, specifically the Book of Jeremiah, which states (Jer. 25:11, 12; 29:10–14) that the desolation of Jerusalem would be fulfilled in seventy years. Daniel's own captivity occurred in 605 B.C. It was now 538 B.C., some sixty-seven years after the conquest. The period of captivity was almost over. Zechariah refers to the seventy-year period as beginning with the destruction of the temple, which took place in 586 B.C. (Zech. 7:5). The temple was rebuilt in 515 B.C. (Ezra 6:15). Therefore, the seventy years has several beginnings and endings.

9:4–14 This is a prayer of repentance for Israel's past sinfulness, but it is also a prayer of confidence, for God was about to overthrow the Babylonians and allow the Jews to return to their homeland to rebuild it. The seventy years of captivity were almost up, and glorious things lay ahead. Daniel confessed that Israel had departed from the Word of God, had disregarded the prophets of God, and had despised the Lord Himself.

9:11–14 the curse and the oath: Covenant documents typically contained statements concerning the penalties for covenant violation. In the Law of Moses, such sanctions are found particularly in Lev. 26:3–45; Deut. 27; 28. In both passages the most feared and devastating curse of all—deportation from the land of promise—is emphasized (Lev. 26:33–39; Deut. 28:36–68). Daniel pointed out that the curse had come to pass.

9:15, 16 brought Your people out of the land of Egypt: Daniel reflected on the greatest redemptive event of Israel's history, the exodus from Egypt, and prayed that God would repeat what He had done long ago.

9:17 Your sanctuary is a reference to Solomon's temple, which had lain in ruins since 586 B.C.

9:18 Your great mercies: It is important to note that the only basis for Daniel's appeal was the grace of God.

9:19 Do not delay: These words must be understood in light of Daniel's reference to the seventy years (v. 2). Daniel knew full well that all of God's promises had not come to pass, nor had the blessings been conferred on the regathered and restored people (Lev. 26:40–45; Deut. 4:29–31).

9:20–23 while I was speaking: The angel was sent at the beginning of Daniel's prayer (v. 23). The man Gabriel is not a denial of Gabriel's angelic nature; the title simply serves to identify Gabriel with the vision of 8:15, 16. evening offering: Because the temple was in ruins, regular daily sacrifices were impossible. Nevertheless, Daniel observed the ritual of worship by praying at the hour of the evening sacrifice. Daniel's prayer was his evening offering.

9:24 Seventy weeks may also be translated seventy sevens. Many scholars agree that the "sevens" are years, as the seventy years of captivity addressed in v. 2 implies. Leviticus 25:8 speaks about "seven sabbaths of years"; Lev. 26:18, 21 implies that Israel's punishment would be multiplied sevenfold. Therefore, a seventy "week" exile would be expected to last for seven times seventy years. Second Chronicles 36:21 suggests that the captivity was to last long enough to make up for seventy omissions of the sabbatical year, which occurred every seven years. This would amount to 490 years before God's people would experience perfect reconciliation with their God. There are many different interpretations of how these years account for the eras of world history before the Second Coming of the Messiah. Some interpreters have suggested that the use of the number seven in this verse is symbolic representing completeness—that is, the completion of all of human history.

9:25 The command to restore and build Jerusalem may be a reference to (1) the decree of Cyrus in Ezra 1, (2) the decree of Darius in Ezra 6, (3) the decree of Artaxerxes in Ezra 7, or (4) the decree of Artaxerxes in Neh. 2.

9:26 One commonly held interpretation maintains that the sixty-two weeks can be added to the seven weeks of v. 25, resulting in a total of sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years. If these years are added to the date of the decree of Artaxerxes in Neh. 2, 445 B.C., with an adjustment to allow for the use of a 360–day year, the end of the sixty-nine weeks coincides with the date of the crucifixion of Jesus. Various other interpretations of the time periods indicated by the sixty-two weeks have been presented, including one that asserts that the Messiah in this verse refers to Cyrus, who was also called the Lord's anointed (Is. 45:1). Messiah shall be cut off may be a reference to the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. The phrase cut off means "to destroy, to kill." The fact that Jesus Christ died not for Himself but for the sins of the world may support the view that the Messiah in this verse refers to Jesus Himself. The prince who is to come may be a reference to the Antichrist (v. 27).

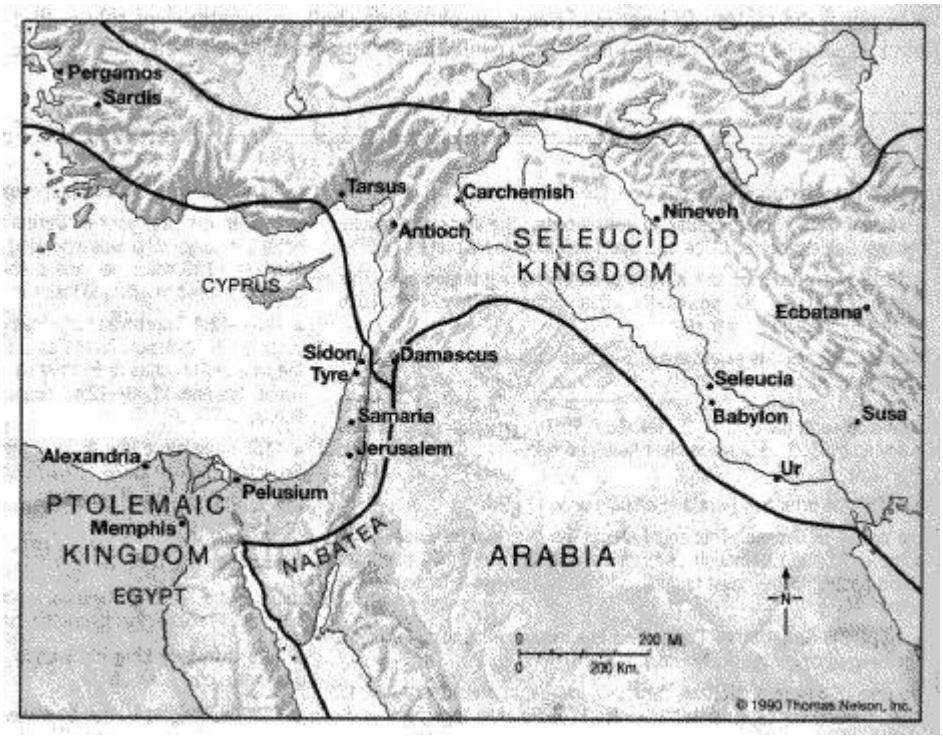
9:27 He may be a reference to the Antichrist, who will confirm a covenant with Israel. In the middle of the week—that is, three and one-half years later—he will break the covenant. abominations … desolate: Antiochus committed an abomination of desolation by setting up an altar to the god Zeus in the temple in Jerusalem (11:31). The Antichrist will also commit an abomination of desolation against the living God (Matt. 24:15). the consummation … is poured out on the desolate: The fact that this abomination does not occur until the consummation suggests that this verse is describing the abomination of the Antichrist and not that of Antiochus.

10:1 The third year of Cyrus's rule over Babylon was 536 B.C.

10:2, 3 Daniel was mourning because he wanted to understand the vision (v. 12). Three full weeks refers to Daniel's observance of the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread, which took place during the first month of the year (Ex. 12:1–20). The Passover was kept on the fourteenth of the month, and the Feast of the Unleavened Bread for the next eight days, with the whole festival ending on the twenty-first day of the month.

10:4 The twenty-fourth day of the first month occurs three days after the Unleavened Bread festival (v. 2).

10:5 A certain man is either an appearance of the preincarnate Christ or an angel. The description that follows suggests that this individual is Christ (v. 6).



Ptolemaic Control of Palestine (270 B.C.)

Alexander's death resulted in the breakup of his empire into smaller kingdoms ruled by his generals. Two of these generals, Ptolemy and Seleucus, became established in the regions around Palestine. By 275 B.C. the Ptolemies were controlling Egypt, Palestine, Cyrene, Phoenicia, Cyprus, and the coast of Asia Minor. The Seleucids controlled Mesopotamia, Syria, and most of Asia Minor and Iran.

10:6, 7 The description of the man here is very much like Ezekiel's description of the glory of God (Ezek. 1:4–28) and John's description of the triumphant, risen Christ (Rev. 1:9–20).

10:8–10 Vigor suggests majesty, splendor, or beauty. turned to frailty … no strength: Humans are weak and frail in the presence of God.

10:11, 12 greatly beloved: God loves everyone (John 3:16); yet some, because of their special relationship to God, are objects of unusual divine love (1 Sam. 13:14; John 13:23; 14:21, 23; Acts 13:22).

10:13 The prince of the kingdom of Persia cannot be a human ruler, for the conflict referred to here is in the spiritual, heavenly realm, as the allusion to Michael makes clear. The prince, therefore, must be understood as a satanic figure who was to supervise the affairs of Persia, inspiring its religious, social, and political structures to works of evil. Paul refers to principalities, powers, rulers of the darkness of this age, and "spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places" (Eph. 6:12). The "man" here says he was detained for twenty-one days, which equals the time of Daniel's mourning and fasting (vv. 2, 3). The wicked prince of Persia sought to detain the "man" so that Daniel would be prevented from hearing more of God's revelation (vv. 12, 14). Michael seems to be one of the most powerful angels. He is mentioned three times in the OT, all in Daniel (v. 21; 12:1), and twice in the NT (Jude 9; Rev. 12:7).

10:14, 15 latter days: This expression is used throughout the books of prophecy to refer to the future (Is. 2:2; Jer. 23:20; 49:39; Ezek. 38:16; Mic. 4:1). The messenger here is referring to the revelation of ch. 11.

10:16, 17 One having the likeness of the sons of men may refer to the preincarnate Christ (v. 5) or to the angel of vv. 10–15.

10:18, 19 For the third time in this chapter Daniel is supernaturally strengthened by one who touched him (vv. 10, 16). The first touch enabled him to arise from the ground, the second to speak, and the third to carry on a conversation.

10:20 Just as Persia was under the ultimate dominion of an evil spirit from Satan (vv. 13, 14), so also was Greece. Once the prince of Persia was overcome, the messenger would enter into conflict with the prince of Greece. The succession of world powers follows the pattern of Daniel's second vision (8:20–22).

10:21 your prince: God chose Michael the archangel to be a prince in His kingdom on earth.

11:1 the first year of Darius: This is the same year as that of the revelation of the seventy weeks, 539 B.C. (9:1). At the beginning of the Persian administration, the divine messenger stood up to confirm and strengthen Darius. This suggests that though the kingdoms of the world are under demonic control, their human rulers can be delivered from that control and used for a higher purpose by God as He sees fit.

11:2–35 These verses contain prophecies concerning Persia (v. 2), Greece (vv. 3, 4), Egypt and Syria (vv. 5–35).

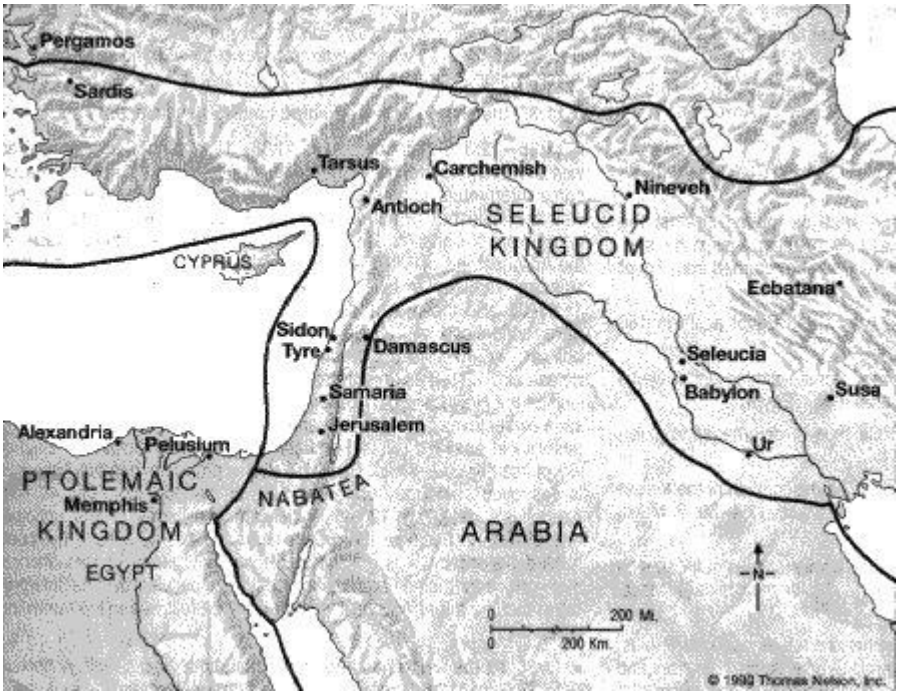
11:2 three more kings will arise in Persia, and the fourth … against the realm of Greece: Darius (under Cyrus) was followed by Cambyses (530–522 B.C.); Gaumata (522 B.C.); Darius I (522–486 B.C.); and Xerxes (486–465 B.C.), who was the richest king of all due to his conquest and severe taxation.

11:3 The scene shifts to Greece (v. 2). The mighty king is Alexander the Great (v. 4).

11:4 The kingdom of Alexander was divided into four parts (8:22), but not among his posterity—that is, his heirs. Others refers to those outside Alexander's family—his generals ruled the empire he had conquered (8:8, 22).

11:5 Having predicted that there would be four divisions of the Greek kingdom (v. 4), the angel here speaks about two of them, the Syrian kingdom just north of Palestine and the Egyptian kingdom to the south. The first king of the South—that is, Egypt—was Ptolemy I Soter (323–285 B.C.). One of his princes refers to Seleucus Nicator (311–280 B.C.).

11:6 At the end of some years refers to the time period around 252 B.C. The daughter refers to Berenice, the daughter of Ptolemy Philadelphus (285–246 B.C.) of Egypt. The king of the North refers to Antiochus II Theos (261–246 B.C.) of Syria.



Seleucid Control of Palestine (190 B.C.)

Antiochus III, king of Syria, expanded the boundaries of the Seleucid kingdom in numerous battles with the Ptolemies. In 221 B.C. he captured part of Palestine, only to lose most of it in 217 B.C. Returning in 201 B.C. he finally defeated the Ptolemies in 198 B.C. with the aid and support of the Jews. Palestine enjoyed freedom from Egyptian domination until 175 B.C., when a new leader, Antiochus IV, became king of Syria. His oppression of the Jews led to the Maccabean Revolt of 167 B.C. and eventual Jewish autonomy in 164 B.C.

11:7–9 The branch of her roots refers to the brother of Berenice (v. 6), Ptolemy III Euergetes (246–221 B.C.), who conquered the king of the North, Seleucus Callinicus (246–226 B.C.) of Syria. Ptolemy III returned to Egypt with great booty and outlived Seleucus by six years. Seleucus attempted an attack on Egypt but returned to Syria without accomplishing his purpose.

11:10 The sons of Seleucus Callinicus were Seleucus III Ceraunus (227–223 B.C.) and Antiochus III the Great (223–186 B.C.).

11:11, 12 The king of the South, Ptolemy IV Philopator (221–204 B.C.), defeated the king of the North, Antiochus III the Great, at Raphia in 217 B.C.

11:13 The king of the North, Antiochus III, assembled a great army and attacked Egypt in 201 B.C.

11:14 Many shall rise up indicates that others like Philip V of Macedonia helped Antiochus fight against the king of the South, Ptolemy V Epiphanes (203–181 B.C.) of Egypt. The violent men of your people refers to Jews who tried to help Antiochus bring to pass what had been predicted in the vision of ch. 8, but failed.

11:15 The king of the North, Antiochus, defeated the fortified city of Sidon in 198 B.C.

11:16 The Glorious Land refers to Israel. The control of Palestine passed from Egypt to Syria.

11:17 Antiochus III's daughter Cleopatra was given in marriage to Ptolemy V Epiphanes of Egypt in order to destroy or undermine Egypt, but Cleopatra sided with her husband over her father.

11:18, 19 Antiochus III undertook a vigorous campaign into Asia Minor and the Aegean region. A ruler, the Roman Lucius Cornelius Scipio, defeated Antiochus. Having lost all that he had gained, Antiochus returned to his own land, where he was defeated and killed while trying to plunder a temple.

11:20 arise in his place: Seleucus IV Philopator (187–176 B.C.), Antiochus's son, took his father's place. The glorious kingdom refers to Israel. within a few days: Antiochus ruled for thirty-seven years; Seleucus ruled for only eleven years.

11:21 A vile person refers to Antiochus IV Epiphanes (175–164 B.C.), who seized the throne through treachery.

11:22 They shall be swept away is probably a reference to the Egyptians. The prince of the covenant refers to Onias III, the high priest in Jerusalem who bore that title.

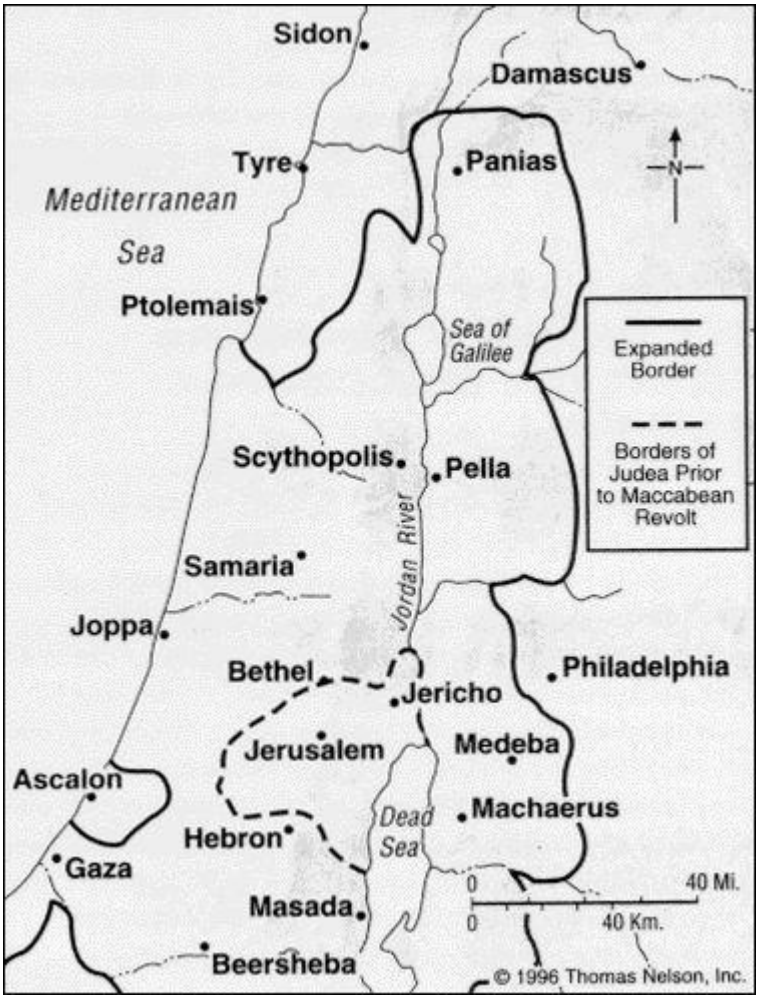
11:23, 24 He refers to Antiochus IV Epiphanes (v. 21). shall disperse: Antiochus took from the rich and gave to the poor.

11:25, 26 The king of the South at this time was Ptolemy Philometor (181–145 B.C.) of Egypt. those who eat … his delicacies: The trusted counselors of Ptolemy Philometor who ate at his table betrayed him.

11:27 Both … bent on evil: Both Antiochus and Ptolemy resorted to deceit and betrayal in working out truce arrangements.

11:28 The holy covenant refers to Israel. do damage: On his way back to Syria, Antiochus looted the temple in Jerusalem and killed many people.

11:29 return and go toward the south: After learning that Ptolemy VI and Ptolemy VII had formed a union against him, Antiochus returned to Egypt in 168 B.C.



Expansion of Palestine under the Maccabees (166 B.C.)

Israel was plunged into an grueling period of religious persecution with the accession of Antiochus IV to the throne of the Seleucid kingdom in 175 B.C. From circumcision to Sabbath observance, many Jewish customs were outlawed. Opposition to Antiochus's policies centered around Mattathias's home in Modein, a town seventeen miles northwest of Jerusalem. In 167 B.C. Antiochus desecrated the temple itself by erecting a statue of Zeus and sacrificing a pig. A guerrilla war ensued. In 164 B.C. Mattathias's son, Judas Maccabeus, successfully recaptured Jerusalem and reconsecrated the temple. Judas's brothers, Simon and Jonathan, continued the struggle against Syrian tyranny until 142 B.C. After that date, Israel remained practically independent until the Romans invaded Palestine in 63 B.C.

11:30 Cyprus here refers to Rome. When the Romans forced Antiochus to depart from Egypt, he unleashed his frustration on the holy covenant— that is, Israel (v. 28). Those who forsake the holy covenant refers to the apostate Jews (v. 32) who cooperated with Antiochus.

11:31 defile the sanctuary: Antiochus polluted the altar by offering a sow upon it. He declared the daily sacrifices and other Mosaic ceremonies illegal and committed an abomination of desolation by erecting an image of Zeus in the holy place (9:27; 12:11). Jesus said a similar thing would happen just prior to His return (Matt. 24:15).

11:32 the people who know their God shall be strong: Mattathias, father of five sons, refused to offer sacrifices in a profane manner and killed the king's agents. He and his sons then fled to the mountains and began the famous Maccabean revolt.

11:33 Many devoted Jews were killed in the Maccabean revolt (Heb. 11:37, 38).

11:34 As some Jews were killed in the Maccabean revolt, others provided a little help. Many joined by intrigue—that is, insincerely.

11:35 Some of those of understanding refers to those who understood God's Word and were allowed to go through troubled times so that they could be refined and purified.

11:36 the king: Many ancient and modern interpreters have concluded that at this point a new person, the Antichrist, is introduced. This king is distinguished from the king of the North (v. 40); therefore he cannot be Antiochus Epiphanes.

11:37 The king of v. 36 will cast aside the God of his fathers, the worship of his ancestors. The desire of women is usually taken to be either a female goddess or the desire of every Jewish woman to be the mother of the Messiah.

11:38, 39 god of fortresses: The king of v. 36 will not regard any god except the god of power. A god which his fathers did not know is probably a reference to self worship (v. 37; 2 Thess. 2:4).

11:40 The backdrop of this verse and the remainder of the chapter is the covenant the king of v. 36 will make with Israel. The time of the end refers to the period just before the return of Christ (Matt. 24:14).

11:41–43 The king of v. 36 will enter the Glorious Land of Palestine. Edom, Moab, and Ammon, the traditional enemies of Israel, will not be invaded. The king will then conquer Egypt, Libya, and Ethiopia.

11:44 The north here could be a reference to Palestine, a view which seems to be confirmed by v. 45.

11:45 The seas refers to the Mediterranean Sea and the Dead Sea. The glorious holy mountain refers to Mount Zion, the site of the temple. The end of the king of v. 36 is sealed at Christ's second coming (Rev. 19:11–21).

12:1 At that time refers to the "time of the end" (11:40), the end of the evil king (11:36) at the Second Coming of Christ (11:45). A time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation refers to the period of tribulation just prior to the coming of Christ. Those who shall be delivered are those whose names are written in the book of life, God's record of those who have been justified by faith (Ex. 32:32; Ps. 69:28; Luke 10:20; Rev. 20:12).

12:2 Sleep is a euphemism for death, as the context in the dust of the earth illustrates. Awake is a reference to resurrection. Though this passage appears to refer to a general resurrection, other passages suggest that there is more than one (John 5:25). It is not unusual for prophecy in the OT to present events separated by a considerable span of time as if they occurred in immediate relationship to each other (Is. 61:1, 2). Daniel is simply saying that after the tribulation, many—both righteous and wicked—will be raised. This resurrection of many of the righteous seems to be a reference to the resurrection of Israel ("your people" in v. 1).

12:3 The wise not only understand salvation themselves (2 Tim. 3:15), they also turn many others to the way of righteousness.

12:4 Knowledge shall increase is a reference to knowledge that pertains to these prophecies.

12:5, 6 As Daniel stood beside the Tigris River, he saw three persons, one on each side of the river and one above the river. The two others refers to two angels, different from the ones Daniel had already seen. The man clothed in linen may be the preincarnate Christ (10:6). How long refers to the duration of the trials. Daniel was not asking when the events would begin.

12:7 A time, times, and half a time, which adds up to three and one-half years (7:25), may refer to the period immediately preceding the Second Coming of Christ (7:27). Others have suggested that this expression does not refer to a specific number of years but instead a period of time that the Lord would shorten because of His mercy.

12:8, 9 Daniel did not understand his own revelation (v. 4).

“sealed”

(Heb. chatham) (12:9; Is. 29:11; Jer. 32:10) Strong’s #2856: This word means “to affix a seal.” To authenticate a document and assure its integrity, a king or official would close it with an application of clay or wax, stamped with an impression of his seal. The document then carried his authority and could not be altered without breaking the seal. Letters (1 Kin. 21:8), land deeds (Jer. 32:10), covenants (Neh. 10:1), and royal decrees (Esth. 3:12) were all authenticated with seals. Daniel’s prophetic announcements were symbolically sealed (12:9), indicating that they were authoritative and could not be altered, until the day of their fulfillment. In Revelation, a seal of the scroll of judgment is broken, indicating that the time of its fulfillment has come (Rev. 5:1–10).

12:10 Many will be purified, made white, and refined (11:35). Suffering will refine the righteous, but the wicked will be continue in their evil.

12:11, 12 one thousand two hundred and ninety days: Various interpretations have been suggested for this number of days. One significant interpretation is that these days refer to the middle of a seven-year period of tribulation prior to the coming of Christ. At that time, the Antichrist will abolish the abominable and idolatrous sacrifices that he had established (9:27).

12:13 you shall rest, and will arise: Daniel would die and be resurrected.

The Book of Hosea

LIKE OTHERS BEFORE AND AFTER HIM, HOSEA discovered that being a prophet had its occupational hazards. The Lord sometimes required His prophets to perform difficult and even humiliating object lessons to complement their messages. At the beginning of Hosea's prophetic ministry, the Lord told him to get married and announced that Hosea's chosen bride would be unfaithful to her marriage vows. Her adultery would vividly illustrate Israel's unfaithfulness to her covenant Lord.

Hosea chose Gomer, the daughter of Diblaim, as his wife and they had three children, each of whom received a symbolic name from the Lord. The firstborn son's name Jezreel was a reminder of the atrocities that had occurred at Jezreel. God would soon judge Israel for these sins, appropriately through a military defeat at this same city. Their daughter LoRuhamahs name, meaning "Not Loved," announced that the Lord would temporarily withdraw His love from Israel. The third child's name Lo-Ammi, meaning "Not My People," anticipated the severe disruption of the Lord's covenantal relationship with His people.

Because of Gomer's adulteries, the marriage disintegrated, and she eventually became the slave or concubine of another man. However, the Lord instructed Hosea to buy back his wife. Hosea's act of mercy toward his wife was a striking picture of the Lord's great love for Israel.

Hosea began prophesying during a time of general prosperity. Jeroboam had extended Israel's borders through several military operations (2 Kin. 14:24–28). In the south, Uzziah had strengthened Judah's armed forces and defeated the nation's enemies (2 Chr. 26:1–15). But despite the outward success of the two nations, signs of trouble were on the horizon. As the Book of Hosea makes clear, idolatry—especially worship of the Canaanite god Baal—was widespread in the northern kingdom. The assassination of Zechariah, Jeroboam's son and successor, in 753 B.C. ended Jehu's dynasty and introduced a new era of political turmoil.

Making matters worse, the mighty Assyrian Empire, after several decades of declining power, was once more flexing its muscles and looking westward. During the second half of the eighth century B.C., Assyria reduced Israel to a vassal state (required by treaty to pay regular tribute to Assyria), then a puppet state (ruled by a king chosen by Assyria), and finally a province (ruled by an Assyrian governor). Judah also declined spiritually and was torn by political dissension. King Ahaz rejected Isaiah's offer of divine protection and instead embarked on a pro-Assyrian policy that facilitated the Assyrian takeover of the Palestinian states, reduced Judah to vassal status, and drained the nation's economic wealth.

The Book of Hosea fluctuates between judgment and salvation. Each of the book's five major sections begins on a sour note but concludes with a positive affirmation of God's commitment to His people and the expectation that He will restore them. As a prophet and a poet, Hosea uses an arsenal of rhetorical and poetic techniques to communicate his message in a memorable and persuasive manner. He uses a variety of metaphors as he depicts a broad range of themes, including God's anger, judgment, devotion, and love, as well as Israel's waywardness and stubbornness. Hosea employs images that were familiar to his contemporaries, drawing extensively from agriculture and nature. Hosea paints some of the most moving, terrifying, and exhilarating word pictures in all of the Bible.

Hosea's purpose was to denounce sin, to warn of impending judgment, and to assure the faithful that God's love would win out in the end. Israel, the northern kingdom, is the primary focus of Hosea's prophecy. Hosea accused the nation of being unfaithful to its vows, just as his own adulterous wife had been unfaithful to her vows. By participating in the pagan fertility rites of Baalism, the people violated their covenant with the Lord. The Lord did not tolerate this rebellion and was prepared to bring against Israel the judgments threatened in the covenant (Deut. 28:15–68). God's purpose, however, was not entirely punitive; He intended these severe judgments to bring the nation to its senses. Hosea proclaimed that the Lord would eventually restore His marriage with His people and again pour His blessings upon them.

Israel's covenant relationship with God is at the heart of Hosea's message. God delivered His people from slavery in Egypt, established them as a nation, and took great delight in them. He looked for a favorable response to His love and obedience to the commandments He had given to regulate the people's worship and daily activities. However, the people were ungrateful, turning to other gods, violating the religious and social standards of God’s covenant, and forming alliances with surrounding nations.

When God establishes a binding relationship, He demands absolute loyalty. Through Hosea, God announced that He would use severe judgment to free His people from their spiritual stupor and get their attention. This judgment would take the forms of drought, invasion, and exile. Though the severity of God’s judgment might give the impression that Israel had been abandoned forever, the Lord intended to restore of His people. When they repented of their sins, He would return them to their land, reunite the north and south under an ideal Davidic king, and restore His rich blessings.

The Book of Hosea gives us a clear and balanced picture of God. He loves His people and desires an intimate and vibrant relationship with them. He is jealous of their affections and tolerates no rivals. When they sin, He will discipline them as severely as is necessary. While God’s jealousy may seem inappropriate and His discipline may seem harsh, this divine response to His people’s sin is actually evidence of His love and commitment. He will allow nothing to ruin the relationship He has established and will do everything to preserve it. In the end, His devotion and mercy will win out, and His people will come to their senses, giving Him the love He fervently desires.

Hosea the son of Beeri prophesied during the eighth century B.C. His ministry began while Uzziah (Azariah) was king of Judah (792–740 B.C.) and Jeroboam II was king of Israel (792–753 B.C.). Hosea’s prophetic career spanned the reigns of the Judean kings Jotham (752–736 B.C.) and Ahaz (736–720 B.C.) and ended during Hezekiah’s rule (729–699 B.C.). Hosea also witnessed the reigns of the last six kings of Israel, though he did not name these kings in his prophecies.

INSIGHT

There's Nothing Minor Here!

It's unfortunate that the last twelve books of the OT are known today as the Minor Prophets. The name was intended to distinguish them from the four "major" (that is, longer) prophetic books, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel. But in modern culture, where bigger is seen as better, and where celebrity is mistaken for significance, anything called "minor" is subtly thought of as less important. Thus the Minor Prophets are sometimes treated as the "minor league" prophets, as if those who wrote them were on God's "second team." That would be a grave misperception. There is nothing minor about these books. On the contrary, they play a major role in declaring God's Word not only to the Israelites and other nations of the ancient world, but to us as well. By reading them, we gain additional perspective on the sins God hates and the faith He honors.

1:1–3 wife of harlotry: Gomer may have been a common prostitute at the time Hosea married her, or perhaps she had participated in a ritual sexual act as part of the Baal cult. However, it is more likely that the descriptive phrase anticipates what Gomer would become following her marriage to Hosea. children of harlotry: If Gomer was a prostitute when she married Hosea, this could refer to children that Gomer already had and that Hosea adopted at the time of marriage. A more likely possibility is that the title anticipates children born to a mother whose reputation and escapades would make their lineage suspect. Gomer's marital infidelity is a picture of Israel's idolatry and unfaithfulness to its covenant with God.

1:4 bloodshed of Jezreel: In 841 B.C. Jehu, with God's approval, destroyed the evil dynasty of Omri by slaughtering Jezebel, the sons of Ahab, and the prophets and priests of Baal (2 Kin. 9; 10).

1:5 To break the enemy's bow means to destroy his military strength (1 Sam. 2:4; Ps. 46:9; Jer. 49:35).

1:6 Lo-Ruhamah means "Not Loved," foreshadowing the Lord's rejection of Israel.

1:7, 8 Will save them: This prophecy looks ahead to the Lord's deliverance of Jerusalem in 701 B.C., when He would miraculously destroy the Assyrian armies outside the city's walls (2 Kin. 19:32–36). This emphasized that the end of pity or mercy was for the northern kingdom only. The prophecy was fulfilled during Sennacherib's invasion in 701 B.C.

1:9 Lo-Ammi means "Not My People," threatening the termination of the Lord's covenant relationship with His persistently unfaithful people (Lev. 26:12).

1:10 The Lord would not reject His people forever. God would fulfill His promise to Abraham and make the Israelites as numerous as the sand of the sea (Gen. 22:17; 32:12).

1:11 One head refers to the messianic king to come (3:5). Jezreel means "God Plants," picturing God as sowing seed that would germinate and grow abundantly (2:23).

2:1 brethren … sisters: God would mercifully restore His covenant relationship with His people, reversing the judgment symbolized by the names Lo-Ruhamah and Lo-Ammi.

2:2–17 The events of these verses summarize in capsule form the remainder of the prophecy—what Gomer has done, Israel has done. What happens to Gomer will happen to Israel. Three events are important: (1) her reprobation (vv. 2–5); (2) her retribution (vv. 6–13); and, (3) her restitution (vv. 14–17). These events constitute the background for the messages of the prophecy that follow in the next major division: (1) concerning Israel's reprobation (4:1—7:16); (2) concerning Israel's retribution (8:1—13:16); and, (3) concerning Israel's restoration (14:1–8).

2:2 Bring charges: The Lord formally accused Israel of unfaithfulness to the covenant. Your mother refers to the sinful nation of Hosea's time, symbolized by Gomer (1:2, 3). she is not My wife: This may be a formal announcement of divorce or a realistic confession that the relationship between God and Israel had lost its vitality.

2:3 The Lord warned that He might publicly humiliate His unfaithful wife by stripping her naked (Ezek. 16:35–43). dry land: This simile pictures the loss of fertility, an appropriate punishment for a nation that had sought fertility by worshiping another god.

2:4, 5 Her children refers to the Israelites who lived in the land. Though the mother (the land) and the children (the inhabitants of the land) are distinct in Hosea's metaphor, both actually refer to the sinful nation. The Lord warned that He might disown the children because they were a reminder of their mother's unfaithfulness.

2:6, 7 chase: This word draws attention to the strong passion the people of Israel felt for Baal. These verses anticipate the Exile, when Israel would be separated from the idols of Baal.

2:8, 9 Since Israel refused to acknowledge the Lord as her source of agricultural prosperity, the Lord would take back His blessings and no longer provide for the nation's basic needs.

2:10 uncover her lewdness: The Lord would publicly expose Israel's unfaithfulness through judgment. in the sight of her lovers: The Baal idols would be unable to help Israel, proving their unworthiness to be worshiped.

2:11 New Moons were monthly celebrations (Num. 10:10; 1 Sam. 20:5, 18, 24). Sabbath celebrations were weekly.

2:12 The people of Israel believed that the Baal idols gave them agricultural prosperity in exchange for their worship. forest … beasts of the field: The Lord would break down the nation's defenses and turn them into overgrown thickets inhabited by wild animals.

2:13 The word earrings may refer to rings worn in the ear (Gen. 35:4; Ex. 32:2, 3) or nose (Gen. 24:47; Is. 3:21; Ezek. 16:12).

2:14 Having separated Israel from her lovers, the Lord would seek to win her back by making romantic overtures and wooing her with tender words of love. wilderness: The coming Exile from the land is compared to the wilderness wanderings of Moses' time.

2:15 Valley of Achor, meaning "Valley of Trouble," was a reminder of the sin of Achan and God's discipline of the nation of Israel for his sin (Josh. 7:24–26). This place would be transformed into a door of hope when the returning exiles passed through it on their return to the land.

2:16, 17 Israel would call the Lord her Husband, not her Master, because the latter title might have reminded the people of their former devotion to Baal. The word Baal can mean "Master."

2:18 The land will experience peace. The Lord will protect its crops from hungry animals (v. 12) and prevent hostile armies from invading it.

2:19, 20 betroth: Betrothal was a binding commitment, the last step before the wedding and consummation. forever: The Lord emphasized that the new marriage between Himself and Israel would be permanent. Lovingkindness means "devotion, commitment." you shall know: Israel would respond positively to the Lord's love and acknowledge that He is her husband and benefactor (contrast vv. 8, 13; see Jer. 31:34).

2:21–23 The heavens would provide rain for the earth; the earth would produce its fruit in turn. Israel is called Jezreel, meaning "God Plants," because the Lord would replant Israel in the land.

Love is a Conscious Choice

Popular culture often describes love in terms of passion, sexuality, or blind devotion. By this measure, love is little more than an uncontrollable attraction toward another person that ebbs and flows unconsciously. This sort of “love” looks only for its own gain and can walk away if its demands and needs go unmet or unsatisfied. By contrast, God called Hosea to pursue a radically different kind of love, one based on a conscious choice to be committed to someone else for her benefit, regardless of her response to that gift (Hos. 3:1–3). That was how God was committed to Israel. Hosea’s marriage was an illustration of God’s marriage to the spiritually adulterous nation of Israel.

3:1–3 This section divides into two parts: (1) the prophet's commission by God (v. 1); and (2) his compliance to God (vv. 2, 3).

3:1, 2 To illustrate His intention to redeem Israel, the Lord instructed Hosea to reclaim Gomer, his unfaithful wife. raisin cakes: These may have been used in the worship of Canaanite fertility gods. I bought her: Gomer had become the property of another man. The value of the silver and barley that Hosea paid was approximately equal to the 30 shekels required for a female slave (Ex. 21:32). Hosea's purchase of Gomer symbolized God's great devotion, which moves Him to seek reconciliation even if it means subjecting Himself to humiliation (Phil. 2:8).

3:3, 4 Gomer's isolation symbolized Israel's exile, when she lost her political independence and could no longer worship as she chose (2:6, 7). sacred pillar: These were stone pillars used by the Canaanites in their worship of Baal and other gods (2 Kin. 3:2; 10:26, 27; 17:10). An ephod was a priestly garment (Ex. 28); teraphim were idols (2 Kin. 23:24). Both were apparently used for divination.

3:5 seek: This word highlights the change that would occur in Israel's attitude (2:7). David: This is likely a reference to David's Son, the Messiah (Is. 11:1–10; Jer. 23:5; 33:15). Other prophets also refer to the Messiah as David (Jer. 30:9; Ezek. 34:23, 24; 37:24, 25). The northern kingdom of Israel rejected the Davidic kingship in their rebellion against Rehoboam (1 Kin. 12:16–19). Their return to God would involve a reunion of Israel and Judah, along with the recognition of the divinely established dynasty of David.

4:1 charge: The Hebrew word refers to a formal complaint charging Israel with breaking the covenant. Mercy means “loyalty” or “devotion.” knowledge: This word does not refer to intellectual awareness, but to recognition of God’s authority as Israel’s covenant Lord.

4:2 This accusation mentions five of the Ten Commandments. Swearing refers to the misuse of the Lord’s name in oaths and curses (Ex. 20:7).

4:3 A drought would come upon the land and negatively impact the inhabitants of all three of the basic spheres of existence—the dry land, sky, and waters.

4:4 The people were rebellious and showed no respect for authority (Deut. 17:12).

“stumble”

(Heb. kashal) (4:5; 5:5; 1 Sam. 2:4; Is. 3:8) Strong’s #3782: Literally this Hebrew verb means “to totter,” “to trip and fall,” or “to stumble.” The prophets frequently used this word to describe the spiritual life of the Hebrews. For example, Hosea compares both false prophets and their followers to those who stumble in the dark: they are stumbling over the sin of idolatry and falling to their ruin (4:5; 5:5; Is. 3:8). Isaiah warns that those who rely on their own strength will stumble and fall (Is. 40:30), but those who are led by the Lord will not stumble (Is. 63:13). In fact, the Lord will provide strength to those who have stumbled in the past and now call upon Him (1 Sam. 2:4).

4:5, 6 The failure of Israel’s religious leaders, including most of the prophets, would bring about their downfall. lack of knowledge: The priests had failed to teach God’s Law to the people (Mal. 2:7). As a result, the priests would be the special object of God’s judgment. He would terminate the priestly line.

4:7, 8 their glory: Great honor was attached to the priesthood. However, Israel’s sinful priests would forfeit their prestige. eat up the sin of My people: The priests greedily accepted the meat from the people’s hypocritical and empty sacrifices (6:6; 8:11–13).

4:9 The leaders of God’s people should be models and teachers of God’s righteous standards, but these priests were at the same moral level as the sinful people.

4:10 The Israelites worshiped Baal in order to have good crops and many children, but they still would not have enough to eat, nor would they multiply in number. Harlotry here refers to religious prostitution associated with Baal worship, not to immorality in general.

4:11–14 Wine was apparently used in Baal worship, along with divination, sacrifices, and ritual sexual acts. Their staff refers to wooden idols that Baal worshipers consulted for guidance. The religion of Canaan was practiced in innumberable small shrines located on hilltops and in groves of trees. The idols consisted of stone pillars and wooden poles. daughters … brides: Many of Israel’s young women had participated in the sexual rites of Baal worship, but the men were just as guilty.

The terebinth tree, also referred to as the oak tree by some translations, was considered sacred by some pagan worshipers of the ancient world (Hos. 4:13).

4:15, 16 Hosea warned the people of Judah not to follow in the sinful footsteps of the northern kingdom Israel. Gilgal was an important religious center in the north, known in Hosea's time for its hypocritical religious practices (9:15; 12:11; Amos 4:4). Beth Aven, which means "House of Iniquity," is a sarcastic reference to the important religious center Bethel, which means "House of God" (Amos 5:5).

IN COMPARISON

Hosea's Heartbreak and God's Grief

The tragic marriage of Hosea and Gomer painted a vivid portrait for the Israelites of how God viewed His relationship with them.

Hosea and Gomer	God and Israel
Hosea marries Gomer (1:3).	God is betrothed to Israel (2:19).
Hosea is a faithful husband (3:3).	God is a faithful "Husband" (1:7).
Hosea's love is unrequited (3:1).	God's love is unrequited (3:1).
The relationship disintegrates (3:1).	The relationship disintegrates (2:2).
Gomer pursues other men (3:1).	Israel pursues other gods (4:1).
Gomer is indifferent to the feelings of Hosea (3:1).	Israel is indifferent to God's feelings (11:1).
Hosea has a daughter whose name Lo-Ruhamah means "Not Loved" (1:6).	God will not have pity on His wayward children in Israel (5:6).
Hosea has a son whose name Lo-Ammi means "Not My People" (1:9).	God declares that the Israelites are not His people (1:9).
Hosea redeems and restores the adulterous Gomer (3:2).	God redeems and restores the unfaithful nation, Israel (14:4–8).

4:17–19 Ephraim, one of the largest tribes of Israel, is used here to represent the entire northern kingdom. Let him alone: These words have a tone of frustration and resignation, suggesting that Israel was hopelessly rebellious. The wind of divine judgment would sweep the Israelites away and leave them embarrassed by their idolatry.

5:1—6:3 In this section God's condemnation results in three things: (1) rebuke (5:1–7); (2) retribution (5:8–15); and, (3) repentance (6:1–3).

5:1 Mizpah here is probably a reference to Mizpah of Gilead, located in Israelite territory east of the Jordan. Tabor: Mount Tabor was in the northern kingdom, southwest of the Sea of Galilee. snare … net: The leaders of Israel, especially the priests, had promoted pagan worship at Mizpah and Tabor and in this way led the people to destruction.

5:2 The revolters probably refers to the leaders and priests who had rebelled against God's authority by rejecting His commandments. Slaughter may refer literally to acts of violence or to pagan sacrifices.

“commit harlotry”

(Heb. zanah) (1:2; 5:3; Jer. 3:3; Ezek. 16:35) Strong’s #2181: The Hebrew verb zanah refers to having illicit sexual relations, especially involving prostitution. Two forms of prostitution were practiced in the ancient world: common prostitution and ritual, or “sacred,” prostitution, which involved pagan fertility rites. Both forms were strictly forbidden in God’s Law (Lev. 19:29; Deut. 23:17). The OT frequently uses prostitution as an image of the sin of idolatry. Israel was pledged to serve one God (Ex. 20:3), so idolatry was like marital unfaithfulness against the Lord. Jeremiah and Ezekiel develop this image in graphic detail (Jer. 3; Ezek. 16; 23), and Hosea actually married a prostitute as a living symbol of God’s patience with Israel’s infidelities (ch. 1).

5:3 not hidden: God’s people could not hide their harlotry, for it had defiled them. According to the Law of Moses, adultery made a person spiritually unclean or defiled (Lev. 18:20, 24; Num. 5:20, 27, 28).

5:4 spirit of harlotry: The people had an uncontrollable desire to worship other gods.

5:5 Israel’s arrogant attitude was self-incriminating and self-destructive. Judah, the southern kingdom, had followed Israel’s moral example and would experience the same consequences.

5:6, 7 Though Israel had rebelled against God, many Israelites still tried to maintain a semblance of outward devotion to Him. They had dealt treacherously with God by worshiping other gods and participating in pagan fertility rites. Their heritage, or “portion,” refers to the people’s landed property and fields, which God would allow wild animals and invading armies to overrun and devour (2:12; 11:6).

5:8–15 This section may refer to the period during the Syro-Ephraimite war (2 Kin. 16:5–9; Is. 7:1–9) when Israel’s efforts to win independence from Syrian domination failed.

5:8, 9 Blow the ram’s horn: This act signaled an emergency and mustered the fighting men to defend the land. The towns mentioned here were north of Jerusalem, within or near the borders of Benjamin. The implication is that the enemy army had already swept through the north and was ready to invade Judah. what is sure: The Lord affirmed that the announced judgment was an unalterable decree.

5:10, 11 Stones were used to mark the boundaries of property. A thief could steal a part of someone's land by moving the landmark. The Law warned that altering a boundary in this way would bring a special judgment from God (Deut. 19:14; 27:17; Prov. 22:28).

5:12 As a moth slowly destroys clothing, so the Lord would destroy Israel (Job 13:28; Is. 50:9; 51:8). Rottenness elsewhere refers to bone or tooth decay (Prov. 12:4; 14:30; Hab. 3:16).

5:13 Both Israel and Judah sought protection through alliances with Assyria, but the cruel Assyrians were more interested in exploiting God's people politically and economically. King Jareb probably refers to Tiglath-Pileser III, with whom both Israel and Judah formed alliances (2 Kin. 15:19, 20; 16:7–9).

5:14, 15 Attacking like a ferocious, invincible lion, God would scatter His people as judgment for their treachery. But the purpose of the Lord's discipline was to drive the people to earnestly seek Him. The Hebrew verb for earnestly seek suggests eager longing and desire (Job 24:5; Ps. 63:1).

6:1 After being torn by the divine lion (5:14), the people would come to their senses and seek to renew their allegiance to the Lord.

6:2 two days … the third day: The reference here is to a short time period. When God's people truly repent, God is eager to restore His relationship with them. The people's hope for revival was consistent with God's ancient promises through Moses (Deut. 30:1–3).

6:3 God's restored presence and blessings would be like the rain that waters and renews the earth. latter and former rain: The latter rains of Israel came in the spring and caused the plants to grow. The former rains came in the autumn and softened the ground for plowing and sowing.

Foggy Faith

Early morning fog can be a beautiful sight as it creeps over the mirrored surface of a lake or huddles over a silent meadow. Many a photographer has waited until just the right moment to capture a subject enshrouded in mists before the sunlight burns them away. Yet while fog may be impressive in the natural world, it can be utterly perilous in the spiritual, as Hosea pointed out. He used the image of fog as a metaphor of Israel's faithlessness (Hos. 6:4). The nation's commitment to the Lord was as empty and fleeting as a cloud. As soon as the people felt the "heat" of moral and spiritual conflicts, their loyalty to God evaporated.

This same "foggy faith" characterizes many people today. In an emotional moment they may pay impressive lipservice to loving and serving God, but as soon as their feelings of devotion fade, their "faith" is effectively vaporized. Clearly, as the Lord evaluates faith, what seems to matter is not whether it is beautiful, but how long it will last.

6:4—11:11 This section contains a further recital of Israel's sins with an emphasis on their perverted love. Again, however, the warning ends on a note of hope. Israel's love may be fickle, but God's love is unchanging.

6:4 Any apparent faithfulness that Hosea's generation displayed was short-lived and disappeared as quickly as fog or dew before sunlight.

6:5 words of My mouth: The prophets announced God's destructive judgments, which then fell on His unrepentant people. your judgments are like light that goes forth: This comparison suggests that God's judgment, like bright sunlight, was obvious to all; or that like a bolt of lightning or a blinding flash of light, it came swiftly.

6:6, 7 Mercy means "loyalty" or "devotion" (4:1). Knowledge of God does not refer to mere head knowledge, but to a genuine recognition of God's authority that produces obedience to His commandments.

6:8, 9 Even Ramoth-Gilead and Shechem, which were cities of refuge where manslayers could find asylum, had been contaminated by bloodshed.

6:10 horrible thing: A related Hebrew word is used in Jer. 29:17 of rotten figs.

6:11 The comparison of God's judgment to a harvest indicates that the judgment was inevitable and implies that it would be thorough in its destruction.

7:1–16 Israel's follies are enumerated in 7:1–7, and her floundering is portrayed in 7:8–16.

7:1, 2 Hardened sinners typically do not consider that God will hold them accountable for their deeds (Ps. 73:11).

7:3 While kings should promote justice and be appalled by wickedness (Ps. 101), Israel's rulers approved of the people's sin.

7:4–7 The background for these verses is the political turmoil of the northern kingdom. During a 20–year period (752–732 B.C.), four Israelite kings were assassinated (2 Kin. 15). The dangerous, uncontrollable perpetrators of these crimes are described here. These conspirators were like a large baker's oven that has been heating up for several hours while the bread dough rises. By morning, the flaming fire within can be quite destructive.

IN CONTEXT

Corrupted and Half-Baked

Those who speak about a moral and spiritual decline in society today might want to borrow a page from the Book of Hosea. The prophet denounced ancient Israel by heaping up metaphors that sound a lot like what is being said about modern culture. He described Ephraim (Israel) as:

• Corrupted (7:8). Israel "mixed" itself with surrounding nations by allowing their pagan religions to corrupt its religious and spiritual life. In doing so, God's people violated the First and Second Commandments (Ex. 20:3, 4). They also formed political alliances to prop up their defenses rather than relying on the Lord (for example, 2 Kin. 16:5, 6).

• Half-baked (7:8). An unturned cake was like a pancake that is burned on one side and gooey on the other. Israel was half-baked in that its prosperity under Jeroboam II was purely material and not at all spiritual. Its vapid, self-absorbed culture had nothing significant to offer.

• Weakened and feeble (7:9). The "aliens" (Hebrew, zarim) mentioned by Hosea were foreign "allies" such as Assyria and Egypt who seemed to be friends but were actually enemies (2 Kin. 15:17–20; 17:3, 4). These nations "devoured" Israel's strength by requiring heavy payments and tribute. Yet this "aging process"occurred imperceptibly over a period of about 40 years, so that the Israelites hardly even noticed their loss of power.

• Arrogant (7:10). Despite the many reversals that took place between the prosperous reign of Jeroboam II (between 793–753 B.C.) and the foolish reign of Hoshea, Israel's last king (between 732–722 B.C.), the nation lived with an illusion of strength and virility. The people arrogantly resisted the Lord right up to the end of their kingdom (2 Kin. 17:13–18).

No nation can survive for long when it actively turns away from God. The experience of Israel shows that material prosperity is not enough to sustain a culture. Without godliness at the core, a society has to keep propping itself up with expensive yet unreliable crutches. Sooner or later, though, moral weakness will bring it down—proud and foolish to the end.

7:8 Instead of depending on the Lord for political stability, Israel formed alliances with surrounding nations. The destructive outcome of this policy is compared to a cake that has been placed over a fire and left unturned.

7:9, 10 gray hairs: Israel did not recognize that its power was declining and its freedom was slipping away, like an aging man who is gradually overtaken by the signs of old age.

7:11, 12 Israel was caught between the two superpowers, Egypt and Assyria. Israel tried to maintain its independence by playing one power against the other, but this vacillating policy was without sense. Israel was like a silly dove, flitting about from place to place. The Lord would trap them and chastise them for their spiritual unsteadiness.

7:13 Like a bird that flies away when frightened (Jer. 4:25), Israel fled from the Lord and His standards, despite His willingness to help the people.

7:14 God sent a drought that took away Israel's grain and new wine. Yet instead of turning to Him in repentance, the idolatrous Israelites demonstrated their devotion to Baal. According to Canaanite religious beliefs, prolonged drought was a signal that the storm god Baal had been temporarily defeated by the god of death and was imprisoned in the underworld. Baal's worshipers would mourn his death in hopes that their tears might facilitate his resurrection and the restoration of crops.

7:15 Strengthened their arms probably refers to God's past military help, especially during the reign of Jeroboam II earlier in the eighth century B.C. (2 Kin. 14:24, 25).

7:16 A treacherous bow is a bow that is damaged or flawed in its workmanship and does not shoot effectively. Such a bow would be unreliable and therefore worthless to a warrior or hunter. Though the Lord had been faithful to Israel, Israel had not been loyal to Him (Ps. 78:57). derision in the land of Egypt: Note the irony in the fact that one of the nations to whom Israel had looked for help (v. 11) would make fun of Israel when judgment fell.

8:1–14 Five reasons are given for the trumpet call to retribution: (1) because of Israel's transgressions against God's covenant and Law (vv. 1–3); (2) because of her setting up kings and princes without God's direction (v. 4a); (3) because of her idolatrous practices (vv. 4b–7); (4) because of her alliance with Assyria (vv. 8–10); and, (5) because of Israel's multiplication of sacrificial altars (vv. 11–14).

8:1–3 Just as an eagle swiftly swoops down and snatches its prey, so Assyria would invade Israel and take its people into captivity. The house of the LORD refers to the entire land of Israel. we know You: Though Israel claimed to acknowledge the Lord's authority, it had violated His covenant and rejected the qualities the Lord regarded as good, such as justice, loyalty, and humility (Amos 5:14, 15; Mic. 6:8).

8:4 They set up kings: This phrase alludes to the political turmoil surrounding the throne of the northern kingdom during the eighth century B.C., when four kings were assassinated during a 20–year period (7:4–7).

8:5, 6 If the capital city Samaria stands for the northern kingdom in general, the reference here may be to the calf idols made by Jeroboam I (1 Kin. 12:28–30).

8:7 In its original context, this well-known proverb emphasizes the futility of Israel's alliances with false gods and foreign nations. Morally speaking, Israel had planted wind, symbolizing its moral bankruptcy, and would reap a whirlwind, symbolizing the coming judgment.

8:8 swallowed up: This image vividly depicts the effects of Israel's foreign alliances, which drained the nation economically.

8:9, 10 like a wild donkey: This comparison draws attention to Israel's free-spirited attitude and desire to live unrestrained by God's standards. King of princes refers to the conquering Assyrian king.

8:11–13 altars for sin: The Lord regarded Israel's religious rituals as sinful because they were not supported by an obedient lifestyle. In fact, Israel treated God's Law as if it were something strange or alien to them. return to Egypt: Egypt symbolizes exile and slavery. The people would actually be taken to Assyria (9:3; 11:5).

8:14 True security comes from the Creator, but God's people trusted instead in their own efforts, symbolized by their temples and fortified cities.

9:1–17 There are five reasons why Israel is prohibited from rejoicing: (1) because of her immorality (vv. 1, 2); (2) because of her coming captivity (vv. 3–6); (3) because of her spiritual insensitivity (vv. 7–9); (4) because of her sterility (vv. 10–16); and, (5) because of her coming exile (v. 17).

9:1, 2 Because of their association with the harvest, threshing floors were the site of agricultural festivals in which Israel offered up sacrifices to Baal. The Lord would take away the joy of the harvest by destroying the crops and leaving the threshing floors and wine vats empty.

9:3 the LORD's land: Israel had forgotten that their land belonged to the Lord. He alone decided who would or would not live in it (Lev. 25:23).

9:4, 5 Because they had touched a dead body, mourners were ceremonially unclean and contaminated everything that came in contact with them (Num. 19:14, 15, 22). Living in a foreign land, Israel would be ceremonially defiled and unable to worship the Lord with sacrifices and offerings.

9:6 Memphis: This Egyptian city, known for its great cemeteries, tombs, and pyramids, symbolized the unclean land of exile (Assyria) to which God's people would be taken captive. Nettles … Thorns: The land of Israel would be abandoned, leaving the people's possessions and homes to be overrun by weeds and briers.

9:7 Sinful Israel disdained God's true prophets, regarding them as raving maniacs. The Hebrew word translated insane is used in 1 Sam. 21:15 of David when he pretended to be a madman before the Philistine king. Enmity refers to strong resentment that can give rise to violent behavior.

9:8 A watchman would look for approaching armies and then warn the people so that they could secure the city and prepare for battle (Ezek. 33:6). The prophets were like watchmen, for they were sent by God to warn the people of judgment and urge them to repent (Ezek. 3:17).

9:9 As in the days of Gibeah: The reference here is to the rape and murder of a young woman by men of Gibeah, an event that started a civil war (Judg. 19). Those who witnessed this violent deed remarked that it was the worst crime committed in Israel's history until that time (Judg. 19:30). However, the sins of Hosea's generation rivaled the infamous Gibeah murder.

9:10 At the beginning of Israel's history, God found great delight in His people. Grapes in the wilderness would be a pleasant surprise; the firstfruits on the fig tree were an irresistible delicacy (Is. 28:4; Jer. 24:2; Mic. 7:1). However, Israel had quickly fallen into sin. At Baal Peor the Israelites had participated in fertility rites with Moabite women, bringing God's judgment down upon the nation (Num. 25).

9:11 Their glory refers to Ephraim's (Israel's) population, especially its children. like a bird: Ephraim's population would dwindle as its women became barren. The punishment would be appropriate because this generation of Israelites, like an earlier generation at Baal Peor, promoted fertility by worshiping Baal.

9:12, 13 Any children who were born in Israel would be killed in the coming invasion. Tyre was an important economic center located at an advantageous spot on the Mediterranean coast.

9:14 miscarrying womb: Some women of Israel would be barren (v. 11); others would bear children, only to lose them to the invader's sword (vv. 12, 13). Still others would conceive, but miscarry.

9:15, 16 Gilgal had become a center of idolatry (12:11; Josh. 5). hated: Marriage and divorce provide the background for the language used here. The Lord would reject (hate) His unfaithful wife (Deut. 22:13; 24:3), drive her from His house (the land), and remove His protective care (love) from her. There may also be an allusion here to Gen. 3:24; 4:14, which tell how God drove away Adam and then Cain.

9:17 Wanderers may allude to the end of Cain (Gen. 4:12), who like Israel (v. 9) was guilty of murder.

10:1—13:16 In this section Israel's retribution is portrayed in six figures: (1) as a spreading or luxuriant vine (10:1, 2); (2) as in a state of anarchy (vv. 3–10); (3) as a trained heifer (vv. 11–15); (4) as a youth (11:1–11); (5) as one who feeds on wind (11:12—12:14); and, (6) as one who is spiritually dead (13:1–16).

10:1 Israel empties his vine refers to God's blessings upon the nation, which contrast with the nation's ingratitude and idolatry.

10:2 divided: This verb refers to Israel's deceitful and hypocritical ways.

10:3 now they say: This verse anticipates the people's response when God's judgment came to destroy Israel's political stability and independence (vv. 7, 15).

10:4 like hemlock in the furrows of a field: This analogy refers to poisonous weeds sprouting up in a field and choking out the crops. In the same way God's judgment would replace His blessings.

10:5, 6 The Assyrians often carried off the idols of their defeated foes. His own counsel probably refers to Israel's foreign alliances, which would prove disappointing.

10:7 The comparison in this verse depicts Israel's king being swept away like a piece of wood in a stream.

10:8 thorn and thistle: This phrase may allude to Gen. 3:18, the only other passage in the OT where this wording occurs.

10:9 Israel had persisted in sin since the day when a young woman was raped and murdered by the men of Gibeah (9:9).

10:10 The imagery in this verse depicts the Lord binding His people, like oxen, to a yoke. The figurative yoke is comprised of their two transgressions, probably referring to the ancient crime at Gibeah (v. 9) and the collective sin of Hosea's generation. The yoke imagery suggests that the people could not escape the consequences of their deeds.

10:11 loves to thresh: Israel preferred to be unrestrained, like an unmuzzled heifer at the threshing floor that can simply lean down and eat the grain. pull a plow: Israel's rebellious spirit necessitated harsh treatment, compared here to a farmer binding his calf to the yoke and forcing it to do hard labor. Threshing in this context refers to Israel's service to the Lord; plowing refers to the discipline that Israel had to acquire through judgment and exile.

10:12 Hosea calls the people to repentance, reminding them that a decision could not be postponed, and that God's blessings could still be restored. In Israel's case, the people had to reestablish social justice—righteousness—and loyalty—mercy—in the land. Break up your fallow ground: Plowing and planting are necessary preliminary steps for growing a crop, which eventually sprouts when the rain falls in season. In the same way, repentance would set the stage for restored blessing, which God would eventually rain down on His people.

10:13 The process of repentance and restored blessing outlined in v. 12 contrasts sharply with reality. Israel had planted the seeds of sin and reaped the inevitable consequences. Fruit of lies likely refers to the people's lack of loyalty to God (v. 4).

10:14 The identity of the conqueror Shalman and the location of Beth Arbel are uncertain. At any rate, the battle referred to seems to have been well known to Hosea's audience because of its extreme violence.

10:15 Israel's defeat would be so swift that the nation's king would be cut off before the battle had scarcely begun.

11:1–12 No chapter in the OT more graphically depicts the suffering love of God for His people. He is a gracious Father, tenderly teaching His little child to walk (vv. 3, 4); a lamenting Husband, agonizing over the waywardness of His faithless wife (v. 8); and the loving Savior (vv. 9–11), not giving up on His people (Ps. 139:7–10).

11:1 The Lord regarded Israel as His son and treated the nation with special care, delivering the people from bondage in Egypt (Matt. 2:15).

11:2 they called them: The plural subject probably refers to God's prophets (12:10; Jer. 7:25, 26).

11:3 Like a father teaching his child to walk, the Lord patiently gave the people of Israel direction and cared for them tenderly when they experienced pain or injury.

11:4 The image of v. 3 changes as God is compared to a farmer and Israel to a beast of burden. The Lord had placed restraints—cords and bands—on Israel, but His regulations, rather than being overly strict or harsh, reflected His concern for the people's well-being. God did not drive them mercilessly but provided for their needs, like a farmer who periodically removes the yoke from an animal's neck so that it can eat.

11:5 Repent is the same Hebrew word translated return earlier in the verse. Israel could not remain stationary. It had to return either to the Lord or to bondage. Israel's refusal to return to the Lord would result in a return to slavery.

11:6, 7 Devour is the same Hebrew word translated fed in v. 4. The people of Israel had rejected the gentle Master, who fed them and provided for their needs. As a result, they would be devoured by the swords of the invading Assyrians.

11:8, 9 As the Lord contemplated the judgment of Israel, His sympathy moved Him to have compassion and stop short of totally annihilating the people. Admah and Zeboiim, sister cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, were destroyed by God's judgment (Gen. 10:19; 14:2, 8; Deut. 29:23).

Back to Baal

By Hosea's time Baalism had captured the minds and hearts of many Israelites. Baal was the most important deity in the Canaanite pantheon. Baal's followers believed that his blessing guaranteed the continuation of human life and the preservation of social order. As a fertility deity, Baal was the provider of children, a prized possession in the culture of the ancient Middle East. As the god of the storm, Baal brought the rains and made the crops grow. Baal's devotees trusted that with the elements of the storm at his disposal, he could defeat the enemies of his people. As the king of the divine realm under the ultimate authority of the high god El, Baal overcame the powerful and terrifying deities Yamm, the god of the chaotic sea, and Mot, the god of death and the underworld.

Recognizing the threat that Baalism posed for His people, the Lord actively opposed this false religious system from the beginning of Israel's history. He affirmed that He is the only living God (Ex. 15:11; Deut. 33:26; 1 Sam. 2:2) and Israel's rightful king (Ex. 15:18; 20:2–6). The Lord revealed His sovereignty over the elements of the storm (Ex. 9:23, 24; 19:16, 18; Deut. 33:26; 1 Sam. 7:10; 12:17, 18; 1 Kin. 17:1; 18:1, 45), demonstrated His authority over the chaotic sea (Ex. 15:8, 10) and the realm of death (Ex. 15:12; 1 Sam. 2:6; 1 Kin. 17:17–23), and proved that He alone could provide children to the infertile (1 Sam. 2:5). This attack on Baalism climaxed at Mount Carmel, where the Lord hurled a fiery lightning bolt down from heaven (1 Kin. 18:38, 39) to demonstrate beyond the shadow of a doubt that He is the living God. In contrast, Baal's prophets with their frenzied mourning rites could not provoke any response (1 Kin. 18:26–29). When Jehu later purged the kingdom of Baalism (2 Kin. 10:18–28), the Lord's victory seemed complete. However, less than a century later, Baalism had resurfaced as the religion of the people, forcing the Lord to confront Israel through Hosea the prophet.

How are we to explain Baalism's success? The Lord demanded obedience to strict moral and ethical standards as a basis for blessing. In stark contrast, Baalism appealed to the sensual nature. Baal's favor was gained through sympathetic magic in the form of ritual prostitution.

Through these rites, young men and women supposedly could gain Baal's favor and ensure their ability to produce and bear children (4:12–14). Because of Baalism's attractions to the base side of human nature, it persisted in Israel. It promised an easy and even enjoyable road to prosperity, while God's way, the way of true life, demanded selflessness.

11:10, 11 In the coming judgment, God would tear Israel like a lion (5:14); in the future, God's lionlike roar would summon His people to return from exile. In the past, the people of Israel had flown back and forth between the nations like a dove (7:11); in the future, the people would speed back to their homeland like a bird.

11:12 Ephraim has encircled Me: The northern kingdom had surrounded God as if He were under siege.

12:1 The prophet especially focuses on the nation's social injustice and foreign alliances. Israel's wicked behavior would lead nowhere. Oil may have been used in a ritual ratifying a treaty or given as a sign of loyalty.

12:2 according to his ways: God judges people and nations according to their deeds.

12:3, 4 Hosea draws a lesson from the life of Jacob, the father of the nation. Jacob's greedy, self-reliant, and deceitful character was evident from birth when he grabbed the heel of his brother Esau (Gen. 25:26). The climactic event in Jacob's spiritual growth was his wrestling match with God the night before he was reunited with his brother. Jacob acknowledged his dependence on God, begged for divine favor, and received a blessing (Gen. 32:24–30). the Angel: Making no mention of an angel, the Genesis account refers to Jacob's foe as "a Man" (Gen. 32:24 reflects Jacob's initial perspective), but then indicates that Jacob wrestled with God Himself (Gen. 32:28, 30). Since vv. 4, 5 seem to place God and the Angel in parallel, some understand the Angel of the Lord to be in view here. This Angel is sometimes equated with God in the OT (Gen. 16:9–13; Judg. 6:11–14; 13:20–22).

12:5, 6 Just as Jacob had come to his senses and recognized his dependence on God, so Israel was to repent (return), reestablish justice in society, and depend (wait) on the Lord.

12:7 The Hebrew word rendered Canaanite also means "merchant." Here the word may allude to Israel's dishonest economic activities. Deceitful scales: In violation of the OT law (Lev. 19:36), dishonest merchants sometimes rigged their scales so that they could give buyers less than what the buyers thought they were purchasing (Prov. 11:1; 16:11; 20:23; Amos 8:5; Mic. 6:11).

12:8 Ephraim's boastful self-sufficiency mirrors that of its ancestor Jacob and ignores the nation's history, which was a testimony to God's enablement and provision (vv. 9, 10, 13).

12:9–11 The Lord had given Israel direction by the prophets, but the people had rejected the message. To teach Israel dependence, God would drive them from their homes and send them into exile. This would be comparable to dwelling in tents, as the people did during the appointed Feast of Tabernacles that commemorated the wilderness wandering (Lev. 23:33–43). The towns that epitomized Israel's sin, such as Gilead (6:8) and Gilgal (4:15; 9:15), would be destroyed. The altars of Gilgal would be turned into heaps of stone.

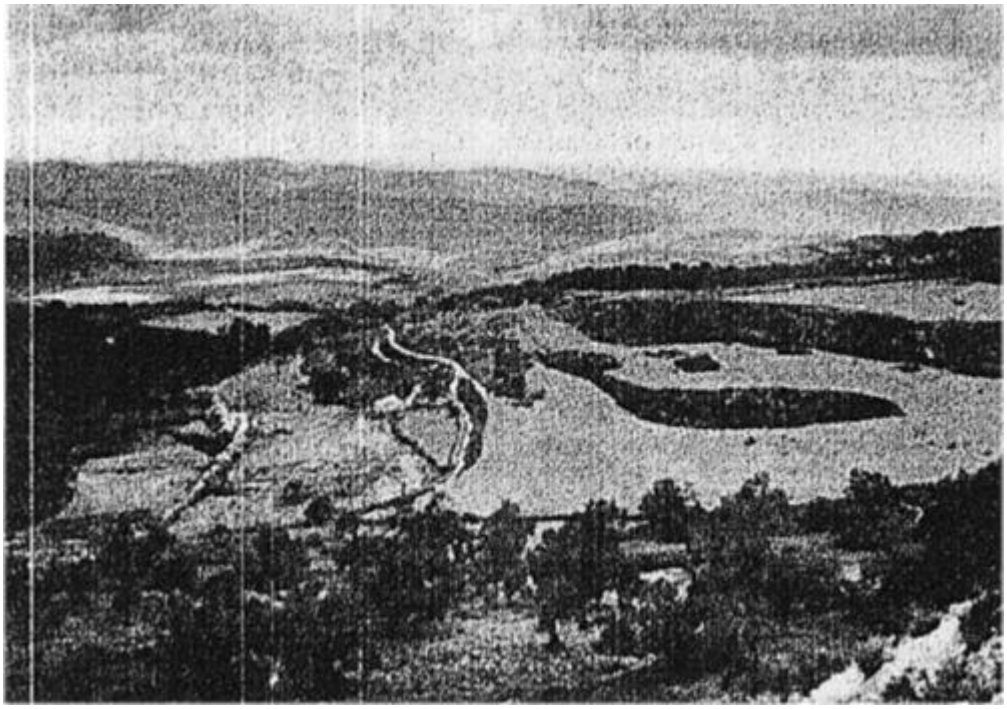
12:12–14 God had always protected His people. He protected Jacob when he had to flee for his life to a foreign land. He used Moses to bring Israel out of Egypt and preserve the people on their way to the promised land. Israel's ingratitude, made evident by its sin, angered the Lord and made judgment inevitable.



The prophet Hosea predicted that God would punish the tribe of Ephraim, which lived in these fertile hills north of Jerusalem (Hos. 13:1–3).

13:1 The tribe of Ephraim had gained a prominent position in the northern kingdom and could strike fear into the hearts of the other tribes. Trembling probably refers to the effect that Ephraim's speech had on the other tribes.

13:2 Kiss the calves refers to the idolatrous practice of kissing images as a sign of homage (1 Kin. 19:18).

13:3 God's judgment would sweep Ephraim away quickly, just as the sun dispels fog and dries up the dew, or as the wind blows away chaff and smoke.

13:4, 5 The Lord reminded Israel of who He is, what He had accomplished for His people, and what He expected from them. Because He alone was Israel's God and savior, the Lord expected the people's undivided loyalty. know … knew: The repetition of the verb "to know" correlates God's demands with His grace. Because He knew (cared for) Israel in the wilderness, He had every right to expect them to know (be loyal to) Him.

13:6–9 God provided for Israel's needs and richly blessed the people, like a shepherd leading his flock to lush pasture lands. In return, Israel forgot the Lord. God's relationship with Israel would change drastically from caring Shepherd to ravaging Predator. Ironically and tragically, Israel's rebellion had turned its Helper into a Destroyer.

13:10, 11 These verses recall how Israel demanded from Samuel a king like those of the nations around them (1 Sam. 8). Though offended by the people's request, which implied their rejection of divine authority (1 Sam. 8:7), the Lord granted their wish. Israel's king could not protect the people from divine judgment; in fact, he himself would be swept away.

13:12 bound up … stored up: God had kept a careful record of Israel's sins, to be revealed as evidence of guilt in the day of judgment.

13:13 This metaphor of childbirth illustrates Israel's spiritual insensitivity. When the crucial time of judgment arrived, Israel would respond unwisely, resulting in death. The nation's failure to repent is compared to a baby that is not positioned properly during labor and jeopardizes the life of both mother and child.

13:14 God announces salvation for Ephraim, proclaiming to death and the grave that He will deliver His people from their grasp. Paul appropriated part of this verse to declare that the Christian will not be totally overcome by death (1 Cor. 15:55).

13:15, 16 Israel was like a fruitful, well-watered plant, but God's judgment would come like a scorching east wind and bring drought. He shall plunder: The reality behind the imagery of the wind is the Assyrian army, which would plunder Israel's riches and mercilessly kill the people, including helpless infants and pregnant women.

14:1–3 The final section of Hosea's prophecy begins with a call to repentance that includes a model prayer. The people of Israel were to pray for God's gracious forgiveness and renew their allegiance to Him by renouncing foreign alliances, their own military strength, and artificial gods.

14:4–8 The Lord anticipates a time when He would restore repentant Israel. The Lord's renewed blessing is compared to dew. Revived Israel is compared to a beautiful lily, a deep-rooted and aromatic cedar of Lebanon, an attractive olive tree, and a fruitful vine. The Lord Himself would be like a green cypress tree that provides protective shade. I have … observed: This affirmation of God's watchful care stands in stark contrast to His judgment, which was compared to a leopard stalking its prey (13:7).

14:9 The book concludes with advice for those who read Hosea's prophecy. God's ways, His demands and principles, are completely true. The wise person will choose to obey them, but the foolish person will ignore them and consequently stumble into judgment.

The Book of Joel

———— NATURAL DISASTERS—FROM RISING FLOOD WATERS TO violent earthquakes—provoke fear and dread. With all their ingenuity, people still cannot control these powerful and destructive forces. They can only watch in awe. Joel begins his book with a description of such a natural disaster—a plague of ravenous locusts. In the prophet's hands, the destructiveness of this plague becomes a vivid warning of the power of God's coming judgment and a clear appeal to run to the Lord for mercy.

Others believe that the Book of Joel is so close in tone and idea to the Book of Zephaniah that it is likely that the two prophets were contemporaries. The primary evidence for this is the fact that both books prominently feature the concept of the impending "day of the Lord" (compare 2:2 with Zeph. 1:14–16). Since Zephaniah's book dates from around 627 B.C., a number of scholars assign a date of about 600 B.C. for the Book of Joel.

If we assume that the book was written early in the reign of Joash, then we can refer to 2 Kin. 11:1—12:21 for background on this period of Judean history. Joash inherited the throne of Judah as a boy. He had survived Athaliah's murder of all potential claimants to the throne only through the heroic efforts of his aunt Jehosheba, who hid him in the temple. Joash was crowned king at the age of seven by Jehoiada the high priest, who had enlisted the captains of the royal guard to dispose of the wicked Athaliah. Jehoiada advised the young king during the early years of his reign. It is possible that during these years the nation of Judah was devastated by a great swarm of locusts. This catastrophe would have given the prophet Joel an occasion to call the people to repentance in view of an even greater judgment to come—the day of the Lord.

However, it is not unreasonable to place Joel's ministry during the twenty-five years before the Babylonians destroyed Jerusalem in 586 B.C. If Joel was a contemporary of Zephaniah, then his message of impending national disaster, using the natural calamity of a recent invasion of locusts, would have been a powerful announcement of the horrible events that soon were to come on Jerusalem.

Joel's prophecy had two purposes. First, Joel wrote to call the nation to repentance (2:12) on the basis of its experience of the recent locust plague. The recent disaster was but a token of a more devastating judgment to come. Yet that judgment could be averted by sincere and humble repentance (2:13, 14). In this, Joel shares a common message with other prophets. In the light of impending judgment, there is always a message of hope for those who will return in faith to God. Second, the prophecy was intended to comfort the godly with promises of future salvation and blessing (2:28–32; 3:18–21). Should the national disaster occur, Joel offered hope to the true believers that all was not over. God would keep His promise; the Savior would one day reign.

The author of the book is Joel, the son of Pethuel (1:1). Little is known about the author's life or circumstances. His name means "The Lord Is God," suggesting that he was reared in a home where God was honored. The references to Zion, Judah, and Jerusalem (2:15, 23, 32; 3:1) indicate that the prophet lived and prophesied in Judah and Jerusalem. His frequent references to the work of priests in the temple (1:9, 13, 14; 2:17) lead some to conclude that he was a priest. But Joel also displays considerable interest in agriculture in all of its forms. As a prophet of the Lord, he could have been knowledgeable about the temple in Jerusalem without having been a priest.

Scholars have offered various dates for the writing of the Book of Joel, from early preexilic times to as late as 350 B.C. Some believe that internal evidence indicates that the book was written during the reign of Joash king of Judah (835–796 B.C.), and in the time of the high priest Jehoiada. This view is based on the following considerations: (1) The location of the book between Hosea and Amos in the Hebrew canon suggests a preexilic date of writing. (2) The allusion to the neighboring nations as Judah's foes rather than Assyria, Babylon, or Persia points to an early date for the book. (3) The book does not mention any reigning king, which may suggest a time when the responsibility for ruling rested upon the priests and elders—as was the case during the early reign of young king Joash (2 Kin. 11:4—12:21).

Commentary

1:1–20 This section describes the devastating results of the locust plague that ravaged the country of Judah. Joel highlights the unprecedented nature of the calamity. The account serves as the basis for an appeal to national mourning and repentance.

1:1 The word of the LORD … came attests to the divine origin of the prophet's message. The presentation of the message was the work of the prophet. Joel means "The Lord Is God."

1:2, 3 Has anything like this happened: The calamity of recent days was unprecedented in the memory of the people.

1:4 Many interpreters have viewed this locust swarm as foreign armies that attacked Judah in successive waves—Assyria, Babylon, Greece, and Rome. Yet literal locust plagues were one of the judgments promised if the people disobeyed God and broke their covenant with Him (Deut. 28:38, 39, 42). Further, Joel's description of the damage done by the locusts compares with eyewitness reports. The impression given is one of overwhelming devastation.

1:5 Awake, you drunkards: The vineyards had been destroyed, and the wine had been lost.

1:6 Nation may refer to a literal or figurative swarm of locusts. They came in such numbers that they were like a vast army. Rains bringing an end to drought can trigger the hatching of dormant locust eggs and stimulate existing locusts to breed. The origin of these swarms is not fully understood even today. Some factors that may induce normally solitary locusts to swarm are high temperatures, low humidity, and population crowding. Adult locusts, with serrated jaws rasping from side to side, can consume daily their body weight in food. Yet they are able to live for four days without feeding, surviving on stored fat. A locust swarm can cover more than a square mile, with 50 million insects capable of devastating 100 tons of vegetation a day. Locust swarms have been known to blanket 2,000 square miles, stripping vegetation, fouling the air with excrement, and triggering epidemics as they die and rot. It has been estimated that a single swarm of locusts could eat in one day what 40,000 people eat in one year.

These before-and-after pictures of the same tree made 15 minutes apart show how a swarm of locusts can quickly devour all vegetation in its path (Joel 1:7).

1:7 Branches of trees stripped of bark by the rasping teeth of the locusts were left splintered and ghostly white.

1:8 The image here is of a young bride widowed on her wedding day. Sackcloth was worn by those in mourning in ancient Israel.

1:9 The drink offering refers to the wine offerings that accompanied the priests' morning and evening sacrifices (Ex. 29:38–41). The devastation of the locust meant that no sacrifice could be offered.

1:10 The land is personified as mourning because the three principle crops it produced—grain, grapes, and olives—had been destroyed (Deut. 7:13; Ps. 104:15).

1:11, 12 The people had anticipated the joy of harvest, but due to the disaster of the locust plague, their joy has withered away.

1:13–20 Joel reminds the nation's leaders that being restored to blessing requires repentance (Deut. 30:1–5; 2 Chr. 7:14). God will not withhold His favor and blessing from those who are truly repentant.

1:14, 15 The day of the LORD refers to a time of judgment and deliverance. Joel views the locust plague as a contemporary day of judgment that was serving as a token or forewarning of an even greater, future "day of the Lord."

1:16 Is not the food cut off … Joy and gladness: With the sudden loss of food, there was also a loss of joy at harvest (Is. 9:3).

1:17 The seed shrivels indicates further devastation in the land and an inability to replant the following year.

1:18–20 Not only did the people of Judah suffer from the drought, so did the animals, cattle, and flocks. Joel depicts the animals poetically as joining in the lament, groaning in their hunger and distress (Rom. 8:22). I cry out: The prophet adds his own voice to the bellowing of beasts, the wailing of drunkards, and the mourning of priests. He was part of the suffering community, not an outsider looking on from a distance.

IN DEPTH

The Day of the Lord

One of the central themes of the Book of Joel is “the day of the Lord” (1:15; 2:1). This language describes a period of time in which God “comes down” in a dramatic way to bring wrath and judgment on the wicked and salvation to the righteous. God is Lord of time. There is no period that is not “the day of the Lord” in a general sense. But at times God enters the space-time arena to assert in bold, dramatic ways that He is in control.

The day of the Lord is a major theme of OT prophecy. Thirteen of the sixteen prophets address this subject. The concept of the day of the Lord probably originated with the conquest of Canaan—a conquest that was in fact the Lord’s war (Deut. 1:30; 3:22; Josh. 5:13–15; 6:2); that is, a day of judgment for the wicked Canaanites (Lev. 18:25; Deut. 9:4, 5).

The day of the Lord is not an isolated phenomenon or a single event in human history. Periods in Israel’s early history and latter history, the coming of Jesus, and His second advent are all called “the day of the Lord” in Scripture. The predictions of a coming day of the Lord can be fulfilled in a number of different events. The invasion of locusts in the historic events of the life of Joel was the day of the Lord (ch. 2). But the day of wrath and deliverance that soon fell on Judah in the Babylonian invasion was also the day of the Lord.

While most references speak about future events, five biblical texts describe the day of the Lord in terms of past judgments (Is. 22:1–14; Jer. 46:2–12; Lam. 1:1—2:22; Ezek. 13:1–9). These texts reflect circumstances of military defeat, tragedy, and judgment. Such events may have stimulated the development of the prophetic concept of a future “day” or time of judgment for the disobedient of Israel and all of the nations (1:15; Is. 13:6, 9; Zeph. 1:14–18).

However, the day of the Lord is not just a day of wrath and judgment on the disobedient. In some contexts, it also includes deliverance and restoration for the righteous. The day of the Lord speaks not only about future judgment, but also about future hope, prosperity, and blessing (Is. 4:2–6; Hos. 2:18–23; Amos 9:11–15; Mic. 4:6–8). Joel reveals that this day is to be heralded by heavenly phenomena (2:30, 31) that will bring sudden darkness and gloom on the earth (2:2). It will be a day of divine destruction (1:15) on the nations that have persecuted Israel (3:12–14) and on the rebellious and disobedient of Israel (Amos 5:18–20). Yet it will also be a time of deliverance and unprecedented blessing for God’s people (2:32; 3:16, 18–21; 1 Thess. 5:2–5).

2:1 The trumpet, or ram's horn, was used in ancient times to signal danger or warn of a military attack (Jer. 6:17; Amos 3:6). God demonstrated His grace by warning His people beforehand and providing opportunity for repentance before He brought His judgment upon them. Zion refers to Jerusalem (Ps. 133:3). coming … at hand: The Bible presents the day of the Lord as an imminent reality. It is not something that we are gradually moving toward; rather, it is ever ready to burst in on us. At any moment, the day that is "near" may become present.

2:2 Darkness is used as a figure for misery, distress, and judgment (Is. 8:22; 60:2; Jer. 13:16).

2:3–11 Joel describes the locusts and their destruction of the land in vivid, poetic terms.

2:3–5 The invasion that Joel prophetically envisioned was like a raging fire that transformed all that was beautiful into desolation. Joel compared the speed and strength of the invaders to galloping horses.

2:6–9 writhe in pain: The invading armies were locustlike in number and in their ability to penetrate any defense; but like men of war, they bring fear and death with them. The imagery of locusts (ch. 1) is used in this section to describe the overwhelming power of a military invasion.

2:10, 11 References to the sun, moon, and stars growing dim allude to a future outpouring of divine wrath (Is. 13:10; Matt. 24:29; Rev. 6:12, 13). Who can endure: Nothing will be able to withstand the wrath of God (Matt. 24:21, 22).

2:12–17 Having warned the Judeans about the nearness of a greater day of judgment than the one just experienced, Joel now calls the nation to repentance.

2:12 Turn to Me: As in Zephaniah (Zeph. 2:1–3), an opportunity for repentance, remorse, and renewal was offered to the people.

2:13 rend your heart: God is not satisfied with outward acts of repentance. Tearing one's garments was a customary way of expressing grief or remorse (Josh. 7:6; 1 Sam. 4:12). However, like all outward acts, the tearing of a garment could be done without true sorrow or repentance. God required more than mere external words or actions; He wanted a change of heart and sorrow over sin. The attributes of God that provided the basis of Joel's appeal were first revealed to Moses in Ex. 34:6. slow to anger: God is reluctant to punish. Judgment is God's "unusual" or "foreign" task, for He wants all to come to repentance (Is. 28:21).

2:14 Who knows: These words suggest that even at the last moment, the Lord would withhold His wrath and display His grace if the people would truly repent. As a result, agriculture would be restored and productivity would return. There would be food and drink, for the people and for offerings to the Lord.

2:15 Blow the trumpet in Zion: The repetition of these words from 2:1 ties the chapter together and renews the urgent appeal for a proper response to God.

2:16 The urgency of the situation is apparent, for all ages and classes of the population were summoned. According to Jewish tradition codified in the Mishnah, a bridegroom and bride could be excused from reciting daily prayers on their wedding day. But Joel excused no one from prayer at this time of spiritual emergency.

2:17 Spare Your people: If the leaders and the people would gather together with prayers of true repentance and genuine renewal, the horrible events that God was threatening might be averted. Why should they say among the peoples: This rhetorical question was designed to move God to intervene. Failure to come to Judah's aid might encourage the nations to make a mockery of Judah's God.

2:18, 19 zealous for His land: The deep love of God for the land of Israel is coupled with His abiding love (pity) for the people. On every occasion in which God brought judgment on the land, there was the hope that one day His zeal for the land would lead to a renewal of blessing. Genuine repentance is the prerequisite for God's blessing. In response to repentance, God would bring restoration and blessing.

2:20 The north was regarded as the direction from which misfortune generally came upon Israel. The eastern sea refers to the Dead Sea. The western sea refers to the Mediterranean Sea.

2:21 Fear not: There is coming a day (Ps. 65) when God's restoration of the earth will be complete.

2:22 open pastures … tree bears its fruit: The renewal of agriculture would be a sign that God had renewed prosperity and peace to His land.

2:23, 24 The former rain softened the soil for planting winter wheat. The latter rain fell in the spring, causing the grain to swell and ensuring a good harvest. If the rains failed, the crops would not grow.

2:25, 26 The same God who brings judgment is pleased to restore blessing to those who repent. This does not mean that sin leaves no scar, but that God can restore people to usefulness in spite of past disobedience.

2:27 I am in the midst of Israel: Ultimately, this is the promise of God's presence in the midst of His people in the coming reign of King Jesus (Zeph. 3:14–20). However, God promises to be present at all times with the individual who is at peace with Him.

“spirit”

(Heb. ruach) (2:28; Gen. 6:3; 1 Kin. 22:23; Pss. 32:2; 146:4) Strong’s #7307: The noun spirit is related to a verb meaning “to breathe” or “to blow.” It can signify breath (Job 9:18; 19:17), wind (Gen. 8:1; Ex. 10:13), air (Eccl. 1:14; Is. 26:18), the breath of life (whether animal or human; Gen. 6:17; 7:15), disposition or mood (Gen. 41:8; Ezek. 21:7), an evil or distressing spirit (1 Sam. 16:14–16), or the Spirit of God (Gen. 1:2; Ps. 51:11). The spirit of life is the gift of God to all creatures (Job 12:10; 33:4; Eccl. 12:7). The endowment of God’s Holy Spirit is a special gift to believers, which brings spiritual life (Pss. 51:10, 11; 143:10), power (Judg. 6:34), wisdom and understanding (Is. 11:2), and divine revelation, which leads to a better understanding of God’s Word and His perfect ways (2:28; Is. 61:1, 2).

2:28–32 After describing the physical blessings that would come upon his generation if they would repent, Joel describes the spiritual blessings that God would bestow upon His people in the future. This passage was quoted by Peter on the Day of Pentecost (Acts 2:17–21) to explain the miracle of speaking in tongues. There are three main viewpoints regarding how Joel’s prophecy was used by Peter in Acts 2:17–21: (1) Some interpreters see a complete fulfillment of Joel’s prophecy in the experience of the first believers on the Day of Pentecost. The outpouring of the Spirit ushered in the kingdom age. The wonders in the skies were fulfilled at the crucifixion, when darkness covered the land. (2) Some interpreters believe that Peter was simply using Joel’s prophecy as an illustration of what was happening. In effect, Peter was saying, “This is that same Holy Spirit who was spoken about by Joel.” According to this view, the prophecy will be fulfilled in the future when the remnant of Israel believes. (3) Some suggest that Joel’s prophecy was partially fulfilled on the Day of Pentecost. The gift of the Holy Spirit was given, but the signs mentioned in vv. 30–32 will be fulfilled later in connection with the return of Christ in great glory.

2:28, 29 Afterward indicates the prophetic future; this word is a signal that the text was pointing to the messianic age. Pour out is derived from the imagery of Israel’s heavy winter rains; it speaks here of abundant provision. All flesh anticipates the inclusion of both Jews and Gentiles in one body in Christ (Eph. 2:11—3:6). The ministries of the Spirit mentioned here were experienced in the early church (Acts 11:28; 21:9; 2 Cor. 12:1–4; Rev. 1:1–3). Your sons and your daughters: The outpouring of the Spirit and the ministries done through His power will be accomplished without regard to gender, age, or class.

2:30, 31 The heavenly wonders described here will take place before the great and awesome day of the LORD, an apparent reference to the end times. Blood and fire correspond with Rev. 8:7, 8. Smoke corresponds with Rev. 9:18. Darkness corresponds with Rev. 8:12. Moon into blood corresponds with Rev. 6:12.

2:32 Anyone who calls on the name of the Lord—that is, repents and believes—will be saved from the judgment that will fall on the wicked and unbelieving. The judgment and deliverance referred to is that which will take place at the return of Christ (Zech. 14:1–3). At the same time, these words apply as well to spiritual deliverance of repentant peoples in any period of human history. It is with this gracious announcement of deliverance through the power of God that Joel ends this great section of his prophecy.

3:1–16 Joel now describes God's judgment on the nations gathered around Jerusalem (Zech. 14:1–3) at Christ's return. This is the counterpart to Judah's experience in the Day of the Lord. The nations that have persecuted Israel will themselves be judged.

3:1 In those days indicates a time in the prophetic future (2:28). The judgment will take place after the Lord has restored His people to the land (Matt. 25:31–46).

3:2–8 The Gentile nations must give a final accounting to God for what they have done to His people. Based on the experiences of the people of his day, Joel lists the kinds of things that the Gentiles will be accountable for: crimes against the land (v. 2), cruelty to the people (vv. 3, 6), and looting of the treasures of God's temple (v. 5).

3:2, 3 Valley of Jehoshaphat: The name Jehoshaphat means "The Lord Judges." The location of this valley is not known. Perhaps this was merely a symbolic name for the location of the great battle in the end times.

3:4, 5 Tyre and Sidon were Phoenician cities on the Mediterranean Sea, north of Galilee. Philistia was on the Mediterranean coast south of Joppa.

3:6, 7 The mention of the Greeks has been used as evidence for dating the book to the Greek period (332–363 B.C.). However, Greek people were known in Assyria in the time of Sargon II (722–705 B.C.) and are mentioned in Egypt's Tell el-Amarna tablets (around 1300 B.C.).

3:8 Sabeans were people of Semitic origin who lived in the southwest Arabian peninsula.

3:9–12 With a note of biting sarcasm, the Lord calls the nations to prepare themselves for the judgment that is to take place at Messiah's coming (Rev. 19:11–15).

3:9, 10 The military weapons of the Gentile nations would not be sufficient to protect them against God's judgment. Therefore, they are exhorted to beat their plowshares into swords and their pruning hooks into spears. For predictions of the reverse, see Is. 2:4; Mic. 4:3.

3:11 Joel saw two armies assembling for battle. The one is made up of the nations; the other is made up of the mighty ones of the Lord (Mark 8:38; Rev. 19:14).

3:12, 13 The use of harvesting imagery in the Book of Joel is complex. It begins in terms of the great scarcity resulting from the locust plague (ch. 1). Then there is a promised renewal of agriculture with the return of God's blessing to His repentant people (2:18–27). Here, the riches of renewed agriculture serve as a mocking backdrop for a world in conflict. In 3:18–21, there is a final renewal of agriculture because of the blessing of the resident King.

3:14 The valley of decision may be a symbolic name for the Valley of Jehoshaphat (3:2), or it may refer to the option before the people to continue toward certain judgment or to turn to God in repentance (vv. 12, 13).

3:15, 16 These verses parallel 2:30–32 and describe the same heavenly phenomena (Matt. 24:29). In the midst of calamity, God was offering a shelter for His people (Zeph. 2:1–3).

3:17 Joel anticipates a day when strangers would no longer pass through Jerusalem to plunder and destroy. Instead, they would worship the Lord (Zech. 8:20–23).

3:18 In that day indicates the prophetic future (2:28; 3:1). Joel uses poetic imagery to describe the productivity of the land in the messianic age. The vineyards will be so productive that the mountains shall drip with wine (Ps. 65:11–13). The pasture land will be so rich and green that engorged udders of female goats will flow with milk. The abundance of wine is representative of the joy to be experienced in the messianic age (Amos 9:13, 14). The Valley of Acacias was the location of the last encampment before the Israelites entered Canaan (Num. 25:1; Josh. 3:1).

3:19, 20 Egypt and Edom are mentioned as representatives of the Gentile nations that God will judge before the establishment of the Messiah's kingdom. Note the stark contrast with the eternal destinies of Judah and Jerusalem.

3:21 The LORD dwells in Zion: The Lord's presence in Jerusalem is the key to the blessing of the whole land.

The Book of Amos

THE BOOK OF AMOS IS PERHAPS THE MOST familiar of the Minor Prophets, not in detail, but in its theme of justice and in some of its striking metaphors. The figure of Amos, a Judean sheepbreeder with a strong message for Israel delivered in the shadow of Jeroboam's pagan temple at Bethel, both attracts us and commands our respect. In this book we can read, just as the ancient Israelites heard, a masterfulliterary creation given by God through a man of the people. But more importantly, we read and hear the Word of God, still ringing down the centuries with clarity and force.

God's passionate concern for justice is the main theme of the Book of Amos. Justice is not an abstract issue with God. Instead, justice is relational; it promotes good relations between people and between groups of people. Injustice breaks down good relationships and breeds anger, hostility, and violence. God created the human race to enjoy good relations with Him and with each other; therefore, injustice that breeds alienation in all of its varieties breaks God's heart.

The renewed prosperity of Israel based on the successes of Jeroboam II brought new wealth to the upper classes. They used that wealth to enlarge their landholdings and to build great houses for themselves. They violated the rights of the poor and the landed peasants, throwing many off their ancestral lands. Through God's provisions in the Mosaic covenant, the landed peasant class had been the foundation of Israel's society. But under Jeroboam's rule, this class virtually disappeared. As the rich became richer, the poor became poorer and more numerous; many were sold into slavery. Israel's social structure became thoroughly unstable.

The immediate purpose of the prophetic ministry of Amos was to call the leaders of ancient Israel to repent and reform. Amos warned them that if they did not heed his call, their injustice against the poor and the weak would destroy the nation. God would not allow them to continue in their unrighteous, unjust course. Repentance or retribution were the only alternatives. It is no accident that what we often remember from Amos is his stirring call, “Let justice run down like water, and righteousness like a mighty stream” (5:24).

The Book of Amos is named after the prophet who delivered its oracles. Amos was from Tekoa, a town at the edge of the Judean wilderness, about five miles southeast of Bethlehem. Because of marginal and uncertain yearly rainfall, this area was suited more for raising sheep and goats than for cultivating crops. Amos specifically calls himself a sheepbreeder (1:1; 7:14, 15). The Hebrew term used indicates that Amos was not a hired shepherd, but rather the owner of one or more flocks of sheep.

Amos also describes himself as a “tender of sycamore fruit” (7:14). The sycamore fig tree bears thousands of figs much like the common fig, but smaller and not as good. Before this fruit could ripen properly, a small hole had to be pierced in the bottom of its skin. This piercing was done by hand and was a tedious and time-consuming task. Why was Amos obliged to tend the sycamore? Western Judah, the oasis of Jericho, and lower Galilee were the regions where sycamore figs grew most abundantly. The shepherds needed to bring their flocks to one of these regions in late summer, after the desert pastures had dried up. Since this was the time for piercing the sycamore fruit, landowners would exchange grazing rights for labor. A shepherd could watch his flock while sitting on the broad limbs of the sycamore, piercing its fruit. Thus Amos was not a wealthy man. Wealthy sheepbreeders hired shepherds to tend their flocks. Amos followed his flock himself (7:15), and when that meant piercing sycamore fruit, he pierced sycamore fruit.

Amos prophesied during the reigns of Uzziah king of Judah and Jeroboam king of Israel. Uzziah was king of Judah from 792 to 740 B.C., though from about 752 on, he was stricken with leprosy and shared power with his son Jotham. Jeroboam II was king of Israel from 792 to 753 B.C. Uzziah and Jeroboam formed an alliance for much of their reigns and together ruled for a brief time an area nearly as large as the empire of David and Solomon.

When it was written, the prophecy of Amos was dated to a time “two years before the earthquake” (1:1). It is impossible to tell what earthquake is meant, for there are no other historical references to it. However, this dating, along with the dialogue of Amos with Amaziah, the priest of Jeroboam’s temple at Bethel (7:10–17), indicates that the period of the prophetic activity of Amos was short, unlike many of the other prophets.

Amos went to Bethel from Tekoa, delivered his prophetic oracles, and returned home. He probably stayed in Bethel only a few days. The spoken oracles of Amos should be dated around 755–754 B.C. Within two or three years after the prophet's appearance at Bethel, Jeroboam II died, and Israel's rapid decline began. Within thirty years, Israel was conquered by the Assyrians.

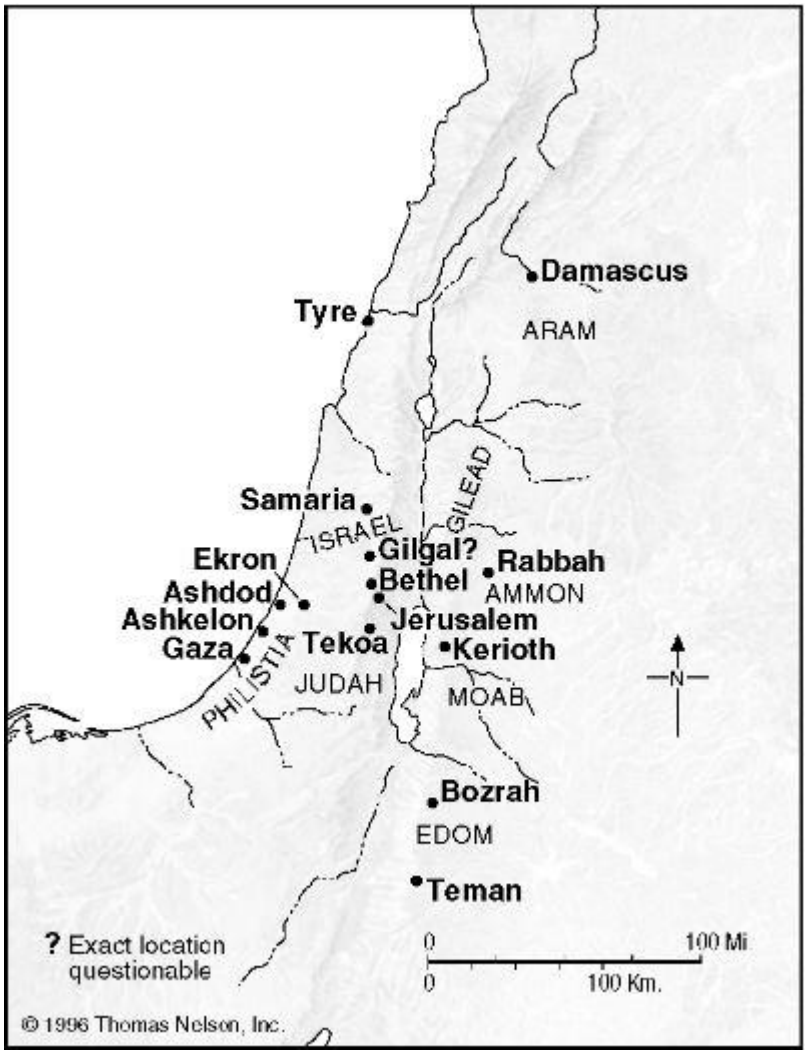
Commentary

1:1—2:16 The Lord sent Amos, a Judean, to Bethel to prophesy of coming judgment on Israel. But in Bethel, Amos faced a hostile audience. Israel's first king, Jeroboam I, had made the town a center of pagan worship. Because the temple in Jerusalem was in Judah and not in the nation of Israel, Jeroboam had encouraged the Israelites to worship at Bethel instead of Jerusalem. Thus the Israelites who gathered at Bethel would regard Amos, a Judean, with suspicion. Yet Amos bravely condemned there the sins of Israel's neighbors—the Syrians, Philistines, Phoenicians, Edomites, Ammonites, and Moabites. Then he went on to point out the iniquity of Judah and Israel: they had rejected the God who had covenanted with them. They too stood before God condemned by their own evil ways. With a steady voice, Amos called the Israelites to return to the living God.

1:1 Tekoa was about ten miles south of Jerusalem, in a region well-suited for raising sheep and goats. The earthquake, mentioned again in Zech. 14:5, cannot be dated precisely.

1:2 The temple was on Mount Zion, the oldest part of Jerusalem. When the LORD roared from there, the nation dried up at the heat of the fiery blast. The fact that the top of Mount Carmel, on the coast of Israel in the north, withers indicates a great disaster. Carmel was a garden spot, normally lush and flourishing year-round.



Amos: Places Judged by God

Though Amos was a simple shepherd, God had given him knowledge of lands and nations beyond the Judean pastures where he tended his sheep. Because God had placed prophetic messages on his lips, he knew about the tragic futures of cities as far away as the Syrian city of Damascus (1:5), but also as close as the Philistine city of Gaza (1:6). His pronouncements of doom encompassed the Phoenicians in the seacoast town of Tyre and the Edomites in the arid lands of the south.

1:3 Thus says the LORD: There was no mistaking by whose authority these messages were spoken: this was the word of God Himself. For three … and for four: This stylistic device indicated the exhaustion of God's patience—the Syrians had continued to sin, again and again. This device is repeated as Amos speaks God's words against nation after sinful nation. The transgressions of the neighbors of Israel and Judah were against the general revelation, or "law of nature," that all people recognize and acknowledge. Since the neighboring nations had not received God's special revelation, as Israel had at Mount Sinai, Amos's oracles did not call them to account by that standard, but by the standard they had received. Damascus was the capital of Syria (also called Aram), a powerful kingdom that had been a frequent adversary of Israel throughout its history. Israelites listening to Amos would have been glad to hear of God's punishment of Damascus. Gilead was the region on the east side of the Jordan from the Yarmuk River to the Dead Sea. It had belonged to Israel since they had taken over the land, but Aram often had fought Israel for possession of northern Gilead, gaining control there in Israel's times of military weakness. Threshed … with implements of iron indicates extreme cruelty and inhumanity in warfare. After reaping, wheat or barley was laid out on the threshingfloor, a hard flat surface of bedrock or packed earth. An ox pulled a wooden sledge around the threshingfloor. The ox's hooves and the sharp stones imbedded in the bottom of the sledge beat out the grains from the heads of wheat.

1:4 I will send a fire … Which shall devour the palaces: Fire in an ancient city was a real threat. Cities were crowded with houses close together on very narrow streets; there was too little water to effectively fight raging fires. Hazael and Ben-Hadad were kings of Syria who had been particularly harsh in their treatment of Israel.

Led Astray by Lies

Have you ever tried to minimize the guilt of telling a lie with the attitude, "Of course I lied. Doesn't everybody? What's the big deal?" Part of the "big deal" is that if you assume you're joining the crowd by using deception, then who can you trust ultimately? How can you ever be sure that you are hearing the truth from anyone? Maybe everyone else has taken the same attitude you have: "Everyone lies. What's the big deal?"

Amos warned the people of his day that lies would always lead them astray; deception would always cause trouble. In fact, they were already in trouble largely because they followed the lies of their fathers (Amos 2:4). The prophet's statement and the history of Israel show that generations can suffer tragically from patterns of deception.

Yet people try many ways to deceive themselves about the true nature of lying. For example, we use euphemisms such as "shading the truth," "telling a little white lie," or "skirting the issue." We also try to justify lying by suggesting that it is normal, and even inevitable, as if sooner or later we have to lie. But the worst tragedy about this way of living may be that we end up telling lies and believing lies about God (Rom. 1:25), and about ourselves (1 John 1:10).

Lying is not an inescapable fact of human nature. God does not lie (Num. 23:19; Titus 1:2), and He tells us not to lie in the Ten Commandments (Ex. 20:16). Likewise, Paul exhorted believers not to lie to one another (Eph. 4:25; Col. 3:9). So it is possible to speak and live with honesty. But it is self-defeating to practice deception. In the long run, there is no integrity in the habit, and sooner or later one begins to distrust everyone—including oneself.

1:5 I will also break: Amos makes numerous references to the demolition of urban infrastructures that would occur in a coming day of judgment. He particularly mentions those that pertain to the defense of cities. Ancient city walls usually incorporated small fortresses or citadels at strategic points along their expanses, and particularly around the gates. These reinforced structures provided a perch for commanders and a secondary means of defense in the event the walls were breached. The gate bar was the large timber that barred the city gate from the inside. If it was broken, the city would lose its security and could be captured easily. Aven … Beth Eden: Amos may have intended a play on words here. Aven means "Sin" in Hebrew; Damascus was a verdant oasis city on the edge of the desert that could be compared to Eden. However, Amos may also have been referring to the Beth Eden region on the north bank of the Euphrates River. Kir is where the Assyrian king Tiglath-Pileser III exiled the Syrians of Damascus in 732 B.C. Amos later referred to Kir as the place from which the Syrians had originally come (9:7).

1:6, 7 Gaza was one of the five principal cities of the Philistines, the traditional enemies of Israel who lived on the southwest coast of Canaan. They took captive … to deliver: The principal method of acquiring foreign slaves in the ancient Middle East was capturing them in war. There were many incidents of open warfare and small-scale raiding between Philistia and Judah and between Philistia and Israel in the long history of their animosity. Edom controlled important trade routes and had trading relations with many nations; they traded in slaves as well as in other precious goods.

1:8 Ashdod and Ashkelon, coastal cities located north of Gaza, were two of the five major Philistine cities. Ekron, also one of the five major Philistine cities, was situated inland.

1:9, 10 Tyre, the principal Phoenician city, was on the northwest coast of Canaan. The Phoenicians were master seafarers. Tyre and Israel had forged an alliance that was profitable for both. However, Tyre ignored the long-standing covenant of brotherhood, and sought commercial gain by selling Israelite slaves to Edom.

1:11 The nation of Edom, located southeast of the Dead Sea, controlled important caravan trade routes, and thus was deeply involved in commerce. his brother: The Edomites traced their ancestry to Esau, the brother of Jacob. But several times in the history of their stormy relationship, Edom took advantage of Israel's (or Judah's) misfortune to help others attack them.

1:12 Teman and Bozrah were principal Edomite cities.

1:13 The nation of Ammon, located east of Gilead on the edge of the desert, was descended from one of the sons of Lot, Abraham's nephew (Gen. 19:36–38). Thus Ammon was related to Israel, though not as closely as Edom. ripped open … enlarge their territory: The Ammonites killed pregnant women in order to prevent the increase of the Israelite population in Gilead, which they were trying to wrest from Israel's control.

1:14, 15 Rabbah was the capital of Ammon.

2:1 Like Ammon (1:13), Moab (located southeast of Israel) was descended from one of the sons of Lot. burned the bones: This act was believed to desecrate the remains of a deceased person, a heinous act in ancient times and a great dishonor to the person's memory.

2:2, 3 Kerioth was a major town of Moab. It was the site of a temple of Chemosh, Moab's national god.

2:4, 5 Judah was Israel's neighbor to the south. Israel and Judah shared a common heritage, a language, a faith, and a covenant with the Lord. the law of the LORD … His commandments: The basis of Judah and Israel's judgment was different from that of the nations Amos had just called to account before them (1:3—2:3). Judah and Israel had received God's special revelation at Sinai; they were in a special covenant relationship with Him and were held to a higher standard of accountability.

2:6 I will not turn away its punishment: Here the focus shifted to Amos's audience. This was Israel, God's people who had violated their covenant relationship with Him. God was calling them to account for violations of the covenant. sell the righteous for silver: In His law, God had instructed the Israelites to work off their debts through indentured service—administered humanely and for a strictly limited time (Lev. 25:39–43; Deut. 15:12). By Amos's day, those in power in Israel were taking advantage of the courts to sell debtors as slaves, termed the righteous here because they were the innocent victims of the corruption of the courts. For a pair of sandals means for little or nothing.

2:7 pant after the dust: Amos used deliberate exaggeration to portray the greed of those oppressing the poor. Not satisfied with gaining their victims' farms and selling the people into slavery for money, the greedy rich would not let the poor go until they had shaken the dust from their heads. The humble, those without power or influence, should have been able to depend on the justice due them. Instead, justice was denied them. As a result, their life was turned to poverty, oppression, and insecurity. Go in to means to have sexual intercourse with. the same girl: Several possibilities have been suggested: (1) Both father and son visited the same temple prostitute in their worship of pagan gods. (2) A man bought a slave girl, made her his concubine, then gave his son sexual rights to her. (3) A man married a woman, his father seduced her, and they became lovers. All of these practices were unlawful.

2:8 Clothes taken in pledge, as security for a loan, were to be returned in the evening, for clothes were the bedding of the poor (Ex. 22:26, 27). The powerful in Israel were spreading the clothes out as beds for themselves beside the altars, in a show of empty, merciless piety.

2:9, 10 Yet it was I: This emphatic statement underscores the fact that God had been Israel's Champion, and the nation's success had not been its own doing. The Amorite refers to the previous inhabitants of the land of Canaan. Cedars were proverbial for their height, oaks for their strength. His fruit above and his roots beneath means "totally, completely."

2:11, 12 Prophets were especially privileged; God spoke to them and gave them messages for the people. Nazirites dedicated themselves to God with a vow that entailed specific responsibilities and prohibitions, either for life or for a specified period (Num. 6:1–21). Total abstinence from wine was one of the prominent features of the Nazirite vow.

2:13 Weighed down by you is a powerful metaphor of the burden of Israel's sin on the Lord. This is the same God Isaiah describes as measuring the waters of the earth in the hollow of His hand, measuring the heavens with the span of His hand, and weighing the mountains in His balance (Is. 40:12).

2:14–16 No resources of personal strength, no skill with weapons of war, not even the help of the mighty war horse would suffice for the military men of might to save themselves in that day, when God would bring His judgment upon them. If the strong could not save themselves, what would become of the rest of the people?

3:1 The whole family which I brought up emphasizes the personal, intimate relationship that God had with Israel.

3:2 You only have I known, in this context, means "You only have I chosen." God's relationship with Israel was not only intimate, it was exclusive. God had been faithful to Israel; yet Israel had not been faithful to God. For this reason, the nation would be judged.

3:3–6 This series of rhetorical questions illustrates the seriousness, certainty, and righteousness of God's impending action against Israel. Each question is framed so as to require a resounding "no" as its answer.

3:7 This parenthetical statement interrupts, yet underscores, Amos's point that God is sovereign and does what He wills; therefore, Israel's judgment was certain.

3:8 Two more rhetorical questions complete the group of nine (vv. 3–6). It would do Israel no good to forbid prophecy (2:12; 7:13, 16); the true prophet must prophesy, just as certainly as God's judgment must come to pass.

3:9, 10 Ashdod, one of the five principal cities of the Philistines, was on the Mediterranean coast southwest of Israel. For God to call Philistia and Egypt to witness His judgment of Israel implies that these pagan nations were relatively more righteous than Israel. They had not received God's revelation at Sinai; yet Israel, having received it, had violated it grossly and repeatedly.

A Nation Loses Its Conscience

Amos' description of Israel is sobering, if not downright frightening: "They do not know to do right" (Amos 3:10). Wickedness overflows the nation like a mighty river. As a result, the people are drowning in sin. They can no longer tell right from wrong. There is no longer any national conscience.

A nation is on the verge of collapse when good and evil look the same. If questions of right and wrong no longer even enter the people's minds, then that nation is in desperate trouble. In Israel's case, enemies were waiting just around the corner (3:11, 12).

Has your nation lost its conscience? Do people call good bad and bad good? Or can they even tell right from wrong? Or worse, do questions of morality not even concern them? If so, consider how you could act as an agent of conscience. Perhaps you could challenge people to consider their ways, and apprise them of their responsibility to fear God. You may not be received well, but God will honor you for standing up for righteousness.

3:11 This verse pictures a formal sentencing of Israel in the presence of the witnesses whom God had called (v. 9). Sapping Israel's strength was exactly what Assyria did in the years following Amos's prophecies, finally putting an end to the nation in 722 B.C.

3:12, 13 The hired shepherd was responsible to the owner for the safety of the sheep. He had to make good any loss, unless he could prove it was unavoidable. A lion taking a sheep was an unavoidable loss, but the shepherd had to prove that the lion had taken it. A couple of small bones or a piece of an ear was sufficient; the owner would recognize the lion's work. As complete as the destruction of a sheep by a lion would be the destruction of Israel that God would bring.

3:14 the altars of Bethel: Jeroboam I had erected sanctuaries in Bethel and Dan to prevent Israelites from traveling to Jerusalem to worship and possibly returning their political allegiance to the house of David. Those sanctuaries of false worship had tempted many Israelites to be unfaithful to God. Horns represent strength. If the horns of the altar were cut off, it would symbolize the altar's weakness and signal its destruction.

This elaborate ivory carving discovered at Samaria recalls the words of the prophet Amos that Samaria's "houses of ivory" would be destroyed by God's judgment (Amos 3:15).

3:15 The four houses mentioned here were all symbols of oppression. Many small inheritances had been stolen to form the large estates of the wealthy and powerful, where they built their opulent houses.

4:1, 2 Bashan, the region east and northeast of the Sea of Galilee, was (and is) a prime grassland area renowned for its cattle. Cows of Bashan refer to the sleek, fat, well-fed women of Samaria. Amos was not condemning prosperity for its own sake, but the way these women and their men had gained their prosperity, by the oppression and robbery of the poor and powerless. These were the women of the powerful families who not only urged their husbands on to greater oppression so they could drink more and more wine at ever more elaborate social functions. They themselves oppressed the poor and crushed the needy. The biblical record is clear that Israelite women, at least of the upper classes, could engage in wide-ranging economic activities of their own, independently of their husbands (Prov. 31:10–31). Given the system-atic oppression of Israel's poor that Amos described, it is not surprising to find him indicting the women of the upper classes for their part in it.

4:3 Broken walls were a symbol of the thoroughness of the destruction of the city and the homes that the people held so dear. In an undamaged city, the usual way in and out was the one main gate. But Samaria would be so ruined that the deportees would be driven straight through the breaches in the walls of their houses and their city.

4:4, 5 This passage is a bitterly sarcastic call to Israel to worship. Bethel, a city on the central ridge road just inside Israel's border with Judah, was the site of the most important shrine in southern Israel. Gilgal refers to a site in the Jordan valley where Israel had encamped before and after the taking of Jericho (Josh. 5:10; 9:6). Thus, Gilgal had historical connections with Israel's early faith and early life in the land. For this you love: Ignoring God's desires, the Israelites did what they wanted. They loved the feasting that went with the festivals of sacrifice, but not God's calls for justice.

4:6–11 This passage describes a series of five calamities that God had already sent upon the Israelites in an effort to drive them to repentance. A striking feature of this narrative is God's emphatic claim that the Israelites had brought these disasters on themselves. Each stanza ends with the tragic refrain, "Yet you have not returned to Me."

4:6 The first calamity was famine. Cleanness of teeth … and lack of bread indicated the exhaustion of all food supplies.

4:7, 8 The second calamity was drought. Lack of rain with still three months to the harvest meant the total ruin of the grain crops.

4:9 The third calamity was crop disease and locusts.

4:10 The fourth calamity was plague and warfare. After the manner of Egypt suggests that God was reminding Israel of the ten plagues that preceded their exodus from Egypt; these included epidemic diseases and other disasters. The stench of your camps resulted from lack of sanitation, from disease, from the putrefaction of wounds, and sometimes from corpses of men and of animals that could not be buried quickly enough.

4:11 The fifth calamity was the destruction of Israelite cities. The overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah was the scale by which many subsequent disasters were measured. It meant total destruction, meted out in judgment by the hand of God Himself (Gen. 19:24, 25). A firebrand plucked from the burning refers to a stick snatched from a fire with one end already ablaze. Here it was a vivid metaphor for God's last-minute rescue of most of Israel from the fate He brought upon some of its cities and territories.

4:12 Because Israel had not returned to God through these five calamities, it would have to meet God Himself. To be confronted—inescapably—by the God it had scorned and rejected would be a fate more terrible than Israel could imagine.

4:13 Amos grounded God's right to exercise judgment upon Israel on His character as Creator and Sustainer of all the earth, a more fundamental basis than His deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt. God is sovereign over all the earth; on that basis He called Israel, and can call any nation, to account. forms mountains: The Hebrew word forms is derived from the word often rendered "potter." As easily as a potter forms vessels of clay, so God forms mountains. Wind also means "spirit." The ambiguity in this word may be deliberate. God creates both the wind and the human spirit; therefore, He is sovereign over both.

5:1, 2 The term virgin of Israel depicts the nation as a young maiden, cut off from her life before it had really begun. On her land is a reminder that the land had been God's gift to Israel. By their faithlessness, the people had turned God's gift into the place of their death and burial.

5:3, 4 The lamentation continues with a different image of Israel's destruction: the troops Israel would send out to defend its territory. Rather than saving Israel, its armies would themselves be decimated.

“seek”

(Heb. darash) (5:4; Ezra 6:21; 7:10; Ps. 119:10; Is. 34:16; 55:6) Strong’s #1875: This Hebrew verb can be correctly translated “to inquire of,” “to ask,” and “to seek.” The term conveys the idea of “going to see” in the sense of personally verifying something said, or “searching for,” in the sense of pressing for an answer to a question. Amos encourages his audience to seek life in the living God, not in the dead idols of Bethel and Gilgal (5:4). The psalmist found help in times of trouble by seeking the Lord (Pss. 34:4; 77:2). On several occasions, the Israelites were encouraged to seek God by preparing their hearts for God through humble repentance (1 Chr. 16:11; 2 Chr. 30:19).

5:5 Beersheba, about 50 miles southwest of Bethel, was the site of a temple in Amos’s day.

5:6 The house of Joseph here refers to the whole nation.

5:7 Wormwood, a plant of the aster family with a bitter taste, is used several times in the Bible as a metaphor for sorrow and bitterness.

5:8 Pleiades refers to a cluster of stars within the constellation Taurus, one of the twelve signs of the Zodiac. One of Israel’s idolatries was astral worship. Far from being deities, Amos asserted, the constellations also were God’s creations. Orion refers to a prominent constellation in the southern sky in the shape of a hunter, containing two stars of the first magnitude. He turns the shadow … dark as night: God designed and sustains the daily cycle of light and darkness through His own servant, which was not a deity, the sun. He calls … the earth: God, not Baal, Tammuz, or any other fertility deity, designed and sustains the atmospheric water cycle by which the earth receives its necessary rainfall. The LORD is His name underscores the uniqueness of Israel’s God. He is not just a national God; He is the only God.

5:9 The God who created and sustains the processes of all the universe surely can bring His judgment to bear, even upon the strong of the earth and their fortresses.

5:10 The gate was the location of the town court, where justice was to be upheld in all legal proceedings, whether civil or criminal.

5:11 Taxes were collected in kind from those with few resources of silver and gold. To take grain taxes from the poor was to put them at risk of starvation if the harvest had not been bountiful. Yet the rich and powerful had sufficient resources to build luxurious houses of hewn stone for themselves. God promised that the rich would not enjoy their luxury stolen from the lifeblood of the poor and powerless.

5:12 manifold … sins: Israel's leaders did not sin incidentally or furtively; they sinned brazenly and habitually, as though God had never revealed Himself and His standards of justice and mercy.

5:13 the prudent: Even those with knowledge that could ensure justice for the poor were intimidated into silence, knowing they would be targeted for violence if they spoke up against the rich and powerful.

5:14, 15 Seek good: The prophet interrupted himself, as it were, to plead with Israel to return to God and avoid the judgment He otherwise would bring upon them. As you have spoken: Worshiping in the Lord's name, the Israelites invoked the Lord's presence with them in their spoken prayers and blessings. If they began to live as God had taught them in the Law, He would indeed be with them.

5:16, 17 God's purposed action was that He would pass through the nation. A visit from God is a dreaded and mournful event for anyone not ready to meet Him. In all vineyards: A vineyard was typically a place of rejoicing and gladness.

5:18 The popular theology of Amos's day apparently looked forward to the day of the LORD as the time of Israel's restoration to military, political, and economic greatness, perhaps to the greatness of the reigns of David and Solomon. Amos declared such hopes futile, even pitiable. What the people looked forward to as a day of light and triumph would rise upon them instead as a day of darkness and ruin.

5:19, 20 The images of a bear and a serpent evoke the terror that follows when a person escapes a terrible danger and is exhausted and relieved, only to find a worse danger so close at hand that it is inescapable.

5:21–23 God had promised that if the Israelites honored Him with their lives, He would savor, accept, and regard Israel's sacrifices and hear their words. By stating He would no longer accept Israel's sacrifices or listen to them, God was rejecting Israel's worship as hypocritical, dishonest, and meaningless. Feast days and sacred assemblies refers, in general, to all of Israel's worship of God. burnt offerings … grain offerings … peace offerings: For more details on the sacrificial system, see Lev. 1—3.

5:24 After dismissing Israel's empty worship as noisy and tumultuous, God called for the honest tumult of the rolling waters of justice and the perennial stream of righteousness, the only foundation for true praise and worship of the Lord.

Pagan Gods of Bible Times

One of Amos's primary responsibilities as a prophet of God was to announce the "day of the Lord," the time of God's judgment of wicked Israel. Idolatry, perhaps more than any other sin, was the reason for this impending punishment. The history of Israel is littered with apostasy, as the children of God pursued the false idols of their Canaanite neighbors. In 5:26, the prophet specifically identifies Chiun as the object of the people's worship. The following chart lists some of the pagan gods mentioned in the Old and New Testaments.

Pagan God	Description	Biblical Reference
OLD TESTAMENT
Ashtoreths	Baal's wife or female counterpart.	Judg. 2:13
Bel	A god identified with Merodach (Marduk), chief Babylonian god.	Is. 46:1
Chemosh	God of the Moabites and Ammonites.	Jer. 48:7, 13
Chiun	A star-god, identified with Saturn	Amos 5:26
Dagon	Chief Philistine god.	1 Sam. 5:2–7
Merodach	Chief Babylonian god, connected with war. Also known as Marduk.	Jer. 50:2
Molech	Ammonite god connected with child sacrifice.	Lev. 18:21
Nebo	Babylonian god of wisdom and arts.	Is. 46:1
Rimmon	Syrian god of rain.	2 Kin. 5:18
Tammuz	Babylonian fertility god.	Ezek. 8:14
NEW TESTAMENT
Twin Brothers	Castor and Pollux, twin sons of Zeus, the chief Greek god.	Acts 28:11
Zeus	Chief Greek god.	Acts 14:12, 13
Hermes	The Greek god of commerce and speed.	Acts 14:12,13

5:25 This verse is a rhetorical question with "yes" as the expected answer; Israel had worshiped God in the wilderness.

5:26 Israel had not worshiped the Lord exclusively, even in the earliest wilderness days. Sikkuth and Chiun are pagan deities; apparently Israel had made images of foreign gods. The true believer in the Lord understood, without question, that any gods made by human hands were not gods at all.

5:27 Since Israel insisted on worshiping other gods, including astral deities, God would send them into exile to lands where these deities seemed to rule supreme. Israel was exiled beyond Damascus, Syria's capital, to regions of Assyria and beyond.

6:1 Zion refers to Jerusalem, the capital of Judah (the southern kingdom). Samaria was the capital of Israel (the northern kingdom). At the time of Amos's prophecy, Israel and Judah together had enjoyed about a generation of military might and economic prosperity. It became natural for officials in Jerusalem and Samaria to regard themselves as notable persons.

6:2 It was the boast of Israel's elite that no other nation was greater than they were. Their boast came back upon their own heads, for just as Calneh, Hamath, and Gath were subjected to Assyrian rule, so Israel would also be subjugated by the Assyrians. Calneh, a city in northern Syria, was the capital of a small kingdom. Hamath, an important city in central Syria, was located north of Damascus. Gath, one of the five principal Philistine cities, was southwest of Israel.

6:3 You who put far off the day of doom refers to those who insisted that Israel was too strong for destruction to fall upon the nation any time soon.

6:4–6 This passage describes the extravagant living indulged in by the rich, and paid for with the wealth stolen from the poor. Ivory had been imported into Israel from the south since at least the days of Solomon, probably from the mysterious land of Ophir by way of Sheba. Much of it was used for fashioning idols. At Samaria, archaeologists have found numerous ivory plaques and inlaid wood portraying Egyptian and Syro-Phoenician gods and goddesses. lambs … calves: Meat was a luxury for most families of the ancient Middle East, consumed only on special occasions. Meat on a daily basis was the privilege only of the rich and powerful. The upper classes of Israel were so engrossed in their own privileges and luxuries that they cared nothing for the affliction of their fellow Israelites, though it was their transgressions that had caused it.

6:7 God's judgment would be both fitting and ironic. Those who had fancied themselves the leaders of the nation would lead their nation into exile.

6:8, 9 If God takes an oath, He takes it by Himself, for there is none greater than He. In his oracles against the seven nations (chs. 1; 2), Amos had prophesied the destruction of their palaces. Now it was Israel's turn. Luxurious palace strongholds represented both the pride of Jacob in their own strength and the oppression of the powerless, whose stolen wealth had financed the construction of these palaces. I will deliver up the city: God personally would see to the destruction of Samaria and its proud inhabitants.

6:10, 11 These verses depict the aftermath of God's judgment, when relatives came around to carry out the bodies. One inside the house may refer to the last survivor, sick but not yet dead himself. In this context, such a person might have been expected to invoke the name of God for help after answering, "None." Before he could do so, however, the questioner would silence him, fearful of getting God's further attention by using His name. People who had not believed that God would come in judgment would now be afraid of what further disaster He might bring upon them.

6:12 By citing two obviously impossible actions in areas of life with which all Israelites would have been familiar, Amos hoped to get the people to see the moral impossibility of Israel's perversion of justice. As absurd and impossible in God's sight as horses running up vertical cliffs or oxen plowing the sea was Israel's—or any nation's—perversion of justice and righteousness. Gall is a bitter, poisonous herb.

6:13, 14 Israel's pride in its military strength would be its downfall. Lo Debar was a city east of the Jordan that Israel regained from Syria when Assyria crippled the strength of Damascus. Karnaim, a city east of the Jordan near the farthest limits of Israelite possession, was also regained when Assyria weakened Syria. God's punishment of Israel would fit its sin of pride. As the Israelites reckoned that they had extended their borders by their own military strength, God would allow them to be harassed and defeated from border to border. The Valley of the Arabah refers to the desert valley that was the southern limit of Israelite control. From north to south, from border to border, God would allow Israel to be defeated in battle; they would realize that their own strength was puny indeed.

7:1 locust swarms: Locusts are a kind of grasshopper. Joel 1:4—2:11 describes the devastation locusts bring to agriculture, stripping every green leaf and twig, and even killing trees. The late crop refers to the last growth of crops and pastures, evidently including hay, before the summer dry season. The king's mowings implies that the king took the first harvest of hay as a tax. Thus a swarm of locusts devouring the late crop would leave the people with nothing for themselves, inflicting a crippling economic blow.

7:2, 3 Oh, that Jacob may stand: If God carried out the threatened punishment, Jacob (the nation of Israel) might be destroyed. One function of the prophet was to serve as intercessor for the people before God. Amos prayed that the vision decreed in heaven might be halted before it was accomplished on earth. The basis of Amos's petition lay in the true assessment of Israel's position. They were not large and strong, as they thought; rather they were small and weak. In response to Amos's intercession, and out of His own love for Israel, God stayed His decree.

7:4–6 To call for conflict means to put on trial or to bring a lawsuit against Israel. To try by fire means that fire would have been both the instrument by which Israel's guilt would be judged and the instrument by which their punishment would be carried out. The great deep refers to the primordial waters that remained beneath the firmament after God fashioned it (Gen. 1:6–8). These include the oceans and seas, and the subterranean waters that are the sources of springs and wells. For the deep to be dried up by fire means that the land would be devastated beyond hope. The territory refers either to the portion of the earth God had assigned to Israel or to Israel as God's portion among the nations of the earth.

7:7–9 A plumb line is a string with a weight tied to one end, used to establish a vertical line so that a wall can be built straight. What do you see: Unlike the first two visions of natural disasters, the visions of the plumb line and the basket of summer fruit (8:1) were not self-explanatory. God asked Amos what he saw, then explained the vision's meaning. Also unlike the first two visions, God did not give Amos opportunity to intercede, nor did He relent. These judgments would be executed. The plumb line of God's revelation in the law had been set in the midst of … Israel for many generations. Now God would stretch a plumb line to demonstrate how "crooked" the people's observance of His commands had been. The high places refer to temples, groves, and other shrines dedicated mostly to pagan deities. Isaac, the father of Jacob, represent all Israel in Amos's day. Jeroboam may refer to Jeroboam I, the first king of Israel, who instituted idolatry in the northern kingdom (1 Kin. 12:25–33), or to Jeroboam II, the monarch during the time of these prophecies. If it is Jeroboam I, then the house of Jeroboam is a metaphor for the nation. If it is Jeroboam II, then the prophecy specifically concerns the royal household. In v. 10, the prophecy is taken by Amaziah to refer to the current king. Jeroboam II himself did not die by the sword, but his son Zechariah was assassinated after reigning only six months (2 Kin. 15:8–10).

7:10, 11 Amaziah, the priest in charge of the temple at Bethel, informed the king about the prophet who was making threats against the king's house. Amaziah was reacting to Amos's third vision, which ended with God's promise to bring the sword against the house of Jeroboam. Amaziah regarded Amos's words as a political threat, and reported them not as a prophecy from God, but as Amos's call to revolt.

7:12, 13 After sending his report to Jeroboam, Amaziah turned his attention to Amos himself. Since Amaziah was an official of the king, his command to Amos to return to Judah would have amounted to making Amos officially unwelcome in Israel. Amaziah was not concerned at all that Amos had proclaimed a message from God, only that the king's interests should be protected from this seditious prophet.

7:14–17 Amos's answer to Amaziah came in two parts. First he denied being a prophet by profession. Nor was I a son of a prophet indicates not only that Amos's father was not a prophet, but also that Amos had not been trained in prophecy. the LORD took me: Amos made it clear that he had neither desired nor sought his prophetic task. The second part of Amos's answer was directed against Amaziah personally. Your wife shall be a harlot: The only way the spouse of an important official like Amaziah would be reduced to prostitution would be if all her family and all her resources were taken away and she were left to fend entirely for herself. The rest of Amos's oracle predicted that such a situation would happen to Amaziah's family. Your land shall be divided indicated that it would be assigned or sold to new owners. As a high official of the king, Amaziah certainly possessed large land holdings; he would retain none. Defiled land refers to the land of pagans.

8:1–3 summer fruit: The fruits that came at the end of the harvest in late summer included grapes, pomegranates, and figs. The end has come: Amos could not have discerned the meaning of this vision until God's pronouncement. Israel's wickedness was about to result in a harvest of judgment. Most good harvests are times of rejoicing. But in this one, the songs of the temple—the songs of thanksgiving—would be turned to wailing because the harvest would be death.

8:4 Fail means essentially "to have no means of survival."

8:5 The New Moon, the first day of the month on the Hebrew calendar, was a day of special sacrifices, a feast day, and a Sabbath day (Num. 28:11–15; 1 Sam. 20:5). Rather than observing the New Moon and the weekly Sabbath with worship, thanksgiving, and rest, these people were impatient to resume their cheating and oppression of the poor. In biblical times, the ephah was the most common measure of dry volume. To make the ephah small, therefore, was to cheat the customer of value received for price paid. The shekel was a unit of money. To make the shekel large was to cheat the customer by taking too large a price (weight) of silver for value received.

8:6 Israel's system of indentured service for members of the covenant community was to be humane and limited in time (Ex. 21:2, 3; Lev. 25:39–55). The rich and powerful of Amos's day were making slaves of Israel's poor, the people they had dispossessed of their lands. the bad wheat: The chaff and other refuse of the threshing floor, perhaps even moldy or mildewed wheat, were mixed in with the good wheat to stretch it further and make a greater profit.

8:7 The form of the Hebrew oath marks its seriousness: God will not forget. Their works refers to the economic injustices Amos spoke against in vv. 4–6, as well as other sins, including unfaithfulness to God.

8:8 The River and the River of Egypt refer to the Nile River. Heave and subside: The Nile rises and falls several feet in its annual flood. Amos may have intended to portray a severe earthquake in which the land's rise and fall would be as dramatic as the rise and fall of the Nile. Though the Nile's flood usually was quite gentle in Egypt, an earthquake that reminded one of it would be violent indeed.

8:9, 10 God's judgment would be a great reversal—of light to darkness, and joy to mourning. That day probably refers to the "day of the Lord" (5:18). Sackcloth, a coarse cloth of goat or camel hair, was uncomfortable to wear. Thus it was worn next to the skin as a sign of mourning or great distress. Shaving the head to create temporary baldness was another mourning sign.

8:11 In 4:6, Amos reminds Israel that God had sent famine upon them, yet they had not returned to Him. Now the famine would be, not of food, but of hearing the words of the LORD.

8:12, 13 From sea to sea means from the Dead Sea to the Mediterranean. to and fro: Those in Israel searching for the word of God would have to circle all of Israel's territory, but in vain. The fair virgins and strong young men refers to those who are most vigorous and apt to survive.

8:14 Dan in the far north and Beersheba in the far south were the limits of significant Israelite settlement. In Amos's day, Beersheba was in the kingdom of Judah. Israel could swear oaths by the Lord, claiming they loyally worshiped Him from the extreme north to the extreme south of His land, but that would not relieve the famine of God's word.

9:1 The people would have expected a vision of God by the altar to mean that He intended good for them, blessing them with His presence. Instead God would start at the altar, commanding that the destruction of the sinful nation begin there. them all … the last of them: The reference here is to faithless Israel.

9:2 hell … heaven: In this imagery, Israel's fugitives from God's judgment could escape neither up nor down; God would find them no matter where in the universe they fled.

9:3 If the universe could not hide the fugitives, neither could the earth. The top of Carmel represented the highest point on the earth. Whether as high as that, or as low as the bottom of the sea, the earth would provide no escape.

9:4–6 Even captivity in enemy lands would not provide a refuge from God's further judgment upon Israel. I will set My eyes on them usually is a formula that expresses God's blessing on Israel; here it alludes to the fulfillment of the curses for breaking the Mosaic covenant.

9:7 Ethiopia refers to the region near the southern horizon of Israel's geographical knowledge, south of Egypt. God's rhetorical question told Israel that they were not the only recipients of God's attention and care. God loves all peoples, even the Philistines and Syrians. Caphtor refers to Crete, a large island in the Mediterranean Sea.

9:8 The sinful kingdom is Israel. I will not utterly destroy: This was a glimmer of hope in a long passage of judgment and doom. God's judgment would be thorough, but a remnant would survive.

9:9, 10 Sifting grain in a sieve was the final operation in cleaning grain before gathering it into storage. In winnowing, all the chaff was blown away; only pebbles and small clumps of mud remained with the grain. The sieve was constructed with holes that were sized so the grain fell through when it was shaken, but pebbles and other debris were retained in the sieve. Thus the smallest grain refers to the smallest pebble; it would not fall to the ground with the clean grain.

9:11, 12 The tabernacle of David: Amos pictures the royal house of David metaphorically as a "booth" fallen in disrepair. Judah was a fallen, ruined shelter, incapable of protecting its people from any significant storm. As in the days of old reflects the nostalgia of Israel's people for the glory days of the kingdoms of David and Solomon, when they lived in strength, prosperity, and security. Gentiles refers to the peoples around Israel and Judah. Called by My name is a designation of sovereignty and ownership. Says the LORD who does this thing: God would take this task upon Himself.

9:13 Israelite farmers plowed at the beginning of the rainy season, from mid-October. They harvested the grain crop—first barley, then wheat—from late March to early June. For the plowman to overtake the reaper would mean such an abundant harvest that it would last all summer and would not be gathered until the plowing had started again. Grapes were harvested from midsummer to early fall. The grain crop was sown after the plowing in late fall. For the treader of grapes to overtake him who sows seed would mean the grape harvest would be so abundant that it would be extended for several weeks. The harvest of grapes would be so great that it would seem as though the mountains and hills themselves were flowing with rivers of sweet wine.

9:14 The promised restoration will be a total reversal of the punishment that God was bringing upon Israel.

9:15 As Israel planted vineyards, fields, and gardens, so God would plant the people in their land, never again to be pulled up in exile. Says the LORD your God are the final words of Amos's prophecy. God would do what He threatened through Amos—if Israel did not return to Him. God would also do what He promised through Amos in the last few verses of this book. God does not abandon His promises or His covenant, nor does He leave His people without hope. God's punishment is certain, but His restoration is just as certain. That word of hope for God's people of old is valid also for God's people of today.

The Book of Obadiah

THE BOOK OF OBADIAH IS ONE OF ONLY TWO MINOR prophets that is addressed entirely to a nation other than Israel or Judah. It deals with the ancient feud between Israel and the nation of Edom, between the descendants of Jacob and those of his brother Esau. Through the prophet Obadiah, the Lord expressed His indignation at the nation of Edom. When they should have been helping their relatives, they were gloating over the Israelites' problems and raiding their homes. A day was coming—the day of the Lord—when all these wrongs would be righted. The Lord would bring justice to the world.

In 586 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar's army crushed Judah and destroyed Jerusalem and Solomon's temple, ending Judah's existence as an independent nation. Edom, as a closely related nation, should have helped Judah's refugees. But instead of offering sympathy and help, Edom handed Judeans over to the conquering Babylonians. The Edomites even murdered some of the refugees. Such treachery to a related nation could not be overlooked. God gave Obadiah a stern message for Edom, a warning of God's judgment on them for their callous treatment of the fleeing Judeans.

The Edomites' pride and presumed self-sufficiency became their downfall. Their fortress capital of Sela, which they considered impregnable, became their tomb. Their Arab neighbors turned on them, taking over their land and their livelihood. The Edomites were pushed into what had been southern Judah. In the second century B.C., the resurgent Jewish kingdom under the Maccabees conquered the Edomites and forcibly converted them to Judaism. At that time they were called Idumeans.

While Obadiah's short prophetic oracle was addressed to Edom, it is doubtful that Edomite leaders ever heard or read it. One purpose of the oracle was to comfort and encourage the surviving Judeans with the message that God had not abandoned them. Judah would be restored to its own land after the judgment of the Exile had been accomplished, and their enemies would be punished.

In the grand scheme of the biblical message of God's redemption of fallen humanity, the Book of Obadiah may seem to be of little importance.

But its portion of that message is tremendously vital. God is sovereign over all nations, regardless of whether they acknowledge His sovereignty. God desires that we show mercy and favor to our neighbors in their time of distress. Treachery against a relative is never justified and will be judged by the God of justice.

The name Obadiah means “Servant of the Lord.” It is not known whether this was the prophet’s personal name or whether he used it as a title, preferring to remain anonymous. Nothing is known about Obadiah’s personal life or standing in Judean society. Some scholars date the book very early, in the mid-ninth century B.C., following raids by the Philistines and Arabian tribes during the period of King Jehoram of Judah (2 Chr. 21:16, 17). This would make Obadiah the earliest of the prophetic books. However, most scholars date the book immediately following the Babylonian destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

Commentary

1 Vision, a word common in the prophets (Is. 1:1; Nah. 1:1) indicates that the prophet "saw" the revelation. Obadiah means "The Servant of the Lord." Thus says the Lord GOD: This phrasing is a strong affirmation that the prophetic oracle did not originate in the prophet's own thinking; God was and is the Initiator. A national oracle is directed against Edom, a country east of the Dead Sea and south of Moab. The nations is the standard biblical term for the larger national entities of western Asia and northeast Africa. See Jer. 49:7–22 for a passage with many similarities to the Book of Obadiah. Ezekiel also contains prophecies against Edom that are similar to the message of Obadiah (Ezek. 25:12–14; 35:1–15).

2 I will make you small: God would bring about a reversal of Edom's inflated self-importance.

(Heb. zadon) (v. 3; Prov. 11:2; 13:10; Jer. 49:16) Strong’s #2087: The Hebrew noun is related to a verb that means “to boil up.” In the OT, the noun has the meaning of “acting proudly or presumptuously” (Deut. 18:22; 1 Sam. 17:28). The defining characteristic of the nation of Edom was pride (Obad. 3; Jer. 49:16). Interestingly, Jeremiah uses the word pride symbolically as a synonym for Babylon (Jer. 50:31, 32). Pride incites insolence and rebellion toward God, and it brings shame (Prov. 11:2) and destruction (Ezek. 7:10–12). The “pride of your heart” about which Jeremiah speaks is “presumptuous godlessness,” the arrogance of those who think that they can thrive without their Creator (Prov. 11:2; 13:10; Jer. 49:16).

3 the clefts of the rock: This may be a reference to the fabled Petra (Sela), which later became the capital of the later Nabatean kingdom (beginning in 312 B.C.). During the time of Obadiah, Petra was a stronghold of the Edomites. Petra was approached only through a mile-long cleft in the rock. This passage is so narrow in spots that one can reach out and touch both rock walls simultaneously. The magnificent ruins that one sees at Petra today in the country of Jordan are from a period later than ancient Edom. Undoubtedly, the Edomites had similar magnificent structures in the rocky face of this site during their own time. habitation is high: Some of the mountain peaks of Edom reach over six thousand feet; Jerusalem is about 2,300 feet above sea level. Who will bring me down: Edom’s presumed physical safety led the Edomites to become haughty; this would be their downfall.

4 as high as the eagle … among the stars: Edom’s physical location became a metaphor for the proud and haughty spirit that the nation had displayed at the time of Judah’s distress. Trusting in its high places and mountainous strongholds, Edom assumed that no one could bring it to account for its actions.

5, 6 If thieves had come: The implication is that Edom would be stripped of everything. The nation would have been better off if thieves and robbers had come. searched out: Rather than being robbed randomly, the nation would be systematically pillaged (Jer. 49:7–10).

7 In your confederacy referred to the nations who were allied with Edom in a covenant relationship, at peace and eating bread with them.

8 Edom had a reputation for having many wise men among its citizens (Jer. 49:7).

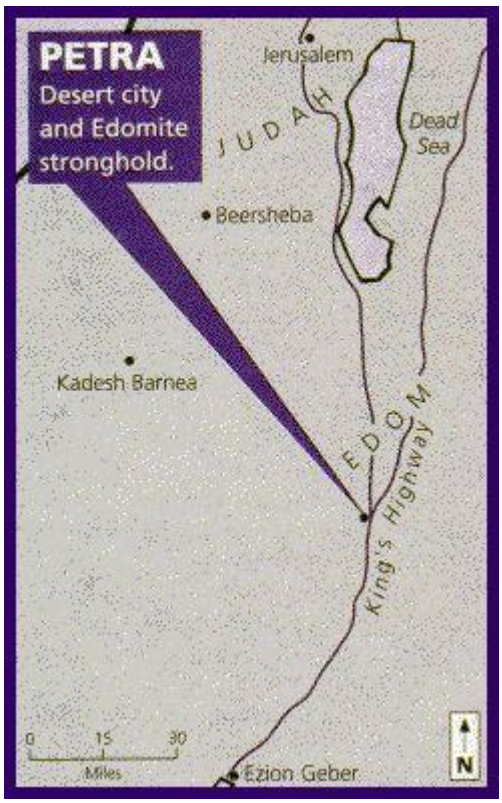
9 The name Teman comes from a son of Eliphaz, who was the firstborn son of Esau (Gen. 36:9–11). The word is often used as a synonym for Edom (Jer. 49:7; Amos 1:12), and is thought to have been one of its principal cities. One of Job's friends, also named Eliphaz, came from Teman (Job 2:11).

10 your brother Jacob: Esau and Jacob were brothers, the sons of Isaac and Rebekah (Gen. 25:24–26). Edom was descended from Esau; Judah was descended from Jacob.

11 In the day refers to the time of Judah's distress. strangers … foreigners: These words, used to describe Judah's principal enemies, contrast with the words of v. 10, "your brother." It was one thing for the Babylonians to attack Judah; for a nation like Edom to join the Babylonians against their own brothers was unthinkable.

12 Judah's defeat and destruction should have brought sorrow to its neighbors. Instead, Judah's brother nation had laughed aloud. More than that, Edom had helped to complete Judah's destruction, taking spoil, capturing those who were trying to escape the Babylonian onslaught, and turning them over to Nebuchadnezzar's soldiers. Nor should you have spoken proudly: A literal translation would be, "You should not have made big your mouth."

13 The day of their calamity, repeated three times in this verse, refers to the day of God's judgment upon Judah, carried out by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar.



Petra, the capital of Edom, was located in a mountain stronghold some 5,000 feet above sea level. This virtually impregnable fortress produced an arrogant sense of security in the Edomites.

14 stood at the crossroads: The phrasing suggests deliberate actions on Edom's part. day of distress: This phrase, repeated from v. 13. delivered up those … who remained: The Edomites had captured those who were attempting to escape the Babylonian army and then had turned them over to their pursuers.

15 The day of the LORD is a technical term used by the prophets to indicate the day of God's judgment (Amos 5:18–20). Here the term likely refers to the time when God would judge all the nations, including Edom, that had participated in Judah's destruction. As you have done: The nature of God's judgment always reflects the nature of the sin being judged.

16 as you drank: The reference here is to the "cup of God's wrath" that was passed from Samaria to Judah, and finally to the nations—including Edom (Jer. 25:27, 32, 33). The Lord still viewed Jerusalem as His holy mountain because He intended to reestablish His presence there (Zech. 1:16).

17 Mount Zion and "My holy mountain" (in v. 16) refer to the same place: Jerusalem. Though Edom had defiled Zion by drinking on it, there would be a time when again it would be the site of God's deliverance. Holiness once again would characterize the mountain and the house of Jacob would be restored to its rightful place.

18 The references to the house of Jacob and the house of Joseph signify a unified Israel. God intends to rejoin the kingdoms of Israel and Judah as one people again. For the LORD has spoken: These words add a dramatic certainty to the announcement of judgment (Jer. 49:13).

19 The South refers to the Negev, the dry region around Beersheba, in the territory of Simeon and southern Judah. It could support some farming and shepherding. More importantly for this prophecy, the Negev bordered on Edom to the east. According to this verse, southern Judah was going to possess the land of the Edomites. The Lowland, or Shephelah, is the lower hills in Judah between the central hill country to the east and the coastal plain to the west. Judah and Philistia fought fiercely over this region in the early part of Israel's history. But Judah would eventually prevail over the lands contested with Philistia (Zeph. 2:4–7). Ephraim, Samaria, and Gilead were parts of Israel during the period of the judges and most of the monarchy. Ephraim and Samaria were the heartland of the northern kingdom of Israel during the time of the divided monarchy. But at the time of Obadiah's prophecy, all three regions had passed under foreign domination and had experienced a significant influx of foreign population. In the day of the Lord of which Obadiah prophesied, these regions again would come into the possession of the Israelites. The land of Israel would be restored to its rightful inhabitants.

20 Zarephath was a Phoenician city 14 miles north of Tyre (1 Kin. 17:8–24). Sepharad was a city to which some Judeans were exiled. The restoration of Judah from exile, which these verses predict, was a sign to Judah and all nations that the God of Israel was not just a local God. The Babylonian god Marduk had not defeated the Lord. The fact that He could allow His people to be carried into captivity in a foreign land and then bring them back to their own land was proof of His power and sovereignty over all the earth.

21 Saviors means “deliverers” or “those who will bring about salvation” (Neh. 9:27). The Judeans who had been taken into captivity would come back as deliverers, and they would reign over the people of Edom. the kingdom shall be the LORD’s: These were Obadiah’s last words against all human arrogance, pride, and rebellion. Edom had thought itself indestructible; but the Lord humbled that nation and restored the fallen Judah. Many people are tempted to consider themselves beyond the reach of God. But God will bring them low, just as He will lift those who humble themselves before Him. And one great day, He will establish His just rule over all.

The Book of Jonah

THE BOOK OF JONAH HAS BEEN DESCRIBED AS a parable, an allegory, and a satire. The famous story of the "great fish" (often erroneously thought of as a whale) has led many to dismiss the book as merely a biblical "fish story."

It is a mistake (based in part on the difficulty some readers have in coming to terms with the miraculous character of the story line) to assume that the events and actions of the book are not historical in nature. While the story line is unusual, it is presented as normal history. Further, Jesus used the story of Jonah as an analogy of His own impending death and resurrection (Matt. 12:39–41). Jesus' analogy depends on the recognition of two historical realities: (1) the historical experience of Jonah in the belly of the great fish, and (2) the historical experience of the repentance of the people of Nineveh based on the preaching of Jonah (Luke 11:29–32). Indeed, the phrase "the sign of the prophet Jonah" must have been a recurring phrase in the teaching of Christ, for it is found on more than one occasion in Matthew's account of Christ's ministry (Matt. 16:4). Thus any view of the Book of Jonah that does not assume it describes historical events is obliged to explain away the clear words of Jesus to the contrary.

By the time of the ministry of Jonah, Assyria was preoccupied with the mountain tribes of Urartu, and did not continue its westward campaigns until Tiglath-Pileser III came to power in 745 B.C. Israel rejoiced at this preoccupation of Assyria, and they aggressively pursued a policy of defense by strengthening their fortified cities, building up the army, and developing international relations.

The Book of Jonah challenges God's people not to exalt themselves over others. The Lord, the great King, is free to bless, to be gracious, and to be patient with all the nations of the earth. More than that, He may show compassion even on the wicked. Indeed, His mercy extends even to animals (4:11).

Jonah's view of God was too restrictive. He believed that God was the Creator of everything, but that He was compassionate only toward the elect of Israel. Jonah believed that since God had chosen Israel from among the wicked nations, He had to show mercy to Israel, even if the people were rebellious. Jonah had failed to appreciate that the Lord may be equally forbearing with other nations as He was with Israel.

The Book of Jonah affirms God's freedom, sovereignty, and power. God is sovereign because He is the Creator of everything (1:9). His power extends over all creation (the storm, the fish, the vine, the worm). God is free, and He can never be bound by human misconceptions.

The self-righteous make the grave mistake of rejoicing only in their own deliverance (2:9) and in God's answers to prayer (4:6). They miss out by narrowing God's grace and mercy to themselves. Like Jonah, they cannot share in God's delight in saving the sailors and the city of Nineveh, including infants and even animals (4:11). They confess that God is Creator and King of the whole cosmos, but restrict His involvement to judgment, justice, and retribution. In this manner they do not see His acts of compassion, righteousness, and forbearance. The Lord's final proclamation to Jonah (4:10, 11) sums up the prophetic message of the book: God is free to bestow His mercy on anyone and anywhere He wills. His concern and mercy extend to all creation.

Jonah's story contains a strong warning to all godly people. The elect may miss the blessing of seeing God's grace extended outside their own sphere because of their imposition of limits on God. While Jonah was praying anxiously for his personal deliverance, the sailors had already been experiencing the love of God for three days. Likewise, the people of Nineveh who repented of their sin rejoiced that the impending judgment had not come. Jonah, however, was miserable. As we laugh at him, we may need to wince at ourselves. Jonah's silly sin is finally no laughing matter. We are condemned along with him if we share in his provincial folly.

As already noted, the literary form of the Book of Jonah differs from that of other prophetic books. It has no prophecies. Instead, the book is largely narrative. Chapter 2 is a song of deliverance, a lovely, vibrant lyric prayer like many in the Book of Psalms.

It is best to understand the book as a prophetic parable. The events in the book are historical, but its place among the prophets leads us to interpret it as a prophetic writing. As a prophetic book, it is unique in that the message of the book centers on the negative interaction between the Lord and His prophet. As a parable, the book draws attention to the grace of God and to the folly of Jonah. The prophet's folly encourages the godly reader to avoid Jonah's negative example and to be a messenger of Godmercy and judgment to the nations.

The book does not specifically state who wrote it. But the tradition that it was written by Jonah as his own report of his foolish behavior and his final statement of coming to terms with the divine will is a likely possibility.

The prophet Jonah lived in the eighth century B.C., but we know little about him apart from this book. He is mentioned in only one other passage in the Old Testament apart from the book that bears his name. Second Kings 14:25 announces the fulfillment of a prophecy of the living God that came through "Jonah the son of Amittai, the prophet who was from Gath Hepher." This passage locates Jonah's ministry in the northern kingdom of Israel during the reign of King Jeroboam II (792–753 B.C.). The text suggests that through Jonah's ministry the Lord encouraged Israel and gave the nation a period of prosperity under Jeroboam. Yet we also know that during this period of political, geographical, and economic expansion, Israel forgot its past troubles, did not return to the Lord, and did not worry about Assyria's growing power. Clearly, the historical passage presents Jonah in a positive manner. The Book of Jonah, however, presents the prophet in a negative light as it highlights his disobedience to the Lord, leading the reader to reject Jonah's attitudes and actions.

The prophet Jonah was from Gath Hepher, a town in the territory of Zebulun (Josh. 19:10, 13; 2 Kin. 14:25), several miles northeast of Nazareth. Nothing is known about his father Amittai. The name Jonah means "Dove." We associate the dove with peace and purity; however, this positive meaning is not the only possible association. A "dove" could also be a symbol of silliness (Hos. 7:11), a description that sadly applies to this tragicomical prophet.

IN PLACE

The City of Nineveh

Nineveh was not only the capital of the Assyrian Empire but also a symbol of power and might. The city was detested by all peoples because of its heartless conquests. Founded by Nimrod, along with Rehoboth Ir, Calah, and Resen (Gen. 10:11, 12), the city was a massive urban quadrangle 60 miles across. Nineveh rivaled Babylon for beauty and splendor with its royal palaces, temples, broad streets, public gardens, and impressive library containing more than 26,000 clay tablets—one of the largest in the ancient world. It was destroyed in 612 B.C. by a siege of Babylonians, Scythians, and Medes, who penetrated its defenses when sudden floods eroded the walls (compare Nah. 2:6–8).

1:1—2:10 The Book of Jonah contains two main sections (chs. 1 and 2, and 3 and 4). The first major section of the book (chs. 1 and 2) describes how Jonah, a true prophet of the Lord, attempted to flee from the commission that God had given him to bring the divine message to Nineveh. This section is composed of eight small units: (1) Jonah receives a commission to go to Nineveh (1:1, 2); (2) Jonah flees on a ship to Tarshish (v. 3); (3) Jonah and the sailors are caught in a storm (vv. 4–8); (4) Jonah proclaims his identity and his faith in the Lord (v. 9); (5) Jonah is cast into the sea to save the sailors's lives (vv. 10–16); (6) Jonah is swallowed by a great fish (1:17—2:1); (7)

Jonah's psalm of deliverance recounts his gratitude to the Lord for His amazing act of deliverance from the sea (2:2–9); and, (8) Jonah is delivered from the great fish (v. 10).

1:1 the word of the LORD came: This phrase affirms the divine source of the message to Jonah (1 Kin. 17:8; Jer. 1:4; Hos. 1:1; Joel 1:1; Mic. 1:1; Zeph. 1:1; Hag. 1:3). The name Jonah means "dove."

1:2 Nineveh, located on the Tigris River (Gen. 10:11, 12), was the capital of ancient Assyria (2 Kin. 19:36) for about a century (Zeph. 2:13–15; see also the Book of Nahum). Nineveh was over five hundred miles from Gath Hepher, Jonah's home near Nazareth in Israel. Their wickedness refers to Nineveh's pride, greed, brutality, and adultery (3:8; Nah. 2:11, 12; 3:1–4). has come up before Me: This figurative language pictures evil swelling up to confront the Lord (Gen. 18:21; compare Lam. 1:22).

1:3 flee to Tarshish: The location of this port city is uncertain, but it could be Tartessus on the southeast coast of Spain. The city represents the most distant place known to the Israelites. Joppa, a non-Israelite port town, was west of Jerusalem and about 50 miles southwest of Jonah's hometown of Gath Hepher. Note how sharply Jonah's faith contrasted sharply with the mariners' misdirected but sincere faith. Unlike Jonah, they had had little if any experience of the true God; nevertheless, they displayed more apparent spiritual sensitivity. They also showed more compassion toward Jonah than Jonah seemed to feel for the people of Nineveh.

1:4–16 Jonah's experience in the ship may be God's first effort to bring him around to the divine point of view. God used Jonah to make the pagan sailors aware of Himself.

1:4, 5 But the LORD sent out a great wind: Throughout the Book of Jonah, the Lord shows Himself sovereign over every aspect of creation. In this case, the storm at sea was so ferocious that even the experienced mariners were afraid. The Phoenicians were the primary mariners of the ancient Middle East, so this was probably a Phoenician ship. Jonah was so sure he had averted God's will that he was fast asleep in the ship's hold.

1:6 your God: The ship's captain, a pagan, urged Jonah to pray to whatever god he might believe in. Of course, Jonah's "god" was the true God, who had caused the storm in the first place (v. 4).

1:7 cast lots: The sailors turned to practices common among them in an attempt to find the will of the gods. the lot fell on Jonah: Jonah was singled out as the guilty party (Josh. 7:12–18; 1 Sam. 14:40–42).

1:8 The sailors fired a series of questions at Jonah, seeking to discern the reason for the storm. In regard to Jonah's occupation, the sailors may have wanted to know the prophet's reason for being on board the ship.

Jonah: A Reluctant Missionary

Sometimes the prophets of the Lord tried to challenge His wisdom in calling them for divine service (Moses in Ex. 4; Jeremiah in Jer. 1). However, Jonah is the only case in the record of Scripture where a true prophet of the Lord (2 Kin. 14:25) tried hard to thwart the will of God by fleeing from the task that God had given him (1:3). In contrast to Elijah's obedience to the Lord (1 Kin. 17:8–10), Jonah tried to go as far as he could in the opposite direction from where God had commanded him. Jonah hoped that Nineveh would get just what it deserved. He was afraid that if he announced judgment the people of Nineveh might respond in a manner that would prompt God to change His mind (4:2). So, in an attempt to restrain God from being merciful to his national enemies, Jonah ran away.

There is something humorous in this account. How could a prophet of God hide from the Creator of the universe? (The location of Tarshish may have been the southeast coast of Spain. In any case it represents the farthest place known to the people of ancient Israel. It is similar to going "to the ends of the earth.") Yet there is also something frightening here: Were a prophet of the Lord directly to disobey the Sovereign God, he might place not only himself, but others connected with him, in dire jeopardy. Sadly, Jonah was not on a mission of mercy, even if he had achieved his goal. He was, in a way, an antimissionary, namely, one who resisted God's call to go to the nations. The repetition of the words "from the presence of the Lord" emphasizes Jonah's attempt to remove himself as far as possible from his service to the Lord.

When we remember that the people of Israel were not a maritime people, but rather had a great fear of the sea (Ps. 93), we are all the more amazed at Jonah's risky action. Jonah's natural aversion to the ocean was overcome by his greater distaste for the thought that Nineveh might escape God's threatened doom. Thankfully, God did not allow Jonah to succeed, so there is something reassuring here as well. God accomplished His work despite the resistance of His reluctant worker.

1:9 I am a Hebrew: With these words, Jonah identified himself with the people of the Lord's covenant (Gen. 14:13). I fear the LORD: Fear here indicates an ongoing activity of awe before the Lord, of piety in His presence, of obedience to His word, and of saving faith (Gen. 22:12; Ex. 20:20; Prov. 1:7). Yet Jonah's actions contradicted his words. Many people say they have faith in God but live as if they did not. God of heaven: The Lord is not merely a local deity worshiped by an obscure people; He is the Supreme Ruler over all people and all creation (2 Chr. 36:23; Ezra 1:2; Neh. 1:4, 5; compare also Gen. 24:3, 7; Deut. 10:14). Jonah may have intended to distinguish God from Baal, the Canaanite "god of the sky" whom so many Israelites worshiped (1 Kin. 18:20–29; 2 Kin. 21:3; 2 Chr. 17:3). who made the sea and the dry land: In the midst of the storm, Jonah proclaimed that his God is Lord over the sea (Ex. 15:1–8; Pss. 89:9; 93:3, 4; 95:5).

1:10, 11 exceedingly afraid: This is the same term for fear that Jonah used in his statement of piety (v. 9). But here the word means "to be in terror"; it refers to overwhelming dread (v. 16). God, the Creator of the universe, was after Jonah. And because God was after Jonah, He was after the sailors as well. They had every right to be afraid (Gen. 12:18; Judg. 15:11).

1:12, 13 throw me into the sea: Jonah knew that the only way for the storm to abate was for the sailors to toss him overboard. Jonah was ready to die (4:3, 8; 1 Kin. 19:4; Job 3:1; 7:16). His words, because of me, are an admission of guilt and show a sense of resignation.

1:14 they cried out to the LORD: Ironically, the pagan sailors prayed to the Lord on behalf of the Lord's rebellious prophet. Jonah needed God's grace as much as Nineveh did. as it pleased You: The narrator skillfully uses the sailors' words to express one of the book's themes: the Lord is free to act as He wills.

1:15 The sailors did as Jonah had said (v. 12), but only when they saw there was no other option (vv. 13, 14). With a sense of permission from the God of heaven and Creator of the seas (v. 9), the sailors threw Jonah into the sea.

1:16 Then the men feared the LORD exceedingly: In the Hebrew text, the words of this part of v. 16 are precisely the same as in v. 10, with one exception: the object of the sailors' fear. In v. 10 these words described the sailors' overwhelming dread of the raging sea; in this verse they feared the Lord, indicating piety and believing faith. The sailors had the same reverential awe of God that Jonah had claimed to have (v. 9). In spite of Jonah’s failure, the sailors became converts (Ps. 103:11, 13, 17). offered a sacrifice: The text does not say where this happened, but it may have been after the ship reached land. The important point is that their sacrifice was made to the God of Israel.

(Heb. manah) (1:17; 4:6–8; Ps. 147:4) Strong’s #4487: This Hebrew verb basically means “to count” or “to assign.” The psalmist uses this verb to praise God for knowing the number of stars and naming each one (Ps. 147:4). In the Book of Jonah, it signifies “to appoint” or “to ordain,” amd describes God’s intervention in natural events to bring about His will. By preparing the fish, the plant, and the worm, God made sure that Jonah’s mission was not left to chance. God exercised sovereignty not only over the plant and animal world, but also over Jonah’s life, using animals as small as a worm to teach Jonah about His great mercy (Jon. 4:6–8).

1:17—2:10 This section relates God’s second attempt to convert Jonah to the divine purpose. The prophet cannot escape God even in death. The prophet becomes an agent of evangelism to non-Hebrews despite his unwillingness to do so.

1:17 the LORD had prepared a great fish: God sent the fish—not a whale, as is commonly thought—to rescue Jonah from drowning, not to punish him (ch. 2). Three days and three nights may refer to one full day and portions of two more (3:3; Gen. 30:36; Ex. 3:18; 1 Sam. 30:12; Esth. 4:16; Luke 2:46; 24:21). Jesus said that His death and resurrection were foreshadowed by Jonah’s experience (Matt. 12:39, 40; 16:4; Luke 11:29; 1 Cor. 15:4).

2:1 Jonah prayed to the LORD his God: In his psalm (vv. 2–9), Jonah acknowledges God's help and thanks him for it. The phrase the Lord his God shows that Jonah, even though he was disobedient, was a true believer in God.

2:2–9 Jonah's psalm of deliverance has four parts: (1) an introductory statement of the Lord's deliverance (v. 2); (2) an account of his trouble (vv. 3–6); (3) a report of his cry for help (v. 7); and, (4) a vow of praise (vv. 8, 9).

2:2 I cried … I cried: These terms come from two different verbs. The first is a more general term meaning "to call aloud," with a wide range of usage in the Bible. The second is a term that means a "cry for help," particularly as a scream to God (Pss. 5:2; 18:6, 41; 22:24; 28:1; 30:2; 31:22; 88:13; 119:146). Jonah was terrified. Out of the belly of Sheol: When the sailors threw Jonah into the sea, he seemed to be "as good as dead." Thus for Jonah, the sea became like Sheol, the place of death (Gen. 37:35; Pss. 16:10; 88:4, 5; Prov. 9:18; Is. 28:15).

2:3 Jonah's use of the pronouns You and Your in this verse are not accusations, but acknowledgments of the Lord's sovereign control of his life (Ps. 88:6–18).

2:4 I will look again toward Your holy temple: The man who had run from God's presence (1:3) was alone, yet he clung to the hope that God would not abandon him. The temple, the sanctuary in Jerusalem (v. 7; Deut. 12:5–7; Pss. 48; 79:1; 132; Heb. 9:24), was the symbol of God's presence.

2:5 The deep: This is the same term used in Gen. 1:2 to describe the mysterious and terrifying sea. In the Bible, the sea is described as a part of God's creation (Gen. 1:10) that brings Him joy (Ps. 104:24–26), but it also appears as a symbol for hostile forces (Ps. 74:12–15; Is. 27:1) that the Lord nevertheless holds in His firm control (Ps. 93).

2:6 Jonah pictures himself so deep in the sea that it is as if he had found the moorings of the mountains. pit: This term, along with Sheol (v. 2), is used to describe the realm of the dead (Job 33:24; Pss. 30:9; 49:9).

2:7 I remembered: Jonah reaffirms his faith in the Lord and renews his commitment to Him (Pss. 22:27; 63:6; 106:7).

2:8 worthless idols: This phrase (also found in Ps. 31:6) condemns every alternative to God. Idols here means "vapor," that which passes away quickly. These vaporous gods (Ps. 86:8–10; Jer. 10:15; 51:18) were without value. Mercy (loyal love), the term that so often describes God's faithfulness to His covenant and to His people (Pss. 13:5; 59:10, 17; 89:1–3) is used as a name for the Lord (4:2).

2:9 I will sacrifice to You with the voice of thanksgiving: This vow of praise is common in the Psalms (Pss. 13:6; 142:7). I will pay what I have vowed: Jonah declares that he will keep his promise, a pledge both to sacrifice and to acknowledge God's help (Job 22:27; Pss. 22:25; 50:14; 66:13; 116:14, 17; see also Rom. 6:13, 19; 12:1; 1 Pet. 2:5). Salvation: It is the Lord who delivers His people. God acts on behalf of His creation and the redeemed community to insure a relationship with them (Ex. 15:2, 17, 18; Pss. 88:1; 89:26; 140:7; Is. 12:2). Chapters 1 and 2 both end with vows of sacrifice and thanksgiving.

2:10 the LORD spoke to the fish: The focus in the story of Jonah is on the Lord's sovereign control over creation to bring about His purpose. It has been surmised that Jonah's experience in the belly of the fish would have had some effect on his skin. Perhaps the acids of the fish's digestive system would have produced blotches. If so, it may have been his physical features that enhanced his subsequent message to the people of Nineveh.

The mound of Kuyunjik is only one of the many mounds that mark the site of ancient Nineveh, an “exceedingly great city” where Jonah preached a message of judgment and repentance (Jon. 3:1–4).

3:1—4:11 The second part of the Book of Jonah (chs. 3—4) presents the prophet grudgingly obeying his divine commission to bring the Lord's message to Nineveh. This section has eight small units: (1) Jonah receives a new commission to go to Nineveh (3:1, 2); (2) Jonah obeys and makes proclamation in Nineveh (vv. 3, 4); (3) Jonah's proclamation leads to the deliverance of Nineveh (vv. 5–10); (4) Jonah laments God's mercy to Nineveh and wishes for death (4:1–4); (5) Jonah sulks under a shelter (vv. 5, 6); (6) Jonah languishes and wishes again for death (vv. 7, 8); (7) Jonah debates with the Lord (v. 9); and, (8) Jonah hears the proclamation of the Lord (vv. 10, 11).

3:1, 2 Jonah's new commission was essentially the same as the one he had received in 1:1, 2.

3:3 In contrast to 1:3, Jonah obeyed the command of the Lord the second time and made the journey to Nineveh. a three-day journey in extent: The city wall of Nineveh had a circumference of about eight miles, indicating that Nineveh was an exceedingly large city for the times. But the reference to "three days" likely refers to the larger administrative district of Nineveh, made up of several cities, with a circumference of about 55 miles.

3:4 Jonah proclaimed that there were only forty days before the destruction of Nineveh. Both the announcement and the specified delay show God's mercy. It was this mercy that bothered Jonah (4:1–3). Evidently the prophet wanted Nineveh to fall, rather than repent and escape God's judgment. The Assyrians had long been a menace to Israel. Perhaps Jonah recognized that if the Assyrians repented, they were likely to restore their country to dominance, probably to the detriment of Israel. So it is possible that the prophet fled in order to avoid strengthening the hand of a potential enemy. Moreover, how might his people have treated him were they to learn that he had succeeded in bringing their worst enemies to repentance?

3:5 believed God: The term used for God here is the general term for deity. In contrast, the sailors in ch. 1 proclaimed faith in the Lord, using the personal, covenant name for God (1:16). The fact that the writer does not use the personal name for God here may suggest that the Ninevites had a short-lived or imperfect understanding of God's message. History bears this out: We have no historical record of a lasting period of belief in Nineveh. Eventually the city was destroyed, in 612 B.C.

3:5–9 fast … sackcloth … ashes: These are expressions of mourning and lamentation (2 Kin. 19:1; 2 Chr. 20:3; Is. 58:5–9; Jer. 36:6–9; Joel 1:13, 14; 2:12–18). The nationwide fast decreed by the king of Nineveh was a remarkable display of humility before the Lord. The decree shows that the king well understood the nature of genuine repentance. Not only was every man, woman, and child, and even their animals, forbidden to eat, or even to drink water (v. 7), but they were exhorted to turn from evil and violence (3:8). Thus the fast was not merely an external show of piety, but an opportunity for a heartfelt change of attitude and behavior.

3:6, 7 proclaimed and published: The king's edict reached all of Nineveh.

3:8, 9 God will turn and relent: The reversal of the threat to destroy Nineveh depended solely on the grace and mercy of the Lord. At times, the announced judgment of God is not His real intent (4:2; Jer. 18:7, 8; Amos 7:3). Such announcements usually include offers of mercy and forgiveness (Zeph. 2:1–3).

3:10 God relented: The Ninevites' repentance moved the Lord to extend grace and mercy to them.

4:1 Jonah … became angry: In contrast to God, Jonah had no compassion on the people of Nineveh. displeased: Jonah's irritation belied the good news that the city would be spared. Jonah himself had just been spared God's fair judgment, but he was unable to appreciate the parallel.

“slow to anger”

(Heb. arek; aph) (4:2; Num. 14:18; Prov. 14:29) Strong’s #750; 639: The idiom for anger in the Old Testament translated literally is “the nose burns” or “the nose becomes hot” (Gen. 30:2; Ex. 4:14). The Hebrew idiom for “patient,” or “slow to anger” is literally “long of nose” (Pss. 86:15; 103:8). The nose is symbolic of anger because an angry person breathes heavily or noisily. The Hebrew idiom for slow to anger is frequently applied to God to describe His great mercy and kindness (Ps. 145:8; Joel 2:13).

4:2 I know: Jonah himself had experienced the excellencies of God. Gracious and merciful may be rephrased as “marvelously gracious.” Lovingkindness can also mean “loyal love.” This is the same word that Jonah had used in his praise of God in 2:8. One who relents from doing harm: In this recital of God’s blessed character, Jonah built on the revelation of the Lord to Moses (Ex. 34:6, 7).

4:3, 4 please take my life: Contrast Jonah and Elijah: Jonah’s death wish came from disgust at the people’s repentance; Elijah’s came from a yearning for the people’s repentance (1 Kin. 19:4). Only a few days before Jonah had screamed for God to keep him alive.

4:5 till he might see what would become of the city: In his continuing stubbornness and lack of compassion, Jonah held out hope that God would judge Nineveh. This was God’s chief complaint against him (Ps. 58).

4:6 the LORD God prepared: The same verb was used in 1:17 to describe the Lord’s preparation of the great fish. The term is also used in v. 7 regarding the worm and in v. 8 regarding the east wind. The repeated use of prepared is a subtle reference to the sovereignty of God. a plant: The nature of this plant is unknown. Some have speculated that it was a castor-oil tree or a bottle-gourd vine. It may have been a species that grew especially fast. to deliver him: The Lord had rescued Jonah from drowning (1:17); now He wished to relieve His prophet from the misery of the sun. The reach of God’s mercy to the undeserving is a theme that continued to elude Jonah even as he experienced it.

Why Nineveh Repented

Many factors may have accounted for the Ninevites sudden change of attitude. Yet we know that God has a way of drawing people, and of arranging events so people are more likely to turn toward Him. Financial pressures, political turmoil, natural disasters, sickness—such things often cause people to take stock of their relationship with the Almighty. The case of Nineveh shows that this is true for nations as well as individuals.

Nineveh's repentance is instructive for Christians today. Like Jonah, we have been commissioned to take the gospel of repentance and salvation to the nations of the world (Mark 16:15, 16). In doing so, it might be well to consider a strategy of targeted evangelism. Efforts would seem likely to be more effective in areas where recent political upheaval and natural disasters have created instability and more openness to a message of grace. If God has been preparing hearts beforehand, it is reasonable to expect greater success under such circumstances.

4:7 God prepared a worm: The Book of Jonah depicts the Lord as both sovereign and free to act in creation. God placed the worm in the plant to serve as His agent in Jonah's life.

4:8 vehement east wind: The scorching sirocco wind that blows in from the desert draws moisture from plants, causing them to wither (Is. 40:7, 8).

4:9 The word translated is it right comes from the verb meaning "to be good," "to do well," or "to be pleasing." Here, as in Gen. 4:4, the expression has to do with ethical behavior (Lev. 5:4; Ps. 36:3; Is. 1:17; Jer. 4:22; 13:23). Jonah's anger (v. 1) did not arise from a desire for justice but from his own selfishness. He continued to justify his rebellious attitude. And again, God was merciful.

4:10 Pity describes an expression of deeply felt compassion (Ps. 72:13; Ezek. 20:17; Joel 2:13, 14). However, Jonah pitied himself more than the plant.

4:11 pity: The same word used to describe Jonah's feeling toward the plant in v. 10 is used of God's feeling toward the people of Nineveh. People are of more value than animals, and animals of more value than plants, but the Lord has a concern that extends to all of His creation. The Lord's pity comes from His character (v. 2; compare Joel 2:13, 14). livestock: If Jonah could take pity on a plant, which is even less important than an animal, it only made sense that God would take pity on human beings, who are made in God's image. The Book of Jonah ends on this note of contrast between Jonah's ungracious heart and the kind heart of the Lord.

The Book of Micah

——————— OLD TESTAMENT PROPHETS ARE OFTEN THOUGHT of as providing not much more than “doom and gloom” predictions, but the Book of Micah presents an impassioned and artistic interplay between oracles of impending judgment and promises of future blessing on Israel and Judah. The peoples of both nations had broken covenant with their Lord. Through His messenger Micah, the Lord confronted His people, but He also promised to bring future blessing through the One who would be coming. This One would be the true Shepherd of God’s flock.

The career of Micah extended over the last third of the eighth century B.C., during the reigns of Jotham (752–736 B.C.), Ahaz (736–720 B.C.), and Hezekiah (729–699 B.C.). The Book of Micah centers on the threat of the Assyrian invasions that occurred throughout this period, beginning around 730 B.C. against Israel and culminating in 701 B.C. against Judah. Much of Micah’s preaching warned Judah about an impending national disaster. Yet the religious leaders of Jerusalem were falsely confident that no evil would come to them because of the inviolable presence of the holy temple in their midst. Micah sternly confronted their arrogance and their mistaken notions of God: not even the temple on Mount Zion would be spared the onslaught of God’s wrath (3:12).

The lengthy delay in Micah’s prophecies against Jerusalem may be attributed to several causes. First, God may have decided to spare the city, even though it was He who had condemned it (Jer. 26:16–19; compare God’s judgment on Nineveh in the Book of Jonah). The significant delay in the judgment against Jerusalem may be attributed to the mercy of the Lord, much as the delay of the judgment of God against Nineveh is attributed to His mercy by the prophet Jonah (Jon. 4:1–3). Second, though the judgment of Jerusalem was postponed, it was finally realized in the destruction of the city by the Babylonians in 586 B.C.

The interplay of texts of wrath and mercy in the Book of Micah mirrors the character of God, for even in His wrath He remembers mercy. In the darkest days of impending judgment on the nations of Israel and Judah, there was always the possibility of a remnant being spared. Though the Lord was determined to maintain His holiness, He was equally intent on fulfilling His loving promises to Abraham (Gen. 12; 15; 22). The Lord would balance His judgment with mercy. Consequently Micah also balances his oracles of judgment with oracles of promise.

In doing so, Micah points back to the covenant and also forward to the coming One. The book begins with the language of a court. Micah calls the peoples of earth to come to hear the Lord's case against Israel, for the nation had broken the covenant (3:1; 6:1–3). The language recalls the language of the covenant or contract the Lord established with His people. The Lord was judging His people according to the terms of the covenant. But in the middle of the oracles of judgment, Micah reveals the Lord's wonderful promises of a glorious future. There would be a time when the coming King would gather His people together (2:12, 13), when He would establish peace (4:3), and when He would bring justice to the earth (4:2, 3). Remarkably, Micah prophesies that this coming Messiah would be born in Bethlehem (5:2). The fulfillment of this prophecy in Jesus' birth in Bethlehem gives us confidence that the prophecies of Jesus' glorious future will also be fulfilled (Matt. 2:1).

Little is known about the prophet Micah beyond his name, his place of origin, and the personal tone of his book. Micah was born in the rural village of Moresheth Gath in the lowlands of Judah, near the region of Philistia, setting him apart from his more illustrious contemporary Isaiah, who was from Jerusalem.

The Book of Micah has numerous points of similarity with the much longer Book of Isaiah. In fact, virtually the same passage is found in both books (compare 4:1–3 with Is. 2:2–4). Some attribute this unusual phenomenon to one prophet borrowing from the other, but it is difficult to argue for the priority of either Micah or Isaiah from the texts. More likely both prophets made use of the same source, perhaps a psalm of confidence.

It is often asserted that the Book of Micah was written by his disciples and followers many years after his ministry. However, the tone of Micah's prophecies against Jerusalem indicates that they had not yet come to pass. It appears that Micah prophesied that the Assyrians would destroy Jerusalem in the same way they had already destroyed the city of Samaria (compare 1:6 with 3:12). While the Assyrians under Sennacherib did lay siege against Jerusalem in the campaign of 701 B.C., they did not finally destroy the city. Jerusalem was not destroyed until over a century later by the Babylonians (586 B.C.). It is almost inconceivable that disciples of Micah would collect, record, and promote his prophecies long after the fact if those prophecies had not come to pass as anticipated. It is far more likely that the prophecies of Micah were compiled by the prophet as an anthology of his own lengthy preaching career.

Commentary

1:1 Micah means “Who Is Like the Lord?” The question presents a major biblical theme, the idea that God is incomparable (7:18; Deut. 4:32–40; Ps. 113:4–6). Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah: The reigns of these kings were particularly troubled by the Assyrian military threat. In three successive campaigns (734, 733, 732 B.C.), the Assyrian army under Tiglath-Pileser III brought much of Phoenicia, Philistia, Israel, Syria, and large tracts of Judah under its control. Micah’s ministry centered on the Assyrian threat to Samaria, the capital of Israel that was destroyed in 722 B.C., and Jerusalem, the capital of Judah.

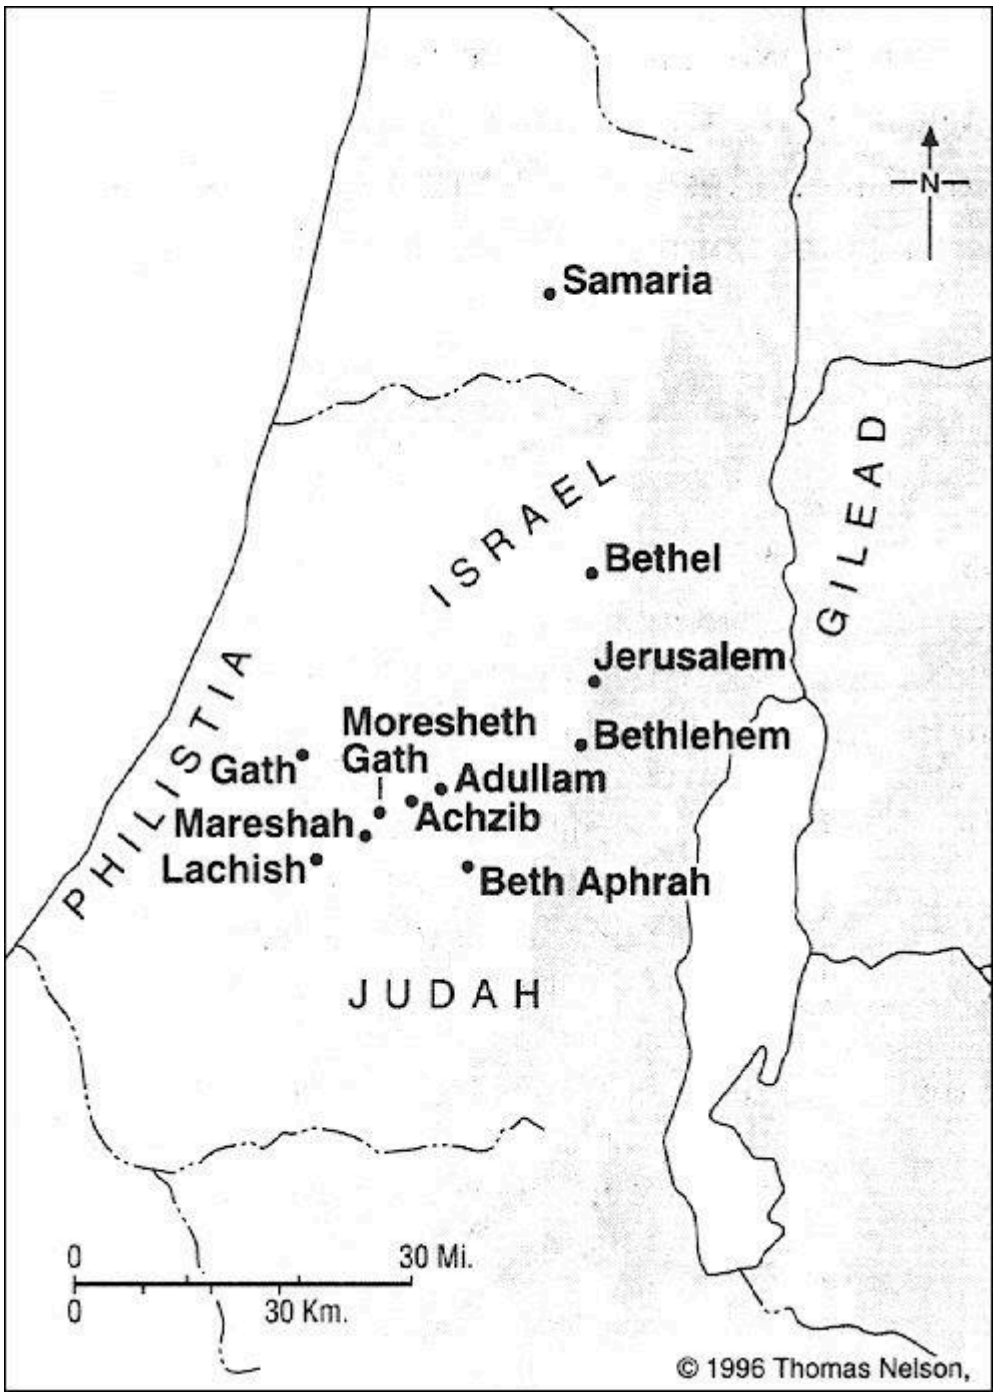
1:2—2:13 The first cycle of oracles are in five parts: (1) the Lord is witness and comes in judgment against His people Israel (1:2–7); (2) the prophet mourns the message of God’s judgment (vv. 8, 9); (3) the cities of Judah are to prepare for a shameful disaster (vv. 10–16); (4) a woe oracle against the peoples because of their greed and violence (2:1–5), and, (5) the false prophets are judged for their lying words (vv. 6–11). Though the first oracles of judgment are largely judgmental in nature (1:2—2:11), they end in a splendid promise of restoration of the Lord’s remnant (2:12, 13).

1:2 all you peoples: All the earth was to know that God was witnessing against His people. This announcement of judgment is based on the people’s breach of covenant. The faithlessness of the people provoked the Lord GOD to enter into a judicial dispute with them.

Geographical Puns in Micah

With skillfully written wordplays on the names of Judah's cities, Micah prophesied of the coming destruction of Judah (1:3–16). He turned around the meaning of a number of town names as a way of describing the world being turned upside down. Shaphir, meaning "Beautiful," would be shamed (1:11); and Jerusalem, a name suggesting "Peace," would be disrupted (1:12). Lachish, a name sounding like the Hebrew word for swift steeds, would flee on its horses. All this agitation was caused by God's judgment on Judah for worshiping other gods on the high places. In fact, idolatry was so rampant that Micah describes Jerusalem and Samaria, the capital cities of Judah and Israel, as high places themselves (1:5).



1:3, 4 the LORD is coming: This is the language of epiphany, the dramatic coming of God to earth, here in a solemn procession of judgment. In other texts the language of epiphany is used to describe God's dramatic acts of deliverance (Ps. 18:7–19). The expression high places is ironic. Jerusalem and Samaria were the "high places," or elevated capitals, of Judah and Israel; but "high places" were also sites of idolatrous worship.

1:5 Jacob is used to refer to the northern kingdom Israel, whose transgression was centered in its capital Samaria. Judah's sins were centered in its capital Jerusalem. In this verse, the intent of the term high places (v. 3) is made plain. Jerusalem, which was once "beautiful in elevation" (Ps. 48:2), was nothing more than another platform of pagan worship, like the "high places" of the Canaanites.

1:6 a heap of ruins: God's judicial decision was to destroy Samaria so thoroughly that it would be a place fit only for vineyards among the rubble.

1:7 Idolatry is often described in the Hebrew Bible as spiritual adultery (Jer. 3:1; Hos. 4:15). Israel is pictured as a wife who is unfaithful to her husband (Jer. 2:20). This is not just a metaphor, however; the worship system of Canaan was sexual in nature. The word idols here has the sense of "disgusting images," probably referring to the explicit sexual nature of these idols. But there is comic justice at the end of the verse. The pagan symbols of Israel's worship would be reused by the nation's conquerors (Assyria) in their own debased temples.

1:8, 9 I will wail … I will go stripped: Micah's immediate response to God's message was an overwhelming sense of dread (7:1). naked: Micah's words describe mourning rites in which outer garments were laid aside in deep humility. The mourning person thought no longer about himself but only about the calamity that had overcome his senses.

1:10 in Gath: The reference here is to the lament of David in his mourning over the death of Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. 1:20). Just as it was unseemly then to have the bad news of God's people profaned in a foreign city, so it would be in the present circumstance. The Hebrew word translated tell in this verse sounds like the Hebrew place name Gath. Beth Aprah means "House of Dust"; appropriately, the inhabitants would roll themselves in the dust, an act of extreme mourning.

1:11 The name Shaphir means "Beautiful." Ironically, its inhabitants would be shamed by their nakedness. Zaanan: This name speaks of "sheep" who "go out on their own." However, this would no longer be the case for the citizens of Zaanan, who would no longer go out because of their fear.

1:12 Maroth means "Bitterness." The name Jerusalem suggests "Peace." Thus the inhabitants of the town of bitterness would be sickened with dread, and the inhabitants of town of peace would experience God's judgment.

1:13 Lachish: This famous guard city to Jerusalem was judged as being among the first places in Judah to adopt the sins of Baal worship. daughter of Zion: Jerusalem is the daughter of the Lord.

1:14 Moresheth Gath, which means "The Possession of Gath," was Micah's hometown (v. 1). The presents were farewell gifts; the city was soon to be lost.

1:15 The words heir and the glory of Israel might lead one to assume that this is a messianic verse, a promise of hope in the midst of despair. Yet the context is judgment (v. 16). The point here may be that the situation would be so bad that the proper heir and glory of the nation—the members of the royal family—would have to flee in terror to remote hiding places. Mareshah is an alternative spelling for Moresheth Gath of v. 14.

1:16 In a culture in which a man's hair was highly valued, to cut off one's hair was the ultimate sign of mourning.

The essential message of the Bible remains the same no matter whether we are reading about the patriarch Abraham or the apostle Paul, Deborah the judge or Mary the mother of Jesus. Like a spotlight, the Scripture reveals the stain of sin in our lives. But it does not leave us exposed; it offers a way to become clean. Even Micah, a prophet who spent most of his time warning the Israelites of coming judgment, spoke of God's salvation.

God's Standard	The People's Sin	God's Salvation
"He has shown you, O man, what is good; and what does the LORD require of you but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with your God?" (6:8)	Idolatry (1:7; 5:13, 14); evil plans (2:1); coveting, violence, oppression (2:2); hating good and loving evil (3:2); greedy priests and prophets (3:11); deceit (6:11,12); unfaithfulness (7:2); family friction (7:6)	"Who is a God like You, pardoning iniquity and passing over the transgression of the remnant of His heritage? He does not retain His anger forever, because He delights in mercy. He will again have compassion on us, and will subdue our iniquities. You will cast all our sins into the depths of the sea." (7:18, 19)
"Therefore you shall be perfect, just as your Father in heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5:48)	"For all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God." (Rom. 3:23)	"In [Christ] we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of His grace." (Eph. 1:7)

2:1–5 This is a woe oracle in which the Lord judges His people for greed and violence. Social injustice is presented as the reason for divine judgment upon the nation. But Micah's concern goes beyond economics to theological considerations, for the distribution of the land, by covenant provision, was irrevocable (Lev. 25:23–34). Mortaged land was to return eventually to the original landowner either through redemption, or free in the Year of Jubilee. However, the rich corrupted God's Law to acquire for themselves large landholdings, creating an unequal distribution of wealth, whereas God's provision was for a balance of possessions. He wanted all to have sufficient resources for a quality of life that would sustain dignity and self-respect.

2:1, 2 devise iniquity … covet: The ethical teaching of the prophets regularly included oracles of judgment against greed, theft, and oppression, actions of the powerful in attacking the weak. To covet is not just to have a passing thought; it is a determination to seize what is not one's own.

2:3 devising disaster: While the wicked devised iniquity (v. 1), God made some plans of His own. your necks: The idea here is that the disaster of God would be inescapable.

2:4 A proverb was a taunt song. To a turncoat: God would take the property rights from those who had seized them illegally and give them to people who were even more reprobate than they were.

2:5, 6 no one to determine boundaries: Land-grabbers would no longer have a legitimate claim among God's people. God would dispossess them even as they had dispossessed others. Do not prattle: These words may have been a strong warning to Micah not to be like the lying prophets who counseled that all was well in the land.

2:7–9 The words of God were different from the words of the lying prophets (v. 6). The words of God bring good to the righteous even as they bring judgment against the wicked.

2:10, 11 The lying prophets (v. 6) spoke about rest when utter destruction was decreed by the Lord. They spoke about wine and drink at a time of disaster. It is also possible that the words of v. 11 speak about false prophets who were willing to prophesy "good words" in exchange for wine and beer.

2:12, 13 assemble … gather … put them together: The verbs are emphatic, demonstrating the certainty of God's determination to bring to pass His good pleasure on His people (Deut. 30:1–6). breaks open …

break out: These phrases speak about regathering Israel from wherever the people may have been scattered.

3:1—5:15 In this cycle of oracles, there are pronouncements of judgment (3:1–12), and promises of blessing (4:1—5:15), with the promises far more extensive than in the first set (2:12, 13).

3:1–12 These oracles of judgment have three parts: (1) the rulers of God's people should know justice (vv. 1–4); (2) the false prophets wrongly speak about peace (vv. 4–7); and (3) Zion shall be plowed like a field (vv. 8–12).

3:1 Is it not for you to know justice: The idea here is that one might not expect justice from pagan leaders in a faraway place. But the rulers of the people of God were expected to emphasize justice. Justice is one of the key concepts of the Law (Deut. 10:18; 32:4; 33:21). Perverting justice was strongly prohibited by God (Deut. 16:19; 24:17). Yet this was precisely what the leaders of Judah were doing. They had used their authority to destroy justice rather than to establish it among the people.

3:2, 3 Micah used an image of barbaric cannibalism to describe the horrendous actions of the leaders against the people. It was as if the leaders were eating the flesh from the people's bones.

3:4 He will not hear them: The wickedness of the people was so great that last-minute repentance would not suffice (Jer. 11:11).

3:5–7 This oracle of judgment was presented against the false prophets who proclaimed peace, causing the people to be unprepared for trouble. These prophets would have neither true prophetic insight (vision), nor help from the forbidden arts of divination. Finally they would have nothing to say, for there would be no answer from God.

3:8–10 full of power: Unlike the silenced false prophets (vv. 5–7), Micah was divinely empowered (1 Cor. 2:13; 2 Pet. 1:21). Justice and might may be rephrased as "powerful justice," a contrast to the ineffective leaders of Israel (v. 1).

3:11 bribe … pay … money: The wicked leaders and prophets of Israel "worked" only when they could gain something from it. Needless to say, if justice had to be paid for, it would not be justice. Is not the LORD among us: Many people of Jerusalem believed that they would not be affected by God's judgment because God Himself dwelled in the holy temple in Jerusalem. They reasoned that despite their evils, as long as God was in His temple, they were safe—even from divine judgment. What the people refused to believe was that God might leave His temple because of the sinfulness of the people. The Book of Ezekiel describes a vision of the glory of God leaving the temple as a prelude to His judgment on the city (Ezek. 10).

3:12 This verse was quoted by Jeremiah (Jer. 26:18). While the false prophets and the wicked rulers believed that they were untouchable and that Mount Zion was inviolable, the prophet Micah announced that Zion (Jerusalem) would be plowed like a field, indicating complete devastation of the city.

4:1—5:15 Here we find four major sections of God's promises of future blessing on His faithful people and the destruction of their enemies: (1) the future exaltation of Zion (4:1–5); (2) the future restoration of the people (4:6—5:1); (3) the future coming of the Messiah in Bethlehem (5:2–5a); and, (4) the future judgment on the enemies of the people of God (vv. 5b–15).

4:1–5 This passage is one of the great prophecies of the Bible. It is remarkable not only in what it says, but in the fact that the same text is found as well in Is. 2:2–4. Various theories have been advanced as to who borrowed from whom, Isaiah or Micah. It is possible, however, that both Isaiah and Micah took these words, under the leading of the Holy Spirit from a third source, perhaps from a spiritual song.

4:1 The phrase in the latter days is an indication of a prophecy of end times. The mountain of the LORD's house describes the temple in Jerusalem. The text projects a future change in the topography of Jerusalem. Originally the temple site in Jerusalem was located on one of several hills that make up the general area. In the latter days the temple site will be elevated above the hills (Zech. 8:1–3; 14:1–11).

4:2 Many nations: When non-Israelites came to true faith, it would be in the God of Jacob. He will teach: As God spoke to Moses on Mount Sinai (Ex. 19; 20) so He will speak to all from Jerusalem. we shall walk: Unlike the people of Micah's generation who were strangers to justice (3:1), the peoples of the coming kingdom will be obedient to God.

4:3 judge … rebuke: These are actions of the Savior King who will rule with a rod of iron (Pss. 2; 110). swords … spears: All weapons of destruction will be recycled into tools of production. There will finally be an end to conflict. War will not even be a subject for study anymore.

4:4, 5 The vine and fig tree are symbols of peace and prosperity (Zech. 3:10). no one shall make them afraid: Fear, like war (v. 3), will become a thing of the past.

4:6, 7 In that day: This wording connects this section with the end times referred to in v. 1. lame … outcast: Those who were abused by the wicked leaders of Israel would be exalted by the Lord. afflicted: Those whom God had driven from the land would be the people of His new kingdom. This is a remarkable surprise—a surprise of grace. remnant: The majority of people in Israel did not live their lives in faith and dedication to the Lord. However, true faith never really died out in Israel, even in the worst of times.

4:8 Tower of the flock is a description of Jerusalem in the ideal sense. A tower was a vantagepoint for protecting a flock of sheep. Likewise, Jerusalem is the stronghold or defense point for the flock of God (2:12).

4:9–12 Micah addressed the city of Zion (Jerusalem) as though it were a woman in labor. The troubles of the present moment would lead finally to the birth of a deliverer. To Babylon you shall go refers to the Exile.

4:13 Arise and thresh: The nations would be gathered by the Lord like sheaves on the threshing floor (v. 12). This is a way of speaking of the final victory over all of Israel's foes.

5:1 gather yourself in troops: The reference here seems to be to the assaults of the enemies of Judah on the people of God before their final defeat. strike … on the cheek: One day the enemies of the Savior would strike Him (Mark 15:19); but on a still-future day, He will strike all of His enemies (Rev. 19).

IN CONTEXT

The King's Hometown

Almost two years after Jesus was born, a dusty and majestic caravan made its way into Jerusalem. The members of the caravan stopped for directions. Their simple question shook the city: "Where is He who has been born King of the Jews?" (Matt. 2:2). A strange star had announced the birth. King Herod knew the wise men had no interest in him. But he also realized that if their quest was legitimate, his own reign was about to be eclipsed by the arrival of another King, the long-awaited Messiah. He was not going to give up his throne without a fight.

Among the prophecies of the OT, God had clearly revealed the birthplace of the Messiah. The Jewish religious leaders that Herod gathered to answer the strangers' question pointed immediately to Mic. 5:2 for the location of the Savior's hometown, Bethlehem. They knew. Micah had left written directions hundreds of years before. But they were not ready to believe. Curiously, no one volunteered to go with the wise men to look for the Messiah.

God offered a clear invitation to His people through Micah: Watch Bethlehem! The people remembered the invitation, but failed to take it seriously. Given an opportunity to discover truth, the people of Jerusalem let someone else take the risk of disappointment. Herod even killed the children of Bethlehem in a vain attempt to eliminate his rival.

Other prophecies of Micah surround the passage pinpointing Bethlehem as the Messiah's hometown. Some of the prophecies were fulfilled by the return of the Israelites from Babylon (4:10). Others have yet to be fulfilled (4:1–5). But Bethlehem remains a symbol of God's working out of His purposes in history.

Micah's invitation still rings true. But our response must be different from that of the people of Jerusalem. The people in Jesus' time were waiting for something to happen, but they missed it because of unbelief. We can look back at Jesus' death and miss it just as seriously through our own unbelief. A crucial chapter in God's story of salvation begins in Bethlehem. God gave more than a hint of that salvation in Micah.

The city of Bethlehem in southern Judah, the place where the prophet Micah predicted the Messiah would be born (Mic. 5:2).

5:2 Bethlehem means “House of Bread” (Ruth 1:1). Ephrathah locates the village in a known region in Judah (Gen. 35:16). This prophecy figures significantly in the NT story of the visit of the wise men to the Christ child (Matt. 2:1–12). Governments would be overturned to make it necessary for Mary while still pregnant to make the journey from Nazareth to Bethlehem. The specific detail of this oracle about Bethlehem is similar to the Lord’s prophetic announcements of the name of Josiah to Jeroboam I (1 Kin. 13:2), and of Cyrus to Isaiah (Is. 44:28—45:7). goings forth: The birth of this Savior King would be unlike the birth of any other, because He was preexistent. He is from everlasting.

5:3, 4 The future of Israel is pictured here in terms of the birth, life, and ministry of the Savior King. The two advents of the Savior are seen as one event by Micah. Whereas v. 2 speaks about the birth of the Savior in His First Coming, vv. 3–5 speak about the time of the rule of Jesus in the Second Coming. She who is in labor probably refers to Zion (4:10). The metaphor refers to the deliverance in the end time of those who will be able to delight in the coming of God’s kingdom (4:9—5:1). the remnant: This minority will never be forgotten by the Lord.

5:5, 6 And this One shall be peace: Isaiah 9:6 refers to this One as the Prince of Peace. When the Assyrian comes: The principal threat against Israel and Judah at the time of Micah was Assyria. Micah used the nation as a symbol of all of Israel’s enemies and of God’s final victory over each of them. Seven shepherds and eight princely men: These are in contrast to the wicked rulers that Micah condemned in ch. 3.

5:7–9 This section concerns God's blessing on the remnant of Jacob. The wickedness of the people would bring about God's judgment, but He would not cast them off completely. In the midst of many peoples describes the spread of the Jewish people throughout the earth in the time of God's judgment. Twin images are used to describe the effect of the Jewish people on the nations in which they lived. Verse 7 describes the Jewish people as dew and showers—that is, blessings from God on their neighbors. Verse 8 describes the Jewish people as a lion—that is, a powerful force that eventually would triumph.

5:10, 11 I will cut off: It was God's intention to destroy the evils in Israel's society. Horses and chariots represent the pride of Israel's military power. Israel's tendency was to rely on its own military power rather than on the Lord.

5:12–14 Both Israel and Judah were beset through their history with apostate rites, defiant participation in the dark arts of their neighbors, and in crude idolatry of all sorts. God's promise here is to eradicate from their midst any vestige of these wicked practices and rebellions.

5:12 Sorcery and soothsaying had been strongly condemned by God (Deut. 18:10).

5:13–15 The second commandment had forbidden the use of carved images in Israel (Ex. 20:4). Sacred pillars refers to phallic poles used in Canaanite sexual worship rites. Wooden images refers to the Asherah groves. Both of these items had been condemned strongly in the Law (Deut. 16:21, 22).

6:1, 2 God (the Judge) calls for the people (the defendants) to plead their case. The mountains and hills were among the witnesses to the covenant that God made with His people (Deut. 4:26; 32:1; Is. 1:2). He will contend: If the people were silent before the mountains, the Lord Himself would speak against their sin.

(Heb. rib) (6:2; Judg. 12:2; Prov 17:14; 18:6; Jer 11:20) Strong’s #7379: This word can mean “dispute” or “quarrel” in the sense of a feud (Judg. 12:2), “controversy” or “strife” (Prov 17:14; 18:6) prompted by a rebellious spirit (Num. 20:13; Prov. 17:14; 18:6), or even a “legal case” or “lawsuit” (Job 31:13, 35; Jer. 11:20). The prophets frequently used this word as a technical, legal term in contexts pertaining to the Lord’s covenant relationship with Israel (Jer. 25:31; Hos. 4:1; 12:2). In this chapter, Micah was informing Judah that God had registered a formal, legal complaint against His people. He was ordering them to stand trial for violating covenant stipulations forbidding idolatry and requiring social justice (6:2–16).

6:3 what have I done: The Lord was entirely innocent of misbehavior against His people (Jer. 2:5).

6:4, 5 The Lord summarized His great mercies to Israel, including His saving works in bringing the people from Egypt in the Exodus and His deliverance of Israel from the evils that Balak and Balaam had planned (Num. 22—24).

6:6, 7 Come before means “to make an approach in true worship” (Ps. 15). burnt offerings … calves a year old: These were among the divinely prescribed sacrifices of true biblical worship (Lev. 1:3; 9:3). The words of v. 7 go far beyond any demand of the Law, and even go against the Law in the suggestion that God may not be satisfied except by an offering of one’s own child. Micah uses hyperbole (deliberate exaggeration) to emphasize the necessity of a right attitude in the true worship of God. be pleased: The idea of bringing pleasure to God through sacrifice is found elsewhere in the Bible. God is pleased with those who do as He commands (Gen. 4:1–8).

Marks of True Spirituality

What does it mean to know God? What are the marks of true spirituality? Micah offers a summary by giving three primary virtues that are to characterize every one of God's people: to do justice, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God (Mic. 6:8). This three-sided approach to life is balanced, unlike many of the fads and fetishes of modern spirituality. For example: • To act with justice keeps one in the real world rather than getting bogged down in theoretical abstractions that actually ignore oppression and injustice.

• To love mercy keeps one in touch with the grace of a faithful God rather than succumbing to the tyranny of results-oriented spirituality, which tends to produce legalism, weariness, and burnout.

• To walk humbly with God keeps one dependent on the Lord's resources rather than trusting in merely human solutions, which creates unrealistic pressure on individuals and institutions.

6:8 This verse speaks about the underlying attitudes that must accompany all true worship. what does the LORD require of you: The idea here is that God seeks certain characteristics of true worship from His people. do justly … love mercy … walk humbly: These phrases summarize biblical piety in true worship. The majority of the people of Israel had violated each of these standards repeatedly. The rulers did not know justice (3:1), had no interest in mercy (3:2, 3), and demonstrated no humility (3:11). with your God: It is the Lord who ultimately gives a person strength, courage, and ability to exercise the virtues of godly living.

6:9 The rod is a messianic image. It is possible that this verse is based on Ps. 2 (vv. 9, 11, 12).

6:10–15 The people of Judah were abusing others with false measures, with violence, and with lies. Such practices were far removed from the description of true worship in v. 8. This is the divine vindication of the Lord's determination to bring judgment on Jerusalem, despite the fact that His holy temple was there (3:11, 12). The worship that was being offered, though it followed the form of the Law, did not come from true biblical attitudes and practices of piety.

6:16 The spiritual history of the northern kingdom reached its lowest point under the rules of Omri and Ahab. Whereas Jeroboam I had combined the worship of God with the nature and sexual worship rites of Baal (1 Kin. 12:25–33), Ahab and his wife Jezebel (in a marriage arranged by Omri) brought about the state worship of Baal and Asherah (1 Kin. 16:21–34). For these reasons, and despite the presence of the temple, God was about to bring utter shame on His people.

7:1, 2 Micah was moved by the oracles of judgment that God delivered through him (1:8). no cluster: For Micah, the harvest was over. There was nothing around him but undesirable fruit. The faithful man has perished: The norms of society had broken down; everyone was out to destroy someone else.

7:3–6 with both hands: The people were pursuing evil with gusto. The leaders of the state were leading the way in evil (3:11). The day of your watchman refers to a time when people needed to be alert for the approach of an enemy army. In this context, judgment was imminent.

7:7 Therefore I will look: These words are a pun on the words of v. 4. While there would need to be a watchman for the coming of an enemy army, Micah was going to be a watchman for the advent of the LORD.

7:8, 9 The speaker in these verses is the nation Israel after it comes to repentance. I have sinned is the confession of the people in saving faith. He pleads my case: Here the Lord is speaking on behalf of the people (compare ch. 6). As God had delivered Israel in the past because of His righteousness, so He would deliver a repentant Israel in the future.

7:10 The people of Israel knew that they would suffer indignities at the hands of their enemies in the period of divine judgment. However, God's judgment of His people was designed to bring about their repentance.

7:11–13 In the day: These words call attention to a future day, the time of the end. You here is Zion (Jerusalem). This is a prophecy of the return of the remnant (2:12, 13; 4:1–4, 6–8; 5:3, 7, 8). The River is the Euphrates. The idea of these verses is a universal regathering of God's people in His land (Deut. 30:1–6).

7:14, 15 Micah prayed that God the Shepherd would care for His flock. Micah requested that the greatest wonders of the relationship between God and His people at the time of the Exodus would be realized anew.

7:16, 17 The response of the wicked nations to the renewed mercies of God on His people would be terror. The nations would be humiliated because they had taunted Israel in the day of its trouble (vv. 8–10).

7:18, 19 Who is a God like You: These words speak about the incomparability of God. There is nothing in all of creation to compare with God (Is. 40:25). Pardoning iniquity: These words come from the revelation of God to Moses in Ex. 34:6–9.

“compassion”

(Heb. raham) (7:19; Ex. 33:19; Prov. 28:13) Strong’s #7355: The Hebrew word translated here as compassion means “to love from the womb” and is frequently translated mercy (Is. 14:1). The noun form of this verb means “womb,” and consequently this verb depicts the tender love of a mother for her own helpless child (1 Kin. 3:26). “From the womb” speaks of the depth of emotion associated with this expression of love. God loves His people with a deep compassion and love that is almost beyond description. God used a form of this Hebrew word to reveal His character and name to Moses: “And the LORD passed before him and proclaimed: ‘The LORD, the LORD God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abounding in goodness and truth’” (Ex. 34:6).

7:20 This last verse is reminiscent of God’s promise to Abraham in Gen. 12; 15; 22 and His promises to Jacob in Gen. 32. The Lord had sworn to fulfill His promises to the patriarchs. He would not—He could not—leave His promise unfulfilled (Ps. 89:33).

The Book of Nahum

THE BOOK OF NAHUM IS ONE OF TWO BOOKS OF the minor prophets that centers on Nineveh, the capital city of Assyria. In the Book of Jonah, written in the eighth century B.C., we behold a man of God who was called to preach to Nineveh. He was one of the few prophets who despaired when his listeners heeded his warning. The people of Nineveh repented, and God demonstrated His great compassion by not judging the city. In the Book of Nahum, written in the seventh century B.C., we find another prophet called by God to preach to Nineveh. Evil again reigned in the capital. Tragically, the people of Nineveh this time ignored Nahum's warning.

The people of the northern kingdom of Israel had been sinning grievously against God and ignoring the warnings of punishment given through God's prophets. Finally God used the nation of Assyria, with its capital city in Nineveh, to destroy the nation and carry the people into captivity. A century after the fall of Samaria in 722 B.C., the Book of Nahum was written to express a major truth of the prophets. Even when God uses a nation for His own purposes of judgment, this does not excuse that nation from its own guilt before the Lord. It was Nineveh's turn to feel the wrath of God. The last great emperor of Assyria was Ashurbanipal (669–627 B.C.). After his death, the nation did not last much longer, for the Lord was against it (2:13; 3:3).

How does the mood of the Book of Nahum accord with the sentiment of the Sermon on the Mount? Though the Lord Jesus certainly spoke about loving one's enemies (Matt. 5:43–48), He strongly warned about the inevitability of judgment (Matt. 5:21, 29, 30; 7:13, 23). He said that "all who take the sword will perish by the sword" (Matt. 26:52). If ever the words of Jesus concerning the sure destruction of those who live by violence had a direct application, it was to Nineveh.

In the conquest of the ancient world, the Assyrians were merciless and cruel. Their atrocities included everything from burning children to death to chopping off hands. In many ways, the Book of Nahum is a theology of the maxim of the sword. Nineveh had an international reputation for bloodthirsty acts of repression, destruction, and wantonness. God could not be good if He failed to call such an evil nation to account. The theology of the Book of Nahum is a theology of the goodness of God in bringing about the final destruction of those who oppose His will and abuse His people.

Nineveh was not only a city in the ancient world that received the promised judgment of God, it is also a prototype for the coming judgment of God on all workers of wickedness. Those who know that the Lord is good may rejoice in the fact that He avenges aggressive acts against His people (1:7, 8).

The seriousness of coming judgment is never a call for complacency among God's people. Implicit in any announcement of doom is a call for holy living on the part of God's people and an urgent call for them to bring the message of salvation to those who, apart from salvation, will experience the wrath of God. Judgment is God's "unusual act" (Is. 28:21), but it ultimately arises out of the goodness and justice of God.

Nahum, the author of this book, is not known apart from the three chapters of this prophecy. Even the location of the place of his birth, Elkosh (1:1), is in doubt. However, since Nahum wrote considerably after the destruction of Israel in 722 B.C., we may assume that Elkosh was in Judah.

The fall of Thebes in 663 B.C. (3:8) determines the limit for the earliest date of the book. The fall of Nineveh, which the book predicts, took place in 612 B.C., not long before the final destruction of the Assyrian Empire in 609 B.C. This means the Book of Nahum was composed sometime before 612 B.C, perhaps under the reform of Josiah in 622 B.C.

Commentary

1:1 Most of the biblical prophets directed their judgment oracles against the sinning peoples of Israel and Judah. Nahum, however, brought the word of God's judgment against Nineveh. The Hebrew term rendered burden was sometimes used by the prophets (Hab. 1:1; Mal. 1:1) to describe the "heaviness" of their message of judgment.

“jealous”

(Heb. qanno) (1:2; Josh. 24:19) Strong’s #7072: This Hebrew term is related to a root word that can mean “to be eager, zealous for” (1 Kin. 19:10, 14), or even “to be furious” (Zech. 8:2). One of God’s names is Jealous (Ex. 34:14). When the expression “the Lord your God is a jealous God” is used in the OT, it is usually associated with an injunction against idol worship (Ex. 20:5; Deut. 4:24; 5:9; 6:15). God’s jealousy for His people is a claim for exclusive allegiance rooted in His holiness (Josh. 24:19) and His role as their Creator and Redeemer (Pss. 95:6, 7; 96:2–5). We tend to associate jealousy with a self-serving emotion that usually results from feelings of inadequacy. God’s jealousy, in contrast, proceeds from His holiness. Because He alone is the Holy One (Is. 6:3; 40:25), He will tolerate no rival (Ex. 20:5).

1:2–8 In Hebrew this poem is an alphabetic acrostic, namely, a writing in which the first word of each successive line begins with the succeeding letter of the alphabet. For instance, v. 2 begins with the Hebrew letter aleph; v. 8 concludes with the Hebrew kaph. Acrostics were possibly used to facilitate memorization and recitation.

1:2 avenges … furious: The repetition of words and the use of parallel terms are typical devices in Hebrew poetry for intensifying and sharpening the poet’s message.

1:3 Slow to anger indicates the patience of the Lord (Ex. 34:6, 7). However, God’s patience is not a reason to disbelieve His final judgment (Ps. 10). whirlwind … storm … clouds: The peoples of the ancient Middle East worshiped nature gods, particularly deities associated with storms, clouds, and rainfall. In Canaan, this fixation on storms was centered in the worship of Baal and his consorts Anat and Asherah. The Scriptures testify that there are no gods but the Lord; it is He who rules and is above all creation.

1:4 sea … rivers: The Lord’s control extends to all bodies of water and to places of lush vegetation—including Bashan, Carmel, and Lebanon.

1:5, 6 quake … melt … heaves: The people of God had experienced such demonstrations of God’s presence at the foot of Mount Sinai when the Lord descended with His Law (Ex. 19). indignation … anger … fury: Grouping these three terms causes the force of the words to be felt more deeply. In other words, God's anger burned intensely against the sinful people of Nineveh.

1:7 The LORD is good: For the righteous, this is the best news of all. Because we know that the Lord is good, we can endure the tribulations of life.

1:8 flood … end … darkness: The judgment of the Lord will be inescapable. The word flood is both a poetic term for overwhelming devastation and a specific reference to the actual manner of Nineveh's fall. It is believed that the invaders of Nineveh entered the city through its flooded waterways (2:6).

1:9–13 In this section the prophet directly foretells the Assyrian defeat. He addresses them directly and shows that their resistance to the Lord is futile. In so doing, the prophet argues from the general to the specific.

1:9, 10 What do you conspire against the LORD: Who is wise enough, experienced enough, and strong enough to fight the power of God? No one, of course. At their very best, the enemies of God will be comic figures. Their best plans will be merely a tangle of thorns; their finest moves will be only the sloppy walk of drunkards.

1:11 Wicked is one of the harshest terms in biblical language, nearly a curse word. The term speaks of someone who is utterly worthless.

1:12, 13 Thus says the LORD: Here is an oracle of deliverance from God to His people. The present sense of safety and power that the enemy felt would not last; the past judgments of God on His nation would not continue. The Lord promised to break off the yoke that the enemy had placed on His people (Is. 9:4).

1:14 Here God spoke to His people's enemy—the nation of Assyria typified by its capital city Nineveh (v. 1). In destroying the nation's name, God would remove its power. Further, the Lord swore to destroy their false religious system, with its pagan temples, idols, and disgusting practices. You are vile: The only thing to be done with Nineveh was to dig a grave and bury it. This prophecy came true literally—the city was destroyed so completely that its very existence was questioned until its discovery by archaeologists in the nineteenth century (3:13–15).

1:15 Behold … The feet: The image is that of a herald of peace (Is. 52:7). O Judah: With the promise of future deliverance from oppression, the prophet called for the people to live in righteousness and expectation.

There is nothing better for the people of God in any age than to live in obedience to Him and in anticipation of His coming deliverance.

2:1 Man the fort: These were sarcastic words to the people of Nineveh and its leaders, as if they would be able to protect themselves against the wrath of the Lord.

2:2 the LORD will restore: The wrath of God against the enemies of His people means that one day the enemies will be destroyed and the people of God will be restored. Excellence means "majesty," "beauty," or "wonder" (Is. 4:2). The ruin of Israel would not last forever.

2:3–13 This passage presents a description of the siege of Nineveh. The fall of Nineveh predicted by Nahum took place in only a few years after this prophecy—in 612 B.C., followed by the final destruction of the Assyrian Empire in 609 B.C.

2:3 red … scarlet … flaming torches: These images speak of blood, violence, and warfare. Isaiah refers to the custom the Assyrians had of rolling their outer garments in blood before a battle (Is. 9:5) to strike terror in the hearts of their opponents. Here the tables would be turned. While others would have shields, chariots, and spears, the people of Nineveh would be bathed in blood—their own blood. Unlike much of ancient literature, the Bible does not glamorize war. It paints a grimly realistic picture to show that war is an outcome of humanity's rebellion against God. The Lord takes no delight in watching human armies clash. However, sometimes in judgment He removes His restraining hand, exposing people and nations to their own unbridled destruction of each other. This was the case for Nineveh.

2:4 The chariots rage: The Assyrians used chariots as formidable war machines. The proficiency of the chariot drivers underlies the imagery of this verse. But as in the case of the shields and spears of v. 3, the chariots of Nineveh would not prevail no matter how fast they drove.

2:5 stumble: The people within the city would be so stunned to be under attack that they would appear helpless in their actions. Nobles may be used with sarcasm here; these people do not seem very impressive.

2:6 gates of the rivers: The destruction of Nineveh is believed to have taken place when the besiegers entered the city through its flooded waterways. The attack came at flood time, when rivers undermined the walls and defenses of the city. Archaeologists have found evidence of flood debris that may be associated with the destruction of the city. Thus the words of Nahum were fulfilled exactly.

2:7, 8 She shall be led away: The nation that had made so much about taking captives would be made a captive by others. Halt! Halt!: No one would listen to their shouts of panic.

2:9, 10 spoil: Assyria had despoiled many nations, including Samaria and the cities of Israel. There seemed to be no end to the loot that could be found within its walls. Nonetheless, even Nineveh was exhausted of its treasures. At long last, it was empty.

2:11, 12 Nineveh was the city of lions (v. 13). Yet despite all the horrors that the lion of Nineveh had brought to other nations, it would no longer need to be feared by anyone.

2:13 Though the Babylonians conquered the city, they were only God's instruments. Nineveh's greatest foe was the LORD of hosts Himself.

3:1–19 Chapter three of Nahum is a woe oracle explaining the reasons for the siege and destruction of Nineveh.

3:1 the bloody city: Nineveh was known throughout the Middle East as a city that excelled in violence and bloodshed.

3:2, 3 Horses and chariots were instruments of war. Verse 3 describes the horrors of the nation's war machine, which resulted in countless corpses.

3:4 Harlotries refers to paganism. Any worship of gods other than the God of Scripture is an act of spiritual prostitution. Nineveh was so adept at pagan practices that the city earned the descriptive title, the mistress of sorceries. By this means the Assyrians "seduced" numerous rulers into dependence on them for military aid. In addition, Nineveh was a center for the worship of idols. The city was the site of temples to Ishtar, goddess of sexual love and war, and to Nabu, god of wisdom. Magical arts such as omens, fortune-telling, reading the entrails of animals, and the use of spells and incantations were all a part of Assyrian religion—practices strongly condemned elsewhere in Scripture (Deut. 18:9–14).

3:5 I am against you: This repetition of this phrase from 2:13 is more chilling each time it is heard. Who could survive the Lord's opposition? lift your skirts: The Lord would publicly humiliate Nineveh.

3:6, 7 The Lord described the fate of Nineveh as comparable to a person on whom unspeakable filth was cast. When Nineveh lay in ruins, no one would bemoan her. The nations would be glad that the city was gone.

Ruins of an ancient temple at Thebes, Egypt, a city referred to by the prophet Nahum as No Amon (Nah. 3:8).

3:8 No Amon … the River: The destruction of the city of Thebes near the Nile River in 663 B.C. was going to be a template for the destruction of Nineveh. No Amon is the Hebrew name for Thebes, derived from the Egyptian name meaning "City of (the god) Amon." The argument seems to suggest that before its destruction, no one would have even dreamed of the fall of Thebes. But the destruction had happened—not long before the writing of the Book of Nahum. The city of Thebes was rebuilt only to be destroyed later during the Roman period (29 B.C.). Nineveh, however, would never be rebuilt.

3:9, 10 The city of No Amon had many powerful allies, but they were not sufficient to protect her in her hour of need. Who would ally with Nineveh to fight off the Lord's attack?

3:11 drunk … hidden … seek refuge: Nineveh would be like a helpless drunk hoping for refuge but finding nowhere to turn for it.

3:12, 13 Nahum satirically describes the strongholds of Nineveh as being so easily defeated that they would be like fruit trees that drop their figs into waiting mouths.

3:14, 15 Nahum taunted Nineveh by telling the people to prepare for their siege. The actual siege of Nineveh continued over two years.

3:16, 17 Despite the great economic and military strength of Nineveh, there was nothing lasting in the city's power. When the sun rises: The people of Nineveh would be like nocturnal insects that disappear at daylight.

3:18 Your shepherds slumber: When the shepherds are not alert, the sheep cannot be saved from danger.

3:19 All who hear: Every nation and people that had suffered under the abusive power of Nineveh would shout and clap upon hearing of the city's destruction. There would be no mourning for Nineveh.

The Book of Habakkuk

———— O LORD, HOW LONG SHALL I CRY, AND YOU WILL not hear?" (1:2). Habakkuk was unique among the prophets in that he asked questions of God. Most prophets were filled with messages: "Hear the word of the Lord." Even if everyone doubted the Lord's word, the prophet would still believe. And if the prophet did have any misgivings, he kept them to himself.

But again, Habakkuk was different. To raise these questions was—for our sake—part of his message. His questions were, "Why does evil in Judah go unpunished?" "How can a just God use a wicked nation like Babylon to punish His chosen people?" Habakkuk wanted to know, just as we do, what God was doing and why. There seemed to be too much evil among the "righteous" and too much freewheeling power among the wicked.

God did not strike Habakkuk down for these questions. He answered. The Lord Himself will establish His kingdom. He will hold all people and nations accountable. The present may be filled with wickedness and chaos, but the future belongs to the righteous—the truly righteous. God will bring in His kingdom, give rest and salvation to His children, and judge His people's adversaries.

The Book of Habakkuk contains two prophetic laments (1:2–4, 12–17) in which Habakkuk questions God's righteousness. The Lord responds by explaining His plans to judge (1:5–11; 2:1–4). This is followed by five woes that taunt those who have committed evil with their certain doom (2:6–20), as if to say, "Don't worry, Habakkuk—God is righteous; He will judge." The book ends with the prophet's prayer of praise and his acknowledgment of God's sovereignty over all outcomes.

Nations are given to greed, power, idolatry, and to immorality. People treat one another in an inhumane fashion. Often it seems as if power and success come to those who break God's laws and reject His legitimate claims on creation. Yet according to Habakkuk, the Lord remains sovereign; He sits in His holy temple watching the earth. He will eventually judge each person for his or her life (2:20).

While people may be seduced into wickedness by the allure of power and success (2:6–20), a glorious future awaits those who submit to God

(2:4). Habakkuk's prophetic vision (2:2) and prayer (3:1) provide a proper perspective for viewing the injustices of this world. The Almighty is in control. He will establish His righteous kingdom in the end. In that day, all wrongs will be made right: The wicked will be judged for their sinfulness, and the righteous will be saved. Believers look forward to this day with great joy (3:18, 19).

We know little about the prophet Habakkuk. The reference to music (3:1, 19; 1 Chr. 25:1–8) may mean that he was a Levite associated with the temple singers. The designation the prophet is an official title, showing that others recognized him as a prophet of the Lord. His name Habakkuk appears twice in the book (1:1; 3:1). Some scholars have associated the name with the Hebrew word for embraced. Thus his name may mean "Embraced by God."

Habakkuk prophesied during the fall of Nineveh in 612 B.C. and the rise of Babylon as the Neo-Babylonian Empire. By 605 B.C., Assyria and Egypt had been defeated by Babylon at Carchemish. Judah's days were numbered, and Babylon's power was rapidly expanding. In addition, the death of King Josiah in 609 B.C. brought an end to an era of religious reform in Judah. It seemed that the wicked were prevailing both inside and outside Judah. Habakkuk cried out against the violence, lawlessness, and injustice he saw all around him.

1:1 A burden refers to a prophetic oracle, usually addressed to a foreign nation (Is. 13:1).

1:2–11 The prophet observed how corrupt Judean society had become and how far the people had deviated from their Lord. They oppressed each other and reflected a society in which the rich and famous had power, succeeded, and got by with breaking the law. Habakkuk wondered how long the Lord would tolerate such evil. God's response was clear. He declared that He will send the Babylonians to deal with the apostasy of His people. This section has two parts: (1) The complaint of the prophet (vv. 2–4), and (2) God's response to His prophet (vv. 5–11).

1:2–4 In these verses, the prophet accused his people with being grave sinners and asked God why He remained so patient when the righteous were suffering.

1:2 Habakkuk spoke to God using His covenant name LORD (Ex. 3:14, 15). how long: This question is phrased as a formal complaint (Ps. 13:1, 2).

1:3 iniquity … trouble: The deterioration of society had become a cause of frustration and disappointment for the godly. plundering and violence: Abuse of power, acts of injustice, and oppressive deeds were common in Judah. strife … contention: The people of Judah argued with each other and were involved in destructive litigation.

1:4 the law is powerless: The revelation of God given at Mount Sinai had little impact on the hearts of people whose lives were focused on material success. These people had little interest in living by God's definition of what is fair and humane. wicked: God's chosen people committed and tolerated heinous acts through corruption of the courts. righteous: There were always people who were faithful to the Lord, a righteous remnant. Here the godly were restricted in what they could say and do because of the evil that surrounded them. perverse judgment: The powerful people of Israel corrupted justice.

Questioning God

Some people believe that human beings should never question the ways of God. Some even feel that it borders on sin to ask God, “Why?” But the Book of Habakkuk counters that idea. It is filled with a prophet’s perplexing questions—and the Lord’s penetrating answers.

Habakkuk was not unlike many people today who are troubled by the world around them. They, too, sometimes wonder: Where is God? Why doesn’t He do something about all the pain and suffering, the injustice and oppression, the wars and diseases that destroy humanity? If He is there, why doesn’t He speak? If He is powerful, why doesn’t He act? If He is loving, why doesn’t He intervene? Habakkuk shows that questions like these are as old as the seventh century A.D.

So are the answers. While God may not explain everything to our satisfaction—nor are we capable of understanding everything He has told us—He assures us, just as He assured Habakkuk, that His ways are just and righteous, and furthermore, “the just shall live by faith” (2:4). This truth applies universally, as Paul and other writers of the NT realized (Rom. 1:17; Gal. 3:11; Heb. 10:38). In the end, the ultimate answer to our questions is to trust God.

Mosaic of a warrior with his bow and quiver for arrows. The prophet Habakkuk lamented that the Babylonian army, composed of such warriors, was on a mission of world conquest and God seemed unconcerned about the fate of His people (Hab. 1:5–11).

1:5–11 In these verses, the Lord answered Habakkuk's questions by revealing to him that judgment was imminent. But here is a surprise: the Babylonians would be God's instrument of justice.

1:5 Look among the nations: The international scene during Habakkuk's lifetime was full of turmoil, with Assyria on the decline and Babylonia on the rise. work a work: The Hebrew words suggest that something ominous and impressive was about to occur.

1:6 I am raising up: God controls the nations for His own purposes (Dan. 2:21), sometimes indirectly and at other times directly. Chaldeans is another word for Babylonians. bitter: The Babylonians were harsh and oppressive in their rule. hasty: Under Nebuchadnezzar, Babylon quickly had become the dominant power of the day.

1:7 terrible and dreadful: Far from being humane, the Babylonians prided themselves on their arrogant use of raw power. Their judgment and their dignity proceed from themselves: The Babylonian system of law and order had no regard for other legal systems.

1:8 The Babylonians' use of horses and chariots made them fearsome in the ancient world. fierce … wolves: The Babylonians were powerful and tyrannical. eagle: The Palestinian eagle is a bird of prey, a vulture. These images from the animal kingdom present a vivid picture of the ferocious nature of this world power.

1:9 Habakkuk had observed violence in Judah (v. 2), but Babylon relished violence. gather captives like sand: The Babylonians resettled numerous conquered peoples with little regard for them as individuals.

1:10, 11 scoff … scorned: The Babylonians did not respect authorities and powers other than their own. deride every stronghold: The Babylonians mocked human systems of fortification, bursting through any defense they encountered.

1:12—2:5 Habakkuk followed up his first questions (v. 2) with a question concerning God's righteous rule over the nations. Then he awaited the Lord's response. God answered his question in an unsuspecting manner.

This section has two parts: (1) the complaint of the prophet (1:12—2:1), and (2) the Lord's response to His prophet (2:2–5).

1:12—2:1 Habakkuk raised questions regarding God's justice in ordering the wicked and cruel Babylonians to be God's instruments for judging wicked Judah. The charges were: (1) How can the scale of justice be balanced when a more wicked nation destroys a wicked nation (1:13)? (2) How can the Lord reduce humans to the level of fish or reptiles (v. 14)? (3) How may God permit the Babylonians to deal so ruthlessly with humanity (vv. 15–17)? After the charges, Habakkuk awaited the Lord's response (2:1).

1:12 Are you not … my Holy One: Habakkuk's point seems to be that God's holiness should have prohibited Him from using a "dirty" instrument like Babylon to accomplish His purposes in judging and reproving His own people.

1:13 purer eyes: Habakkuk wondered how God could look on as the wicked Babylonians perverted justice. A person more righteous than he: This was the ethical dilemma that faced Habakkuk: The Judeans were less corrupt and idolatrous than the Babylonians, who were being used to judge them for their sins.

1:14, 15 Habakkuk's charges against the Lord became even more daring. The prophet charged the Lord with reducing humans to the level of fish or insects and with causing chaos among the nations.

1:16 they sacrifice to their net: This phrase speaks of the contemptuous pride of the Babylonians in their devices of destruction.

1:17 Habakkuk wanted to know how God could allow the brazen activity of the Babylonians to continue unabated. The prophet reasoned that God surely had a desire to punish the Babylonians for their pride.

2:1 my watch … on the rampart: Habakkuk stationed himself as a watchman to look at the nations, as God had commanded him (1:5). The prophet also waited expectantly for God's response to his three charges in 1:12–17. what He will say to me: Habakkuk's faith is seen in his anticipation of a response from God. when I am corrected: This phrase indicates the prophet's submission to God.

2:2 The command to write the revelation is unusual. Generally prophets spoke the word of the Lord first. The term vision here is related to the verb translated "saw" in 1:1. The noun speaks about a prophetic revelation (Is. 1:1). he may run who reads it: Messengers would proclaim the divine oracle.

2:3 An appointed time speaks of a determined time in God's eyes. Though it tarries, wait for it: God knows His plan and the outworking of all things in accordance with His purposes. The godly are responsible to study and proclaim His revelation while awaiting its fulfillment. it will surely come: The assurance of fulfillment lies in God Himself. It will not tarry: The fulfillment of the vision would not take any longer than God had planned.

Living by Faith

Few phrases of Scripture have had as far-reaching an impact as the Lord's declaration to Habakkuk that "the just shall live by his faith" (Hab. 2:4). If you are a Protestant today, this verse is an important part of your spiritual heritage: Martin Luther adopted it as his watchword during the Protestant Reformation of the early 1500s.

However, Habakkuk probably had little idea of the explosive truth contained in God's statement. It came as part of a prelude to a taunting song that the prophet was instructed to give against Babylon (2:1–6). The Lord was explaining why the Babylonians would be judged. Fundamentally, they were a "proud" people in the sense that they had no fear of God. By contrast, the "just" person—the individual deserving of God's approval and blessing—would find favor because of his "faith" in God.

Actually, the Hebrew word used for "faith," emunah, means "steadfastness" or "faithfulness." An Israelite who faithfully pursued the covenant by following God's Law was considered a "just" or righteous person (Ps. 15). The issue was not one's ethnicity as a Jew, but obedience to God. Thus the problem for the Babylonians was not that they were Gentiles, but that they were committed to a lifestyle of wickedness and idolatry. They arrogantly lived as if their own self-interests were all that mattered. For that reason, the Lord would humble them according to the five "woes" pronounced by Habakkuk (Hab. 2:6–20).

In the NT, Paul picked up on the idea of the just living by faith (Rom. 1:17; Gal. 3:10–12). Because of the coming of Christ, he was able to deepen the understanding of this phrase. "Living by faith" does not mean outward observance of the Law, as many of the Jewish leaders of his day had come to assume. Rather, it involves a heart commitment to the Lord and a recognition that Christ alone is able to make one righteous before God. This does not take away the need for "faithful," godly living; if anything, it establishes a proper basis for it.

2:4 The proud refers to the Babylonians, who exalted themselves and boasted of their conquests and power. His soul is not upright in him: The Babylonians had no regard for God, His commandments, or His people. the just shall live by his faith: True righteousness before God is linked to genuine faith in God. A proud person relies on self, power, position, and accomplishment; a righteous person relies on the Lord.

2:5 proud man: This arrogant and boastful person is a personification of Babylon (v. 4). The term hell is used here as a personification of death which, like a greedy person, is never satisfied (Prov. 30:15, 16). all nations … all peoples: These peoples of the earth should have been gathered together before the Lord in holy worship (Ps. 117:1); instead, they became morsels for the rapacious appetite of Babylon.

2:6–20 This prophetic taunt (a use of sarcasm in the prophetic speech) is in the form of five "woe oracles." Its purpose is to assure the hearers of the "vision" (vv. 2, 3) that God will judge greed and oppression, that He will intervene on behalf of the righteous (v. 20), and that He will establish His glorious kingdom (v. 14). While the focus of the vision is on Babylon's fall (539 B.C.), the extent pertains to the fall of all human kingdoms. Babylon the Great will fall, never to rise again (Rev 17:1—19:4). The vision has five parts. Each is introduced by, or contains within, the Hebrew word translated "woe." These are the five sections: (1) the folly of extortion and plunder (vv. 6–8); (2) the folly of exploitation and injustice (vv. 9, 10); (3) the folly of murder (vv. 11–14); (4) the folly of drunkenness and immorality (vv. 15–17); and, (5) the folly of idolatry (vv. 18–20).

2:6 A woe oracle is an oracle of judgment consisting of two parts: a declaration of the wrong and a notice of impending judgment. The judgment usually applies the principle of the law of retaliation: a wrong would come back to haunt the wrongdoer. increases … what is not his: The Law prohibited lending for the purpose of charging interest (Deut. 23:19). pledges: The practice of pledging something as a guarantee for repayment was permitted under the Law, but with limitations to ensure the humane treatment of people (Ex. 22:26, 27; Deut. 24:10–13).

2:7, 8 The Hebrew term for creditors has the idea of "those who bite," suggesting sudden, hurtful attacks (Mic. 3:5).

2:9, 10 evil gain: Gaining property through extortion and the abuse of power was strictly prohibited in the Law of Moses (Deut. 16:19). his nest: As a bird builds a nest far away from people and wild animals, so the rich work hard at avoiding threats to their fortune.

2:11 the stone will cry out … the timbers will answer it: The whole structure of Israel's society called out for justice; every part reverberated with the need for righting wrongs.

2:12 Micah also spoke against the leaders of Judah, who were developing the city and kingdom at the expense of humane treatment of others, and of justice (Mic. 3:10).

2:13 LORD of hosts speaks of God as the commander of the armies of the heavens (Hag. 1:5).

2:14, 15 God's future kingdom on earth will feature a reign of righteousness (Is. 2:1–4; Mic. 4:1–5). All humanity on the renewed earth will know the Lord and live in accordance with His will. The structures of human systems, adequate as they are for the present, will fall under God's judgment because they encourage a spirit of independence from Him. knowledge: What Satan fraudulently promised in Gen. 3:5, God will deliver. The glory of the LORD speaks of the full manifestation of His person, significance, presence, and wonder. The true knowledge of God in the time of His kingdom on earth will be like the waters—all-embracing, inescapable, and fully enveloping.

2:16, 17 Only God's kingdom is glorious. The glory of human kingdoms, such as Babylon, will be transformed into disgrace. be exposed: In their nakedness the Babylonians would expose themselves as being uncircumcised, not part of God's people nor recipients of His mercy. The cup of the LORD's right hand represents the wrath of God (Is. 51:17, 22; Rev. 14:10; 16:19).

(Heb. pesel) (2:18; Lev. 26:1; Deut. 5:8; 2 Kin. 21:7; Is. 42:17) Strong’s #6459: This term is related to a verbal root meaning “to hew out stone” or “to cut or carve wood” (Ex. 34:4). A pesel is an image or idol in the likeness of a human being or animal made from stone, wood, or metal. God prohibited the Hebrews from making such idols at Mount Sinai (Ex. 20:4). God intended the lack of images among the Hebrews to be one distinguishing feature of their true religion. Tragically, Israel followed the example of their pagan neighbors and worshiped carved images (Judg. 18:30; 2 Chr. 33:7). The psalmist describes such images as worthless and those who worship them as shameful (Ps. 97:7). Both Isaiah (Is. 40:19, 20; 44:9–20) and Habakkuk (2:18, 19) mock those who would put their trust in images made with mere human hands. They have no capacity to see, hear, speak, or do anything for their devotees.

2:18, 19 teacher of lies … trust in it: Idolatry begins with deception, encourages deception, and calls for a commitment to deception (Is. 44:20).

2:20 the LORD is in His holy temple: These words are not set in a context of worship of God by His people. The Lord is sovereign and holy. He looks at the nations and holds them accountable. keep silence before Him: The call to silence is not an invitation to worship, but a command to reflect on the terrible state of all who fall into the hands of the angry God (Zeph. 1:7).

3:1–19 This chapter is a psalm in the form of a prophetic prayer. Habakkuk leads the righteous (2:4) to strengthen themselves while awaiting the glorious kingdom (2:14) by (1) meditating on God's acts in the past; (2) praying in present crises; (3) remaining faithful to the Lord; and (4) rejoicing in the future deliverance. After the superscription (v. 1), the psalm has two parts: (1) a prayer for the Lord's intervention (vv. 2–15); and (2) the triumph of faith and hope (vv. 16–19).

3:1, 2 I have heard: Habakkuk knew the stories of God's mighty acts as celebrated in song and in the feasts and festivals of Israel. These mighty acts included the Exodus from Egypt, the miracles by the Red Sea, and the conquest of the land. Speech here signifies the message of God's great acts, rather than the communication process. afraid: As he meditated on God's work in human affairs, Habakkuk was overcome with an aweinspiring sense of the greatness of the Lord. revive … make it known: Habakkuk prayed for God's renewed involvement in Israel. In the midst of the years: This was a way of calling for a quick response.

3:3 Teman is a poetic reference to God's appearance at Sinai (Deut. 33:2). Selah is probably a musical term, but its exact meaning is unknown. It may indicate a sudden shouting of "Amen," a moment of silence, or a musical chord.

3:4 Habakkuk compared the appearance of God at Sinai (v. 3) to a thunderstorm, with its darkness and flashing lights (Ps. 18:9–14). His power was hidden: While God reveals evidence of His power, its totality and greatness remain hidden.

3:5 pestilence … fever: These plagues are personified as messengers of judgment (Deut. 28:21, 22).

3:6 everlasting mountains … perpetual hills: The prophets often portrayed nature quaking, mountains shaking, and creation in turmoil at the coming of God (Is. 24:1–3; Jer. 4:24–26; Mic. 1:3, 4; Nah. 1:5).

3:7 Cushan … Midian: These tribes are representative of the quaking nations.

3:8–10 rivers … sea: The Lord had divided the Red Sea and the Jordan River for His people to cross (Ex. 14:26—15:5; Josh. 3:14–17). chariots of salvation: The appearance of the Lord was for the purpose of bringing deliverance to His people.

3:11, 12 The sun and moon stood still: This is an allusion to the battle of Gibeon (Josh. 10:12, 13). Habakkuk portrayed God as a Warrior armed with a bow, arrows, and a spear (Ex. 15:3; Ps. 18:14; 77:17).

3:13–15 The Lord's acts of vengeance against the nations would comfort His people, for those acts would lead to Israel's salvation (2 Thess. 1:7). The people of God as a nation were anointed (Ex. 19:6; Ps. 114:2). The house of the wicked is an allusion to Israel's redemption from Egypt.

3:16–19 Habakkuk turned finally to the future deliverance, as he awaited with hope and joy the new acts of God's judgment and salvation.

3:16–18 Habakkuk was overcome with a sense of awe at God, as well as a sense of his own weakness. rest in the day of trouble: The prophet encouraged the godly not to be anxious in adversity.

3:19 The LORD God: Here the divine name Yahweh is tied to the term Adonai, which means "Lord." my strength: God will strengthen those who trust in Him (Ps. 18:32, 39). He will give those who live by faith the same confidence that a surefooted deer has in climbing mountains (Mal. 4:2). Like a victorious army, the righteous with God's strength will occupy the high hills.

The Book of Zephaniah

———— WE HAVE A WORD FOR PEOPLE WHO PREDICT terrible times ahead: doomsayer. It's an unflattering word, meant to poke fun at the bearers of bad news. We don't really want to believe their predictions of doom, so we caricature them. Maybe they will feel ashamed and go away. Sometimes it helps a little when the prophet of doom offers a solution. The unspoken question "Is there any hope?" is on everyone's mind.

Zephaniah's message had both halves of the bad-news-good-news equation. His first words were bad news indeed: the day of the Lord was coming and that meant terrible judgment. The Israelites had acted like their pagan neighbors—they had scorned God's law, worshiped false gods, and sinned without remorse long enough. Now it was time to repent: they had to turn back to their God or face the consequences. It was the "turn back to God" part of Zephaniah's message that offered a ray of hope. And to those who listened and responded to his call, the good news wiped out every line of bad. God would restore those who sought Him.

History tells us that it worked. The Book of Zephaniah tells about events that took place in Jerusalem in the late seventh century B.C., when Josiah was king. The northern kingdom of Israel had been destroyed nearly a century earlier by the Assyrians. The southern kingdom of Judah had suffered under the extraordinarily wicked rules of Manasseh (697–642 B.C.) and Amon (642–640 B.C.). The evils of their reigns had made doom appear certain. But the godly King Josiah led an important revival that affected all Judah. Scripture reports that this revival, though short-lived, delayed God's judgment, the invasion by Babylon (2 Chr. 34:27, 28). Zephaniah's message announced the day of the Lord—a coming day of doom—in the darkest of terms, but it also promised the blessing of future glory in a picture as bright as the doom was dark.

Many books of prophecy in the Bible speak about "the day of the Lord" (especially the Book of Joel). This day is a time of judgment that includes both God's people (Israel and Judah) and the surrounding nations. The prophet Zephaniah scolded Judah's leaders for countless acts of wickedness (3:1–7). His prophecies against the nations included Philistia (2:4–7), Moab and Ammon (2:8–11), Ethiopia (2:12), and Assyria (2:13–15). These nations were judged because of pride and arrogance against God's people and because of their continuing idolatry.

But the last section of Zephaniah's prophecy contains words of hope (3:8–20): promises of protection for the remnant and promises for the future of those who know Him truly. In a future day, peoples of all nations will come to worship the Lord (2:11; 3:9). His own people will be renewed in righteousness (3:11–13). And the King of kings Himself will rule in their midst (3:15; Rev. 21:1–6). That day of the Lord's return will be a day of song and gladness. Even God will burst out in joyful singing (3:16, 17). The raging anger of the Lord (1:1, 2) will be replaced by His happy singing, for salvation will finally have come to His people.

The prophet Zephaniah traced his ancestry back four generations to Hezekiah, most likely Judah's famous king. After the long and evil reign of Manasseh (697–642 B.C.) and his son Amon (642–640 B.C.), Josiah began his rule of Judah. Zephaniah began ministering as prophet in Jerusalem in the same year as the great prophet Jeremiah (627 B.C.). They and Hulda the prophetess (2 Chr. 34:14–28) witnessed the religious reform that Josiah started, a reform that unfortunately did not last. After Josiah's death, the people returned to their errant ways; less than fifty years later (around 586 B.C.), God used Babylon to discipline them.

Commentary

1:1 The word of the LORD which came: The messages of the OT prophets did not arise from the prophets' own will, but from God Himself (2 Pet. 1:20, 21). Zephaniah means "Hidden in the Lord," a name that relates to the principal message the prophet presented (2:3). The names of the prophets were often significantly associated with the message that God gave them to present to the people. Hezekiah most likely refers to the notable king of Judah (2 Kin. 18—20). Thus Zephaniah the prophet was related to King Josiah.

1:2, 3 utterly consume: The message of Zephaniah begins with a pronouncement of universal judgment (Gen. 6—8). These words not only introduce the particular judgment that would be pronounced upon Judah (v. 4), but they also speak about the final judgment that will usher in the kingdom of God on earth (Rev. 19). Stumbling blocks here refers to idolatry, or substitutes for God in the life and affections of a person. Because there is nothing in the universe that really may be compared to the Creator (Is. 40:25), God abhors all forms of idolatry. Says the LORD: This phrase added gravity to the prophetic oracle and assured the hearer of the source of the message.

1:4–6 The message of God's impending judgment on the nation of Judah and its capital city Jerusalem must have been startling to those who believed that God would never destroy the site of His holy temple (v. 12). every trace of Baal: Baal worship and its evils had led to the destruction of Israel and its capital Samaria in 722 B.C. Likewise, Baal worship and its associations would lead to the destruction of Judah and its capital Jerusalem in 586 B.C. Milcom is a reference to an Ammonite deity whose worship included acts of infant sacrifice (2 Kin. 23:10; Jer. 32:35). turned back: The people had experienced God and then turned away from Him.

1:7 Be silent: This prophetic call for silence was for solemn preparation for the horror of divine wrath (Hab. 2:20; Zech. 2:13). The day of the LORD describes a period of unusual activity on the part of God in the affairs of His people. sacrifice: The people of God were expected to prepare sacrifices for the Lord as acts of contrition and celebration. But rebels, scofflaws, idolaters, and apostates would themselves become God's sacrifice. His guests may be the birds of the heavens—vultures and buzzards who feed on carrion (Rev. 19:21).

1:8, 9 Foreign apparel here suggests two things: (1) acts of greed and extortion against the populace, amassing funds for exotic clothing; (2) participation in foreign religious rites associated with exotic clothing. Leap over the threshold may refer to a pagan practice like the one mentioned in 1 Sam. 5:5. The priests of Dagon would not step on the doorway of the temple to Dagon because the hands and the head of Dagon had fallen there.

1:10, 11 On that day is a common way of referring to the coming time of judgment (or blessing) on the day of the Lord. Maktesh: Zephaniah shows his familiarity with the various quarters of Jerusalem as he mentions certain gates, sections, and districts of the city. Maktesh refers to a market district. Every area of the city would be affected by God's judgment.

1:12, 13 The LORD will not do good, nor will He do evil: The complacency of the wicked people led them to believe that God is similarly complacent. Foolishly these people believed that the Lord would be inactive, neither blessing nor cursing, neither benefiting nor punishing His people.

1:14–16 The language of this passage is quite similar to Joel 2:1–11, on which it may be based in part. Near describes the imminence of the coming judgment. The references to clouds and darkness resemble Canaanite poetry in which clouds and thunder are associated with the false god Baal. The poets of the Bible used this language to describe the true God, who would send forth His judgments like lightning bolts from a dark mass of clouds (Ps. 97:2–6). The references to fortified cities and high towers speak about the extent of God's judgment. There would be no adequate defense against the Lord's searing judgments.

1:17, 18 like blind men: God's judgment would be so sudden and so overwhelming that the survivors would be in a state of shock, stumbling around in the dark.

2:1–3 Having delivered a warning of judgment against Judah (1:2–18), the prophet now turns to implore the nation to repent nationally (2:1, 2) and personally (v. 3). The people doomed for judgment in the day of the Lord (1:14–18) were commanded to gather together in repentance. Seek the LORD: This is the language of true repentance, renewal, and regeneration. you will be hidden: Zephaniah used a play on words with the meaning of his own name, “Hidden in the Lord.” Even in the midst of the most calamitous of judgment scenes, the mercy and grace of the Lord is still available to a repentant people.

(Heb.anav) (2:3; Ps. 22:26; Is. 11:4) Strong’s #6035: This Hebrew word may be translated humble (Ps. 34:2) or meek (Ps. 37:11; Matt. 5:5) and is derived from a verb meaning “to be afflicted” or “to be bowed down” (Ps. 116:10). Forms of this word occur twice in 2:3: first translated as meek and then as humility. The word frequently refers to the poor or oppressed (Prov. 14:21; Amos 2:7). But it also signifies strength of character in enduring suffering without resentment. Such character is rooted in a strong faith in God and His goodness and a steadfast submission to the will of God.

2:4, 5 The focus of the book moves from the description of God’s judgment on Judah and Jerusalem to a description of divine judgment on the surrounding nations. The judgment begins with the nation to the west, Philistia, and its major cities and seafaring industries. The five main cities of the Philistines were Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, and Gath. All but Gath are mentioned here. Cherethites is another name for the Philistines. Canaan is the ancient name for the land of the people of Israel, derived from its prior inhabitants. A later name of the land was Palestine, a term derived from Philistine.

2:6, 7 The seacoast shall be pastures: The coastal cities of Philistia and the coastal plain that the Philistines dominated for so long would one day become the possession of the Hebrews. The same God who brought destruction upon the people of Judah (1:14–18) would restore their fortunes.

2:8, 9 The peoples of Moab and Ammon to the east of Judah were hostile to the Hebrews from the earliest times. Moab shall be like Sodom: Here is God’s promise of retribution (Gen. 19:12–29).

2:10, 11 The LORD will be awesome to them: There may be a double meaning in these words. For the righteous people of Judah and Jerusalem, there would be a response of awe and wonder before God, who had responded to the prayer of His servant. But for the wicked there would be quite another response, one of terror and dread. People shall worship Him: Not only would there be a righteous remnant in Judah, there would also be people coming to God from the nations of the earth.

2:12 Ethiopians: Only one verse in this chapter is given to the message of the Lord to the peoples of the south, the Ethiopians. The message to them is indeed stark. Since God is speaking, their judgment is sure and certain.

2:13–15 Assyria was to the east. But the ancient armies could not march across the desert. Therefore they went around the desert and entered the land of the Hebrews from the north. The pelican and the bittern were birds found in remote areas (Is. 34:11). Their presence in the ruins of Nineveh attest to the severity of the destruction announced on these people. the rejoicing city: The rejoicing here is ironic, seen as an act of the city's complacency. Soon the judgment of God would descend suddenly, and the region would be useful only for herding animals.

God's Warning

In Zephaniah's day, the people of Judah had grown deaf to the periodic warnings of the Lord concerning the imminent shipwreck of their nation. Occasionally He took extreme measures to shake them out of their complacency, to no avail. For example, he "cut off" entire nations and cities (Zeph. 3:6), including Israel, as an example of the judgment waiting for them. He felt that perhaps this would cause His people to "receive instruction" before it was too late (3:7). Yet despite the Lord's every effort, Judah remained stubbornly "rebellious and polluted," refusing to receive correction (3:1, 2). Princes, prophets, judges, and priests persisted in their evil ways, oblivious to God's urgent warnings of danger ahead (3:3, 4).

3:1–4 The addressee of the prophetic word here is Jerusalem, the city of David. Jerusalem had become a center of oppression, rebellion, and apostasy. It would soon be marked by destruction. The expression of grief is reflective of God's own heart. The princes, judges, prophets, and priests, whom God had especially designated to work for righteousness, were more wicked than the "regular" citizens of Jerusalem. These leaders were destroying and defrauding the weak, the needy, and the helpless.

3:5–7 Because He is absolutely righteous, God had no place in the midst of such an evil people. cut off nations: God's punishment of Judah's neighbors should have brought the people to their senses.

3:8 the fire of My jealousy: God's response to the wickedness of Jerusalem was to declare His judgment. He would use other nations to punish the city for its rebellion.

3:9–13 The focus of the text moves to a time of national regeneration and restoration. Pure language refers to language used in the pure worship of God. One day human language will become a unifying element in the true worship of God. My worshipers: God's people would come from all nations to worship Him.

IN CONTEXT

Beyond the Rivers of Ethiopia

If you are a Christian and of African descent, you may be interested in Zephaniah's prophecy that the Lord would restore His "dispersed ones" from "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia" (Zeph. 3:10). This was a remarkable promise, given the map of the world in Zephaniah's day. As far as we know, Ethiopia represented the southwestern limits of Judah's knowledge of the world. The interior of Africa, "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia," was literally "off the map" for the ancient Israelites. It was uncharted territory for them.

To what, then, was Zephaniah referring? The context shows that he was anticipating the day when the Lord would bring people from the ends of the earth to form a holy people who would worship and serve Him with true hearts (3:9, 12, 13). Among them would be people from "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." The prophet called this new people "the daughter of My dispersed ones" (3:10) and "the remnant of Israel" (3:13). Thus Zephaniah's vision seems to tie in with Jeremiah's predictions of a scattering of the Jews throughout the world, followed by an eventual restoration (Jer. 30:10, 11, 18–22; 31:1–40).

Beginning in the sixth century, many Jewish colonies were established along the Nile and the Mediterranean coast of Africa. In fact, some have suggested that Zephaniah's prophecy pertains to the Jewish community in northern Abyssinia. However, the prophecy may look beyond a strictly Jewish restoration. It seems to correspond with a prediction by David that Ethiopians would someday "stretch out [their] hands to God" (Ps. 68:31). Likewise, Isaiah envisioned a day when distant lands which had not heard of God would be recruited to send representatives to the Lord at Jerusalem —a vision that appears to correspond with the mission of the church (Is. 66:18–21).

As far as we know, Zephaniah himself had no idea of the vast tribes of people living "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." But every time one of their descendents turns to faith in Christ, Africa adds one more member to the "peoples { of} a pure language" who are called to serve the Lord "with one accord" (Zeph. 3:9).

A model of Jerusalem, showing its massive walls with fortified gates and defense towers. The prophet Zephaniah predicted that Jerusalem would be destroyed through God's judgment but that God would raise up His people and the city again in the future (Zeph. 3:14–17).

3:14–17 The people of God would be called to sing because their deliverance had come. Daughter of Zion is an affectionate title for the city of Jerusalem. In that day: The people are first commanded to abstain from fear, to keep from hanging their arms in a posture of resignation. Instead, they were to take encouragement and strength from the new reality that their God lived among them.

3:18–20 those who sorrow: God is going to make all things right. Those who are enemies of God's truth will be gathered and removed; those who are disenfranchised, God will restore. I will give you fame and praise: Ordinarily Scripture speaks about the praise that should be brought to God. Here we find the praise that God will bring to His people. As in the beginning of His dealings with Abraham and Sarah (Gen. 12:1–3), where God promised blessing, honor, and a renowned name, so here God promises fame and praise to each individual in His family. Says the LORD: This is a solemn vow of God to do what He has promised. Zephaniah begins and ends with the strong assertion that the Lord is speaking. The implication is clear: “Listen and live!”

The Book of Haggai

———— HAGGAI WAS A PROPHET TO THE JEWS WHO HAD returned from the Exile in Babylon. His first task was to force them to see where their hearts and priorities really lay. He urged them to do what they should have done from the start: to rebuild the temple with a willing heart. To these admonitions he added the promise of God to be with them. With this promise, the people could return to their first enthusiasm and carry out God's purposes for them. Then their worship would be joyful and sincere.

When some of the Israelites returned from the Babylonian captivity beginning in 538 B.C., they determined to restore the worship of God to its rightful place at the center of their lives. They planned to build a new temple in Jerusalem (Ezra 1). Sadly, however, their resolve seems to have vanished shortly after their arrival in Jerusalem. They built an altar on the original temple site and later laid the foundations for the new temple. But when enemies who lived in the vicinity applied pressure, the Persian king ordered the work on the temple to cease. A later emperor of Persia, Darius I, lifted the restrictions that had been placed on the rebuilding of the temple and told them to proceed. But even when the barriers were lifted, the people lapsed into spiritual lethargy. They were not the idolaters that their ancestors had been, but they had lost their early passion for the worship of the living God. They explained their behavior by advancing the time-honored excuse of procrastination: it just doesn't seem to be the right time (1:2).

When Haggai confronted the people, he addressed the problems of his day: the infertility of the land and the hard economic times (1:6). But he did not blame these problems on poor fiscal planning. Instead, he exhorted the people to focus on their spiritual condition. They were focusing on insignificant matters like the decoration of their homes, while every day they ignored God's temple lying in ruins. The temple was more than a building. It was the site of the people's meeting with the living God, the symbol of the abiding presence of the Creator of the universe. If the people ignored the physical ruin of the temple, they were ignoring the spiritual wreckage in their souls as well.

Zerubbabel the governor and Joshua the high priest, along with the people of God, responded quickly to the message of Haggai (1:12). Three weeks after Haggai gave his first message, they began their work on the temple (520 B.C.). Anticipating a positive response, Haggai came with another message. This was a simple one, but it had profound implications: Haggai assured them that the Lord was with them (1:13). This was the same message that Moses had brought to the Israelites in Egypt (Ex. 3:8). Indeed this would be the name of the coming Messiah—Immanuel, God with us (Is. 7:14). When the people chose to make God the center of their lives, the Lord could Himself remain in their midst even without a physical building.

To emphasize some key points about the people's attitude towards God, Haggai posed a couple of questions. One of these was about the laws concerning what was clean and unclean (2:10–14). These laws had several purposes: (1) they protected people from diseases; (2) they taught certain spiritual lessons; and, (3) they created in the people an instinctive sense of right and wrong. In other words, they underscored the message that the Lord, and not any person, determines what is good or evil.

Haggai asked the priests whether cleanness or holiness might be transmitted through touch. The priests answered that it could not. Then the prophet asked whether uncleanness could be transmitted through touch. The answer was yes. Haggai applied this principle to the nation. An indifferent attitude toward the construction of the temple had polluted everything the people touched. Their attitude made the work of their hands unacceptable to the Lord. Though the temple work had begun, the people's hearts left them unclean in the eyes of the Lord. Even so, God in His great grace would still bless His people.

In a question-and-answer format (2:15–19), Haggai also encouraged the people to think about their circumstances before they started to build the temple. None of their past work had resulted in success: "Is the seed still in the barn?" (2:19). But from that day God would bless His people, because they had reordered their priorities. They had put the worship of the Lord before their own welfare (1:4, 14). Out of the bounty that the Lord would provide, the Israelites would be able to bring the proper sacrifices of true worship into the new temple.

Little is known about the prophet Haggai except what is in the book that bears his name. Ezra mentions him briefly in association with the prophet Zechariah (Ezra 5:1; 6:14) and the rebuilding of the temple. The name

Haggai means “Festival,” an appropriate meaning given the prophet’s work in restoring temple worship. But what is most remarkable about Haggai’s ministry is its brevity; his messages were given in the span of only four months in 520 B.C.

Commentary

First Things First

I'll pay more attention to religion as soon as my schedule lightens up." "I'll get back into a daily time of prayer and Bible reading as soon as I finish the project I'm working on." "One of these days I'll get around to helping that mission to the poor I've been thinking about."

If you've ever made comments such as these, then you have some idea of the situation in postexilic Judah. The people had started to rebuild the temple, but stopped after a year or two of work. They got involved in other commitments, and before they knew it, 16 years had gone by. The temple was still incomplete. "We'll get around to it," they apparently said. "It's just not time yet" (Hag. 1:2). However, God rebuked them for that attitude. Their priorities were distorted. They were putting God at the tail end of their commitments, rather than honoring Him as the Lord of their lives. The neglect of the temple was essentially a neglect of God.

God's word to the Jewish returnees also may speak to your priorities. If your spiritual life has been slipping, maybe it's time to put first things first and place God back at the center of your commitments.

1:1–15 The Book of Haggai can be divided in two parts, as indicated by its two chapters. The first major section (ch. 1) focuses on the need for the people who have returned to Jerusalem to complete the rebuilding of the temple of God. The second major section (ch. 2) focuses on the need to reform the people and their worship of God in the new holy temple. The first section is comprised of two smaller parts, each presenting a dated message of the prophet Haggai (1:1–11, 12–15).

1:1 second year … sixth month … first day: The date for this first message of God through Haggai is August 29, 520 B.C. The prophecies of Haggai are among the most precisely dated in the OT. Zerubbabel was the governor of Jerusalem at the time of Haggai's ministry and the governor of the first group of returning exiles from Babylon (Ezra 3:2; Neh. 7:7).

1:2 The time has not come: The people had decided that rebuilding the Lord's dwelling among His people was not important.

1:3, 4 The principal building material in Jerusalem was stone. Those who wanted to make their houses elaborate installed wood panels. The people of Haggai's time were making their homes elegant, rivaling royal residences and the holy temple itself. But they still did not feel that the "time was right" to begin working on the renewed temple. While this verse is not a blanket condemnation of elegant living among God's people, it certainly calls for a reevaluation of priorities.

1:5 Consider your ways: The people were asked to mull over their habits and activities and to ask whether their attitude was sensible before the Lord.

1:6 God asked the people to take stock of their lives. Though they ate and drank, they never seemed satisfied. Though they put on clothes, they never felt warm. Wage earners constantly felt as though their pockets had holes in them through which their money was lost.

1:7, 8 The people were instructed to go to great lengths to get wood for paneling the temple of the Lord (v. 4). that I may take pleasure in it: God's joy in the temple is related to His pleasure in the people who would worship Him there. be glorified: Clearly God does not need to receive more glory (Ps. 24:7–10); however, He gladly receives the adoration of His people.

1:9 runs to his own house: Because of their preoccupation with personal comfort, the people were ignoring the central spiritual concerns of their lives. Their faulty principle of life was being shaken by the Lord. The Savior Jesus later proclaimed the true and abiding principle for the life of faith: "But seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added to you" (Matt. 6:33).

1:10, 11 The blessing and cursing formula of the Lord's covenant with His people comes into play here (Deut. 28). Dew is a poetic way of speaking of rainfall.

1:12 The remnant of the people were literally those who had made the trek back to Judah from their place of captivity in Babylon; it also refers to those within a larger population who are faithful to the Lord.

1:13 I am with you: God's promise to Moses was, "I will certainly be with you" (Ex. 3:12). God's promise to the people of Judah was that the name of the Coming One would be Immanuel, meaning "God is with us" (Is. 7:14). Here God repeated the same message of comfort and encouragement.

1:14, 15 This verse bears witness to the work of God's Spirit on the human spirit of His leaders and His people to accomplish His tasks. It is reminiscent of God's work in stirring up the people to build the original tabernacle (Ex. 35:29; 36:2). remnant: Always within Israel a remnant existed. Paul stated there was such a remnant in Elijah's time (Rom. 11:2–4; compare 1 Kin. 19:18).

2:1–23 The second section of the Book of Haggai brings a focus on the people. Here, the people are prepared for the true worship of the living God. This chapter has three parts to it: (1) a promise of a future temple (vv. 1–9); (2) holiness in the life of the people (vv. 10–19); and, (3) blessing on Zerubbabel (vv. 20–23).

2:1 twenty-first of the month: By our calendar this would be October 17, 520 B.C. In the ancient Jewish calendar this day was the last day of the Feast of Tabernacles or Succoth (Lev. 23:33–44). During this holiday the people of Israel lived in booths, or temporary shelters, commemorating their departure from Egypt when they lived in temporary shelters in the wilderness.

2:2 Speak now: Haggai was called again to address the leaders Zerubbabel and Joshua (1:1) and the true people of God (1:12).

Remember the Past, but Face the Present

As a new temple began to take form in the place where the old one had stood, some of the old-timers could remember the "former glory" of the first temple (Hag. 2:3). They remembered its beautiful cedar paneling, gold overlay, and other magnificent furnishings. By comparison, the new temple seemed "as nothing" in their eyes.

The Lord did not discourage them from honoring this gilded, glorious past, but He did exhort them to turn their eyes toward the present. He challenged the leaders and the people: "Be strong and work; for I am with you" (2:4). The new structure might not bring back the days of Solomon, but it would at least be a building of which they could be proud.

Scripture often encourages us to remember and honor the past, but it also urges us to face the reality of the present. God is at work today, just as He was at work yesterday. His Spirit remains with us (2:5; John 14:16, 17), just as He was with believers in times past. If we cooperate with what the Spirit is doing, we may bring even greater glory to God and accomplish even greater ministry than has yet been seen.

2:3 The temple of Solomon was one of the wonders of the ancient world (1 Kin. 6). The older temple would have loomed large and magnificent, far outstripping the present structure. So even though the building was completed, there may have been the sense among some of the people that it was as nothing.

2:4 I am with you: The Lord's words to the people (1:13) were the same as His great words to Moses (Ex. 3:12). The words of this verse draw a comparison between the events of this period and the events of the first Exodus. God brought the people back from Babylon as He had brought them back from Egypt. The message to the first set of leaders, Moses and Aaron, and to the second, Zerubbabel and Joshua, was the same: God would be present with them. Finally, the mission in the promised land was the same, to build a place for the true worship of God.

2:5 According to the word: The same covenant that related the people to God in their departure from Egypt bound them still. The events surrounding the decline of the nation and the people's captivity in Babylon had not rescinded the covenant relationship that insured God's presence with His people (Ex. 29:42–46).

2:6 I will shake: This is another way of speaking of the day of the Lord. The purpose of the day of the Lord is to prepare the earth for the glorious reign of Jesus Christ on earth (Matt. 24:29; Rev. 6:12–17).

2:7 Desire of All Nations: Some interpret these words as a messianic title that speaks about the joy of the redeemed of the nations at the time of the rule of King Jesus. Others observe that the Hebrew word meaning desire is used principally for objects (as in 2 Chr. 32:27; Hos. 13:15; Nah. 2:9) rather than persons. However, the word is used occasionally for persons (1 Sam. 9:20).

2:8 silver … gold: God owns the cattle on a thousand hills, the gold in all coffers, and the wealth of all nations.

2:9 Peace includes good health, well-being, and an abundant life. The term refers to everything being as it ought to be.

2:10–19 In these verses the prophet speaks about ways that holiness in the life of the people related to their worship of God. This section has two smaller units in it: (1) issues concerning the clean and the unclean (vv. 10–14); and, (2) issues concerning cursing and blessing (vv. 15–19).

2:10 The twenty-fourth day of the ninth month corresponds to December 18, 520 B.C. on our calendar.

2:11 The responsibilities of the priests included leading public worship and instructing the people in the nature and meaning of God's law.

2:12 will it become holy: Since the role of the priest was to interpret God's law, it was reasonable that questions on holiness should be addressed to them. Haggai asked whether holiness could be transferred by contact. The answer was no.

2:13–15 It shall be unclean: The priests were asked whether a religiously unclean person, someone who had touched a corpse, could contaminate someone else by touch. The answer was yes (Num. 19:11–13). The people had worked hard to rebuild the temple, only to be told that their worship would be unacceptable in the new temple. The existence of the temple itself guaranteed nothing. The hearts of the people had to be in harmony with the sacrifices being made.

2:16, 17 you did not turn to Me: Despite God's acts of withholding His blessing, the people still had not turned fully back to Him.

2:18–21 from this day: God determined to bring His blessing on His people, but He demanded that they recognize Him as the source of their great productivity.

2:22 I will overthrow: Haggai focused on the power of God to do as He wills among the nations (Dan. 2:21). These words speak both in a general way about the sovereignty of God over the nations throughout history, as well as more specifically of God's final judgment on the wicked nations at the time He institutes the rule of His Son as King of kings (Pss. 2; 110; Rev. 19).

(Heb. chotham) (2:23; Gen. 38:18; 1 Kin. 21:8; Jer. 22:24) Strong’s #2368: The Hebrew noun signet ring is derived from a verbal root meaning “to affix a seal,” “to seal up,” or “to fasten by sealing.” The signet in OT times was an engraved stone set in a gold or silver finger ring, bracelet, or armband (Song 8:6). When pressed upon wax or soft clay, the ring left the impression of the personal insignia of the bearer (Ex. 28:11, 21, 36; 39:6, 14, 30). The signet ring was like an identification card or badge in the ancient world (Gen. 38:18). It symbolized status or position and the binding nature of the authority attached to items sealed by the ring (1 Kin. 21:8; Job 38:14). Haggai’s comparison of Zerubbabel to a signet ring (2:23) has messianic implications, since Zerubbabel would overturn the curse of Jeremiah on King Jehoiachin’s dynasty and restore royal authority to the line of King David (Jer. 22:24–30).

A cylinder seal, used to validate decrees or legalize contracts. Seals like this were often engraved on rings. The prophet Haggai spoke of Zerubbabel as a "signet ring" who would guarantee God's presence and authority among His people (Hag. 2:23).

2:23 A signet ring was an item of great value in the ancient world. The owner used it much like we use our personal signature on checks or other important documents. God used this imagery to indicate that Zerubbabel was in His hand, that he was highly valued, and that he represented God's authority in his leadership of the people. Even though the people had been told they were still unclean in God's eyes (2:10–14), their leader Zerubbabel was encouraged to guide them through those spiritually trying times.

The Book of Zechariah

———— ENCOURAGEMENT AND HOPE ARE THE UNDERLYING themes of the prophecies of Zechariah. The prophet Zechariah was one of the three prophets, along with Haggai and Malachi, who ministered to the exiles returning to Jerusalem. These exiles faced the ruins of what had once been a splendid city and a glorious temple. There was much to be sad about, but Zechariah encouraged the exiles with visions of judgment on Israel's enemies and of the complete restoration of the city of Jerusalem. Yet the most thrilling vision of all was the prediction of a coming King—the Messiah who would bring eternal salvation and the promised eternal kingdom.

Zechariah lived and prophesied during the period following the Babylonian captivity (597–538 B.C.). Jeremiah had predicted that the Israelites would return to the promised land after seventy years of discipline in exile. God began fulfilling this promise when He raised up Cyrus king of Persia, whose military exploits brought about the capture of Babylon in 539 B.C. Following his victory, Cyrus decreed that all exiled peoples could return to their homelands. The people of Judah were among those who benefited from this reversal of Babylonian policy. The first group of Jews returned under the leadership of Sheshbazzar (Ezra 1:8) in 537 B.C. The altar for the temple was erected in the fall of that year, but construction of the temple itself did not begin until the spring of 536 B.C.

Opposition to the temple rebuilding by enemies of the Jews living in and around Judah resulted in the abandonment of the work until 520 B.C. During these sixteen years of neglect the people of Judah lost their vision and sense of spiritual purpose. Their procrastination resulted in divine chastening (Hag. 1:11; 2:17). Though the crops failed and the people languished, they did not repent until God raised up two prophets to turn the people back to Himself. In 520 B.C., Haggai called for the Israelites to recognize their spiritual priorities and rebuild the temple. Zechariah began his prophetic ministry just two months after Haggai (compare 1:1 with Hag. 1:1).

The ministries of Haggai and Zechariah did not cease when work began in earnest on the temple. The prophets continued to encourage the people.

Haggai's messages were delivered in 520 B.C.; Zechariah's last dated prophecy was given in 518 B.C. (7:1). With the people committed to restoring the worship of the Lord and the temple, God poured out His blessing on a repentant and spiritually revitalized people. The temple was completed in 515 B.C. and rededicated with great rejoicing.

Zechariah's prophecies had two purposes. First, they challenged the returning exiles to turn to the Lord, to be cleansed from their sins and to experience again the Lord's blessing (1:3). Second, Zechariah's words comforted and encouraged the people regarding the rebuilding of the temple and God's future work among His people (1:16, 17; 2:12; 3:2; 4:9; 6:14, 15).

In the first several chapters, Zechariah encourages the people by focusing on God's choice of Jerusalem (1:17; 2:12; 3:2). The Lord had not set aside His ancient covenant people. Through Zechariah, God not only reaffirmed Jerusalem's divine election, but promised to come among His returning people and live in their midst (2:10, 11; 8:3, 23). It was through His personal presence among His people that God would accomplish a miraculous work. In the second half of the book, Zechariah details God's future dealings with His chosen people, revealing the overthrow of Israel's enemies, the future glories of Zion, and the universal reign of the Messiah. This is the overarching theme of the book: the complete restoration of God's people would occur in the redeeming and delivering work of the coming Messiah.

Zechariah teaches a great deal concerning the First and second comings of Jesus the Messiah. He refers to the Messiah as the "BRANCH" (3:8), God's "Servant" (3:8), and God's "Shepherd" (13:7). There is also an allusion to the Messiah's ministry as a Priest-King in 6:13 (Heb. 6:20—7:1). Furthermore, he prophesied the Messiah's entrance into Jerusalem on a colt (9:9; Matt. 21:4, 5; John 12:14–16), His betrayal for thirty pieces of silver (11:12, 13; Matt. 27:9, 10), the piercing of His hands and feet (12:10; John 19:37), and the cleansing from sin provided by His death (13:1; John 1:29; Titus 3:5). In fact, chs. 9—14 of Zechariah are the most quoted section of the Prophets in the narratives of the Gospels. Concerning the Messiah's second coming, Zechariah prophesied such future events as the conversion of Israel (12:10—13:1, 9; Rom. 11:26), the destruction of Israel's enemies (14:3, 12–15; Rev. 19:11–16), and the reign of Christ in a new Jerusalem (14:9, 16; Rev. 20:4–6).

Along with his emphasis on the Messiah, Zechariah appropriately gives an important message about God's plan for salvation. The importance of repentance and returning to the Lord of Hosts is emphasized in the introduction (1:3–6). And then in 3:1–5, Zechariah provides a striking illustration of the removal of sin and the imputation of righteousness. The removal of the high priest's filthy garments and the provision of clean festal robes illustrates the work of Christ. Through His atoning death, Christ strips us of our filthy sins and clothes us with His own righteousness. In this way we can approach our holy God.

True religion, according to Zechariah, is not found merely in external acts of religious piety, but is based upon a personal relationship with God (7:5–7). Such a relationship with God should change one's attitude to one's neighbors. Like the prophets before him, Zechariah condemned the oppression of the widow, the orphan, the stranger, and the poor (7:10). As a preacher of righteousness, he called God's people back to the virtues of justice, kindness, compassion, and truth (7:9; 8:16).

The name Zechariah means "Yahweh Remembers." This powerful phrase communicates a message of hope: the God of Israel will mercifully remember His people. The prophet is identified as "the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo." Iddo was among the heads of the priestly families that returned from Babylon to Judah. Zechariah, then, was a member of the tribe of Levi and probably served as both a priest and a prophet. He entered his prophetic ministry two months after his contemporary Haggai had concluded his first oracle.

Those who question the unity and single authorship of Zechariah usually argue that chs. 9—14 date from the Hellenistic period (331–167 B.C.) or the Maccabean period (167–73 B.C.). The reference to "Greece" in 9:13 has often been cited as evidence for a late date, after Alexander's conquests (about 330 B.C.). However, Greek influence was strong in the ancient Middle East as early as the seventh century B.C. Greece is mentioned by the eighth-century prophet Isaiah (Is. 66:19, where Greece is referred to as Javan) and the sixth-century prophet Ezekiel (Ezek. 27:13, 19 for Javan). Those who hold to the unity of the book generally date its completion between 500 and 470 B.C. Zechariah began his prophetic ministry in the second year of the Persian king Darius (522–486 B.C.) and his last dated prophecy was delivered two years later, in 518 B.C.

Commentary

1:1–6 The first section of the book introduces the prophet (Zechariah) and his message (an invitation to return to the Lord of Hosts).

1:1 The eighth month corresponds to October-November on our calendar. Darius ruled Persia from 522 to 486 B.C. Thus his second year was 520 B.C. The name Zechariah means "Yahweh Remembers," emphasizing God's faithfulness to His covenant promises and to His people.

1:2 The fathers refers to the ancestors of the present generation who had disobeyed God and come under His judgment (2 Chr. 36:15, 16). These people formed the generations of Hebrews whose willful departure from the Lord of Hosts led to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Babylonians. Implied in Zechariah's words is the implicit warning: What God did in the past, He may do in the present. As in the sad experience of the wilderness generations (Num. 13; 14), God has time to raise up a people who will be faithful to Him!

1:3 The words return to Me remind us of the depth of God's unconditional love. says the LORD of hosts: The personal name translated LORD speaks about God's gracious nature as He relates to His people (Ex. 3:15); the hosts are the angelic armies that await His every command.

1:4 The former prophets refers to people like Habakkuk, Zephaniah, and Jeremiah, who had lived during the last years of the Judean monarchy and had warned of coming judgment.

1:5, 6 Their fathers had been killed or exiled and even the prophets had perished. The previous generation had been overtaken by God's judgment (Deut. 28:15–68).

1:7–6:15 This section contains a sequence of eight night visions concerning Israel's future, followed by the symbolic crowning of the high priest Joshua. Here Zechariah pursues the same end as Haggai, rebuilding the temple as the center of worship and world rule, and as a place of pilgrimage for the nations (8:20–23; Hag. 2:7–9). The eight night visions follow a general pattern. Zechariah describes what he sees, then asks the question, "What does this mean?" Finally he is given an explanation by an accompanying angel.

1:7–17 This vision can be divided into three parts: (1) the time of the vision (v. 7); (2) the details of the vision (vv. 8–12); and, (3) the promise of the vision (vv. 13–17).

1:7 The eleventh month (Shebat is the Babylonian name) corresponds to January-February, 519 B.C. the word of the LORD: Here the phrase refers to a prophetic vision.

IN CONTEXT

The Parables of Zechariah

A parable is a truth wrapped in a memorable story or word picture. It could be fictional, dramatized, or the result of a vision. Jesus gave much of His teaching through parables. So did several of the OT prophets, including Zechariah. He saw eight visions that can be understood much like parables.

• The Man and Horses Among the Myrtle Trees (Zech. 1:8–17)
Indicated that the Lord would again be merciful to Jerusalem.

• The Four Horns and the Four Craftsmen (Zech. 1:18–20)
Showed that the Babylonians and others who scattered Judah would be cast out.

• The Man With a Measuring Line (Zech. 2:1, 2)
Promised that God would be a protective wall of fire around Jerusalem.

• The Cleansing of Joshuah's Garments (Zech. 3:1–10)
Illustrated that the redemptive work that God would do for his people.

• The Golden Lampstand and Olive Trees (Zech. 4:1–14)
Symbolized the way in which the Lord was going to empower His people by the Holy Spirit.

• The Flying Scroll (Zech. 5:1–4)
Indicated that dishonesty is cursed.

• The Woman in the Basket (Zech. 5:5–11)
Illustrated the removal of wickedness.

• The Four Chariots (Zech. 6:1–8)
Revealed that the spirits of heaven would execute judgment on the whole earth.

1:8, 9 Myrtle is an evergreen tree that was once common in the vicinity of Jerusalem (Neh. 8:15).

1:10 Darius had an elaborate network of imperial inspectors who went about the empire investigating complaints and dealing with disloyalty among the subjects. Similarly, the Lord has His patrollers to observe and report.

1:11 When Darius took the throne of Persia the empire was in an upheaval. Many provinces were in revolt. During his first two years of rule, Darius defeated nine kings in nineteen battles to secure his throne. Now all was quiet and peaceful.

1:12, 13 The prophet overhears a conversation between the Angel of the LORD and God. This may be a conversation between the pre-incarnate Jesus and the first Person of the Trinity, God the Father (Ps. 110). It is certainly an allusion to Jesus' role as Intercessor. As the author of Hebrews states, Jesus lives to make intercession for us (Heb. 7:25) at the right hand of the Father. The seventy years refers to the period of exile during which the temple lay in ruins (586–515 B.C.; Jer. 25:7–14).

1:14 the angel who spoke with me: This is the interpreting angel in the dramatic vision, not the Angel of the Lord (v. 11). I am zealous: The passion of the Lord can be seen in His defense of His special relationship with Israel and Jerusalem.

1:15 I am exceedingly angry: Here the anger of God was against the nations that He had used to punish His unrepentant people.

1:16 God promised to show compassion on His people and to rebuild the Jerusalem temple (My house). A surveyor's line was used to make measurements in preparation for new construction. The stretching of the line was a promise that the work would begin and that the completion of the task would follow.

1:17 again choose Jerusalem: Jerusalem's election is a prominent emphasis in Zechariah (2:12; 3:2). The word Zion describes Jerusalem in an affectionate way (Zeph. 3:14).

1:18–21 In the second night vision, Zechariah sees four horns (vv. 18, 9) and four craftsmen (vv. 20, 21). Here God promises to destroy those enemies who have scattered His people.

1:18, 19 Animal horns were often used by poets and prophets as symbols of powerful nations and their kings (Dan. 7:7, 8, 24). The horns that persecuted Israel and Judah included Assyria, Babylon, Medo-Persia, and later Greece.

1:20, 21 four craftsmen: The craftsmen or "smiths" destroyed the horns (v. 19). Historically, Babylon destroyed Assyria, Medo-Persia conquered Babylon, Greece conquered Medo-Persia, and Rome overcame Greece. These are dominant themes in the prophecies of Daniel (Dan. 2; 7).

2:1–3 Taking measurements and establishing boundaries is the first step toward rebuilding the city. The Lord is about to take possession of His place.

2:4, 5 This young man refers to Zechariah. Here the words may indicate that Zechariah was young when he began his prophetic ministry (Jer. 1:6). towns without walls: Jerusalem will have no need for defensive fortifications because God's presence will guarantee its safety and security. These words refer ultimately to the future Jerusalem under the rule of its glorious king (Zeph. 3:15–19). I will be the glory: These words drive us to the vision of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:1–3, 10, 11, 22, 23).

2:6 Though Babylon was east of Israel, travelers typically followed the Euphrates River and approached Israel from the north.

2:7 The name Zion may have first applied to the Jebusite stronghold captured by David (2 Sam. 5:7). It was later used for the temple mount (Ps. 78:68, 69) and became a synonym for Jerusalem (Is. 40:9; Mic. 3:12). Daughter of Babylon signified the people living in the city of Babylon.

2:8, 9 The word touches refers to a touch that produces harm. The apple of His eye refers to the pupil. This is an endearing expression, suggesting how enormously important the Hebrew people are to God because of His covenant with them. Just as we protect our eyes from even the smallest particles of dust, so God protects and cares for His people. Then you will know: The fulfillment of this prophecy would authenticate Zechariah's commission as God's spokesman (Deut. 18:21, 22).

2:10 daughter of Zion: As elsewhere, we may think of this phrase as a particularly affectionate manner of addressing Jerusalem and its people as the daughter of the Lord (Zeph. 3:14).

2:11 Many nations refer to Gentiles who will enter into a relationship with God and become His people (Gen. 12:3; Joel 2:28; Amos 9:12; Rev. 21:24). The words My people are used elsewhere in the context of the renewal of God's covenant with His believing people (Jer. 31:33; 32:38; Hos. 2:23; Ex. 3:7; Deut. 4:20; 14:2; 26:19).

2:12 Surprisingly, the familiar phrase the Holy Land occurs in the OT only here. The land is holy because of the presence of God among His believing people.

2:13 God had aroused Himself from His heavenly sanctuary and was about to intervene on behalf of His people. Hence be silent was not an anticipation of worship, but calls for terror at the judgment that was about to be unleashed from God's glory (Zeph. 1:7).

3:1–10 The fourth night vision—the cleansing of Joshua the high priest—depicts how the nation of Israel will be cleansed spiritually by the Messiah's work.

3:1 Zechariah saw a heavenly courtroom where Joshua, representing the people of Judah, was standing before the Angel of the LORD and was being accused by Satan. This is not the Joshua who succeeded Moses, but the high priest who returned to Jerusalem with the exiles (Ezra 3:2). Satan: The Hebrew is literally "the Satan," meaning "the Accuser." The picture is not unlike that of Job 1, where Satan stands before the Lord making accusations against people who follow God.

3:2 The LORD rebuke you, Satan: These words presuppose an earlier conversation in which Satan made accusations against the people and their priest. We are reminded that Satan is not sovereign; he is subject to the Sovereign Lord who will handle him. The brand plucked from the fire refers to Judah, delivered from the fire of Babylonian captivity. Joshua, their priest, represented the nation, a people of God's favor.

3:3 The high priest represented the people before God (Ex. 28:29) and under no circumstances was to become defiled or unclean (Ex. 28:2; Lev. 21:10–15). Joshua's filthy garments were literally "befouled with excrement."

3:4, 5 The cleansing of Joshua was not complete with the removal of his sin-soiled garments. God replaced the dirty clothes, dressing Joshua in clean garments that represented the gift of God's righteousness. As sin is removed by the work of Christ, so His righteousness is placed in the believer's account (Rom. 5:18, 19; 2 Cor. 5:21). We are clothed in the garments of Christ's righteousness. The fact that Joshua had no part in his cleansing indicates that this work was totally by God's grace.

3:6–10 These verses give the application of the vision to Israel in three parts: (1) to Israel's restoration to the service of the Lord (vv. 6, 7); (2) to the coming of Messiah (vv. 8, 9); and, (3) to the millennial reign (v. 10).

3:7 Joshua was recommissioned as the nation's high priest. For his faithfulness he was promised the privilege of exercising authority over God's temple—My house—and its courts.

3:8 The coming Messiah is depicted as God's Servant (Is. 53:11). He is also referred to as the BRANCH. Isaiah used this word and a similar one to describe the Messiah who will grow out of the root of the family of Jesse as a tender sprout shoots up from the ground (6:12; Is. 4:2; 11:1; 53:2). Joshua and his companions were a sign because the reinstitution of the priesthood made public God's continuing intention to fulfill His promises to His people.

3:9 stone: Like the priest Aaron, who possessed a jeweled ephod (Ex. 25:7; 35:9), so the new priest possessed a lustrous stone, a symbol of the authority of his office. The eyes may be symbolic of wisdom and of the endowment of the Holy Spirit (4:10; Is. 11:2).

3:10 Sitting under the vine and under the fig tree is an image of peace and tranquillity characteristic of the messianic kingdom (Mic. 4:4).

“angel”

(Heb. malak) (4:1; 2 Sam. 2:5; 24:16; Ps. 34:7; Is. 37:9) Strong’s #4397: This noun may refer to angelic beings (4:1, 5; Gen. 19:1; Ps. 91:11), human messengers (Gen. 32:3; Deut. 2:26), or ambassadors (Is. 30:4; Ezek. 17:15). A special use is the manifestation of the Godhead known as the Angel of God in the OT (2:6; Gen. 21:17; Ex. 14:19). In the OT, prophets (Hag. 1:13) and priests (Mal. 2:7) function as messengers from God. In Zechariah, angels bring revelations from God about the future and interpret the meaning of dreams and visions (1:14; 6:4, 5). Jesus identified the messenger who prepared the way for the day of the Lord, forecast in Mal. 3:1, as John the Baptist (Matt. 11:10, 11).

4:1–14 The fifth night vision concerns the golden lampstand between the two olive trees. The lampstand is designed to show that the rebuilding of the temple will be accomplished not by human ingenuity but by divine power.

4:1 wakened me: It appears that these night visions came in the course of a single night.

4:2, 3 The lampstand of solid gold would remind the people of the lampstand in the tabernacle and the temple.

4:4–6 The rebuilding of the temple, which had at last begun in earnest (Ezra 5:1, 2; Hag. 1:14), would be accomplished not by human strength or resources, but by the power of God's Spirit.

4:7 The great mountain was a figurative reference to the great obstacles the people faced in rebuilding the temple (Ezra 5:3–17). The setting of the capstone would mark the completion of the project. The words Grace, grace to it may be understood as a prayer for God's favor, or as a cry of admiration over the grace and beauty of the newly built temple.

4:8, 9 His hands: The promise concerning Zerubbabel is significant; the task that he began he would also complete.

4:10 the day of small things: There is nothing wrong with a small work. Little can indeed be much if God is in it. These seven, a number used symbolically to represent the idea of completeness, are identified as the eyes of the LORD ("eyes" in 3:9). The fact that these eyes will rejoice at the plumb line in Zerubbabel's hand suggests the delight of God over the rebuilding of the temple.

4:11–14 The two olive branches are identified as two anointed ones, representatives of the religious and political offices in Israel, or of priest and king. Many identify the two branches with the high priest Joshua and the governor Zerubbabel.

5:1–4 The sixth night vision of the flying scroll indicates that there will be severe judgment on those who neglect the basic provisions of the Law of God.

5:2 A scroll was made of rolled parchment or leather and was the ancient equivalent of a book (Jer. 36:1–8). A cubit was about 18 inches.

5:3 The writing on the scroll was a message of judgment. The curse refers to the judgments spoken of in the Mosaic covenant (Deut. 30:7). The message on the scroll warned that the curses described in the covenant as a result of the people's disobedience would be executed upon the whole land.

5:4 And consume it: God's great love does not preclude the exercise of His judgment on those who violate His will. The judgment upon the disobedient would be certain and severe.

5:5–11 The seventh night vision concerns a woman in a basket. From this vision the prophet learns that sin and wickedness will be removed from Israel and will center in Israel's nemesis, Babylon.

5:6 The word translated basket is literally ephah, a unit of dry measure of about half a bushel. The word translated resemblance was understood as iniquity in some ancient versions.

5:7, 8 The woman sitting inside the basket is Wickedness, a personification of sin.

5:9 Next Zechariah saw two women, God's agents, disposing of the wicked woman in the basket. the wings of a stork: The stork is a migratory bird frequently seen traveling north along the Jordan valley in the spring of the year.

5:10, 11 Shinar was an ancient name for the district in which the cities of Babylon (Babel), Erech, Accad, and Calneh were located (Gen. 10:10; 11:2). Babylon was the place of Judah's captivity. The fact that a house was built for the woman suggests that the removal of wickedness (v. 8) from Israel was permanent.

6:1–8 The eighth night vision depicts four chariots coming from between two bronze mountains. The vision indicates that divine judgment will fall upon the Gentile nations.

6:1 chariots: In ancient times two-wheeled and fourwheeled horse-drawn carts served as vehicles for transportation and for warfare. The war chariots usually had a crew of two or three men including a driver, an archer, and a defender who used a shield to protect the others.

6:2–4 Some commentators have sought to find symbolic significance in the colors of the horses, but this involves unnecessary speculation. As in 1:8–11, the colors of the horses add a sense of intensity to our awareness of what the prophet saw.

6:5 These chariots and their teams represented four spirits of heaven, probably angels.

6:6, 7 The horses were eager to take the four spirits on their mission to bring divine judgment on the peoples of the earth.

6:8 The activity of the chariot teams would give rest to God's Spirit because His agents would be executing His judgment on the nations that threatened Israel. Cyrus's overthrow of Babylon in 539 B.C. may well have been a part of this judgment (Is. 13:1–22; 45:1–6).

6:9–15 Zechariah's eight night visions are followed by the symbolic crowning of Joshua the high priest. This vision serves as a fitting climax for this section (1:7—6:15).

6:10, 11 The captives refer to the new arrivals from Babylon, who brought gifts of silver and gold to help the restored community of Israelites. The elaborate crown was possibly a composite crown made up of several circlets. The crown was to be placed on the head of Joshua the high priest.

“BRANCH”

(Heb. tsemach) (3:8; 6:12; Is. 4:2; Jer. 23:5) Strong’s #6780: The Hebrew term translated as BRANCH here means “Shoot” or “Twig.” This is one title for the coming Messiah, the “Branch” who would “shoot” up from the royal stock of David, a dynasty that had been interrupted with the Babylonian exile (Is. 11:1). Many of the prophets promised that a King from David’s line would reign in righteousness (Jer. 23:5, 6) and as a priest would reestablish true worship of the Lord (6:12, 13). In His ministry, Jesus Christ fulfilled these predictions by taking on both a royal (John 12:13–15; 1 Tim. 6:13–16) and a priestly role (Heb. 4:14).

6:12 The Messiah Himself will build the temple of the LORD. Since the restoration temple (the second temple) was already being built and would be completed by Zerubbabel (4:9), the temple referred to here may be the future temple of the messianic kingdom (Is. 2:2–4; Ezek. 40—42; Mic. 4:1–5; Hag. 2:7–9). The temple of Zerubbabel was a prophetic symbol of the temple that is still to come.

6:13 He will sit and rule and be a priest. In the Messiah the two offices of king and priest will be united (John 1:49; Heb. 3:1).

6:14 The elaborate crown is to be kept in the temple as a memorial to those who brought the gifts from Babylon and as a reminder of the future union of Israel’s king and priest in the coming Messiah.

6:15 Those from afar include Gentile peoples (8:22; Hag. 2:7–9; Eph. 2:13). Here again we hear the theme of God’s purpose for bringing His blessing and His salvation to peoples abroad (2:11); there are those from the most remote nations of the earth who will join the faithful of the covenant community in the true worship of God. God’s election of Abraham was designed ultimately to bring His blessing to all families of the nations (Gen. 12:3).

7:1—8:23 This section deals with a matter that was of utmost concern for the Jews living in Babylon—the observance of religious fasts. The issue is considered primarily in 7:1–7 and 8:18, 19. The text leads to insights in the nature of true religion.

7:1 The fourth year of Darius was 518 B.C. The ninth month or Chislev (the Babylonian name) corresponds to November-December.

7:2 The words translated house of God may also mean "Bethel," a town twelve miles north of Jerusalem. Over two hundred Jews from Bethel returned from Babylon in 538 B.C. (Ezra 2:28; Neh. 7:32), and the city was reoccupied during the restoration period (Neh. 11:31). It seems most likely that the people of Bethel sent a delegation to ask a question about the priests in Jerusalem.

7:3, 4 The house of the LORD of hosts refers to the temple in Jerusalem. The fast in the fifth month (July-August) commemorated the destruction of the temple in 586 B.C. (2 Kin. 25:8). The delegation from Bethel wanted to know if it was necessary to continue this annual fast as it had been observed during the Babylonian captivity.

Fasting for the Upwardly Mobile

You may think of fasting as something done only by people who have taken vows of poverty, or perhaps by the highly devout. But Zechariah discussed fasting for people who were prospering materially (Zech. 7:5). Largely because their community was in the middle of a building boom, they were moving up the ladder economically. In today's terms they might be called upwardly mobile.

It is interesting that Zechariah challenged these people with fasting in the context of community development and social justice (Zech. 7:6–10). This leads to at least three reasons why fasting can be a valuable practice for people who are recovering economically and moving up in the world: (1). Fasting can help us remember what it was like to be hungry and to do without.

(2). Fasting can help us focus on the Lord and His spiritual resources that sustained us when we didn't have much.

(3). Fasting can help us open our hearts and identify with the poor and hungry in our world.

7:5, 6 did you really fast for Me—for Me: The rhetorical question was designed to confront the people and priests with the selfish motives of their self-righteous fasting. Biblical fasting is meant to be time taken from the normal routines of preparing and eating food to express humility and dependence on God during a time of prayer. There was only one required fast in the Law of Moses, the fast on the Day of Atonement (Lev. 16:29). The fast during the seventh month lamented the slaying of Gedaliah (2 Kin. 25:25). The seventy years (1:12; Jer. 25:11; 29:10) refer to the period of time while the people were in exile and the temple lay in ruins. for yourselves: Their fasting and their feasting were both motivated by self interest rather than a desire to honor God.

7:7 The former prophets were those who ministered before the Exile (1:4; 2 Chr. 36:15, 16). The South is the Negev, the dry region of Judah around Beersheba. The Lowland is the transitional region between the hill country of Judah and the coastal plain.

7:8–10 Zechariah's four admonitions highlight the practical social concerns that many of the prophets emphasized (Is. 1:11–17; Hos. 6:6; Mic. 6:6–8). Execute true justice: Judicial decisions must be made without partiality or bias. Show mercy and compassion: Loving commitment and concern should guide our relationships with others. Do not oppress: No advantage is to be taken of the helpless and less fortunate. Let none of you plan evil: Evil scheming against others is prohibited. Sacrifices and worship are of little interest to God if they are not accompanied by practical piety.

7:11–14 Zechariah describes the response of the disobedient Judeans living in the land before the Babylonian exile. The consequence was God's judgment—they were scattered.

8:1–17 While 7:8–14 looks back to the consequences of past disobedience, this section looks ahead to the future and focuses on the restoration and blessings of Zion.

8:1–3 The Lord again states that He is zealous for Jerusalem (1:14; Nah. 1:2). This theme in Zechariah emphasizes the Lord's great passion for His people. He longed to bless them with His presence and in turn desired their worship. Zion is the poetic equivalent of Jerusalem (2:7). The label City of Truth will be valid only when the Messiah brings His righteous reign to that city. Then the land will be holy (2:12).

8:4, 5 Zechariah predicts that in the future messianic era, Jerusalem will be inhabited and secure. The longevity of the citizens and the presence of children at play in its streets suggests the city's future prosperity and divine blessing.

8:6 The rhetorical question implies that nothing is too marvelous or difficult for God.

8:7, 8 The terms east and west represent all parts of the earth. The expressions My people and their God (2:11) occur in the descriptions of God's covenant relationship with His people (Ex. 19:5; 29:45; Lev. 26:12; Hos. 2:23). With these words, Zechariah anticipates a renewal of God's covenant with His people (Jer. 31:31–34).

8:9 The foundation of the second temple was laid in 536 B.C. (Ezra 3:8–13).

8:10 no wages … no peace: Zechariah recounts the desperate situation in Judea before the work on the temple resumed in 520 B.C. (Hag. 1:1, 6, 10, 11; 2:16, 17).

8:11–13 In the past, the people had been subject to God's discipline. In view of their recent obedience with regard to rebuilding the temple, they could now anticipate His blessing. Let your hands be strong: In view of God's gracious purposes and future plans for His people, they were called to be diligent in their present efforts to serve Him with sincere hearts (1 Cor. 15:58).

8:14, 15 These verses contrast God's past and present dealings with the people of Judah; they are retrospective of the beginning of the prophecy (1:3–6).

8:16, 17 Zechariah set forth the ethical obligations of a life of faith. He upheld the positive values of truth and justice and condemned evil plans and false oaths. The words speak each man the truth are quoted by Paul in Eph. 4:25.

8:18, 19 As a result of God's blessing on his obedient people, the former fasts will become feasts. The fast of the fourth month commemorated the breach of Jerusalem's walls (Jer. 39:2). The fast of the fifth commemorated the temple destruction (2 Kin. 25:8). The fast of the seventh commemorated the slaying of Gedaliah (2 Kin. 25:25), and the fast of the tenth commemorated the beginning of Nebuchadnezzar's siege of Jerusalem (2 Kin. 25:1, 2).

8:20–23 Here Zechariah announces a great turning of the nations to God. During the messianic era, a multitude of people from many cities will go to Jerusalem to seek the LORD. These Gentiles will be included among the people of God by faith (Eph. 2:13–19).

9:1—14:21 In this section Zechariah sets forth some end-time prophecies concerning Israel and the nations. Some scholars believe that these chapters are not original to the book and are anonymous prophecies dating from a later period. These arguments are based on supposed different style and vocabulary; however, the end-time thrust of this section may well account for these differences. No Hebrew manuscript of the book has ever discovered with this section of Zechariah missing from it.

9:1–8 The critical debate in this passage is in regard to the historical fulfillment of the prophecy. Many commentators identify this section with the campaign of Alexander the Great through Palestine (332–331 B.C.). Others have argued for a military campaign during the time of Josiah, Tiglath-Pileser III, Sargon, or the Maccabees. No one historical setting really answers exactly to the situation described in these verses. More recently it has been suggested that this section is set in the literary form of a "Divine Warrior Hymn," a poem which describes a warrior-god's battle and establishment of peace. According to this view, no specific historical situation lies at the background of the poem. Rather, Zechariah is poetically anticipating God's intervention among the nations with a view to the establishment of the blessing He has promised Israel. The use of place names does not record an actual battle march, but is suggestive of the lines a battle march might take.

9:1 The word burden suggests that a weighty judgment must be declared. Hadrach was north of Hamath on the Orontes River, southwest of Aleppo. Damascus, 60 miles northeast of the Sea of Galilee, was the capital of Aram (ancient Syria).

9:2 Hamath is mentioned in several places as the northern limit of the promised land (Num. 13:21; Josh. 13:5). Tyre and Sidon are port cities located north of Israel on the Phoenician coast.

9:3, 4 The complete overthrow of Tyre by Alexander the Great in 332 B.C. illustrates how even such a powerful city can come under God's judgment.

9:5, 6 Ashkelon, Gaza, Ekron, and Ashdod were Philistine cities located on Israel's coastal plain south of Joppa (1 Sam. 6:17). The city of Gath completed the "five principal cities" of the Philistines. Zechariah prophesied that the worst fears of the Philistines would be realized as the judgment of the Lord swept through their land.

9:7 The removal of blood from his mouth and abominations refer to the cessation of unlawful and idolatrous practices (Lev. 17:14; Is. 65:4; 66:17). Ekron like a Jebusite: The Jebusites were the old inhabitants of Jebus, the stronghold that became Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:6, 7).

9:8 God will return as a victorious Warrior to the temple—My house—where He will set up a guard against any who would dare tramp through Judah's territory.

The Coming King

Luke tells us that after Jesus ascended to heaven, the disciples returned to Jerusalem (Luke 24:52). They also went back to the Scriptures. The OT suddenly blossomed with good news. Everywhere they looked they found evidence that pointed toward the specifics of Jesus' life and ministry. When they wondered why they had missed the connections before, they must have also remembered Jesus' promise, "When He, the Spirit of truth, has come, He will guide you into all truth" (John 16:13).

When the Gospel writers recorded the details of Jesus' life, they often used references from the OT to illustrate how clearly Jesus fulfilled the character of the promised Savior and the prophecies regarding His ministry. They particularly enjoyed quoting OT passages that clearly predicted the suffering and rejection aspects of the Messiah's role. For them, it was the central theme that set Jesus apart from the popular ideas of a conquering and powerful political messiah.

Zechariah 9:9, 10 presents a prophecy whose fulfillment was clearly set in motion (though not completed) by Jesus' arrival in Jerusalem on a colt, the well-known Triumphal Entry. Both Matthew and John mention this passage. John even notes that the disciples saw no immediate connection between Jesus riding on the colt and His identity as the Messiah prophesied in Zechariah. After Jesus was glorified, "then they remembered that these things were written about Him" (John 12:16).

These verses in Zechariah include an important transition. The arrival of the saving King is followed immediately by a description of the effects of his long-term reign. This is an example of "prophetic compression." Viewed from the broader context of prophecy, Zechariah was mentioning together two stages in God's plan which are actually separated in time. The coming King would arrive twice. Jesus came first as a humble King of peace and salvation, accomplished in Jesus' earthly ministry and His death on the Cross. Second, Jesus will come as a victorious Ruler over all the world who will "speak peace to the nations." We should rejoice over Jesus' first coming and anticipate the complete fulfillment of Zechariah's prophecy at Christ's glorious return.

9:9, 10 The first coming of the Messiah is set against the background of God's victory march (vv. 1–8).

9:9 This prophecy was fulfilled on the day of the Triumphal Entry, when Jesus rode into Jerusalem on the colt of a donkey (Matt. 21:2–7; John 12:12–15). The donkey was the mount of princes (Judg. 5:10; 10:4; 12:14) and kings (2 Sam. 16:1, 2).

9:10 Instruments of warfare—the chariot and the battle bow—will be destroyed and universal peace will be established. Ephraim refers to the northern tribes of Israel. The River refers to the Euphrates, the northeast boundary of the promised land (Gen. 15:18).

9:11, 12 The release of prisoners announced here would serve as a great encouragement for the Jewish people still in exile. Though the prisoners were living in a well-watered place in Persia (Ezek. 1:1), they were in a place akin to a waterless pit in terms of their opportunity for spiritual nourishment. They were exhorted to return to the stronghold Jerusalem.

9:13 Zechariah used a bold metaphor likening Judah and Ephraim to a bow and arrow prepared by the Lord to be used against Greece, literally Javan (Is. 66:19).

9:14 whirlwinds: This description, patterned after God's appearance at Sinai (Ex. 19), reveals God's sovereignty and power to protect His own.

9:15 Zechariah describes the victory banquet of God's people in celebration of His victory over the nations and securing of Jerusalem. The people will be filled with drink like sacrificial basins were filled with blood, and they will be filled with meat like the corners of a sacrificial altar (Ps. 110).

9:16 As a shepherd cares for his flock, so God will save and care for His people. And the people whom He saves will be lustrous as jewels, like a banner over His land. Here we sense God's joy in the salvation He provides for His people.

9:17 The abundance of grain and new wine suggests the prosperity and blessing of this future day (3:10; 8:4, 5; Amos 9:13).

Fortune-Telling: A Dangerous Delusion

There were apparently droughts in Judah after the exile (Zech. 10:1), and some of the people were turning to diviners and false gods for help rather than the Lord (10:2). This was utterly foolish in light of the fact that Judah's exile had been a judgment for exactly these kinds of practices (compare Jer. 14:1–10).

The Lord condemns all forms of divining, fortune-telling, and sorcery (Deut. 18:9–14). Practices such as rain dances, consulting the stars, seances, and casting charms and spells, and the use of items such as divining rods, tarot cards, Ouija boards, and crystals are far from innocent. These arts and objects engage demons that are in opposition to the one true God. Their leader is a liar (John 8:44), and his strategy is to deceive people (2 Cor. 11:3, 4). The way of true wisdom is to be found in a relationship with God, not through dabbling in the occult.

10:1–12 Here Zechariah describes how the Lord will restore His people to their land. The unifying theme of this section is the restoration of the Jewish people by divine power.

10:1 The latter rain (Deut. 11:14) refers to the rain that comes in late spring and is essential for an abundant grain harvest.

10:2 Idols refers to household gods (Gen. 31:19). Diviners, like Balaam, interpreted omens as a means of foretelling the future (Josh. 13:22; 1 Sam. 6:2). no shepherd: The metaphor of shepherd was often used in the ancient Middle East to represent a king or ruler (Ezek. 34:6–8, 23, 24). Here the emphasis was on the lack of spiritual leadership.

10:3 While Israel lacked national leadership, there were plenty of tyrants seeking to rule God's people. These goatherds will be judged. By way of contrast, God will strengthen the house of Judah as an instrument to overthrow these oppressors.

10:4, 5 The poetic metaphors in these verses reflect the strength, stability, and victory that God will impart to His people (vv. 3, 6). Cornerstone is an image of steadfast strength or stability, coupled with beauty and honor (Is. 28:16; Ps. 118:22). tent peg: A peg firmly in place suggests permanence and endurance (Is. 22:23). battle bow: This image pictures the strength necessary for military conquest (2 Kin. 13:17).

10:5 Some commentators have interpreted this verse with reference to the Maccabean victory over the Syrians, but the context is more general and eschatological. Nothing in the verse demands a report from a Maccabean battle; the verse may speak prophetically of a class of victories like those of the Maccabees.

10:6 The house of Judah indicates Israel's southern territory. The house of Joseph is Israel's northern territory, dominated by Ephraim (v. 7) and Manasseh, tribes named after Joseph's sons (Gen. 41:51, 52). The promise I will bring them back is a promise of restoration. The dispersed remnant of Israel would return to the promised land (Matt. 24:31).

10:7 What was promised to Judah in v. 5 is here promised to Ephraim. as if with wine: Wine is used here as a symbol of abundant joy (Ps. 104:15; Amos 9:13; John 2:1–11).

10:8–12 Zechariah develops God's promise to regather His scattered people from world-wide dispersion (Matt. 24:15–20). Some commentators suggest that these verses detail the future regathering of only the Northern Kingdom, represented by the tribe of Ephraim (10:7). The text, however, does not appear to limited the promise to Ephraim. Indeed, God will bring both “Judah” and “Joseph” (the southern and northern tribes) back to the land (10:6).

10:8 As a shepherd signals his sheep, so the Lord will whistle for His people to return to the land. For I will redeem them: God will deliver them from sin (3:4, 9) and from the bondage of captivity (Matt. 24:31).

10:9 Being sown among the peoples was God’s punishment of the exiles for their disobedience (Deut. 28:63, 64). The words they shall remember Me anticipate their turning to the Lord in repentance. Shall live implies more than mere survival. God promises spiritual life and blessing to the repentant.

10:10 Assyria is the region of northern Mesopotamia. Egypt and Assyria had been lands where Israel was captive. Gilead is the territory east of the Jordan and southeast of the Sea of Galilee. Lebanon is the region north of Galilee. The future restoration will be so complete that the land will be filled with people.

10:11 God would remove any impediment to Israel’s return. Zechariah used imagery from the Exodus—the sea, the River—to illustrate the kinds of obstacles God would overcome (Ex. 14:21–31; Josh. 3:14–17).

10:12 I will strengthen them: The regathering will be accomplished by God’s power as He gives strength to His people. they shall walk … in His name: In the last days, Israel will return to the land as a believing nation (v. 8; 12:10—13:1; Rom. 11:26).

11:1–17 Zechariah records prophetically the rejection of the Good Shepherd and the acceptance of a worthless shepherd who brings ruin.

11:1–3 These verses introduce ch. 11, setting forth in vivid, poetic terms the devastation of the land of Israel due to Israel's rejection of the Messiah, the Good Shepherd (11:4–14; Matt. 23:37–39). The judgment anticipated here was probably fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans (A.D. 70).

11:1 Lebanon was known for its beautiful and fragrant cedars, trees used by Solomon in building his palace and the temple.

11:2, 3 The cypress, or juniper, will wail for the cedars of Lebanon. The shepherds will wail because the grazing lands will be ruined. The lions will roar because of the destruction of the pride of the Jordan, the jungle thicket that was their shelter.

11:4–14 These verses are regarded as among the most enigmatic in the Hebrew Scriptures. The passage describes a shepherd who cares for a flock doomed to be slaughtered. The flock represents Israel, and the shepherd represents a divinely appointed leader who was rejected by His people. The rejection results in severe judgment.

11:4 Zechariah was commanded to feed or pasture the flock of God's people Israel, knowing it was destined for slaughter.

11:5 God's people Israel were suffering under the oppression of leaders who were only interested in self-enrichment (Ezek. 34:1–10).

11:6 The petty tyrants and oppressors (v. 5) will fall victim to foreign kings who attack the land.

11:7 In obedience to God's command (v. 4), Zechariah pastured the flock doomed for slaughter. As shepherds carried implements to guide and protect the sheep (Ps. 23:4), so Zechariah had two staffs. Their names Beauty and Bonds suggest that he wanted the flock to enjoy God's favor and to experience national unity. According to Canaanite legend, the god Baal was given the two clubs named Driver and Chaser to battle the dark deities of the sea. It is appropriate that God's messenger Zechariah is given shepherd's staffs to guide the people, instead of clubs for fighting.

11:8 three shepherds: Some have suggested that the three shepherds represent classes of rulers in Israel: kings, priests, and prophets. Others suggest that they refer the last three kings of Judah or to certain high priests of the Maccabean era.

11:9 Let what is dying die: The judgment which God has decreed should be accepted, not resisted. eat each other's flesh: Cannibalism was one of the horrors of famine that resulted from siege warfare (Deut. 28:54–57; Lam. 4:10).

11:10 The breaking of the staff Beauty symbolizes the end of God's protection of His people. break the covenant: God's unconditional promise to Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3) or to David (2 Sam. 7:12–16) would never be broken. Like Ezekiel's covenant of peace (Ezek. 34:25), the covenant here may refer to an agreement with the Gentile nation on Israel's behalf.

11:11 Those who witnessed Zechariah's symbolic breaking of his staff (11:10) immediately realized that it had prophetic significance. They knew it was from the Lord.

11:12 Zechariah, taking the role of the messianic shepherd, requested his wages for service rendered. His wage was calculated as thirty pieces of silver, the price of a slave (Ex. 21:32). This was the price paid to Judas for betraying Jesus (Matt. 27:6–10).

11:13 The command throw it to the potter is further illuminated by Zechariah's action. He threw them into the house of the LORD for the potter. Potters may have been connected with the temple because of the continual need for sacred vessels (Lev. 6:28).

11:14 The rejection of the messianic Shepherd, represented by Zechariah, meant that the national unity the Israelites hoped for would not be achieved at this time. But one day the two nations Judah and Israel will be united (Ezek. 37:16–28).

11:15–17 The rejection of the good shepherd will result in a leadership vacuum that will be filled by a wicked shepherd who will actually destroy the flock.

11:15, 16 To take the implements of a foolish shepherd means to behave like one. Eat the flesh and tear their hooves expresses the savagery of a foolish shepherd.

11:17 The worthless shepherd will be judged. His arm, which should have been used to protect the sheep, will wither. His right eye, which should have watched over the sheep, will be blinded.

12:1–9 Zechariah looks to the future day of Israel's deliverance from her enemies, when the unbelieving Gentile nations are destroyed. The prophet is suggesting that the final establishment of God's kingdom will be preceded by a concerted, but unsuccessful, opposition to the people of God.

12:1 As in 9:1, the burden is a weighty judgment that the prophet must discharge. Three phrases are used here in describing the greatness of God as Creator of the heavens, the earth, and the spirit of man.

12:2 Jerusalem is depicted as a cup of wine or strong drink that causes drunkenness. The cup is a common metaphor for God's wrath (Is. 51:17; Jer. 25:15; Ezek. 23:33; Rev. 14:10; 16:19). Siege warfare involved encircling a city to prevent the inhabitants from fleeing and to cut off all supplies of food and water.

12:3 Jerusalem is compared to a heavy stone that brings injury to anyone who tries to remove it from its place.

12:4 God will confound both the horses and horsemen of the besieging army. The threefold judgment of confusion, madness, and blindness appear in the curses of the covenant (Deut. 28:28).

12:5 The governors or leaders of Judah would affirm God's power to deliver through His people. The people's strength would be in the LORD (Phil. 4:13).

12:6 Judah is compared to (1) a firepan used to carry hot coals for the purpose of starting a fire, and (2) a fiery torch that could quickly ignite a field of cut grain.

12:7 Tents of Judah alludes to Jews living outside Jerusalem in the rural districts of the land. The house of David means David's descendants.

12:8 With bold analogy, Zechariah compares David's descendants to God. The Angel of the LORD is clearly a divine being (Ex. 23:20; Num. 22:22; Judg. 2:1; 13:15–22).

12:9 All the nations that have attacked Jerusalem (v. 2) will be judged and destroyed (Matt. 25:31–46).

12:10—13:6 Zechariah goes on to describe the further deliverance of His people in terms of repentance and spiritual renewal. The events described here have their eschatological setting at the time of the Messiah's Second Advent.

12:10 pour: This metaphor is derived from the deluge of winter rains and speaks about abundant provision (Job 36:28; Is. 44:3; Lam. 2:19). Spirit of grace refers to the gracious working of the Holy Spirit that leads to conviction and repentance (John 16:8–11). supplication: The Spirit will stimulate an attitude of repentance and prayer for God's mercy. There are many significant ministries of the Holy Spirit in the period of the Hebrew kingdom. Me whom they pierced: Jewish commentators often regard this as a corporate reference to the Jews killed in the defense of Jerusalem (12:1–9). The Jewish Talmud views the text as referring to the Messiah, who will be pierced in battle. The messianic view is favored by the fact that Jesus was pierced with a spear after His death on the Cross (John 19:34).

12:11 Hadad Rimmon may have been the site of some tragedy whose grief was still vividly remembered. Or the place may have been associated with religious rites involving mourning.

12:12–14 All of Israel will mourn for the Messiah, including members of the royal family and the priests, the house of David and the house of Levi. wives by themselves: These words are quoted in the Talmud as an argument for separating men and women in worship. But the verse seems to indicate that each mourner will face his or her sorrow alone, without the comfort of companionship. Shimei was Levi's grandson (Num. 3:18, 21).

13:1 The fountain is an image of abundant, overflowing provision. Christ at the Cross made available cleansing from the impurity of sin. At the time of Christ's second coming, the repentant and believing remnant of Israel will appropriate that provision and enter into the benefits of the New Covenant (Jer. 31:31–34; Ezek. 36:25–28). Paul anticipated this great day in Rom. 11:26.

13:2–6 Zechariah announces that there will be a day when God will purge false prophets from the land, along with idolatry and demonic influence.

13:2 cut off the names of the idols: In ancient times, a person's name reflected his or her reputation. Zechariah anticipated the complete removal of the reputation and acknowledgment of false gods.

13:3 According to the Law of Moses (Deut. 13:5; 18:20), a false prophet must be put to death. The startling thing here is that the false prophet's parents must confront the offender and carry out the penalty.

13:4–6 These verses reflect the shame and embarrassment of those who have been involved with false prophecy. They will shun every link with their past.

13:4 False prophets will deny that they are prophets for fear of punishment and will refuse to wear a robe of coarse hair, the traditional prophet's clothing (2 Kin. 1:8; Matt. 3:4).

13:5 Instead of laying claim to prophetic office, they will say they have been farmers from their youth. This seems to be a parody of Amos 7:14.

13:6 It is likely that the wounds betrayed the profession of an ecstatic prophet who slashed himself on the back or breast. The words between your arms refer to the body, either the back or the chest. Self-inflicted wounds were thought to gain the attention and blessing of the gods (1 Kin. 18:28). Under questioning, the man declares that the wounds were received from friends so that he will not be found out as a false prophet and be put to death (v. 3).

13:7–9 Zechariah resumes the shepherd motif (11:4–14) and returns to the theme of the Messiah's rejection.

13:7 The sword, an instrument of death, is likened to a warrior being roused for action. The Lord commands the sword to strike the Messiah, My Shepherd. This clearly indicates that the death of Jesus was no accident, but was divinely determined. My Companion: This term is used elsewhere of one who is a near neighbor or close companion (Lev. 6:2; 18:20; 19:15).

It suggests a relationship of equality. The little ones may be first-century disciples, unbelieving Jews of all ages, or a faithful remnant of the future. Since Jewish people have suffered throughout history (the Crusades, the Spanish Inquisition, the Nazi Holocaust), this passage may be taken as a general prophecy of persecution and suffering for the shepherdless people of Israel.

13:8 Zechariah revealed the devastating result of God's dealing with His errant flock. The scattered flock will face a great judgment in which only one-third will survive.

13:9 The remnant that survives will be purged, purified, and reestablished in a covenant relationship with God. refined: The smelting pot uses intense heat to separate the dross from pure metal. tested: Once refined, precious metal must be analyzed to determine its value. The expressions this is My people and the LORD is my God recall the covenant (Lev. 26:12) and speak here about a covenant renewal to a spiritually revitalized Israel (Ezek. 36:28; Hos. 2:23; Rom. 11:26, 27).

14:1–5 Zechariah describes events associated with the second coming of Jesus the Messiah at the end of the campaign of Armageddon (Rev. 16:16).

14:1 Some have suggested that this spoil refers to what is seized from Israel's enemies, apparently anticipating the victory mentioned in v. 14. The immediate context, however, indicates that the spoil was taken from Jerusalem by her enemies (v. 2).

14:2 The remnant of the people who survive the attack are evidently the one-third that will be brought through the refiner's fire (13:8, 9).

14:3 The LORD will turn Jerusalem's defeat into a victory. God the Warrior (Ex. 15:3) will intervene on Israel's behalf against the attacking nations.

14:4 Zechariah provides further details about how Jerusalem's deliverance will come about. The Mount of Olives, located east of Jerusalem and the Kidron Valley, is a northsouth hill about 2,700 feet in elevation. The Messiah will return to the Mount of Olives, the same mountain from which He will have ascended after His time on earth (Acts 1:10, 11). On the day of Messiah's return, the mount will be split by a deep east-west valley.

14:5 The splitting of the Mount of Olives will provide a way of escape for the besieged and defeated people in Jerusalem. The site of Azal has not been identified but must be somewhere in the desert east of Jerusalem. The flight of the surviving remnant from Jerusalem is likened to what took place following the earthquake in the days of Uzziah. The saints are literally the "holy ones," angels who will accompany Jesus at His return (Mark 8:38; 2 Thess. 1:7).

14:6, 7 Cosmic upheaval is associated with the second coming. The glory of the Messiah's kingdom is preceded by dark days of judgment. there will be no light: The imagery of darkness as a portent of judgment is common in the prophets (Is. 5:30; 8:22; 13:9, 10; Ezek. 32:7, 8; Amos 5:18, 20; Zeph. 1:14, 15).

14:8–11 Zechariah describes the culmination of the great prophetic promise of a kingdom in which Israel's Messiah will rule on David's throne (2 Sam. 7:12–16; Lk. 1:31–33).

14:8 The term living waters describes running water from a spring or river, in contrast to the stale and stagnant water of a cistern (Jer. 2:13). The water will flow from Jerusalem toward the eastern sea (the Dead Sea) and the western sea (the Mediterranean). In contrast with the seasonal streams that flow only during the rainy season, these streams will irrigate the land both summer and winter.

14:9 Zechariah anticipates the glorious day when the LORD will reestablish His reign on this earth, where it was first challenged by Satan (Rev. 20:1–3; also Pss. 93:1; 97:1; 99:1). This will be the answer to the prayers of all those who pray Jesus' words, "Your kingdom come" (Matt. 6:10). The words the LORD is one speak about His unity and His uniqueness (Deut. 6:4).

14:10 Geba was 6 miles northeast of Jerusalem. Rimmon was about 35 miles southwest of Jerusalem. Benjamin's Gate was most likely the gate in the north wall of the city. The First Gate as not yet been identified. The Corner Gate probably marked the northwest limit of Jerusalem. The Tower of Hananel was probably a defensive fortification on the north wall.

14:11 people shall dwell in it: This is a contrast to the time of Nehemiah when the population of Jerusalem was sparse (Neh. 7:4; 11:1). In the Lord's coming kingdom, the city will be inhabited and its citizens secure.

14:12–15 These verses elucidate 12:4–9 and 14:3, providing further details about how God will fight against and destroy those nations attacking Jerusalem.

14:12, 13 plague: This word was used to describe the judgments of God upon the Egyptians (Ex. 7:17—12:30).

14:14, 15 As the attackers are destroyed, the people of Judah will join the citizens of Jerusalem in recovering the spoil taken by the enemy (v. 1) and capturing additional booty (Hag. 2:7, 8).

The Spinx and the Great Pyramid of Egypt. The prophet Zechariah predicted that Egypt and other pagan nations would be punished and disciplined by the Lord (Zech. 14:16–19).

14:16–21 Zechariah concludes his great prophecy with a description of the worship that will take place in the Messiah's kingdom.

14:16 Repentant and believing people among those nations that had attacked Jerusalem (vv. 1, 2) will worship the King (Jesus, the Messiah) and celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles, a fall harvest festival that commemorated the wilderness experience of Israel (Lev. 23:33–43). This feast of thanksgiving is the only one of the many feasts that will still be appropriate in the new kingdom—the others will have been fulfilled, but thanksgiving will be a continual theme in Messiah's kingdom.

14:17–19 The nations that are unwilling to come to Jerusalem to worship King Messiah and celebrate the feast will be subject to divine judgment. Egypt is used as an example, since it was a traditional enemy of Israel.

14:20, 21 In Messiah's kingdom, the people of Judah and Jerusalem will fulfill their destiny as a holy, priestly nation (Ex. 19:6). The words HOLINESS TO THE LORD will be inscribed on the gold headband worn by the high priest (Ex. 28:36). Holiness will so permeate Messiah's kingdom that even the lowly cooking pots will be holy. The name Canaanite here refers to the merchants who frequented Jerusalem and the temple courts with their wares (Neh. 13:19–22; Matt. 21:12; John 2:14). None will profiteer in the worship of God in the coming age. God's search for true worshipers will be realized in a company of devoted, holy people.

The Book of Malachi

THE BOOK OF MALACHI IS ABOUT THE ERROR of forgetting the love of God. When people forget God's love, it affects their attitudes, home, and worship. With God's love and loyalty in doubt, sacred commitments no longer remain sacred. God sent Malachi to rouse the people from their spiritual stupor and to exhort them to return to the living God. But the Book of Malachi reveals a people who question the reality of their sin and the faithfulness of God, a people hardened through and through. Thus the book ends on a poignant note, a confrontation between a disappointed God and a disappointed people.

In a sense, the Book of Malachi shows that the Old Testament comes to a chasm, with the bickering voices of the people on one side and the stern warnings of God on the other. Only the Lord Himself could provide a way out of this impasse. Malachi looks forward to this deliverance, for he speaks about the one who would prepare the way for the Messiah. The promised Messiah was the only One who could bridge that widening chasm between the people and their God.

Wide agreement exists that the Book of Malachi was written during the last half of the fifth century B.C. Some even pinpoint the date between 420 and 415 B.C. This would place the Book of Malachi about one hundred years after the ministries of Haggai and Zechariah. There are numerous ties in the book to the concerns of Nehemiah, who was governor in Judah around 440 B.C. These include marriages with foreign women (Neh. 13:23–27), not paying tithes (Neh. 13:10–14), neglecting the Sabbath (Neh. 13:15–22), a corrupt priesthood (Neh. 13:7–9), and injustice (Neh. 5:1–13).

After the great turmoil of the wars of the Assyrians, Babylonians, and the Medes and Persians, a period of comparative peace came to Israel's part of the ancient world. The books of the preexilic prophets were formed in the flaming crucible of international wars and catastrophes. But under Persian rule the people were allowed to return to the land in peace. The constant threat of international conflict did not loom over their heads. The Persians collected taxes, but otherwise they were content to leave the Jews alone. Yet economic shortages were still common during this period.

The history of the Jewish people is a story of a recurring pattern of captivity, exodus, and restoration into which Malachi also falls. There are two captivities in the Old Testament story, and two accounts of an exodus of the Jewish people from captivity. The first captivity and the great Exodus is Israel's experience with Egypt at the beginning of Israel's history; the second is Israel's experience with Babylon.

In the account of the first Exodus, Moses and Aaron occupy themselves to a significant degree with the issue of the proper worship of the living God, which was centered in the tabernacle. A significant portion of the Book of Exodus, the whole of Leviticus, and parts of Numbers and Deuteronomy provide guidance for worship at the tabernacle. The point of the Exodus was the creation of the people of God as a worshiping community (Ex. 5:1).

Similarly, two of the books of the second exodus, the return of God's people from Babylon, concern themselves with the proper worship of God. These two books, Haggai and Malachi, focus on worship centered on the rebuilt temple. Haggai exhorted the people to rebuild the temple in Jerusalem in 520 B.C. Thus this book parallels the Book of Exodus in which God gave instructions for the construction of the tabernacle. Similarly, Malachi parallels the Book of Leviticus in that both are concerned with how the people and the priests should act in the temple. Yet there are significant differences. Leviticus emphasizes what the people should do, what offerings they should bring, and what calendar they should keep in their worship of God. Malachi's emphasis is on the attitude of those who bring their worship to God. In Leviticus one reads about how to worship God; in Malachi the focus is on the heart of those who worship.

The priests of Malachi's time were indifferent to the rules of worship (1:6–14), and the people themselves had become apathetic about their offerings to God (3:6–12). Where did this neglectful attitude come from? In a critical introductory verse, God said to the people, "I have loved you." The response of the people was, "In what way have You loved us?" (1:2). The people's suspicion about the motives of God toward them resulted in their halfhearted response to Him. Their apathy toward God was also reflected in their relations with other people—especially their spouses. It had become common at this time for men to divorce their wives. Such men ignored the fact that the Lord was a witness to their marriages, and as a result God ignored their offerings. The prophecy of Malachi is God's response to this "loveless" condition.

Nothing is known of the prophet Malachi apart from this book. We are not even sure that Malachi was the name of the prophet. The word means "My Messenger," and it is possible that the first verse should be translated, "The burden of the word of the LORD to Israel by My Messenger." In any case, Malachi's name identifying him as a messenger of God highlights one of the major themes of the book. Malachi prophesies that God would send a "messenger," a prophecy of John the Baptist, and "the Messenger of the covenant," a prophecy of Jesus (3:1).

In 2:7 the role of a priest is described as "messenger of the LORD of hosts." Based on that description, a priest-prophet in the temple might have used the designation "My Messenger" for himself. Because of the writer's apparent concern with the priesthood, it may be argued that the author of the book was a priest to whom God also gave a prophetic message.

Commentary

1:1 As in the case of Nahum (Nah. 1:1), the prophetic message of Malachi was like a burden from which he needed deliverance (Is. 13:1; Jer. 23:33–38; Hab. 1:1). to Israel: In the postexilic period, the use of the word Israel for the people of Judah expresses the hope that the Lord was in the process of reasserting the fullness of His original promises to His people. The name Malachi means "My Messenger."

1:2–5 A dispute over the love of God. Sadly, the Book of Malachi concerns a series of disputes between the Lord and His people. This section forms the first of six such disputes.

1:2 I have loved you: God is like a loving parent who speaks with fatherly affection. However, His chosen people were like rebellious children who challenged His words of love for them.

1:3 But Esau I have hated: The contrast between the words love and hate here and in v. 2 seems much too strong. But on many occasions in the OT, the verb hate has the basic meaning "not to choose." God's love for Jacob was expressed in His electing grace in extending His covenant to Jacob and to his descendants (Gen. 25:21–26; Is. 44:1–5). In His sovereign purpose, God set His love on the one and not the other. The term hate may carry the idea of indifference as well.

1:4, 5 Edom has said … we will return: Edom was a nation descended from Esau, and they shared Esau's unbelief and self-confidence. Destruction made Israel reexamine her relationship to God. But destruction for Edom resulted only in continued pride and self-effort. LORD of hosts: This expression describes God as the supreme commander of the universe. The hosts are His heavenly armies.

Blemished Sacrifices

Why should the condition of a sacrifice matter to God? He created all things, defective animals as well as the healthy ones. Why would He not accept gifts that were flawed? And why did God care about this enough to have his messenger Malachi speak so strongly? The imperfect sacrifices of the priests and people demonstrated the content of their hearts. The people were not sincere. To sacrifice a perfect, healthy animal looked to them like a waste, and they considered the work of preparing their gifts properly to be a foolish use of time and energy.

Malachi confronted this attitude with the Law of God, which clearly demanded unblemished sacrifices and sincere hearts (Lev. 1:3; 3:1; Deut. 17:1). Malachi also confronted the people with God's judgment of their actions. God was perfectly aware of what they were doing and the condition of their hearts. No sacrifices at all would have been better than second-rate and insincere ones. The people were not giving "sacrifices"; they were merely doing what was convenient, just enough to appear to obey God. Then they would turn around and pat themselves on the back for being righteous.

But though God's people had broken their covenant with Him, God remained true to His promises (Is. 53). He did not shrink from sending His only Son to a cruel death on the Cross. Jesus was the true, unblemished sacrifice to which the OT sacrifices pointed (Heb. 7:26–28). He was perfect —free from all sin. And through Jesus' sacrificial death the Lord provided salvation for all of our sins. In doing this, the Lord demonstrated His sincere love for us because He sacrificed the very best to save us (John 3:16).

1:6 A son honors his father: Here the Lord uses truisms: A father and a master can expect honor from those beneath them, but God was not receiving the honor due Him. I am the Father: The image of God as Father is common in the NT but less frequent in the OT (Is. 63:16; 64:8). who despise My name: In ancient Israel, a name was a symbol of a person's character, works, and reputation. Therefore, this charge was most serious. But the people dare to ask: In what way have we despised Your name?

1:7 God's answer to the question posed in v. 6 was in terms of defiled food. The word defiled describes bread that was not prepared properly. The bread (Ex. 25:23–30) and the table on which it was displayed were holy symbols, but the priests were treating them like ordinary things.

1:8 the blind … lame and sick: The demands of holy worship of God had been made clear in the Law. Only the best should be presented as an offering to the Lord (Lev. 1:3); no one was to come with an offering that was blemished or unclean (Lev. 7:19–21).

1:9 The mercy of the Lord is seen in this verse. Despite their indifferent attitudes toward His commands, God still offered grace to His willful servants. Yet, clearly, there must be a change in both their attitude and actions. This is reminiscent of the mercy God extended to Cain when his worship was also inappropriate (Gen. 4:6, 7).

1:10 shut the doors: In a choice between service without gratitude and no service at all, God chose the second. pleasure: The word describes the desire of God to smile, even to laugh with joy at true worship from a godly people (Pss. 40:6–8; 147:10, 11).

1:11 great among the Gentiles: God would one day receive praise from all the nations. Even the despised Gentiles would offer praise, while God's own people were profaning His holy name (Pss. 87; 117).

1:12 you profane it: The people were treating God with contempt by their careless attitudes concerning their offerings.

1:13 The demands of God were neither understood nor appreciated; they seemed to be mere busywork. stolen … lame … sick: The gifts of the priests were not presentable; some were stolen goods, and others were animals that were useless. To sacrifice something of no value was not a sacrifice at all.

1:14 Can anyone really deceive the Lord? The deception is only in the eyes of the deceiver. I am a great King: The reputation of the Lord among His people was to have been the means whereby all the nations would be drawn to worship Him as well.

IN COMPARISON

Malachi: A Portrait of Spiritual Indifference

When the prophet Malachi began preaching to the Israelites, he found that the people had cold hearts. They were indifferent and apathetic. When he confronted them with their sin, they asked a series of questions that reveal volumes about their spiritual condition.

Question	Significance	Application
"In what way have You loved us?" (1:2)	This question reveals an alarming lack of trust in God. The Israelites were implying that God had been unfaithful to His covenant. "If You really love us, why are we still under foreign oppressors, waiting for the promised kingdom?"	Do we demand proof of God's love for us?
"In what way have we despised Your name?" (1:6); "In what way have we defiled You?" (1:7)	This question shows the halfheartedness and the rationalizations of the nation's religious leaders. They were saying, in effect: "We've been making the required sacrifices. What more do you want?" But as Malachi pointed out, the sacrifices offered to God were unfit animals (1:8-10).	Do we offer God our best in worship, or do we just go through the motions?
"In what way shall we return?" (3:7)	This question reveals an appalling blindness to sin and an arrogant attempt to floss over wrongdoing. "We don't know what You want us to do, because we don't see what we have done wrong."	When faced with our sin, do we make excuses?
"In what way have we robbed You?" (3:8)	This question underscores the people's greed. They did not view their possessions as God's possessions to be used for His glory.	Do we gladly give to God?
"What have we spoken against You?" (3:13)	This question displays the Israelites' callousness. They had said it was "useless to serve God" (3:14). But they continued to think that their external observance of religious ceremonies would satisfy God's demands on their lives.	Do we wholeheartedly serve God?

2:1–16 The prophet explores more deeply why the nation was treating God as it did. His conclusion is that God's treatment stems from a breaking of the covenant by three groups: the priests (vv. 1–9), the people at large (vv. 10–12), and individuals who divorced their wives (vv. 13–16). The word covenant is prominent in these verses.

2:1 The address to the priests shows that the section begun in 1:8 continues in this chapter.

2:2 If you will not … give glory: The behavior of the priests was defiling the name of God. I will send a curse: At the passage of the people into the promised land, the Levites spread before the people the blessings of obedience and the curses on disobedience (Deut. 27; 28). But the priests were not obeying the Law that they were supposed to uphold. They would therefore receive the curses.

2:3 Refuse was the dung in the sacrificed animal that should have been removed when the animal was prepared for sacrifice to the Lord.

2:4 My covenant with Levi: The Levites had been given the privilege of serving the tabernacle (Deut. 33:8–11).

2:5 The covenant of God was with Phinehas, a descendant of the tribe of Levi (Num. 25:1–14). life and peace: The basic meaning of the word peace is fullness, completeness, things as they really ought to be. that he might fear Me: The context here means holding God in reverential awe, responding properly to His wonder, and worshiping Him in spirit and in truth (3:5, 16; 4:2).

2:6 the law of truth: The priests of the OT period had a twofold responsibility—they were to represent the people in holy worship before the living God, and they were to teach and apply God's law to the people. in peace and equity: This refers to complete moral virtue in all things before the Lord.

2:7 In the OT, a prophet was commonly called a "messenger of the Lord." But this is apparently the only time in the OT that priests are specifically called the messengers of the Lord (3:1).

2:8 departed … caused many to stumble: The judgment on the departed religious leader would be more strict because of the ripple effect of that one person's sin. the covenant of Levi: God made this covenant with the tribe of Levi and specifically with Phinehas (v. 4). Other passages also presuppose a covenant (Neh. 13:29; Jer. 33:20, 21).

2:9 The priests had the truth but had not kept it or practiced it. When they acted as judges, they showed partiality, making their sin even worse (Deut. 17:9–11; 19:17).

2:10 one God created us: The use of the term create calls to mind the great creation text in Gen. 1:26–28. deal treacherously: Because God is the Creator of all humanity (Gen. 1:27), He requires that humans deal equitably with one another.

2:11 The term abomination is a strong word indicating a stomach revulsion; the people had done something so awful as to make one ill. institution which He loves: The term institution is supplied by the translation; a more literal rendering might be, "God's holy thing, that He loves." The text presents the ideas of affection and revulsion, which we usually think of in the verbs to love and to hate. Marriage is something God loves; divorce is something He hates (v. 16). The Lord's people had polluted something in which God takes great pleasure. daughter of a foreign god: The question of intermarriage in ancient Israel was not racial nor ethnic but spiritual: lack of faithfulness to God Himself.

2:12 cut off: The phrase may refer to banishment or even death. being awake and aware: The phrase is difficult but may refer to a deliberate offense against the Lord (Lev. 10:1–3).

2:13 the second thing: The prophets at times spoke of the compounding sins of the people (Jer. 2:13). Tears here seem to be judged as hypocritical acts of insincere repentance (Is. 1:10–15). He does not regard the offering: When right things are done for the wrong reasons or with the wrong attitudes, God does not accept them (Ps. 40:6–8). goodwill: The Hebrew suggests God's pleasure and enjoyment. God's pleasure is in sacrifices offered with attitudes of humility, faithfulness, and joy.

Dealing Treacherously in Marriage

The more a nation's divorce rate increases, the more God regards the situation as a national scandal. That seems to be the import of Malachi's words concerning divorce (Mal. 2:14–16). Apparently a substantial number of husbands in postexilic Judah were "dealing treacherously" by divorcing their wives. This treachery involved a retraction of their marriage vows, but it also represented treachery against the Lord.

What provoked this skyrocketing divorce rate? The books of Ezra and Nehemiah tell of those two leaders challenging the men of the land to "put away" the wives that they had married from among the Canaanites and other peoples of the land (Ezra 9; 10; Neh. 13:23–27). These divorces were regarded as a means of national cleansing and a return to the covenant.

But is it possible that this policy of dissolving mixed marriages helped to create a jaded attitude about divorce? Could it have contributed to a climate in which divorce became an easy alternative even when both partners were Jewish, evidence of which we continue to see in Jesus' day (Matt. 19:3–9)?

Malachi, a contemporary of Ezra and Nehemiah, spoke clearly about God's attitude: "I hate divorce" (Mal. 2:16). The prophet warned the people to "take heed to your spirit." A casual attitude toward divorce was a symptom of a problem with one's heart attitude toward the Lord. Loyalty to Him was what counted.

2:14 For what reason: The feigned surprise of the people fooled no one, certainly not the Lord. witness: There are some whose witness may be challenged, but the Lord is not among them (3:5). wife of your youth: These men had not only married pagan wives, but they had divorced their first wives to make room for their new ones. Companion describes a permanent partnership. by covenant: The union of a marriage is formal, public, legal, and sacred, a binding contract.

2:15 make them one: Here the prophet recalls the words from Gen. 2:24, "one flesh." a remnant of the Spirit: This somewhat difficult phrase most likely indicates the work of God's Holy Spirit in the life of the married couple. God has joined them, and by His Spirit He has worked on their behalf to strengthen them. godly offspring: God seeks godly children even as He seeks for true worshipers (John 4:23, 24). take heed to your spirit: We must control our attitudes so that they will be in line with those of God's Spirit.

2:16 treacherously: To the Lord, attitudes of indifference to marriage vows and duties are the actions of a traitor.

Robbing God, Robbing the Poor

As modern-day churches set budgets and allocate financial resources, it is worth noting that in the OT, the Israelites were commanded to give tithes ("a tenth part") of their produce or income for three reasons: to celebrate the abundance of the Lord's provision (Deut. 14:22–26), to support the Levites (14:27; Num. 18:20–24), and to provide for the poor (Deut. 14:28, 29).

In Malachi's day, the postexilic Israelites were withholding their tithes and offerings (Mal. 3:8–10). Apparently they preferred to keep more for themselves rather than give what God asked. In doing so, they were not only robbing from God, they were in effect robbing from the Levites and the poor.

Could the same be true among believers today? Malachi tried to reawaken a sense of corporate responsibility for the poor and for public worship. He knew that obedience to God was more than just private religion; there are social implications to one's relationship with God. One of those implications involves giving away a portion of one's income to those who need it.

2:17 God is wearied by people who do not submit to Him but who argue their points against His revelation. When justice comes, they will be sorry they asked (3:5).

3:1 prepare the way: Here is one of the great, explicit prophecies relating to the messianic age. In its specific detail, this verse resembles the prophecy of Mic. 5:2 concerning the birthplace of the Messiah. Matthew and Mark identify the messenger of this verse as John the Baptist (4:5; Matt. 11:10; Mark 1:2, 3). The Lord refers here to Jesus Christ (as is the case in Ps. 110:1). There are three persons in view in this verse: The Father (the Lord) speaks about of sending a messenger (John the Baptist) who will prepare the way for the coming of the Lord (Jesus). suddenly … His temple: Both the righteous and the wicked will be surprised when the Messiah arrives. Messenger of the covenant: This is a messianic title, referring to the One who will initiate the New Covenant (Jer. 31:33, 34; Matt. 26:28; Heb. 12:24). He is coming: As in Ps. 96:13, this dramatic wording indicates something that was just about to occur. However, it would be four hundred years before these words would be fulfilled.

3:2 In this verse Malachi turns to the second coming of the Messiah. This second advent will be one of judgment and purification (Joel 2:11; Amos 5:18; Luke 21:36; Rev. 19:11–21). refiner's fire … launderers' soap: These two images are vivid illustrations of the purifying process. The Savior King Himself will sift all people to prepare for His reign.

3:3 purify the sons of Levi: Since the priests had come under such strong censure in this book (1:6—2:9), and since the prophet himself was likely a priest, these words would have had a special significance for him.

3:4 The Hebrew word translated pleasant refers to things that are sweet and pleasing. God derives joy from the end result of His work.

3:5 judgment: The same word may be translated justice (2:17). The people had wondered where the God of justice was; now they will know. Sorcerers were people who made potions. fear Me: Holding God in reverence and awe also means obeying Him (2:5; 3:16; 4:2).

3:6 I do not change: We might expect these opening words to ensure the nation's doom; instead, they give assurance of God's continuing mercy.

3:7 The history of Israel is not a record of everincreasing obedience. Instead, it is a long, sad story of recurring departure from God. Return: This is the key term in the Hebrew prophets for repentance, renewal, and restoration (Is. 55:11; Jer. 4:1; Zech. 1:3).

3:8 The tithes were the gifts to the Lord that the Law required. There were three: two that were annual and one that came every three years. The tithe supported the priests and Levites, and also widows, orphans, and foreigners (Deut. 14:28, 29).

3:9–11 The people were cursed with poor production from their land and animals. A key verse from the Law of Moses reads that the curse will come “because you did not serve the LORD your God with joy and gladness of heart, for the abundance of everything” (Deut. 28:47). The forces that caused loss of production are pictured collectively as the devourer.

“try”

(Heb. bachan) (3:10; Gen. 42:15, 16; Ps. 26:2; Jer. 9:7) Strong’s #974: This Hebrew verb means “to try,” or “to put to the test” (Job 23:10; Ps. 139:23; Zech. 13:9). The word can mean “to test” in the sense of separating or discriminating one thing from another (Job 34:3). When this word is used to depict God’s “testing” of people, it means the proving of individuals in such a way that their faith becomes more established (Ps. 66:10–12; Jer. 17:10; 20:12). Malachi’s challenge to the Israelites to try God is a rare instance in which people are encouraged to test the faithfulness of the Lord (3:10). This word for try can be contrasted with another Hebrew verb for testing, nasah. That latter word is frequently used in a negative sense, to describe the way Israel was testing God with their unbelief (Ex. 17:7; Pss. 78:18; 95:9). The Law of Moses warned the Israelites not to tempt God (Deut. 6:16; Ps. 95:9); it was a mark of spiritual adultery (Matt. 12:38, 39). According to James, God tests people in order to grant them the crown of life—but He tempts no one (James 1:12–14).

3:12 One of the ways in which all nations would be drawn to the worship of the Lord was by seeing how the people of Israel fared with the Lord as their God. a delightful land: The adjective indicates enjoyment, life that is genuinely pleasurable (1:10; the related verb is found in 3:1). Faithfulness to God would lead to fruitfulness in the land.

3:13 In this verse God addresses not just their words but the thoughts that prompted them.

3:14 What profit: The people secretly entertained doubts about the value of following the Lord. In fact, they had not really kept His ordinance anyway. The proper attitude is encouraged in 4:4.

3:15 the proud: This word refers to godless, rebellious people (4:1; compare Ps. 119:21; Prov. 21:24; Jer. 43:2).

3:16 There were other voices, those of people who did place themselves under the Law, those who feared the LORD. God did not ignore those who were faithful to Him. a book of remembrance: God never forgets His promises. God teaches us to remember and value the good that people do (Phil. 4:8); He does the same as He commands us. Those who meditate fear the Lord, think highly of Him, and ponder His significance as it relates to their lives.

3:17 The excitement of these words is that we can sense the pride God has in His children. The Hebrew word translated jewels could be rendered "special treasure." It is a wonderfully endearing term that is used in the OT only of the people of Israel as they are valued by the living God (Ex. 19:5; Deut. 7:6; Ps. 135:4).

3:18 one who serves God: Serving God means putting Him first, obeying His commands, and finding one's chief joy in life as the advancement of the glory of His name.

4:1–6 The last chapter of the Book of Malachi departs from the dispute pattern of the first chapters. Now there is the solemn voice of the living God giving warnings to the people based on the reality of the great and coming Day of the Lord.

4:1–3 The first set of warnings are based on the certainty of the coming Day of the Lord, while the second (4:4–6) focus on the coming of Elijah in that day.

4:1 Scripture consistently describes a coming day when God will arrive as a Judge and will deal with the wicked (v. 5; compare Is. 13:6–10; Joel 1:15; 2:1–11; Zeph. 1:2—2:3; Zech. 14). the proud: What some people thought about the "blessedness of the proud" is exposed as a grave error (3:15).

4:2 you who fear My name: This is the righteous remnant who held God in wonder and awe, responded to Him in obedience, and lived for Him with constant faith. with healing in His wings: The prophet compares the Savior to a bird whose comforting wings bring healing to the chicks that gather underneath (Ps. 91:1–4).

4:3 trample the wicked: The victory of the righteous over the wicked is a promise of the living God that transcends the two testaments (Ps. 110:4–6; compare Rev. 19:11–21). On the day that I do this: The identity of the Victor is already known.

4:4 Remember: This word means more than simply "to recall." The command is to act on the teaching that had come from the living God. the Law of Moses: The Law had its origin in the Lord, and Moses was the divinely appointed transmitter of God's will and word to the people (John 1:17).

“day”

(Heb. yom) (4:5; Gen. 7:11; Prov. 25:13; Amos 5:8, 18) Strong’s #3117: The Hebrew noun yom has a variety of uses in the OT. It can refer to the daylight hours in contrast to the night (Amos 5:8), or to a twenty-four-hour day, such as a certain day of the month (Gen. 7:11). It may also refer to a time period, such as the “time” of harvest (Prov. 25:13), or even to a year (2 Sam. 13:23). The word is used in the significant phrase “the day of the LORD” (Is. 2:12; Ezek. 13:5; Joel 1:15; Zeph. 1:14). For the prophets, the day of the Lord was the future day when God would decisively triumph over all His foes. That day will be a day of great rejoicing and blessing for God’s faithful servants (Is. 2), whereas for God’s enemies it will be a day of “darkness” (Amos 5:18).

Statue of the prophet Elijah. The Old Testament ends with God's promise to send "Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord" (Mal. 4:5).

4:5 Elijah the prophet: The story of the prophet Elijah is found in 1 Kin. 17—2 Kin. 2. The NT identifies John the Baptist as this Elijah (Matt. 11:14; 17:10; Mark 9:11–13; Luke 1:17). There are three ways in which this prophecy might be fulfilled: (1) John the Baptist, whom Malachi had already prophesied (3:1), was the first to fill the promise of the Elijah figure. John, like Elijah, was a minister of the Lord calling people to repent and prepare for the coming of the Messiah (Matt. 11:14). (2) Elijah appeared in person along with Moses at the Transfiguration, a stunning vindication of the messianic role of Jesus (Matt. 16:28—17:8). (3) An Elijah-like figure will appear at the end times; he will call fire down from heaven just as Elijah did (1 Kin. 18:36–40; Rev. 11:1–7).

4:6 Malachi ends with both a promise and a warning. fathers to the children … children to their fathers: As in every act of God announcing judgment, there is also an offer of His mercy (Jon. 4:2). a curse: The term is one of the harshest in Scripture. The Hebrew word suggests complete annihilation. This is the term translated doomed in the account of the destruction of Jericho (Josh. 6:17).

The Intertestamental Period

THE READER OF THE NEW TESTAMENT QUICKLY becomes aware of having entered a world quite different from that of Malachi. New religious and political parties have risen to prominence. A new world power is in control. Even Jewish popular perceptions regarding the Law and God's promised Messiah have changed.

No canonical records exist for the 400-year period between the return from Babylon and the birth of Jesus, but an understanding of the historical and religious developments during this time is critical to our understanding of the New Testament world. Jesus' ministry and the development of the early church take place within this new context and are shaped, at least in part, by more recent events as well as by Israel's Exodus, kingdom, and the Exile.

One Period—Six Divisions

If the Book of Malachi was completed in about 450 B.C., then the period under consideration begins at that point and continues until the angel's announcement of the birth of John the Baptist (Luke 1:11–17). Six historical divisions are observable within this time span: The Persian Era, which actually dates to 536 B.C. but coincides with the Intertestamental Period from 450 to 336 B.C.; the Greek Era (336–323 B.C.); the Egyptian Era (323–198 B.C.); the Syrian Era (198–165 B.C.); the Maccabean Era (165–63 B.C.); and the Roman Era (63–4 B.C.). This study will look at these six divisions chronologically, giving attention to the historical situation and the religious developments within each segment.

The Persian Era (536–336 B.C.)

Historical Situation

The Persians were the dominating power in the Middle East as far back as 536 B.C. God had used the Persians to deliver Israel from the Babylonian captivity (Dan. 5:30, 31).

Persia's attitude was tolerant toward the Jewish remnant in Palestine, until internal rivalry over the politically powerful office of high priest resulted in partial destruction of Jerusalem by the Persian governor. Otherwise the Jewish people were left undisturbed during this period.

Religious Developments

The Babylonian captivity was used by God to purge idolatry from His people. They turned to Jerusalem with a new reverence for the Scriptures, especially the Law of Moses. They also had a firm grasp on the theological concept of monotheism. These two influences carried over into the Intertestamental Period.

The rise of the synagogue as the local center of worship can be traced to this period. Scribes became important for the interpretation of the Scriptures in the synagogue services. By the time Jesus was born, the synagogue was well developed in organization and was spread throughout the Jewish communities of the world.

Another development that affected the spread of the gospel during New Testament times had its origin toward the end of the Persian rule. A temple was founded in Samaria, establishing a form of worship that rivaled Judaism. That event encouraged the ultimate social and religious separation between Jew and Samaritan.

The Greek Era (336–323 B.C.)

Historical Situation

Alexander the Great was the central figure of this brief period. He conquered Persia, Babylon, Palestine, Syria, Egypt, and western India. Although he died at the age of thirty-three, having reigned over Greece only thirteen years, his influence lived long after him.

Religious Developments

Alexander's cherished desire was to found a worldwide empire united by language, custom, and civilization. Under his influence the world began to speak and study the Greek language. This process, called Hellenization, included the adoption of Greek culture and religion in all parts of the world. Hellenism became so popular that it persisted and was encouraged by the Romans even into New Testament times.

A long and bitter struggle developed between the Jews and Hellenism's influence upon their culture and religion. Although the Greek language was sufficiently widespread by 270 B.C. to bring about a Greek translation of the Old Testament (the Septuagint), faithful Jews staunchly resisted pagan polytheism.

The Egyptian Era (323–198 B.C.)

Historical Situation

With the death of Alexander in 323 B.C., the Greek empire became divided among four generals: Ptolemy, Lysimachus, Cassander, and Selenus. These were Daniel's "four kingdoms" that took the place of the "large horn" (Dan. 8:21, 22).

Ptolemy Soter, the first of the Ptolemaic dynasty, received Egypt and soon dominated nearby Israel. He dealt severely with the Jews at first, but toward the end of his reign and on into the rule of Ptolemy Philadelphus, his successor, the Jews were treated favorably. It was during this time that the Septuagint was authorized.

The Jews prospered until near the end of the Ptolemaic dynasty, when conflicts between Egypt and Syria escalated. Israel again was caught in the middle. When the Syrians defeated Egypt in the Battle of Panion in 198 B.C., Judea was annexed to Syria.

Religious Developments

The policy of toleration followed by the Ptolemies, by which Judaism and Hellenism coexisted peacefully, seriously undermined the Jewish faith. It brought a gradual infiltration of Greek influence and an almost unnoticed assimilation of the Greek way of life.

Hellenism's emphasis on beauty, shape, and movement encouraged Jews to neglect Jewish religious rites that were aesthetically unappealing. Thus worship was influenced to become more external than internal, a notion that had a lasting impact upon Judaism.

Two religious parties emerged: the Hellenizing party, which was pro-Syrian, and the orthodox Jews, in particular the Hasidim or "Pious Ones" (predecessors of the Pharisees). A struggle for power between these two groups resulted in a polarization of the Jews along political, cultural, and religious lines. This same conflict led to the attack of Antiochus Epiphanes in 168 B.C.

The Syrian Era (198–165 B.C.)

Historical Situation

Under the rule of Antiochus the Great and his successor Seleucus Philopater, the Jews, though treated harshly, were nonetheless allowed to maintain local rule under their high priest. All went well until the Hellenizing party decided to have their favorite, Jason, appointed to replace Onias III, the high priest favored by the orthodox Jews, and to bring this about by bribing Seleucus's successor, Antiochus Epiphanes. This set off a political conflict that finally brought Antiochus to Jerusalem in a fit of rage.

In 168 B.C. Antiochus set about destroying every distinctive characteristic of the Jewish faith. He forbade all sacrifices, outlawed the rite of circumcision, and cancelled observance of the Sabbath and feast days. The Scriptures were mutilated or destroyed. Jews were forced to eat pork and to sacrifice to idols. His final act of sacrilege, and the one that spelled his ultimate ruin, was to desecrate the Most Holy Place by building an altar and offering a sacrifice to the god Zeus. Many Jews died in the ensuing persecutions.

Perhaps a reminder of God's way of working with man is needed at this point. He creates or allows a desperate situation, then calls upon a special, faithful servant. However, man often attempts to rescue himself and may seem almost at the point of success before winding up in worse shape than before. This was about to happen in the life of God's people the Jews. God was simply setting the stage for the coming of the true Deliverer.

Religious Developments

The Jewish religion was strongly divided over the issue of Hellenism. The groundwork was laid for an orthodox party, generally led by the scribes and later called the Pharisees, and for what we may call a more pragmatic faction of the Jews that became more or less associated with the office of high priest. This latter group's pattern of thinking later fostered the rise of the Sadducees.

The Maccabean Era (165–63 B.C.)

Historical Situation

An elderly priest named Mattathias, of the house of Hasmon, lived with his five sons in the village of Modein, northwest of Jerusalem. When a Syrian official tried to enforce heathen sacrifice in Modein, Mattathias revolted, killed a renegade Jew who did offer sacrifice, slew the Syrian official, and fled to the mountains with his family. Thousands of faithful Jews joined him, and history records one of the most noble demonstrations of holy jealousy for the honor of God.

After the death of Mattathias three of his sons carried on the revolt in succession: Judas surnamed Maccabeaus (166–160 B.C.), Jonathan (160–142 B.C.), and Simon (143–134 B.C.). These men had such success that by December 25, 165 B.C., they had retaken Jerusalem, cleansed the temple, and restored worship. This event is commemorated today as the Feast of Hanukkah (Dedication).

Fighting continued in the outlying areas of Judea, with several futile attempts by Syria to defeat the Maccabeans. Finally, under the leadership of Simon, the Jews received their independence (142 B.C.). They experienced almost seventy years of independence under the Hasmonaean dynasty, the most notable leaders of which were John Hyrcanus (134–104 B.C.) and Alexander Jannaeus (102–76 B.C.).

Religious Developments

The most significant religious development of this period resulted from a strong difference of opinion concerning the kingship and high priesthood of Judea. Over hundreds of years the position of high priest had taken on some obvious political overtones. Emphasis had not been upon the Aaronite line but upon political strength. Orthodox Jews resented and resisted this development. When John Hyrcanus became governor and high priest of Israel, he conquered Transjordan and Idumaea and destroyed the Samarian temple. His power and popularity led him to refer to himself as a king. This flew in the face of the Orthodox Jews, who by this time were called Pharisees. They recognized no king unless he was of the lineage of David, and the Hasmonaeans were not.

Those who opposed the Pharisees and supported the Hasmonaeans were called Sadducees. These names appeared for the first time during the reign of John Hyrcanus, who himself became a Sadducee.

The Roman Era (63–4 B.C.)

Historical Situation

The independence of the Jews ended in 63 B.C., when Pompey of Rome took Syria and entered Israel. Aristobulus II, claiming to be the king of Israel, locked Pompey out of Jerusalem. The Roman leader in anger took the city by force and reduced the size of Judea. Israel's attempt at freedom from oppression had paid off for a while, but now all hope seemed to be lost.

Antipater the Idumaean was appointed procurator of Judea by Julius Caesar in 47 B.C. Herod, the son of Antipater, eventuallv became the king of the Jews around 40 B.C.

Although Herod the Great, as he was called, planned and carried out the building of the new temple in Jerusalem, he was a devoted Hellenist and hated the Hasmonaean family. He killed every descendant of the Hasmonaeans, even his own wife Marianne, the granddaughter of John Hyrcanus. Then he proceeded to murder his own two sons by Marianne, Aristobulus and Alexander. This was the man on the throne when Jesus was born in Bethlehem.

Religious Developments

In addition to the Pharisees and Sadducees, two other parties joined the political mix of this time. The Zealots were even less tolerant of change than the Pharisees, and they added a strong nationalistic spirit to the Pharisee's devotion to the Law. The Herodians went a step further toward pragmatic politics than the Sadducees, openly supporting Herod's government and opposing any hint of rebellion. A fifth group, the Essenes, responded to cultural and political issues by withdrawing into a monastic lifestyle.

Despite their differences, all of these people shared a concern for the future of the Jews. And each group had its own expectations for the long-promised Messiah.

Roman Control of Palestine (63 B.C.—beyond NT times)

Conclusion

More than four hundred years after Malachi, the Intertestamental Period came to an end when God sent John the Baptist to announce the coming of His Son, the faithful Servant of the Lord, the Christ—God's ultimate revelation to man.

The Gospel According to Matthew ———— SUCCESSION TO A THRONE IS OFTEN A TIME OF conflict and uncertainty. David's son Absalom tried to usurp the throne (2 Sam. 15:1—18:18). Solomon's choice of successor lost more than half the kingdom to a traitor (1 Kin. 12:20). Menahem assassinated his predecessor in Israel (2 Kin. 15:14). Royalty is a dangerous business.

This is no less true when the heir is the King of kings. If ever there was a high-stakes succession, this was it. A Man claims to be Israel's own Messiah; of course all Israel sits up and takes notice. Of course He must prove His credentials: Who wants an impostor? The Book of Matthew presents Jesus' credentials. It presents Jesus as the King, but King of a totally different kingdom—the kingdom of heaven.

The Gospel of Matthew has many Jewish overtones. For example, the term kingdom of heaven appears thirty-three times and the term kingdom of God four times. No other Gospel lays such stress on the kingdom; the restoration of the glories of David's kingdom was a burning hope for many Jews at the time. Matthew clearly identifies Jesus with that hope by using the Jewish royal title "Son of David" nine times in his Gospel. Furthermore, he calls Jerusalem "the holy city" (4:5; 27:53) and the "city of the great King" (5:35), both uniquely Jewish ways of referring to it. First-century Jews emphasized righteousness, and Matthew uses the words righteous and righteousness more often than the Gospels of Mark, Luke, and John combined.

Matthew also discusses the Law, ceremonial cleanness, the Sabbath, the temple, David, the Messiah, the fulfillment of Old Testament prophecies, and Moses—all from a Jewish point of view. He has fifty-three Old Testament citations and more than seventy allusions to the Hebrew Scriptures. Thirteen times, the book emphasizes that Jesus' actions were a direct fulfillment of Old Testament prophecies. The genealogy of ch. 1 is recognizably Jewish, tracing the lineage of Jesus back through David to Abraham, the father of the Jewish people. Furthermore, the Gospel mentions Jewish rulers (2:1, 22; 14:1) and customs such as ceremonial washing (15:2) without explanation, indicating that Matthew expected his predominantly Jewish audience to be familiar with such practices.

Matthew's Gospel serves several purposes beyond presenting a mere biography of Jesus. One purpose is to prove to Jewish readers that Jesus is their Messiah and promised King. The genealogy in ch. 1 points to Christ as the One who inherited God's promises to David of an eternal dynasty. Jesus' use of a familiar messianic psalm in Matt. 22:41–44 would have clearly implied to any Jew that He was the heir of the Davidic throne. Even though many Jews of Jesus' time were blind to Jesus' identity, Gentiles (such as the wise men) identified Him as Israel's promised King when He was a baby. Finally, the charge that hung above Jesus' head on the Cross clearly highlights His royalty: THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS (27:37). But most important, the Book of Matthew proves Jesus' legitimate authority by highlighting His wise teaching and righteous life (7:28, 29).

Another purpose of the book is to outline the characteristics of the kingdom of God, both for Israel and the church. Orthodox Jews would typically scoff at any assertion that Jesus is their Messiah, let alone their King. They would retort, "If Jesus is King, where is the promised restoration of the kingdom of Israel?" Many Jews of Jesus' day rejected Him as Messiah, even though both Jesus and John the Baptist continually preached that the kingdom was "at hand" (3:2; 4:17; 10:7). This rejection of Jesus by the Jews is a dominant theme of Matthew (11:12–24; 12:28–45; 21:33—22:14). Because of this rejection, God postponed the fulfillment of His promises to Israel and subsequently extended His blessings to both Jew and Gentile in the church.

Matthew is the only Gospel writer who speaks directly of the church (16:18; 18:17). He points to the Gentile composition of this church by including several stories of the Gentiles' faith in Jesus: the wise men, the centurion, and the Canaanite woman. He records Jesus' prediction that the gospel will be preached to all nations (24:14), and the commission to the disciples to "make disciples of all the nations" (28:19). Jesus' teaching pointed to the blessings of the kingdom being extended to Gentiles. But one day, Israel will be restored to its place of blessing (Rom. 11:25–27; 15:8, 9).

A final purpose of Matthew is to instruct the church. An obvious clue to this is in the Great Commission: "teaching them to observe all things that I have commanded you" (28:20). The discipling process involves instruction in the words of Christ, and the Gospel of Matthew revolves around five of Jesus' discourses (5:1—7:28; 10:5—11:1; 13:3–53; 18:2—19:1; 24:4—26:1). Instead of emphasizing a narrative of Jesus' life as Mark does,

Matthew uses the narrative elements in his Gospel as a setting for Jesus' sermons.

This Gospel does not name its author, but it does contain clues. The author knew the geography of Palestine well (2:1; 8:5; 20:29; 26:6). He was familiar with Jewish history, customs, ideas, and classes of people (1:18, 19; 2:1; 14:1; 26:3; 27:2). He was well acquainted with the Old Testament (1:2–16, 22, 23; 2:6; 4:14–16; 12:17–21; 13:35; 21:4; 27:9). And the terminology of the book suggests that the author was a Palestinian Jew (2:20; 4:5; 5:35; 10:6; 15:24; 17:24–27; 18:17; 27:53).

Other details point specifically to Jesus' disciple Matthew as the writer of this Gospel. As a tax collector, Matthew would have been literate and familiar with keeping records of money. Appropriately, this Gospel contains more references to money than any of the others. Furthermore, Matthew's hometown was Capernaum, a village that is given special attention in this Gospel. When Capernaum is mentioned, some special description is usually attached to it (4:13; 11:23).

Matthew wrote the Gospel before the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. He describes Jerusalem in the book as the "holy city" and as though it was still standing (4:5; 27:53), and he speaks of the customs of the Jews as continuing until "this day" (27:8; 28:15). Furthermore, Jesus' prophecy (recorded in 24:2) of Jerusalem's destruction includes no indication that it had already occurred when Matthew wrote Jesus' words. In light of all of this, it is reasonable to conclude that the book was written sometime between A.D. 50 and 60.

Commentary

1:1 Genealogy means "origin." Genealogies were very important to first-century Jews. A genealogy (1) proved that a person was indeed an Israelite, (2) identified the tribe to which he or she belonged, and (3) qualified certain Jews for religious duties such as Levitical and priestly service (Ezra 2:61, 62). Christ's genealogy is crucial to historic Christianity. Matthew traced the lineage of Christ Jesus back to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to show that He was a Jew, but also back through David to inform the readers that Jesus is qualified to rule on the throne of David (2 Sam. 7:12), an event still in the future (19:28). That "the Son of David" precedes "the Son of Abraham" in the genealogical listing is significant. The order of names is inverted chronologically because Abraham preceded David by a thousand years. The reason Matthew reverses the order is found in the nature of the promises God gave to Abraham and David. The promises to David were more narrow than those given to Abraham. The promises to Abraham were personal, national, and universal (Gen. 12:1–3; 13:14–17; 15:1–21; 17:1–21; 21:12, 13; 22:16–18); on the other hand, the Davidic covenant relates to personal and national blessings (2 Sam. 7:13–16; Pss. 89:1–4, 19–37; 132:11–18). In the Gospel of Matthew the Lord Jesus first came to Israel (Matt. 10:5, 6) and then to the world (Matt. 28:19, 20). Just as individual salvation is dependent upon a person's response to the gospel, so the coming of the promised messianic kingdom to this earth is contingent upon Israel's acceptance of Jesus as its Messiah (Acts 3:19–21; Zech. 12:10—14:21). Though He was rejected by Israel as king, God in His grace also sent the message of the gospel to Gentiles (Rom. 11:11–24). This pattern of Christ first coming to Jews and then to Gentiles is a key to understanding the Gospels, Acts, and in fact the entire NT (John 1:11, 12; Acts 13:45, 46; 18:6; 28:26–28; Rom. 11:7–36; 15:8, 9, etc.) The very first words of this Gospel imply the worldwide responsibility of the church.

1:2–7 The mention of women in a Jewish genealogy is unusual. But in addition to Mary, four women are listed in this catalog of names. The extraordinary emphasis is underscored by the kind of women Matthew mentions: Tamar, who was involved in a scandal with Judah (Gen. 38); Rahab, the Canaanite harlot of Jericho (Josh. 2); Ruth, who was not an Israelite, but a Moabite (Ruth 1:4); and Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah, a woman involved in a sin of horrendous proportions (2 Sam. 11:1—12:23), and who may have been a Hittite. At the beginning of his Gospel, Matthew shows how God's grace forgives the darkest of sins and reaches beyond the nation of Israel to the world. He also points out that God can lift the lowest and place them in royal lineage.

1:8–15 Joram … Uzziah: Between these two kings are three links that Matthew omitted (Ahaziah, Jehoash, and Amaziah), as well as Jehoiakim, the father of Jeconiah. Though Matthew obviously knew this, he listed three cycles of fourteen, perhaps for mnemonic purposes (see comment on 1:17). Though "all the generations" (1:17) from Abraham to David were fourteen, not "all the generations" are said to be listed in the last two cycles. Special mention needs to be made of Jeconiah. Joseph is identified as descending from this king of Judah. The problem is that a curse was put on the line of David through Jeconiah (he is called Coniah in Jer. 22:24, 28 and Jehoiachin in 2 Kin. 24:8, depending on whether his abbreviated name is used and whether the English is from the Hebrew or the Greek). Jeremiah 22:24–30 records the curse. He will be childless and no one will sit on the throne of David from his lineage. The reason for the curse is given in 2 Kings 24:9: "He did evil in the sight of the LORD." We are not given the specific sin or sins, but they were such that God cut his line off from the throne of David. Since the physical line of Jeconiah was forbidden to sit on David's throne, Jesus could not be Messiah and at the same time come from the physical lineage of Jeconiah through Joseph. Mary, however, came from the physical lineage of Nathan, son of David (1 Chr. 3:5). In view of this, Jesus could be physically of the line of David through Mary but legally be the son of David through Joseph.

1:16 Joseph the husband of Mary: The genealogy brings the reader to Joseph, a legal heir of David's throne. Matthew, however, is careful not to identify Jesus as the physical son of Joseph. The Greek term translated of whom is a feminine singular pronoun that can only refer to Mary. Had the gospel writer wanted to include Joseph as the father he could easily have used the same practice found in the previous genealogical listing (1:16a), which uses the word begot; so: Jacob begot Joseph, and Joseph begot Jesus. Or he could have used a plural pronoun, rather than the feminine singular, to include them both. Matthew, then, diligently avoided any idea that Jesus was born of any other but Mary and the Holy Spirit. The terms Christ and Messiah both mean "anointed one"; the first is a Greek noun and the second Hebrew. In the OT, anointing pointed to two things: God's choice and His gifting or enablement for the task. People were traditionally anointed to one of three offices: prophet, priest, or king. The Lord Jesus was God's anointed in all three senses: He was chosen by God to be the Savior; He was supernaturally enabled (Luke 4:18–21; Acts 10:38); He is prophet, priest, and king par excellence. (While Christ is prophet, priest, and king, the emphasis in Matthew's gospel falls on His royalty.) 1:17 Abraham … Christ: The genealogy is broken down into three groups of names with fourteen generations in each list. Undoubtedly this would make it easier to memorize. However, the reason for this breakdown may be more significant. The name David in Hebrew has a numerical value of fourteen. Because the heading of the list is "Son of David" (1:1), Matthew may be drawing particular attention to the Davidic thrust in these names. The fortunes of the Davidic throne are also seen here. In the first group the Davidic throne is established; in the second, the throne is cast down and deported to Babylon; in the third, the throne is confirmed in the coming of the Messiah. Further, a basic promissory covenant is set forth in each of these three periods: the Abrahamic in the first (1:3–6); the Davidic in the second (1:6–11); and the New in the third (1:12–16).

1:18 betrothed: Universally, the basic element of marriage is a contract (Mal. 2:14). In Jewish culture this covenant was made about a year before the consummation of the marriage. It was during the one year period of betrothal that Mary was found with child. The fact that Mary was a virgin at this time is clearly implied by before they (Joseph and Mary) came together, and the virgin conception, which is to be deduced from Matthew's account, is stated clearly in Luke 1:34, 35. The righteous quality of Joseph and his desire to divorce Mary when her pregnancy became known (1:19) shows that the discovery of Mary's pregnancy would have been a cruel shock to Joseph. Mary spent the first three months of her pregnancy with Elizabeth in Judea (Luke 1:36–56). Elizabeth understood the miraculous nature of Mary's conception; she also had a supernatural intervention in her pregnancy (Luke 1:39–45). When she returned to Nazareth, Mary's condition became known to Joseph.

1:19 In agreement with the popular Jewish understanding of Deut. 24:1 (Matt. 5:27–32; 19:3–9; Jer. 3:1, 8), Joseph wanted to divorce Mary on the grounds of infidelity. A divorce would be necessary because they had already made a marriage covenant, even though they had not yet known each other physically. Joseph could have made the divorce a public matter, or he could have gone through a private ceremony before two witnesses. Being a gracious and just man, Joseph decided to keep it private.

1:20 conceived … of the Holy Spirit: Verses 1–17 establish Jesus as a legal son of Joseph; vv. 18–25 deny that Joseph was Jesus' physical father. The first was necessary to establish Jesus' lineage to David and His royal right to be King. The second was necessary to establish His qualifications to be the Savior of all people: Jesus was God's Son, not Joseph's. Matthew elaborated on Jesus' kingship while Luke detailed His miraculous conception by the Holy Spirit (Luke 1:26–56).

“Jesus”

(Gk. Iesous) (Matt. 1:21; Luke 1:31; Acts 2:36; 4:18; 13:23; 17:3) Strong’s #2424: The Greek name Iesous is the equivalent of the Hebrew name Yeshua, meaning “The Lord Shall Save.” Although a common name among the Jews (Luke 3:29; Col. 4:11), the name expresses Jesus’ work on earth: to save and to deliver. This is affirmed by the explanation the angel gives Joseph after telling him to name the virgin-born child Jesus: “for He will save His people from their sins” (Matt. 1:21). After Jesus was crucified for the sins of His people and raised from the dead, the early apostles proclaimed Jesus as the one and only Savior (Acts 5:31; 13:23).

1:21–22 call His name JESUS: “Jesus” means “Yahweh is Savior” and is the Greek equivalent of the OT Hebrew name “Joshua.” That Joseph was to name the child (“you shall call” is second person singular) is significant. If the father named the child it meant he was claiming the baby as a member of his family. This gave the Lord Jesus legal rights to the line of David. Even if Joseph had difficulty in doing this, obedience to God demanded it.

What's in a Name?

Jesus was and is Immanuel, "God with us" (Matt. 1:23). In Jesus, God comes to people and lives in their world, rather than have them try the impossibility of going to Him. Jesus does not take people out of the turmoil and pain of daily life; He walks with them in it. Salvation is not an escape from the world but God's engagement with the world. That is where Jesus is, as His name indicates, and that is where He gives people power (Acts 1:8).

1:23–24 Behold … Immanuel: This is a quotation from Is. 7:14, where the prophet Isaiah consoles King Ahaz of Judah. A coalition of two kings, King Rezin of Aram and King Pekah of Israel, was opposing Ahaz. Isaiah tells Ahaz not to fear, for the plans of his enemies would not succeed. As a sign to Ahaz, a son would be born of a woman, and before that boy reached the age where he could tell right from wrong, the two kings would no longer be a threat to Ahaz. There are several interpretations of Matthew's use of this OT prophecy. Some view Isaiah's prophecy as directly prophetic of Jesus' birth and nothing else. According to this view, only the miraculous birth of Jesus can be considered a sign that fits the qualifications of the type of sign with which Yahweh challenged Ahaz (compare Is. 7:11). Since the Hebrew noun translated virgin in Is. 7:14 can also mean "young woman," some have suggested that Isaiah was prophesying about a son born during the lifetime of Ahaz—perhaps Isaiah's son Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz (Is. 8:3). Others have interpreted Isaiah's prophecy as a prediction that a virgin, a contemporary of Isaiah, would marry and have a child. The sign to Ahaz was the sudden dissolution of Rezin and Pekah in the face of Assyria. Even though uncertainty surrounds how this prophecy was fulfilled during Isaiah's lifetime, Matthew makes it clear that Isaiah's words find their ultimate fulfillment in the virgin birth of Jesus, a sign to people of all ages that God was with them, since he follows the Jewish translations of Isaiah in the Septuagint by using a Greek word (parthenos) which only means "virgin."

IN COMPARISON

The Prophecies of Jesus' Birth

Jesus fulfilled hundreds of Old Testament prophecies. Many of these prophecies involved the circumstances surrounding His birth. Below is a list of numerous such prophecies. Note the irrefutable similarities between the Old Testament predictions and their New Testament fulfillment.

Prophecy	Old Testament Prediction	New Testament Fulfillment
The Messiah would be the seed of a woman.	Gen. 3:15	Gal. 4:4
The Messiah would be a descendant of Abraham.	Gen. 12:3	Matt. 1:1
The Messiah would be a descendant of Isaac.	Gen. 17:19	Luke 3:34
The Messiah would be a descendant of Jacob.	Num. 24:17	Matt. 1:2; 2:2
The Messiah would be from the tribe of Judah.	Gen. 49:10	Luke 3:33
The Messiah would be an heir to the throne of David.	Is. 9:7	Luke 1:32, 33
The Messiah would be anointed and eternal.	Pss. 45:6, 7; 102:25–27	Heb. 1:8–12
The Messiah would be born in Bethlehem.	Mic. 5:2	Luke 2:4, 5, 7
The Messiah would be born of a virgin.	Is. 7:14	Luke 1:26, 27, 30, 31
The Messiah's birth would trigger a slaughter of children.	Jer. 31:15	Matt. 2:16–18
The Messiah would also come from Egypt.	Hos. 11:1	Matt. 2:14, 15

1:25 Joseph did not know Mary physically until after she gave birth to Jesus. The clear implication of this verse is that Mary was a virgin only until the birth of Jesus. The brothers and sisters of Jesus were younger siblings born to Joseph and Mary after Jesus' birth (13:55, 56). Joseph could not have had children by a previous marriage, as some suppose, for then Jesus would not have been heir to the Davidic throne as the oldest son of Joseph.

IN DEPTH

The Birth of Jesus

No one knows precisely when Jesus was born. Even His year of birth is only an educated guess based on the information available. The intention of the medieval creators of our calendar was to set the date of Jesus birth at A.D. 1. They simply miscalculated. The Jewish historian Josephus places the death of Herod the Great in 4 B.C., and both Matthew (Matt. 2:1) and Luke (Luke 1:5) presume that Herod was king at the time of Jesus' birth. But it is not clear how much before Herod's death Jesus was born.

We know that Herod became king of the Jews in 37 B.C. Outside of Matthew (Matt. 2:16), no historical record mentions Herod's slaughter of the infants in Bethlehem. Josephus does write that Herod ordered the murders of members of his own family to protect his throne. So it is not surprising that a few peasant children in Bethlehem went unnoticed among Herod's many atrocities, leaving us with no help with dating. Since Herod's calculations led him to target children under two years old, Jesus' birth likely occurred one or two years before Herod's death—in either 5 or 4 B.C.

A date of about 5 B.C. would fit with Luke's note that Augustus, who reigned from 27 B.C. to A.D. 14, was the Roman emperor when Jesus was born (Luke 2:1). Luke's mention of Quirinius (2:2), however, creates a problem. After Herod died, Rome divided his territory among his surviving sons. Archelaus ruled in Judea (Matt. 2:22) until he was deposed by the Romans in A.D. 6. Only then was Quirinius appointed governor, after serving for more than a decade as commander of the Roman troops in the area. Perhaps Luke simply identified him by his later office.

Some have tried to specify Jesus' birth date by appeal to astronomical phenomena that might explain the star of Bethlehem (Matt. 2:2, 7–10). Halley's comet appeared in 12 or 11 B.C. and another comet in 5 B.C. But in antiquity, comets were thought to forecast evil, not blessed, events. In 7 B.C. a rare (once every 794 years) conjunction of the planets Jupiter, Venus, and Saturn occurred in the constellation Pisces. Whether Matthew's star was any of these is pure speculation. For ancient people the star confirmed again that Jesus was the Messiah who fulfilled Balaam's star prophecy (Num. 24:17; Matt. 1:18–25; Luke 2:1–20).

2:1 The events of ch. 2 probably took place some months after Jesus' birth. Several reasons may be offered to support this conclusion: (1) Joseph and Mary were living in a house (2:11); (2) Jesus is referred to as a child, not an infant (2:11); (3) Herod murdered all the male children two years old and under (2:16); and (4) it would have been strange for Joseph and Mary to offer the sacrifice of the poor, a pair of turtledoves or pigeons (Luke 2:24; Lev. 12:8), if the wise men had just given them gold, frankincense, and myrrh. Thus, the wise men must have arrived after the ritual sacrifice described in Luke 2:22–24, 39. Herod the king is Herod the Great, who reigned over Palestine from 37 B.C. until his death in 4 B.C. A crafty ruler and lavish builder, Herod had a reign marked by cruelty and bloodshed. Augustus, the Roman emperor, reportedly said in a paraphrase of a Greek play on words that he would rather be Herod's sow ("pig," Gk. hus) than his son (Gk. huios). His craftiness and murderous ruthlessness are confirmed by Mathew's account in this chapter. The word translated wise men can refer either to fraudulent sorcerers (Acts 8:9, 11; 13:6, 8) or, as here, to a more honorable class of astrologers. Clearly they are the latter in this case. That they were from the East (probably Persia) may help to explain why they were interested in a Jewish Messiah. Perhaps these men learned about the Jewish Scriptures from Israelites who had been deported to Babylon and Medo-Persia. In particular, it is feasible that the writings of Daniel, a wise man in the Babylonian kingdom, would have been of special interest to these magi. Daniel has much to say about the coming of Israel's king, especially the time of his arrival (Dan. 9:24–26).

2:2–3 born King of the Jews: These words would have struck both terror and fury into the heart of Herod. His star in the East may refer to a star supernaturally introduced into the heavens. The star reappeared to guide the wise men to where Christ was (2:9). The fact that it was called "His star" indicates that the wise men identified the star with the arrival of the King of the Jews. It seems God literally moved heaven at the birth of the Savior of the world.

2:4 chief priests: This first mention of the Jewish council—all the chief priests and scribes of the people—reveals that the Jewish leaders were alerted early to the coming of the Messiah. Their quick recital of Mic. 5:2 showed their astuteness concerning the messianic prophecies (Matt. 2:6).

2:5–9 Matthew clearly records how the Jewish religious authorities, who became Christ's enemies later, unintentionally affirmed that Jesus had fulfilled a messianic prophecy in His birth. God can use the words of His opponents to speak the truth (John 11:49–52).

2:10 The wise men undoubtedly would have been discouraged by several things: their failure to find the King in Jerusalem, the lack of knowledge concerning the birth of the Messiah among the leaders, the disinterest among Israel, and their weariness from the long journey. The reappearance of the star must have brought them great joy and encouragement. It might be observed that joy is the mark of a positive response to God's revelation. This is evident in many places (1 Pet. 1:6, 8; Acts 2:46; 5:41; 8:8, etc.).

2:11 Everything in this passage centers on the Lord. Mary is a bystander; Joseph is not even mentioned; Christ is the recipient of the homage and the gifts. He is to have the preeminence in everything (Col. 1:18). Gold symbolized royalty; frankincense was a fragrance; myrrh was the ointment of death.

2:12–14 warned in a dream: Five dreams of divine guidance emphasize God's orchestration of these perilous events (1:20; 2:12, 13, 19, 22).

2:15 fulfilled: This is the second fulfillment of prophecy recorded in ch. 2. The first, in 2:6, is a direct fulfillment of Micah's prophecy about the birthplace of Jesus; this one in 2:15 is a typological fulfillment. The prophecy quoted here, from Hos. 11:1, refers to the nation of Israel as God's son coming out of Egypt in the Exodus. Jesus is the genuine Son of God, and, as Israel's Messiah, is the true Israel (John 15:1); therefore, He gives fuller meaning to the prophecy of Hos. 11:1.

IN CONTEXT

A Poor Family comes into Wealth

What happened to the gifts presented to Jesus by the wise men (Matt. 2:11)? Scripture doesn't say. Clearly they reflected the magi's worship of Christ at His birth. Yet we can speculate that they may have provided the means for His family's flight to Egypt (2:13–15).

The angel's warning and instructions to Joseph were sudden and unexpected, and there was no time to save enough money for such a long journey—if saving was even an option. The family was poor, as is indicated by their offering of turtledoves or pigeons (Luke 2:24), and the costly gifts probably represented more wealth than either spouse had seen in a lifetime.

In this instance, therefore, the offerings of worship may have paid for their journey to Egypt and a new life in a strange land.

2:16–21 This prophecy comes from Jer. 31:15, in which Rachel, who had been entombed near Bethlehem some thirteen centuries before the Babylonian captivity, is seen weeping for her children as they were led away to Babylon in 586 B.C. In the slaughter of the male infants at the time of Christ's birth, Rachel once again is pictured as mourning the violent loss of her sons.

2:22 Like his father Herod, Archelaus was violent and cruel. The Romans tolerated his savagery for ten years and finally deposed him in A.D. 6, after a Jewish delegation took their protest to Rome. Joseph, aware of Herod Archelaus's reputation and guided by God in a dream, turned north to Galilee.

Jesus the Nazarene

The politics of Jesus' day forced Joseph to move his family around. From Bethlehem they fled to Egypt. Their return to Israel found them skirting Judea and finally resettling in the relatively peaceful region of Galilee, in the town of Nazareth. Matthew sees God's providence in these moves. Micah 5:2 had predicted that the Messiah would come from Bethlehem (Matt. 2:6), and Matthew cites another prophecy, "He shall be called a Nazarene," as being fulfilled when Joseph moved to Nazareth (2:23). An exhaustive search of Scripture reveals that the specific words of this prophecy are not found in any OT prophet.

There have been two major explanations of this biblical mystery. Some have traced the origin of the word Nazarene to the Hebrew word for "branch" or "shoot." The word Branch is used by the prophets to speak of the coming Messiah. For example, Is. 11:1 states that the Messiah would come out of Jesse's "roots," as a "Branch" (Is. 53:2). Like a tree that had been cut down, the royal line of David had almost been destroyed in the Babylonian captivity; yet a twig would grow out of the stump. This is Jesus, a descendant of David and the King of kings. Others have pointed to the plural "prophets" in Matt. 2:23 as an indication that Matthew was not referring to a specific prophecy but to a concept that appears in a number of prophecies concerning the Messiah.

The town Nazareth housed the Roman garrison in northern Galilee. Jewish hatred of the Romans was so extreme that most Jews avoided any association with Nazareth. In fact, Jewish people who lived in Nazareth were thought to be "consorting with the enemy." At that time, calling someone "a Nazarene" indicated utter contempt for the person.

Having come from Nazareth, Jesus was despised in the eyes of many Jews. Even Jesus' disciples initially harbored bad feelings about people from Nazareth. When Nathanael heard that Jesus was from Nazareth, he scoffed, "Can anything good come out of Nazareth?" (John 1:46). That Jesus was despised because of His Nazarene background aptly fits several OT prophecies about the humble character of the Messiah (Ps. 22:6–8; Is. 42:1–4; Mic. 5:2).

Whether the word Nazarene is associated with the prophecies of the Messiah as the "Branch" or with the general prophecies of the Messiah's humble character, apparently Matthew's largely Jewish audience would have seen the association clearly. Otherwise Matthew would have provided further explanation.

2:23 Nazareth: So obscure as never to be mentioned in the OT, the village was considered an unlikely place for the Messiah to be raised (John 1:45, 46). It was the location of the Roman garrison in northern Galilee. Those who lived there were suspected of compromise with the enemy.

3:1 As Christ's forerunner, John the Baptist preceded the Lord Jesus in birth, ministry, and death. Luke describes John's birth (Luke 1), but Matthew jumps directly into the account of John's proclamation about the coming of the kingdom of heaven. John is called the Baptist because he baptized people. Unlike the common practice of proselytes and Jews administering ceremonial cleansings to themselves, John baptized those who came to him professing repentance and identifying with his message.

3:2 The Greek verb translated repent indicates a change of attitude and outlook which well may result in sorrow for sins. But the basic idea is a reversal of thinking which changes one's life (3:8). The kingdom of heaven is most likely synonymous with "the kingdom of God." Both terms seem to be used consistently throughout the NT to refer to God's heavenly kingdom coming to earth in the person of Jesus Christ. This kingdom had drawn near in that it was being offered to Israel in the person of the Messiah. Nowhere does the NT say the kingdom was present. (Passages that may imply this will be dealt with in the course of Matthew's Gospel.) The actual coming and presence of the kingdom was contingent upon Israel's response to its Messiah (Acts 3:19–23). This contingency remains to this day (Zech. 12:10–14). The kingdom was at hand because it was being offered to Israel in the person of the Messiah. John's preaching assumed that judgment would precede the coming of the kingdom, a fact that was taught by the OT prophets (Is. 4:4, 5; 5:15, 16; 42:1; Jer. 33:14–16; Ezek. 20:33–38; Dan. 7:26, 27; Joel 1:14, 15; 3:12–17; Zeph. 1:2–18; 3:8–13; Zech. 13:2, 9; Mal. 3:1–5; 4:1–6). At this point, John assumed that the nation of Israel would repent and that the kingdom would come. John told the Jews of his generation to repent in order to gain entrance into Christ's kingdom.

3:3–6 As roads were repaired, smoothed, straightened, and leveled before a king came, so John was preparing a spiritual road for the Messiah before His arrival. The quotation is from Is. 40:3, where the prophet announces the need to prepare a highway for the return of the Jewish exiles from captivity to their homeland, Israel.

John the Street Preacher

Would John the Baptist (Matt. 3:4) have been comfortable using today's media to proclaim his startling message? Probably not. He reflected none of the outward trappings of a successful ministry of his day or a willingness to employ the methods of the status quo. He was not the head rabbi of a large city synagogue. He did not dress in fine clothes, sport a hot chariot, or take sumptuous meals with leading citizens. Nevertheless, news about him spread far and wide, and people throughout the region around Jerusalem and the Jordan came to hear him.

John the Baptist illustrates the truth of Paul's words that "God has chosen the weak things of the world to put to shame the things which are mighty" (1 Cor. 1:27).

3:7–9 The Pharisees and Sadducees were two prominent groups in Judaism during the time of Christ. Both groups claimed to be true followers of Judaism, but their beliefs were considerably different. The Pharisees were primarily associated with the laymen of Israel. In doctrine, they held not only to the Law of Moses, the Prophets, and the Writings, but also to a whole body of oral tradition. Their activities were centered in the synagogue. The Sadducees were associated with the priestly caste, for whom worship was centered in the temple. Extremely conservative, they based their beliefs essentially on the Pentateuch—the books of Genesis through Deuteronomy (Acts 23:6–10).

3:10 the ax is laid to the root of the trees: John likened his ministry to the ax of God clearing His orchard of dead wood, especially that which did not bear the fruit of repentance.

3:11–14 He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and fire: John identified people with himself and his message of repentance by water baptism; the One coming after him was so much greater that He would unite people to Himself by means of the Holy Spirit. John knew that the kingdom to come would be characterized by a great display of the Holy Spirit in the lives of God's people (Is. 32:15; 44:3; Ezek. 11:19; 36:26; 39:29; Joel 2:28; Zech. 12:10). It would be the work of the Messiah to accomplish this, to baptize His people in the Spirit. Those who rejected

Him, the Messiah would baptize with fire, which is probably a figure for God's judgment (3:10, 12). In His first advent, Christ baptized in the Spirit. When He comes again, He will baptize with fire. The meaning of fire here is debated. It probably should be understood as a figure for God's judgment stated both before (v. 10) and after (v. 12). A careful comparison of the four parallel passages (Mark 1:8; Luke 3:16; John 1:33) reveals that baptism with fire is only used when judgment is in the preceding context.

3:15 to fulfill all righteousness: This phrase does not suggest that Jesus came for baptism because He had sinned, for the Lord Jesus was without sin (2 Cor. 5:21; Heb. 4:15; 7:26). Jesus' baptism probably served several purposes: (1) Jesus joined with the believing remnant of Israel who had been baptized by John; (2) He confirmed the ministry of John; and (3) He fulfilled the Father's will.

3:16, 17 the Spirit of God descending: This was God's official recognition of Jesus as the Messiah.

IN DEPTH

The Baptism of Jesus

In the synoptic Gospels, Jesus' baptism marks both His inauguration as the servant Messiah and the dawning of the new age of the Spirit. The Spirit is the agent of a new beginning. The open heaven, the descending dove, and the confirming heavenly voice highlight the ultimate revelatory significance of the baptism. Jesus was anointed by the Spirit of God as the Messiah and the Servant of the Lord described centuries earlier by the prophet Isaiah (Is. 11:2; 42:1; 61:1).

Mark's abbreviated account of Jesus' baptism left it open to several possible false interpretations. Readers of his Gospel might conclude that Jesus was a repentant sinner (Mark 1:4, 9), or that He was inferior to John who baptized Him (1:9), or that He became the Son of God at His baptism (1:10, 11).

The other evangelists denied such speculations early in their Gospels. The birth narrative in Matthew and Luke emphasize that Jesus was conceived of the Holy Spirit (Matt. 1:20) and that even as a baby Jesus was the Christ (Luke 2:11). He was neither sinful nor inferior prior to His baptism. John's prologue makes it clear that Jesus did not become the Son of God through baptism, but that He had been such through eternity (John 1:1–18).

Each evangelist further reformulates the baptism story to preclude any confusion that Mark's account might allow. Matthew introduces a conversation between John and Jesus in which Jesus explains His motive for receiving baptism ("to fulfill all righteousness," Matt. 3:15) and in which John the Baptist acknowledges his inferiority to Jesus (3:14). Luke reports the imprisonment of John the Baptist (Luke 3:19, 20) before describing Jesus' baptism (vv. 21, 22). Yet nowhere in his baptism narrative does Luke refer to John or describe the Spirit coming upon Jesus in response to His prayer.

The Fourth Gospel stresses John the Baptist's inferiority to Jesus (John 1:6–8, 19–37) and never mentions Jesus' baptism by John or John's preaching of repentance. John the Baptist served only as a witness to Jesus: (1) that Jesus received the abiding Spirit; (2) that He is the One who baptizes with the Spirit; and (3) that He is the Son of God (John 1:32–34). (Matt. 3:13–17; Mark 1:9–11; Luke 3:21, 22; John 1:29–34).

4:1, 2 Satan did not lead Christ to the temptation, the Holy Spirit did. At the very beginning of His ministry Christ is proven to be holy and beyond the clever testings of the devil. This temptation took place immediately after Jesus' baptism (compare Mark 1:12). Spiritual victories are often followed by testings (compare Elijah in 1 Kin. 19). Following His public baptism, Jesus was led up by the Spirit into the wilderness, referring to the elevation of the Judean wilderness. The historical setting of the temptation, which was directed against Jesus' human nature, indicates that this was a literal experience which He really conquered, not merely a mental victory over His own thoughts. The reference to being led up by the Spirit makes clear the interrelation of these two members of the Godhead. In His earthly work, Jesus depended upon the ministry of the Holy Spirit to empower Him.

4:3, 4 It is written: Jesus' response to all three temptations was to quote the Word of God, showing His followers the power of Scripture in battling the Evil One (Deut. 6:13; 8:3; Ps. 91:11, 12). There was nothing morally wrong with turning stones to bread; the devil was tempting Jesus to do a miracle outside of the Father's will. This explains why Jesus quotes Deut. 8:3. Bread alone does not sustain life; ultimately God is the One who sustains all life. Thus it is our responsibility to trust God and remain in His will. No matter how innocent an act may be, the ultimate question is one of faith (Rom. 14:23) and God's will.

4:5, 6 throw Yourself down: In quoting the protective promise of Ps. 91:11, 12 to Jesus, the devil omitted the words "to keep you in all your ways." The devil tempted Jesus to gain public attention through spectacle rather than through His righteous life and message. This is a danger that all of us must avoid, especially those who are often in the public eye.

“tempted”

(Gk. peirazo) (Matt. 4:1; Luke 4:2; Mark 1:13; Heb. 4:15) Strong’s #3985: The word means “to try” or “to make proof of,” and when ascribed to God in His dealings with people, it means no more than this (Gen. 22:1). But in Scripture, the word is chiefly used in a negative sense and means “to entice, solicit, or provoke to sin.”Hence the name given to the wicked one in Matt. 4:3 is “the tempter.” Accordingly, “to be tempted” (4:1) is to be understood both ways. The Spirit conducted Jesus into the wilderness to try His faith; but the agent in this trial was the wicked one, whose object was to seduce Jesus away from His allegiance to God. This was temptation in the bad sense of the term. Yet Jesus did not give in to it but passed the test (2 Cor. 5:21; Heb. 7:26).

4:7 Deuteronomy 6:16 emphasizes that no one should test God. The Lord asked the Israelites to put Him to the test in only one area: tithing. By giving to Him they could test whether He would fulfill His promises to bless them (Mal. 3:10).

4:8–10 Christ rebuked the devil for asking for worship, a temptation to do exactly the opposite of what every Israelite was called upon to do (Deut. 6:13, 15). Specifically in reference to Jesus, Satan was offering a crown without a cross. Jesus’ experience serves as a pattern in spiritual warfare today: Jesus resisted Satan (Eph. 6:11, 13, 14; James 4:7; 1 Pet. 5:9), then He defeated Satan with consistent, meaningful use of the Scriptures (Eph. 6:17).

4:11 angels came and ministered: Having rejected Satan’s offer of bread, assistance from angels, and earthly kingdoms, Jesus was immediately visited by angels who helped Him.

4:12–16 The passage quoted here, Is. 9:1, 2, foretells the reign of the Messiah in the coming kingdom. The ministry of Jesus in Galilee was a preview of what was yet to come. Galilee was a fertile, populous area with two major trade routes. The way of the sea was one of those routes.

4:17 The phrase from that time Jesus began occurs twice in Matthew (16:21), and both mark a crucial direction in the book. The one in 4:17 looks to the beginning of His earthly ministry, while 16:21 anticipates His crucifixion and resurrection. Jesus’ exhortation to repent was identical to that of John the Baptist’s (3:2).

4:18–22 I will make you fishers of men: This allusion to Jer. 16:16 was used to call Peter and Andrew to discipleship and a life of ministry. This is not the Lord's first contact with Peter and Andrew (for the first, see John 1:35–42). Many lessons may be learned from this encounter: (1) God delights to use ordinary, even insignificant, people; (2) the lessons learned in life and occupation will prove valuable in serving Christ. The fishermen could use their experience in netting people for the Lord; and (3) genuine obedience is evidenced by immediacy (compare "immediately" in 4:20, 22).

4:23–25 Teaching … preaching … healing summarizes Jesus' earthly ministry. His teaching is illustrated by His discourses; His preaching is illustrated by the announcement in 4:17; His healing is illustrated by His many miracles.

5:1 The multitudes were found at the beginning and end of Jesus' Sermon on the Mount (the term is translated "the people" in 7:28). Yet this verse implies that Jesus left the multitude. Evidently He went away from the crowds so that He could instruct the disciples. As He taught the disciples, the crowds came to where He was. when He was seated: It was normal for a teacher or rabbi to sit while he taught, with his audience gathered around. The mountain: probably a high hill on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee, which would have served as a natural amphitheater. disciples: Jesus had many disciples in addition to the crowds who followed and listened to His teaching. From the many disciples, He selected twelve to receive special instruction and power.

5:2 He … taught them: This Sermon on the Mount recorded by Matthew (chs. 5—7) is slightly different from the sermon preached to the multitude in Luke 6. The essence of this sermon was probably preached many times during Jesus' early ministry. The Sermon on the Mount was not given as the way of salvation for the lost, but as the way of life for true children of the kingdom. It was instruction for those who had responded to Jesus' invitation to "repent" (4:17). These disciples were probably confused as to the true nature of righteousness and God's kingdom. In this address, Jesus clarified both the heart of the law and the nature of true religion in God's kingdom (Mic. 6:8). In a sense, Jesus turned the law, which was mainly negative, inside out to show its positive core (v. 17).

(Gk. makarios) (Matt. 5:3; Luke 6:20–22; Rom. 4:7, 8; James 1:12, 25) Strong’s #3107: This Greek word is derived from the root mak, which means “large” or “lengthy,” and means “fortunate” or “happy.” The Greek word was used in Greek literature, in the Septuagint (the Greek translation of the OT), and in the NT to describe the kind of happiness that comes from receiving divine favor. The word can be rendered happy. In the NT it is usually passive; God is the One who is blessing or favoring the person.

5:3–12 The beatitudes (from Latin beatus meaning “blessed”) are comprised of three elements: a pronouncement of blessing, a quality of life, and the reason why the recipient should be considered blessed. The pronouncement of blessing is found in the word Blessed which introduces each beatitude. In the Greek it literally means, “Oh, the happiness of _____” (Ps. 1:1). It was really a form of congratulations. The second element of the beatitudes does not describe different kinds of people but a composite picture of the kind of person who will inherit Christ’s kingdom (1 Cor. 6:10; Gal. 5:21). The third part of each beatitude looks ahead to some aspect of the coming kingdom. Because an individual with the qualities described in these beatitudes will enter the kingdom, he is to be congratulated.

5:3, 4 Blessed are the poor in spirit: The idea of God blessing the humble and resisting the proud can also be found in Prov. 3:34 and James 4:6.

5:5 The meek … shall inherit the earth refers again to those who have been humbled before God and will inherit, not only the blessedness of heaven, but shall ultimately share in the kingdom of God upon the earth. Earth can also be translated “land” (Ps. 37:3, 9, 11, 29; Prov. 2:21). Here, in the opening statements of the Sermon on the Mount, is the balance between the physical and spiritual promise of the kingdom. The kingdom of which Jesus preached is both “in you” and is yet “to come.” The Christian is the spiritual citizen of the kingdom of heaven now.

5:6 These future possessors of the earth are its presently installed rightful heirs and even now they hunger and thirst for righteousness. They experience a deep desire for personal righteousness, which is, in itself, a proof of their spiritual rebirth. Those who are poor and empty in their own spiritual poverty recognize the depth of their need and hunger and thirst for that which only God can give them. “To hunger” means to be needy. It is joined with “to thirst”; the born-again man has a God-given hunger and thirst (inner passion) for righteousness. This hungering and thirsting continues throughout the life of the believer. He continues to hunger and to be filled and to hunger and to be filled. God supplies his every spiritual need daily. This act of hungering and thirsting after righteousness is the by-product of a regenerated life. They shall be filled (Gk. chortazo) refers to a complete filling and satisfaction. The psalmist proclaimed: “He satisfies the longing soul, and fills the hungry soul with goodness” (Ps. 107:9). This filling comes from God, who is the total source of satisfaction of His people. It comes now and it will continue to come throughout eternity to those who hunger and thirst for it.

5:7 Those who are merciful … shall obtain mercy has reference to those who have been born again by the mercy of God. Because divine love has been extended to them, they have the work of the Holy Spirit in them producing a mercy which defies explanation by unregenerate men. Jesus Himself became the ultimate example of this when He cried from the cross, “Father, forgive them, for they do not know what they do” (Luke 23:34). The form of proverbial teaching should not confuse the order of these statements; for example, the believer does not show mercy in order to obtain mercy, he shows mercy because he has obtained mercy. In so continuing to show the evidence of the grace of God in his life he continues to receive that grace. In other words, he is not saved simply because he shows mercy and is kind to people. He shows mercy and is kind because he is saved.

5:8 Those who are truly saved shall see God. These are the pure in heart. Their lives have been transformed by the grace of God. They are not yet sinless but their position before God has been changed. They have the new birth, saving faith, and holiness. The process of sanctification is ever conforming them to the image of Christ (Rom. 8:29), which image consists in “righteousness and true holiness” (Eph. 4:24). Purity of heart is both the end of our election and the goal of our redemption. We read in Eph. 1:4, “He chose us … that we should be holy,” and in Titus 2:14, “who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us … and purify for Himself His own special people." To which we add Heb. 12:14, "Pursue peace with all people, and holiness, without which no one will see the Lord."

5:9 Peacemakers are the ones who are at peace with God and live in peace with all men (Rom. 5:1). They are called the peacemakers for these are not social reformers, but rather the ones reformed by the regenerating power of the gospel. They are peacemakers because they themselves are at peace with God. They have entered into the peace of Christ and thus are able ambassadors of God's message of peace to a troubled world. Hence, they shall be called the sons of God. These only shall be called the sons of God. Throughout the Beatitudes Jesus clearly underscores that only those who have the life-changing qualities herein described are citizens of His kingdom.

5:10–12 Blessed are those who have been persecuted: Jesus' promise of blessing for persecution appears the most difficult one to accept; it also promises the greatest rewards (the first of many such promises in the NT consummating with Rev. 22:12). It seems strange, indeed. When we see people experiencing this kind of persecution, do we think, "Blessed"? Hardly! Why? Because we are not truly kingdom oriented. If we can really believe what Jesus is saying here, it will revolutionize our attitude toward trials. The truth is that our positions of service and dimensions of glory that we will enjoy in the kingdom are being determined today by how we handle the experiences of this life. It seemed contrary, in fact, to the covenant promises of material blessing for righteous living, on which the Pharisees built their materialistic view of life (Deut. 7:12–16; Ps. 84:11). Jesus clinched His point by appeal to the persecuted prophets (Heb. 11:32–40). For the first time the Lord changes from the third person, "they," to the second person, "you." Perhaps He is saying that if the Beatitudes are lived out in life, the Lord's followers may expect persecution. Persecution is not unusual. Proper response is! The Beatitudes emphasize character. The Lord begins this discourse with this accent to show that being precedes doing. Sometimes it is said that a person's character should not be at issue but only his or her ideas, viewpoints, or actions. The Beatitudes belie such a perspective. Character stands behind each of our thoughts and beliefs.

5:13–16 Two similitudes follow the Beatitudes to point out this principle of doing following being. Some Christians emphasize being so much they never get to the goal of doing anything!

5:13 Pure salt maintains its flavor. In Israel, some salt was mixed with other ingredients. When it was exposed to the elements, the salt would be "leached out." Such leached-out salt was used for coating pathways.

5:16 Let your light so shine: Whereas salt passively affects its environment for good, light must be properly placed so as to best glorify the Father. As Jesus was "the light of the world" … "As long as I am in the world" (John 9:5), the believer now takes that place as the only of the world" to glorify the Father. The believer does not have inherent light; we have reflective light. As we behold the glory of the Lord, we reflect it. Therefore, we need to make sure that nothing comes between us and the Lord's light (2 Cor. 3:18; Phil. 2:14–16).

What about Old Testament Law?

Jesus' critics claimed that His teaching encouraged people to violate the Mosaic Law, allowing them to get away with sin. Actually, He warned people to avoid the hypocrisies of the rabbis. While making an outward show of righteousness they took ethical shortcuts and carried out wicked schemes. In Matt. 5:17–20, Jesus turned the tables on His opponents by appealing to the Law as the basis for His moral code, not the Law as they taught it but as God intended it.

Jesus' words are crucial for Christians today. While God does not require believers to live by the specific regulations of the Law, He still expects them to honor OT morality, in both private and public life.

5:17, 18 I did not come to destroy: Jesus disclaimed the Pharisees' charge that He was nullifying the Law. The Law was both temporary (Gal. 3:19; Eph. 2:15; Heb. 7:12) and eternal (Matt. 5:18; Rom. 3:31; 8:4). As a covenant system with Israel, it ended at the Cross when the temple veil was rent and a new priesthood was established; as a set of spiritual and moral principles, it is eternal. Fulfill (pleroo) means to fill out, expand, or complete, not to bring to an end (teleo). A great deal has been written on how Christ fulfilled the OT (Gal. 3:15–18). He did this in several ways: (1) He obeyed it perfectly and taught its correct meaning (compare vv. 19, 20); (2) He will one day fulfill all of the OT types and prophecies; and (3) He provided a way of salvation that meets all OT requirements and demands (Rom. 3:21, 31). one jot or one tittle: This statement by Christ provides us with one of the strongest affirmations in the Bible of the inerrancy of Scripture. The jot (Heb. yod) refers to the smallest letter of the Hebrew alphabet and the tittle (Gk. keraia) refers to a minuscule distinguishing mark at the end of another Hebrew letter. God's revelation as written by the authors of Scripture has absolutely no falsity even to the smallest detail. It is absolutely trustworthy.

5:19, 20 The righteousness of the scribes and pharisees was essentially external and activity oriented. Christ says God demands more than this, which must have shaken the disciples since the seemingly meticulous righteous deeds of the Pharisees and teachers of the law were viewed as far above that of the average person. In reality, though, the only righteousness that satisfies God's standard is faith in Jesus Christ (Rom. 3:21, 22). Christ's words are also a "declaration of war" against the cherished legalistic system of the Pharisees. Not only will good works, as taught by the Pharisees, not make someone great in heaven, but also the legalism could not get them into heaven.

5:21-48 In communicating the depth of His message, Jesus used a series of contrasts between the outward demand of the Law and the inner attitude of heart desired by God. Here we discover the practical application of genuine Christian character to true spiritual living. The Christian may live above the demands of the Law and the temptations of the world because he has an inner depth of character which is the product of the divine nature within him.

LAW • SPIRIT

(It has been said) • (But I say) Murder • No anger Adultery • No lust Divorce • Commitment Oath-taking • Speak the truth Retaliation • Forgiveness Hate your enemy • Love your enemy Love your enemy 5:21 You have heard refers to the teaching of various rabbis rather than to that of Moses. Jesus was questioning the interpretation of the Jewish scholars, not the OT itself.

5:22–24 The scribes and Pharisees said that a person who referred to someone as Raca, meaning empty head, was in danger of being sued for libel before the council (the Sanhedrin). On the other hand, Jesus said that whoever calls another a fool will have to answer to God. That is not to say that calling someone a fool will condemn a believer to eternal punishment in hell. Rather, using a figure of the destruction of garbage in the valley of Hinnom, Jesus was saying that to utter such words is to place oneself in a worse condition at the time of judgment (1 Cor. 3:12–15).

5:25, 26 It is wise not to have enemies. One should make peace as soon as possible because enemies are capable of doing great damage.

5:27, 28 to lust for her: A man who gazes at a woman with the purpose of wanting her sexually has mentally committed adultery.

5:29, 30 The hyperbole (exaggerated saying) about tearing out one's eye is similar to the phrase in Prov. 23:2, "put a knife to your throat if you are a man given to appetite." In striking overstatement, Jesus advises removing every temptation to evil, no matter what the cost. The warning of hell (v.

22) indicates that those whose lifestyle is characterized by uncontrolled immorality are not heirs of the kingdom (1 Cor. 6:9, 10).

5:31, 32 Sexual immorality is a general term that includes premarital sex, extramarital infidelity, homosexuality, and bestiality (19:3–12).

5:33–37 Do not swear at all does not forbid solemn, official oaths (Gen. 22:16; Ps. 110:4; 2 Cor. 1:23), but only oaths made in common speech. Such oath-taking suggests that a person's normal words cannot be trusted. God's law says, "Do not lie under oath" (Lev. 19:12; Num. 30:2). Jesus was telling His followers not to lie under any circumstances. The phrase to the Lord could be used as a cover-up for falsehood. Any oath with God's name in it was legally binding; however, an oath without God's name was not legally binding. This explains the emphasis of vv. 34–37.

5:38 This law is known as the lex talionis (the law of retaliation) and so important in the OT (Ex. 21:24; Lev. 24:20; Deut. 19:21). It was meant for punishment, but it also restrained or limited retribution and thus curtailed revenge! A person could demand no more than an eye or a tooth.

IN CONTEXT

An Eye for An Eye?

Jesus appears to make some stark, seemingly impossible demands: God's people should never use force in self-defense (Matt. 5:39); they should never contest a lawsuit (5:40); they should comply with every type of demand (5:41); and they should lend without reserve (5:42). Could Jesus possibly be serious?

In this part of the Sermon on the Mount, the Lord is addressing the issue of justice. He was alluding to the OT Law dealing with public vengeance. The Law limited damages in criminal cases to no more than the loss suffered—"an eye for an eye" (5:38; Ex. 21:24, 25). Nevertheless, as might be expected, people tended to justify personal vengeance by appealing to the same texts. We would call it "taking the law into your own hands."

Jesus' morality challenged that. To be sure, some circumstances call for resistance and self-defense. The Law specifically sanctioned self-protection when there was no other apparent recourse (Ex. 22:2). Likewise, Jesus Himself protested when He was slapped (John 18:22, 23).

But He warned against the needless use of force, particularly in revenge. In self-defense the alternative to resistance may be injury or death. But in vengeance one inflicts harm even though immediate danger is past. A slap on the cheek is little more than an insult. There's no place for violence in response to that. Furthermore, vengeance belongs to God (Deut. 32:35; Rom. 12:19–21), who often uses governing authorities to carry it out (Rom. 13:4).

Throughout Matt. 5:17–48, Jesus speaks in stark contrasts and strong hyperboles (overstatements for the sake of emphasis). The key to understanding this section is to keep in mind the major thrust of His teaching: good not evil, grace not vengeance, love not hatred. That is the morality of Christ.

5:39–42 The Lord seems to be speaking in hyperbolic terms to teach the lesson of non-retaliation. Generally He commands us to have a generous and compassionate attitude toward the needy. He makes this application in four areas: physical attacks (v. 39), legal suits (v. 40), government demands (v. 41), and financial requests (v. 42).

5:41, 42 Compels is a technical term that refers to the law of impressment. The Roman government could press anyone into its service to carry a load as far as one mile. Matthew records a Roman officer doing this to Simon of Cyrene in 27:32.

5:43, 44 Hate your enemy is not found in Moses' writings. This was a principle drawn by the scribes and Pharisees from Lev. 19:18.

5:45–47 To be a "son of" was to be like someone or something. That you may be sons of your Father in heaven means "that you may be like the Heavenly Father who displays His love without discrimination."

5:48 This verse, which comes from Deut. 18:13, refers to completeness. In the context of 5:43–48, it seems to mean that Jesus' followers are to be as mature or perfect as God in the ways that they love. God does not lower the standard to accommodate our sinfulness. Rather, He gives us the power to keep His righteous standard. Thus, He says, "Be holy, as I am holy." And He chose us to "be holy and without blame before Him in love" (Eph. 1:4).

The Sermon on the Mount

Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," Jesus warned as He began His public ministry in Galilee (Matt. 4:17). His message quickly spread, and huge crowds came to hear Him from Galilee, from nearby Syria and the Decapolis, and from as far away as Jerusalem, Judea, and east of the Jordan River (4:24, 25).

They came to hear about a kingdom. Instead, Jesus talked about a lifestyle—the lifestyle of those who intend to live in the kingdom. The Sermon on the Mount contains the core of Jesus' moral and ethical teaching:

The Beatitudes (5:3–12). True happiness comes from looking at life from God's perspective, which is often the reverse of the human point of view.

Salt and Light (5:13–16). Jesus wants His followers to influence the moral and spiritual climate of the world.

The Morality of the Kingdom (5:17–48). Jesus' listeners were familiar with the law and with the many traditions that generations of rabbis had added to it. But Jesus revealed a morality that went beyond the letter of the law to its spirit.

Spiritual Disciplines (6:1–18). Practicing religion certainly involves behavior, but it goes beyond an outward show of spirituality to the hidden quality of one's character.

Treasures on Earth (6:19–34). Our relationship to money and material possessions reveals much about our relationship to God. Jesus does not denounce worldly goods, but He urges His listeners to place ultimate value on the treasures in heaven.

Judging Right and Wrong (7:1–6). Most of us are quick to point out the moral flaws of others. Jesus warns us to pay more attention to our own.

Asking and Receiving (7:7–12). When we approach God with a request, we can expect Him to deal with us as a loving father deals with his child. And just as God deals with us in love, He expects us to deal with others in love.

A Challenge to Obedience (7:13–29). Jesus wraps up His message with a challenge to change. The alternatives are clear: living a lifestyle that is worthy of the kingdom, resulting in life and joy; or ignoring the way of Christ, resulting in death and disaster.

In this manner, Jesus described the lifestyle of the kingdom.

6:1–4 they have their reward: The verb translated have was used in receipts and is similar to “paid in full.” The only reward the hypocrites will ever receive is glory from men (vv. 5, 16). Contrast that with the heavenly rewards of Christ given to His followers (2 Cor. 5:10; Rev. 22:12).

6:5–8 Those who pray with improper motives have their reward—like those who do charitable deeds with improper motives (v. 2).

IN CONTEXT

Praying to Our Father

Jesus cautioned His disciples not to pray "as the heathen do," using "vain repetitions" and "many words" (Matt. 6:7). When Greeks and Romans prayed, they often called deities by as many different names and titles as possible. Also, their prayers frequently reminded the deity of any favors he or she owed the worshiper because of sacrifices the worshiper had offered.

Jewish people were not supposed to barter with God or try to impress Him with titles. They were to approach God with confidence that He was their Father, as the OT taught them (Ex. 4:22; Is. 63:16). Most children in the ancient world saw their fathers as strong providers and protectors (with whom they did not need to bargain). Jewish prayers, therefore, regularly invoked God as "Our Father in heaven," and trusted Him to provide (Matt. 6:8, 9; 7:7–11).

Teaching His disciples to pray (Matt. 6:8–14), Jesus adopted a fairly common Jewish prayer called the Kaddish, which was prayed regularly in the synagogues and included the lines: "Exalted and hallowed be His great name … and may He cause His kingdom to rule." This was a prayer for the future kingdom. The Jewish people longed for the ultimate coming of God's reign, when He would rule the earth unchallenged and restore justice and mercy in all the world. At that time God's name would be "hallowed," shown to be holy (Ezek. 39:7, 27); people would no longer profane it by swearing oaths by it lightly or living in such a way as to dishonor it.

"Hallowing God's name" was a central principle of Jewish ethics: Live even among the Gentile in such a manner that people will honor God. The reverse of such honorable behavior, "profaning God's name," was considered so odious that some teachers insisted that those plotting to do evil should disguise themselves as Gentiles first.

6:7 From the motives for praying (vv. 1–6), Jesus turned to methods of praying. Why one prays determines how one prays. Nothing is wrong with repeating prayers (26:39, 42, 44). Here Jesus was referring to the empty recitation of words.

6:7 It is not the length of prayer but the strength of prayer that prevails with God. Jesus Himself prayed all night prior to His crucifixion and on most other occasions prayed very briefly. He is not condemning lengthy prayers, although there is nothing particularly spiritual about them. He is merely emphasizing that prayer must be a sincere expression of the heart, not mere accumulation of verbiage. God is not impressed with words, but with the genuine outcry of a needy heart.

6:8 Many have questioned the meaning of the statement your Father knows the things you have need of before you ask Him. "Then why should we pray?" they ask. Prayer is not man's attempt to change the will of God. God's method of changing our will is to bring it into conformity with His will. More than changing things, prayer changes people. Prayer is not conquering God's reluctance to answer, but laying hold of His willingness to help! Prayer, in the life of the true believer, is an act of total confidence and assurance in the plan and purpose of God.

6:9, 10 In this manner does not mean to pray using only these words, but to pray in this way. People often reduce this prayer to empty recitation —exactly what the Lord said not to do (v. 7). The prayer is composed of six requests. The first three ask for the kingdom to come (vv. 9, 10) and the last three are for God to meet the needs of His people until the kingdom arrives (vv. 11–13). Hallowed be Your name is not an ascription of praise to the Father. The verb is an imperative and means "May Your name be hallowed." This recalls Ezekiel's prophecy in Ezek. 36:25–32, where the prophet says Israel has profaned God's name among the nations. One day God will gather His people from the nations, cleanse them, and by this means vindicate the holiness of His great name. The hallowing of the Father's name means the arrival of God's kingdom.

6:11 Daily bread is a reminder of God's daily supply of manna to Israel in the wilderness.

6:12 This request, explained in vv. 14, 15, is not telling people how to be justified (compare Rom. 3:21–26; Eph. 2:8–10), but how a justified person maintains his day-by-day walk with God. It is not positional, forensic (legal) forgiveness but family fellowship to be maintained (1 John 1:9).

6:13 The doxology at the end of the prayer is from 1 Chr. 29:11. Some ancient manuscripts of the Scriptures omit this doxology.

6:13–15 Do not lead us into temptation is a plea for the providential help of God in our daily confrontation with the temptation of sin. James 1:13, 14 makes it clear that God does not tempt us to do evil, but rather that we are tempted of our own lusts. However, God does test us in order to give us the opportunity to prove our faithfulness to Him. It is never His desire to lead us into evil itself. Therefore if we resist the devil, we are promised that he will flee from us.

6:16–18 When you fast is a reference both to fasting prescribed under the Mosaic Law in connection with the Day of Atonement (Lev. 16:29) and the voluntary fast of that day. The Pharisees added two fast days, on Monday and Thursday of each week, as a case of public display and piety. The true purpose of fasting was intended, however, for deep contrition and spiritual communion. Fasting was especially emphasized as an effective means of dealing with temptation (Is. 58:6). The Pharisees regarded the practice of fasting as meritorious and appeared in the synagogues negligently attired. Their sad disfigurement of face and the wearing of mourning garb gave them an opportunity to exhibit their superior ascetic sanctity before the people. The phrase disfigure their faces (Gk. aphanizo) means literally "covering their faces." It is also a figurative expression for mournful gestures and neglected appearance of those wanting to call attention to the fact they are enduring. This was often done with dust and ashes (Is. 61:3).

6:19, 20 Do not lay up … but lay up may be rephrased as "Do not give priority to this, but give priority to that." This passage does not mean that it is sinful to have such assets as insurance, retirement plans, and savings accounts. After all, parents are to save for their children (Prov. 13:22; 2 Cor. 12:14). For yourself makes it clear that the desire for reward in the kingdom is not sinful. The contrast is between the now and then. We cannot have it both here and there. We cannot take it with us, but we can invest it now in the future.

6:20, 21 The attention of the believer is directed toward treasures in heaven. The term "treasures" implies the addition or accumulation of things. The two kinds of treasures are conditioned by their place (either upon earth or in heaven). The concept of laying up treasure in heaven is not pictured as one of meritorious benefits but rather of rewards for faithful service, as is illustrated elsewhere in the teaching of Jesus. The ultimate destiny of our lives is either earthly or heavenly and the concentration of our efforts will reveal where our real treasure is.

6:22, 23 One of the world's leading architects has said, "No muscle of your body can relax if your eye is uncomfortable." Notice Paul's play on words in Gal. 3:1: "Who has bewitched (double-eyed) you … before whose eyes Jesus Christ was clearly portrayed." The concept here is based on the ancient idea that the eyes were the windows through which light entered the body.

6:24 Mammon refers to wealth, money, or property. No one can serve two masters because a time will come when they make opposing demands. Jesus advises us to invest in our future with Him by giving of ourselves. Mammon encourages us to collect material objects for our present enjoyment.

6:25, 26 Adding doubt to the danger of possessions, Jesus now deals with the equally dangerous tendency of those who have no possessions: worry! Do not worry (Gk. merimnao) means do not be anxious. Anxious care is an inordinate or solicitous concern or grief beyond our immediate needs. It is the direct opposite of carefulness, cautiousness, and faith. Therefore, even the poor are not to worry needlessly about what they should eat, drink, or wear. The question, Is not life more than food and the body more than clothing? indicates that inner mental stability must come from the spirit of a man and not from outward physical provisions. To set one's heart upon material possessions or to worry about the lack of them is to live in perpetual insecurity and to deprive one's self of the spiritual blessings of God.

6:27 Stature here probably means "length of life," or age. Cubit then means a "length" of time, not a distance.

6:28–30 little faith: These are followers of Christ who are anxious about material things (8:26; 16:8).

6:31–32 Gentiles refers to non-Jews or to the heathen—those who do not know God (3 John 7). The Jewish people, because of God's revelation to them, were supposed to think differently than the Gentiles.

6:33, 34 To seek … the kingdom of God and His righteousness means to desire God's righteous rule on this earth (vv. 9, 10).

Judge Not!

What was Jesus calling for when He ordered His followers to "judge not" (Matt. 7:1)? Did He want them to close their eyes to error and evil? Did He intend that managers forego critical performance reviews of their employees, or that news editors and art critics pull their punches? And what about juries? Should they stop judging? Or should people go even further and decline any assessment of others, since none of us is perfect?

No, those would all be misapplications of Jesus' teaching. He was not commanding blind acceptance but grace toward others. Since we are all sinners, we all need to stop bothering with the failings of others and start attending to serious failings of our own (7:3–5). His words here extend His earlier exposé of hypocrisy (6:1–18). Don't blame or put down others while excusing or exalting yourself, Jesus was saying.

Is there room, then, to assess others? Yes, but only in Jesus' way: with empathy and fairness (7:12), and with a readiness to freely and fully forgive (6:12, 14). When people must correct others, they should act like a good doctor whose purpose is to bring healing, not like an enemy who attacks.

7:1 This restriction does not mean that a disciple never judges. After all, some kind of judgment is required in order to obey the command in v. 6. The point of this verse is that a Christian should not have a spirit of carping criticism and fault-finding.

7:2–5 Every judgment that a person makes becomes a basis for his or her own judgment (James 3:1, 2).

7:6 Dogs and swine refer to people who are enemies of the gospel, as opposed to those who are merely unbelievers. Such enemies are to be left alone (Matt. 15:14; 2 Cor. 6:14–18). One example of such a person was Herod Antipas, who heard John the Baptist gladly (Mark 6:20) but then beheaded him (Matt. 14:1–12; Mark 6:14–28; Luke 9:7–9). Later when Christ stood before Herod, He said nothing (Luke 23:8, 9). In the context of this verse, Herod had become a "dog" or a "pig."

7:6 The connotation here is not that we should withhold our message to those who are the outcasts of society, for Jesus Himself went to the poor sinners among His people. Rather, the idea is that it is futile to continue to present truth to those who have refused what they have already heard.

7:7–11 Earlier a paralleling contrast was drawn between the outward acts of worship (giving, praying, fasting) and the inward attitudes of devotion (possessing, praying, judging). Since the opposite of judging is fasting, it seems fitting that Jesus here makes a lengthy statement on the importance of prayer. This statement is not out of place as some have assumed; rather, it is the Christian alternative to judging. If we would sincerely pray for those whom we are prone to criticize we would ultimately do them much more good. The three imperatives Ask, seek, knock are, in the original, in the present tense, suggesting both perseverance and frequent prayer to be made on behalf of those for whom we are concerned.

Everything that we need for spiritual success has been promised to us. The blessings and provisions of God are available to every one of His children.

7:12 The phrase the Law and the Prophets echoes 5:17. This so-called "golden rule" is the practical application of Lev. 19:18: "You shall love your neighbor as yourself."

7:13–27 The closing section of the Sermon on the Mount presents two choices to the listener. These are presented in a series of contrasts: two ways (vv. 13, 14); two trees (vv. 15–20); two professions (vv. 21–23); and two foundations (vv. 24–29). This was a common method of teaching in both Jewish and Greco-Roman thought.

7:13, 14 wide … broad: The vast majority of people in the world have the same attitude as the scribes and Pharisees. They simplistically believe that their external works are what count. Jesus gives a much different interpretation to the law, which was the rule of life for His followers. He takes it to the heart and, in so doing, eliminates many from kingdom reign. narrow … few: Those who put their trust simply in external deeds (1 Cor. 3:12–15; 6:9–10).

7:15–20 Beware of false prophets: Deuteronomy 13:1–11; 18:20–22 provide information on discerning and responding to false prophets. The way to tell false teachers from teachers of truth is by their fruits. Fruits here refers to more than their deeds; it includes their doctrine (16:12; 1 John 4:1–3). A person speaking in the name of God is to be tested by the doctrines of Scripture. The same principle still holds true today. Speakers and teachers should be tested against the truths in God's Word (Jude 3; Rev. 22:18, 19).

7:21–23 Because so many people teach the wrong way, there is a tendency to ask how so many people could be wrong. Besides they do such good things which seem so right. For example, they prophesied, cast out demons, and did so many wonders. And they did these things in Your name. The threefold repetition strongly emphasizes this (compare Matt. 24:4, 5; 23–25). The question arises, "What is greater evidence of authority than these things?" Remember that Christ has been interpreting the law for them and the law was very clear that the word of God is superior to any miracle. Furthermore, even if the sign comes to pass, it is to be rejected if the message is not according to the Word of God and the false teacher was to be executed (Deut. 13).

7:24–27 The key difference in the two houses is not their external appearance. Pharisees and scribes may seem to be as righteous as the heirs of the kingdom. The key in the story is the foundations. The house on the rock pictures a life founded on a proper relationship to Christ (Matt. 16:18; 1 Cor. 10:4; 1 Pet. 2:4–8). It will stand the test of Christ's judgment, but the house on the sand will fail the test (1 Cor. 3:12–15).

7:28, 29 not as the scribes: Scribes would often cite authorities in order to lend credence to their statements. Jesus' words were self-authenticating. Note His phrase "I say to you" in 5:20, 22, 26, 28, 32.

8:1 In Matt. 8:1—9:38 ten miracles are recorded in rapid order. The logical connection to the Sermon on the Mount is obvious. The King, having presented His platform—the Manifesto of the Kingdom—now demonstrates His power to perform what He has said. Often we hear grand, swelling promises from potential political powers but we wonder, "Can he produce?" Christ the King is now going to demonstrate His ability to produce the projected program. The miracles are divided into three groups by two discussions regarding discipleship. All of the miraculous works authenticate the Lord Jesus as Messiah and King. The first three are miracles of healing (8:1–17). Healing a leper was a dramatic place to begin for there was no record of an Israelite leper being healed in the entire history of the nation except for Miriam (Num. 12:10–15).

8:2, 3 Before this miracle, the only record of an Israelite being healed of leprosy was the case of Miriam in Num. 12:10–15. The phrase if You are willing is important because it indicates genuine faith. It does not necessarily mean that if one simply believes, God will do something. But that He can do it (Dan. 3:17, 18). Normally, touching a leper would result in ceremonial defilement (Lev. 14:45, 46; Num. 5:2, 3; Deut. 24:8). In this case Jesus touched the leper and the leper became clean.

8:4 See that you tell no one: Perhaps Jesus gave this command so that the healed person would first obey the law before he became preoccupied with telling others about his healing. Jesus' command show yourself to the priest involved no small undertaking for the cleansed leper. He would need to make the journey from near the Sea of Galilee to Jerusalem and there offer the sacrifice required by Moses (Lev. 14:4–32). The purpose of Christ's command was not only to obey the Law of Moses, but also to be a testimony to the religious authorities in Jerusalem that the Messiah had arrived. Jesus also commanded the man to keep quiet because He did not want the Jewish people to act hastily on preconceived, erroneous ideas of the Messiah and His kingdom (John 6:14, 15).

8:5–9 In the NT, centurions (officers in charge of one hundred soldiers) are consistently looked upon in a favorable light. These soldiers were the equivalent of present-day sergeants. The centurion's response to Jesus indicated his clear understanding of authority.

8:10 He marveled: Only one other time does Scripture say Jesus marveled: when His own townspeople rejected Him (Mark 6:6). I have not found … not even in Israel: This commendation of the faith of the Gentile centurion was a strong rebuke of the Jewish people. The Israelites thought that they would have priority in the coming kingdom (Is. 45:14; Zech. 8:23; Rom. 9:3–5; Eph. 2:11, 12). Jesus made it clear that being just a physical descendant of Abraham did not guarantee entrance into His kingdom.

8:11 Sit down literally means "recline," as at a banquet table. The coming kingdom is commonly portrayed in terms of a feast, particularly a wedding feast (Matt. 22:1–14; Is. 25:6; Rev. 19:7–10).

8:12, 13 Sons of the kingdom refers to the Jews who had the covenants and the promises, and who should have been heirs of the kingdom. The idea that Gentiles would take their place in the coming kingdom was unthinkable to the Jews. Outer darkness, meaning "the darkness outside," speaks of the experience of those who do not endure and so will not reign in the kingdom (Matt. 22:13; Rom. 8:17; 2 Tim. 2:12, 13; 2 John 8; Rev. 3:11). Living with Christ in heaven is a gift (John 3:16; Rom. 4:1–8; 6:23) to be received without cost. But the reign with Christ is a prize to be won with great effort (compare 1 Cor. 9:24–27; Rev. 22:12).

Peter's Household

Households in Jesus' day tended to be much larger than those of today, with more children and more relatives from the extended family. But Peter's home (Matt. 8:14) was somewhat unusual in that his mother-in-law lived with the family. Peter was not required by law or custom to provide her with a home. A widow usually moved back to her father's home, if he were still alive, or else joined a son's household.

It was fortunate for Peter's mother-in-law that Peter befriended Jesus. The Lord's compassion extended to her. He healed her from her fever, and she began to serve Him, a response that indicated a changed life and a deeply grateful attitude.

8:14–17 This flurry of healing activity anticipated the future healings based on Christ's cross ministry that would take place in the kingdom age. The verse is a quotation of Is. 53:4. The death of Christ on the cross makes possible the healing that will belong to God's children in the coming messianic reign and in eternity. It is possible the sequence of miracles in Matt. 8:1–17 has significance. First, the Lord Jesus was manifested to Israel in His earthly ministry. Because He was rejected by them, He ministered to Gentiles in this present age (8:5–13). Then He will come to Israel and restore them as their promised Messiah and Redeemer (8:14–17).

8:17 took our infirmities … bore our sicknesses: In what way did Jesus take infirmity and sickness from us? Certainly, when He healed someone, He did not receive their disease and become sick Himself. The text of Isaiah regarding Messiah may mean at least two things. Christ bore our sickness in that He empathizes with our weaknesses. Repeatedly Jesus is said to have healed because He had compassion on the people (Matt. 9:36; 14:14; 20:34; Mark 1:41; 5:19; compare 6:34; Luke 7:13). He also bore our sicknesses by His vicarious suffering for sin on the cross. Our physical sickness is ultimately because of the Fall, the fact that we are sinners with its impact on our lives through the curse. Note Is. 53:4, 5 connects these two dimensions.

8:18–20 The term Son of Man is very important. In the Gospel records the expression is never found on anyone's lips but the Lord Jesus, and it was His favorite self designator (83 times). It looks back to Dan. 7:13, 14 and anticipates the messianic reign of Christ. In Matt. 8:20 it describes the Messiah in His humiliation in His first coming. He didn't come first to reign but to suffer. Next He will come to reign. The cross was before the crown but it was the crown that motivated Him (Heb. 12:2, 3). foxes and birds: Jesus indicates, in the midst of His teaching on discipleship, that sacrifice must be undertaken, even similar to the Lord Himself, who, as a man, had no dwelling place to call His own (compare Luke 9:57–62).

8:21, 22 This passage most likely describes a follower whose father was still alive, because by Levitical law the man would not be out in public if his father had just died. His father was aged, so the man wanted to go to his home, wait for his father to die, and then follow Christ. Jesus' answer means that we must never make excuses for refusing to follow Him. There is no better time than the present.

8:23–27 Jesus rebuked their little faith in light of the fact that He had commanded the trip across the Sea of Galilee.

Supernatural Realities

Jesus often encountered demons like those that possessed the men at Gadara (Matt. 8:28–34). The mention of demons affirms the reality of powerful spiritual forces in the universe. Scripture has much to say about angels and demons.

Angels are members of an order of heavenly beings who are superior to humans in power and intelligence (Heb. 2:7; 2 Pet. 2:11; Zech. 3:1). However, unlike God, they are not all-powerful or all-knowing (Ps. 103:20; 2 Thess. 1:7). God often sends them to announce good news, such as the birth of Jesus (Luke 1:30, 31), or to warn of coming dangers, such as the destruction of Sodom (Gen. 18:16—19:29).

Angels played a particularly active role in the events surrounding Jesus' birth, resurrection, and ascension. They: • counseled Joseph to wed Mary (Matt. 1:20); • warned Joseph to flee to Egypt with Mary and the Christ child (2:13); • instructed Joseph to return the family to Palestine (2:19); • foretold to Zacharias the birth of John the Baptist (Luke 1:11–38); • announced to shepherds the birth of Christ (2:8–15); • appeared to Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane to strengthen Him (22:43); • rolled back the stone from Jesus' empty tomb (Matt. 28:2); • appeared to women at the empty tomb to announce Jesus' resurrection (Luke 24:4–7, 23; John 20:12); • promised Jesus' return after His ascension (Acts 1:9–11).

Since Pentecost, the frequency of angelic activity in human affairs appears to have diminished, perhaps because of the larger role played by the Holy Spirit in the lives of believers.

Demons are fallen angels that have been cast out of heaven. They seek to undermine the cause of righteousness in the world (1 Pet. 3:19, 20; 2 Pet. 2:4; Jude 6). Scripture describes them with various names: "unclean spirits" (Mark 6:7), "wicked or evil spirits" (Luke 7:21; Acts 19:12, 13), "spirit of divination" (Acts 16:16), "deceiving spirits" (1 Tim. 4:1), and "spirit of error" (1 John 4:6).

Remains of a church at ancient Gergesa which memorializes Jesus' healing of the demoniac (Matt. 8:28–34). This region east of the Sea of Galilee was also known as Gadara and Gerasa.

8:28 The country of the Gergesenes may refer to (1) the village of Khersa, near the eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee; (2) Gerasa, about thirty miles southeast of the Sea of Galilee; or (3) Gadara, about six miles away. This was Gentile territory.

8:29–34 We learn several things about demons in this passage: (1) they recognize the deity of Christ; (2) they are limited in their knowledge; (3) they know they will ultimately be judged by Christ (Matt. 25:41; James 2:19; 2 Pet. 2:4; Jude 6; Rev. 12:7–12); and (4) they cannot act without the permission of a higher authority—Christ's.

9:1, 2 Their faith refers to the faith of the paralytic as well as that of the men who were carrying him.

9:3–8 Jesus' tactic caught the leaders off guard. Though these leaders might deny His ability, or right, to forgive sins, the outward physical healing could not be denied. It was far easier to say Your sins are forgiven you because there would be no visible proof that the sins were forgiven. The healing of the paralytic, however, was proof that forgiveness of sins had occurred as well. Neither physical nor spiritual healing pose any difficulty for God's Son.

The Power of Forgiveness

The crowd that watched Jesus heal the paralytic responded enthusiastically to His dramatic display of power (Matt. 9:8). But they overlooked His more significant ability to forgive sins—a power that deeply troubled the scribes (9:2, 3).

The power of forgiveness is immeasurable. Jesus challenged us as His followers to forgive others who have wronged or hurt us (6:14, 15; 18:21–35). That may seem like a simple act, but anyone who has struggled with pain and anger knows that it takes enormous power to authentically forgive—to lay aside one's hurt and reach out to an offender with the embrace of a pardon. On the other side, forgiveness can release the wrongdoer from paralyzing guilt and even turn around the course of that person's life (James 5:19, 20).

Forgiveness is as powerful and liberating as the healing of a paralytic. And it's a power that Jesus has delegated to His followers (John 20:23). We are called to forgive others as Christ has forgiven us (Col. 3:13).

9:9–11 Matthew is called Levi in Mark 2:14; Luke 5:27. The tax office was a toll booth set up alongside a highway to levy taxes on merchandise transported on that road. Matthew probably worked for Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee. Tax collectors were considered traitors by the Jews. They were despised because they generally collected more than necessary and pocketed the difference, vastly enriching themselves.

9:12, 13 Jesus quoted Hos. 6:6 (and again in Matt. 12:7) to make the point that God is more interested in a person's loyal love than in the observance of external rituals. Jesus refers ironically to the Pharisees as the righteous. They were not righteous; that was only how they perceived themselves because of their pious and scrupulous law-keeping (Phil. 3:6). But Jesus explained, quoting from the familiar words of an OT prophet, that God had already judged sacrifices without mercy as worthless.

9:14, 15 Jesus used the picture of marriage to illustrate God's relationship with Israel (Is. 54:1–8; Jer. 3:1–20; Hos. 2:1–3:5). In referring to Himself as a bridegroom, Jesus was describing Himself as the Messiah. Will be taken away from them anticipates the Lord's violent death.

9:16, 17 The principle expressed here is that Jesus Christ has come to bring in a new dispensation altogether, which cannot be fitted into the forms of the old Jewish economy. The principle taught here by illustration is that the rule of the law must be replaced by that of grace, which will now have free reign in the hearts of all believers. Unshrunk cloth means unbleached cloth. The KJV reads “new.” Wineskins were frequently used in the ancient East as containers for liquids. The strength of fermentation of the new wine would be too much for the partly worn, old, or inelastic skins and would cause them to break.

9:18–26 a ruler: This was a magistrate. The other Gospels indicate that his name was Jairus (Mark 5:22–43; Luke 8:41–56). Worshiped suggests that he recognized Jesus’ deity and authority. In the parallel passages we are told that she was dying when the father first came and that she died while he was en route. Matthew combines these two phrases into one, saying, has just died.

The Mourners

In the ancient world, paid professional mourners (Matt. 9:23), most often women, aided families in their public expression of grief upon the death of a loved one. They composed poems or dirges praising the deceased, which they chanted to the accompaniment of a flute or other musical instrument to stir the audience emotionally. They usually wore sackcloth and scattered dust in the air and on their heads. Weeping, wailing, and beating their breasts, they created an unmistakable tone of grief. Here was no denial of death or a distancing themselves from loss.

Perhaps Jesus was making use of the image of the professional mourner when He spoke of those who mourn in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:2).

9:27–31 See that no one knows it: Jesus wanted to discourage the masses from coming to Him for physical healing alone, because His primary purpose was spiritual healing. Physical healing simply served to authenticate His claim to be the promised Messiah.

9:32–34 The Pharisees could not deny the reality of the miracles, so they attributed them to the ruler of the demons. The same rationalization is found in 12:24.

9:35 This verse is very similar to 4:23. Just as Matthew 4:23 brings one section to a conclusion and prepares the reader for a discourse, so does 9:35 here. The miracles of Matthew 8 and 9 prove Jesus as the Messiah is capable of bringing about kingdom conditions. The next chapter sees the Twelve sent out to proclaim the presence of the King and the nearness of the kingdom.

9:36 This verse is a terrible indictment of the religious authorities of Israel, who though very religious, provided no spiritual guidance to their people. Here is a solemn reminder to those today who market and make merchandise of ministry. compassion: To bring them God's truth, Jesus' heart was moved toward those who were the victims of charlatans.

9:37, 38 The harvest will mark the beginning of the kingdom age. For the lost, it will mean doom; for the saved, it will mean blessing.

10:1, 2 The twelve are called “disciples” in 10:1; in v. 2 they are called apostles. The word apostle emphasizes delegated authority (1 Thess. 2:6); the term disciple emphasizes learning and following. Because the disciples had been given authority, they were now called apostles.

IN COMPARISON

The Twelve

Apostle	Description
Simon (Peter)	Fisherman from Galilee, Andrew's brother
Andrew	Fisherman from Galilee, Peter's brother
James	Son of Zebedee, brother to John; from Capernaum
John	Son of Zebedee, brother to James, from Capernaum
Philip	From Bethsaida
Bartholomew (Nathanael)	From Cana in Galilee
Thomas (Didymus)	Possibly also a fisherman
Matthew (Levi)	Tax collector in Capernaum; son of Alphaeus, possibly James's brother
James	Son of Alphaeus, possibly Matthew's brother
Lebbaeus Thaddaeus (Judas)	May have taken the name Thaddaeus ("warm-hearted") because of the infamy that came to be attached to the name Judas
Simon (the Cananite)	From Cana; one of the Zealots, Jewish revolutionaries who opposed Rome
Judas Iscariot	From Kerioth, and possibly the only Judean among the Twelve

10:2–4 The disciples are named in pairs and probably were sent out that way (Mark 6:7).

IN CONTEXT

Jesus—A City Preacher

Popular opinion frequently regards the Bible in general and the ministry of Jesus in particular in rural terms. But that is somewhat misleading. Palestine in Jesus' day was undergoing rapid urban development. Its population of around 2.5 million to 3 million people lived in numerous preindustrial cities and towns that revolved around Jerusalem, the hub of the region, which had a population conservatively estimated by modern scholars at between 55,000 and 90,000. (Josephus, a first-century Jewish historian, placed the number at 3 million; the Talmud puts it at an incredible 12 million.) As Jesus carried out His ministry, He focused on the urban centers of Palestine (Matt. 9:35; 11:1; Luke 4:43; 13:22) and visited Jerusalem at least three times. This brought Him into contact with a greater number and wider variety of people—women, soldiers, religious leaders, the rich, merchants, tax collectors, Gentiles, prostitutes, beggars, the poor—than He would have encountered in a purely rural campaign. These He attracted in large crowds as He visited each city.

Jesus' urban strategy established a model for His disciples and the early church. When He sent the disciples on preaching tours, He directed them toward cities (Matt. 10:5, 11–14; Luke 10:1, 8–16). Later, the movement spread throughout the Roman Empire by using an urban strategy that planted communities of believers in no less than forty cities by the end of the first century.

In light of the vital role that cities played in the ministry of Jesus, our Lord's example in urban Palestine has much to teach us in our modern world.

10:5, 6 These commands stand in stark contrast to Matt. 28:19. The reason for commands in Matt. 10:5, 6 is the contingency of the coming of the kingdom. Its arrival was dependent on Israel's response to Jesus as the Messiah (compare Acts 3:19, 20). Between Matt. 10 and Matt. 28, the Jewish leaders and, consequently, the nation rejects the Messiah in spite of His obvious credentials. During the interim the gospel is to go to all the nations of the world. When Israel repents, the kingdom will come (compare Zech. 12:10).

10:7–42 The instructions given to the Twelve were specifically for their particular preaching mission to announce the nearness of the kingdom. If all of the commands in this address were meant to be followed explicitly today, the church could not have a worldwide mission (compare 10:5).

10:7, 8 The message is the same as that proclaimed by John (3:2) and the Lord Jesus (4:17). The king was present but the kingdom was not; it had drawn near and was ready to come.

10:9, 10 The disciples' mission was short-term. In essence, they were to do a national religious survey to determine the people's response to Jesus as Messiah. For the Twelve to cover an area that is at most 75 miles by 125 miles would not take very long. Thus they did not need extensive provisions.

10:11 Because the testimony of the apostles was at stake, they were to seek out homes with good reputations. Further, they were not to be constantly trying to find a more desirable residence.

10:12–14 To greet a household was to pronounce a blessing on it, "Peace to you." These messengers were to assume the best of their hosts when they arrived; however, if the home proved to be unworthy (the occupants rejected the message of the apostles), the apostles were to remove the pronouncement of blessing.

10:15 This verse, together with 11:22, 24, implies that there will be degrees of judgment and torment for the lost.

10:16 Snakes are commonly thought of as wise, perhaps because they are silent and dangerous, or because of the way they move (Gen. 3:1). In the midst of wolves meant that the apostles would be exposed to hatred and violence from men. Harmless literally means "unmixed," which may also indicate purity and innocence.

10:17 Beware of men helps to explain the wolves of v. 16. The whole emphasis on persecution seems to anticipate the period of tribulation prophesied in the OT (Dan. 9:26, 27; Jer. 30:4–6). It was anticipated that the Messiah would die and be resurrected (Dan. 9:26; Pss. 16:10; 22; Is. 53:1–11). The time of Jacob's trouble would follow the death and resurrection of the Messiah (Dan. 9:26, 27; Jer. 30:7). Then the Messiah would return to end the tribulation and judge the world (Dan. 7:9–13, 16–27; 9:27; 12:1; Zech. 14:1–5). Then the Christ would establish His kingdom on this earth (Dan. 7:11–27; 12:1, 2; Is. 53:11, 12; Zech. 14:6–11, 20, 21). It appears this is the program the Lord Jesus is anticipating in this discourse. At this point the temporary “setting aside” of Israel and the church age had not yet been revealed. They were yet mysteries (Matt. 16; Eph. 3). scourge: This reference to scourging in the synagogues shows (1) there will be opposition to the message of the apostles and (2) this resistance will be primarily on the part of Jewish leaders. Even during the tribulation Israel will be in unbelief until near the end of that seven-year period (compare Zech. 12:10 in the context of the entire chapter).

Affirm Other Leaders

Jesus invested Himself in the development of other people, particularly the Twelve. He gave them responsibility and authority, resisting the temptation to get the job done "right" by doing it Himself. With this approach, He accepted the risk that they might fail. Of course, He gave them adequate preparation before sending them out, and on their return He affirmed them on their successful completion of the mission and corrected their mistakes. If we want to be like Him, we will share the joys and risks of working together with our brothers and sisters.

10:18–22 God would use Jewish rejection and persecution of the messengers to bring the gospel message to Gentiles. This occurred with Paul in Acts 21:26–36; 24:1–21; 25:13—26:32.

10:23 This verse has caused no little discussion. Some have even said the Lord Jesus made a mistake here! The only consistent interpretation is to say, as the comments on 10:17 indicate, that the church age had not yet been revealed and the great tribulation (Dan. 9:27; Matt. 24:15–31) appeared to be in the near future. The way that Christ presents imminent events, which might be much longer in time is consistent with the OT prophets. It is like looking at two mountain ranges, not viewing the large valley between them (compare Is. 61:1, 2 with Luke 4:16–21). The church age is a valley between the first and second comings of Christ. It was a mystery hidden in God and not revealed in the OT (Eph. 3:1–12).

10:24–26 do not fear: Do not be intimidated by opposition.

“Beelzebub”

(Gk. Beelzeboul) (Matt. 10:25; 12:24–27; Mark 3:22; Luke 11:15–19) Strong’s #954: Most of the Greek manuscripts read Beelzeboul, which is probably the right form of this word. The other reading probably came from the OT word Baal-Zebub—an idol, the god of Ekron (2 Kin. 1:2). All idolatry was regarded as devil worship (Lev. 17:7; Deut. 32:17; Ps. 106:37; 1 Cor. 10:20), so there seems to have been something peculiarly satanic about the worship of this hateful god, which caused his name to become a synonym for “Satan.” Though we nowhere read that Jesus was actually called Beelzebub, He was charged with being in league with Satan under that hateful name (Matt. 12:24, 26), and more than once He was charged with being possessed by “a devil” or “demon” (Mark 3:30; John 7:20; 8:48).

10:27, 28 Fear Him refers not to Satan but to God. Destroy does not indicate annihilation but ruination. The same verb is used in 9:17 of wineskins being ruined.

10:29–31 These verses show that an infinite God is concerned about and watches over an infinite number of details.

What It Means to Be Like Jesus

Jesus' statement in Matt. 10:25 implies that His disciples will be like Him. To His first-century followers, that included the prospect of persecution and martyrdom. Eight portraits in Matthew's eyewitness account give us some clues about what else it means to be like Jesus: #1: To be like Jesus means to accept our roots (1:1–17).

#2: To be like Jesus means to engage the world's pain and struggle (1:18—2:23).

#3: To be like Jesus means to commit ourselves to other believers, no matter how "weird" they appear to be (3:1–17).

#4: To be like Jesus means to admit our vulnerability to temptation (4:1–11).

#5: To be like Jesus means to openly proclaim the message of Christ (4:12–25).

#6: To be like Jesus means to commit ourselves to changed thinking and behavior (5:1—7:27).

#7: To be like Jesus means to serve others, especially those who are oppressed or without Christ (8:1—9:38).

#8: To be like Jesus means to affirm others in leadership (10:1–42).

10:32, 33 Every act of our lives will be evaluated at the judgment seat of Christ (2 Cor. 5:10). To refuse to speak up for Christ because of intimidation or persecution will result in the believer's loss of reward and consequent loss of glory in the kingdom (Rom. 8:17; 2 Tim. 2:12).

10:34–36 To the disappointment of many Christians throughout the ages, it has often been those closest to them who have rejected them and their message, even to the point of betrayal. The Lord Himself experienced these feelings with the betrayal of Judas and the denial of Peter.

10:37 not worthy of Me: Those who will be glorified with Christ in His kingdom reign are those who have suffered for Him (Rom. 8:17; 2 Tim. 2:12). Those who refuse that kind of discipleship will experience great loss (1 Cor. 3:15; 2 Cor. 5:10: Rev. 3:11, 12).

10:38 Taking up a cross stands for commitment to the extent one is willing to die for a cause. This verse is not saying the only saved people are those who continually are totally committed. If this were true, who would be justified? Rather, when a person who is saved lapses, as Peter did and as a carnal Christian does (1 Cor. 3:1–4), that person certainly is not worthy of Christ and that act brings loss of reward. Of course, the same is always true of a lost individual. Even his finest work is ultimately worthless to him because it is done apart from acknowledgment and dependency on Christ (Rom. 3:12).

10:39 Finding life looks not at living life only for what one can obtain from physical life and the material world but how he or she can invest it today in the future reign with Christ (Matt. 6:19–21). We can't have it both here and there. As stewards of this life and all its resources, we shall be evaluated as to how well we invested (Luke 19:11–26). You can't take it with you, but you can send it ahead in the form of present wise investment.

10:40–42 these little ones is a figure of speech to describe the disciples. This is known by the identification of the prophet and the righteous person of v. 41. Reward is the last word of the chapter, and it summarizes the motivation Christ has been setting before the disciples. He doesn't want them to lose out on the future reign because of a wrong attitude toward the present. Furthermore, He wants them to understand that nothing shall miss His notice at the bema (2 Cor. 5:10), not even a cup of cold water.

11:1, 2 Verse 2 actually looks back to 4:12 and anticipates John's death recorded in 14:1–12. Probably John had expected the Messiah to come and immediately to judge Israel and to establish His earthly kingdom (compare 3:2–12). Christ's failure to act in a way even expected by the forerunner himself begins to cause doubt in John's mind. John expected immediate judgment on faithless Israel and possibly the overthrow of Israel's enemies since they all truly deserved it. Christ was longsuffering and came in mercy. We must be careful not to second-guess the Lord ourselves. This may cause doubt to arise in our own heart when we set forth a path for Christ's work in our lives that He has not Himself purposed.

"Christ"

(Gk. Christos) (Matt. 11:2; 16:16; John 1:41; Acts 2:36; 2 Cor. 1:21) Strong's #5547: Many speak of Jesus Christ but do not realize that the title "Christ" is in essence a confession of faith. The word literally means "the Anointed One." In the OT, forms of its Hebrew equivalent messiah were applied to prophets (1 Kin. 19:16), priests (Lev. 4:5, 16), and kings (1 Sam. 24:6, 10), in the sense that all of them were anointed with oil, the symbol that God had set them aside for their respective offices. But the preeminent Anointed One would be the promised Messiah, for He would be anointed by God's Spirit to be the ultimate Prophet, Priest, and King (Is. 61:1; John 3:34). With his dramatic confession, "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt. 16:16), Peter plainly identified Jesus as the promised Messiah.

11:3–6 The Coming One is a title for the Messiah (Ps. 118:26; Mark 11:9; Luke 13:35; 19:38; Heb. 10:37).

11:7–15 In the light of John the Baptist's question, some may have questioned his commitment to the Messiah. This may have prompted Jesus' supportive statements about John.

11:9, 10 John was more than a prophet in that he alone was the forerunner who announced the coming and presence of the Messiah. In doing so, he fulfilled Mal. 3:1.

11:11 Born of women means that John the Baptist had a human mother. A similar expression is used of the Lord Jesus in Gal. 4:4. The least in the kingdom refers to those who will be living in the coming kingdom. As great as John was during Jesus' day, his position as forerunner was inferior to that of the least person in the kingdom of heaven, because that person will have seen and understood the finished work of Christ on the Cross and through His resurrection—events that John would not live to see. Little wonder that Jesus gave such strong exhortations in Matt. 10:32–42 not to miss out on His future reign.

11:12 The violent take it by force in this context probably means that violent people forcibly oppose the kingdom with their hostility (23:13). As Christ's kingdom advances, so do the attacks against it.

11:13 The prophets and the law refers to the OT, which anticipated the coming of the Messiah. Because John the Baptist was the forerunner of Christ, the OT anticipated John's ministry as well.

11:14, 15 Malachi 4:5, 6 predicted the coming of Elijah before the judgment preceding the presence of the kingdom. If Israel had repented, the Baptist would have come in the spirit and power of Elijah. However, because Israel failed to respond as they should have, the prophecy of Malachi 4:5, 6 is yet to be fulfilled (Matt. 17:11; Mal. 3:1).

11:16–19 Because of their hardness of heart, Israel failed to accept either the ministry of John the Baptist or that of the Lord Jesus Christ.

11:20–22 Woe: Jesus pronounced a direct judgment on Israel. Chorazin was a village about two and a half miles north of Capernaum; Bethsaida was about three miles east. Both of these cities were in Galilee and both had witnessed Jesus' ministry firsthand. They would be judged for seeing the Messiah and then rejecting Him.

11:23, 24 Capernaum, on the north shore of the Sea of Galilee, was the base of operations for Christ's ministry. In Matt. 9:1 Capernaum is called "His own city."

11:25–28 You who labor and are heavy laden describes the Jews as suffering under a load of religious responsibilities laid on them by priests, rabbis, scribes, and Pharisees (Matt. 23:4; Acts 15:10). Rest is relief from this burden.

11:29, 30 You will find rest for your souls. These words are taken from Jer. 6:16. The LXX has "ye shall find purification unto your souls" and is corrected by Matthew to the original meaning in the Hebrew. Easy means good or kind. Verses 28–30 are peculiar to Matthew's gospel.

12:1, 2 The way Jesus observed the Sabbath was a primary point of contention between Himself and the religious authorities. The Pharisees and scribes recognized that the Sabbath was the sign of the Mosaic covenant. Therefore, to desecrate the Sabbath was to flaunt disobedience to the entire Law of Moses (Num. 15:30–36). While reaping was forbidden on the Sabbath (Ex. 34:21), the disciples were picking grain to eat, not for profit. They were not breaking God's law. The Pharisees had established thirty-nine categories of actions to be forbidden on the Sabbath, and according to them, the disciples were "harvesting" and therefore breaking the Sabbath. The Pharisees were trying to make Jesus into a lawbreaker and accuse Him of wrongdoing.

12:3–5 profane the Sabbath: On the Sabbath the priests carried out their work of ministry, showing that their official service had priority over the normal Sabbath observance.

12:7, 8 For a similar use of Hos. 6:6 see Matt. 9:13.

The Son of Man

Son of Man" (Matt. 12:8) is a designation that Jesus used freely for Himself throughout the Gospels. No one else except Stephen (Acts 7:56) referred to Him this way. The phrase seems to have originated with Ezekiel (Ezek. 2:1), where it stressed the prophet's full involvement with the people to whom he spoke. In Dan. 7:13, "One like the Son of Man" may refer to a divine or angelic being. As Jesus used the phrase, it seems to combine His humanity and divine authority.

Jesus may have used the phrase because His contemporaries had preconceived ideas that might make them misunderstand other titles. "Christ," for example, could refer to one who would establish an earthly kingdom.

"Son of Man" was a more flexible term. As the Son of Man, Jesus exercised authority over the Sabbath (Matt. 12:8) and forgave sins (9:6). The Son of Man must suffer and die to ransom sinners (Mark 8:31), yet He would come again in divine glory (Matt. 26:64) to gather His followers (Mark 13:26, 27) and to judge the world (Matt. 13:41–43).

12:14 Because of Jesus' view of the Sabbath, the Pharisees concluded that He was trying to overthrow the entire Mosaic system and therefore had to be destroyed. Their antagonism toward Jesus was growing.

12:15, 16 withdrew: From this point on, the Lord's ministry was characterized by opposition, withdrawal from that opposition, and continued ministry to His followers.

12:17–21 This quotation of Is. 42:1–4 shows that the Messiah's quiet withdrawal was in keeping with the prophet's portrayal of Him. The most significant aspect of this prophecy is that Jesus' reserve in the face of Jewish opposition would lead to blessings on the Gentiles.

12:22–24 Could this be the Son of David may also be translated "This one can't be the Son of David, can he?" The question expected a negative answer.

12:25–28 Jesus' defense was in three parts. First, a kingdom, city, or even a family cannot continue to exist if it is divided against itself. Second, when the followers of the Pharisees exorcized demons, the Pharisees claimed it was accomplished by the power of God. Third, the casting out of demons by the Messiah indicated the nearness of the kingdom.

12:27 your sons: Probably Jews who cast out demons in God's name (Acts 19:13–18). they shall be your judges: Their own people recognized that only God could conquer demons.

12:29, 30 This verse shows how Jesus the King was confronting the kingdom of Satan. In His exorcisms, Jesus was binding Satan bit by bit. When He comes suddenly to establish His kingdom, He will bind Satan quickly and completely (Rev. 20:1–10).

12:31, 32 This passage discusses the infamous "unpardonable sin." The first question to be answered is, "Why is blasphemy of the Son of Man pardonable, but not blasphemy against the Holy Spirit?" The key seems to be in the title "Son of Man." It describes Jesus or Messiah in human terms; He was a man. Someone could consider who Jesus was and conclude He was no more than a human being. However, if the Holy Spirit convicted a person of the fact that Jesus was more than a mere mortal, and this person refused to accept the ministry of the Holy Spirit, there would be no possible forgiveness. That the sin against the Holy Spirit is called "blasphemy" implies a final and unalterable decision has been made. The sin that is unforgivable is the stubborn refusal when the Holy Spirit convicts to accept the forgiveness Christ offers. Particularly in reference to the leaders of Israel, Jesus had offered them all the proof that could be expected—the ministry of John, the testimony of the Father, the prophecies of the OT, His own testimony, and the substantiation by the Holy Spirit. They rejected all proofs regarding Jesus as Messiah. Nothing else was to be given.

12:33–37 By your words does not refer to justification or condemnation on the basis of what one says, but to the outward evidence of the inward attitude of the heart. While the Pharisees asked for evidence of Christ's claim, they overlooked the clear evidence that was to be seen in His miracles.

IN CONTEXT

Brood of Vipers

Jesus' contemporaries considered the Pharisees to be model religious people. Yet in Matt. 12:34, Jesus called the Pharisees a brood, or offspring, of vipers. Calling a person a snake was an insult, but to call someone a child of a snake was worse.

An idea that the Greek historian Herodotus (484–425 B.C.) had about Arabian vipers was still circulating in Jesus' day. Although most reptiles lay eggs, people believed that viper eggs hatched inside their mother's stomach. The baby vipers would then eat their way out to be born, killing their mother in the process. Also, according to some ancient writers, including Herodotus, mother vipers ate the father vipers while the mothers were pregnant, so the baby vipers avenged their father by killing the mother.

Murdering one's mother or father was the crime ancient people thought most horrible. Even if one killed one parent to avenge it's murder of the other parent, the Greeks thought that the child who committed this kind of murder would be hounded by avenging spirits called "Furies." Jewish people also considered the murder of parents or other blood relatives to be terribly wicked.

By calling the Pharisees an "offspring of vipers," Jesus may have been comparing them with parent murderers, thus implying that they were quite vile and evil.

12:38, 39 The demand for signs is evidence of unbelief rather than faith. The sign of the prophet Jonah is explained in v. 40 as the Resurrection.

12:40 Three days and three nights does not necessarily indicate three full days. In ancient Israel, a part of a day was considered a whole day (Esth. 4:16; 5:1); so a period of twenty-six hours could be called "three days."

12:41, 42 The men of Nineveh represent Gentiles who came to faith because of the words of God's prophets and kings, lesser people than Jesus Christ, God's only Son.

Family Loyalty

Ancient society placed great emphasis on faithfulness to blood relatives (Num. 27:4). So Jesus' words in Matt. 12:48–50 must have sounded quite foreign to the crowd. He seemed to be breaking with tradition and disowning His family.

But notice: Jesus didn't deny that the woman and the men at the door were His family. He merely pushed beyond the normal understanding of family to a larger reality—the claims of spiritual kinship. This new "family" included anyone who did the will of His Father in heaven.

Far from denying the value or benefits of solid family relationships, Jesus, by calling attention to His Father, was underlining the significance of family.

12:43–50 This difficult analogy most likely describes the moral reformation that took place in Israel as a result of the ministries of John the Baptist and Jesus. The reformation, however, was not genuine (Matt. 3:7–10); therefore, Israel's unbelief and hardness of heart were worse than before.

13:1–58 Chapters 12 and 13 are critical to the understanding of Matthew's Gospel because they bring us to the watershed point in Jesus' ministry. In ch. 12 the unbelief of Israel is climaxed in the unpardonable sin of rejecting their Messiah. Chapter 13 continues Christ's response to this unbelief. This blasphemy by the religious leaders in ch. 12 is seen by Jesus as official rejection of His messiahship after which He deliberately turned from them. In the aftermath Jesus encountered the great pedagogical challenge of first teaching His close disciples about this change and then the multitudes that followed Him. His followers faced the problem of how He could be the Messiah if He had been rejected by the leaders, and how that would affect His kingdom program. To explain these monumental problems Jesus turned to the parabolic method. The parable is distinguished from an allegory in that it teaches basically one central truth which may be bolstered by several points in the story.

13:1–3 He spoke many things to them in parables: This teaching method, often used by the rabbis, utilized common scenes from everyday life to teach new truths about the kingdom.

13:4 Seed … by the wayside speaks of soil hardened by much human and animal traffic; thus it failed to allow penetration of the seed, leaving it fair game for the birds.

13:5, 6 Stony places refers to shallow soil resting on a shelf of rock. The thin layer of dust or dirt accelerated the seed's growth under the hot sun, but the plant could only live a short time because of the shallow soil.

13:7 Among thorns suggests good soil occupied with wild growth.

13:8 Good ground refers to prepared or tilled soil that allows prosperous growth.

13:9 The statement He who has ears to hear goes beyond physical hearing and implies an inner spiritual reception of truth. This prompted the disciples' question as to why He had spoken to them in parables. Whereas He had used parables to illustrate His messages, now they formed the basis of the message.

13:10–15 it has been given to you: The purpose of this parable was both to reveal (v. 11) and to conceal the truth (v. 13). This hiding of the truth was a judgment for unbelief, as happened during Isaiah's ministry (Is. 6:9, 10).

13:11 the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven: The word mystery describes a truth that had not been previously revealed (Rom. 16:25, 26).

The fact of the coming kingdom was introduced by 3:1 with no further explanation. There was no need, for it was thoroughly and repeatedly explained in the OT, and also by His previous presentation of the kingdom prophesied in the OT. But this expression the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven refers to new truths about the promised kingdom. It had drawn near; the Messiah was in the process of being rejected; now it was time to tell the disciples by means of parables some truths about God's kingdom program that had not been revealed up to this point. In light of Israel's rejection of the King, God's kingdom program would take a new track for an indefinite period of time. This is called the "interadvent kingdom" period.

13:12–17 whoever has, to him more will be given: Just as the failure to respond to truth brings blindness, so a positive response is rewarded with further understanding (Luke 8:16–18). This principle is applied to the leaders of Israel in fulfillment of many OT prophecies, especially Is. 6:9, 10. The leaders' rejection of Jesus' message further blinded them to the spiritual nature of His kingdom. Parables then became Jesus' effective tools both for revealing truth to the faithful and concealing it from those who would reject it. As emphasized by Mark 4:11, 12, Jesus' parables revealed the truths of His kingdom as well as the unbelief of many.

13:18–23 The parable of the soils (vv. 3–23 is a unit) contains no new truth; what is said here has always been true. The responses to truth are always like those of the soils. What then is the purpose of this parable? It serves as an introduction to the whole series of parables. Productivity is always dependent upon believing and receiving. We can never receive more than we believe, and we can't believe what we don't understand (Acts 8:30, 31). The differences, then, are not to be found in the Word but in the preparation of the soil to receive the Word (James 1:19–21).

13:24 The kingdom of heaven is like: This phrase introduces new truth regarding God's coming kingdom. The introductory formula does not mean that the kingdom is to be exactly identified with a man, or a mustard seed (v. 31), or leaven (v. 33). It simply means that some truth regarding the kingdom is found in the story. A parable was primarily intended to teach one point, not to be picked apart to find meaning in all of its details.

13:25–30 his enemy came and sowed tares: Tares closely resemble wheat but are poisonous to humans. They are indistinguishable from wheat until the final fruit appears. Farmers would weed out tares just before the wheat harvest. Until Christ returns, both genuine believers and counterfeits will be allowed to remain together.

Rainfall and Crops

Jesus' parables taught spiritual truths through practical illustrations, such as the sowing of the seed. Plowing in ancient Israel was not deep, and it could be done either before or after the sower scattered the seed. Rainfall was irregular and often inadequate. The success of a growing season in a particular plot could not be predicted, and for that reason a good harvest was all the more appreciated (Matt. 13:8).

13:31, 32 The kingdom of heaven is like a mustard seed: The parable of the wheat and tares (vv. 24–30) reveals that the kingdom of heaven will be preceded by an age in which good and evil coexist. The parable of the mustard seed affirms that during that time period, the number of people who will inherit the kingdom will be very small at first. But though it begins like the smallest of seeds, the nucleus will enjoy growth completely out of proportion to its initial size. The birds of the air do not represent evil as they do in the parable of the soils (vv. 4, 19). In the OT a tree large enough to support nesting birds was considered prosperous and healthy (Ps. 104:12; Ezek. 17:23; 31:6; Dan. 4:12, 21). The kingdom, though having only a small number of people at the beginning of the age, will ultimately be large and prosperous.

13:33 The kingdom of heaven is like leaven: This second parable on growth is even shorter than the former and builds upon it. This very brief parable has occasioned a great deal of discussion. Does the leaven illustrate sin or is it parallel with the parable of the mustard seed to portray large results from small beginnings? It is generally believed that leaven in the Bible portrays evil. Its use in this verse has also often been taken to represent evil which will gradually interpenetrate Christendom (the kingdom of heaven). But it is doubtful that leaven refers to evil in this parable, especially since this parable is also given in Luke 13:20, where it describes the "kingdom of God," which can hardly be conceived as penetrated by evil. In the domestic context of Palestine, we should recall that leaven was properly used all but one week in the year. The parables were given to be understood by the common people, not the leaders who were concerned about deciphering theological symbols. If it is a picture of the dynamic character of yeast that once it starts it is impossible to stop, this could be a picture of the numerical growth of the kingdom. As the parable in vv. 31 and 32 dealt with the extent of the kingdom's growth, this one concerns the power and process of its growth. Its lesson is related to the former in portraying how that great growth will take place. Rather than powered by outward armies or organizations, this kingdom will grow by an internal dynamic, later revealed as the Holy Spirit. As such it will not be hindered by opposition, but will rather thrive on it, as kneading enables leaven to penetrate and produce growth in dough. Consider this. It took from Pentecost to 1900 for Christians to number 2.5 percent of the world's population. From 1900 to 1970 it doubled to 5 percent. In the next twenty-two years it doubled again to 10 percent. There is a demographic explosion of Christendom taking place today, especially in Third World countries.

Fifty Pounds of Flour

When Jesus told the parable of the leaven (Matt. 13:33), laughter may have rippled through the crowd from the women who were listening. “Doesn’t He know anything about baking?” they might have chuckled, or maybe Jesus was humoring them with an inside joke.

Jewish women did not use fresh yeast each day to leaven their barley or wheat bread; they used a small piece of fermented dough from the previous day’s batch. However, three measures was an enormous amount of flour, close to fifty pounds. How could that much flour be leavened by the usual amount of previously leavened dough?

Jesus’ parable, and its point, must have come to mind every day afterwards as the women kneaded their dough. Fifty pounds of flour leavened by such a small amount of dough … , the kingdom of God brought about by such a small number of faithful people.

13:34, 35 The quotation of Asaph in Ps. 78:2 serves as a prophecy of Jesus’ use of parables.

13:36 Jesus sent the multitude away: The parables of vv. 1–35 were addressed to the multitude. The phrase went into the house indicates that the parables of vv. 44–52 were for the disciples only. During this “private instruction,” Jesus explained His previous stories and added four more.

13:37, 38 Sons of the kingdom refers to heirs of the kingdom.

13:39–43 The end of the age speaks of the time when the Son of Man will come to set up His righteous kingdom.

13:44 the kingdom of heaven is like treasure hidden in a field: The parables of vv. 44–52 concern kingdom values and responsibilities. They are especially directed at believers. The first two are recorded by Matthew alone and appear to belong together. Stripped of their grand dreams of an immediate, powerful kingdom of David and facing the prospect of much opposition on all sides, the disciples were forced to count the cost. In the first story a man stumbles on a treasure trove, which he makes every effort to obtain. The central truth being taught is that of the immense value of the kingdom, which far outweighs any sacrifice or inconvenience that one might encounter on earth to possess it.

13:45, 46 the kingdom of heaven is like a merchant seeking beautiful pearls: This second parable on kingdom values was evidently given to further underscore Jesus' optimism for the despondent disciples. His double encouragement indicates their great need at that time. This parable has a slightly different emphasis from the one in v. 44. Though the individual in v. 44 found his treasure by accident, the person here found it by diligent search. No matter how a person is led to Christ's kingdom, its values and delights will be beyond estimation. Christ laid down this basic investment principle for disciples (Matt. 6:19–21; 16:24–27). Two erroneous tendencies to allegorize these parables should be noted. One is the tendency urged by Origen to allegorize Christ as the hidden treasure or priceless pearl whom a sinner should seek to purchase. The other reverses the roles, making Christ to be the finder and purchaser of the church in a lavish allegory. Both, however, are bad theology (Christ is not for sale, nor did He sell Israel to buy the church), and both deal with problems foreign to the context. It is better simply to recognize the disciples' dilemma at that time and Christ's concern to imbue them with a high sense of calling to His new kingdom program.

13:47–50 the kingdom of heaven is like a dragnet: The last two parables speak of kingdom responsibilities for disciples. First, Jesus describes a large seine (net), which would encircle a large area and drag the bottom of a lake. This net gathers fish of every kind, without discrimination. Similarly, the responsibility of disciples would be to catch as many "fish" of every kind as possible. The work of judging or ferreting out the false catch, however, is not a job that the disciples are called or equipped to do. That work is assigned to angels at Christ's return.

13:51, 52 Things new and old refers to truths about the kingdom that were found in the OT and those that were freshly revealed in these parables. What were some of the new things? (1) Rather than the immediate coming of the kingdom, an age would intervene (compare Acts 1:6, 7) when good and evil would coexist, even among the ranks of those who professed to be heirs of the kingdom (13:37–43). (2) The number of the heirs of the kingdom would be very small at the inception of this new age. However, they would grow into a large group (13:31, 32). (3) Evil would invade this group and ultimately make it apostate (13:33). (4) The treasure of the kingdom though seen as near in the ministry of Christ would be hidden. He purchased it; it will yet be revealed. (5) The body of the redeemed is not just Jewish; it will be like a pearl and be comprised of many peoples in one group. (6) The anticipated judgment will occur at the conclusion of the present age. Just as the parable of the sower was used as an introduction to the six "kingdom parables," so this parable is a conclusion. It calls for action in view of what they have learned. They are to be responsible stewards and dispensers of these kingdom treasures (thesaurou). That work, however, was made contingent on their understanding the previous lessons. Knowledge of the things new and old brings responsibility. Responsible stewards will distinguish between the covenant program for Israel (now temporarily on the sidetrack) and the new interadvent kingdom program which Jesus has introduced. He concludes by warning them that the two programs are not to be confused.

13:53–56 carpenter's son: "Carpenter" basically means skilled worker. Joseph may have been a stonemason or some other type of craftsman.

13:57, 58 A prophet is not without honor except in his own country: In this second mission of Jesus to Nazareth, His hometown, He found that the people's unbelief had not abated (Luke 4:16–30). Because of their familiarity with Jesus, the people failed to recognize Him for who He is. Their eyes were blinded by unbelief. Matthew notes that it had in fact spread even to "his own household" (John 7:5). Though they based their unbelief on His being the "carpenter's son," Jesus did not refute that misinformation at this time. He saw it as mere intellectual facade to cover up their aversion to spiritual repentance (John 6:42). His change of ministry, if anything, appeared to enflame the unbelief of those closest to Him.

14:1, 2 John the Baptist had already been beheaded (how that happened is recorded in the following verses). According to Herod, the miracles of Christ were so wonderful that they could only be explained as the work of a resurrected prophet, perhaps John the Baptist.

14:3–12 Herod had gone to Rome, where he met Herodias, the wife of his half-brother Philip (not Philip the tetrarch). After seducing Herodius, Herod divorced his own wife and married Herodias. What is significant is the principle that laws of marriage and divorce pertain to both saved and lost people as a creation, not a redemptive, ordinance. Also interesting is that John believed it was a duty to rebuke the political authority for moral transgression, not only to preach the gospel.

14:13–21 Jesus' miraculous feeding of the crowd indicates several things: (1) He fulfills the expectations of those looking forward to a new Moses, based on Deut. 18:15 (John 1:21; Acts 3:22; 7:37); (2) He can supply the daily bread requested in 6:11; and (3) He is the Messiah who will provide the messianic banquet (Matt. 22:1–14; 26:29; Ps. 132:15; Is. 25:6). This miracle is so significant that it is the only precrucifixion sign recorded in all four Gospels.

14:22–26 The fourth watch would be between 3 A.M. and 6 A.M.

14:27 It is I may also be translated "I am." Some interpret this as a claim to deity (Ex. 3:14).

14:28 Peter answered Him in his characteristic impulsive manner.

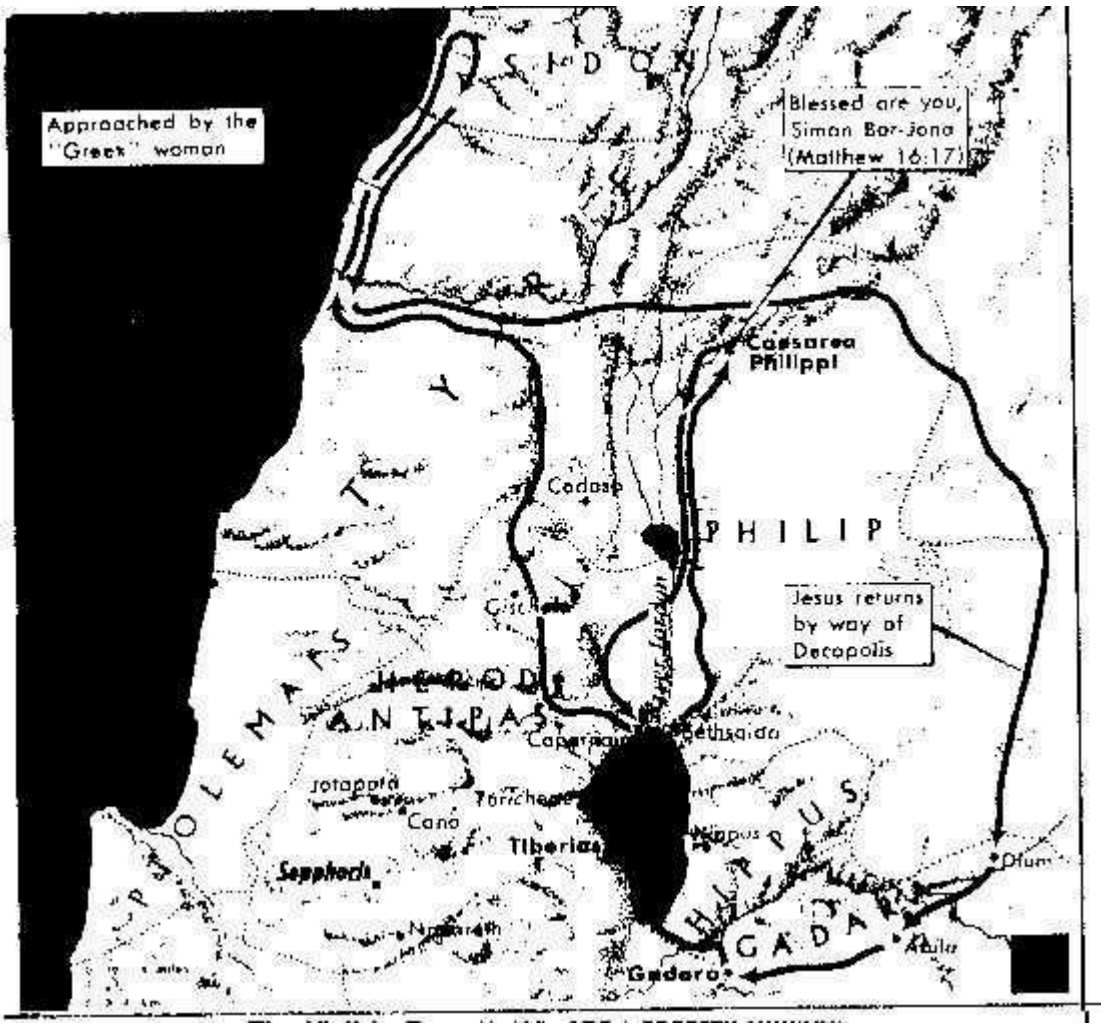
14:28–36 Only the Gospel of Matthew records the miracle of Peter walking on the water. This was a valuable lesson for the disciples to learn. They could do the humanly impossible with the power of Christ.

15:1 The fact that the scribes and Pharisees had traveled from Jerusalem to Galilee to see Jesus indicates that Jesus' reputation was becoming widespread.

15:2 The tradition of the elders was not the Law of Moses, it was the oral tradition based on interpretations of the Law. They washed their hands ceremonially to remove defilement, not for hygienic purposes (Mark 7:2–4).

15:3 In typical rabbinical style, Jesus answered the accusations of the scribes and Pharisees with a question. Whereas they challenged Jesus for His disciples' violation of the teachings of former rabbis, Jesus challenged them for violating the commandment of God. The scribes and Pharisees were placing their own views above the revelation of God, and yet claimed to be following Him.

15:4–9 Jesus was referring to a practice whereby people would dedicate their possessions to God so that they could use their finances for themselves and not for others. For example, if parents needed money, the children could excuse themselves from helping because their resources were already "dedicated" to God. This ruse kept people from honoring their parents by taking care of them in their old age.



Jesus' Visit to Tyre, Sidon, and Caesarea Philippi

15:10–14 In vv. 3–9, Jesus rebuked the scribes and Pharisees for being so obsessed with traditions that they failed to observe basic commandments. Here He chided them for being so concerned with external ceremonial washings and dietary regulations that they failed to deal with character. Both of these charges were an outgrowth of the accusations of the scribes and Pharisees recorded in v. 2.

15:15–20 As a person thinks in his heart, so is he. How do thoughts get into the heart, the seat of reflection? Through the eyes, ears, and other senses. The raw material of our actions is what we take into our mind and allow to settle in our heart. David put it this way: "Your word I have hidden in my heart, that I might not sin against You" (Ps. 119:11). The other side is seen in Ps. 101:3: "I will set nothing wicked before my eyes." Paul pictured the believer as “bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ” (2 Cor. 10:5).

15:21–23 The woman was a Gentile who would have had no natural claims on a Jewish Messiah.

15:24 This verse demonstrates Christ’s commitment to Israel, whom He called lost sheep. Jesus would always give the Jews the first opportunity to accept Him as their Messiah.

15:25–28 The “children” that Jesus referred to were the people of Israel. The little dogs refer to Gentiles.

15:29–31 The scene changes from the region of Tyre and Sidon to a mountain near the Sea of Galilee but still in Gentile territory. Mark 7:31 identifies this region as the Decapolis. they glorified the God of Israel: The Gentiles believed and glorified Israel’s God, while many in Israel remained blind to their Messiah.

15:32–39 This is not the same miracle recorded in 14:14–21. Jesus Himself identified two distinct feedings of multitudes (16:9, 10). This was a supernatural supply of food for Gentiles. The seven baskets of leftovers here contrasts with the twelve baskets that were gathered in ch. 14, and the word for large baskets in v. 37 is different from the word for “baskets” in 14:20.

IN CONTEXT

Party Politics in Jesus' Day

What were the politics of Jesus? We may speculate on what His preferences might be today, but what political ideals, if any, did He favor during His earthly life? What leaders did He endorse, if any? What causes did He support? For that matter, was political choice even an issue for Him? Did politics even matter?

It would be difficult if not impossible to determine any satisfactory answers. Yet Jesus seemed acutely aware of the power brokers in His society, and He showed remarkable skill with them when necessary, but He never addressed or practiced politics in any formal sense. And, of course, He lived in a system completely different from our own.

Even if we cannot know precisely what Jesus' affiliations were, we can at least understand some of the political dynamics at work in Palestine in the first half of the first century. For example, we know that there were at least five major political parties among the Hebrews of that day.

The Herodians—Loyal Defenders of the Status Quo • Took their name from Herod the Great (37–4 B.C.) and his supporters.

• Supported the adoption of Graeco-Roman culture and policies in Palestine.

• Like the Pharisees, favored local political autonomy. Fearing military intervention by Rome, they stridently resisted challengers to the status quo, such as the Zealots, John the Baptist, Jesus, and the apostles.

• Joined forces with other parties in the plot to eliminate Jesus (Matt. 22:16; Mark 3:6; 12:13).

The Pharisees—Religious Legalists

• Probably derived from a group of the faithful called the Hasidim.

• Name means "to separate."

• Shared similar views with the Essenes but chose to stay within the larger society. Nevertheless, many chose to study the law on their own, having lost respect for the priesthood as a result of its corruption.

• Many served on the council (Acts 6:12).

• Considered the doctors of the law; scribes were considered laymen.

• Collected and preserved the Talmud and the Mishnah, voluminous products of oral tradition and OT commentary.

• By reputation, legalistic and fanatically devoted to rabbinic tradition. Some refused to eat with non-Pharisees for fear of being contaminated by food not rendered ritually clean.

• Like the Herodians, favored local political autonomy.

• Differed with the Sadducees over the doctrine of the resurrection.

• Understood the coming kingdom as a literal fulfillment of the promise to David for a King to reign over Israel forever.

• Maintained an elaborate theology of angels, believing them to intervene in human affairs.

The Sadducees—The Urban Elite

• May have derived from Zadok, high priest under King David.

• Tended to represent the aristocrats, priests, merchants, and urban elite in Jerusalem and other cities in Judea.

• Hostile to Jesus and His followers.

• Many served on the council. Most of the high priests in the days of Jesus and the apostles were Sadducees.

• Denied the resurrection or life after death, along with the doctrines of everlasting punishment and a literal kingdom.

• Denied that God controls history, insisting on free will and the responsibility of humans to make wise choices according to the law.

• Held only to the Law of Moses (the first five books of the OT) as supremely authoritative.

• Denied the existence of angels.

The Zealots—Firebrands of Revolution • Ardent nationalists who awaited an opportunity to revolt against Rome.

• Resisted paying taxes to Rome or to the temple.

• One particular tax revolt against Rome, led by Judas the Galilean (6 B.C.), secured Galilee’s reputation as a seedbed of revolutionaries.

• Blamed by some for the collapse of Judea to Rome in the war of A.D. 66–70. Josephus, a Jewish historian, claimed that they degenerated into mere assassins or sicarii (dagger-men).

• Sided with the Pharisees in supporting Jewish law.

• Opposed the Herodians and Sadducees, who tried to maintain the political status quo.

• Intolerant of the Essenes and later of the Christians for their tendencies toward nonviolence.

• Two recruited by Jesus were Judas Iscariot and Simon the Cananite.

The Essenes—Detached Purists

• A sect of ascetics that thrived between the middle of the second century B.C. until the Jewish-Roman war in A.D. 66–70.

• Once members of the Hasidim but, unlike the Pharisees, separated from society, withdrawing into monastic communities like Qumran, where the Dead Sea scrolls were found.

• Known today mostly through secondary sources.

• Lived in societies that held property in common.

• Believed in the immortality of the soul, angels, and an elaborate scheme of end-times prophecies. Some were looking for as many as three different Messiahs.

• Known for celibacy, pacifism, opposition to slavery, caring for their own sick and elderly, trading only within their own sect, simplicity in meals and dress, and the rejection of all ostentatious display.

• Paid more attention to ceremonial purity than did even the Pharisees, and carefully guarded the Sabbath.

• Practiced ritual baptism and a communal dinner called the messianic banquet.

• May have influenced some early Christian practices and rituals.

16:1–4 sign from heaven: Perhaps the scribes and Pharisees were thinking of signs such as the fire from heaven that answered Elijah's prayer (1 Kin. 18:36–38), the plagues on Egypt (Ex. 7–12), or the sun standing still (Josh. 10:12–14).

16:4 And He left them: Previously Jesus had withdrawn in the face of opposition (12:15; 14:13; 15:21); here He "left" the Pharisees and Sadducees, meaning that He abandoned or forsook them. Jesus deserted these religious leaders as reprobates.

16:5 The other side refers to the other side of the Sea of Galilee, where the Gentiles lived.

16:6–12 In Scripture, leaven is often used as a symbol of evil. The doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees was hypocrisy, legalism, political opportunism, and spiritual hardness. Jesus' warning here was a result of the Pharisees' request for a sign in vv. 1–4.

16:13, 14 Caesarea Philippi was located north of the Sea of Galilee, at the base of the southwest slope of Mount Hermon. The place had long been associated with idol worship. The site for pagan worship centered on a massive stone facade, which Jesus referred to in His play on words concerning "rock" in v. 18. Who do men say that I … am: In the face of the surrounding idols, Christ led His disciples into a proclamation of His deity by first soliciting from them what other people said. In the end, however, what mattered was the apostles' own beliefs concerning Jesus.

16:15, 16 The Spirit of grace revealed to Peter the true identity of the Lord Jesus. Son of the living God refers to Jesus' deity. Several factors point to this conclusion: (1) He was born of a virgin (1:18–20); (2) He was called Immanuel, meaning "God with us" (1:23); (3) the title in Greek is emphatic: "the Son of the God, the living One"; and (4) later passages describe Christ as God (John 20:27–29).

16:17 has not revealed: People do not come to faith in Jesus Christ by scrutiny or searching but by the Father's revelation of the Son to them (John 6:65).

16:18 Peter in the Greek text is Petros and rock is petra. Petros is a moveable stone, large or small and petra is a ledge or shelf of rock. This statement by Christ may have been made with a gesture at the rocky structure nearby (see comment on 16:13). Some argue this distinction cannot be drawn because the Lord spoke Aramaic, a language in which such variations of meaning do not exist; however, the Holy Spirit in inspiration of the NT did use different vocabulary. Moreover, this perhaps was one of the times that Jesus spoke Greek, for He was trilingual, speaking Greek, Aramaic, and Hebrew. Otherwise the pun—Petros, petra—doesn't make sense, and why mention the Aramaic translation at other times in the book unless such usage was uncharacteristic and the Greek was more normal. The rock on which Christ would build His church is probably the confession of Peter. I will build my church shows that the church had not yet been started. Of the four Gospels, only in Matthew is the word "church" found, the other being in the context of church discipline (18:17). Obviously the disciples did not understand at this point the doctrine of the NT church with its equality of the Jew and Gentile (Eph. 2:11—3:7). They simply understood it to be the Lord's congregation or people. Even so, they knew this was a future group. Some believe the gates of Hades to be only a Jewish way of referring to death, so that Christ is simply saying death will not vanquish the church. One day by the power of Christ's resurrection the church and all the redeemed will be resurrected. Death will not hold the church captive. Others believe that the phrase refers to the fact that the forces of evil will not be able to conquer the people of God.

16:19 The keys of the kingdom may have a couple of meanings. It may refer to Peter's giving access to the kingdom to various groups of people (Jews in Acts 2, 3; Samaritans in Acts 8:14–17; Gentiles in Acts 10). The keys would open doors to lost people. However, this term may have a second significance. The keys seem to be explained by the binding and loosing discussed here. In rabbinic literature the terms "binding" and "loosing" referred to what was prohibited and what was permitted. In the context of Matt. 16:19 they are judicial (18:18). This explains the neuter whatever; it does not say "whomever." In other words this is referring to judgments Peter will make as to actions that are permitted and those forbidden. This also suits the idea of keys, which simply refers to authority. The tenses of will be bound and will be loosed are significant. It is written in such a way as to mean "will have been bound" and "will have been loosed." In other words there is the promise of divine guidance in determining Peter's judgments. When will this be fulfilled? The term kingdom of heaven consistently refers to the future kingdom. To Peter is given the promise of authority in the future kingdom; this blessing will be extended to all twelve of the apostles in Matt. 19:28.

An Ancient Key

An ancient key was a piece of wood or metal that could be passed through a hole in a door and used to move the latch or crossbar inside. Protection was provided by making the shape of the key complex. The Egyptians put wooden pins in the crossbar that kept it from moving until the right key was used to push the pins just the right amount. The instruction of "keys" in Matt. 16:19 and Luke 11:52 signified access to spiritual teaching.

16:20 Because the public did not understand the concept of the suffering Messiah, they were not to be told that He was Jesus the Christ. Furthermore, the nation had already turned away from Christ. They had crossed the point of no return (12:31, 32).

16:21 The phrase from that time marks a new direction in Jesus' ministry. The expression occurs twice in the Book of Matthew, here and in 4:17, where it introduces the beginning of Jesus' ministry in announcing the nearness of the kingdom. Here in 16:21 it introduces the Cross and the ultimate rejection of the Messiah. Elders and chief priests and scribes refer to the makeup of the Jewish council, also called the Sanhedrin. Together with the mention of Jerusalem, this indicates that Jesus' rejection would be an official one. Be killed is the first of three predictions in Matthew concerning Christ's death (17:22, 23; 20:18, 19).

16:22 Evidently Peter heard nothing about the Lord's resurrection. Like so many Christians, he only perceived the negative. rebuke him: The same tongue that attributed deity to Him earlier (v. 1b) is now correcting deity!

16:23 To call Peter Satan was a very serious thing. But when Peter stood in the way of the plan of God, he was speaking for Satan! The mouth that was used as the vehicle of God's oracle is now the channel of Satan's lie. How fickle people are. And how patient God is!

Living Within One's Limits

People are at times quick to step forward with a plan of action. As the exchange between Peter and the Lord in Matt. 16:22, 23 shows, there were times when Peter liked to take charge quickly and set the agenda for himself and others. But just as often, he found himself in over his head: • When Jesus came walking on water to the storm-tossed boat that held His terrified disciples, Peter demanded that Jesus prove that it was He by bidding Peter also to walk on water. After a few steps on the water, Peter noticed the wind and the waves and promptly sank, requiring Jesus to rescue him again (Matt. 14:22–32).

• Peter overstated his commitment to Christ, claiming that "even if I have to die with You, I will not deny You!" (Matt. 26:35). Yet only a few hours later he denied having any association with the Lord (26:69–75).

• He took charge of defending Jesus against Roman soldiers when they came to arrest Him, even though he had failed to "watch and pray" with Christ, as He had requested (Matt. 26:36–46; John 18:1–11).

• He refused to allow Jesus to wash his feet at the Last Supper, but then he called on Him to wash his hands and his head as well (Matt. 13:5–11).

Eventually Peter's leadership skills were captured in a more controlled spirit and he became a significant figure in the early church. Like many of us, despite many false starts as a result of Peter's impetuous nature, Jesus enlisted this impulsive but loyal follower to feed His sheep (Matt. 21:17).

16:24 If Christ died for the redeemed, the saved should commit themselves to Him to the point they are willing to die for Him.

16:25–27 Soul may simply refer to life, as is true of the same Greek word translated "life" in v. 25. It seems best to say it looks at the basic self. Here Christ is asking for commitment in order to receive rewards. That this is His point is seen in the following verse. The way we invest our life determines our reward at Christ's coming (Rev. 22:12).

16:28 coming in His kingdom: This verse anticipates the Transfiguration in ch. 17. Several reasons point to this conclusion: (1) It is Peter's interpretation in 2 Pet. 1:16–18; (2) the three synoptic Gospels (John omits the account of the Transfiguration) all place the Transfiguration immediately after this prediction; and (3) not all of the apostles saw the Transfiguration (19:27–30). In the Transfiguration, Peter, James, and John saw a preview of the kingdom.

17:1 The high mountain was probably a spur of Mount Hermon, which rises to about 9,400 feet.

17:2–4 Moses and Elijah: Their presence indicated that the OT Scriptures had been looking forward to the Messiah and His kingdom.

17:5–8 This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased were the identical words spoken at Jesus' baptism in Matt. 3:17 (Ps. 2:7; Is. 42:1). Hear Him seems to refer to Deut. 18:15.

17:9 Tell the vision to no one: The command for silence was due to the fact that the masses of Israel had an incorrect concept of the Messiah (Matt. 8:4; 12:16). They expected a conquering king not a Suffering Servant.

17:10 The three disciples evidently did not comprehend the reference to Christ's death in v. 9. The problem they raised concerned the Transfiguration. They had just seen Elijah on the mountain. If the scribes were correct that Elijah must come before the kingdom would arrive, why should the disciples not inform everyone that Elijah had appeared on the mountain?

17:11 The Lord told His three apostles that the scribes were right in their interpretation of Mal. 3:1; 4:5, 6. The fact that Christ used the phrase will restore all things indicates that the prophecy still has a future fulfillment.

17:12, 13 Jesus indicates that the prophecies concerning Elijah had their fulfillment in John the Baptist. Yet because the restoration is not complete, some conclude that the role of Elijah will be taken up by one of the two witnesses of Rev. 11:3–6.

17:14–18 In this case, the epilepsy was caused by a demon (v. 18).

17:19–21 The disciples could not exorcize the demon because they failed in faith. The power was there, but they had failed to appropriate it.

17:22, 23 Jesus and the disciples began what would be Jesus' final journey to Jerusalem. Once again Jesus predicted His death and resurrection (Matt. 16:21; 20:18, 19). Once again the disciples failed to understand the Resurrection; they seemed to have heard only His words about His coming death, because they became exceedingly sorrowful.

17:24 The temple tax was given annually by every adult Jewish male over twenty years of age for maintaining the temple. This tax was based on Ex. 30:13 and amounted to two day's wages for a common laborer. Evidently Jesus had not yet paid the tax, and the temple tax collector was following up on it.

17:25 Peter, desiring to maintain the best reputation and also assuming the best of his Master, replied to the tax collector (v. 24) that Jesus had paid the temple tax. Anticipated implies that Peter was about to speak, evidently about the matter of Christ paying the temple tax, when Jesus spoke first. Their sons may refer to citizens of a country as opposed to conquered peoples or strangers. However, citizens often pay customs and taxes. More likely the contrast is between the imperial family and the common people.

17:26 Jesus demonstrates that, as God's Son, He was free from the obligation to pay the temple tax. In fact, the temple belonged to Him (Mal. 3:1). The fact that He used the plural sons implies that Peter and the other disciples were also free from that obligation.

17:27 The half-shekel coin used to pay the tax was no longer in circulation, and it was therefore common for two men to pay the tax together with a stater, which was worth a full shekel.

18:1–35 (Mark 9:33–37; Luke 9:46–48) This chapter forms Jesus' longest recorded statement regarding the principle of forgiveness. Forgiving others is one of the most responsible and spiritual activities in our lives and must be repeated continually throughout onelife. This is the last great discourse before Jesus' journey to Jerusalem, and it is given in response to the disciples' jealousy of one another and to prepare them for the crucifixion, an act they will have to learn to forgive. Mark 9:33 indicates the message was given "in a house," probably Peter's.

18:1 Matthew 18 contains the fourth of five discourses in Matthew's Gospel (5:1—7:27; 10:1–42; 13:1–53; 24:1—25:46). The theme of this discourse is humility. Jesus outlines five reasons that humility is essential: (1) for entrance into the kingdom (vv. 2, 3); (2) for greatness in the kingdom (v. 4); (3) to prevent offenses (vv. 5–11); (4) to carry on proper discipline in the church (vv. 5–20); and (5) for forgiving one another (vv. 21–35). Greatest in the kingdom implies rank, a concept implied by Jesus Himself in Matt. 5:19.

18:2–5 Converted means to turn around (Luke 22:32).

18:6, 7 Causes … to sin literally means to put a snare, trap, or stumbling block in someone's way. A millstone was a heavy grinding stone so large that it had to be turned by a donkey.

18:8, 9 This same basic statement is found in reverse order in Matt. 5:29, 30. One of the keys to understanding this assertion is to recognize the present tense of causes you to sin. Although the warning was addressed to the disciples, it describes a person who has a lifestyle of sinning and needs drastic measures in order to change it (1 John 3:7–10).

18:10, 11 One of these little ones describes either a little child or a believer. Verses 12–14 seem to indicate a believer. Here Jesus implies that angels watch over and serve His followers on earth (Heb. 1:14).

18:12–14 These little ones probably refers back to those who believe (v. 6). The Father watches over each of His little ones.

18:15–17 Jesus teaches His disciples about the process of restoring an erring believer. First, there should be a loving personal confrontation. The second step outlined in v. 16 is not as clear. The principle of witnesses is taken from Deut. 19:15, but what is it the witnesses attest? Evidently they witness that the offended brother is acting in good faith and in the right spirit in attempting to work out a reconciliation. They also would be witnesses to any agreement. If this does not bring peace, the offended brother is to report it to the assembly. The church then is to do everything possible to convince the believer who has sinned to be reconciled or to right the wrong. If the erring one will not respond, that person is to be disciplined by being cut off from the fellowship. Such a loss would be extremely painful to the offender (1 Cor. 5:11; 2 Thess. 3:6, 14, 15).

18:18 bind: Binding refers to things that are not permitted; loosing refers to things that are permitted (16:19). As in 16:19, the tenses imply that what is loosed or bound on earth will have been determined already in heaven. In other words, this is a promise of divine direction for each local church.

18:19, 20 This passage is commonly used as a general prayer promise, which it is not. Quite obviously, one child of God has full access to the throne of grace. It doesn't take two or three for God to be present. Specifically it refers to church discipline. It is a promise for guidance for the two or three who confront, and it is a promise for the church to claim wisdom and restoration for the erring brother.

18:20 This is not a definition of a local church, but the promise of Christ to be in their midst in the carrying through of the process of discipline as delineated in the preceding paragraph.

Commitment

Some even call it the "C" word today, as if to shame commitment. The demands and costs of commitment seem too great to many people, and convenience often wins out over the sacrifice involved in being committed to someone or something.

It was the same in Jesus' day. As He began to unveil a new way of life, critics challenged Him on the difficulties of keeping the marriage commitment (Matt. 19:3, 7). Later, even His own disciples wanted to send away some "bothersome children" in order to deal with more "important" things (19:13). But Jesus remained committed to the children.

The discussion of divorce followed appropriately on the heels of Jesus' remarks about the merits of boundless forgiveness (18:21–35). What better way to lead into the topic of commitment? Jesus didn't ignore the problems and failures of human relationships. Those very shortcomings are what make forgiveness, which is a special kind of commitment to others, crucial.

The vital necessity of commitment is also reinforced in Jesus' next encounter, with a rich man who wanted to ensure his possession of eternal life (19:16–30). The man proposed rule-keeping as the standard by which he should be judged, but Jesus countered with an appeal for service (19:21). True wealth involved a higher commitment: serving the Lord and others rather than the idol of material gain (19:23, 29).

Followers of Christ are known for their commitments, to marriage, to family, to community, to work, and above all to Jesus Christ. Such loyalty today is much needed, when people often make vows of convenience rather than of commitment.

18:21 Peter's question was a logical outgrowth of the teachings of vv. 15–20. Actually Peter was being very generous in his willingness to forgive up to seven times. The traditional limit was three times, possibly because of the refrain in Amos 1:3, 6, 9, 11, 13; 2:1, 4, 6.

18:22 Seventy times seven may also mean "seventy-seven times." The point is not to keep count at all, but to always be willing to forgive.

18:23–31 Ten thousand talents was an enormous sum. A denarius was one day's wage for a laborer (20:2). A talent was worth about six thousand denarii. Ten thousand talents would be sixty million day's wages, a sum that would be impossible to repay. Thus Jesus graphically portrayed this man's hopeless predicament.

18:32–34 This parable reiterates the principle that we should forgive others (Matt. 6:12) because God forgives us.

18:35 This verse is a warning of discipline for not forgiving others (1 Cor. 11:30–32; Heb. 12:5–11). All of a Christian's sins are forgiven and forgotten forever (Ps. 103:12; Jer. 31:34; Heb. 8:12). But this parable illustrates the Christian duty to forgive others (Matt. 6:12, 14, 15; 2 Cor. 2:10; Eph. 4:32). If our forgiveness should be in direct proportion to the incredible amount that we have been forgiven (18:22), then we must always be willing to forgive.

19:1–3 This question could be dangerous. John the Baptist's answer had resulted in his imprisonment and ultimately his death (Matt. 14:3–11). That the problem is posed with malicious intent is seen in the participle testing. It means to tempt. The basis for the question was Deut. 24:1. The rabbis had been arguing about what was meant by the expression "uncleanness" (literally, "the nakedness of a thing"), which referred to some indecency in the opinions of most. One school of thought, the school of Shammai, was more strict and said the only grounds for divorce was immorality. The other viewpoint, the school of Hillel, was much more lenient and believed that anything that displeased the husband was sufficient to obtain a divorce. The question is framed as though the questioner may have been disposed to the view of Hillel, at least it appears they tilted the question in that direction.

19:4–6 Jesus avoids the Hillel-Shammai controversy and goes right to the Scripture. He gives three reasons for the permanence of marriage: (1) He made one male and one female. If God had intended more than one wife for Adam, He could and would have created more. The same would be true of husbands for Eve. The title He who made them is literally "the One who created" or "the Creator." The implication is that the Creator is Lord and is the One who determines what is the ideal in marriage. (2) God ordained marriage as the strongest bond in all human relationships (v. 5). A man leaves his parents and is joined to his wife. The language is very strong here. Leave is the verb "abandon" and joined to means "to be glued to." The most permanent relationship in the fabric of society is not between parent and child, which is broken to establish marriage (Gen 2:24), but is the marriage of a man and a woman. (3) the two become one flesh (Gen. 2:24): The basic element in marriage is a contract or covenant (Mal. 2:14); the result of that covenant is sexual intercourse. The physical union of a man and woman represents the union of their lives and their commitment to each other. That is why it is so wrong outside of marriage (1 Cor. 6:16). The physical union in marriage is a symbol of their unity in many areas. To break this physical union is to destroy a fundamental unity of life. Even if lost people are married and have conjugal relations, God has made them one, since marriage is a creation ordinance, not a redemptive one. By divorce, humans separate what God has joined together.

19:7 The opponents immediately catch the tenor of the Lord's answer and challenge His conclusions.

19:8 The Lord Jesus' reply is that Moses never commanded divorce; he only permitted it. And this permission was only because of the obstinate heart of humans. God's ideal was not to divorce.

19:9 Many problems come to the surface in this verse. For instance, what is meant by the word wife? Some have taken the divorce decree to be valid only during the engagement period, as in the case of Joseph and Mary (Matt. 1). Then "wife" means the woman to whom a man is engaged, a legitimate meaning. However, Deut. 24:1 is not talking about an engagement period, clearly the historical context to the discussion in Matt. 19. It specifically says the husband is to send her out of his house. They are already living together! Another question is the meaning of immorality. The word here (as is the term in Deut. 24:1) is a very general one and may refer to any kind of sexual immorality: premarital, extramarital, harlotry, homosexuality, and even bestiality. Of great importance is the problem of whether the exception clause only grants the right to divorce the wife or does it also give permission to remarry? Probably the latter is correct. In other words, immorality not only is grounds for divorce but also for remarriage. The last part of v. 9 probably means that a man who marries a woman who has been divorced because of her immorality commits adultery in marrying her. It should be noted that the bill of divorce protected the wife. A husband could not flippantly rid himself of his wife by a simple oral statement. He must have grounds and the decree was to be written. Even if there are sufficient grounds for divorce, it would be better for no divorce to take place. Lifetime marriages are God's ideal (v. 8). It is no accident that the passage on divorce in ch. 19 immediately follows the discussion on forgiveness in ch. 18.

19:10 Here the disciples enter into the discussion. They evidently were surprised at the Lord's stringent view. If the only basis for divorce is immorality, it would be better not to marry. But this was not the intent of Jesus because marriage was given to men and women for their good (Gen. 2:17).

19:11 Jesus indicates that remaining unmarried is only for a few people.

19:12 Some people do not marry because they were born with no sex drive. Others do not marry because they are castrated. Still others forgo marriage for the sake of serving God. Some have been given the spiritual gift of celibacy in order to do this (1 Cor. 7:7).

19:13–17 Why do you call Me good may be rephrased as, “Why are you asking me concerning what is good?” The only One who can ultimately answer the question about goodness is God. The fact that Jesus went on to answer the question is a quiet claim to deity.

IN CONTEXT

The Children's Significance

When Jesus welcomed the little children (Matt. 19:14), He was making a major statement about their value and significance. Perhaps the disciples, who rebuked the mothers who brought their babies to Jesus (19:13), had adopted the prevailing Graeco-Roman view of childhood as an insignificant phase of life. To be sure, children were necessary for a family's survival, but they were not valued for their own sake.

Unwanted infants in pagan cultures were routinely abandoned on roadsides and at garbage dumps. Tragically, gender and economics often determined such a fate, and more girls than boys were "exposed" since girls represented a future financial burden while boys could eventually contribute to the family's income. Most exposed infants died, but some might be "rescued" and raised to become slaves, gladiators, or prostitutes. Children were held in such low esteem in Jesus' time that some professional beggars collected exposed children, mutilated them, and then used their misery to gain sympathy and thus increase profits from their begging.

Among the Jews, however, children were traditionally considered a blessing from God and childlessness a curse. Children were so desired by the Jews that barrenness became grounds for divorce.

Jewish fathers had ultimate authority over all aspects of their children's lives, but both fathers and mothers were instructed by the Law of Moses to nurture and care for their children. Fathers were particularly obligated to teach their children God's commands and to raise them as members of God's chosen people (Deut. 6:6–8). In return, children were obliged to honor both mother and father (Deut. 5:16). Jewish mothers usually took care of the infants, who typically nursed until the age of two or three.

In some wealthy Greek and Roman homes, mothers employed wet nurses and, as the children grew, slaves were assigned to their total care. Poor mothers often worked while their babies hung from slings on their backs, and as soon as the children were old enough, they were taught to help.

First-century parents, of course, did not have to confront the childcare dilemma faced by many parents today. Work and home were more tightly linked in those days, and so they did not have to surmount the peculiar challenges of specialization and separation of today's world.

19:18 Which ones is really "What sort of?"

19:18, 19 The Lord responded by quoting from the last half of the decalogue climaxing with the fifth commandment and Lev. 19:18.

19:20–22 These verses do not teach salvation by works (Rom. 3:23, 24; Eph. 2:8, 9). Rather, Jesus was proving the error of the man's claim to have fulfilled God's law (v. 20). If the young man loved his neighbor to the extent required by the Law of Moses (v. 19; Lev. 19:18), he would have had no difficulty in giving away his wealth to needy people.

19:23–26 The comment that it is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven shocked the disciples (Who then can be saved?), who accepted the common notion of the day that the rich were blessed of God and therefore certainly saved. To correct that misunderstanding, Jesus explained the human difficulty for the rich to be converted. Hard (Gk. duskolos) implies with extreme difficulty, though not hopeless. The illustration of a camel going through the eye of a needle has been interpreted differently, such as threading a camel hair rope through a needle's eye, or as an actual camel squeezing through a small gate, "the eye of a needle," next to the main gate at Jerusalem. It has also been interpreted as the absolute impossibility of a literal camel (Palestine's largest animal) trying to get through a tiny needle's eye. The latter is most likely, following a similar Talmudic proverb about an elephant. Note that they were not in Jerusalem at this time. The point is that the salvation of the rich is humanly impossible. In fact, all human nature is incapable of saving itself and must rely on God's efficacious grace for that which is humanly impossible to become all things … possible with God. The salvation of a rich sinner is just as miraculous as the salvation of a poor sinner. Both are only possible with God.

19:23, 24 Jesus' comment about a rich man's salvation would have been difficult for some Jewish people in this period to accept because they held to a form of "prosperity theology." If people prospered, it was evidence of God's blessing on them. Whereas v. 23 says it is hard for a rich man to become saved, v. 24 implies that it is as impossible as passing a camel through the eye of a needle (Mark 10:25; Luke 18:25).

19:25, 26 Christ's response affirmed no human could save himself; salvation is of God (John 2:9).

19:27 we have left all: The instruction Jesus gave to the rich man was precisely what Peter and the other disciples had done (4:18–22). The natural question then was what shall we have? Rather than upbraid Peter for what may seem like a selfish request, Jesus assured him that the life investment he and the other disciples had made (16:24–28) would have dividends "a hundredfold" (v. 29).

19:28 The apostles never forgot Jesus' promise about their place in His kingdom; it was still in their minds in Acts 1:15–26. In the regeneration looks ahead to the coming kingdom promised in Dan. 7:13, 14. throne of His glory: Christ is today seated at the right hand of the eternal throne of the Father. In the future kingdom, He will occupy the Davidic throne (Rev. 3:21). In that kingdom, the twelve apostles will sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

19:29 The expression hundredfold may be "manifold," but it makes no difference either in interpretation or application. The family of God is such that if one loses a family member, that member is replaced manifold, or hundredfold, by the followers of Christ, whose view is the extended family as contrasted to the nuclear family.

19:30 The chapter division here is unfortunate. This saying, or proverb, obviously parallels 20:16 and brackets the parable. The proverb serves as an inclusio and is a major theme of the parable. The proverb is even reversed in 20:16.

20:1–3 The third hour was about 9 A.M.

20:4 These workers, unlike those in v. 2, had no contract; they only trusted the landowner.

20:5 The sixth hour was about noon. The ninth hour was 3 P.M.

The Denarius

The denarius (Matt. 20:9) was a common unit of currency in the Roman Empire for over four centuries. First minted in 211 B.C., this silver coin weighed about an eighth of an ounce, a weight between that of a penny and a nickel. Julius Caesar paid soldiers 225 denarii per year. Augustus paid the same but supplemented it with awards and gifts.

20:6, 7 The eleventh hour was about 5 P.M. There would have been only one hour left in the working day.

20:8–15 The first workers complained that their wages were the same as those who had been hired late in the day. However, the owner had not cheated them; everyone received the agreed-upon sum for his work. The early workers grumbled because they were evil in their outlook; their master, however, was sovereignly generous.

20:16 In the context of Matthew, the workers with the contract represent Israel; they had the promises and the covenants (Rom. 3:1, 2; 9:4; Eph. 2:11, 12). Those without an agreement represent the Gentiles, who would be made equal with the Jewish people when salvation became available to all through faith in Jesus Christ (Rom. 11:16, 17; Eph. 2:13–15; 3:6).

Unjust Pay?

Anyone who feels that they are not paid what they are worth can appreciate the reaction of the workers in the parable about the wages that Jesus told in Matt. 20:1–16. He spoke of an employer who hired workers for a full day, others for two-thirds of a day, others for half a day, and others for even less. Yet he paid them all the same wages (20:9–11). Naturally those who had worked longer demanded, "What's going on here?" (20:11, 12).

Notice that none of the workers was employed before the landowner hired them (20:3, 6, 7), and thus they got their jobs due to the employer's goodwill and not to anything they brought to the situation. Furthermore, the landowner promised the first group fair wages of a day's pay, and he promised the others an undetermined amount ("whatever is right"). As it turned out, he paid them all an entire day's wage.

Jesus was trying to help people grasp something important about grace in the kingdom of God. His followers had been asking earlier about the kingdom's makeup and benefits (Matt. 19:16, 25, 27), and in this parable He was not encouraging unjust pay scales and discrimination. He was illustrating the nature of God's grace in terms that His followers could understand.

In the kingdom of God, grace is given because of the nature of the Giver, not the worthiness of the recipient. Receiving God's grace is a privilege for sinners who, after all, really deserve nothing but condemnation.

20:17–19 Once again the Lord Jesus anticipated His death and resurrection (Matt. 16:21; 17:9, 22, 23). For the first time He referred to the way He would die: crucifixion.

20:20, 21 What a contrast with vv. 17–19! Quite possibly, James and John had put their mother up to this. Further, a comparison of Matt. 27:56, Mark 15:40, and John 19:25 makes possible the idea that Mary, the mother of Jesus, and the mother of James and John were sisters. If so, the brothers were trading on their kinship with Jesus.

20:22, 23 and be baptized … baptized with is not in the earlier manuscripts. It was probably added from Mark 10:38.

20:24 The indignation of the other ten apostles was probably due to their own desire for these lofty positions. Jesus' response was addressed to all of them (vv. 25–28).

20:25–28 The measure of greatness is not position, power, or prestige; it is service.

20:29–33 Only Matthew mentions two blind men; Mark and Luke refer to one, probably the one who spoke. The fact that Matthew records two men especially suits his Gospel, which was written primarily for Jews who would have desired two witnesses (Deut. 17:6). Son of David, a messianic title (2 Sam. 7:12–16), identifies Jesus as the heir to David's throne. This cry, repeated in v. 31, shows the spiritual insight of these blind men.

21:1 The Mount of Olives was directly east of Jerusalem, across the deep ravine of the Kidron valley. Bethphage was on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives.

21:2, 3 The Lord is Jesus. The owner of the animals was likely a follower, or at least an admirer, of Jesus.

21:4, 5 These actions fulfill Is. 62:11 and Zech. 9:9. The emphasis in these prophecies and Jesus' actions is on Jesus' humility.

21:6, 7 The disciples laid their clothes on both animals so that Christ could ride either one. Perhaps the mother donkey walked in front, followed by the colt on which Jesus was seated.

How Jesus Handled Fame

It is easy to feel intimidated in the presence of a famous person. People of status and image can easily make us feel inferior, as if we have nothing to offer by comparison. Jesus, however, who became famous among His own people, stood fame on its head by modeling the traits of compassion and humility.

As He entered Jerusalem, the capital of Palestine, He gave us a new way for handling acclaim from crowds. The city was wild with excitement during its peak season of tourists and celebration. What a moment for Jesus to bring His campaign to a climax! He even had the prophecies of Zechariah (9:9) and Isaiah (62:11) to bolster His confidence. But instead of a parade of chariots and trumpets and a well-orchestrated ceremony, Jesus chose to ride into town on a donkey, a common beast of burden; no prancing war-horse for Him! Instead of walking arm-in-arm with powerful city officials and other celebrities, He was accompanied by a small band of common fishermen, rural Galileans, and even a former tax collector. For once, the common folks had a parade (Matt. 21:8, 10).

At the end of the parade route, Jesus did not go to the halls of the powerful. He marched into the place of worship, a national center for the Jews, and overthrew the tables of unjust businesses that manipulated the poor and made the temple a place of moneymaking (21:12, 13). He focused on the blind, the lame, and children (21:14–16). And when He had completed the day's tasks, He spent the night not in the fashionable home of a city leader but in a humble house in a nearby suburb, Bethany (21:17).

Even in His fame, Jesus' final activities before His death focused on those most ready to hear of His love, forgiveness, and hope—the little people in (or even outside) the system of privilege and power (Luke 4:18). Here is a new style of fame, which can help us when dealing with the temptations that can come when we seek to rub shoulders with the powerful and the elite.

21:8 The great multitude were not the inhabitants of Jerusalem (compare v. 10) but the large crowd who had gone with Christ from Jericho (Matt. 20:29) to Jerusalem. The scene is a royal one (2 Kin. 9:13).

Amazingly prior to this time the Lord Jesus had steadfastly avoided such a display (Matt. 8:4; 9:30; 12:16; 17:9). In the face of opposition, He had withdrawn (Matt. 12:15; 14:13; 15:21). Now He openly rides into Jerusalem as king! The point is obvious: the Lord Christ is presenting Himself to Israel as its Messiah and king. And isn't it interesting to contemplate that this may be the exact day Daniel had prophesied: 173,880 days from the day the decree of Artaxerxes went forth (Dan. 9:25). Note that Luke 19:42 mentions "your day."

21:9 Hosanna literally means "save now," as in Ps. 118:25, but it had come to take on the idea of an ascription of joyous praise. Blessed is He who comes in the name of the LORD is a quotation of Ps. 118:26. This Psalm anticipates the coming millennial age when in that day of kingdom Sabbath rest (Heb. 4:9) all will say "This is the day the LORD has made!" (Ps. 118:24). The whole scene anticipates the coming reign of Christ.

21:10 The city was moved is literally "the city was shaken." The same verb is used in Matt. 2:3 of Herod's reaction to the wise men who were asking about the birth of Israel's King.

21:10, 11 Here there is a contrast between the people of the city, who were ignorant of our Lord's identity, and the multitudes, who were able to answer the people's question. There were probably many Galileans in the latter group who had come up for the feast and who already knew our Lord through His preaching and healing ministry in the north. In Jewish history and tradition, the quoted Psalm was considered a messianic royal psalm, and the riding of an ass's colt (not a horse) marked the official entry of the king.

IN CONTEXT

The Temple Courts

The temple in Jerusalem had always been divided into courts. Even in Solomon's temple there was a court in which some were forbidden. Everyone had access to the outer court, called the "great court" (1 Kin. 17:12). But the inner court was reserved for the priests only and was called the "court of the priests" (2 Chr. 4:9).

Herod's temple, though still under construction in Jesus' time (Matt. 21:12), was enormously impressive, consisting of four courts. The large outer Court of the Gentiles was an open-air quadrangle measuring some 500 yards long by 325 yards wide, enclosed by rows of tall columns. This was the only part of the temple open to Gentiles (non-Jews).

Each of the remaining three courts was restricted to other kinds of people. All three of these courts—the Court of Women, the Court of Israel, the Court of Priests—were located in the temple proper, which was a sublime edifice measuring some 150 yards by 100 yards. This complex stood in the middle of the Court of the Gentiles. Only Jews were allowed to enter its first court, the Court of Women, and only Jewish men were admitted to the Court of Israel.

When Jesus observed the tables of the money changers who "sold in the temple" (Matt. 21:12), He was standing in the Court of the Gentiles. Only here were merchants allowed to sell and to exchange currency. This was the site of the dramatic cleansing.

21:12 Two cleansings of the temple are recorded in the Gospels—one in John 2:14–17 at the beginning of Jesus' ministry and one in the synoptic Gospels at the end of His ministry (Mark 11:15–17; Luke 19:45, 46). bought and sold: Financial corruption ran rampant in the outer courts of the temple. Some of the gains that were realized from this profiteering probably went to the family of the high priest. Some churches today do not allow anything to be sold in church, based on this episode. At least two things are wrong with this reasoning. First, Jesus was not condemning the selling of animals for sacrifices or the exchanging of money. What He was condemning was cheating, and extortion, and corrupt commercialism. Second, the church building is not the temple of God today; believers are.

We would do well to stop referring to a building as the temple or sanctuary. God dwells in people, not buildings. The money changers exchanged coins with pagan symbols on them for acceptable coins to be used in the temple. They charged a premium for this "service." Those who sold doves sold them at top prices.

21:13 My house shall be called a house of prayer is quoted from Is. 56:7. den of thieves: The temple had become a garrison for bandits. Jer. 7:9, 10 says that the Jewish people, after committing all sorts of sins, would plead deliverance from the consequences of those sins based simply on the fact that they came to the temple. Thus in Jeremiahday, it became a den for robbers, just as it was in Jesus' day.

21:14–16 In Ps. 8:2, which is quoted here, the infants expressed praise in the face of enemies.

21:17 The idea here is that Jesus abandoned the chief priests and scribes, the temple, and the city of Jerusalem. Instead of welcoming their Messiah, the religious authorities had rejected and opposed Him.

21:18, 19 He was hungry: Jesus desired to eat fruit from the fig tree one more time before He died, but He could not. Fig trees do not bear their fruit in the spring, during Passover, but in the fall. However, fig trees do have a small, edible fruit that appears in the spring before the sprouting of the leaves. This tree was full of leaves but had no fruit. It looked full of promise, but it was empty, just like the city of Jerusalem and its beautiful temple. Immediately does not necessarily mean instantly; it may have the idea of "very soon," as in Luke 19:11 (Mark 11:12–14, 20–24). This miracle—the only recorded miracle of Jesus that involved judgment—illustrates God's judgment on the Israelites, who professed adherence to God but produced no fruit or spiritual reality.

21:20–22 The withering of the fig tree illustrates God's judgment on unbelieving Israel, but it also became a means for Jesus to teach His disciples that faith works miracles and is the basis for answered prayer. A person does not increase belief by trying harder to believe but by increasing the object and content of belief. This is why we need to know the will of God in order to believe effectively (Jer. 9:23, 24).

A Challenge to Authority

Sooner or later, almost all leaders have their authority questioned. Sometimes they are challenged directly, but more often indirectly by rumor and innuendo. Jesus faced a direct challenge to His authority from the chief priests and elders, the top leadership in Israel (Matt. 21:23–27). In this instance He didn't argue with them but simply tossed the ball back into their court. He showed that one effective way of responding to threatening questions is to ask questions in return.

Observe two aspects of the interaction between Jesus and the Jewish leaders: (1). The motives of the challengers. The scribes and Pharisees had no interest in an honest understanding of the nature or source of Jesus' authority. They were only concerned with protecting their own interests and power. Their behavior is indicative of times when we question or resist people in authority because we are afraid or jealous of them.

(2). The security of Jesus. Jesus was neither upset nor caught off guard by His attackers. For one thing, He had endured their criticism before, and no doubt expected it to increase. But He also knew with absolute certainty about the very thing that His challengers were attacking: He knew who He was and whose authority He wielded (Matt. 28:18). His response is a reminder that intimidation is something we allow to occur. People may threaten and confront us, but only we allow ourselves to feel fear. The real question is: are we certain who we are as followers of the King?

21:23 These things refers to the Triumphal Entry, the cleansing of the temple, and the accepting of the praise of children. That the chief priests and the elders opposed the Lord Jesus illustrates the unified antagonism of the Sanhedrin. Priests, elders, and scribes were the three representative groups in that body.

21:24, 25 It was a common rabbinic method to answer a question with a question.

21:26, 27 We do not know: The religious leaders' response not only released the Lord from having to answer their question, but also disqualified them as spiritual leaders.

21:28–32 Tax collectors and harlots is a proverbial phrase for moral reprobates. Jesus' phrase enter … before you not only established that these repentant sinners would enter the future kingdom, it also left the door open for the religious leaders to repent. But even though the self-righteous leaders saw the example of repentant tax collectors and prostitutes, they refused to believe. This parable condemned the leaders' conduct. Clearly God delights in the brokenness of sinners and in the humble faith of the morally upright.

21:33–41 The beginning of the parable of the wicked vinedressers is presented in the language of Is. 5:1, 2. However, there is a difference. In Is. 5, the vineyard and its provisions represented Israel; here the vineyard illustrates God's kingdom (compare 12:43 with Is. 5:7). The detailed description of the vineyard indicates that the landowner provided for its well-being with the utmost care. The owner of that vineyard was God; the vinedressers were the nation of Israel. As God's people, Israel was to bring forth fruits in anticipation of God's coming kingdom. The servants represent God's messengers, the prophets, who were so shamefully treated by the Jewish leaders (1 Kin. 18:4; 19:10; 22:24; 2 Chr. 24:20, 21; Neh. 9:26; Jer. 2:30; 20:1, 2; 26:20–23; 37:15; 38:6). The son is Jesus, the Messiah.

IN DEPTH

Parables: More than Stories

Although Jesus lived among a story-telling people, His approach to instruction was still unusual. His stories were memorable, but they were not transparent. People heard them but did not necessarily understand them. They are clearer to us because of the apostle Paul's writings, but few of those who first heard the parables understood them. At one point the disciples asked in frustration, "Why do you speak to (the people) in parables?" (Matt. 13:10). The disciples did not grasp the stories any better than the the crowd did.

Jesus' answer to the disciples reveals much about the purpose of His teaching. He quoted Is. 6:9, 10 to demonstrate that those with physical sight and hearing may still not be able to perceive the truths presented to them. For Isaiah, the "dullness" or hardness (Matt. 13:15) of the human heart directly affects spiritual insight and understanding. People need to soften their hearts, humble themselves before God, and honestly seek the truth in order to find it.

Jesus' stories are like wrapped gifts. The packaging of the story can either distract or captivate. But unless the package is opened, the gift itself remains unseen. Likewise unless one seeks the core of the parable—its truth and application—the lessons will remain hidden. Yet when discovered, these lessons prove to be extremely valuable. The testimony of millions of changed lives over two thousand years attests to this.

When unwrapped, Jesus' stories include powerful multiple applications. The same parable can strike people in different ways. For example, the parable of the Soils (Matt. 13:1–23) may be "heard" by at least four distinct people depending on their identification with one of the soils. The parable of the Lost Son (Luke 15:11–32) will affect a father quite differently than it would a rebellious son or a jealous brother.

When Jesus taught in Jerusalem during His last week, His parables focused on one's acceptance or rejection of Him. This time even the priests and the Pharisees "perceived He was speaking of them" (Matt. 21:45). They were stung by Jesus' parables, and they despised Him and His message. But they were unwilling to give up their pride, learn at Jesus' feet, and seek the forgiveness they so desperately needed. They sensed they would not appreciate what they found if they unwrapped the parables, so they refused to seek the truth any further. In doing this, they perfectly conformed to Isaiah's description of a people with dull hearts, hardness of hearing, and closed eyes. The religious leaders who should have been leading the people into the truth were the most blind to it.

21:42 This verse explains that the rejection of the son (vv. 38, 39) was predicted in Ps. 118:22, 23. The rejected stone is the Messiah, who became the chief cornerstone (Mark 12:10, 11; Luke 20:17; Acts 4:11; Eph. 2:20; 1 Pet. 2:7).

21:43 In our time, nation refers to the church (Rom. 10:19; 1 Pet. 2:9). This does not mean, however, that the kingdom has been forever removed from Israel (Rom. 11:26, 27). This is impossible because of the promises given to Abraham, David, and the prophets. That Israel as a people and nation will yet be restored to the place of blessing is asserted by Paul in Rom. 11:26, 27. The church is now the custodian of the vineyard and is expected to bring forth fruits worthy of repentance. One day the kingdom will be restored to Israel (Matt. 19:28).

21:44–46 This paradoxical saying indicates that people can give two responses to Christ, the stone. A person may be broken with repentance as a result of falling on Christ. But if a person refuses to repent, judgment results. The reference to powder seems to look back to Dan. 2:35, 44, 45.

22:1 The plural parables refers to the parable of the two sons (21:28–32), the wicked vinedressers (21:33–44), and the wedding feast (21:1–14). This story is not the same one in Luke 14:15–24. The occasion is different in Luke and some details vary.

22:2 The kingdom of heaven is like indicates that the story contains principles or truths that relate to the kingdom of God. Marriage refers to a wedding feast (Rev. 19:6–10). Jewish weddings in biblical times involved a number of steps. First, the couple made a marriage contract, which was the basis of the marriage (Mal. 2:14). About a year later, the groom went to the bride's house, where the bride was presented to him. This was followed by a nighttime wedding procession to the groom's home (Matt. 25:1–13), where a festive wedding banquet was held (John 2:1–11). The banquet could last up to a week, depending on the resources of the groom's family. A feast, especially a wedding feast, is often used in Scripture to portray God's kingdom on earth (Matt. 8:11; 25:10; Is. 25:6; Luke 14:15–24; John 2:1–11; Rev. 19:7–9). In this parable, the king is God the Father and the son is Jesus.

22:3 Two invitations were sent out. The first was sent long before the celebration so that people would have plenty of time to prepare themselves for the banquet. Those who were invited had received this original announcement. A second invitation was sent to them to announce that the banquet was ready and so they should come right away.

22:4 The plea of this verse undoubtedly portrays the ministry of John the Baptist (Matt. 3:1–12), Jesus (4:17), and the disciples (10:5–42).

22:5 They made light of it means "they did not care about it." They were so preoccupied with the here and now that they had no concern for God's kingdom.

22:6 The indifferent response in v. 5 describes Israel at the time of Jesus' earthly ministry; the actions in this verse may be attributed to the religious authorities. These leaders approved John the Baptist's death at the hands of Herod Antipas (Matt. 21:25); they instigated Jesus' crucifixion (26:3–5, 14–16; 27:1, 2); and they initiated the persecution of the early church (Acts 4:1–22; 5:17–40; 6:12–15).

22:7 The burning of the city refers to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 under Titus. A parallel prediction of the same event is found in Matt. 21:41.

22:8, 9 These verses describe the present age. The wedding or kingdom is still future, and the world, described by Christ as as many as you find, is being invited to participate in that future earthly kingdom, which had been promised to Israel.

22:10 Both bad and good probably refers to Jews and Gentiles. Both groups include some who are morally evil and others who are morally good. Whatever their condition, people need to respond to the gospel. The important point to recognize is that this group responded to the invitation, while those who had received special invitations had spurned the king's bidding.

22:11 did not have on a wedding garment: Like the others, this visitor had been invited to the wedding, but he failed to prepare himself for it (Rev. 3:18). In Revelation the garment of fine linen worn by the Lamb's bride is said to be the righteous deeds of the saints (Rev. 19:8). The man had ignored a basic obligation placed on him when he accepted the king's gracious invitation to the feast; he was supposed to wear clean clothes. To come to a wedding banquet unprepared, or in soiled clothing, would have been insulting. In this parable the garment may refer to the righteousness of Christ graciously provided for us through His death. To refuse to put it on would mean a refusal of Christ's sacrifice or arrogance in believing that the "garment" was somehow not needed. If we want to enter Christ's banquet, we must "put on" the righteousness He gives us (Eph. 4:24; Col. 3:10). Because this man was unprepared, the king declared him unworthy. His refusal resulted in the man being sent out of the banquet hall.

22:12 The normal word for friend in the NT is philos; the word used here is hetaire, a noun that occurs only in Matthew and always on the lips of the Lord Jesus and invariably to those who are able to be corrected (20:13; 26:50). The man had failed a basic obligation placed on him in accepting the king's gracious offer to the feast. We should not understand this man to be unsaved and the remaining guests as saved; all the guests accepted the invitation. Also he was not treated with enmity by the king. Because he failed to properly prepare himself for the joyous occasion, he was not permitted to enjoy the feast with the others and was placed outside the hall into the darkness.

22:13 Bind him hand and foot is a vivid picture of the man's inability to participate in Christ's kingdom. The clause cast … into outer darkness (Gk. to skotos to exoteron, literally, "the darkness outside") occurs in Matt.

8:12; 22:13 and 25:30 (the Greek expression occurs nowhere else in the NT) and is always used of the judgment that precedes the kingdom age. The phrase weeping and gnashing of teeth is found in 8:12; 13:42, 50; 22:13; 24:51 and 25:30 and always refers to the same judgment. Many persons have placed these two figures together and believed them to be a reference to eternal punishment. There really is no reason to do so. In this parable a person who had actually accepted the invitation from the king is in view. Though he was at the wedding, due to his lack of preparedness in having a wedding garment, he was not allowed to participate in the festivities of the wedding; the darkness outside is contrasted with the lights of the feast. Two other passages in Matthew use the figures of outer darkness and weeping and gnashing. In Matt. 8:12, the sons of the kingdom (a term used of believers in the parable of the tares, compare 13:38) are being discussed, not unbelievers. In Matt. 25:30 the one cast outside was a servant along with those rewarded; he simply did not receive the joyous award from the master. In all these references the failure is to prepare properly for the kingdom, not the rejection of God's salvation. The mention of weeping and gnashing has caused many to think of the torment of hell (likely there will be great anger in hell, not remorse). This is missing a very important cultural practice of the Jewish people. The figure refers to considerable remorse felt by persons at the loss of something or someone highly valued. When unprepared people are not permitted to enjoy all that will be shared by the prepared—in this parable the feast—there will be a great sense of loss for what might have been (1 Cor. 3:15; 2 Cor. 5:10; 2 Tim. 2:12; 1 John 2:28; 2 John 7, 8; Rev. 3:11). From a perspective of future events, the parable teaches that persons who fail in their discipleship will enter the millennial kingdom of Christ but will not be able to participate in all the joyous advantages of that reign.

22:14 many are called, but few are chosen: The word "called" in this instance refers to being "invited," not to the call of God as Paul used the word (Rom. 8:28, 29). All Israel had been invited, but only a few would accept and follow Jesus. Not all those invited will be among the chosen of God, for not all will believe. Note the weak response of Israel in Heb. 3 and God's warning to us to not neglect our salvation.

22:15 Entangle means "to snare," like a trapper catching his prey.

22:16 Nothing is known of the Herodians outside of the Gospels. Judging from their name, they were supporters of the Herodian dynasty in its collaboration with the Roman government. This would put them at the opposite end of the political spectrum from the Pharisees. Yet their common hatred of Christ was great enough that the Pharisees and Herodians joined forces against Him. we know that You … teach the way of God in truth: In a way, the Herodians and Pharisees were saying, "You truly teach God's word, no matter what people think of you."

22:17 The dilemma is obvious: side with the Pharisees and risk being accused of insurrection against the Roman government, or side with the Herodians and lose the favor of the masses. Taxes included an annual tax paid by every Jewish adult to the Roman government. The Jews despised paying this tax to their hated oppressors.

22:18 Test here means "to solicit to evil." The Lord called the Herodians and Pharisees hypocrites because they falsely pretended to have good intentions.

22:19, 20 The tax money was a denarius, a silver coin with an image of the emperor and the inscription calling him "divine." The image and inscription were repugnant to the Jews because they hated their Roman overlords and worshiped only the God of Israel.

INSIGHT

Roman Coins

Coins in circulation in Palestine included both Roman and local issues. The typical Roman coin had on one side a portrait of the emperor or another important person (Matt. 22:20). On the other side was a symbolic design, such as a temple. The lettering around the imperial portraits had recently begun to include the letters "DIV," signifying "divine." Julius Caesar was the first living person to appear on official Roman coins.

22:21, 22 In responding to His opponents, the Lord changed the verb they used from "pay" (v. 17) to render, which literally means "to pay back." Christ's followers have an obligation to earthly governments and to God. Believers today are citizens of a heavenly kingdom and strangers and sojourners on the earth (1 Pet. 1:1; 2:11). It is the believers' responsibility to obey the law of the land until it becomes sinful to do so (Rom. 13:1–7; 1 Pet. 2:13–17). When the two realms are in conflict, Christians are to follow God (Acts 4:18–20; 5:29).

22:23 Some of the beliefs of the Sadducees are explained in Acts 23:8. These men looked on the first five books of Moses as their authoritative Scripture. To them, any religious argument had to come from the Pentateuch.

22:24 The law that is the basis of the Sadducees' question is found in Deut. 25:5, 6. It is known as the law of the levirate marriage (Gen. 38:1–26).

22:25–28 This theological riddle had probably been used by the Sadducees to confound the Pharisees on more than one occasion.

22:29, 30 The verb mistaken means to err, to drift off course. Essentially, Christ says, "You are wrong," a stinging rebuke to these Sadducees who were noted for their love of debate. These Sadducees, though among the leadership of Israel, had not understood or accepted the texts of Scripture which taught the doctrine of the resurrection and they underestimated the power of God to do the miraculous. He who created man and possessed life and death in His hands would have no problem raising the dead.

22:31, 32 Jesus quoted from the Pentateuch, Ex. 3:6, 15, to prove the doctrine of the resurrection. That the Lord is the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob is a title that recalls that God is the One who gave the promises to the patriarchs. In particular, God promised Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob the land of Canaan (Gen. 13:14–17; 15:7–21; 17:8; 26:2–5; 28:13–15; Deut. 30:1–5). Of course, the patriarchs did not receive the land in their lifetimes. They must be resurrected in order to receive God's promises in full. That God is called the God … of the living indicates that there is a present spirit world over which God presides and that will one day be revealed.

22:33 Jesus taught something that no one had seen clearly before: that the patriarchs are still living. The crowds were astonished, and they may also have been surprised that Jesus did not teach like the scribes and Pharisees, who appealed to rabbinic authority or prefaced their teachings with, "Thus says the Lord." Jesus appealed to His own authority when He taught them.

22:34 Undoubtedly the Pharisees were delighted to see their theological rivals muzzled; yet they were still intent on snaring Christ in some way (v. 15).

22:35, 36 The lawyer was a student of the Law of Moses. He put the Lord to a test with a question designed to reveal how much Christ knew about the law.

22:37 To answer the lawyer's question, Jesus quoted from the great Jewish confession of faith called The Shema. The confession is called this because it begins with the Hebrew word shema, meaning "hear:" "Hear, O Israel: The LORD our God, the LORD is one!" (Deut. 6:4, 5; 11:13–21). The heart, soul, and mind represent the whole person.

22:38 Some Greek texts place great before first. Nevertheless, love for God takes priority over every other command.

22:39 This command from Lev. 19:18 is not an imperative to love one's self. People naturally love themselves and are at least somewhat self-centered. Because we love ourselves, we want the best for ourselves; likewise, we should be concerned for the welfare of others.

Roman Traditional Law

The traditional law of Israel was part of Jewish education (Matt. 22:40). The Romans also had a traditional law called the Twelve Tables, which their children memorized. This law had civil, criminal, and religious provisions. Unlike the Law of Moses, the text of the Twelve Tables has been preserved only in fragments.

22:40 The Ten Commandments can be divided into two categories: those dealing with love for God (the first four) and those dealing with responsibilities toward other people (the last six). The same may be said for all the Law and the Prophets.

22:41–45 After answering three questions posed by Israel's religious leaders (vv. 15–22, 23–33, 34–40), Jesus turned to the Pharisees with a question of His own. The question had two parts, a first about the identity of the Messiah and a second about the interpretation of Ps. 110.

22:42 The answer to Jesus' question about the identity of the Messiah is in a number of OT passages (2 Sam. 7:12–16; Ps. 89:3, 4, 34–36; Is. 9:7; 16:5; 55:3, 4). The Messiah would come from David's royal line.

22:43 This verse affirms that David wrote Ps. 110. Furthermore, it declares that David wrote the psalm under the inspiration of the Spirit.

22:44–46 Verse 44, which quotes Ps. 110:1, describes Christ's presence in heaven until He comes to reign on earth (Heb. 10:11–13; Rev. 3:21). Other messianic psalms are built on the experiences of the psalmist (Ps. 2; 16; 22; 45), but Ps. 110 seems to be completely prophetic and messianic. Psalm 110:1 uses two different Hebrew words for God. The first, translated LORD, is the name Yahweh, the proper name of Israel's God. The second Lord means "Master." David, the great king of Israel, calls one of his offspring "Lord" or "Master," a title for deity. The implication is that Jesus, the Son of David, is God. He is a descendant of David and therefore human, but He is also divine.

23:1, 2 The synagogues had an official chair called Moses' seat (Luke 4:20). The scribes were official copiers of the OT Scriptures and were also teachers of the law (Matt. 7:29; 8:19).

23:3 The Pharisees and scribes took the Scriptures at face value, so their instructions were to be followed. However, Jesus warned the people of the Pharisees' legalism, which valued their own rules and regulations above the Scriptures. They followed their external laws meticulously and appeared to be righteous. Yet the people were not to imitate their actions, for although they appeared righteous, their hearts were filled with all kinds of envy, hatred, and malice.

23:4 Contrast the Pharisees' actions with Jesus' call to the people in Matt. 11:28–30.

23:5 One key aspect of hypocrisy is doing good deeds to attract applause from those who see them (Matt. 6:1–18). Phylacteries were small boxes containing Bible passages that were worn on the forehead or arm. This custom was based on Ex. 13:9, 16 and Deut. 6:8; 11:18. But from such passages as Prov. 3:3; 6:21; 7:3, the scribes should have known that Lord intended more than merely outward adornment. Borders, translated "hem" in Matt. 9:20, refers to the tassels that were worn on the corners of garments in order to remind the Israelites of God's laws (Num. 15:38; Deut. 22:12). In order to be seen as especially righteous, some hypocrites would make their phylacteries conspicuously large and their tassels unusually long.

23:6 The best places were the positions of honor at banquets. The best seats, or "first seats," were a row of seats in the front of the synagogue facing the congregation.

23:7 Greetings in this context meant more than a passing "hello"; it was a respectful salutation given to a superior. Rabbi means "teacher."

23:8–10 This principle is not to be applied universally because these titles are used elsewhere in Scripture with no qualification or admonishment (Matt. 15:4–6; 19:5, 29; 2 Kin. 2:12; 1 Cor. 4:15; Gal. 4:2; Heb. 12:9). The hypocrites sought these titles for the prestige and power that went with them, not for the purpose of using the positions to serve others. Teachers may also mean "leaders."

23:11 Hierarchies of authority are not to be done away with in this world (1 Thess. 5:12, 13; 1 Tim. 5:17; Heb. 13:17); however, all leadership is to be carried out humbly in a spirit of servanthood.

23:12 Exaltation will be carried out in the future reign of Christ (Rom. 8:17; 2 Tim. 2:12).

23:13, 14 Jesus proclaimed woe on the scribes and Pharisees because of their outright opposition to the truth.

23:15 you travel land and sea: The Pharisees and scribes could never fairly be accused of being lazy, but they were clearly misdirected and dangerous to the cause of God.

23:16–22 The religious authorities taught that oaths based on the temple, the altar, and heaven were not binding; however, oaths sworn by the gold of the temple, the gift on the altar, or God were binding. Jesus pointed out the absurdity of such teaching and called the leaders blind guides.

Tithing

Jesus' words to the Pharisees in Matt. 23:23 raise the issue of tithing. Should Christians today pay tithes, or are we free from that practice? For that matter, what is a tithe? The word means "a tenth part." In the OT, God commanded the Israelites to give tithes—one-tenth of their produce or income—for one of three reasons: (1) To support the Levites, who were responsible for the tabernacle and worship (Num. 18:20–24).

(2) To support various feasts and sacrifices (Deut. 14:22–26), some of which lasted more than one day and were times of joyous celebration and thanksgiving.

(3) To establish a pool of resources to help the poor, the orphans and widows, and the strangers in the land (Deut 14:28–29).

In the NT neither Christ nor the apostles gave any explicit instructions about tithing. However, Jesus clearly endorsed it, as He did all the Law (Matt. 5:17–20; 23:23). He denounced the hypocritical way that the Pharisees ignored the "weightier matters" of the Law: justice, mercy, and faith. But those "heavy duty" issues by no means negated such "lightweight matters" as tithing.

So what is the place of tithing for believers today? Several principles might be considered: (1) As Christians, our allegiance is not to the OT Law, which was primarily given to Israel, but to Christ.

(2) Our giving needs to spring from a love of Christ, not a slavish obedience to a percentage standard. When Abraham gave the first tithe recorded in the Bible (Gen. 14:17–20), he did it as an expression of gratitude for God's deliverance of him in battle. Throughout Scripture, loving God and worshiping Him are at the heart of tithing.

(3) All of what we have ultimately comes from and belongs to God, not just what we give away, but also what we keep. So He has total claim on 100 percent of our income, not just 10 percent.

(4) Ten percent makes a great starting point for giving. However, studies indicate that, as a group, Christians in the United States give nowhere near that much of their income away to ministries or charities of any kind. In fact, while per capita income has increased, church members have actually decreased their contributions to churches.

(5) The NT is clear that vocational Christian workers have a right to financial support from those to whom they minister (1 Cor. 9:13, 14; Gal. 6:6). Likewise, many churches and other ministries assist the poor, the orphans and widows, and the strangers. So it seems legitimate to expect believers to donate money to those causes.

(6) No matter how much we give or to whom, Matt. 23:23 indicates that our first priority should be to ensure that justice is carried out around us, that we show mercy to our "neighbors," and that we practice our faith and not just talk about it. In the end, it is through our obedience that Jesus increases our faith.

23:23 Mint and anise were spices. Cummin was a tiny fruit. The scribes and Pharisees were meticulous about tithing tiny seeds, but they failed to be obedient in more significant matters, such as ensuring that all their actions were governed by justice and mercy and faith (Mic. 6:8). Jesus was not saying that tithing is unimportant; He was pointing out that the scribes and Pharisees were emphasizing one area at the expense of another. Similarly, we can become so preoccupied with external rules and regulations in the church that we forget the principles behind them.

23:24 Leviticus 11:41–43 contains a prohibition against eating anything that swarms, crawls on its belly, walks on all fours, or has many feet. The Pharisees would meticulously strain out the smallest unclean insect, the gnat, with a cloth filter before drinking liquids, especially wine. However, Jesus said they would easily swallow a large unclean animal, a camel. Jesus was exaggerating a point to illustrate how much the Pharisees had neglected justice, mercy, and faith (v. 23). He used a similar exaggeration in Matt. 19:24 to portray the difficulty a rich man has in obtaining salvation.

23:25, 26 The inside of the cup represents a person's character. Sometimes those who most loudly protest the sins of others are secretly guilty of those sins, or worse sins, themselves.

23:27–33 The generation of scribes, Pharisees, and hypocrites living at the time of Jesus had inherited all the guilt of their forefathers.

23:34 The present tense I send refers to the prophets, wise men, and scribes sent by God to the apostolic church. The Book of Acts testifies to the accuracy of this prediction: the Israelites persecuted the early preachers and teachers of the Good News (Acts 7:51–60).

23:35 Abel was the first person murdered in the OT (Gen. 4:8); Zechariah was the last. Zechariah's death is recorded in 2 Chr. 24:20–22, the last book in the Hebrew canon. Jesus was saying that from the beginning of the Bible until the end, true followers of God had often been treated in this manner. son of Berechiah: In 2 Chr. 24:20, Zechariah is called the son of Jehoiada. Zechariah the prophet is called the son of Berechiah in Zech. 1:1. It is possible that Jehoiada was the grandfather of the murdered Zechariah and Berechiah was his father. It is less probable, although possible, that Zechariah's father had two names: Jehoiada and Berechiah.

23:36 This verse looks back to v. 32 and anticipates the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 (see commentary on 24:34).

INSIGHT

Whitewashed Tombs

Jesus drew upon a grim, arresting image in His denunciation of the self-righteous Pharisees (Matt. 23:27, 28). At the end of a Jewish funeral procession, which everyone was obliged to join, the body was placed on a rock shelf in a tomb. Once the flesh had decomposed, the bones would be collected and removed, allowing the shelf to be reused. Since Jews were made ritually unclean by touching graves (Num. 19:16), rocks used to seal such tombs were whitewashed as a warning to stay away. The glaze gave the tombs a clean image on the outside, even though corpses were decomposing inside.

23:37 Calling a name twice, as in Jerusalem, Jerusalem, indicates strong emotion (Matt. 27:46; 2 Sam. 18:33; Acts 9:4). The phrases I wanted and you were not willing illustrate the opposition of Israel to Christ's will (for another image of a mother hen, see Ps. 91:4).

23:38 House may refer to the temple, but it more likely refers to the Davidic dynasty (2 Sam. 7:16). Israel was never without a designated king to rule on David's throne, but often that king was not on the throne because of the disobedience of the nation. When the nation comes back to God, its captivity will end and Jesus will reign (Deut. 30:1–6). Just as the temple would be destroyed, so Israel would be under the judgment of God.

23:39 All of Israel's hopes rest in the adverb till. One day the nation will repent (Zech. 12:10–14) and Israel will be restored to its place of blessing and prominence (Rom. 11:26). The quotation is from Ps. 118:26, a messianic Psalm anticipating the day when the rejected stone becomes the chief cornerstone (Ps. 118:22). "This is the day the LORD has made"; it will be a time of rejoicing (Ps. 118:24).

A model of Jerusalem as it might have appeared in Jesus' time. Jesus was distraught about the city because of its unbelief (Matt. 23:37).

24:1 The discourse of 23:1–39 had evidently been given in the temple precincts. The NKJV gives the impression in 24:1 that the Lord Jesus had already left the temple area when the disciples came up to show Him the buildings of the temple. The Greek text clarifies that this happened as they were in the process of departing from the temple complex. The first temple built by Solomon was destroyed by the Babylonians in 586 B.C. The second temple built on the encouragement of Haggai and Zechariah and the leadership of Zerubbabel and Joshua (Hag. 1:1) was completed after considerable delay in 516 B.C. This second temple was totally renovated by Herod the Great, a master builder. He began the work some ten years before he died, and it was not completed during the lifetime of Christ (John 2:20). The actual work was not finished until A.D. 64. It stood completed only six years. The construction was massive and lavish. The disciples were justifiably proud of the temple area with its buildings.

24:2 The devastation of the temple by the Romans in A.D. 70 was so thorough that the precise location of the sanctuary is still unknown today.

24:3 Undoubtedly the disciples were immediately confounded by the Lord's prophecy; however, they held their tongues until they had left the temple mount, crossed the Kidron Valley, and had come to the Mount of Olives. There Jesus sat in the manner of teachers (Matt. 5:1) and the disciples finally questioned Him about the destruction of the temple. Some say that the verse contains two questions: "When will the temple be destroyed?" and what will be the sign of Your coming, and of the end of the age? Others feel one basic question is in the disciples' minds. According to Zech. 14:1–9, the destruction of Jerusalem, the deliverance by the Messiah, and the end of the age will occur in order and very quickly. To the disciples, the devastation of the city and the coming of the Messiah were parts of one large event. The questions therefore should be taken as one, though the fulfillment comes in stages. An important matter that must be clarified, however, and which is often misunderstood by Bible teachers and lay persons alike, is that the teachings and signs of Matthew 24 do not concern the rapture of the church, a truth not yet revealed (1 Thess. 4:14–17: 1 Cor. 15:51, 52). Instead they generally address matters which will occur during the Seventieth Week of Daniel, especially the Great Tribulation. The modern, western reader expects Jesus to be presenting a strictly sequential development, but in the manner of the east (see Book of Job introduction), the presentation is more cyclical with a broad panorama that fills in specific details.

24:4, 5 This warning was especially appropriate for the disciples. The destruction of Jerusalem did not necessarily mean the nearness of the end of the age. This was a point of confusion for them (Luke 19:11–27; Acts 1:6, 7).

24:6 Three markers of time are found in vv. 4–14. The first is found in v. 6, the end is not yet. All these are the beginning of sorrows is the second marker, in v. 8. The final indication of time is given in v. 14, and then the end will come. Verses 4–6 may describe the first part of Daniel's Seventieth Week (Dan. 9:25–27), but more likely they are a general picture of the present age. False messiahs, wars and rumors of wars are characteristic of fallen humans. When the Lord said all these things must come to pass, He used a word for "must" that looks at divine or logical necessity. Such activities are necessary because of the sin of man. False messiahs existed before (Acts 5:36, 37; 21:38), and false preachers would come in the future (Acts 20:29, 30; 2 Cor. 11:13–).

24:7, 8 This paragraph describes things that are characteristic of the end times generally. Verse 7, with its nation … against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, seems to be an advance over v. 6; they seem to be wars on a broader or worldwide scale. The famines, pestilences, and earthquakes are more fully described in Rev. 6:1; 8:5–13; 9:13–21; 16:2–21. The noun sorrows of v. 8 is literally "birth pangs." The earth continually has birth-pangs today (Rom. 8:22); during the coming seven year tribulation, these "sorrows" will increase in intensity and frequency until the kingdom age or time of regeneration is born (Matt. 19:28; Acts 3:21).

24:9–14 These verses seem to look at the last half of the Seventieth Week, for the end will come with the conclusion of these things.

24:9–11 The hatred of servants of Christ will be by all nations because the man of sin will rule the world. He will oppose any who do not worship him (Rev. 13:7, 8, 17).

24:12 Love needs the soil of righteousness in order to flourish. Lawlessness and love do not mix; in fact, the former stifles the latter.

24:13 The end here has mistakenly been taken to mean the end of one's life, but a careful look at the context (vv. 3, 6) makes it evident that it means the "end of the age." Endures cannot refer to personal self-effort at endurance resulting in eternal salvation, as some cults teach. Rather, it likely refers to physical deliverance from the devastating destruction of the Great Tribulation into the millennial reign with Christ on earth. They will enter the kingdom with physical bodies.

24:14 this gospel of the kingdom: The final evidence of the end times is the universal proclamation of the gospel. The antecedent of "this" must be v. 13. The "gospel" (literally, "good news") is that the final holocaust of the Great Tribulation known as Armageddon will not result in a genocide and the destruction of all people, for the Lord Jesus Christ will intervene bringing an end to the destruction and preserve a people for His kingdom on earth. It seems this will be accomplished by the 144,000 from Israel who are sealed and are described in Rev. 7:4–8. The innumerable polyglot multitude referred to in Rev. 7:9, 10 seems to be the result of the ministry of the 144,000. This in no way contradicts Paul's statement about "another gospel," for there he discusses no other means of redemption (Gal. 1:6–10).

IN CONTEXT

Herod, the Great Builder

More architectural remains in Israel date from the reign of Herod the Great (37–4 B.C.) than from any other historical personality. He initiated numerous diverse projects, including temples, gymnasiums, harbors, and other buildings.

In Jerusalem he had a number of important building projects. The Antonia Fortress, a combined palace and fortress that dominated the temple mount, was named after Mark Anthony. There was also a central palace, the largest of Herod's palaces, and a theater and amphitheater, and the most famous of all his projects: the temple mount. Because of the Roman destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, nearly all of the material remains of Herod's period have disappeared.

In his eighteenth year (20–19 B.C.) Herod began rebuilding the Jerusalem temple and enlarging the sacred precincts around it, probably following the plan of the original temple but on a more elaborate scale. Modern excavations have exposed large sections of the western and southern temple mount walls, as well as a monumental stairway, a plaza, and evidence of adjoining roads. The "buildings of the temple" (Matt. 21:1) were therefore certainly an impressive sight in Jesus' day, even though construction was still in progress.

24:15 This is the first specific time reference that Christ gives. From 24:4–14 the Lord Jesus spoke in general terms. In v. 15 He picks up on the emphasis on the temple. Even more awful than the destruction of the present temple is the desecration of the temple to come. This He does under the imagery of the abomination of desolation, the next prophetic sign that people can know. This term means the "abomination that makes desolate." As the Lord stated, it comes from Daniel, specifically 9:27; 11:31, and 12:11. In Dan. 9:27 and 12:11 it is totally prophetic; however, Dan. 11:31 looks to Antiochus IV, who desecrated the temple and set up an idol to Zeus in it. His actions were a prelude to what the ultimate man of sin will do. Significantly, Paul used the same event to indicate when the actual tribulation would be present (2 Thess. 2:3, 4, Rev. 13:14, 15).

24:15 The holy place is the temple.

24:16 In the period of the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70, many of the Hebrew Christians did flee, remembering the words of Jesus, and hid in the clefts of Petra. This deepened the schism between Jews who believed in Jesus and those who did not. The true setting of the verse, however, is in the future desecration of the temple, as it refers to the breaking of the covenant (Dan. 9:27), and the subsequent setting up of an image of the man of sin in the Holy of Holies of the temple. When that occurs, all in Judea are to flee to the mountains.

24:17–20 These warnings describe the severity of the situation.

24:21 great tribulation: Some may say the world always has had troubles; however, this period of testing will be greater than anything before or after it. It is unique (Dan. 12:1; Rev. 3:10).

24:22 Those days will be shortened (cut short) refers to the seven year period, especially the last three and a half years of the Tribulation. If the Tribulation had not been limited to seven years, all humanity would be destroyed. Note the "good news" of the kingdom in vv. 13, 14 (Zech. 14:2–4). Christ will intervene and stop a genocide.

24:23–25 Miracles by themselves do not prove something is of God (Matt. 7:21–23, 2 Thess. 2:9; Rev. 13:13–15). Miracles must be tested by correct doctrine (Deut. 13:1–5; 1 John 4:1–3) and the witness of God the Spirit (John 10:3–5, 27).

24:26, 27 It is impossible for Christ after His death and resurrection to be in some desert or inner rooms because when He comes again His coming will be so spectacular it will be impossible to miss. It will be self-attesting (v. 30).

24:28 In the parallel passage of Matt. 24:37–44 found in Luke 17:26–37, this statement of Matt 24:28 comes after the question in Luke 17:37 in answer to the question as to where those judged will be taken. This seems then to be a sweeping statement that conveys the image of the horrible carnage that will take place in the judgment at the coming of the Son of Man. This summary verse, therefore, anticipates the very descriptive parabolic expression that will be given in the rest of chs. 24 and 25.

24:29 immediately after: This is the second time reference (v. 15 is the first). Verse 29 moves chronologically to the close of that seven year period. It will be marked by monumental cosmic disturbances (Is. 13:10; 34:4; Ezek. 32:7, 8; Joel 2:30, 31; 4:15; Hag. 2:6; Zech. 14:6; Rev. 6:12–14).

24:30 The sign of the Son of Man has been taken to be a sign of the cross in the skies; more probably it is Christ Himself or the Shekinah glory (Matt. 16:1; Acts 1:11). Because the context of this discourse is Jewish, the tribes of the earth probably refers to Israel. This will be the national repentance of Israel predicted in Zech. 12:10, 12. The Son of Man coming on the clouds is in fulfillment of Dan. 7:13, 14.

24:31 Gather refers to the regathering of Israel predicted so often in the OT (Deut. 30:1–6; Is. 11:11, 12; 43:5, 6; 49:12; Jer. 16:14, 15; Ezek. 34:13; 36:24; 37:21–23). Many will have been scattered throughout the earth because of persecution (24:16) and the witness of the 144,000 will bring innumerable multitudes to Christ (Rev. 7:1–10). Elect speaks here specifically of Israel as God's chosen people.

24:32 The Lord has instructed His disciples about the Tribulation; now by means of a series of parables (24:32—25:30) He makes some application to life. The fig tree does not necessarily portray Israel here (Matt. 21:18–22; Luke 21:29 says, "Look at the fig tree and all the trees"). The lesson to be learned is the proximity of summer, when the branches of trees become tender and put forth leaves.

24:33 All these things must come to pass before one can say the end is near (i.e., initiation of the Great Tribulation by setting up the abomination of desolation). it is near: This is different from the imminency of Christ's coming for the church, which does not rely on a sequence of signs for its happening.

24:34 Generation (Gk. genea), as used in different contexts, may mean "race" or "generation." Some, therefore, take it to mean race here, so that Israel as a people will not cease existing until God fulfills His promises to them. Other peoples, like the Hittites and Amorites, have come and gone, but the Jew is still here. Another possibility is to say that genea describes a particular era in which people will see those end times. The events that happen will occur so rapidly that all will happen in one generation. Perhaps both are true. All includes the Antichrist, the Great Tribulation, and most importantly the stellar appearance of the Christ of glory.

24:35 The words of Christ are more sure than the very existence of the universe.

24:36 no one knows: In spite of such clear statements (vv. 42, 44; 25:13; Acts 1:6, 7), there are still multitudes that follow those who, in disobedience to Christ's word, still set dates for the coming of the Lord. The fact is that there are no prophesied events that have yet to take place before our Lord's rapture of the church. It is imminent; that is, it can happen at any time. Thus, we ought not to be looking for signs of a sign-less event. There are no signs of the time because we are not in the time of the prophesied signs (1 Thess. 1:10; 4:13–18; 1 Cor. 15:51, 52). The earliest Greek manuscripts add "nor the Son" after the angels of heaven. How can Jesus as God say, "I do not know" (Mark 13:32)? When the Lord Jesus was incarnate He voluntarily limited His use of His divine attributes to His Father's will (Phil. 2:5–8; John 17:4, 5). Therefore He hungered and became thirsty and weary. Luke records that Jesus grew in knowledge and wisdom (Luke 2:52). This statement in v. 36, then, was made while He had surrendered the independent use of His divine omniscience.

24:37–39 the coming of the Son of Man will be as the days of Noah: The similarity that Christ is pointing out is not the wickedness of those days (Gen. 6:5) but the indifference of the people in Noah's day. There is nothing sinful about eating and drinking, and marrying and giving in marriage. The sin that Christ is referring to is living as though no judgment was coming. So it will be when Christ comes again. The fatal wickedness is seen in the words that they did not know until the floods came. One wonders if the comfort zone of evangelical Christians in the United States will grow until there is "no time for end times."

24:40, 41 Taken (Gk. paralambano) is a word of judgment (Luke 17:36). This is not the Rapture; the Rapture is not found in Matt. 24—25. The "taking" of the people is removal in judgment and parallels the "taking away" in judgment in the flood as described in v. 39. It is true that different Greek verbs are used for took in v. 39 and taken in vv. 40, 41; however, the parallel with v. 39 is too obvious to miss. That being the case, those who are left behind go on into the kingdom of the millennium (Matt. 13:30, 40–43) just as Noah and his family were left to repopulate the planet.

24:42–44 This is the application of vv. 36–41. As Noah was vigilant in preparing for the flood so should people living in the tribulation be alert in preparation for Christ's return.

24:45–51 These two servants who belong to their master (Luke 19:11–26) illustrate two attitudes people will have to Christ's coming. The faithful and wise will be given larger responsibilities in the Lord's kingdom. The wicked will be cut … in two, a form of judgment used in the ancient world. There will be weeping and gnashing of teeth is a clause used throughout

Matthew, always of remorse experienced when one has suffered great loss. Those who fail to be diligent servants of God will not share in all of God's blessings when they enter the millennial kingdom (Matt. 8:12; 13:42, 50; 22:13; 25:30).

"The Kingdom of Heaven"

(Gk. he basileia ton ouranon) (Matt. 3:2; 4:17; 5:3, 10; 10:7; 25:1) Strong's #932; 3772: This phrase, used almost exclusively in Matthew's Gospel (33 times), is a Jewish way of saying "the kingdom of God." The Jews avoided saying the name of God out of respect for Him. Therefore they often used the word heaven as an alternative way to refer to God. The word heaven also points to the heavenly nature of Jesus' kingdom. His kingdom did not involve a political restoration of the nation of Israel, as many Jews had hoped. Instead He brought a heavenly kingdom with a spiritual domain, the hearts of His people. Such a kingdom demanded internal repentance, not just external submission. It provided deliverance from sin rather than political deliverance.

25:1 The ten virgins in this parable were waiting for the wedding procession that went from the bride's home to the home of her husband. This nighttime procession would use lamps to light the way because ancient cities did not have streetlights.

25:2 The good servant of 24:45 is described as "faithful and wise." The parable of the ten virgins explains the need for wisdom (vv. 1–13). The following parable of the talents (vv. 14–29) shows the need for faithfulness. The word translated wise here and in 24:45 means "prudent."

25:3–9 Possessing oil illustrates the concept of being prepared. Lack of oil represents being unprepared for Christ's return.

25:10 The door was shut speaks of being shut out of the kingdom. The unwise virgins were not ready when Christ returned. Compare the wedding feast of Matt. 22:1–14 and Rev. 19:7, 8.

25:11 Lord, Lord is reminiscent of a similar cry in Matt. 7:21–23, where the same scene is portrayed. The repetition of Lord indicates strong emotion.

25:12, 13 Just as Jesus said, "I never knew you," in Matt. 7:23, so here He says, "I don't know you" (compare Matt. 10:32, 33; 2 Tim. 2:11–13).

25:14 The parable of the talents illustrates the faithfulness required of God's servants. The fact that the master traveled to a far country indicates that there would be ample time to test the faithfulness of the servants.

25:15–17 A talent was a large sum of money, about six thousand denarii. A denarius represented the day's wage for a typical working man (Matt. 20:2).

25:18, 19 It was believed that money hidden in the ground was as secure as it could be.

25:20, 21 ruler: This describes millennial rewards (compare Matt. 24:45).

25:22, 23 The first two servants received the same reward even though they had received different amounts of money. The reward was based on faithfulness, not on the size of their responsibilities. The smallest task in God's work may receive a great reward if we are faithful in performing it (Matt. 10:42).

25:24–28 The wicked servant was lazy and unfaithful, because if he really had feared his master, he would at least have deposited the money with the bankers. Then the master would have received back the investment plus interest.

25:29 This proverb illustrates that a person must use what God has given or else lose it (Heb. 5:11, 12). This includes abilities and spiritual gifts, as well as material possessions (1 Pet. 4:10).

25:30 The unprofitable servant is one who fails to be faithful to the tasks given by the master. This servant will not share in the rewards (Matt. 8:12; 13:42, 50; 22:13).

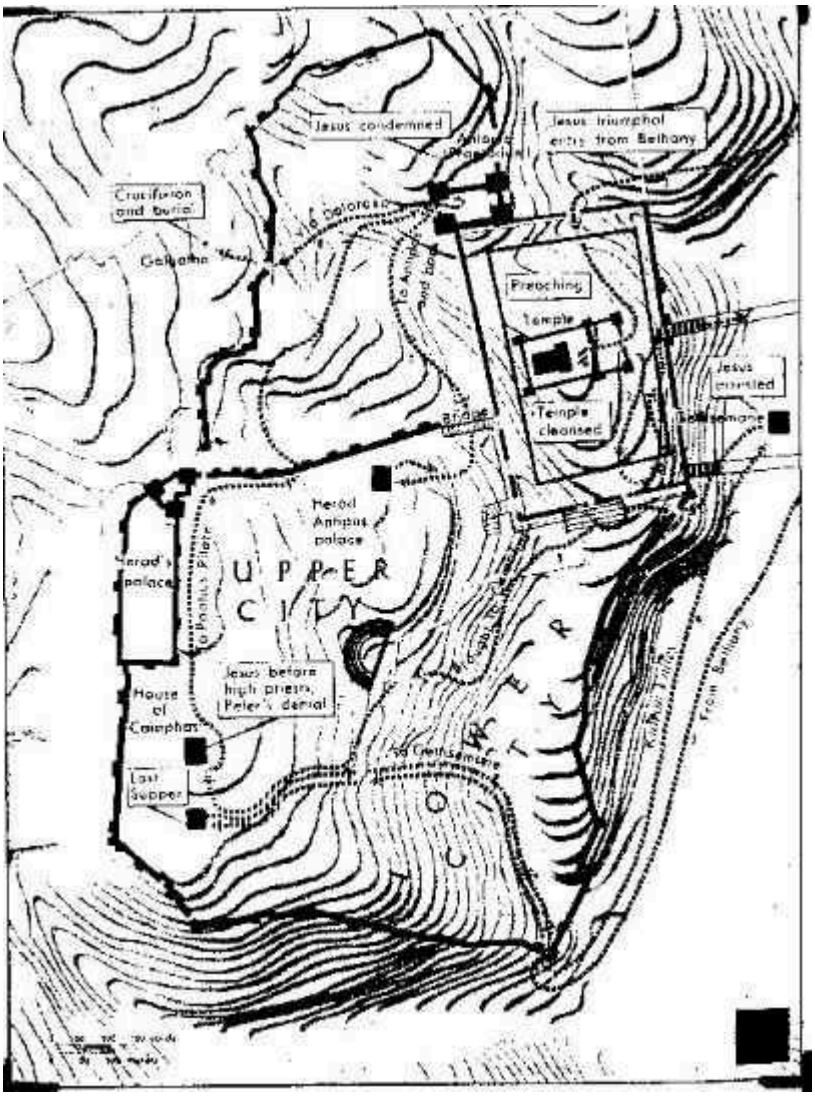
25:31 The final section of this discourse involves judgment. Matthew has been called "the Gospel of judgment" because the subject occurs so often (3:12; 6:2, 5, 16; 7:24–27; 13:30, 48, 49; 18:23–34; 20:1–16; 21:33–41; 22:1–14; 24:45–51; 25:1–12, 14–46). This is to be expected, since Matthew emphasizes the coming of the kingdom and thus the judgment that accompanies it. In the previous two parables, Jesus had been speaking of the judgment on those Israelites who were unprepared for the coming of the Messiah. In the last parable of this discourse, Jesus focuses His attention on all the nations of the earth. When the Son of Man comes in His glory recalls the words of Dan. 7:13, 14, 27 and anticipates the future reign of Christ (Rev. 5:9, 10; 19:11–18; 20:4–6).

25:32, 33 Nations here means Gentiles. Sheep and goats were clean animals according to the Levitical law; however, their natures are very different. Shepherds regularly herded their sheep and goats together, but there came a point when the two had to be separated.

25:34–39 The kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world indicates that this kingdom has always been God's goal for humans.

25:40–45 Three groups are referred to in vv. 31–46: sheep, goats, and My brethren. At the very least, these "brethren" are believers in Jesus Christ.

25:46 Everlasting and eternal are used to describe both torment and life, indicating that one will last as long as the other. In fact, "everlasting" is used of God in Rom. 16:26.



Jesus' Trial, Judgment, and Crucifixion

26:1, 2 As is his style, Matthew brings the discourse of the Lord to a conclusion with the words, Now it came to pass, when Jesus had finished (Matt. 7:28; 11:1; 13:53; 19:1).

Caiaphas, the High Priest

As the high priest, Caiaphas was the most influential member of the Sanhedrin, or council (Acts 6:12), which was the highest ruling body and supreme court of the Jews. However, while the position afforded him vast authority, it provided little job security. High priests served at the whim of Rome, and between A.D. 37 and A.D. 67, the empire appointed no fewer than twenty-eight men to the position. The fact that Caiaphas held on to the job for eighteen years is a tribute to his political savvy and, some felt, was evidence that he was in league with Rome.

There may be some truth to that, but if so, his concern was not to protect Rome's interests as much as Israel's. He was afraid that the slightest civil disorder would mobilize Roman troops and lead to Israel's downfall. So when Jesus came, drawing the attention of vast numbers of people and performing astounding miracles, especially the raising of Lazarus, Caiaphas determined that He would have to be destroyed (John 11:45–50).

This led to a well conceived plot in which Jesus was arrested. An illegal trial was held, and false evidence was brought against Him (Matt. 26:3, 4, 57–68). By playing Pilate, who was the Roman governor, and Herod the Jewish king against each other, and by whipping up the people into a mob (Luke 22:66—23:25), Caiaphas orchestrated Jesus' conviction leading to execution.

To Caiaphas's amazement, however, the sparks that he thought he had doused flamed up with renewed power. The apostles began preaching the gospel in Jerusalem (and beyond) with great effect. And, like Jesus, they began performing miracles that not only drew the people's attention but also their response to the message about Christ (Acts 3:1—4:13).

26:3 The wicked Caiaphas was high priest from A.D. 18 to 37. However, Luke 3:2 says that both Annas (father-in-law of Caiaphas) and Caiaphas were high priests; Acts 4:6 calls Annas the high priest. Although Caiaphas was officially the high priest, Annas still had influence over that office. Annas was so despicable that the Roman government deposed him from office. However, he continued to work behind the scenes through his wicked son-in-law.

26:4 The religious leaders knew they could not take Christ by argument or logic (22:46), and they did not dare take Him by force (21:46). Their only recourse was trickery.

26:5 This verse is to be compared with v. 2, which speaks of Christ's full knowledge of what was coming and His acceptance that it was part of God's plan (John 10:18). Despite what people plot, God still sovereignly controls all events.

26:6 Apparently Jesus spent His nights in the village of Bethany, just a few miles outside Jerusalem on the Mount of Olives. Simon was a leper who evidently had been cleansed by Jesus. He may have been the father of Lazarus, Mary, and Martha (John 12:1, 2).

Alabaster

Alabaster is a soft, translucent stone that can be easily carved and polished. It was often used as a substitute for glass. Alabaster perfume bottles were sealed, disposable containers, opened by breaking and then discarded when empty (Matt. 26:7). The value of spices, ointments, and perfumes then was much higher relative to other goods than it is today.

26:7 The costly fragrant oil (Mark 14:3) was a perfume extracted from pure nard. The woman poured the costly perfume on both the head and feet of Jesus (John 12:3). She could have opened the flask in such a way that it would have trickled out; instead, she broke the flask and poured out the oil to cover Jesus' body (Mark 14:3).

26:8, 9: Just as 26:2 is to be contrasted with 26:5, so the women's attitude is in sharp distinction to that of the disciples.

26:10–13 Jesus saw the pouring of the fragrant oil on His body as an anticipation of His death (Mark 14:8). The perfumed ointment was placed on Jesus before His death; normally it would have been used after His death. The expensive oil points to (1) the value of Jesus' death and (2) the high cost of devotion to Him.

26:14 The enormity of Judas's sin is seen in the words one of the twelve. Jesus was betrayed by one of His inner circle. Judas must once have been considered a person of integrity or he would not have been trusted as treasurer.

26:15, 16 Thirty pieces of silver was the price of a slave (Ex. 21:32). Zechariah had foreshadowed this sum in his prophetic actions (Zech. 11:12, 13). Note the contrast between the costly devotion of the woman (vv. 7–13) and the small price of Judas's betrayal.

26:17–19 The first day of the Feast of the Unleavened Bread is also the day of the Passover (v. 18). The disciples were Peter and John (Luke 22:8).

26:20, 21 One of you will betray Me indicates the Lord's omniscience. Repeatedly—in submission to the Father—Christ unveiled evidences of His deity to His disciples.

26:22 The disciples had already heard that Jesus was going to die in Jerusalem, but His revelation of betrayal was new (16:21; 17:12, 22, 23; 20:18, 19; 25:2). Is it I expects a negative response. The meaning is: "I'm not the one, am I?"

26:23 The dish was a bowl of broth in which the guests dipped pieces of bread.

26:24 Quite literally this verse is constructed to read: "On the one hand, the Son of Man goes as it is written of him, but on the other hand … " God's sovereignty, therefore, does not rule out human responsibility.

26:25 Whereas the other disciples called Jesus "Lord" (v.22), Judas addresses Him as Rabbi. In Matthew only Judas calls the Lord Jesus "Rabbi" (26:49). You have said it is a mild affirmation. The emphasis is on "you." It may be translated, "You have said it yourself."

26:26 This is My body means "This symbolizes My body" (1 Cor. 10:4).

26:27, 28 This is My blood of the new covenant refers to the covenant that had been promised in the OT (Jer. 31:31–34; 32:37–44; Ezek. 34:25–31; 37:26–28). The Lord Jesus specifically said that His blood … is shed for many for the remission of sins. The word many looks back to 20:28 and anticipates the command to preach the Good News to all the world in 28:19, 20. "Many" was a Jewish way of saying "all." In other words, the blessings of the New Covenant were extended to all in this age; it will yet be fulfilled for Israel in the future. The expression blood of the covenant also seems to look back to the institution of the Mosaic covenant in Ex. 24:8.

26:29, 30 This verse anticipates God's kingdom when Christ will reign on the throne of David. Today He is seated with the Father on His throne and intercedes for us.

26:31 All of you will … stumble: All the disciples, not just Peter, would fall away. I will strike the Shepherd … the flock will be scattered: This OT prophecy is found in Zech. 13:7 (Ps. 118).

26:32 Several reasons may be offered as to why Christ went to Galilee to meet His disciples: (1) they were all from Galilee; (2) He wanted to be away from Jerusalem, the center of opposition; (3) He wanted to take up the work of shepherding His flock where He had ministered to them before; or (4) the most effective setting for the Great Commission given in 28:19, 20 would be Galilee (4:12–16).

26:33–35 The rooster crow is usually thought to refer to the third Roman watch, from midnight to 3 A.M.

Judas Iscariot, the Betrayer

When the NT mentions Judas Iscariot it reminds the reader that he was the man who betrayed Jesus (Matt. 10:4; Mark 3:19; John 12:4). Consequently, to this day the name Judas is a symbol of betrayal.

Why did he do it? His portrayal in the Gospels suggests that he had a keen interest in money. But the amount that the priests paid him—thirty pieces of silver—was relatively small. Besides, he had access to the disciples' money box and apparently was known for helping himself to its contents (John 12:6).

Some have suggested that Judas thought that his betrayal of Jesus would force Jesus into asserting His true power and overthrowing the Romans. Others have suggested that Judas became convinced that Jesus was a false Messiah and that the true Messiah was yet to come. Or perhaps he was upset over Jesus' seemingly casual attitude toward the Law in regard to associating with sinners and violating the Sabbath.

No one knows what Judas's exact motives were for turning against Jesus. He remains a shadowy figure in the Gospel accounts, unknown by his companions, unfaithful to his Lord, and unmourned in his death. (The NT mentions more than one Judas, such as a brother of Jesus, who was probably author of the Book of Jude; Matt. 15:35.) 26:36 Judas had already gone (John 13:21–30), so the Lord left eight of His disciples at this spot. Gethsemane (which means "oil press") was east of Jerusalem on the Mount of Olives. In the place where olives were crushed and ground, the One anointed with oil was crushed and rent.

26:37 This was the third time that Jesus singled out Peter, James, and John to accompany Him for a specific purpose (see the Transfiguration in 17:1–13 and the raising of Jairus's daughter in Luke 8:49–56).

26:38 My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even to death seems to look back to Pss. 42:5, 6, 11; 43:5. Watch literally means "stay awake."

26:39 let this cup pass from Me: It was not the impending physical suffering, as terrible as it would be, that caused Jesus to pray this way. It was the reality of the sinless Son of God bearing the sins of the world and facing separation from His Father (2 Cor. 5:21; Gal. 3:13; Heb. 12:2; 1 Pet.

2:24). Cup is a figure of speech for wrath in the OT (Ps. 75:8; Is. 51:17). Jesus became a curse for us and took the brunt of God's righteous wrath against sin (Gal. 3:13).

26:40 Could you not watch with Me one hour: Although addressed to Peter, the question was meant for all three disciples. Earlier Peter had claimed that he would never forsake Jesus and that he would even die for Him (v. 35); yet Peter could not stay awake to pray with Jesus at the time of His greatest need.

26:41 The disciples needed to stay awake and pray because they were about to be tested themselves. Here the word flesh emphasizes human weakness. The contrast between the weakness of the disciples and the strength of the Lord is startling. Because the flesh is weak, every child of God needs supernatural empowerment (Rom. 8:3, 4).

26:42–44 The fact that Jesus prayed the same words indicates that there is nothing wrong with repetition from a devout heart. In the first prayer, Jesus made a positive request: "Let this cup pass from Me." In the second and third prayers, His request was negative. In obedience to His Father, Jesus committed Himself to drink the cup, whatever the cost.

26:45 Are you still sleeping: The disciples were resting while Jesus was sweating in prayer to the point of exhaustion (Luke 22:43, 44).

26:46 This verse shows Jesus' active submission to the Father's will, as He stated in v. 42. Jesus did not go reluctantly but with determination to do the Father's will.

26:47, 48 The fact that the multitude was armed with swords and clubs indicates that Judas did not really know the heart of Jesus. Christ went out to meet the multitude not to do battle, but to surrender.

26:49 The only person to address the Lord as Rabbi in the Book of Matthew was Judas (v. 25). Kissed means to kiss as a display of affection. The same verb form is used in the parable of the Lost Son in Luke 15:20.

26:50 Friend: Even though He knew Judas's wicked heart and actions, Jesus offered him friendship and an opportunity to change his mind. The words translated Why have you come may also mean "Do what you have come to do."

26:51 John 18:10 explains that the impetuous swordsman was Peter. This action was performed with one of the two swords that the disciples had (Luke 22:38).

26:52, 53 A legion in the Roman army was about six thousand men. When one considers the power of one angel, as seen in the OT (Ex. 12:23; 2 Sam. 24:15–17; 2 Kin. 19:35), the power of more than 72,000 angels is beyond comprehension. Jesus had all of heaven's power at His disposal, yet He refused to use it. His Father's will was for Him to go to the Cross.

26:54 If Jesus had called for angelic aid, the prophetic Scriptures foretelling His betrayal, His death, and His resurrection would not have been fulfilled. This point is so important that it is stated twice (v. 56).

26:55, 56 all the disciples forsook Him and fled: Compare Peter's claim in v. 35 with Jesus' words in v. 41, "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak."

"Choice" Leaders

Shortly after Jesus' death, those whom He had trained would assume the reins of His new movement, and the transition would prove to be quite awkward. It didn't help that it was forced on the group by hostile outsiders, but an even more troubling aspect was that the group began to fall apart during Jesus' last days and hours. For instance: • Bravado caused them to overstate their commitment (Matt. 26:35). When the moment of truth came, they deserted the Lord (26:56).

• Even though the Lord asked them to keep watch with Him during His final hours of freedom, they fell asleep twice (26:40, 43).

• At the very moment when Jesus was standing trial and enduring mockery and beatings, Peter, who had led the others in declaring their loyalty (26:35), denied any association with Him (26:6, 9–75).

In short, the disciples hardly seem to have had the "right stuff" for leadership, for continuing the important work that Jesus began. Yet Jesus returned to that very group after His resurrection and declared that they were still His chosen representatives, the ones appointed to continue His work. And He affirmed His commitment to stick with them to the end (28:19, 20).

Jesus' treatment of these disciples shows that failure is not unforgivable. Rather, it seems to be the crucible out of which character is formed. It is certainly not a sifting-out process to eliminate weak or useless people. Christ does not look for perfect people but for faithful people who can experience His forgiveness and grow.

26:57 The Lord Jesus was subjected to six trials—three Jewish and three Gentile. The first Jewish trial was before Annas, who was not the actual high priest, but was a powerful influence on the high priest's office. This trial is mentioned only by John (John 18:12–23). The second trial was before Caiaphas and the Jewish council. Clearly the council had been hastily called together in anticipation of passing judgment on Jesus. Matthew does not mention Jesus' trial before Herod Antipas (Luke 23:6–12); he also combines the two trials before Pilate into one (27:2, 11–26).

Jesus' opponents were trying desperately to find some legal basis for condemning Him to death.

26:58 John 18:15, 16 explains that Peter and John were both granted an entrance into the courtyard because John was known to the high priest. The servants were probably houseservants, not members of the mob who arrested the Lord. Apparently, Peter had forgotten the words of Jesus concerning His resurrection. For Peter, this was the end.

26:59–61 This was a misquotation and misapplication of Christ's words (John 2:19–21). At any rate, to say that Jesus had spoken against the temple was an action for which they could condemn Him (Acts 6:13, 14).

26:62 The high priest must have recognized that the accusers had no case against Jesus. His outburst was the result of frustration and desperation. In maintaining His silence, Jesus fulfilled the prophecy of Is. 53:7.

26:63 I put You under oath by the living God: The high priest thought he needed to put Christ under oath in order to get a truthful confession. Christ needed no such oath; He had indicated His divine nature and unity with the Father on several occasions (John 8:58; 10:30–33).

26:64 Jesus answered the high priest's request (v. 63) in the affirmative and then fortified His answer by applying two clearly messianic passages to Himself (Ps. 110:1; Dan. 7:13).

26:65, 66 Jesus' claim of sitting at the right hand of God (v. 64) was an assertion of deity and was, to this unbelieving high priest, a clear case of blasphemy.

26:67, 68 Prophesy … who struck you: This is a sarcastic demand to be told by supernatural knowledge the names and identities of those who were strangers to Him.

26:69–74 The cursing by Peter means that he called curses upon himself if he knew the Lord. Swear shows he swore under oath that he did not know Christ Jesus. immediately a rooster crowed: Some have argued a contradiction between this passage, where the rooster is said to crow (presumably once) after Peter denies Jesus three times, and the statement in Mark's gospel that the rooster would crow twice. This then would mean that there are more than three crowings; there is a total of six (Mark 14:72). Others believe that to see a contradiction is simply forced reading of the text. Matthew, Luke, and John give the simple statement that a rooster would crow (Matt. 26:75; Luke 22:61; John 18:27), whereas Mark, which is Peter's gospel, emphasizes the exact number of times the rooster would crow. Obviously the number of times would be much more on Peter's mind than the other gospel writer's, who were concerned only with the general sign of the denials. These believe that there is no reason to posit two separate rooster crowings and six denials of Peter.

26:75 He went out and wept bitterly indicates Peter's genuine repentance. In His grace, the Lord later forgave Peter.

27:1 This was the third Jewish trial. The first two were illegal because they were held at night. This third meeting was held when morning came and was simply a "rubber stamp" of the one described in 26:57–68.

27:2 Pontius Pilate was governor of Judea, Samaria, and Idumea from A.D. 26–36. Because the Jews did not have authority to execute Jesus (John 18:31), they brought Him to Pilate.

27:3, 4 Judas felt remorse because he had not planned for this to happen. He may have betrayed Jesus in order to force Him to take action against His enemies and inaugurate His kingdom. But that was not God's timing and plan.

27:5 Acts 1:18 says that the death of Judas was due to a headlong fall. The likely explanation is that Judas hanged himself on a tree, only to have the rope or branch break. If the tree was over a rocky precipice, the account in Acts can be correlated with this account.

27:6 The religious leaders, who had no problem condemning an innocent person to death, suddenly became very scrupulous about the law. Because of Deut. 23:18, it was felt that blood money should not be used for religious purposes.

27:7, 8 Originally this plot of ground was known as the potter's field, a place where potters dug for clay. Consequently, it was full of holes, which would have made it easy to bury people who had no family tombs. It was purchased as a cemetery for strangers who died in Jerusalem. It is likely that Gentiles were also buried there.

27:9, 10 This prophecy is found in Zech. 11:12, 13; however, Matthew states that the prophecy was made by Jeremiah. The best solution to the problem seems to be that the prophecy was spoken by Jeremiah and recorded by Zechariah. A second option is that the name Jeremiah stands for the collection of prophetic writings in which Zechariah is found. It may also be that in the days of Christ, the Book of Jeremiah headed the books of the prophets. The quotation is then identified with the name of the first book in the section and not the name of the specific book within the group.

27:11–14 The title King of the Jews has not been used in Matthew's Gospel since 2:2. Clearly Pilate's charge against the Lord Jesus was prompted by Jewish religious leaders.

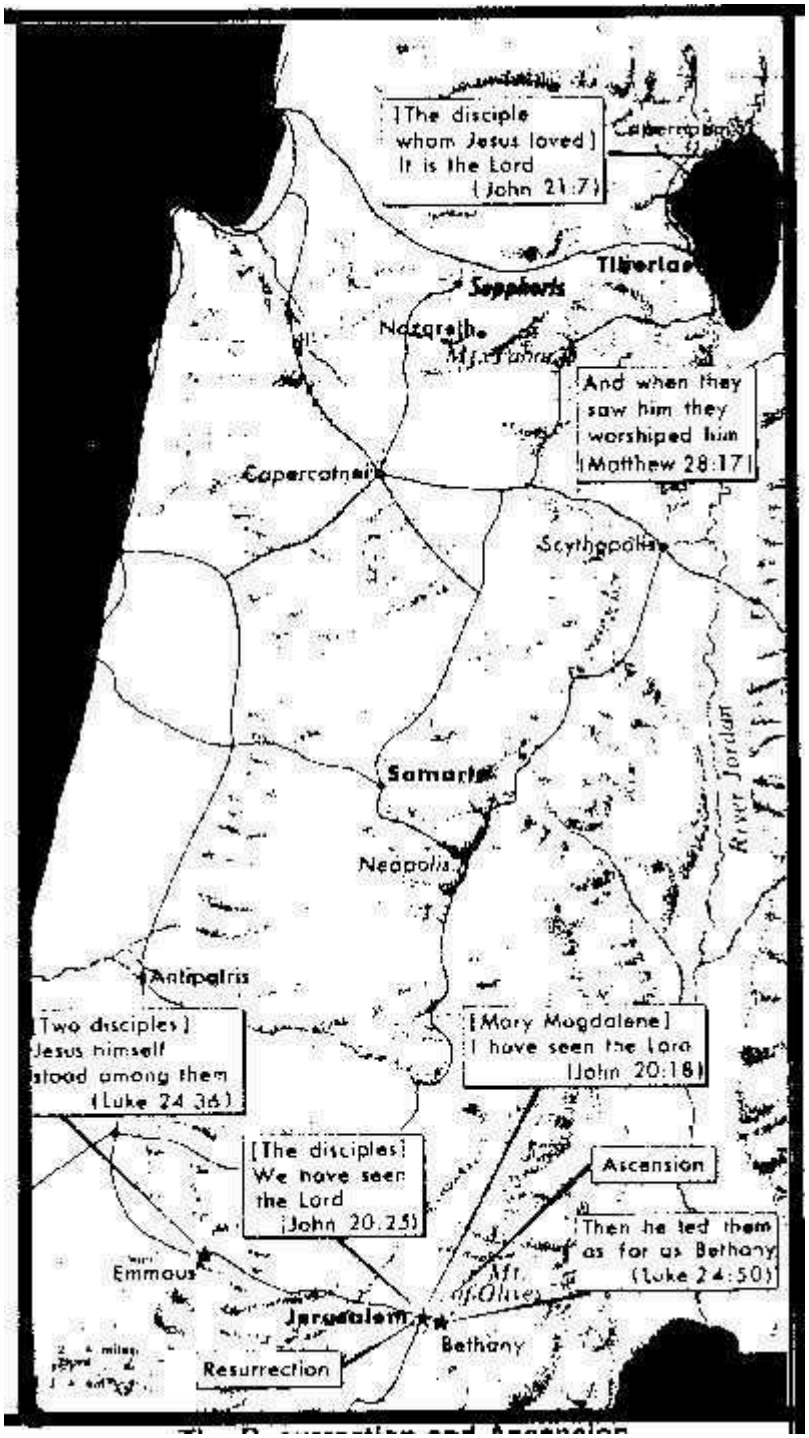
27:15–18 Barabbas was notorious because he was an insurrectionist and a murderer (Mark 15:7; Luke 23:19, 25). Evidently Pilate assumed the Jews would choose Jesus to be released over a murderer like Barabbas. Jesus had only gone about doing good.

27:19 Only Matthew records this incident concerning Pilate's wife. It highlights Pilate's sense of responsibility; he did not want to condemn an innocent man.

27:20–24 The religious authorities, who wanted to avoid a riot earlier, here used a tumult (the same Greek noun as in 26:5) to accomplish their goal. The tenure of Pilate had been rocked by conflicts with the Jews from the very beginning. He could scarcely have afforded another one on his record. Once again, Pilate pronounced Jesus to be innocent. The washing of his hands is recorded only by Matthew. The governor vainly attempted to rid himself of the guilt of condemning an innocent man to death (Deut. 21:1–9; Ps. 73:13).

27:25 His blood be on us and on our children: The destruction of Jerusalem was one of the results of this sin (Matt. 23:32–39).



Jesus' Resurrection and Ascension

27:26 when he had scourged Jesus: Scourging was a life-threatening punishment. Evidently this was an attempt by Pilate to punish Jesus so severely that the people would have pity and say, "It is enough; release Him" (John 19:4, 5). However, the mob cried out for Jesus to be crucified (John 19:6).

27:27 The Praetorium was the official residence of the governor when he was in Jerusalem. It was originally built as a palace for Herod the Great.

27:28–30 The soldiers mocked Jesus for claiming to be a king. Note the references to the robe, the crown, the scepter (reed), and the praise.

27:31 crucified: Crucifixion, a practice probably adopted from Persia, was considered by the Romans to be the cruelest form of execution. This punishment was reserved for the worst criminals; Roman citizens were not crucified. The victim usually died after two or three days of agonizing suffering, enduring thirst, exhaustion, and exposure. The victim's arms were nailed to a beam, which was hoisted up and fixed to a post, to which the feet of the victim would be nailed. The body weight was supported by a peg on which the victim sat.

27:32 Compelled, the same verb used in 5:41, refers to the Roman government's right of impressment, the right of the Roman army to demand labor from a person. The scourging undoubtedly left Jesus weak and unable to carry His cross, so a Roman guard ordered Simon to carry it. Simon must have been (or later became) a Christian; it is unlikely that he would be referred to by name if he were a stranger to the Christian community. This Simon was the father of Alexander and Rufus (Mark 15:21). Cyrene, located in North Africa, was home to a large number of Jews (Acts 6:9).

27:33 The reason the site was called Place of a Skull is not known for certain; possibly the hill or mound looked something like a skull.

27:34 Sour wine mingled with gall would have dulled Jesus' pain and consciousness. Jesus refused it; He wanted to drink His cup of suffering fully aware of all that was happening (Ps. 69:21).

27:35 The executioners had the privilege of taking the victim's clothes. In casting lots for Jesus' garments, the soldiers fulfilled Ps. 22:18.

27:36 Perhaps the soldiers kept watch to prevent anyone from trying to rescue Jesus from the Cross.

IN DEPTH

The Meaning of Messiah

Matthew wrote his Gospel to demonstrate to his Jewish audience that Jesus is indeed the long-awaited Messiah. Who is the Messiah and why were the Jews waiting for such a person?

The Term In Hebrew or Aramaic, the word Messiah means “anointed.” The Greek equivalent of the word is the title “Christ.”

Old Testament Background

In the OT, prophets, priests, and kings were literally anointed with oil to consecrate them for special service or to signify the endowment of the Spirit of God (Lev. 4:3; 8:12; 1 Sam. 10:1, 6; Ps. 105:15; Is. 61:1). These practices pointed to the promised arrival of God’s Anointed One, who would fulfill all three offices as the Prophet, the Priest, and the King.

Titles for the Messiah

Seed of Abraham (Ps. 105:6); Son of David (Matt. 1:1); Son of Man (Dan. 7:13); My Son (Ps. 2:7); My Servant (Matt. 12:18); My Elect One (Is. 42:1); The Branch (Zech. 3:8; 6:12); Wonderful, Counselor, Mighty God, Prince of Peace (Is. 9:6) Major Old Testament Prophecies of the Messiah

Gen. 3:15; 9:27; 12:3; 22:18; 49:8, 10; Deut. 18:18; 2 Sam. 7:11–16; 23:5; Pss. 2; 16; 22; 40; 110; Is. 2; 7; 9; 11; 40; 42; 49; 52; 53; Jer. 23:5, 6; Dan. 7:27; Hag. 2:9; Zech. 12:10–14; Mal. 3:1; 4:5, 6

Jewish Expectations for the Messiah

In the first century the Jews looked for a Messiah who would deliver the nation from Roman domination and become their King and rebuild the nation of Israel to its former glory. By looking for a military deliverer and a political Messiah, the Jews minimized the messianic roles of prophet and priest. Thus many Jews rejected Jesus as the Messiah because He came as a humble spiritual Savior and not a conquering political ruler.

The Messiah’s Rule

Jesus indicated that He was the King for whom the Jews were looking. However, His kingdom was not an earthly kingdom but a heavenly kingdom. In Matthew there are thirty-two references to the “kingdom of heaven.” This phrase, found in the NT only in Matthew’s Gospel, is probably derived from the description of the kingdom of the Son of Man in

Dan. 7:13–18. The phrase indicates the rule of heaven over all of the earth (Matt. 6:10).

Jesus' Claim

When asked specifically if He was the Christ, Jesus answered in the affirmative, incurring the wrath of the Jews (Matt. 26:63–65). In addition, Jesus praised Peter for recognizing Him as the Anointed One of God (Matt. 16:15–20).

Significance

The title Messiah implies the idea of deity. The great prophet Moses, the priest Melchizedek, and even the glorious King David pale in comparison to the messianic Prophet-Priest-King. In the words of Heb. 1:3, Jesus Christ is the "brightness of [God's] glory and the express image of His person.'' In short, He is God (Heb. 1:8).

27:37 Putting the Gospel accounts together, the accusation probably read "This is Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews" (Mark 15:26; Luke 23:38; John 19:19).

27:38 two robbers were crucified with Him: This is in fulfillment of Is. 53:12, "He was numbered with the transgressors." Luke recorded that one of these robbers believed and was promised that he would join Jesus in paradise that very day (Luke 23:39–43).

27:39 Psalm 22:7 predicted the insults that would be directed at the Messiah.

27:40 For a similar falsehood at Jesus' trial, see 26:61. Jesus' actual words were: "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up" (John 2:19). In three days Jesus rose from the dead, thereby fulfilling this prophecy.

27:41–44 Jesus would not come down from the Cross because He was the Son of God and the King of Israel (John 10:18). He was obediently following God's plan for Him; His obedience would lead to His exaltation as King over all (Phil. 2:8–11). Compare the religious leaders' taunts with Ps. 22:8.

27:45 The sixth hour was noon. The darkness was not due to an eclipse of the sun, since the Passover occurred at full moon. This was a supernatural occurrence.

27:46 The physical darkness was a demonstration of the agony of the Lord's human soul. My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me: The duplication of "My God, My God" indicates Jesus' deep sorrow. The fact that Jesus spoke in Aramaic, the tongue of His birth, may be another sign of the extreme stress He was encountering. No human can understand the theological significance of this cry. It graphically parallels 2 Cor. 5:21. This was not a cry of defeat, however. Christ was quoting from Ps. 22 and may have been alluding to the great victory that the psalm describes.

27:47–49 Sour wine was the cheap wine used by soldiers and the lower class. Christ may have accepted this in order to give Himself enough moisture and strength to cry out again with a loud voice (v. 50).

27:50 The loud voice (v. 46) indicates that Jesus was still fairly strong when He yielded up His spirit. The cry referred to by Matthew, "It is finished" (John 19:30), was not a cry of exhaustion but of victory. The purpose for which Jesus came was fulfilled. Redemption for the sins of the world had been accomplished. Satan's judgment was a fact. The verb translated yielded means "dismissed." Even in dying the Lord demonstrated His royal authority.

INSIGHT

Sunday Morning at the Tomb

The Gospels agree that Jesus was raised bodily from the dead on Sunday. They also agree that Mary Magdalene was the first witness of the empty tomb, and most probably of the resurrected Lord. This is an important piece of historical evidence, since the testimony of a woman had no legal value in ancient Jewish society. If some early church writers had invented a story of the resurrection, they would not have emphasized Mary's witness in the narrative.

Like the crucifixion accounts, the resurrection accounts in the Gospels diverge in a number of particulars. Only Matthew reports an earthquake and the stone being rolled away (Matt. 28:2). Since Matthew also reported an earthquake at the crucifixion (27:51), the second earthquake may show the equal significance of the Resurrection. Matthew and Mark speak of one angel at the tomb (Matt. 28:5; Mark 16:5). Luke and John speak of two (Luke 24:4; John 20:12). Matthew and Mark report only the women at the tomb. Luke and John tell of a visit by Peter. John also relates a footrace between Peter and the beloved disciple to the tomb (John 20:3–8).

27:51 the veil of the temple was torn in two from top to bottom: The temple had two veils or curtains, one in front of the holy place and the other separating the holy place from the Most Holy Place. It was the second of these that was torn, demonstrating that God had opened up access to Himself through His Son (Heb. 6:19; 10:19–22). Only God could have torn the veil from the top.

27:52, 53 many bodies of the saints … were raised: Because the Lord Jesus is the firstborn from the dead (Col. 1:18; Rev. 1:5) and the firstfruits of those who are asleep (1 Cor. 15:20, 23), these people could not have received their resurrection bodies. They probably were raised, as Lazarus was, to ordinary physical life. The fact that the people who were raised appeared to many in the holy city implies that they had been contemporaries of the people who saw them.

27:54 The centurion and those with him may have heard the exchanges between Pilate and Jesus (v. 11); they certainly witnessed the taunts recorded in vv. 40, 43. The supernatural signs convinced them that Jesus was indeed the Son of God. Significantly, this confession of faith came from a Gentile.

27:55, 56 Three women who where faithful to the Lord Jesus to the end are named: Mary Magdalene; Mary the mother of James and Joses, the wife of Clopas (John 19:25); and the mother of James and John, wife of Zebedee, named Salome (Mark 15:40).

27:57–60 Arimathea was about twenty miles northwest of Jerusalem. Mark 15:43 describes Joseph as "a prominent council member, who was himself waiting for the kingdom of God." Luke 23:50 describes him as "a good and just man." But Matthew describes him as rich, a fulfillment of Is. 53:9.

27:61 These two Marys, also mentioned in v. 56, were witnesses to the burial of Jesus.

27:62 The next day was the Sabbath. The chief priests were Sadducees. The Pharisees' and the Sadducees' common animosity toward Jesus united them.

27:63 The Sadducees and Pharisees described the Lord Jesus as that deceiver when, in reality, they were the deceivers (26:4) and hypocrites (23:13, 15, 23, 25, 27, 29).

27:64 For emphasis, the verb secure is used three times in vv. 64–66.

27:65 The noun translated guard is a Latin word, since the soldiers were Romans and not part of the temple guard.

27:66 To emphasize the impossibility of anyone stealing the body of Jesus, Matthew stressed that the tomb was sealed (Dan. 6:17).

IN COMPARISON

The Appearances of the Risen Christ

Central to Christian faith is the bodily resurrection of Jesus. By recording the resurrection appearances, the New Testament leaves no doubt about this event.

• In or around Jerusalem: To Mary Magdalene (Mark 16:9; John 20:11–18) To other women (28:8–10)

To Peter (Luke 24:34)

To ten disciples (Luke 24:36–43; John 20:19–25)

To the Eleven, including Thomas (Mark 16:14; John 20:26–29)

At the Ascension (Mark 16:19, 20; Luke 24:50–53; Acts 1:4–12) • To the disciples on the Emmaus road (Mark 16:12, 13; Luke 24:13–35) • In Galilee (28:16–20; John 21:1–24) • To five hundred people (1 Cor. 15:6) • To James and the apostles (1 Cor. 15:7) • To Paul on the road to Damascus (Acts 9:1–6; 22:1–10; 26:12–18; 1 Cor. 15:8)

28:1–20 Although Matthew is brief in his discussion of the resurrection of Christ, he defends it carefully. The Resurrection was attested by several witnesses, including an angel, various soldiers, and the women at the tomb (vv. 1–8). The tomb with Jesus' body in it was sealed (27:66), but later the body was not found there (vv. 6, 8). The excuse of the soldiers was illogical (vv. 11–15). No Roman soldier would admit to sleeping on the job, for the punishment for this was death. Finally, Jesus Himself appeared to many of His disciples, providing even more witnesses to His resurrection (vv. 16–20). Matthew presents the evidence for Jesus' resurrection with precision because the doctrine is essential to the Christian faith. The Resurrection is a sign that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God (Matt. 12:38, 39), and the Resurrection validates the Lord's own prophecies of it (Matt. 16:21; 17:22, 23; 20:17–19). In 1 Cor. 15:12–19, Paul emphasizes the importance of the Resurrection by listing a series of consequences if the doctrine is denied.

28:1 after the Sabbath: The Sabbath ended at sundown on Saturday. The events of this verse took place at dawn on Sunday morning. The two Marys are identified in 27:56, 61.

28:2 An earthquake marked the death of the Lord Jesus (27:51); here it evidenced His resurrection. The tomb was not opened to permit Christ to come out but to allow others in, so they could see that it was empty.

28:3, 4 Brilliance is a characteristic of heavenly beings (Matt. 17:2; Dan. 7:9; 10:5, 6; Acts 1:10; Rev. 3:4, 5; 4:4; 6:11; 7:9, 13; 19:14).

28:5, 6 He is risen, as He said: For Jesus' predictions of His resurrection, see Matt. 12:40; 16:21; 17:9, 23; 26:32.

28:7, 8 The Lord Jesus made post-resurrection appearances first in Jerusalem and Judea, then in Galilee, and then again in Jerusalem. Both Matt. 28 and John 21 emphasize the appearances in Galilee. Christ's command to "come, see" (v. 6) is followed here by go … tell. This is always the divine order: to tell others the Good News about our Lord.

28:9, 10 Galilee was the appointed location for Jesus' rendezvous with His disciples (v. 7; 26:32) and also the setting of the Great Commission (vv. 18–20). Note that the Lord referred to His disciples as His brethren (Matt. 12:48–50; Ps. 22:22; Heb. 2:11, 12).

28:11 The Roman guards reported to the chief priests because they had been assigned for duty to the religious authorities (27:65).

28:12–14 His disciples … stole Him away while we slept: Besides being a lie, this was a very weak explanation. If a guard was found sleeping at his post or if a prisoner escaped, the guard would be put to death (Acts 12:19; 16:27, 28; 27:42). It may have been possible for one soldier to sleep, but it is highly improbable that all of them slept at the same time. Also, sleeping people do not make good witnesses. If they were asleep, how did they know what happened?

28:15 Until this day refers specifically to the time of the writing of Matthew's Gospel; however, this explanation is current even today.

28:16, 17 When the eleven disciples went away into Galilee they were probably accompanied by many more people. This may be the appearance to more than five hundred people mentioned by Paul in 1 Cor. 15:6. This may explain why some doubted; after all, the eleven were confirmed believers in the resurrected Christ by this time (John 20:19–28).

28:18 All authority has been given to Jesus, although He is not yet exercising all of it (Phil. 2:9–11; Heb. 2:5–9; 10:12, 13; Rev. 3:21). He will manifest this power when He returns in all His glory (Matt. 19:28; 1 Cor. 15:27, 28; Eph. 1:10). The word authority normally refers to delegated authority (as in 8:9; 9:6, 8; 10:1; 21:23, 24, 27). The Father would give this authority to the Son (Phil. 2:9–11). Here the Lord Jesus may have been recalling the prophecy of Dan. 7:13, 14.

To All the Nations

Jesus sent His followers to make disciples of all the nations (ethne, "peoples"; Matt. 28:19). That mandate may seem obvious to us today. After all, we live at the end of 2,000 years of Christian outreach. Christianity now is an overwhelmingly Gentile religion subscribed to by roughly one-third of the world's population. And with modern technology, it appears to be a relatively simple task to expand that outreach even further.

Yet in many ways we are just like Jesus' original disciples. They wanted a local hero, a Messiah just for Israel, one who would follow their customs and confirm their prejudices. So they were no doubt stunned by the scope and far-reaching implications of the global, cross-cultural vision that Jesus now presented. He was turning out to be more than the King of the Jews; He was the international Christ, the Savior of the entire world.

Actually, Jesus had been showing them this since the beginning of His ministry. Matthew recorded His work among the Gentiles (8:10; 15:24), and he cited Is. 42:1–4, that Jesus would "declare justice to the Gentiles [nations] … and [that] in His name Gentiles will trust" (Matt. 12:14–21). Yet the disciples had a hard time believing it. Could their Lord really be interested in "all the nations"? They did not seem to be. It is easy to pay lip service to the idea that Jesus cares for the whole world. But isn't it easier to follow a Christ that fits comfortably only into our own culture?

Culture, after all, is the key. Jesus told His Galilean followers to "make disciples," and they did—Jewish disciples. But they experienced profound culture shock when the Holy Spirit brought new groups into the fellowship, including Hellenist disciples, Samaritan disciples, and eventually Gentile disciples of all kinds (Acts 6:1–7; 8:4–25; 10:1–11:18; 15:1–21).

Today the bulk of new disciples are non-white and non-Western. Not surprisingly, they bring different cultural perspectives into the church. So one of the greatest challenges believers will face in the coming years is the same one that the original disciples faced at the inauguration of the movement: not only to believe but also to accept that Jesus really is for all the nations. For God's plan to make disciples of people throughout the world is part of His overall, long-term objective of making His name great among the nations (Mal. 1:11).

28:19, 20 Often this verse is viewed as having three commands; namely, to go, to baptize, and to make disciples or teach. In reality the Great Commission revolves around one main imperative: make disciples. Making disciples involves three steps: going, baptizing, and teaching, especially the last two. Baptism looks at the decision to trust in Christ. It was assumed that when a person trusted in the Lord Jesus he would be baptized; the NT knows of no unbaptized believers. The word name is singular, indicating God is one in three Persons.

The Gospel According to Mark

———— MARK'S GOSPEL IS UNIQUE. IT IS NOT A biography of Jesus, like Matthew or Luke, for it does not dwell on Jesus' family history or career. Instead, this Gospel is a record of Jesus' actions and achievements. It presents Jesus as a Savior-King, who conquers demons, disease, and death. The emphasis on Jesus' mighty and miraculous works makes this Gospel action-packed, fresh, and vivid.Mark constantly uses the present tense to create the impression of an eyewitness account—the kind presented by an on-the-spot reporter. And just like a reporter, he speaks directly to the reader. He uses rhetorical questions that readers would likely ask themselves, such as, "Who can this be, that even the wind and the sea obey Him!" (4:41). Sometimes he even addresses his audience with Jesus' words, "And what I say to you, I say to all: Watch!" (13:37). Mark wants to transform believers with his report, not merely inform them.

Moreover, his eyewitness accounts provide considerable detail—the emotional responses of Jesus and others, the sizes and reactions of crowds, and the appearance of men and women. The account of the Gadarene demoniac is an example of Mark's attention to detail. He uses twenty verses to tell that story, while Luke uses fourteen and Matthew writes a mere seven. Yet Mark's Gospel is the most concise of all of the Gospels, because he omits Jesus' longer discourses. In general, Mark presents the miracle-working Jesus, not the teaching Jesus.

Mark wrote for Gentile Christians, especially Romans. This conclusion is based on several facts: (1) Mark assumes some prior knowledge of the Christian faith on the part of his readers. John (the Baptist), baptism, and the Holy Spirit (1:4, 5, 8) are all mentioned without comment. (2) He does not assume a familiarity with Jewish Scripture. He directly quotes only one Old Testament passage (1:2, 3). (3) Furthermore, he regularly explains Jewish customs and geography (7:2–4; 13:3; 14:12). (4) Finally, Mark purposely omits Jesus' prohibition of preaching to the Samaritans and Gentiles (6:7–11; compare Matt. 10:5, 6).

Mark's Gentile readers faced persecution and martyrdom. He wrote his Gospel to strengthen and guide Roman believers through Nero's terrible persecutions. First of all, his readers needed to know that Jesus had also suffered. But, they also needed to know that Jesus, after his suffering, had triumphed over both suffering and death. The suffering Jesus was also the Son of God (1:1, 11; 14:61; 15:39), the Son of Man (2:10; 8:31; 13:26), the Christ (Messiah) (8:29), and the Lord (1:3; 7:28). After the death of Peter and other eyewitnesses to Jesus' life, this gospel message needed to be written down. Mark wrote the story down in order to verify these truths and to provide a way to pass them on to new generations of believers.

Mark introduces the main character of his action-packed narrative, Jesus, in thirteen quick verses. He weaves in this introduction both expectation ("Prepare the way of the LORD," 1:3) and conflict (Satan tempts Christ in v. 13). The large section that follows (1:14—8:30) heightens the conflict, as in a Greek tragedy. There are successes for Jesus, but there is also growing hostility. Triumph and conflict appear side by side. This long section culminates in Peter and the other disciples recognizing Jesus as the promised Messiah (8:29).

In the next section (8:31—15:47), Mark describes the final outcome for the Messiah—Jesus' passion and death. First, Jesus announces His coming death to His disciples (8:31; 9:31; 10:33) and prepares them for it. Then, He journeys to Jerusalem and is tried and put to death. But in the epilogue (16:1–20), the purpose of His death becomes clear. The drama comes to a rousing conclusion as Christ rises from the dead and encourages His followers. This is the Gospel of Mark—the Good News of Jesus Christ.

Peter was Mark's primary informant. In fact, the outline of events in Mark's Gospel follows precisely the outline of Peter's sermon to Cornelius at Caesarea (Acts 10:34–43; compare Acts 13:23–33). Oral preaching at that time, such as Peter's sermon, used established styles and rhetorical techniques to aid both instruction and recall; Mark's Gospel reflects these oral styles. Furthermore, Justin Martyr, writing at about A.D. 150 in Rome, confirmed that Mark wrote down Peter's recollection of events. He quoted Mark 3:17 as being in "the Memoirs of Peter." In addition to recording Peter's memories, Mark may have added his own memories and consulted other documents.

Most agree that Mark wrote his Gospel in Rome under Peter's supervision. A second-century document, called the Prologue to Mark, states that the Gospel was composed in Italy. Furthermore, Irenaeus, writing about A.D. 180, specifically stated Rome. Since Mark was with Paul in Rome around A.D. 60–62 and may have returned around A.D. 65 at Paul's request (2 Tim. 4:11), there is little reason to doubt this evidence.

Several important early sources, including the AntiMarcionite Prologue and Irenaeus, stated that Mark composed his Gospel after Peter's death. In fact, Irenaeus dated its composition after both Peter and Paul's death around A.D. 67.

However, Clement of Alexandria and Origen, writing a few years after Irenaeus, insisted that Peter was still alive during Mark's writing of the book. Moreover, a later tradition, recorded by Eusebius about A.D. 340, stated that it was written earlier, during the reign of Claudius (A.D. 41–54). Finally, an inscription on later manuscripts dated Mark's composition at an even earlier date around A.D. 39–42. These early dates, however, seem doubtful because (1) Mark probably would not have written the Gospel before his first failed missionary journey, (2) Peter most likely was not in Rome until after A.D. 60, and (3) Paul's epistle to the Romans (about A.D. 56–57) greets many believers, but mentions neither Mark nor Peter.

The most thoughtful estimate would place Mark's work sometime after Peter's death in A.D. 64 or 65, yet prior to A.D. 70, when Jerusalem was destroyed. In any event, the Gospel of Mark was penned within only three or four decades after the events it records.

The Gospel of Mark does not identify its author. However, numerous documents from the early church unanimously point to Mark as the author. Papias, bishop of Hierapolis (A.D. 140), claimed that Mark, as Peter's interpreter, wrote an accurate Gospel. The Roman Prologue to Mark, dating from A.D. 160–180, also named Mark as the author, and Irenaeus, in France around A.D. 180, claimed that Mark wrote down Peter's preaching. This is repeated by Tertullian and Clement of Alexandria, both in North Africa around A.D. 200.

Mark is mentioned ten times in the New Testament. His Jewish name was John (Acts 13:5, 13), but his Roman name was Mark (Acts 12:12, 25; 15:37). He lived in Jerusalem and was a cousin of Barnabas (Col. 4:10). He might have been the youth wearing a linen cloth at Jesus' arrest (14:51, 52), because only his Gospel mentions this incident, which occurred after all the disciples had already fled. The fact that Peter announced his miraculous jail escape at the home of Mary, Mark's widowed mother (Acts 12:12), indicates Mark had significant contact with Peter and the other leaders of the Jerusalem church.

In A.D. 46, Mark spent time with Barnabas and Saul in the Antioch church before he accompanied them as a helper on the first missionary journey. His unexpected departure from that expedition, however, caused Paul to lose confidence in him (Acts 15:37–39). Yet Mark later continued his missionary activity with Barnabas on Cyprus.

By A.D. 60–62, Paul again had placed his confidence in Mark and had complimented him as a fellow worker (Col. 4:10, 11; Philem. 24). In addition to helping Paul and Barnabas, Mark assisted Peter in “Babylon” (1 Pet. 5:13). Finally, Paul asked Mark to come to Rome to assist him while he was confined (2 Tim. 4:11). These short, positive references to Mark in the New Testament indicate that he faithfully and successfully served God as a missionary and apostolic helper throughout the period.

Commentary

1:1 Writing three decades after the Resurrection of Christ, Mark starts his narrative with a simple declaration of the Good News about God's Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. As Luke notes in Acts 1:1, the Gospel stories describe what "Jesus began both to do and teach." The gospel refers to the basic story of the Good News to be found in Christ's life, ministry, death, and resurrection. Jesus, meaning "Yahweh saves," is the earthly name Jesus received at birth, whereas Christ is an OT title that designates Him as God's chosen servant. Son of God makes clear Jesus' deity and demonstrates His unique relationship to God.

1:2, 3 Other than by quoting Jesus, Mark makes only one reference to the OT. In this quotation from the Prophets, the gospel writer retells the work of Christ's forerunner, John the Baptist. Messenger and make His paths straight call forth the image of a king visiting his realm. In ancient times, a messenger was sent ahead to announce the coming of the king. Local communities would often repair rough roads to ensure the comfort of the king as he traveled. The quartet of Isaiah, Malachi, John the Baptist, and the writer Mark proclaims the coming of the King of all kings, Jesus Christ.

1:4 The mention of John without any introduction presupposes some knowledge of the Christian faith on the part of Mark's readers. John's baptism of repentance should not be confused with Christian baptism. The latter always follows conversion and symbolizes the spiritual death, burial, and resurrection with Christ that is accomplished in a believer's salvation experience (Acts 19:1–5; Rom. 6:3–6). It is performed in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. John's baptism, on the other hand, prepared his followers to receive the new message about Christ and His kingdom. For the remission of sins does not mean that one is baptized in order to receive forgiveness of sins. The Greek preposition translated of in English probably means "with a view to," signifying that baptism looks to the forgiveness that God gives through the gift of repentance.

1:5 John's baptizing was a recurring popular event that attracted large crowds. Mark vividly portrays the continuous stream of followers who flocked to John. One may visualize throngs making the trek to the wilderness, with people waiting in line to be baptized. As each person was baptized by John, he or she would admit to individual sin and the need for the Messiah. The Sea of Galilee and the Jordan River are still the only fresh water sources in the land of Israel.

1:6 The angel Gabriel (the name means "mighty one of God") announced to Zacharias that his son, John, would "go before Him (Christ) in the spirit and power of Elijah" (Mal. 4:5; Matt. 17:10–13; Luke 1:13–17). John not only had the force of Elijah's personality, but apparently dressed like him as well (2 Kin. 1:8).

1:7 The tense of the verb preached indicates continuous action in past time. John's characteristic message was to promote expectancy and acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ. He said he was not worthy to loosen the Messiah's sandal strap. Students often performed menial tasks for their rabbis, but even they were not expected to remove someone's sandals. That task was left to slaves. John humbly understood and accepted his own role in the coming kingdom.

1:8 John emphasizes the different tasks he and Christ would perform. The prediction that Christ will baptize you with the Holy Spirit appears in each Gospel (Matt. 3:11; Luke 3:16; John 1:33), and was repeated by Christ in Acts 1:5 as being "not many days from now." Though the NKJV uses with water and with the Holy Spirit, it is more Christian to translate the Greek preposition by in. The water is a physical representation of the future life in the Spirit that the Messiah's people would have. Presumably the Day of Pentecost marked the fulfillment of this promise.

1:9 Because He had no sins of which to repent, Jesus' baptism was unique. It showed His identity with John's work and with the sinner for whom He would die. It also foreshadowed His own death, burial, and resurrection for sinners.

1:10 Immediately occurs forty-one times in Mark's Gospel to indicate the swift action required of a servant (vv. 10, 12, 18, 20, 21). God places Christ in a confrontation with Satan early in His ministry. The Holy Spirit comes to empower and fill Christ for His future ministry. This passage (1:10, 11) also demonstrates the Trinity—one God who exists simultaneously as three distinct personalities—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. The baptismal formula of Matt. 28:19 and many other texts teach this doctrine (2 Cor. 13:14; 1 Pet. 1:2).

1:11 Three times during Christ's earthly ministry a voice came from heaven. It was the Father's testimony to Christ's unique and divine Sonship. The other two confirming incidents were at the Transfiguration

(9:7) and on the day of Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem (John 12:28).

IN CONTEXT

The Synagogue

In Jesus' day, synagogues (Mark 1:21) were common throughout Palestine. Synagogues (from the Greek sunagoge, meaning "a leading or bringing together") were local congregations of Jews that met for the reading and explanation of Scripture and for prayer. The original emphasis was not on preaching but instruction in the Law of Moses.

Synagogues began during the Babylonian captivity experience. Lacking a temple but longing for communion with God, Jewish captives in Babylon met in local groups for worship and Torah reading. Some of the captives eventually returned to their land, where Zerubbabel rebuilt the temple and Ezra the scribe promoted the reading of the Law and prayer (Neh. 8). But many Jews remained in Persia and spread elsewhere, notably to Alexandria, Egypt. Both in and outside of Palestine, Jews continued to meet in synagogues, which became centers of community life.

Some synagogues functioned as local courts of justice which could sentence offenders as well as inflict the punishment of scourging (Matt. 10:17; 23:34). They also became grammar schools teaching children to read. And much of Jewish social life revolved around synagogue activities.

By Jesus' time, synagogues were well established and had customary officials, including: Elders, a board made up of devout and respected men who regulated the policies of the synagogue. Custom seated the elders in the chief seats at the front of the synagogue (Matt. 23:6).

A ruler of the synagogue, appointed by the elders, whose duty was to attend to matters concerning the building and the planning of the services. There could be more than one ruler. On one occasion, a ruler named Jairus approached Jesus about healing his daughter (Mark 5:21–43).

The minister (chazzan), who had charge of the sacred scrolls kept in the ark, attended to the lamps, and kept the building clean. If an offender was found guilty by the council of elders, this official was the one who administered the number of lashes prescribed for the scourging. During the week he taught children how to read.

The delegate of the congregation. This was not a permanent office. Before each service the ruler chose a capable person to read the Scripture lesson, lead in prayer, and preach or comment on the Scripture. Jesus was selected for this office in the synagogue in Nazareth (Luke 4:16–20).

The interpreter. The Scriptures were written in Hebrew, but by Jesus' day most Jews in Palestine spoke Aramaic, a language related to Hebrew but different enough to call for an interpreter.

Almoners, two or three persons who received money or other necessities for the poor.

A synagogue could not be formed unless there were at least ten Jewish men in the community—apparently a condition met in a great many towns throughout the Roman world, as Paul found synagogues at Damascus (Acts 9:2), Salamis (13:5), Antioch in Pisidia (13:14), Iconium (14:1), Thessalonica (17:1), Berea (17:10), Athens (17:16, 17), and Ephesus (19:1, 8). Indeed, whenever Paul entered a city to preach the gospel, he invariably spoke first in the synagogue before reaching out to the larger community.

Not surprisingly, synagogue worship had a profound influence on Christian worship. The Jewish service began with a recitation of the shema by the people. Shema ("Hear") is the first Hebrew word in the passage, "Hear, O Israel: The LORD our God, the LORD is one!" (Deut. 6:4–9). The speaker for the day then led the congregation in prayer as they stood facing Jerusalem with hands extended. At the close of the prayer the people said "Amen."

The chosen speaker stood and read the Law while the interpreter translated it into Aramaic. Then a passage from the Prophets was read and translated. For the commentary or sermon, the speaker usually sat down. After the sermon, a priest, if one was present, pronounced a benediction and the people said "Amen." Since the earliest Christians were Jews, they tended to follow this synagogue pattern in their own assemblies.

1:12 Mark declares that the Spirit drove Christ into the wilderness. The verb used for drove was frequently used to describe Christ's expulsion of demons and appears two other times in this chapter (vv. 34, 39).

1:13 Mark introduces an event of conflict to seize his readers' attention. Being tempted by Satan is something that all believers face, but Jesus triumphed completely over his adversary. Mark alone mentions the angels who were ministering to Christ through the forty days. The mention of being with wild beasts might especially speak to Roman Christians who had seen those terrors in the arena.

1:14 Mark begins his account of Christ's ministry with events after John was put in prison, as do the other synoptic Gospel writers. John is the only writer who informs us of a number of events that took place before John the Baptist's imprisonment (John 3:24). Andrew, Peter, John, Philip, and Nathaniel were following Jesus in an itinerant yet intermittent manner. They were at the wedding in Cana (John 2:2), and even accompanied Jesus to Capernaum (John 2:12), to Jerusalem (John 2:13-22), and through Judea where they baptized people (John 3:22, 23).

1:15 Jesus proclaimed the kingdom of God. It was the subject of much OT prophecy, and the theme was familiar to Jesus' listeners. Repent, and believe are both acts of faith. When a person accepts the only true and worthy object of faith, that person readily turns from inferior substitutes. Nothing and no one can fill that God-shaped vacuum but Christ. The gospel: the Good News about Jesus Christ—in this case as King.

IN COMPARISON

Baptism in the Bible

Mark begins his account of Jesus' ministry by describing devout Israelites streaming out to the Jordan River to be baptized by John. Here is a summary of the subject of baptism in the Scriptures:
Etymology	The word baptism comes from the Greek verb baptizō meaning "to dip, immerse, submerge."
Definition	Baptism is a sacred rite that signifies purification, initiation, or identification of an individual with a leader, group, or teaching.
The Different Types of Baptism in the Scriptures	• Jewish baptism: a ceremonial cleansing prescribed for both people and articles (7:3; Ex. 19:10–14; Lev. 8:6; Heb. 9:10). • John's baptism: a preparatory act in which Jews expressed their belief in the imminent coming of the Messiah and their desire to turn away from sin and live righteous lives (1:4–8). • Jesus' baptism: an act of ceremonial righteousness. By being baptized, Christ was not admitting His sinfulness, as those who submitted to John's baptism were. Instead through baptism, Christ was consecrating Himself to His ministry (1:9–11). • Spirit baptism: the supernatural work of the Holy Spirit by which believers are joined to the body of Christ (Rom. 6:3, 4; 1 Cor. 12:13; Gal. 3:26, 27; Eph. 4:5; Col. 2:9–12). • Christian baptism: a ceremonial act instituted by Christ (Matt. 28:19) and practiced by the apostles (Acts 2:38) that depicts a believer's union and identification with Christ in His death, burial, and resurrection. • Baptism by fire: a possible reference either to the judgment at the Second Coming or to the coming of the Spirit at Pentecost (Matt. 3:9–12; Luke 3:16, 17).
Old Testament Types	The NT writers point to several events in the OT that foreshadow baptism as commanded by Christ. • Noah coming through the waters of the Flood (1 Pet. 3:17–22). • The Israelites' crossing of the Red Sea (1 Cor. 10:1, 2).

1:16 Simon and Andrew had been disciples of John the Baptist. They had known Jesus (John 1:35–42), but were now being called to a lifetime of service.

1:17 Jesus called fishermen, hardworking and industrious people, to perform the most important task on earth: being fishers of men. Jesus characteristically used figures of speech that His listeners would readily understand.

1:18–20 left their nets … their father: Let neither occupation nor family keep you from following Christ. immediately: One of Mark's favorite words (vv. 12, 18, 20, 28).This is the only reasonable response to the Lord of glory.

1:19 James … John: The scenes of vv. 16–20 are very colorful. Simon and Andrew are fishing when we encounter them; James and John are mending their nets. Such details indicate the testimony of an eyewitness, probably Peter.

1:21 Capernaum sits beside the northern edge of the Sea of Galilee, a pear-shaped freshwater lake eight miles wide and twelve miles long. It was a cross section of trade routes between Egypt and Syria (Cairo and Damascus), located on the Sea of Galilee on the primary trade route between Egypt and Damascus and points to the east. The town's name means "Village of Nahum." Capernaum was Christ's ministry "headquarters" and is mentioned twenty-two times in the Gospels. By contrast, only one recorded event during Christ's ministry occurred at Nazareth (Luke 4:16). The ruins of a synagogue at Capernaum, just a few hundred feet from the water's edge, date from the second to fourth century A.D.

1:22 Forty-two percent of Mark's verses contain some mention of teaching. Mark, however, omits most of Jesus' main discourses to emphasize His mighty works as the Servant Son of God. astonished at His teaching: Christ's teaching differed from that of scribes and Pharisees because He did not lean on the wisdom of other teachers and rabbis. His authority came from Himself.

1:23 The term unclean (Gk. akathartos) bore special connotations to the Jewish mind. The OT frequently distinguished between what was lawful and unlawful, accepted and rejected, and therefore may mean ungodly. "Demon" is a designation used interchangeably with unclean spirit.

1:24, 25 The demon cried out "Let us alone," not because it was speaking for other demons in the man (as was the case in 5:1–20), but because Jesus was a threat to all demons. Jesus constantly confronted demons and about 20 percent of the approximately thirty-fivemiracles recorded about Jesus involved helping those troubled by demons. The demon acknowledged Jesus as the Holy One of God, but Jesus refused the testimony from such a disreputable source.

1:26, 27 unclean spirit: This is another term for demon. The unholy anger of these demons seeks to cause as much damage as possible when forced to leave the man; they may resist but they know their doom is sure (v. 24).

1:28, 29 Mark notes the extent of recognition this great miracle brought Jesus by saying His fame spread throughout all the region. Mark creates suspense by contrasting the people who received Christ with the Pharisees and rulers who worked to bring about His death. The sad truth remains that often the religious of the world do more to keep people from Jesus Christ than most worldly atheists. But the gospel is not religion. It is Good News that can free even the most horrible sinner.

1:30 Simon's wife's mother: Paul notes the married state of Simon (Cephas) and others of the disciples (1 Cor. 9:5).

1:31 Jesus completely healed Simon Peter's mother-in-law. Not only did the fever leave, but her strength was renewed so that she served Jesus and His followers.

1:32 So as not to violate the Sabbath restriction on bearing burdens (v. 21; Neh. 13:19), the people waited until evening.

1:32–34 demon-possessed (Gk. daimonizomai): The healing and casting out of demons must have continued into the night. Jesus was constantly about His Father's business, realizing that He had only about three and one-half years to accomplish His mission.

1:35, 36 The tense of the verb prayed indicates a continued action, not just a brief moment. Jesus' prayer life was successful because it was planned, private, and prolonged. He got up early enough, got far enough away, and stayed at it long enough.

1:37, 38 Jesus' fame spread quickly, and the disciples' concern is evident in the statement "Everyone is looking for you." Refusing a comfortable existence, Jesus took seriously his mission to reach the next towns. He came to preach and to proclaim God's message. for this purpose: Christ modeled singleness of purpose. He would not let anything distract Him—not the temptations of Satan (1:12, 13), not the well-intentioned advice of Peter (Matt. 16:22). Note his model in Heb. 12:1-3.

1:39, 40 A leper was an outcast from society. You can make me clean: Evidence of the man's faith in Jesus.

1:41–43 Jesus was moved with compassion. He not only healed but touched the leper. How often do we see the need but remain unmoved and uninvolved? Scripture has over four hundred passages admonishing us to care for the poor (8:2; Deut. 15:7–11).

1:44 After healing the leper, Jesus commanded him to say nothing to anyone. His demand for silence has several plausible explanations. (1) The report of Jesus' healing the man may have prejudiced the priest who needed to pronounce him clean. (2) Jesus did not want to be known primarily as a miracle worker, so He often commanded those who received His healing to remain quiet. (3) The man's testimony would possibly have hastened the confrontation between Jesus and the religious leaders.

1:45 The cleansed leper did not obey Jesus' simple injunction to keep quiet. As a result, Jesus had to remain in deserted places because the crowds swarmed to Him. Christ was working on a time line, and His time had not yet come.

2:1–28 Mark's first chapter establishes Jesus as a popular figure who experiences great success. Chapters 2 and 3 demonstrate rising opposition to His mission and teaching and suggest more drama and suspense to come.

2:2 Mark is largely a record of Christ's actions, but what Jesus said is not neglected. Here he describes how Jesus preached the word, the message of the coming kingdom.

2:3 The paralytic was borne by four men, apparently on some sort of stretcher that held his bed (v. 11).

2:4 Many in the crowd may have come expecting to see healings and miracles. The throng blocked entrance into the already packed room. The determination of the men is seen in the fact that they uncovered the roof over the room where Jesus was preaching. The roof was probably flat and constructed of tiles laid one on another.

2:5 their faith: Not only did the four men have faith, but the paralytic himself had it too. When Jesus announced to him, your sins are forgiven, He was implicitly acknowledging the paralytic's trust that He was the Messiah.

2:6, 7 Mark notes the opposition of the scribes, who under their breath accused Jesus of blasphemy. In Christ's day the scribes were commonly called "lawyers," because they studied the Law of Moses.

2:8–11 Jesus asked the which is easier question to demonstrate the truth of His claim to forgive the man's sins—something only God can accomplish. Anyone could assert the ability to forgive sins, since there was no earthly way of confirming the statement. But to say arise, take up your bed and walk to a paralytic could be tested immediately by whether he walked or not. By healing the paralytic, Jesus made His pronouncement of forgiveness far more credible. Son of Man is a term regularly used for the Messiah (8:31; Dan. 7:13; Mark 8:31).

2:12 all were amazed and glorified God: The crowd's reaction showed that they understood the significance of Jesus' miracle. It is possible that some scribes and Pharisees joined in the acclamation. But permanent, life-changing faith is what Christ sought, not temporary adoration from the crowd.

2:13 Jesus regularly taught the multitudes in retreat settings. This is indicated by the continuous tense of the verbs used here: They kept on coming, and Jesus kept on teaching.

2:14 Levi, also called Matthew (Matt. 9:9; 10:3), was Jewish, but he collected taxes for Rome. The Jews hated tax collectors. They had a reputation for taking more than they needed in order to add to their own wealth. Jesus' "Follow me" must have shook Matthew's very being, because he quit his profession and followed Jesus.

2:15, 16 Because tax collectors worked for the Romans or their representation, such as Herod Antipas, the Jews hated them and considered them great sinners. By eating with these people, Jesus showed that God's forgiveness is extended even to the worst. Believers must go to the lost since it is plain that the lost rarely come on their own seeking Jesus.

2:17 In this instance Jesus was speaking tongue-in-cheek when He used the word righteous. None are righteous, though some, such as the Pharisees, fancied themselves as such. Instead, Christ came to call sinners, to repentance. Jesus did not condone the activities of sinners, but required repentance—a change of mind that recognizes the need of a Savior and recognizes Jesus Christ as the only Savior.

2:18 fast: Jesus was not against fasting, if properly observed. He gave guidelines for fasting in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 6:16–18). Here, the Pharisees' fasting, perhaps twice each week (Luke 18:12), is contrasted with Jesus' feasting, probably at Levi's house. Some believe that the OT enjoins fasting on only one day each year—the Day of Atonement (Lev. 16:29), the "affliction of the soul" referring to fasting. This day is the only annual fast referred to in the NT (Acts 27:9).

2:19 Jesus' presence, as with a wedding celebration, called for rejoicing, not mourning.

2:20 Taken away from them may be a hint of Jesus' coming departure (John 14:19, 20; 16:5). After His crucifixion, Jesus' disciples will fast, perhaps figuratively in the sense of sorrowing over His loss.

2:21, 22 Mark records only four of Jesus' parables—two of which he includes here. The comparison implies that the newness of His message, and of the New Covenant to follow, cannot fit into the old molds of Judaism. The OT was preparation for the NT (Gal. 3:19–25).

2:23 Ripe grain can be eaten whole and is both tasty and nutritious. Plucking bits of grain from another's field for sustenance was permitted under Mosaic Law (Deut. 23:25). Wholesale reaping with a sickle, however, was prohibited.

2:24 The point to the Pharisees' accusation against Jesus and His disciples was that they had performed work on the Sabbath, but their charge was dubious. The act of plucking grain should not be confused with Sabbath work condemned in the law (Ex. 31:15). This incident is further proof of rising opposition to Jesus' ministry.

2:25, 26 Part of Jesus' defense was to recall the story of David's eating the showbread from the tabernacle. Since that bread was intended for the priests, it was not lawful for others to eat.

2:27, 28 Jesus does not declare directly the innocence of either David or His disciples, but instead reminds His critics of the meaning of the Sabbath for humans and His own Lordship over it. Human needs may at times overrule a ceremonial observance of the Sabbath.

3:1, 2 The Sabbath controversy continued as Jesus visited the synagogue. The Pharisees (3:6) watched Him closely, not to hear the words of life but to accuse Him. In similar fashion, coming to church with a hostile, fault-finding motive will rob one of spiritual benefit and bring bitterness into the soul.

3:3, 4 Christ put the meaning of the Sabbath to the test. Certainly it was more consistent with the intention of the law to restore this man's afflicted hand, even on the Sabbath, than to destroy his hopes for the sake of keeping human tradition. The Pharisees did not respond, for they knew that they would condemn themselves.

3:5 It is possible, as Paul exhorts, to be angry and not sin (Eph. 4:26). Jesus demonstrated this righteous anger. He was grieved with sin but did not sin Himself by retaliating or losing control of His emotions.

3:6 The Pharisees were religious experts who should have led the people in righteousness. Instead, they plotted Jesus' death with the Herodians, their bitter enemies. They were willing to set aside differences to destroy a common foe. The Herodians were Jews who supported Rome and the Herods in particular. Herod Antipas, a son of Herod the Great, ruled Galilee during the same time that Pilate served as Roman governor over Judea and Samaria.

3:7 Because of this plot against His life, Jesus withdrew with the disciples from the area. Still crowds flocked to Him from north (Galilee), south (Judea), and beyond.

3:8 Idumea (the Edom of the OT), the birthplace of Herod the Great, was south of Judea. Beyond the Jordan refers to the Transjordan, the cities on the east side of the Jordan (10:1). Tyre and Sidon (Phoenicia in the OT), both on the Lebanese coast, were also cities Jesus visited during His earthly ministry (7:24) and mentioned in His teachings (Matt. 11:21, 22).

3:9 small boat: Christ knew the impact of His ministry on the multitudes and made preparation for being alone, which He highly prized.

3:10–12 Some unfortunate persons who met Christ were possessed by unclean spirits, or demons. These spirit beings have no bodily existence but frequently seek to inhabit humans or even animals. Mark says they fell down before Him, most likely by forcing to the ground the person they possessed. Jesus rebuked the demons who proclaimed You are the Son of God not because the demons incorrectly identified Jesus, but because their testimony was untrustworthy. Christ doesn’t need the affirmation of His enemies. Mark records even their testimony to Christ’s deity.

The Twelve Apostles

These twelve men were called "apostles" (Gk. apostolos, "messenger") for they had been sent out to deliver Christ's message to others. Mark 6:30 actually uses the word apostles to describe the twelve who had been sent out (6:7) to preach, cast out demons, and heal sickness. This same word is found in the parallel passages in Matt. 10:2 and Luke 6:13, and Luke's Gospel uses the word five other times (Luke 9:10; 11:49; 17:5; 22:14; 24:10).

Many of Jesus' followers could rightly be called disciples, or learners, because they listened to and accepted Jesus' teachings. Yet Christ chose only a select group to entrust with the task of carrying the gospel throughout the world. These twelve formed the closest circle around Christ. (The language of Matt. 19:28 suggests that the twelve may have represented the twelve tribes of Israel. Given the largely Jewish audience for whom Matthew wrote, the symbolism would be powerful.) These twelve lived with Jesus, ate with Him, and most importantly listened to Him. They witnessed His ministry and were challenged by His rebuke. They joined together with Jesus to proclaim the Good News and serve others. Of these twelve, Peter, James, and John were perhaps Jesus' most trusted followers, for they alone witnessed the raising of Jairus' daughter, the Transfiguration, and Jesus' prayer in Gethsemane. Tragically, even in the intimate circle of these twelve men, Satan found opportunity to sow discontent, eventually resulting in Judas' betrayal of Christ. In three short years, Jesus molded these men into leaders of faith. Then after His resurrection, He empowered them with the Holy Spirit and sent them out to be His witnesses to the ends of the earth (16:15, 16; Acts 1:4, 5; 2:1–21).

3:13 Jesus had a large group of followers. John 6:66 indicates that even after the Twelve were appointed, He still had a large and continual following. Luke 10:1 notes that later Jesus sent out an additional seventy disciples.

3:14 These twelve were Jesus' apostles—a chosen group sent out to fulfill a particular mission. Many could be disciples, or learners, but only a select group of men were chosen for certain leadership tasks. These twelve formed the closest circle to Christ, and of them Peter, James, and John were even more intimate on certain occasions, such as at the raising of Jairus's daughter, the Transfiguration, and in Gethsemane. That they might be with Him highlights the principle of association. Jesus worked with the group principle—not so much the one-on-one. We grow in relation, not in isolation. In our case this is even more important because on the one hand, we don't have all the gifts, and, on the other hand, we are sinful and give a distorted portrait of the Christ we seek to reflect. But a more balanced image will be given in the group.

3:15 Christ gave power or authority to the twelve apostles (Matt. 10:1–4). The apostle Paul called this authority "the signs of an apostle" (2 Cor. 12:12). Christ and the apostles authenticated their ministry through signs, miracles, and wonders (Heb. 2:3, 4).

3:16–19 Jesus gave Peter a new name because it was the Jewish custom to rename someone who had experienced a life-changing event. This renaming of the disciples has similarities to the renaming of Abram (Gen. 17:3–5) and of Saul (Acts 9). Jesus no doubt sent out His apostles in pairs as He did the seventy disciples (6:7–13; Matt. 10:5–15; Luke 9:1–6). This explains the listing of the apostles' names in groups of two. The coupling is especially evident in Matt. 10:1–4: Peter and Andrew, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew (Nathaniel), Matthew and Thomas, James (son of Alphaeus) and Thaddaeus, and Simon the Cananite and Judas. Even though Judas Iscariot had a close partner in the work for three years, no one yet suspected he would be the one who also betrayed Him. Close association with other believers, or even with Christ Himself, is no guarantee of salvation. Furthermore, fine external behavior doesn't prove the reality of my regeneration. Judas must have had a good reputation to be trusted to carry the money for the group.

3:20, 21 Opposition to Jesus came not only from His enemies. Jesus' own people, no doubt close friends and perhaps even relatives (vv. 31–35), heard of his teaching and assumed that He was out of His mind. This may have been due to the strenuous schedule Jesus kept. He had only three and one-half years to minister, and He needed to make the most of this time. Even then, He had to withdraw at times to keep a balance physically, mentally, and spiritually.

IN COMPARISON

Pagan Gods in the New Testament

Name	Description	Reference
BEELZEBUB	A heathen god considered by the Jews to be the supreme evil spirit.	Mark 3:22
DIANA	In Roman mythology, the goddess of the moon, hunting, wild animals, and virginity.	Acts 19:24, 27, 28
HERMES	The Greek god of commerce, science, invention, cunning, eloquence, and theft.	Acts 14:12
MAMMON	The Aramaic word for riches, personified by Jesus as a false god.	Luke 16:9, 11
MOLOCH	National god of the Ammonites whose worship involved child sacrifice.	Acts 7:43
REMPHAN	An idol worshiped by Israel in the wilderness.	Acts 7:43
TWIN BROTHERS	In Greek mythology, the twin sons of Zeus.	Acts 28:11
ZEUS	The supreme god of the ancient Greeks.	Acts 14:12, 13

3:22 The scribes, or teachers of the Jewish law, were more harsh and direct in their assessment of Jesus. They accused Him of being possessed by Beelzebub (literally, "Lord of the Flies"; 2 Kin. 1:3), another name for Satan. This false charge demonstrates a hardness of heart and is akin to blaspheming against the Holy Spirit (vv. 28–30).

3:23–26 Jesus' reply in parables was actually a threefold message that contrasted unity and disunity. Nothing—including Satan's kingdom—can stand if it is divided.

3:27 Whoever defeats Satan must be stronger than he. Jesus implies that He Himself has come to enter the house of the strong man, Satan, to seize his goods (1 John 3:8).

3:28–30 Assuredly (Amen, Amen in Gk.) indicates the solemnity of Jesus' declaration which follows. While the prophets said "thus saith the Lord," what Christ says is true on its own merit. While Jesus does not say that anyone in the crowd He addresses actually has committed the sin He describes, He nonetheless stresses the hopelessness of such a condition. Anyone who blasphemes against the Holy Spirit places himself totally outside the redeeming grace of God. It is apparently not a single act of defiant behavior, but a continued state of opposition entered into willfully, but irrevocably. The tense of they said indicates a continued action, not a one-time event. The words and works of Christ were spoken and performed by the power of the Holy Spirit. To attribute them to Satan is to attribute the credentials of heaven to hell. If one persists in that state there is no remedy. How someone can enter into this state of affairs today is a difficult question, but those who persist in denigrating Christ by insisting His person and works were motivated and empowered by Satan rather than by the Holy Spirit no doubt place themselves dangerously near non-regenerative hope (Matt. 12:31, 32).

3:31, 32 Opposition arose from Jesus' own immediate family, His brothers and His mother. We are not told precisely what they wanted to say, but it likely involved a concern for Jesus' safety or reputation, since He was becoming widely known as a preaching prophet (1:14, 15) and a worker of miracles (1:31; 2:12).

3:34, 35 Whoever does the will of God expresses a spiritual allegiance that goes beyond loyalty to one's biological family. Spiritual kinship is determined not by blood or race but by obedience to God. Thus, if our nuclear families are to prosper, we need to keep our focus on the extended family, the church family of God. These are those with whom we have eternal filial relationships.

4:1–34 Mark now shifts the emphasis of his Gospel from Jesus' works to His words. Both are important.

4:2 Parables go beyond mere entertainment or moralizing; they teach vital spiritual truths about the kingdom of God.

4:3–9 The story Jesus told was easy enough to comprehend. During the planting season, it was common to see men scattering seed by hand over their small fields. They cast the seeds over the kinds of soil Jesus describes —smooth pathways running through fields, rough terrain that hid large rocks just beneath the surface, fields overgrown with weeds, and excellent, rich soil here and there. The point of the parable is that the condition of the soil determines the potential for growth. The principle is true for Christians and non-Christians alike. Those who have become complacent and lackadaisical are not likely to receive the Word with benefit (James 1:22–25).

INSIGHT

Old Testament Signs

Mark told the story of Jesus much like the disciples must have told it after the Resurrection. He builds on the foundation of OT promises about the Messiah, beginning exactly where Malachi—the last book of the OT—ends. He starts by introducing John the Baptist as the promised forerunner to the Messiah.

When the disciples ask Jesus why He speaks in perplexing parables, Jesus shows that He is fulfilling the prophecy of Is. 6:9, 10 (Mark 4:10–13). And when Jesus warns the disciples that they will scatter when He is arrested, He confirms this by citing the prophet Zechariah (13:7; Mark 14:27).

4:10 Apparently Jesus' extensive teaching of the multitude ended and the crowd was gone. Jesus may have taught for hours using many such parables (v. 2) during that time. But now He was alone except for His closest followers who asked Him about the parable (of the sower).

4:11 A mystery in Scripture is a truth God has revealed or will reveal at the proper time (Rom. 16:25, 26). Jesus apparently used parables for several reasons. First, they are interesting and grab the listener's attention. Second, such stories are easily remembered. Third, they reveal truth to those who are ready spiritually to receive it. Fourth, they conceal truth from those who oppose Christ's message. Frequently, Jesus' opponents failed to understand the lessons because of their own spiritual blindness (Matt. 21:45, 46).

4:12 Not all will understand the teaching of the kingdom. Compare this statement of Jesus with Is. 6:9, 10; 43:8.

4:13–14 In response to the disciples' request, Jesus explains the parable of the sower and the four soils (or hearts, see v. 15). The number four is not important. Jesus could have used three or five or six types of soil to illustrate the fact that people will receive quite differently the truth of the word (v. 14), Jesus' message about His coming kingdom.

4:15 The pathway soil is trampled, hard, and unresponsive. The birds (v. 4) represent Satan, who quickly takes away the word that was sown in their hearts. Elsewhere we are told that Satan can blind the minds of those who do not believe (2 Cor. 4:4). The fuller rendering of Jesus' explanation in Matthew's parallel account (Matt. 13:19) says that this person "does not understand" and then the "wicked one comes and snatches away what was sown in his heart."

4:16, 17 The shallow soil overlaying the stony ground represents those who seem eager to receive Christ's message but whose commitment is superficial.

4:18, 19 The thorn-infested soil represents those who hear the word but lack single-mindedness and become completely unproductive. Worry (the normal cares of this world) and pleasure-seeking (deceitfulness of riches and the pursuit of other things) are both capable of producing a deadly spiritual apathy.

4:20 Only one soil produces fruit. Christ emphasizes the necessity to hear the word, accept it, and bear fruit. Their belief has encompassed reality, been activated and life-transforming. The word accept is the same word as believe. A person can receive only as much as he or she can believe. And one's belief will only be as valuable as the object of his or her belief. People believe many things, but only truth is worthy of ultimate belief (compare John 8:31, 32).

4:21–23 Jesus' lesson of the lamp, a small clay vessel that burned a wick set in olive oil, is that light reveals what it glows on. Like the lamp, Jesus' teachings reveal the motives of the human heart. Time would prove the reality of His teaching and bring the secret hidden things of men to light.

4:23 hear (Gk. akouo): Used four times in two verses. To hear the right things and respond properly is absolutely basic to spiritual prosperity. How important it is that we be selective in our listening and our looking. We are programming our actions all the time by what we look at and listen to (James 1:19).

4:24 To those who hear—who receive God's Good News—more spiritual truth will be given. A growing believer must be receptive and teachable.

4:25 Whoever has, meaning those who possess spiritual life, will continue to learn and grow. Whoever does not have spiritual life will lose even what little desire for God he or she seems to have.

4:26–29 Plants develop in a complex, intricate process that humans still do not fully understand even two thousand years after Jesus spoke these words. Yet plants grow and bear fruit and seeds just the same. God's kingdom likewise is growing, although we do not understand all that is happening. This parable, which appears only in Mark's Gospel, presents God's kingdom in brief, from first sowing to final reaping. Truly, we are fellow workers with God. But we are also totally dependent on Him for growth.

4:30–32 A mustard seed is much smaller than a kernel of corn or a grain of wheat, yet its growth is more spectacular, reaching a height of ten to twelve feet. The point is the comparatively large result from such a humble and insignificant beginning. The kingdom that Jesus came to announce drew little support during His life but will find complete fulfillment when He returns. The mention of birds making their nest under its shade (v. 32) should not be confused with the birds in the parable of the sower (4:4). Most likely, these birds illustrate how large the mustard plant has become.

4:33, 34 Parables were Jesus' primary teaching tool.

4:35 To cross over the Sea of Galilee, a lake only eight miles wide, would not seem difficult at first glance. Yet its unique geography produces a greatly varying climate. The lake is situated seven hundred feet below sea level and is surrounded by mountains that rise three to four thousand feet above sea level on the west, north, and east. Tropical conditions prevail around the lake's surface, where even bananas are grown today. Yet the higher elevations can produce chilling night air.

4:36, 37 It is not unusual even today for a sudden great windstorm to appear on the Sea of Galilee during the evening hours. The warm tropical air from the lake's surface rises and meets the colder air from the nearby hills. The resulting turbulence stirs up great waves which make boating extremely treacherous.

4:38 The mention of Jesus being asleep on a pillow shows His true humanity. He was fully human and needed food and rest just as all people do.

4:39 Jesus' command over the wind and the sea demonstrates His full and complete deity. Only God the Creator can calm wind and sea.

4:40, 41 Mark uses the disciples' question "Who can this be?" to evoke a similar response in the minds of his readers. Mark relates the works and words of the One he calls "Jesus Christ, the Son of God" (1:1).

5:1—8:30 In the major section which begins here, Mark relates incidents of belief and unbelief, climaxing with Peter's confession of Jesus' deity.

5:1–20 Mark records the fullest account of Jesus' dealing with the demoniac of Gadara. Matthew uses only seven verses, while Luke covers the story in eleven. Mark is given to detail.

5:1 The country of the Gadarenes is on the eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee. Gergesenes is used in Matt. 8:28-34 and Gadarenes in Luke 8:26, 27 and here; Gergesenes is merely a variant term but refers to the same place. No towns or villages exist along the lake's narrow eastern shore because cliffs several thousand feet high rise up from near the water's edge. The steep cliffs are less pronounced the farther south one proceeds toward Gadara, situated on the heights several thousand feet above the Jordan Valley 5:2 Apparently, right after leaving the boat and perhaps before ascending the nearby hills, Jesus was encountered by a man with an unclean spirit (1:23). The man was demon possessed, as v. 15 clearly states.

5:3, 4 the tombs: Caves in the rocks, often used for burial places. The man's natural strength was no doubt enhanced by the demon within.

5:6–8 Jesus distinguished between the man and the demon who possessed him. Although the man's physical body prostrated itself before Christ, it was the demon within who spoke to Jesus, and was likewise addressed by Jesus in return.

5:9 My name is Legion: By giving his name, the demon responded to Jesus' authority. A legion of the Roman army consisted of 4,000 to 6,000 soldiers. The many demons reflect the chaotic state of the man's mind.

5:10 out of the country: They considered this wild Gentile place their own country.

5:11 The presence of swine shows these people were Gentiles.

5:12, 13 It is not certain that the demons needed permission to leave the man and enter the swine, but they may have been trying to forestall permanent bondage by Christ. (The bottomless pit of Rev. 9:1 may be such a place of imprisonment.) Jesus bears no responsibility for the action the demons took; He did not direct them to run the swine into the sea. Even today, two thousand hogs is a very large herd. Their monetary value could easily have been worth a quarter of a million dollars in today's economy—a sizable loss for the owners.

5:14 The OT forbade Jews to have any contact with swine (Lev. 11:7, 8). However, the owners of these swine might not have been Jewish, since this area was inhabited largely by Gentiles (5:20).

5:17–20 Jesus was not well received in this region. His presence had caused financial loss for some, although it meant liberation to the demoniac. Jesus could have healed and saved in that region, but He was turned away by its fearful citizens. Yet He left a solid witness behind. All the people marveled when they heard what Jesus had done for him. Jesus later made an excursion through the Decapolis region (7:31). Decapolis literally means "ten cities." The largest city was Scythopolis (ancient Bethshan) and included Damascus in the far north and Philadelphia (modern Amman, Jordan) on the southern extreme. The other seven cities were Pella, Abila, Gerasa (Jerash), Hippos, Dion, Raphana, and Gadara. This largely Gentile, Greek-speaking area was an important strategic link in Rome's military defense.

5:21 Jesus' crossing by boat to the other side brought Him to Capernaum, although Mark does not mention that here. Matthew 9:1 says He came to "His own city," a common designation of Capernaum, Jesus' headquarters for ministry activity.

IN FOCUS

“synagogue”

(Gk. sunagoge) (1:21; 5:22; 6:2; 13:9): This word literally means “a place where people gather together.” After Babylon destroyed the temple (587 B.C.), synagogues gradually emerged in many Jewish towns as places of worship and as schools for teaching the Mosaic Law. Jews met in synagogues on the Sabbath, recited prayers, and read from the Scriptures.

5:22 Jairus, one of the rulers of the synagogue, was a lay leader charged with supervising services at the synagogue.

5:23 Aware of Jesus’ miraculous powers, Jairus approached Jesus with perhaps the greatest need he had ever faced. He knew that Jesus could meet his need. However, he believed—falsely, it turned out—that Jesus had to actually touch his desperately ill daughter before she could be healed. Yet his faith was unshakable.

5:24 The multitude which was eagerly awaiting Jesus’ arrival now thronged Him. People were being pressed against Jesus from all sides.

5:24–34 Intertwined with the incident of Jairus’s daughter is the story of the woman with a persistent blood flow, perhaps a severe menstrual disorder. As a result, she was considered unclean, and anyone she touched would become unclean ceremonially for one day (Lev. 15:25–27). Still, she entered the crowd to touch Jesus.

5:26 Mark is not complimentary toward the physicians who had treated the woman, noting that she had spent all that she had. Luke, a physician himself, omits Mark’s added detail that her condition actually grew worse.

5:27 The woman touched His garment. Perhaps she had heard of another who was healed in a similar way. She must have feared having her embarrassing condition revealed to the crowd.

5:28 Her faith motivated her to act.

5:29, 30 The word immediately is used twice in this context. Both the woman and Jesus simultaneously knew what had happened. The woman had no idea that Jesus had consciously healed her. While she sought to disappear into the crowd, Jesus turned and asked, “Who touched My clothes?” He wanted to correct any mistaken notion she may have had about her healing. It was not any magical quality of His clothing, but His divine will that had made her well.

5:31 No one else was aware that the healing had happened. The disciples became dismayed, perhaps because they were anxious to reach Jairus's home.

5:32 He looked around, or literally, kept on looking around, gazing on the people crowded near Him.

5:33 Jesus' kind manner and tender words must have eased the fear this woman had of being revealed. She stepped forward and told Him the whole truth. Naturally, the time that Jesus took to care for the woman must have worried the already tense disciples.

IN COMPARISON

Miracles in Mark

Mark dedicates more of his account to Jesus' miracles than any of the other Gospel writers. For Mark, these miracles were demonstrations of Jesus' power—His power over disease, the forces of evil, even over nature. Many flocked to Him to be healed and fed. Some wondered who Jesus was. But others followed Him.

Miracle	Reference	What the Miracle Demonstrated	Response
Casting out an unclean spirit	1:23–28	Jesus' power over the forces of evil	The people of Capernaum were amazed and asked, "What new doctrine is this?"
Healing Peter's mother-in-law	1:29–34	Jesus' power over sickness	The people brought the sick and demon-possessed to be healed.
Cleansing a leper	1:40–45	Jesus' compassion and His power over sickness	The leper told everyone about Jesus and the people came from every direction to see Him.
Healing a paralyzed man	2:1–12	Jesus' power over sickness and His authority to forgive	The Pharisees questioned Jesus' authority to forgive, but the people glorified God.
Healing a man with a withered hand	3:1–6	Jesus' power over sickness and His authority to do good on the Sabbath	The Pharisees wanted to accuse Jesus of breaking the Sabbath and began to plot against Him.
Calming a storm	4:35–41	Jesus' power over nature	The disciples were afraid and asked, "Who can this be?"
Casting out demons	5:1–20	Jesus' compassion and His power over the forces of evil	The demon-possessed man told everyone what Jesus had done for him. Yet the people of Gadara pleaded with Jesus to leave the region.
Raising Jairus's daughter	5:21–24, 35–43	Jesus' power over death	The family of Jairus is overcome with amazement.
Healing a woman with a hemorrhage	6:25–34	Jesus' power over sickness
Feeding the five thousand	6:30–44	Jesus' power to provide food	The disciples' hearts were hardened, and they did not understand what the miracle meant (v. 52).
Walking on the sea	6:45–52	Jesus' power over nature	The disciples were greatly amazed.
Casting out the demon from the Greek woman's daughter	7:24–30	Jesus' power over evil forces not in His immediate proximity.
Healing a deaf-mute	7:31–37	Jesus' power over the ability to hear and speak	The people spread the news of Jesus and were astonished.
Feeding the four thousand	8:1–10	Jesus' power to provide food
Healing a blind man	8:22–26	Jesus' power over sight
Casting out a deaf and dumb spirit	9:14–29	Jesus' power over the forces of evil, and the source of His power: prayer	The disciples asked Jesus what was the source of His power.
Healing blind Bartimaeus	10:46–52	Jesus' power over sight	Bartimaeus followed Jesus.
Withering a fig tree	11:12–14, 20–24	Jesus' power over nature, and the source of His power: prayer	Peter was amazed.

5:34 Jesus used a tender word, daughter, to address this woman, and He noted that her faith made the difference, for it was correctly placed in Him. Faith itself does not heal; rather, it is the proper object of that faith, Jesus, who heals.

5:35, 36 The implication of the girl's reported death is that her condition is now irreversible and without remedy. Jesus immediately corrects this thought by insisting that Jairus stop being afraid and continue to believe.

5:37 He permits only three disciples to join Him—Peter, James, and John. Note that these same three were the ones permitted to see the Transfiguration (9:2) and accompanied Jesus for prayer in Gethsemane (14:32, 33).

5:38–40 Public mourning was loud and boisterous.

5:41 Talitha, cumi is Aramaic.

5:42 That the girl arose indicates that her life had been restored, just as in the case of the dead son of the widow of Nain (Luke 7:15) and of Lazarus, who had been dead for four days (John 11:44). All three would die again. Jesus' resurrection, however, was unique. Not only was He restored to life, but His body was transformed so that He would never again have to face death.

5:43 The command to keep the miracle a secret was a temporary measure, for certainly the girl's reappearance could not be hidden very long. Such orders would, however, allow Jesus to exit quietly. Jesus did not want to be known primarily as a miracle worker lest people seek Him for the wrong reasons.

6:1 Jesus now went to minister in His own country, the area where He grew up, around Nazareth.

6:2 The people readily acknowledged both Jesus' wisdom and His mighty works, but with insensitive hearts and spiritual callousness they rejected Jesus' message. He taught that He was the fulfillment of the messianic prophecies of the OT (Luke 4:16-21).

Working-Class Savior

Like his earthly father before Him, Jesus worked as a carpenter (Mark 6:3). Possibly He continued to practice His trade while traveling about to teach and heal. He certainly derived no income from His ministry. Only officials of the temple and religious courts drew salaries. The rest of the religious teachers and leaders were either independently wealthy or supported themselves through a trade or profession.

Jesus did receive support from several wealthy women. And He was welcomed as a guest into many homes. But of all the complaints that His enemies lodged against Him—that He failed to keep the Sabbath, that He ate and drank with sinners, that He made Himself out to be God—they never accused Him of being lazy. Indeed, Jesus' own townsfolk were amazed at His teaching because he was "just a carpenter."

6:3 The fact that Joseph is not mentioned here may indicate that he had died. Mark mentions Jesus' four brothers by name as well as His sisters. One brother, James, did not trust Christ prior to His crucifixion (John 7:5), but seems to have come to faith after Jesus' resurrection (Acts 1:14; 1 Cor. 15:7). He later became the leader of the church in Jerusalem (Acts 15:13; Gal. 1:19) and wrote the Epistle of James. Judas later authored the Book of Jude (Jude 1).

6:4–6 A prophet is not without honor except in his own country is a maxim still repeated and still true today. Perhaps others were jealous of Jesus' popularity and huge following. Their envy even took the form of violence against Christ (Luke 4:29).

6:7 Going out two by two provides fellowship, support, encouragement, accountability, and adequate witness. This principle is still a good one to follow today in church visitation and calling.

6:8–11 These instructions accompanied the twelve on their assigned journey, the results of which are reported in Mark 6:30. These rules made for easier travel and encouraged the disciples to trust God for their food and shelter, which faithful Jewish hearers who heeded their teaching would provide.

6:12 That people should repent was part of the apostles' primary message. Repentance was necessary to cultivate the new life Christ offered.

6:13 Casting out demons and healing the sick would add authority to the apostles' message (2 Cor. 12:12; Heb. 2:3, 4).

6:14–29 These verses break from the narrative to describe the death of John the Baptist. So alarming was Jesus' sudden fame that Herod feared that John had risen from the dead. The disciples Jesus had sent out (6:7–13) undoubtedly added to Herod's worry. It appears that one of Mark's purposes in describing John's death was to foreshadow the violent death of Christ Himself and even of some who would follow Him.

6:14 King Herod is Herod Antipas, one of the sons of Herod the Great, the king who tried to kill the baby Jesus (Matt. 2:1–18). After Herod the Great's death in 4 B.C., his kingdom was divided between Archelaus, who received Judea and Samaria; Philip, who ruled Iturea and Trachonitis, north and east of Galilee; and Antipas, who controlled Galilee and Perea from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39. Jesus ministered largely in the territory ruled by Antipas.

6:15 This verse demonstrates the contrast in expectations that Israel had for its coming Messiah. It is clear that many did not recognize the divine mission that Jesus was fulfilling.

6:16, 17 The prison where John was kept was at Machaerus, in the hills which overlook the Dead Sea. A complete palace and fortress occupied that site. Herodias was a granddaughter of Herod the Great and the sister of Herod Agrippa I (Acts 12:1–23). She was married to Philip, a half brother of Herod Antipas, but not the Philip of Luke 3:1. Herodias's first husband was never a ruler. She divorced this Philip in order to marry Herod Antipas. Herod likewise divorced his first wife, the daughter of Aretas IV, king of Arabia (2 Cor. 11:32).

6:18–21 John's message to Herod was that his divorce was not lawful as grounds for remarriage. John's declaration could be based on Jesus' stern words about divorce (10:11, 12) or on Lev. 20:21, which prohibits a man from taking his brother's wife.

6:22 Herodias's daughter, named Salome, was still unmarried at this point and danced seductively to please Herod Antipas. She later married Philip the Tetrarch, who ruled Iturea and Trachonitis and is mentioned in Luke 3:1.

6:23–25 Because she pleased him, Herod Antipas swore to Salome a solemn oath to give her up to half of his kingdom (an expression meaning a large amount but with limits), words that remind us of Xerxes' promise to Esther (Esth. 5:3, 6). This gesture was no doubt exaggerated, yet Salome seized the opportunity for her mother, Herodias, who hated John the Baptist.

6:26 exceedingly sorry: John's death by a ruler who thought him innocent is similar to Jesus' death at the hands of Pilate (15:14, 15).

6:27–29 To keep his oath, Herod dispatched an executioner. Here Mark uses a Latin word, spekoulatora, easily understood by his Roman readers.

6:30 The word apostles (Gk. apostello, I send) in this context refers to the twelve men Jesus sent out in v. 7. The word has long been used as a technical term to designate the original twelve men Jesus chose. This same usage is found in the parallel passages in Matt. 10:2 and Luke 6:13, and although infrequent in Mark, is used regularly in this manner in Luke (17:5; 22:14; 24:10).

6:31, 32 The disciples had returned from their tours of ministry in Galilee begun at v. 7. Jesus sought the privacy of a deserted place belonging to the city of Bethsaida (Luke 9:10), but yet a distance from the city.

6:33–35 The Gospels record several times that when Jesus saw a need, He was moved with compassion (1:41; Ex. 34:6). That compassion led to action, despite an obvious lack of food in this instance.

6:36–38 The disciples sought to avoid responsibility for the hungry multitude, saying send them away. No doubt they thought they were showing compassion. But Jesus' reply, "You give them something to eat," must have startled them. The Latin word denarii is the plural of denarius, a commonly used silver coin. It was the sum typically paid to a laborer for a day's work. Thomas calculated it would take the wages of two hundred days' labor to provide for that multitude.

6:39, 40 Details such as sitting on the green grass, which is possible only in late winter and early spring, and the fact that the groups were counted in hundreds and in fifties are indications that an eyewitness, probably Peter, recounted this story to Mark. John 6:4 informs us that this event occurred prior to the approaching Passover, always celebrated in March or April.

6:41 The tense of the verb gave, used by Mark and Luke (9:16), suggests that the multiplication of the loaves took place in Jesus' hands as He continued or kept on giving the bread and fish to the disciples.

6:42, 43 The twelve baskets full of fragments were small baskets commonly carried by travelers (contrast the baskets described in 8:8, which are larger). It is possible to conclude that the leftovers gave each disciple enough food for his own use. When we put the will of God first, He will care for our needs (Matt. 6:33) and provide our daily bread. God desires daily dependence on Him.

6:44 In addition to the estimated five thousand men were women and children as stated in Matt. 14:21, and as indicated by the presence of the lad who donated his lunch to Jesus (John 6:9).

6:45 Jesus had difficulty in sending the multitude away because they were determined to make Him their king by force (John 6:15).

6:46 Jesus spent several nights in prayer during His ministry. Prayer was a vital part of Christ's communion with the Father and always preceded and accompanied especially difficult situations. This particular night followed a busy day when solitude was sought but not found. Jesus was also facing Satan's temptation to step out of the path that led to the Cross in order to become king prematurely.

6:47 In the middle of the sea does not mean the very center of the lake but simply out in the water. They were probably closest to the northern shore.

The Sea, or Lake, of Galilee on which Jesus walked during a storm to reassure His disciples and to show His mastery over the natural order (Mark 6:48–51).

6:48 The fourth watch lasted from 3 A.M. until 6 A.M. That Jesus would have passed them by does not indicate that He was on His way to somewhere else. He intended to reveal Himself to His disciples in a miraculous manner. He could easily have calmed the waves from shore, but He wanted His disciples to understand His deity and mastery over all nature.

6:49 When the disciples saw Jesus, they thought they saw a ghost (an apparition), a sign often interpreted as a foreshadowing of evil, even death.

6:50 Mark omits the added detail of Peter walking on the water to meet Jesus (Matt. 14:28–31). Mark almost certainly knew of the incident but does not want to exalt Peter.

6:51, 52 Three miracles are contained in this brief account (vv. 47–51). (1) In the darkness Jesus saw the disciples out in the storm miles away. (2) Jesus walked on the water. (3) Jesus showed complete control over His creation when the wind ceased.

6:53 They had set out for Bethsaida (v. 45) on the northeastern shore, but the storm apparently changed their course. The land of Gennesaret was on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee, just west of Capernaum. It was and still is a fertile agricultural area.

6:54–56 Mark summarizes Jesus' healing ministry, noting how widespread it was. The hem of a garment was significant, for it was often woven with tassels that reminded the wearer of God's commandments (5:27; Num. 15:37–41).

7:1–23 In this chapter, the scribes and Pharisees become more vocal in their opposition to Jesus. The breach between true spirituality and man-made tradition widens considerably.

7:1 Jerusalem was the central city of the Jewish faith. The Pharisees (Matt. 5:20) and scribes (teachers of the law) were no doubt sent by the Jewish religious authorities to ascertain Jesus' position on the issues they counted important. The Gospels present both good and bad scribes (Matt. 7:29; 8:19).

7:2 they found fault: It is so much easier to criticize than to encourage. Counselors say that people, especially children, need encouragement over criticism on an eight-to-one ratio. We make encouragement and uplifting easier when we make it a habit.

7:3, 4 These two verses explain the tradition of hand washing and various kinds of ceremonial uncleanness. Mark's intended readers in Rome likely needed more background on the Jewish faith to understand this controversy.

7:5 The tradition of the elders (Matt. 15:2) was a series of rules meant to bolster the ceremonial law of the Jews. Its authority was not supported by Scripture. The question indirectly challenged Jesus, for as the disciples' teacher He was judged responsible for their actions.

7:6, 7 Jesus did not directly answer the question but instead addressed two more significant issues: (1) the superiority of God's law over man-made tradition (vv. 6–13) and (2) the difference between ceremonial and true moral defilement (vv. 14–23). Jesus enters into the argument by calling His adversaries hypocrites. The term originally referred to actors who wore masks on stage as they played different characters. Thus the Pharisees were not genuinely religious; they were merely playing a part for all to see.

7:8, 9 In earlier times the Hebrews held the written Law of God, the Torah, in such esteem that they would not write down their reflections on it, lest they should tempt later generations to consider their words as important as God's law. But as time went on, written commentaries on the law, collected in the Talmud, assumed greater authority than the Torah itself.

7:10–13 But you say shows the absolute contrast between God's will and man's empty tradition. The corban was evidently a pious-sounding evasion of the requirement of honoring one's parents by supporting them financially.

7:14 A private question at mealtime bloomed into a controversy that now met the ears of all the multitude whom Jesus summoned. Jesus made a bold public statement that must have liberated His listeners and infuriated the Pharisees.

7:15, 16 No food we eat defiles us, but unbridled speech and conduct can. Here is a basic principle of conduct. Our actions are determined by the programming of our minds. Our actions are the blossom of our deepest thoughts. Notice also that the words of a man defile him even before others.

7:17–23 Jesus had to spell out exactly what He meant to His dull and seemingly imperceptive disciples. How often we try to blame our environment rather than observing this principle.

7:20 This may be the statement of Christ that indicates a transition from the dietary laws of Lev. 11 with the full change occuring in the teaching of the church in Acts 10—11.

7:24—8:26 After a forceful public confrontation with the Jewish authorities, Jesus withdrew to rest and to instruct His own disciples.

7:24 Jesus' travels to the region of Tyre and Sidon are the farthest beyond Israel He is reported to have gone during His public ministry. Of course, during His infancy, He traveled about three hundred miles from his birthplace into Egypt. Sidon is about fifty miles northeast of Capernaum.

7:25 Even in a house in faraway Sidon, Jesus could not find privacy.

7:26 The woman who approached Jesus was a Gentile, as the word Greek signifies here. She was a native of that area. Syro-Phoenician (see 1 Kin. 17:8–24 for the story of the widow at Zarephath) reflects the political situation of the Middle East at that time. Phoenicia (modern Lebanon) was part of the Roman province of Syria, which also included all of Palestine—Galilee, Samaria, Perea, Judea, Idumea, and other regions.

7:27 Jesus was in the midst of teaching or feeding His disciples, called figuratively His children. During a meal one does not stop to feed the house pets, the little dogs. Jesus is not attempting to insult the woman by using this metaphor. In fact, He is testing her faith. Matthew records Jesus' reaction to her reply, "O woman, great is your faith" (Matt. 15:28).

7:28 The woman understood Jesus' test and persistently replied that even during the meal the little dogs consume the children's crumbs that fall from the table.

7:29 Rewarding her persistence, Jesus granted her request. He cast the demons out, although the girl was not in His presence.

7:30 The verb lying indicates the position into which the girl was cast by the demon when it left her.

7:31 Jesus' route to Israel bypassed Galilee itself. Instead Jesus went east into the Decapolis region and then turned south past Mount Hermon until He reached the Sea of Galilee.

7:32–35 The healing of this deaf man (who also had a speech impediment) is one of the two miracles recorded by Mark only. (The other is the healing of the blind man recorded in 8:22–26.) Those who have never heard also frequently have problems pronouncing words.

7:34 Ephphatha is an Aramaic word. Mark provides an interpretation for his largely non-Jewish audience.

7:36 Jesus' command to tell no one, though unheeded, was meant to allow Him to move freely in the area. He knew that curiosity seekers could hamper His ministry.

7:37 the deaf … hear and the mute … speak: Signs that God's kingdom had come (Is. 35:5, 6).

8:1–30 Having concluded one narrative section with the approval voiced by the crowd, Mark will reach a climax when he ends this section with Peter's confession.

8:1–5 Jesus desired to feed the multitude, but His disciples questioned how. They had witnessed the feeding of the five thousand a few days earlier but could not imagine Jesus duplicating this miracle. They were slow to comprehend who Jesus really was.

8:6, 7 The verb tenses for the words translated took, gave thanks, and broke specify action at a fixed moment in the past. Yet the verb translated gave is in the imperfect tense, which shows a continuing action. Thus, we may conclude that the miracle of multiplication was a continuing process that took place, at least initially, in Jesus' hands.

8:8 The seven large baskets contained leftovers—one basket from each original loaf. This was both a memorable witness to the miracle as well as a hint not to waste food. These baskets were much larger than the twelve small personal baskets mentioned in 6:43. It was this kind of larger basket that was used to lower Paul over the wall of Damascus (Acts 9:25).

8:9 The number four thousand does not specify men as with the five thousand, so the size of the gathering could have been significantly smaller. Since there are those who attempt to merge the two accounts into one event, the significant differences should be noted: the number of people fed, the place, the time, the numbers of fish, loaves, and baskets.

8:10 Apparently Dalmanutha and Magdala (Matt. 15:39) are different names for the same region. Both are mentioned only once in the NT. Dalmanutha was probably on the western side of the Sea of Galilee, about three miles north of modern Tiberias and about five miles southwest of Capernaum.

8:11, 12 The Pharisees' testing of Jesus was crafty and devious. Obviously these men did not heed the many signs and wonders that Jesus had already performed. John 20:30, 31 indicates that the signs were meant to produce faith. It is doubtful that the Pharisees would have changed their minds even if they had seen another miracle.

8:13, 14 Having fed the four thousand on the western side of the lake, Jesus led His disciples by boat to the other side, near Bethsaida (v. 22).

8:15 Jesus repeatedly commanded His disciples to beware of the leaven, the growing corruption of the Pharisees and of Herod Antipas which was spreading throughout Israel.

8:16–21 The disciples continued to show a lack of spiritual discernment despite the miracles they had witnessed. Jesus' rebuke was intended to make them recall what God had done for them. Like the apostles, we have short memories of God's provisions; we need to trust Him for our "daily bread."

8:22–26 Jesus' healing of the blind man in stages paralleled the disciples' imperfect perception of Jesus. Like the man, they were no longer blind, but they could not see clearly either. Only the Holy Spirit could clear their vision.

8:27 Caesarea Philippi is about twenty-five miles north of Bethsaida and the Sea of Galilee. It stands on the southern edge of Mount Hermon and is today called Banias. One of the sources of the Jordan River springs forth from under a large rocky cliff that rises a hundred or more feet above the village. Many idols were carved into the rock facade. The contrast between Jesus Christ and these local gods was striking—a perfect place for Christ to ask the question of v. 29. The name Philippi distinguishes this town from Caesarea by the sea.

8:28 The disciples' answers to Jesus' question about His identity restate popular misconceptions. They recall the statements made by Herod and others in 6:14, 15.

8:29 Jesus then emphatically asks His disciples for their understanding. The word you is prominent in Jesus' question. Peter answers for the group when he says, "You are the Christ." Jesus wants His disciples to grasp firmly His true identity before He reveals to them the necessity of His coming death and resurrection. In Mark's Gospel, only the disciples come to understand who Jesus is. The opposition of the religious leaders and the disciples' dullness is suddenly overshadowed by Peter's wonderful confession.

8:30 Jesus' warning to tell no one about Him may seem strange. Its explanation lies in the fact that the Jews expected the Messiah to be a political liberator. Jesus' first coming was meant to accomplish another kind of liberation—release from sin. Hence Jesus was careful not to use the name Messiah publicly, for it was misunderstood by the Jewish people, their leaders, and the Roman authorities.

8:31 This is the first of several clear predictions Jesus makes about His coming death and resurrection (9:31; 10:33, 34). He began to teach them signals this new disclosure of His death, burial, and resurrection to His apostles. The Son of Man is a title that only Jesus used of Himself. With it He defined His ministry in terms of initial suffering, followed by later glory, and avoided the use of titles such as Messiah which held other meanings for the Jewish mind. The elders and chief priests, former high priests, and scribes made up the Jewish ruling council, the Sanhedrin. These men would condemn Jesus to death (for the fulfillment of Jesus' prediction, see 14:53, 64).

8:32 Jesus spoke … openly, that is plainly, not in parables. Peter understood clearly Jesus' prediction of death and could not accept or understand it, and so he began to rebuke Him.

8:33 Peter's thoughts, born of fear and concern, were probably well-intended, but they did not take in God's eternal purposes and plan. Peter was not indwelt by Satan, but Satan had certainly suggested his thoughts. If Peter had his way, Jesus' mission would not have been accomplished.

8:34 Deny himself does not mean to hate himself or to go without one or more things, but to give full control of his life to Christ. take up his cross: The person who carried a cross was on the way to execution. Thus, it is a graphic picture of one who is dead to his own will. He is ready to accept whatever costs are involved in a life of complete Christian commitment. Jesus' call for discipleship is addressed to whoever desires to come after me. It is restricted only by one's unwillingness to come. In Jesus' day, when one would take up his cross it would be primarily a public act, not a private decision.

8:35, 36 To preserve one's life eternally, one must surrender earthly possessions and relationships held so dearly (Matt. 16:24–27). Apparent earthly loss means eternal gain, whereas apparent earthly gain may be translated into eternal loss (Matt. 19:21). We are investing resources all the time. The dividends will be determined by the wisdom of the investment.

8:37 The worth of a single life (Gk. psyche) is of great consequence in the kingdom reign of Christ (Matt. 16:27). It is interesting that the same Greek word is used in vv. 35–38 but is usually translated "life" in v. 35 but "soul" in vv. 36, 37. The idea is not a spiritual side of a person lost for eternity but failing to live one's life faithfully for the King of the kingdom.

8:38 When He comes in the glory is the key of this address to the disciples (vv. 34–38). It is the first glimpse of the fulfillment of all history (1 Cor. 15:24–28). Those who will reign with Christ invest their lives in that which will last (v. 35). Those who are willing to confess Him today will be rewarded before the Father in heaven (Matt. 5:10–12; 2 Tim. 2:11–13; Rev. 2:26–28).

9:1 After Jesus predicted His own death, Peter and the other disciples needed reassurance that Jesus would ultimately triumph. His prediction that some of them would see the kingdom of God present with power must have alleviated their fears.

9:2, 3 After six days links Jesus' prediction of v. 1 with the events of vv. 2–8. The high mountain was most likely one of the foothills surrounding Mount Hermon. They probably did not stand on Mount Hermon itself, a snowy peak which rises to 9,232 feet. It is the highest point in all of Palestine. These mountains overlook Caesarea Philippi, where Peterconfession was made (8:27–29). Jesus' transfiguration deeply affected John and Peter, who mention it in their writings (John 1:14; 2 Pet. 1:16–18).

9:4 Elijah is mentioned in Mal. 4:5, 6 in connection with the future coming of Christ. This is why people asked John the Baptist if he were Elijah (John 1:21). Moses was the lawgiver and liberator, while Elijah was the first of the great prophets. Their presence confirmed the reality that Jesus is the Messiah of Peter's confession.

9:5, 6 The synoptic Gospels use three different words for Peter's addressing of Jesus. Rabbi (in Mark), Master (Luke 9:33), and Lord (Matt. 17:4) are separate Greek translations of whatever Hebrew or Aramaic word Peter used to address Jesus on the mount. Mark's emphasis is on Jesus' respected position among the disciples as their leader. Nathanael (John 1:19), Nicodemus (John 3:2), and even Judas (14:45) also used this title of Jesus. Although Peter knew that it was good to be there, he did not understand what was happening. Three tabernacles suggests that he wanted to stay on the mountain. But this experience was to prepare him to carry his cross in the day-to-day world. His answer tended to put Jesus, Moses, and Elijah on the same level.

9:7–10 The voice of God the Father was heard audibly three times during the life of Christ. The other two occasions were at Jesus' baptism (1:11) and during His triumphal entry into Jerusalem (John 12:28).

9:11, 12 This question is based on the words of Mal. 4:5, 6.

9:13 Jesus' comment that Elijah has also come is a reference to John the Baptist. John was not a reincarnation of Elijah, but one who ministered "in the Spirit and power of Elijah" (Luke 1:17) in preparing the way for Christ. They did to him whatever they wished refers to the ruthless way John the Baptist was imprisoned and murdered.

9:14–20 The boy had several problems. The mute spirit was a demon that kept the boy from speaking, but the demon also produced seizures. Verse 20 says the spirit convulsed him.

9:21, 22 if You can: Faith mixed with doubt.

9:23 Believe is a marvelous word—not work, pay, cry, or penance, but believe.

9:24–27 I believe; help my unbelief expresses the fact that even a grain of faith is sufficient, but also that a person's faith needs to grow and mature. One can only receive as much as he or she can believe. Our basic need is not trying harder but believing more.

9:28, 29 Jesus said that prayer and fasting were required to prevail in some difficult instances. Fasting may help focus one's energies on the resources available in our great God.

9:30 He did not want anyone to know of their return because He needed this time alone with His disciples.

9:31, 32 For the second time (8:31), Jesus tells plainly of His coming death and resurrection.

9:33–35 The disciples kept silent, refusing to tell Jesus about their discussion. But Jesus once again challenged their assumptions. He presented them with another paradox—that to be great in God's kingdom, one must be a servant. The example was modeled by Christ Himself.

9:36, 37 Children were given little status in the ancient world. The child here represents all needy people, but especially needy believers. Christ's disciples take a lowly place by ministering to the needs of the lowly. receives Me: This service is accepted as if done to Jesus who made Himself lowest of all.

9:39–40 Jesus is not endorsing all who claim to follow Him. Rather, this statement was meant to remind the disciples that God's work was not necessarily restricted to their small group.

9:41 a cup of water: The most trivial service given to encourage a Christian receives God's blessing. It is not the size of the task, but loving faithfulness that counts with God.

9:42 Jesus uses hyperbole, exaggeration for an effect, to state the seriousness of causing spiritual injury to others. A millstone is an extremely heavy circular stone, three to four feet across and about a foot thick, used to grind grain into meal.

9:43 Cut it off should be taken figuratively; it means to take whatever drastic action is necessary to avoid sin. The imagery of hell (frequently called gehenna) refers to a garbage dump outside the walls of Jerusalem. Jesus' hearers were familiar with the smoldering fires that always burned there. Obedience and self-control (v. 41, 47) are necessary to overcome sin. The longing of the disciples for greatness (vv. 33–37) needed to be reshaped according to God's purposes.

9:44–48 Many modern versions omit vv. 44 and 46, believing the phrase which appears in v. 48 was wrongly inserted in those two places. It could be that they are repeated. It seems that Jesus is emphasizing His point by a threefold repetition, a characteristic typical of Hebrew poetic style. This is similar to the sevenfold repetition of "he who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches" (Rev. 2—3).

9:49 The word for shows that Mark intended his readers to apply the preceding verses to their own lives. Everyone will be seasoned with fire may refer to the trials and judgments that all will face—believers with trials that purify faith, unbelievers with the eternal fire of God's judgment.

9:50 Have peace with one another aptly ends Jesus' explanation of servanthood begun in v. 35.

10:1 Jesus, now on His final journey to Jerusalem, comes to Capernaum (9:33). From His Galilean ministry He will head south to Judea and even into Perea on the eastern side of the Jordan River.

Divorce in New Testament Times

In the first century, Jewish men were allowed to divorce their wives for many different reasons (Mark 10:2). Depending on which interpretation of the Torah one followed, a man could even send his wife away if she burned a meal.

By contrast, women were far more restricted in their grounds for divorce. One of the few had to do with her husband's occupation. If he were a copper smelter, tanner, or dung collector, she could get a divorce, even if she knew before she married what his trade was, on the grounds that she couldn't have known how awful the smell would be.

10:2 The Pharisees' question about divorce was a trap. Perhaps they hoped He would contradict Moses (Deut. 24:1–4) or offend Herod Antipas as John the Baptist had (6:18). The only possibility for divorce under Jewish law was for a man to divorce his wife.

10:3, 4 A certificate of divorce was a document signed before witnesses. Its intent was to limit frivolous divorces. In Jesus' day, the interpretation of this custom varied widely. The disciples of Hillel allowed divorce for almost any reason, but the followers of Shammai permitted divorce only for sexual impurity.

10:5, 6 Jesus declares that divorce was a concession to the hardness of your heart and then turns the argument to God's original intentions for marriage as seen in Gen. 2:21–25. God's design of male and female shows that He held each to be equal in value and worth, but that they fulfilled a different function and role in His design.

10:7, 8 A man is to leave his parents, cleave to his wife, then weave a life of beauty with her. Jesus quotes almost verbatim from the Septuagint text of Gen. 2:24. The one flesh is a bond created sexually which encompasses the totality of man and woman, and this bond is comparable to that of a blood relationship.

10:9 Jesus indicates that God's original purpose in marriage is not to be broken by human beings. No exceptions are given. The exception in Matt. 19:9 may be accounted for by the Jewishness of that Gospel (compare Rev. 18).

10:10, 11 Whoever divorces his wife: Mark includes no exception to Christ's prohibition of divorce, nor is any exception listed in Luke 16:18; Rom. 7:1, 2; 1 Cor. 7:10, 11. Compare Matt. 5:32; 19:9, for the Jewish exception to this rule.

10:12 In Jewish society, it was not possible for a woman to divorce her husband, but Mark is presenting Jesus' words in a way his Roman audience would understand.

IN CONTEXT

The Friend of Children

In Jesus' day it was common for mothers to ask famous rabbis to bless their children. With Jesus, however, they sought more than a blessing; they wanted the touch of this rabbi (Mark 10:13). No doubt the power of His touch had become well known. Mark did not explain why the disciples tried to keep the children away. Perhaps they viewed the little ones as ritually unclean, or, like most of society, unworthy of an important man's attention. But Jesus rebuked the disciples and invited the children into His arms (10:16). The way He spoke to them and embraced them must have shocked those who stood by. Such tenderness and respect were rarely given children in that society.

10:13, 14 He was greatly displeased expresses the emotion of a single verb (Gk. aganakteo) used in the NT only in the synoptic Gospels. Jesus felt emotional pain like all human beings do, but even then He expressed Himself in a controlled fashion. The term little children (Gk. paidia) includes infants to those at least age twelve. Jairus' daughter, who was twelve years old, is referred to by this same word (5:39).

10:15 Receive the kingdom indicates the continuing thrust of Jesus' message as He prepares His disciples for reigning in the coming kingdom. Children exhibit sincerity, eagerness, a trusting attitude, and total dependence on their parents. Thus, childlikeness is a fitting comparison for the qualities a disciple should have. Adults can become worldly wise, self-sufficient, and skeptical of religion and various plans for salvation. Heart attitude is basic to leadership in the kingdom.

10:16 Only Mark notes that Jesus blessed the children. Mark uses a compound verb (Gk. kateulogei) that appears only here in the NT. It signifies Jesus' continuously tender but fervent blessing. Jesus' concern is not limited to adults only, but extends to little boys and girls as well.

10:17 In addressing Jesus as Good Teacher, the rich young ruler (Matt. 19:22; Luke 18:18) meant no more than to issue a respectful formal greeting to a religious teacher.

10:18 The reply that no one is good but One, that is, God, can be construed as a claim to deity, which Jesus asks the young ruler to recognize.

10:19 Jesus recounts the seventh, sixth, eighth, ninth, and fifth commandments with the phrase do not defraud inserted just before the fifth commandment. All of these commands concern the fair and ethical treatment of other people (Ex. 20:12–17).

10:20 By his answer the man admits that something more than keeping the letter of the law is necessary for eternal life. Matthew remembered the young man asking Jesus, “What do I still lack?” (Matt. 19:20).

“One Thing You Lack”

He was young, well mannered, well educated, and well-off. He was sincere, honest, and above reproach. Maybe he also had an engaging personality and a winsome smile. Certainly Jesus found him likable; He even tried to recruit him (Mark 10:21). He was the man who had everything—except eternal life. And he could have had that, too. All he had to do was get rid of his money and follow Jesus.

But it wasn’t to be. Elsewhere Jesus had said that no one can serve both God and money (Matt. 6:24). Here was living proof of that principle. In coming to Jesus, the rich young ruler came to a fork in the road. He had to choose which one he would serve—money or Jesus. Apparently he chose money.

Jesus never condemned people for being rich. Nor does Scripture condemn the possession or the accumulation of money. But Jesus warned people about what He called “the deceitfulness of riches” (Mark 4:19). He understood the powerful but ultimately fatal attraction of money as a substitute for God.

Jesus perceived that tendency in the rich young ruler. The man was placing far too much value on his wealth. So Jesus told him to give it away, to free himself from its entanglements. It’s worth noting that Jesus did not give that same advice to every other rich person He encountered. But it was a requirement for this young ruler.

There are many rich young rulers today—people who have or are well on their way to having relatively sizable assets. Some are Christians and some are not. But sooner or later they all must answer the question that this man asked Jesus: “What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?” (10:17).

10:21 Jesus is not teaching salvation by works, i.e., by giving money to the poor. He is pointing out the need to admit and deal with self-righteousness and self-dependence so that trust may be transferred entirely to Christ. By driving the man to the ultimate conclusion of his premise—what shall I do (v. 17)—Jesus is showing him its impossibility and his need for utter dependence on Christ.

10:22 This was too much; he went away sorrowful. Does this story teach that salvation is merited by good works? One must remember that prior to the acceptance of the gospel a man needs to recognize his need. Jesus was aware of the man's self-righteous attitude, trusting in his observance of rules. Therefore, his need was for Christ to point out one thing you lack (v. 21). Men must be cognizant of their sin and guilt before they can be ready for "good news."

10:23, 24 Those who have riches frequently also are those who trust in riches, a dangerous condition for one seeking spiritual life.

10:25–27 This comparison of a camel going through a needle is a literal one (Matt. 19:24). In human terms, it is not just difficult, but totally impossible, for a rich man to be saved. But it is also impossible for anyone at all to be saved apart from God's grace and power. God provides the means of salvation, enlightens the sinner's understanding, and regenerates the believing soul.

10:28 Peter expressed what must have been in the mind of each disciple. They had given up a lot to follow Jesus even if the rich young, ruler did not. "What will we get in return?" they asked.

10:29 The one who has left all these things has not necessarily renounced them but has certainly reordered his priorities (Matt. 19:29). Peter still had his wife some twenty-five years later, as did the other apostles and Jesus' own brothers (1 Cor. 9:5). Many times, however, they made heavy sacrifices for the sake of Christ and the gospel. In so doing, they were being true followers of the One who left His heavenly glory and took upon Himself servanthood, suffering, and death (Phil. 2:6-11).

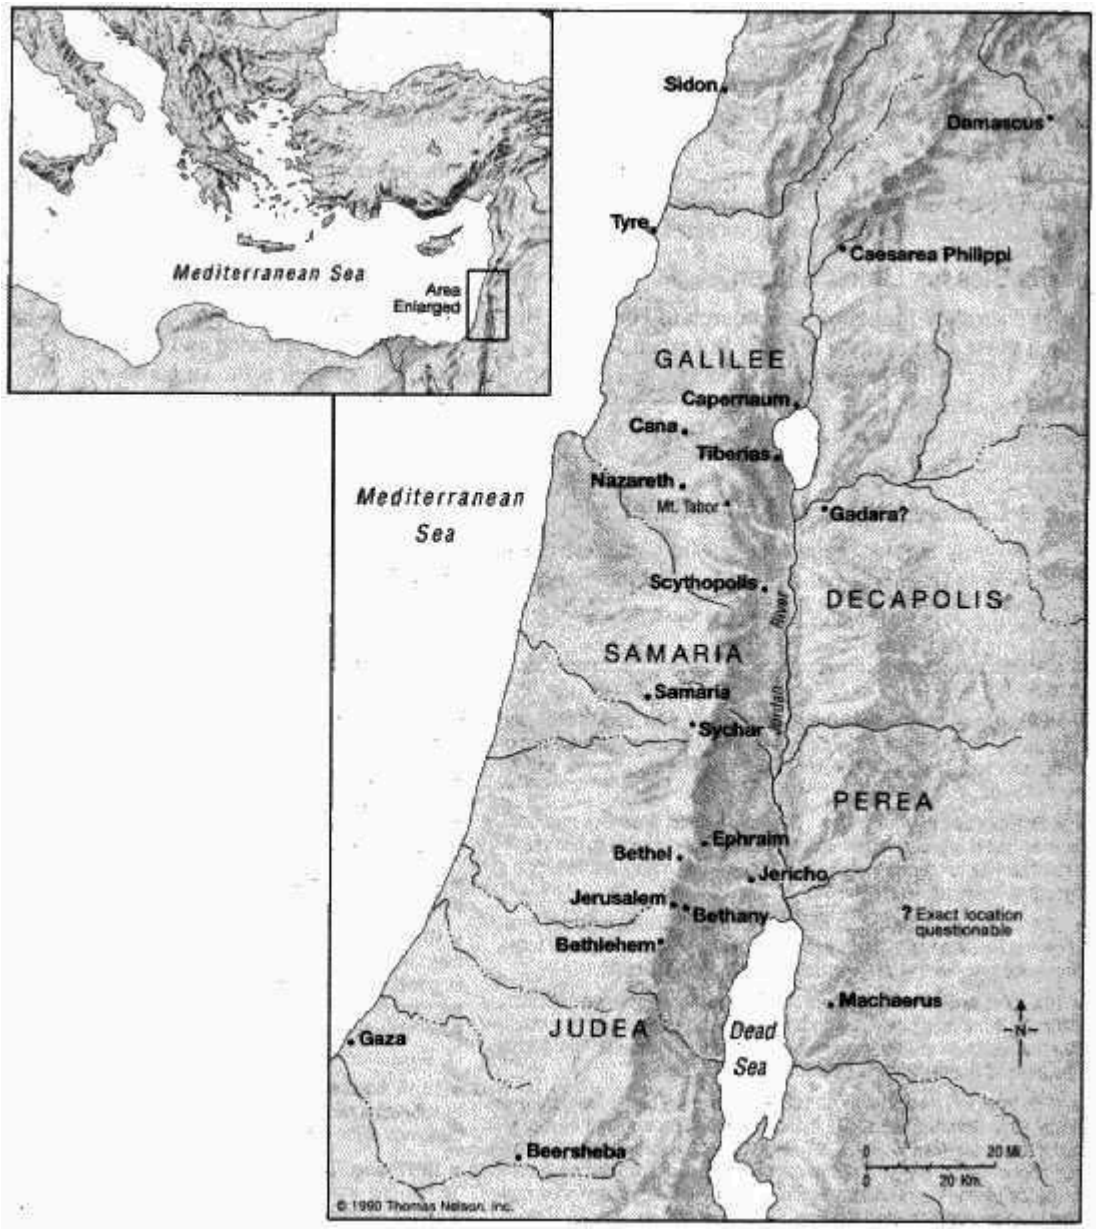
10:30 Spiritual rewards await those who follow Christ in this time, meaning during this age between Christ's first and second comings. Mark alone mentions that persecutions will follow as well—a point his Roman readers may have already known. After Christ's return, in the age to come, the incomparable reward will be eternal life, which is not simply extent of life but quality of life.

10:31 Human standards for reward will be overturned. Humility and servanthood lead to greatness in God's kingdom, not such worldly priorities as wealth, social standing, nobility, birth, or personal favoritism. Matthew follows this saying with an illustrative parable (Matt. 20:1–16).

10:32–34 Jesus revealed for the third time His imminent death and resurrection as the disciples walked the road toward Jerusalem for Passover

(see 8:31; 9:31 for His previous teaching on this subject). Since Jerusalem is in the hill country, one always goes up to Jerusalem as he approaches it (Acts 11:2; 21:4; 25:1), and down as he leaves it (3:22).

10:35 Matthew 20:20 says it was the mother of James and John who sought Jesus, but it is likely that the sons themselves encouraged her to do it.



The Gospel in a Small Corner

In a small corner of the Mediterranean world, Jesus announced the gospel of the kingdom. This announcement came in the midst of political uproar as the armies and politicians of Rome jockeyed for position in these recently annexed territories of Judea and Galilee. Events in this part of the world were of interest to the imperial city of Rome, especially a claim by anyone to be the king of the Jews. And Jews living in the far corners of the Roman Empire certainly followed the news of their homeland. Though only a small corner, Judea and Galilee held a significance greater than their size.

10:36, 37 To be seated at a king's right hand was to take the position of most prominence; the person seated at the left hand ranked just below that (Luke 22:24–30). Jesus was emphasizing servanthood while the apostles were practicing public and private one-upmanship. Jesus had to remind the disciples again about the price of greatness in God's kingdom. As they journeyed toward Jerusalem, "they thought the kingdom of God would appear immediately" (Luke 19:11), so they may have wanted to secure their power and authority as soon as possible.

10:38 To drink the cup and be baptized are references to the suffering and death that awaited Jesus (14:36). Jesus wanted His disciples to understand the mocking, scourging, beating, and torture He would have to endure.

10:39, 40 Jesus agreed with their response, though they had not yet understood the cost of their commitment. Although not suffering the same level of spiritual agony that Jesus did, James would soon be executed by Herod Agrippa I in A.D. 44 (Acts 12:1, 2). John was the last apostle to die, being exiled for a while on the island of Patmos (Rev. 1:9). He was persecuted greatly and had to witness the deaths of more Christians than probably any of the other apostles.

10:41 The ten disciples who had not been part of the private discussion seeking special favors were greatly displeased because they had similar ambitions.

10:42–44 The point here is not the fact that Gentile rulers lord it over them, but the very idea that they seek to exercise authority. Jesus wants each of His followers to be a servant—one who as an attendant waits on others. The word slave signifies subjection, but not necessarily bondage.

10:45 This verse is the dividing point of the book of Mark. The first section of the book has emphasized His servanthood, whereas the second section will emphasize His coming death. Having predicted His death three times, Jesus now explains its purpose. This is a rare insight afforded in the Synoptic Gospels which emphasize the training of the Twelve and forms the seed for further explanation offered in the Epistles. Jesus' life as a ransom (Gk. lutron) means it is the price paid to free slaves, hostages or others. It is found only here and in Matt. 20:28 in the NT, although used frequently in extra-biblical writings. Christ's life is given for (Gk. anti) others, in place of others, indicating the substitutionary nature of His death. The word many simply contrasts the idea of one for many others and is not a limitation. Certainly Christ died for all (2 Cor. 5:14; 1 Tim. 2:6; 1 John 2:2).

10:46 They came to Jericho: The site of Jericho in the NT period is removed from the ancient tell called Jericho by about a mile. Mark notes that after crossing the Jordan River to the east, this healing occurs as Jesus went out of Jericho. Luke says it was "as He was coming near Jericho" (Luke 18:35). There were several different Jerichos in the vicinity at that time. There was an old Jericho as well as a new Jericho built by Herod the Great as a winter home in the mild climate of the below-sea-level Jordan Valley. Jesus may have been leaving the one site and nearing the other. Bartimaeus is an Aramaic name translated by Mark. The name means son of Timaeus. Matthew mentions two beggars (Matt. 20:30), but Mark concentrates on only one.

10:47, 48 Son of David is a messianic title. Mark shows us the irony of a blind man who had spiritual insight, while many who could see—including the religious leaders—were spiritually blind.

10:49, 50 Mark's account has all the graphic details of an eyewitness account—Jesus stood still; then Bartimaeus was suddenly throwing aside his garment to rise and meet Jesus. Mark also notes the changed attitude of the crowd—they began by deriding Bartimaeus but later encouraged him.

10:51 Rabboni is a very tender Aramaic form of address meaning "master" or "teacher" (John 20:16).

10:52 We know that Bartimaeus followed Jesus for at least a short time on the road. He went along with the surging crowd at Jericho. Did he, however, become a disciple of note? Mark's mention of his name may indicate that he was known in the early church.

11:1—15:47 More than one-third of Mark's narrative takes place during a seven-day period—the Passover week when Jesus is finally put to death. Mark's Gospel has been called a Passion story with a long introduction. His emphasis on the Passion Week is appropriate. Without this week, Jesus would not have fulfilled His purpose for coming to the earth.

11:1 Bethphage and Bethany are just east of the Mount of Olives, about two miles from the gates of Jerusalem. Lazarus was raised to life at Bethany (John 12:1).

11:2–7 Christ's deity is evident in this passage. You will find demonstrates His omniscience. It is possible for a donkey on which no one has sat to be very calm and accommodating, but Jesus is also master of all nature and all creatures. Jesus sat on it without incident.

11:8–11 This was the triumphal entry on Palm Sunday. The crowd recognized Jesus' lordship by repeating a messianic psalm (Ps. 118:25, 26). Jesus retired to Bethany each night, perhaps staying in a friend's home (maybe Lazarus's or Simon's, 14:3). But in view of the fact that Jesus appears to have had no breakfast the next day (v. 12), He and the twelve may have camped outside this night.

IN COMPARISON

Events of Holy Week

The Gospel writers devoted much of their material to the events leading up to the crucifixion of Jesus. The final week of His earthly ministry began with the triumphal entry into Jerusalem and the "Hosannas" from the crowd that changed to cries of "Crucify Him" before the week was over. Jesus apparently spent most of the week teaching in the temple area during the day. His evenings were spent in the home of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus in Bethany. Significant events during this week included the plot of the Sanhedrin, Jesus' betrayal and arrest, the trials of Jesus, His journey to Golgotha down the Jerusalem street known today as the Via Dolorosa ("Way of Suffering"), and the Resurrection. After His resurrection, Jesus ministered another forty days before His ascension.

Day	Event	Biblical Reference
Sunday	The triumphal entry into Jerusalem	Mark 11:1–11
Monday	Cleanses the temple in Jerusalem	Mark 11:15–19
Tuesday	The Sanhedrin challenges Jesus' authority Jesus foretells the destruction of Jerusalem and His return Mary anoints Jesus at Bethany Judas bargains with the Jewish rulers to betray Jesus	Luke 20:1–8 Matt. 24: 25 John 12:2–8 Luke 22:3–6
Thursday	Jesus eats the Passover meal with His disciples and institutes the Memorial Supper Jesus prays in Gethsemane for His disciples	John 13:1–30; Mark 14:22–26 John 17

Sunday	Jesus is raised from the dead	Luke 24:1–9

11:12 The next day would be Monday, and Mark devotes only eight verses to this day. Tuesday begins with v. 20, but the events of Tuesday and Wednesday are combined into one long section that ends at 13:37. A new chronological reference begins with 14:1, “after two days.” Jesus was hungry. This certainly indicates Jesus’ humanity: no breakfast, and apparently not a large meal the evening before. Notice how these evidences of His full and complete humanity follow the evidences of His undiminished deity (vv. 2-10).

11:13, 14 Mark informs his readers that it was not the season for figs. Passover always comes in March or April, and fig season is not until May or June. However, fig trees generally produce a number of buds in March, leaves in April, and ripe fruit later on. Jesus was looking for the edible buds, the lack of which indicated that the tree would be fruitless that year.

11:15–18 By cleansing the temple, Jesus clearly claimed authority equal to God who first filled it with His glory (2 Chr. 5:13, 14).

11:15, 16 bought … sold: Animals considered clean for sacrifice. money changers: The temple had its own currency. Worshipers were required to exchange other currency for these coins when making temple gifts. This was Jesus' second time to set things straight in the temple. Previously, near the beginning of His ministry, He performed the same duty (John 2:13-21). Being a carpenter (compare 6:3) built Jesus' strength and He had the boldness to oppose physically those who so desecrated God's house. Jesus must have been a fine picture of mature manhood.

11:17 Jesus quoted from the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah (Is. 56:7; Jer. 7:11) to make His point about the despicable conduct of those who bought and sold in the temple. A den of thieves refers to the practice of cheating people, both Israelites and those of other nations, either through a crooked exchange of money or by selling inferior products.

11:18 The suspense of Mark's drama increases with the contrasting reactions to Christ. The religious leaders sought to destroy Him by plotting His death, while the people had just welcomed Him with a triumphal procession and were astonished at His teaching.

11:19, 20 Mark clearly indicates the transition from evening (Monday) to the morning (Tuesday).

11:21 Why was the fig tree both cursed and withered? The passage emphasizes the power of true faith. Some have suggested that the fig tree represented Israel, which bore no fruit and would soon face the judgment of God.

11:22, 23 The illustration of casting an enormous mountain into the sea is an extreme example of the absolutely impossible. That is the point. Having faith in God can accomplish the impossible. Mark had previously emphasized Jesus' insistence on simply believing (9:23, 24).

11:24 The key to prayer is to believe. However, other conditions are to ask for things that are "according to His will" (1 John 5:14), and to ask on the merits of Christ's name (John 15:16). That which makes believing powerful is the object of the belief—truth.

11:25, 26 To forgive is to release it to God, for all sin is ultimately against God and He alone has the right of vengeance (Rom. 12:19). The believer's experience of the Father's forgiveness is dependent on his or her willingness to forgive.

11:27, 28 The religious leaders (v. 27), who were now plotting Jesus' death (v. 18), asked Jesus about the (1) nature and (2) source of His authority, perhaps because He had not openly declared that He was the Messiah. These things refer to the authority Jesus used in cleaning out the temple (vv. 15–17).

11:29, 30 The intent of Jesus' question was to expose once again the insincerity of His detractors. The baptism of John refers to the authority of John's baptism. Was it from heaven—that is, ordained by God and worthy of obedience? Or was it merely from men—that is, of human contrivance and void of any spiritual authority and reality?

11:31, 32 They reasoned and debated the question and quickly discovered the answer. John's baptism was from heaven. Jesus' authority came from there as well.

11:33 We do not know was a dishonest reply, but perhaps the only one possible for men who wished only to save their reputations.

12:1 He began to speak to them in parables. Mark records only one parable here, but Matthew presents an additional one (Matt. 22:1–14). This parable represents God as carefully preparing the nation of Israel (a vineyard) and leaving it in the care of others (the vinedressers; Is. 5:1–7). Great care was taken to fence the vineyard, to prepare a wine vat for crushing the grapes, and to build a tower in order to keep watch and protect the property from thieves.

12:2–5 The servants, including the many others who were sent, represent the prophets who had gone before Jesus, perhaps culminating with John the Baptist, whose baptism Jesus had just mentioned (11:30).

12:6 Parables usually get across a significant truth, but the details are not meant to correspond exactly with particular spiritual realities. In this parable, the owner of the vineyard represents God, but God Himself was never so mistaken as to assume they would respect His Son. God is omniscient, whereas the vineyard owner in the parable is not. In addition, few owners would send a continuous stream of servants to their deaths when greater forces were available. This story illustrates the immense patience God had with Israel.

12:7–9 Jesus answered His own rhetorical question. The destruction of the vinedressers, the Israelites who rejected the Son of God, took place in A.D. 70 when the Romans smashed a revolt in Jerusalem and destroyed the temple. Giving the vineyards to others refers to the importance the Gentiles would assume in the growth of Christianity.

12:10, 11 Jesus became the chief cornerstone when God raised Him from the dead. His life, death, and resurrection are key to God's plan of salvation.

12:12 The chief priests, scribes, and elders sought to lay hands on Him, to arrest Jesus, and to carry out their plot to destroy Him (11:18). Only as the final points of the parable were made did these evil men realize that Jesus had spoken the parable against them. Parables gain a hearing and disguise the truth. Jesus' foes were the brunt of the story before they realized it.

12:13 The Herodians are mentioned in the NT three times, all in conjunction with the Pharisees. The Herodians wanted to kill Jesus because He threatened their authority (3:16; Matt. 22:16). Their attempt to catch Him in His words was their hope that Jesus would say something that could be grounds for His arrest.

12:14 You … care about no one was intended as a compliment. The teachers recognized that Jesus was partial to no one. The question, however, was a lose-lose proposition: a yes answer would alienate Jews who opposed Rome, while a no answer could be taken as treason against the state. The ruling emperor from A.D. 14 to 37 was Caesar Tiberius (Luke 3:1), the adopted son of Caesar Augustus (Luke 2:1). Here Mark uses a Latin word for taxes in order to communicate clearly to his Roman readers.

12:15 A denarius was worth an entire day's wages.

12:16 The image and inscription on the coin was Caesar's. His head faces to the right with the words TI CAESAR DIVI on the right and the words AUG AUGUSTUS continuing on the left side. These words mean "Tiberius Caesar, Son of the Divine Augustus." On the reverse side appear the words PONTIFEX MAXIMUS, meaning "High Priest."

12:17 The coin they showed Jesus contained the answer to their question. We pay taxes in support of the peace, protection, and services the government renders, but this does not mean we support every action taken by government. God's sovereignty overrules the emperor's authority.

12:18 The Sadducees were an elite group of religious leaders who denied the existence of angels, the immortality of the soul, and the Resurrection. They rejected the oral traditions and accepted only the validity of the Pentateuch, the first five books of the OT. But since resurrection is clearly taught in Job 19:26, Ps. 16:10, and Dan. 12:2, they must have spiritualized this teaching. They also seemed to place more authority in the Law of Moses than in other OT writings.

12:19–22 The custom of marrying the widow of one's brother was supported by Deut. 25:5, 6, but it was not absolutely binding (Deut. 25:7–10).

12:23 The purpose of this story was to discredit the doctrine of resurrection.

12:24 Two categories support the resurrection—the Scriptures and God's power. The Sadducees undoubtedly did know the Scriptures, but lacked spiritual insight to understand God's purposes.

12:25 Angels neither marry nor procreate. Luke 20:36 applies these restrictions to all angels without distinction.

12:26, 27 Jesus quotes from the Law—the Book of Exodus—to make His point. God said I am the God of the three patriarchs mentioned, not "I was their God, but now they are dead." He still is their God because they are still alive. Their souls not only live after death, but their bodies will be raised anew as well.

12:28–34 The next test came almost immediately. Like the Passover lamb, Jesus was tested for several days to see if He had any imperfections (Ex. 12:5, 6).

12:29 The Hear, O Israel verse of Deut. 6:4 is commonly called the Shema (from a Hebrew word meaning "to hear") and is repeated by Jews the world over as expressing the essence of their faith in God.

12:30, 31 The first commandment summarizes the first four of the Ten Commandments. The second is the essence of commandments five through ten, which relate to the treatment of other people. Some interpreters have tried to find a third commandment—"love yourself." But that is not a command; rather, it is a given. We do love ourselves. That's why we run for the first-aid kit when we cut ourselves.

12:32, 33 People who professed to worship God brought offerings and sacrifices. But it is not professing to worship God that is important, but rather a love for God which leads to obedience and love for others. Such love makes our worship acceptable to Him.

12:34 Because of this scribe's humility and understanding of God's true purpose, he was not far from accepting Jesus as the Christ.

12:35 In the temple does not refer to the sanctuary (Gk. naos) itself, where only the priests were allowed to minister. The temple environs (Gk. hieron) included a number of porticos and courts. One was designated especially for women (and included the treasury, 12:41), another for men. Gentiles could view the temple from an outer area. Actually, even Jesus could not enter the naos because He was not an Aaronic priest. He only entered the hieron. Yet, when Scripture refers to us as the temple of God, it uses naos (1 Cor. 3:16; 6:19; Eph. 2:21).

12:36, 37 David himself said by the Holy Spirit is Jesus' clear affirmation of the doctrine of inspiration (2 Tim. 3:16; 2 Pet. 1:21). Jesus' argument about the Messiah being Lord as well as Son showed that the Messiah, even though a descendant of David, would be superior to him. In fact, He would be His Lord. He was both man and God at the same time.

12:38–40 The scribes of Jesus' day were teachers of the law, often dependent on people's gifts for their support. Some, however, overstepped the bounds of humility, piety, and dignity by flaunting their position of respect and trust. They sought the glory that belonged to God and even took advantage of widows who helped feed and support them.

12:42 By contrast, the widow worshiped God out of deep humility and genuine devotion. Mark notes for his Roman readers that her two mites make a quadrans, a Roman monetary unit mentioned by Mark and Matthew (Matt. 5:26) only once. It was worth just a few cents.

Quality, Not Quantity

What did Jesus mean when He said that the widow had put more money into the treasury than anyone else (Mark 12:43)? Clearly, He was indicating that economic value is relative. The widow's contribution would have been nothing but spare change to the rich who preceded her. But to her, two mites represented enormous value. It was "all that she had, her whole livelihood" (12:44, emphasis added). Replacing it would be difficult, if not impossible; as a poor widow, she was probably unemployable. Giving it to God meant that she could not use it to buy her next crust of bread.

But Jesus indicated that God placed moral rather than economic value on her tiny offering. Her gift showed that she was giving herself entirely to God and trusting in Him to meet her needs. Her use of money disclosed the moral and spiritual condition of her heart.

12:43, 44 Jesus' comparison of the percentages contributed by the rich and the poor reminds us that God measures not how much we give, but how much we retain. Those with greater income have an obligation to return a larger percentage of it to God's work.

13:1–37 Jesus continued His last week of ministry in Jerusalem by teaching His apostles about future events. This speech is known as the Olivet Discourse, so named because Jesus sat on the Mount of Olives while speaking (v. 3).

13:1, 2 The disciples' excitement over the temple's tremendous manner of stones and what buildings are a natural reaction to splendid and majestic architecture; these stones weighed several tons each. Descriptions by Josephus (Antiq. 15.11.3–7) show its magnificence. There was nothing like it in all the world. Beautiful white marble stones with gold ornamentation comprised a one-hundred-foot-high structure begun by Herod the Great in 20 B.C. It was later completed by Herod's descendants before A.D. 66. This was surrounded by covered colonnaded walkways, courtyards, and stairways that filled twenty acres of the most prominent landscape in all Jerusalem. It all stood on a hill accentuated by the Tyropean and Kidron valleys. For Jesus to remark seriously that not one stone shall be left upon another was a startling attention getter. This prophecy was fulfilled in A.D. 70 when the Roman general Titus sacked the city. Titus's arch in Rome still stands over the Appian Way entrance to the Forum, where its murals depict Titus's conquest of Jerusalem.

13:3–4 Only Mark, given to detail, mentions the names of the four disciples who questioned Jesus. They want to know about (1) chronology—the time of the fulfillment and (2) circumstances—the sign of the fulfillment. A third question about Jesus' coming is recorded in Matt. 24:3. It is answered in Mark 13:24–37. Their question assumes that the temple's destruction will signal the end of the present age and the inauguration of the Messiah's reign. They wonder how near that event may be.

13:5–12 In general, the circumstances to be encountered will involve religious deception, belligerent nations, earthquakes and famines, religious betrayal, and the spread of the gospel.

13:5–7 The end is the end of the age (Matt. 24:3, 6, 13, 14).

13:8 The beginnings of sorrows is a phrase partaking of the imagery of birth pangs. Like a woman's contractions, these events will hasten the birth of the Messiah's kingdom.

13:9, 10 Four times in this discourse (vv. 5, 9, 23, 33), Jesus warns His disciples to take heed or watch out (Gk. blepete). Jesus' words have a practical application.

13:11–12 The promise that the Holy Spirit will guide one's speech in the hour of trial applies first to the twelve, and only secondarily to others who will experience persecution. But this promise does not assure immunity from trial or even freedom from being put to death.

13:13 He who endures to the end shall be saved is not referring to regeneration or justification but to physical deliverance from the tribulation (vv. 19, 20). The ones who physically endure will be delivered into Christ's (messianic) kingdom reign.

13:14–23 These verses answer the second question voiced by the disciples in v. 4 about "what will be the sign when all these things will be fulfilled?"

13:14 The chief sign for the Jewish remnant at the end of the age will be that of the "abomination of desolation." Daniel warned of this in Dan. 11:31 and 12:11 (compare Dan. 9:27). Standing where it ought not is a reference to the Antichrist's presence in the rebuilt Jewish temple of the tribulation period. There, midway through the tribulation period, he will declare himself to be God and demand the worship of all mankind (2 Thess. 2:3, 4). Let the reader understand points Mark's audience back to the Hebrew origins of this teaching that Jesus gave, namely the Book of Daniel. The command to flee to the mountains is because the supposed protector of the Jews, the Roman prince of Dan. 9:26, 27, now shows his true colors and begins to persecute the Jews of Israel.

13:15–18 To escape death, one must disregard everything but his life. No material object can safely be retrieved or carried away, and even recent motherhood and winter weather may imperil one's life.

13:19 In those days there will be tribulation. The events of Mark 13:14 will signal an unparalleled time of suffering. Matt. 24:31 calls it great (Gk. megale) tribulation, and Jer. 30:7 titles it the time of Jacob's trouble, emphasizing the Jewish nature of that period. This time of trouble cannot be a lengthy general period of history but must coincide with all or part of Daniel's seventieth week (Dan. 9:26, 27; 7:25; 12:7; Rev. 11:2, 3; 12:6, 14; 13:5).

13:20 He shortened the days refers to God's limiting or terminating the duration of this period of great tribulation.

13:21–23 To deceive, if possible, shows that the deception will not accomplish its purpose on the elect. One quality of being saved by God is that of being kept by God (compare 1 Pet. 1:3–5).

13:24, 25 But (Gk. alla) points to a marked distinction between the false prophets of v. 22 and the true coming of Christ in v. 26. After that tribulation tells when Jesus will return to set up His millennial kingdom. Great astrological disturbances will accompany Christ's glorious return. One of the four purposes for the sun, moon, and stars mentioned at the time of their creation is for signs (Gen. 1:14). These signs will be fulfilled at that time. Just imagine the universal fireworks that God will use to set the stage for the coming of His majestic Son to reign.

13:26 Jesus refers to Himself as the Son of Man coming in the clouds. This terminology is taken directly from Dan. 7:13, 14. In that passage, the Son of Man, who is obviously deity, receives the kingdom from God the Father. Daniel 7:27 shows the Son of Man sharing His rule with the saints (compare Rev. 2:26, 27). The tribulation martyrs are pictured as those who "lived and reigned with Christ for a thousand years" (Rev. 20:4).

13:27 It appears that the purpose for which Jesus will send His angels is to gather together His elect. This is not the Rapture. The Rapture will involve a sudden and instantaneous transformation of believers into the immediate presence and likeness of Christ (compare 1 Thess. 4:15–17; 1 Cor. 15:51, 52). The need for angel transportation for the elect at the conclusion of the tribulation period is because these believers will still occupy their natural bodies. They will continue to live in the natural state throughout the one thousand-year reign of Christ. Angels will transport them to Christ's inauguration.

13:28–29 Jesus likens the signs of the coming astrological events to the new sprouts of growth and leaves on a fig tree. Both signify something ahead, whether the return of summer or the glorious return of Christ.

13:30 Some scholars have argued that this generation (Gk. genea) refers to Jesus' contemporaries, or to a race or people, such as the Jews who are related racially. See discussion on this at Luke 21:32. A multiple fulfillment may be intended here to incorporate those who see an initial destruction of Jerusalem as well as those Jews living at the time Jesus returns who will see the final fulfillment of all these things. Will by no means is a double negative expressing strong certainty.

13:31 What Jesus foretells here about heaven and earth passing away is also in Is. 65:17, 2 Pet. 3:10, and Rev. 21:1. The new earth will have about seven times as much usable land because the oceans will be gone. Jesus' words, however, unlike this perishing planet, will never (Gk. ou me, a strong double negative) pass away. What a comfort to have words we can count on.

13:32, 33 As One who was fully God and at the same time fully man, Jesus possessed all the attributes of deity, including omnipotence and omniscience. He knew what was in men's hearts (2:8) and He could still the waves (4:39). When Jesus became a man, however, He voluntarily relinquished the independent use of His attributes (compare Phil. 2:5–8). Like a father who tosses the ball ever so easily to his small boy, though he has the ability to reassert his full power, if necessary, to save the boy from running in front of a car. Of course today, glorified in heaven, Jesus now knows the day and hour of His return.

13:34–36 Jesus' parable of the absent master of the house is unique to Mark. The point is that He could return at any time, so all servants must be vigilant and watchful (compare Luke 19:11–27). The Romans divided the night into four watches as expressed in v. 35evening (6 P.M. to 9 P.M.), midnight (9 P.M. to midnight), rooster crowing (midnight to 3 A.M.), and dawn (3 A.M. to 6 A.M.).

14:1–42 In this section Mark portrays the preparations for Jesus' death. The loving anointing at Bethany (vv. 3–9) is placed between the accounts of the treachery of Judas and the chief priests and scribes (vv. 1, 2, 10, 11).

14:1, 2 After two days is the next time designation given since the mention of the events of Tuesday and Wednesday (11:12, 20). If the Crucifixion occurred on Friday, then the events of this chapter took place on Wednesday evening and Thursday. The Passover was celebrated on the fourteenth day of Nisan (March–April), while the Feast of Unleavened Bread followed on the fifteenth through the twenty-first days of Nisan. The Jewish feast of Passover commemorates the time in Egypt when the death angel passed over those homes which had applied the blood over the lintel and on the doorposts (Ex. 12:6–14). The feast of unleavened bread spoke of Israel's haste to leave Egypt so that they had no time to allow bread to rise with leaven (Ex. 12:15–20). The chief priests planned to take Jesus. In the Greek, this verb suggests physically grasping and laying hold of an object. They wanted to arrest Jesus, take Him away, and kill Him. They preferred to do it secretly, away from the crowd. During the feast, the population of Jerusalem would expand greatly as zealous Jews converged on the city in accord with the Law of Moses (Deut. 16:16). Many of Christ's admirers were present too, so the religious leaders wanted to defer the arrest and avoid conflict. Some obviously feared a Roman reprisal if a public arrest of Jesus resulted in a civic disturbance.

14:3 Simon the leper had been healed at some point in Jesus' ministry. Mark records a leper's healing in 1:40–42. Alabaster is a translucent stone still used to make ornamented jewelry boxes and other items of value. Spikenard, a precious perfume imported from India, was made from plants that grow in the high elevations of the Himalayas. This perfume is mentioned in the Song of Solomon (1:12; 4:13, 14). Mark relates that the woman poured it on His head, while John identifies the woman as Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus, and notes that she anointed Jesus' feet and used her hair as a towel (John 12:3).

Worship, Not Waste

What the disciples saw as waste (Mark 14:4–9) the Lord saw as worship. The woman's gift of costly oil was worth about one year's average wages, yet she poured it out, apparently sensing that her days with Jesus were drawing to a close.

This incident raises the issue of how one's material wealth enters into worship. While Jesus was still physically present and available to her, the woman did "what she could" (14:8). She took one of her most valuable possessions and gave it to Jesus in an unusual act of devotion. A waste? Not to the One she honored by it.

Today Jesus is not physically among us. Yet while we are alive, we control a certain measure of the world's resources. So we might ask: What act of worship might we give while we have opportunity? How might we honor the Lord materially?

There are no easy answers. But Jesus offered a clue when He told His disciples that just as the woman had done Him "a good work," so they could do good to the poor at any time (14:6).

14:4, 5 The some who were indignant were Jesus' disciples (Matt. 26:8), but Judas Iscariot, a thief who despised real givers, was their mouthpiece on this occasion (John 12:4–6). A single denarius represented a day's wages for a common laborer, so three hundred denarii was a considerable gift.

14:6, 7 Jesus' statement does not show callousness to the poor (Deut. 15:7–11). His compassion for those overwhelmed by sickness and poverty appears frequently in the Gospels, and He encouraged others to meet their needs (10:21). But He also wanted people to give freely and of their own volition. No one can coerce a gift from another; no one should criticize another's gift; and no one can read the heart of a giver. A giver's motive is known only to God.

14:8 Mary had tremendous spiritual insight when she anointed Jesus. She anointed His body for burial. She, unlike the disciples, understood that Jesus was soon to die.

14:9 The fact that this story is recorded in Matthew, Mark, and John is ample testimony to the fulfillment of this prediction of Jesus.

14:10, 11 Judas Iscariot decided to profit even further from his association with Jesus by betraying Him. The chief priests changed their plans when Judas came knocking at their door.

14:12 The first day of Unleavened Bread was the fifteenth day of Nisan (Lev. 23:6). However, because the feasts of Passover and Unleavened Bread were so closely associated in the minds of many Jews, Mark clarified the precise time for his readers by adding when they killed the Passover lamb. The lamb was killed on the evening of the fourteenth of Nisan (March–April). Here, Mark is speaking of the events of Thursday. The word Passover (Gk. pascha) can signify three different things. (1) In Mark 14:12, to kill the Passover means the Passover lamb, while (2) in the same text to eat the Passover (and in 14:16 to prepare the Passover) refers to the Passover meal. (3) The term may refer to the entire celebration as in Luke 2:41, the Feast of the Passover. Since the Passover meal was to be eaten in Jerusalem (Deut. 16:16, "in the place which He chooses"), the disciples asked Jesus where He wanted that to be.

14:13 Jesus had apparently already made arrangements for a place to eat. To divulge this location in an inconspicuous manner, Jesus sent out two of His disciples, Peter and John (Luke 22:8). It was unusual for a man to be carrying a pitcher of water, since this was normally a woman's task. This man may have been a servant.

14:14, 15 Although the identity of the master of the house is not positively known, there is reason to suspect it may have been Mark's father. The guest room is familiarly described as a large upper room, furnished and prepared. Mark himself may have been the young man of vv. 51, 52. Acts 12:12 indicates that this house was later used as a gathering place for many believers who prayed together. Tradition has it that this was also "the upper room" of Acts 1:13 where over one hundred believers met on Pentecost.

14:16 Although no mention is made of the fact here, Jesus' omniscience must have amazed Peter and John.

14:17, 18 Two memorial meals were observed as they sat (literally, reclined) and ate. First, they ate the regular Passover commemoration meal, during which time Jesus predicted His betrayal by one of the disciples. Second, after Judas had left (John 13:30), Jesus observed the Last Supper, which anticipated the imminent breaking of His body and shedding of His blood. The phrase one of you who eats with Me will betray Me recalls the messianic prophecy of Ps. 41:9.

14:19 In Greek Is it I? is actually a negative question that implies a negative answer. The phrase means "It is not I, is it?"

14:20, 21 Matthew and John both identify the culprit as Judas, even though Mark does not (Matt. 26:25; John 13:26). Woe shows great pain, distress, or calamity that will befall someone. Mark uses the term only here and of women who may be with child when the antichrist is revealed (13:17), which would impede a quick escape to safety. The statement that it would have been good for Judas if he had never been born points to the awful judgment that awaited him. Judas was personally and morally responsible for his actions even though he acted in accordance with what had long been written of Christ.

14:22 Judas left the room after receiving the dipped portion of bread, prior to Jesus' act of breaking additional bread and explaining its significance (John 13:30). The Lord's Supper is a memorial for believers only and should be observed solely by those who are in right relationship with Christ—saved, baptized, and church members in good standing. The phrase this is My body is obviously a metaphor, meaning this bread represents the body of Jesus. It was not His actual body, for He sat whole before them. But it stood for the manner in which His body would be broken for them.

14:23 A single cup was passed around and they all drank from it. The old phrase "drink ye all of it" is not an exhortation to total consumption, but simply a command for all of the disciples to partake "of it," or from it.

14:24 Some interpret this is My blood metaphorically, meaning that the contents of this cup represented Jesus' blood that would be shed for our sins. Others give the statement a more literal interpretation. The sprinkling of blood was required to institute the Mosaic covenant in Ex. 29:12, 16, 20 (Heb. 9:18–22). In the same way, Jesus' blood shed on the cross initiated the new covenant: His blood was shed for many. He died on the cross in the place of many sinners from every nation. He paid the price for all of their sins. All those who believe in Him will receive eternal life.

14:25 Jesus foresees an earthly kingdom of God. He came announcing it (1:14, 15), promised the disciples rulership in it (Matt. 19:28), and will one day receive and administer it with the saints (Dan. 7:13, 14, 27; 2 Tim.

2:11, 12; Rev. 20:4). Jesus even said He would sit down in that kingdom to fellowship with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Matt. 8:11).

14:26 The hymn they sang was no doubt from the Psalms. Frequently Pss. 113—118 were used in connection with the Passover, including "I shall not die, but live, / And declare the works of the LORD" and "The stone which the builders rejected / Has become the chief cornerstone" (Ps. 118:17, 22). Leaving the Upper Room, they crossed the Kidron Valley to the base of the Mount of Olives. Gethsemane (v. 32) is directly across from the Eastern Gate (sometimes called the Golden Gate) of Jerusalem.

14:27 Jesus knew more than just the future which He predicted in this verse in accord with Zech. 13:7. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; Who can know it?" Jesus knows our hearts precisely and fully. The disciples would lose heart, run and hide, and in Peter's case even deny Jesus. The prediction was fulfilled, and the sheep were scattered.

14:28 This saying was repeated by one of the angels at the tomb shortly after Jesus' resurrection (16:7). Nevertheless, the disciples remained in Jerusalem for more than a week before eventually following their risen Shepherd into Galilee (John 20:26; 21:1). Matthew mentions the disciples meeting Jesus at a mountain in Galilee (Matt. 28:16) prior to His ascension at Bethany (Luke 24:50, 51).

14:29 Overconfidence is deadly. Peter did not heed the words of Prov. 16:18, "Pride goes before destruction / And a haughty spirit before a fall." Pride was Satan's downfall, and it can frequently be ours as well. Peter, so emphatic in his denial, soon realized the emptiness of his hasty declaration.

14:30 Only Mark mentions Christ's prediction of Peter's denial occurring before the rooster crows twice. The incident would have remained vivid in Peter's mind when he related the story to Mark. And only Mark records the two crowings of the rooster (14:68, 72).

14:31 Peter's intentions were good, but he could not keep them. And they all said likewise shows how easy it is to go along with the crowd, even in making good decisions, but so hard to keep those commitments. How patient our God is with us! And how careful we need to be in judging people by their fruit.

14:32–42 Sit here while I pray: Prayer consumed much time and energy in Jesus' earthly work. It crowned both the beginning (Luke 3:21) and ending (Luke 24:50, 51) of His public ministry. When necessary, He would take extraordinary measures to ensure privacy in order to pray (6:46; Matt. 14:22, 23; John 6:14, 15). Though the Lord Jesus did praise God (Luke 10:21) and thank the Father (8:6, 7) in His praying, most of His recorded prayers were petitions and intercessions.

14:32 Gethsemane, though famous today, is mentioned by name only twice in the Bible (here and in Matthew). John, however, informs us that Jesus and the disciples "often met there" and that it was a garden (John 18:1, 2). The admonition to sit here was directed to all but Peter, James, and John (14:33).

14:33 Jesus wanted His closest disciples with Him, to support Him with their presence and their prayers. All of us need such an inner circle. We are meant to live in relation to others, not in isolation.

14:34 Exceedingly sorrowful: The crushing realization of having to bear the sin of the world and to lose, even temporarily, the fellowship of God the Father was nearly more than Jesus' soul could bear. His extreme spiritual anguish must have affected His mental, emotional, and physical condition as well.

14:35 Jesus must have prayed for some time. Verse 37 mentions one hour. That was time enough for each of His accompanying disciples to be asleep when He returned. Mark records Jesus' petition that the hour might pass from Him, a reference to the time Jesus would bear the punishment for the sin of the world in His own body, becoming, as it were, sin for all. John uses the expression "the hour" or "His hour" frequently in his Gospel (John 2:4; 7:30; 8:20; 12:23, 27; 13:1; 17:1). Mark uses it only here and in v. 41.

14:36 Abba was what a little child would call his father. Jesus' relationship to His Father was close and tender. In addition to the term hour (v. 35), this cup foreshadows Christ's impending death (10:38). The cup figuratively holds the judgment of God for the sin of the world. The wicked will someday drink of "the cup of His indignation" (Rev. 14:10) and of "the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of the Almighty God" (Rev. 19:15). Jesus had a distinct human will, but he yielded His own will to that of His Father (Phil. 1:2–6).

14:37 Simon: The sleeping disciple is called by the name he had before he became a disciple (1:16). Peter was not exhibiting the characteristics of a rock at this time in his life (3:16).

14:38 Avoiding temptation demands constant vigilance, so much so that Christ included this admonition in the prayer He taught the disciples (Matt. 6:13; Luke 11:4). The dichotomy between Spirit and flesh is real. Our fallen human nature, even after conversion, wars against the work of God.

14:39–42 The three apostles were exhorted to watch and pray several times, and no doubt truly desired to uphold their Lord in His deepest hour of need. Yet physical fatigue overcame spiritual alertness. Their days were packed with activities and duties as ours are. Proper rest, sleep, and nutrition can go a long way toward spiritual living.

14:43—15:47 Mark now describes Jesus' complete rejection by His disciples, the religious leaders, and the people, and His time of separation from the Father.

14:43 Judas came with a great multitude, identified by John as a detachment of troops (John 18:3). It was one-tenth of a Roman legion, or roughly six hundred men. Although the size of such a detachment could vary somewhat, Mark's mention of a multitude points to a sizable crowd.

14:44 A kiss, usually a sign of affection, was now the signal for betrayal. Lead Him away safely is not an expression of concern for Jesus' safety, but rather an indication of how difficult it may have been to seize Jesus. A wonder worker like Jesus might escape unless extra precautions were taken. The fact is they never could have seized Him except that He stated, "The hour has come." We, too, serve the same sovereign God and no one can touch us until God allows it.

IN FOCUS

“rabbi”

(Gk. rabbi) (9:5: 10:51; 11:21; 14:45) Strong’s #4461: In New Testament times, rabbi was not a formal office, but rather a respectful title for a teacher well versed in the Mosaic Law. The title, which derives from a Hebrew word meaning “great,” is often translated “my master.” Rabboni, an Aramaic form of this word, expresses affectionate respect. Both the disciples and teachers of the law honored Jesus with this title.

14:45 Mark’s characteristic word, immediately (Gk. euthus), is used to describe Judas’s haste to entrap Jesus.

14:46, 47 Only two of Jesus’ disciples had swords that evening (Luke 22:38) and John tells us that Peter carried one of them (John 18:10, 26). Mark graciously avoids identifying Peter as being guilty of this well-meaning but pointless act. John, the eyewitness, identifies the servant as one named Malchus and says it was his right ear that was severed (John 18:10). Peter may have swung wildly, intending to cut off Malchus’s head but succeeding only in wounding him. Luke the physician mentions that Jesus restored Malchus’s ear.

14:48, 49 Jesus did not resist arrest but did shame His captors. The swarms of soldiers, the secluded location, the cover of night, and the swords and clubs all suggested that Jesus was some violent robber or revolutionary. Ironically, this same word is used to describe Barabbas (John 18:40) and the two who were crucified with Jesus (15:27). The cowardice of Jesus’ captors was evident—why else would they arrest a peaceful teacher with such brute force? In the midst of such turmoil, Jesus’ statement that the Scriptures must be fulfilled indicates great confidence and comfort because all was proceeding under God’s sovereign plan. Jesus may have had in mind Zech. 13:7 (“Strike the Shepherd / And the sheep will be scattered”) in view of His earlier prediction in v. 27 and the context of v. 50. Or perhaps His being “numbered with the transgressors” (Is. 53:12) was in mind, considering His response to His captors in v. 48.

14:50–52 Jesus was abandoned. The eleven disciples were gone, but a certain young man followed Him. Only Mark tells of this incident, and many believe that this young man was Mark himself. How else would he have known this story, and why else should he have included it? If it was

Mark, and if the Last Supper was at his home that evening, he could easily have risen from bed, pulled on a linen cloth, and followed Jesus and the disciples. It is also likely that Judas and the mob may have first come to arrest Jesus at the house Judas left earlier in haste (John 13:30). Mark admits that rather than be captured with Jesus, he also fled.

14:53 The high priest at that time was Caiaphas (A.D. 18–37; John 18:13). The chief priests included others who had formerly been high priests, and the elders consisted of the heads of leading families in the community. The scribes were the Jewish experts and teachers of the commandments of God as well as the traditions of men (7:8, 9, 13). Together this group made up the Sanhedrin, always referred to in the Gospels and Acts as the Council (14:55; 15:1; Acts 5:27; 23:1).

14:54 Although we often criticize Peter, at least he was brave enough to come back to see what would happen to Jesus. John also returned and was admitted "with Jesus into the courtyard of the high priest" (John 18:15). Mark's note that Peter followed at a distance must have come from Peter himself.

14:55, 56 The Sanhedrin was supposed to administer justice, but this council sought testimony against Jesus to put Him to death. The Jewish authorities had lost to Rome the right to pronounce a death sentence. Thus, they eventually had to appeal to Pilate (15:1). Because no real witnesses could testify to any grounds for Jesus' death, false witness was heard, but it was contradictory.

14:57–59 Finally, some tried to accuse Jesus of plotting to destroy the temple (John 2:19–21), but even that testimony was too inconsistent.

14:60–62 He kept silent in fulfillment of Is. 53:7. He remained silent before Pilate (15:3–5) and before Herod Antipas as well (Luke 23:9). Finally, when they could find nothing substantial with which to charge Him, Jesus affirmed that He was the Christ, the Son of the Blessed. What they specifically condemned Him to death for, however, was His declaration of being the majestic divine personage known as the Son of Man, described in Dan. 7:13, 14 as the One to whom the Father gives eternal dominion, glory, a kingdom, and Who receives divine worship. This was the term Jesus constantly used of Himself, rather than Messiah; but its full significance was not grasped by the Jewish leaders until Jesus explained it so graphically in the context of this verse.

14:63, 64 The trial was over, and Jesus stood falsely condemned for blasphemy, which in this context means laying claim to deity. Naturally, this is the boast of a liar or a lunatic—unless He is the Almighty God in human flesh, as Jesus was (John 1:1–3, 14; Phil. 2:5–8).

14:65 Those who beat and struck Jesus here were not applying the dreaded scourging, which could disembowel an individual. Compare 15:15 where the scourging itself is mentioned.

14:66–72 Some believe that Peter may have denied the Lord four distinct times. Three were around the fire, or inside the courtyard area, but John may record a separate denial that Peter made when confronted initially at the gate (John 18:16, 17). In Jesus' earlier prediction, only Mark specifically records Jesus' words that the three denials would precede a rooster's second crowing (14:30). Mark, who gives extra attention to detail, distinguishes an initial crowing in this verse with the words and a rooster crowed. It would seem strange, so it goes, for Mark to indicate that the rooster crowed a second time (v. 72), while omitting any reference to his first crowing. Others believe that there are three denials of Peter after a first crowing and three after a second rooster crowing. This is due to the difference in the accounts between Mark and the other Gospels. Those who believe that there were only three denials, rather than six, do so because the other Gospel authors may be speaking in general terms about the rooster crowing while Mark, which reflects Peter's recollections, is more detailed in mentioning two crowings of the rooster. Then he began to curse and swear. Peter may have told Mark to include this report. None of Peter's actions were commendable, and his swearing illustrates the truth of Jer. 17:9, "The heart is deceitful above all things, / And desperately wicked; / Who can know it?" We are not told that Peter thought at all about Jesus' words when the rooster crowed the first time. If he did, maybe he tried to conceal his identity more carefully, but to no avail. Each of the other Gospel writers tells us that the rooster crowed immediately upon Peter's final denial (Matt. 26:74; Luke 22:60; John 18:27). This time he thought about it, and he wept.

15:1–47 Rejected by His disciples, condemned by the council, and denied by Peter, Jesus now faces the merciless Roman authorities and the hostile crowd.

15:1–3 Rather than murdering Jesus privately, the Jewish politicians decided to seek Pilate's approval so they could execute the "blasphemer" legally. Their charges included many things but apparently centered on treason. Jesus claimed to be a king, thus defying Caesar (Luke 23:2). This crime was punishable in the Roman Empire by death.

15:4, 5 answered nothing: Throughout His trial and crucifixion Jesus was the only one who did not act from fear, jealousy, or self-interest.

“Give Us Barabbas!”

But for a remarkable set of circumstances, Barabbas probably would have remained unknown to history. He was just another one of the sicarii (“dagger-men”) who assassinated Roman officials in the vain hope of driving them out of Palestine. Occasionally, when political conditions were right, such men managed to gain a small following and create serious trouble. For example, in A.D. 6 Judas the Galilean led a tax revolt. But the Romans quickly executed him and scattered his followers.

In a similar way, the authorities had arrested Barabbas and others on charges of insurrection and murder (Mark 15:7; Luke 23:19). The prisoners knew well what fate awaited them—crucifixion, a grisly form of execution that the Romans reserved for political criminals. The public spectacle of nailing rebels to an upraised cross was a potent deterrent to political opposition.

But Barabbas was not to die in that manner. The arrest of Jesus, the political maneuverings of Caiaphas the high priest and of Herod and Pilate (Luke 23:6–12), and the custom of releasing a prisoner during the feast of the Passover (Mark 15:6) combined to open a way for Barabbas to go free.

What finally secured his liberty were the cries of the mob to have him released (John 18:40). Pilate found it hard to believe that they actually preferred Barabbas, and when they kept demanding that Jesus be crucified, Pilate asked, “Shall I crucify your king?” (19:15). At that point the chief priests claimed, “We have no king but Caesar!” and the governor released Barabbas. What a peculiar irony that a revolutionary against Rome should be released by the cry, “We have no king but Caesar!”

15:6–8 Pilate must have concluded that the charges against Jesus were groundless, for Mark tells us he desired to release Jesus (v. 9). So his readers could understand the complexity of the situation, Mark parenthetically explains the local custom of releasing a prisoner during the feast as well as the facts about Barabbas. Although Matthew calls Barabbas a “notorious” prisoner, only Mark classifies him with rebels who had committed murder.

15:9–14 Pilate attempted to release Jesus, for he knew the charges against Jesus were insubstantial. Pilate adeptly judged the Jewish leaders' envy of Jesus. He mocked them subtly by referring to Jesus as the King of the Jews.

This inscription from a theater in Caesarea mentions Pontius Pilate, prefect of Judea, who pronounced the death sentence against Jesus (Mark 15:15).

15:15 Pilate had Jesus scourged: This word, used only twice in the NT (Matt. 27:26 and here), describes a punishment more severe than flogging or beating. The prisoner was beaten with a whip fashioned of numerous strips of leather attached to a handle. To the leather strips were tied sharp pieces of bone and metal, which could rip and tear one's skin to shreds. Pilate may have hoped that the Jews would give up demands for Jesus' crucifixion after this brutal beating, but he was in no position to offend the Jews. Jesus was greatly weakened by this scourging.

15:16 The hall called Praetorium refers to the governor's official residence. Praetorium is a Latin word found eight times in the NT. The word is always transliterated in the NKJV, except in Phil. 1:13, where it is translated palace guard. The KJV sometimes translates Praetorium as judgment hall. The whole garrison, a Roman cohort, consisted of up to six hundred men. Those who gathered on this occasion were probably only those nearby, though still a considerable number.

15:17 The purple robe mocked Jesus' claim to be a king. The crown of thorns was no doubt a twisted, dried vine with sharp thorns more than an inch in length. Any thorn prick is extremely painful.

15:18–21 Jesus' reaction to all this misguided treatment was a calm, quiet assurance that He was in the center of His Father's will. They led Him out to crucify Him indicates that the place of crucifixion was outside the city itself (Heb. 13:12). All three synoptic Gospels identify Jesus' cross bearer as Simon of Cyrene, but only Mark adds that he was the father of Alexander and Rufus. These men may have been known to Mark's Roman audience, and it is interesting that Paul greets a Rufus in Rom. 16:13.

15:22 Golgotha is an Aramaic word meaning Place of a Skull. The hill may have resembled the bony features of a skull or was called this because it was a place of death. The name Calvary comes from the Latin word for skull. This place was very near the city wall (John 19:20).

15:23 This potion of wine (or vinegar) mingled with myrrh was intended to numb the pain. Jesus refused it, choosing to suffer the complete pain.

15:24 Casting lots for and dividing His garments fulfilled the prophecy of Ps. 22:18. In fact, Psalm 22 is the Good Shepherd psalm, picturing the One who gave His life for the sheep (John 10:11).

15:25 The third hour was 9 A.M., using a common Jewish system of marking the day. Jesus suffered on the Cross until at least 3 P.M., the ninth hour of v. 34. And they crucified Him was a terse summary for Mark's Roman readers, for they knew quite well the horrors of crucifixion.

15:26 The inscription placed over Jesus' head appeared in three languages (John 19:20): Hebrew (Aramaic); Latin, the official language of government; and Greek, the common language spoken by many. If we piece together details from all four Gospels, the complete sign must have read, "This is Jesus the Nazarene, the King of the Jews." He claimed to be Messiah-King and was officially crucified on this charge.

15:27–31 Jesus was mocked and forsaken by nearly everyone—Pilate, Herod, soldiers, Jewish leaders, the crowd, even the robbers on either side (v. 32).

15:32 Jesus was called mockingly the Christ, or Messiah, by the chief priests and scribes. Their offer to believe in Christ if He would descend … from the cross was empty mockery. Jesus performed many miracles before their eyes, but they still refused to believe. True evidence alone does not turn a soul toward God. A sinful heart must be convicted of the need of God's salvation.

15:33 This darkness was a supernatural darkening of the skies.

15:34 Of the seven cries from the cross, this fourth one was the most passionate. Quoting Ps. 22:1, Jesus expressed the agony of being abandoned by His Father as He alone bore the sin of the world. Jesus' spiritual agony was intense, yet He still addressed His Father personally as My God.

15:35, 36 Those who mistook Jesus' words as a call for the prophet Elijah may have been unable to understand Him. The dehydration caused by crucifixion often made speech difficult. A sip from the sponge full of sour wine was supplied because Jesus said "I thirst" (John 19:28). This allowed Jesus to utter His final two sayings, "It is finished" (John 19:30) and "Father, into Your hands I commit My spirit" (Luke 23:46).

15:37 Jesus breathed His last after a loud conscious statement. Frequently, crucifixion produced a coma or unconsciousness prior to death, but Jesus was in control of all His faculties until the moment when He voluntarily gave up His life (John 10:17, 18). He willingly laid down His life for us.

15:38 The significance of the supernatural tearing of the veil of the temple is that access to God is now open to all. No longer through priests and the blood of bulls and goats do we approach God, but through the torn veil, which also symbolizes Jesus' broken and torn body (Heb. 10:20). Top to bottom reminds us that God Himself removed the barrier.

15:39 Only Mark uses (here and in vv. 44, 45) the Latin term centurion, a Roman captain in charge of one hundred men. The centurion's statement that Jesus was the Son of God can be construed as a confession of belief in Jesus' deity. But the Son could also be translated a son.

15:40, 41 These women were true disciples of Christ. They had ministered to Jesus' needs and would be the first witnesses of His resurrection. Mark does not name Jesus' mother here but includes other prominent women. Three Marys were present along with many other women, and Salome, whom only Mark mentions by name (16:1). Salome was the wife of Zebedee and the mother of the disciples James and John (Matt. 27:56). She may have been the unnamed sister of Jesus' mother (John 19:25). If so, James and John were Jesus' first cousins.

IN COMPARISON

Mary Who?

In reading the NT, one discovers that Mary was a popular name in first-century Palestine. For example, we find:

• Mary of Nazareth, the mother of Jesus (Luke 1:26–2:52).

• Mary of Bethany, the sister of Martha and Lazarus (10:38–42; John 11). She anointed Jesus with perfume before His death (12:3).

• Mary of Magdala, a financial supporter of Jesus (Luke 8:2, 3). The Lord had cast seven demons out of her. She watched Jesus' crucifixion and was the first witness of His resurrection (Mark 15:40; 16:9).

• Mary the mother of James and Joses. She was present at Jesus' crucifixion and was probably the same woman described as the "other" Mary (Matt. 27:61; 28:1) and Mary the wife of Clopas (John 19:25).

• Mary the mother of Mark, making her a relative of Barnabas (Acts 12:12; Col. 4:10).

• Mary of Rome, known simply as a woman who worked hard for Paul and his companions (Rom. 16:6).

Why were so many Jewish women named Mary? The name is the Greek form of the Hebrew Miriam, which was the name of one of Israel's most famous women:

• Miriam was the sister of Moses (Num. 26:59) and one of the nation's first prophets (Ex. 15:20).

• She, her brother, and Aaron were the leadership team that God appointed to lead Israel out of Egypt and through the wilderness toward the Promised Land (Mic. 6:4).

• Miriam displayed courage early in life when she saved her baby brother from death (Ex. 2:4–7).

• Later, after Israel escaped across the Red Sea from the Egyptian army, she helped lead the people in songs of celebration and praise (15:20–21).

• However, on one occasion she spoke against Moses. As a consequence she experienced God's judgment by contracting leprosy. For seven days she was shut out of the camp, the time required before a person healed of leprosy could rejoin the community (Num. 12:1–15).

• While she was on “forced sick leave,” the people remained in one place until she returned to her work of leading the people (12:15).

15:42 Mark explains for his Roman audience, unacquainted with Jewish customs, that the crucifixion took place on the Preparation Day, that is, Friday.

15:43 Joseph of Arimathea (a town twenty miles northwest of Jerusalem) is identified as a prominent council (Sanhedrin) member. He, according to Luke 23:51, “had not consented to their decision and deed.” To ask Pilate for the body of Jesus was not just a gesture of kindness. It was an act of bravery, which placed Joseph in opposition to the Sanhedrin and identified him as a follower of Jesus.

15:44, 45 It was unusual for one to die so soon from crucifixion. Frequently bodies remained on crosses for several days. Joseph’s haste to remove the body could have been based on Deut. 21:23, which instructs that persons put to death on a tree should have their corpses removed and buried the same day.

15:46 Joseph, assisted by another formerly silent disciple, Nicodemus (John 19:39), wrapped Jesus’ body in fine linen, apparently encased with a large amount (about one hundred pounds) of a gummy, sticky resinous mixture of myrrh and aloes to retard decay and to mask the stench of a decaying body. John notes that this was the Jewish custom of burial (John 19:40). The stone used to cover the opening of the tomb may not have been more than three or four feet in diameter, since tomb openings were not usually as tall as doorways. In fact, John 20:5 plainly says that one had to stoop down to peer in. But since it fit into a sunken groove, it would be difficult to remove.

IN DEPTH

A Loving Tribute

How much should you spend on a funeral? A fortune, or only enough to pay for the barest essentials?

The four Gospel writers recorded that Jesus' body was treated as a rich man's corpse might be—which is not surprising since rich people buried Him: • Joseph of Arimathea bought fine linen to wrap the body in before laying it in his own very expensive tomb (Mark 15:43–46; Matt. 27:60).

• Nicodemus helped with the arrangements and brought one hundred pounds of myrrh and aloes, costly substances used to perfume and wrap the body (John 19:39).

• Women who had supported Jesus in His ministry, including Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James, and Salome, prepared spices and fragrant oils to place on the body as soon as the Sabbath was over (Mark 16:1; Luke 23:56).

Those who took charge of Jesus' burial did so out of love, not guilt. And under the circumstances, they obviously were not trying to make a prideful show of their wealth. Rather they honestly expressed their grief, devotion, respect, adoration, and desire to protect the Lord's body from His enemies. They did what they could according to their desires and financial resources, and in keeping with the laws, customs, and traditions of their day.

16:1–20 Mark's readers, who acknowledged Jesus as the Son of God, have seen Him cruelly rejected and killed. Now His resurrection fills those readers with hope and joy.

16:1, 2 The Sabbath is Saturday. The next day is the first day of the week, Sunday. The spices would conceal the stench of decay and were a symbol of the care and concern these women had for their beloved Master.

16:3, 4 The women thought about how large the stone was and how difficult it would be to dislodge it from the entrance. They expressed no concern over the seal on the tomb or the presence of a Roman guard, apparently unaware of the precautions the Jews and Romans had taken (Matt. 27:62–66).

16:5, 6 Mark does not identify the young man who appeared in a long white robe as an angel, but clearly he is there to explain the mystery that confronts the women. The Greek voice of He is risen, which is passive, indicates that an act of God accomplished the raising up of Jesus. But the unexpected and strange scene alarmed the women.

16:7 Chosen by God as the first human witnesses to Christ's resurrection, these women were commanded to go and tell. The special mention of Peter signifies that Christ still accepted him, even though he had denied the Lord three times.

16:8 Initially, the women's fear caused them to say nothing to anyone. They recovered shortly, however, and brought word to the eleven disciples, including Peter (16:10; Matt. 28:8, 9; John 20:2).

Different Details in the Gospels

When you read the Gospels side by side, you'll notice some apparent discrepancies. For example, Mark reports that there were three women at the tomb of Jesus on resurrection Sunday, while Matthew speaks of only two. And Mark quotes Peter as declaring that Jesus is the Messiah, while Matthew quotes the apostle declaring Jesus is the Messiah and the Son of God.

If four members of a band wrote stories about life on the road with a famous musician, we would expect a lot of overlap, but also some variation. People see the same things differently.

The core issue is whether or not the Gospels witness truthfully in answering the question: Who is this Jesus? The Gospels are early written witnesses to Jesus: They express the testimony of those who had been with Jesus during His ministry, after His resurrection, and (after His ascension to heaven) through the outpoured Holy Spirit. Through all their differences, the Gospels agree that Jesus rose from the dead and is now "both Lord and Christ" (Acts 2:36). And they agree that how people respond to this Jesus determines whether they live or die, eternally.

16:9–20 This large section of twelve verses has been disputed as to authenticity. In light of this dispute it is best not to base doctrine on these verses. Those who doubt Mark's authorship of these verses point to two early manuscripts (fourth century) which do not contain these verses. Those favoring their inclusion point out that even these two manuscripts leave space for all or some of these verses, indicating that their copyists knew of their existence. The difficulty is knowing whether the space is for this longer version of Mark's ending or one of the alternate endings found in the manuscripts. Practically all other manuscripts contain vv. 9–20 and this passage is supported by such early church fathers as Justin Martyr (A.D. 155), Tatian (A.D. 170) and Irenaeus (A.D. 180). The internal evidence is more difficult to evaluate than the external. There is an abrupt change in subject between vv. 8, 9, and some words appear in vv. 9–20 that are not present in the rest of Mark; but the latter could be said of any section of twelve verses of Mark. It might also seem unusual for Mark's story to end with v. 8 on a note of fear.

16:9 Although the women had been commissioned to tell of Jesus' resurrection, none had actually seen Jesus until He appeared first to Mary Magdalene. Only Mark and Luke (8:2) mention Jesus' exorcism of seven demons from Mary, which would explain her strong devotion to Him.

16:10 Only Mark mentions the disciples' mourning and weeping. They experienced personal and psychological loss with the execution of their Lord.

16:11 Jesus' resurrection was evidently not expected by anyone in spite of His repeated predictions. It had to have been the Resurrection event itself which resulted in faith, rather than an expectation of His resurrection which gave rise to stories concerning it.

16:12, 13 Jesus' appearance in another form (Gk. hetera morphe) may indicate that He is different from how He appeared to Mary (v. 9), or that He appeared differently to the two on the road than He had appeared to them before. The identity of the two who walked is not entirely stated, either here or in the longer account in Luke 24:13–35. However, one is identified as Cleopas (Luke 24:18), and it is quite possible that he was accompanied by his wife. There is no indication that the two had to be men.

16:14 After Judas's demise (Matt. 27:3–5; Acts 1:16–18), the disciples were known for a while as the eleven. Jesus upbraided these disciples for not believing the account of eye witnesses, but He pronounces a blessing on "those who have not seen and yet have believed" (John 20:29). Jesus' words would apply equally to Mark's original readers and present-day believers as well.

16:15 The great commission is contained here and in each of the other three Gospels (Matt. 28:19, 20; Luke 24:47; John 20:21).

16:16 He who does not believe will be condemned. This negative statement shows that baptism is not a requirement for salvation. Otherwise the statement would read that he who does not believe and is not baptized will be condemned. However, the NT firmly teaches that baptism is to follow belief in Christ. In fact, one cannot find Christians in the NT who do not follow Christ in baptism.

16:17–18 Five signs (Gk. semeia) would authenticate the message Christians proclaimed. Three of these signs were displayed in the early church: (1) casting out demons, displaying victory over Satan (Acts 16:18);

(2) speaking with new tongues, that is, in known languages as in Acts 2:4–11; and (3) healing the sick, as in Acts 28:8. But the two signs of (1) taking up serpents and (2) drinking anything deadly seem to express conditions that may be forced upon the follower of Christ, not some voluntary action he takes. There is no biblical warrant for snake handling and poison drinking today.

16:19 The final sign that Jesus was the Son of God is that He was received up into heaven to be seated at the right hand (the position of authority and power) of God. Mark's readers can rest assured in the complete deity of Christ and in His ability to save all who will trust in Him.

16:20 The obedience of Christ's disciples who went out and preached everywhere challenges us to engage in that same endeavor. We can be confident that as the Lord was working with them, He will also work with us.

The Gospel According to Luke

———— SOMETIMES WE NEED TO TAKE A STEP BACK to gain perspective. It is one thing for three of Jesus' twelve disciples to write about the life of Christ; it is quite another for someone who did not know Him to write about Him. Luke never met Jesus, yet chose to follow Him. An obviously educated man who, as Col. 4:14 tells us, was a physician, Luke learned all that he could about Jesus and shared his findings withus. Thus his Gospel provides a "step back," a unique perspective on Jesus' birth, ministry, death, and resurrection.

The Gospel of Luke is unique in several ways. It is the only Gospel that has a sequel, Acts. Both Luke and Acts include an account of the Ascension, an event that only Luke describes in detail. Second, Luke is the longest of the four Gospels. Third, Luke records a wide variety of miracles, teaching, and parables, making it the fullest portrait of Jesus' ministry. Much of the material in chs. 9–19 appears only in Luke; in all, about one-third of the Gospel of Luke is unique. Fourth, Luke is the only Gospel addressed to an individual. Luke writes for Theophilus, who was probably a Gentile believer.

For Luke, Jesus is the promised Messiah (1:31–35), the Son of God (9:35), the Servant through whom God works (4:16–18), and the Lord who is called to sit at God's right hand exerting His authority and giving the Spirit to those who believe (compare 22:69 with Acts 2:30–36). Though aspects of God's plan are fulfilled in Jesus' first coming, other parts of the plan remain to be fulfilled when Jesus returns (21:5–36; Acts 3:14–26).

Luke wrote his Gospel to reassure Theophilus that God was still at work in the Christian community founded by Jesus. Luke presents God's grace as revealed in Jesus' ministry on earth. He emphasizes that this grace is available to Gentiles, even though the promises relating to Jesus' ministry stretch back into Israel's history (1:1–4). For this reason Luke also concentrates on Jesus' relationship to the nation and leaders of Israel. The rejection of Israel does not mean the failure of God's plan. On the contrary, although they did not know it, their rejection was part of God's plan from the beginning (Acts 2:22–39). In fact, persecution of the Christian community would be the means by which the church would spread the Good News throughout the world. Jesus Himself had predicted that this would happen (24:45–48).

The first two chapters of Luke emphasize the Old Testament and its promises of a Messiah, while 3:1—4:13 demonstrate that Jesus is the Messiah who can resist the Evil One. Then, 4:14—9:50 introduce Jesus' power and teaching. In these chapters, Luke records Jesus' claims to authority and the numerous miracles that supported them. Even with these miracles as evidence, the people rejected Jesus while the disciples' faith in Him steadily grew. The growing rift between Jesus and the Jewish leadership is seen in 9:51—19:44. This breach is emphasized most in chs. 9–13, but in chs. 14–19 attention turns to Jesus' instruction of His disciples. The last section (19:45—24:53) portrays the final controversies, the trial, the death of Jesus, and the Resurrection and Ascension. The book ends with Jesus telling the disciples to wait for the coming of the Spirit. By now, they should have realized that everything that had taken place in Jesus' life was promised in the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms (24:43–49). Jesus is the promised Messiah. Forgiveness of sin can be obtained only through Him. The disciples were witnesses to this fact; their mission was to share this Good News with all nations, not merely the Jews. Jesus gave them this task, but He also provided them with the power to carry it out (24:47). Thus it is clear that Luke's Gospel centers on God's plan to provide salvation to the world. It closes anticipating the spread of the gospel that is recorded in its sequel, the Book of Acts.

Neither Luke nor Acts has a byline, so we are left to deduce the author's identity. The author writes that he was not an eyewitness to the events surrounding Jesus but had gathered the reports of others. On the other hand, the author was present with Paul at some of the events described in Acts, events that belong to the "we sections" of Acts (Acts 16:10–17; 20:5–15; 21:1–18; 27:1—28:16). So the author must have been a lately converted Christian who knew Paul and sometimes traveled with him.

Early Christian writings, from the works of Justin Martyr to Tertullian, identify the author as Luke, an identification that was firmly in place by the third century A.D. Luke was an educated man by ancient standards. He was capable of writing in high Greek style, and Col. 4:10–14 seems to indicate that Luke was not "of the circumcision," that is, not Jewish. If so, Luke would be the only Gentile author of a New Testament book. Tradition says that after accompanying Paul on some of his missionary journeys, Luke settled in Philippi, investing his life in the ministry of the Philippian church.

Neither Luke nor Acts indicates when they were written, so this too must be deduced. The last event recorded in the Book of Acts is the first Roman imprisonment of Paul; therefore, the earliest Acts could have been written is A.D. 62. Most scholars choose between two times for the Gospel: early to late sixties, or mid-seventies to late eighties. Two factors determine the choice: the date of the other Gospels and the portrayal of the fall of Jerusalem in Luke.

Almost everyone considers Luke the second or third Gospel to be written, though they debate whether Mark or Matthew was the first. The first Gospel, whether Matthew or Mark, is usually dated in the sixties. Those who place Matthew and Mark in the sixties often date Luke after A.D. 70, to allow time for the circulation of Matthew and Mark. Another reason given for dating Luke after A.D. 70 is the claim that Luke presents Jesus' predictions of the fall of Jerusalem (19:41–44; 21:20–24) in such a way as to indicate that the city had already fallen.

Neither of these arguments is decisive. Given that the major figures of the early church had contact with one another, there is no reason to assume that it took a decade for a major Gospel to get into circulation. The prediction of the fall of Jerusalem in Luke is unique among the Gospel accounts in focusing on the fall of the city and not merely the destruction of the temple. Thus, what Jesus describes is a judgment that is the result of covenant unfaithfulness, similar to the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. The fact that Luke includes Jesus' prediction of a second fall of the city does not mean the city had already been destroyed when the book was written. Since the sequel to Luke, the Book of Acts, does not record either Peter's death, Paul's death, or even the fall of Jerusalem (in the face of Jesus' clear prediction of it), it is most likely that Luke was written in the early to mid-sixties. A date in the later sixties is also possible.

Commentary

1:1, 2 many have taken in hand: Luke makes it clear that he was not the first to write a narrative of the ministry of Jesus. The theme of God's plan is introduced with the note that the subject of such narratives was the things which have been fulfilled. The sources for these narratives were eyewitnesses who delivered their testimony to the church. Deliver refers to the transmission of an authoritative account. These verses suggest that Luke was not an eyewitness to the events of Jesus' ministry, but that he had access to statements of those who were.

Good News for Gentiles

Luke's Gospel (as well as Acts) is addressed to someone named Theophilus. Little is known about this person, though speculation abounds. Was this an individual or a group of believers? Was Theophilus, which means "lover of God," his given name or a name taken after conversion (a common practice)? The title "most excellent" (Luke 1:3) indicates prominence and a high rank in Roman society. However, the title is dropped in Acts 1:1. Did Theophilus lose his position in the intervening years?

One thing seems apparent: Luke was writing to and for a Gentile reader. In fact, a major emphasis of the account is that the gospel is not just for a select nation. Jesus offers forgiveness and salvation freely to all humanity, regardless of race, gender, or social merit. Luke shows that the Good News is for: • Samaritans (Luke 9:52–56; 10:30–37; 17:11–19); • Gentiles (2:32; 3:6, 8; 4:25–27; 7:9; 10:1; 24:47); • Jews (1:32, 33, 54); • women (1:26–56; 7:36–50; 8:1–3; 10:38–42); • outcasts such as tax collectors, widows, lepers, and the disabled (3:12; 4:27; 5:27–32; 7:11–15, 22, 23, 37–50; 14:1–6; 15:1; 17:12; 19:2–10); • the poor (1:53; 2:7; 6:20; 7:22); and • the rich (19:2; 23:50).

1:3 it seemed good to me also: Luke did not express dissatisfaction with previous narratives of Jesus' ministry, but he identified with those who went before him. having had perfect understanding: This phrase represents two of the four characteristics that describe Luke's work in this verse. Luke investigated his topic and he did it with care. He did not claim to know everything about Jesus, but what he described was studied and treated accurately. of all things: The third characteristic of Luke's work was its thoroughness. from the very first: The fourth characteristic of Luke was his interest in even the earliest events tied to Jesus' life. an orderly account: Luke gave his narrative a basic structure. Not every part is in chronological sequence, but the broad sequence is Christ's ministry in Galilee, His travel to Jerusalem, and His struggles in Jerusalem. The order of events shows how Jesus gradually revealed Himself and how the opposition to Him grew.

1:4 certainty: The purpose of this term was to give assurance to Theophilus, possibly a young believer and someone very interested in the Christian message. It is likely that Theophilus was a Gentile, since so much of Luke and Acts is concerned with Jewish-Gentile relationships (Acts 10; 11; 15). He not only needed to know the truth and accuracy of what the church taught, but also needed to be reassured. He might well have been wondering what he as a Gentile was doing in a movement that was originally Jewish, especially when so many Israelites were rejecting the message. Can a dead Messiah really be the center of God's promise? Is the persecution of the church a sign of God's judgment on a movement that has made God's grace too generous by including Gentiles so directly without making them become Jews first? Luke wished to reassure Theophilus (and other readers of his work) that Jesus did bring the promise of God, that His ministry and especially His resurrection show that God is behind Him, and that any Gentile belongs in the movement. In addition, as Acts shows, the persecution of the church is like that which Jesus faced and has provided the opportunity for the Word of God to spread over the entire region, even as far as Rome.

1:5 In the days of Herod, the king: Luke is very exact in giving precise historical and chronological information. This is seen in these words, as well as other references to major historical persons, events and dates as in 2:1–3; 3:1, 2, 19, and 23. This Herod, known as Herod the Great, was a descendant of Esau (compare Gen 27:39–40). Born in 73 B.C., he was appointed King of the Jews by the Roman Senate in 40 B.C. He ruled until his death in March or April, 4 B.C. Archelaus (Matt. 2:22), Philip (Luke 3:1), and Herod Antipas (Luke 23:7–12, 15) were his sons. Herod Agrippa I of Acts 12:1–6, 19–23 was his grandson, and Herod Agrippa II of Acts 25–26 was his great-grandson. The priesthood of Israel was separated into twenty-four divisions, of which the family of Abijah was one (1 Chr. 24:10; Neh. 12:17).

1:6 righteous before God: This phrase indicates that the priest and his wife were recognized by God as believers. They walked faithfully with God and kept His law (Deut. 6:24, 25). It does not indicate sinlessness, since keeping the law would also mean bringing sacrifices for sin and responding appropriately to its presence. Simeon (2:25), Cornelius (Acts 10:22), and Joseph (Matt. 1:19) are described this way.

1:7 Being barren was a grave disappointment in ancient Israel (1 Sam. 1). The Scriptures record a number of times when God blessed a barren woman by giving her a son (Gen. 18:11; 21:2, 3; 1 Sam. 1:2). This act of God indicates He is at work, since they were both advanced in years.

1:8, 9 Zacharias served for one week twice a year at the temple, one of perhaps eighteen thousand priests who served in a year. Offering the incense was something a priest could do only once in his career. It was a great moment for Zacharias, all the more so because of the sovereign plan God had for him and his family.

1:10, 11 The hour of incense came twice a day, at 9 A.M. and 3:30 P.M. Probably the afternoon offering is in view here.

1:12 fear fell upon him: To be afraid at the presence of God or His messenger (v. 11) is common in Scripture (1:29, 65; 2:9; 5:8–10, 26; 7:16; 8:37; 9:34; Ex. 15:16; Dan. 8:16, 17; Acts 5:5, 11; 19:17).

1:13 Do not be afraid: Angels often calmed the fears of those to whom they appeared (v. 30; 2:10; Gen. 15:1; Dan. 10:12; Matt. 1:20; Acts 18:9; 27:24; Rev. 1:17). your prayer is heard: The angel was probably referring to the prayer for the redemption of Israel that Zacharias had recited in the holy place, or to his earlier prayers for a child. In fact, God's action starts a process that answers both requests at once. The meaning cannot be that he was praying for the child in the holy place, since v. 18 indicates he presently had no hope of having a child. you shall call his name John: When God names a child, greatness usually follows (Gen. 16:11; 1 Kin. 13:2; Is. 7:14).

1:14 Joy is a major theme throughout the writings of Luke (vv. 44, 47, 58; 2:10; 10:20; 13:17; 15:5–7; 19:6; 24:52; Acts 5:41).

1:15 great in the sight of the Lord: John had a great place in the plan of God, but it was inferior to Jesus' own unique role. John was a prophet, and as such he was filled with the Holy Spirit from before birth (Is. 49:1; Jer. 1:5). Being filled with the Spirit means being directed by Him and obedient to Him (Eph. 5:18). wine nor strong drink: As with Samuel and Samson, a vow was imposed on the child that indicated his special consecration to the Lord. Unlike Samson and Samuel, this vow was imposed by God, not by his mother. It is not clear whether this was a Nazirite vow, since nothing is said about refraining from cutting his hair (Num. 6:1–4; Judg. 13:5, 7).

1:16 The prophet John promised reconciliation to God for those who responded to his call to repent (3:1–14). Turn is a biblical term for conversion, indicating a change of orientation, a turning away from sin and towards God (1 Thess. 1:9, 10). John's mission was to prepare Israel for its Messiah.

1:17 in the spirit and power of Elijah: John was the forerunner of the Messiah. This description recalls Mal. 3:1; 4:5. John's ministry paralleled Elijah's, for both prophets called Israel to repentance (1 Kin. 17; 18). The reconciliation John brings involves both one's relationship to God (as people return to the wisdom of the just) and the relationship of people to one another (as fathers turn to the children). That John is "Elijah" does not mean that the Elijah hope is exhausted with John the Baptist. Both John and Jesus suggest the return of an Elijah-like figure at the end (Matt. 17:11, 12; John 1:21). John is like Elijah. As with many elements in God's plan, there is an initial fulfillment and a later fulfillment yet to come, which are distinct but related. Both John and Jesus may suggest the return of an Elijah-like figure in the end times (Matt. 17:11–13; John 1:21). a people prepared: The prepared people are those whom God has drawn to Himself for His special purposes. The closest OT parallel is 2 Sam. 7:24 (LXX), where the prepared people rejoice in the hope of Davidic promise, so the prepared people are those special people God has drawn to Himself for His special purposes. Davidic hope connections will reappear in Luke 1:31, 32.

1:18 How shall I know: Zacharias expressed his doubt and asked for a sign, a lack of faith that is addressed in vv. 64, 65. Zacharias completely ignored the divine source of the promise and the angelic messenger who delivered it. In order for the angel's words to come true, it would be necessary for God to reverse the natural processes of aging for Zacharias and to correct the malfunction of Elizabeth's womb. Did not this religious leader of Israel remember that a similar thing happened to Abraham, the father of the Jewish people? As David Gooding in his book According to Luke has poignantly said, "A miracle indeed; but if such a miracle is impossible, as Zechariah at first thought, all talk of redemption is idle talk, or at best a misnomer. A new body that had nothing at all to do with the old body, a new world that had nothing to do with the old world, this would certainly be a wonderful thing—but it would not be redemption. Redemption must mean turning back the decay of nature, renewing dying bodies, resurrecting dead ones, restoring fallen spirits."

1:19 One of two angels named in the Bible, Gabriel was often a messenger who communicated God's plan (Dan. 8:16; 9:21). Michael is the other angel whose name is given (Dan. 10:13, 21; Jude 9; Rev. 12:7).

1:20 mute: The sign is also an opportunity to reflect on lack of faith. It seems that Zacharias was not only unable to speak, but unable to hear as well (vv. 62, 63). The arrival of the child would break Zacharias's silence. The priest would be filled with joy, praising God for His faithfulness (see Zacharias's song in vv. 68–79).

1:21, 22 The people at the temple awaited the Aaronic blessing of the high priest (Num. 6:24–26). The conclusion of the offering occurred only after the priests emerged from the holy place.

1:23 Zacharias's house was located in the hill country south of Jerusalem (v. 39).

1:24 Why Elizabeth hid herself is not clear. The most likely suggestion is that she withdrew to give praise to God, as v. 25 suggests, and to prepare privately for the coming of her special child.

1:25 my reproach: In ancient Israel barrenness was seen as a cause for shame. The "opening of the womb" indicated God's grace (Gen. 21:6; 30:23; 1 Sam. 1; 2; Ps. 128:3). In this verse Elizabeth praises the Lord for mercifully blessing her even as He moved His plan for all of human history forward.

1:26–38 The announcement to Mary presents the declaration of a virginal conception of Jesus (vv. 27, 34, 35), but ties it to the OT less directly than Matt. 1:23, which actually cites Is. 7:14. Luke's account tells the story from Mary's perspective, while Matt. 1:18–25 focuses on Joseph. It parallels similar announcements in the OT (Isaac: Gen. 16:7–14; 17:15–22; 18:9–15; Gideon: Judg. 6:11–17; Samson: Judg. 13:3–23; Samuel: 1 Sam. 1:9–20). The announcement emphasizes Jesus' regal position as well as His unique origins. Luke makes it clear that Mary did not put together the theological significance of this birth, as her response in Luke 2:48 shows. Luke prefers to show how Jesus gradually revealed who He was and how people wrestled with who He was.

1:26, 27 In the sixth month means six months after John the Baptist was conceived. Nazareth was a little village in Galilee, a region north of Jerusalem.

IN CONTEXT

Betrothal

Betrothal (Luke 1:27) was a mutual promise or contract for a future marriage (Deut. 20:7; Jer. 2:2). Not to be entirely equated with the modern concept of engagement, betrothal followed the selection of the bride by the prospective husband. The contract was negotiated by a friend or agent representing the bridegroom and by the parents representing the bride. It was confirmed by oaths and was accompanied with presents to the bride and often to the bride's parents.

Betrothal was celebrated by a feast. In some instances, it was customary for the bridegroom to place a ring on the bride's finger as a token of love and fidelity. In Hebrew custom betrothal was actually part of the marriage process. A change of intention by one of the partners after he or she was betrothed was a serious matter, subject in some instances to a fine.

Betrothal was much more closely linked with marriage than our modern engagement. But the actual marriage took place only when the bridegroom took the bride to his home and the marriage was consummated in the sexual union.

1:28–31 blessed are you among women: Mary, like all other mortals, was a blessed recipient of God's grace, not a bestower of it. She had a special role, just as John the Baptist had a special call. She was simply a highly favored one (v. 30).

1:32, 33 great … Son of the Highest: In contrast to Luke 1:15, Jesus is simply called great (perhaps Mic. 5:3 is alluded to here). The reference to "the Highest" is another way to refer to the majesty of God to which Jesus has a unique relationship as Son. His greatness and His sonship are defined by what follows. He fulfills promises made to David of an unending rule (i.e., He is Messiah). The OT introduces and develops this promise in great detail (2 Sam. 7:8–17, especially vv. 13, 16; 1 Kin. 2:24, 25; Pss. 2:1–12; 89:14, 19–29, 35–37; 110:1–7; 132:11, 12; Is. 9:6, 7; 11:1–5, 10; Jer. 23:5, 6). In Judaism this hope was very political and earthly in focus and also was expressed as the hope of unending rule or an unending line of rule (Psalms of Solomon 17 and 18, especially 17:4; 1 Enoch 49:1; 62:14; 2 Baruch 73:1). The NT does not lack this picture of an earthly focus to this rule, but portrays its most visible manifestations to the period of Jesus' return (Rev. 19 and 20). Luke does portray aspects of this rule and authority as already in evidence in Jesus' initial coming, though its most evident elements will be displayed in the future (18:39; 19:38; 22:69; Acts 2:30–36). The Davidic connection is one Luke emphasizes in these early scenes (1:27, 32, 69; 2:4, 11). The hope is expressed in vv. 32, 33 in very national terms, as are most of the remarks in Luke 1 and 2. This is because the promise, as Paul puts it, was to the Jew first and then to the Greek (Rom. 1:17; 9:1–5).

1:34 How can this be: Mary did not ask for a sign, so this remark does not reflect unbelief. She accepts her role without question in v. 38, and thus is a model of faith even though she does not fully understand everything. The work of God in Mary introduces something unknown before or after: the birth into the human race of One who is both God and man.

1:35, 36 The Holy Spirit will come upon you: This is a direct declaration of Jesus' divine conception. The association of the Spirit with power is frequent for Luke (v. 17; 4:14; Acts 1:8; 6:8–10; 10:38). The child's conception means He is uniquely set apart, the Holy One, a phrase which is here not so much a title as a description of Jesus' sinless nature. The unique birth is another reason the child can be called Son of God.

1:37 nothing will be impossible: God keeps His promises regardless of how difficult the circumstances may seem. Gabriel's statement about God should be our statement of faith: Nothing is impossible with God. The ultimate proof of the power of God is that the infinite Creator took upon Himself finiteness as a creature.

1:38 Maidservant suggests humility before the Lord and a readiness for faithful and obedient service, which should characterize every believer. Paul uses the masculine form of this word to describe himself (Rom. 1:1).

INSIGHT

A Rugged Journey

Mary's journey into the Judean hill country (1:39) was no leisurely stroll along a country road. Given the difficulties and dangers that the landscape posed, her support network—Elizabeth and family—must have been especially valuable to her.

The mountainous terrain that she traversed did have a certain rugged beauty: desert yellows, a glimpse of the Dead Sea, violet-red mountains, and perhaps a few groves of fruit trees grown on terraced slopes. One main north-south road linked the region's principal cities—Jerusalem to the north, Bethlehem, Beth-zur, and Hebron to the south.

Beyond that, the hill country was rather bleak. The eastern slopes were mostly impassable desert, stretching ten to fifteen miles from their highest point, 3,000 feet near Hebron, down to the Dead Sea, the lowest point on earth at 1,300 feet below sea level (Josh. 15:2). The vast wasteland was broken only by imposing cliffs and canyons and a few forts and oases, such as En Gedi (1 Sam. 23:29). It was an area fit for fugitives, rebels, and hermits—but certainly not for a pregnant woman.

1:39–41 the babe leaped in her womb: Mary's coming brought a reaction from John in Elizabeth's womb. The Messiah's forerunner gave testimony to the Messiah even before he was born. The angel had predicted to Zacharias that his baby would be filled with the Holy Spirit even from the womb (v. 15).

1:42–44 why is this granted to me: Elizabeth marveled at the grace that allowed her a role in God's great plan. She knew God owed her nothing; but she also knew that God had mercifully given her much.

1:45 Mary's faith contrasts with the doubt of Zacharias. Blessed is she who believed: Mary's response of faith was exemplary. She was simply waiting on God to bring His promises to fulfillment.

1:46 Magnifies: This term provides the source for the name of this hymn, the "Magnificat," which comes from the Latin Vulgate translation. This hymn is personal in focus in vv. 46–49, while vv. 50–55 turn to the principles by which God acts. It is a declarative praise psalm, since Mary praises God with a recital of what He has done. The hymn is one of four hymns in Luke 1 and 2. Luke 1:67–79; 2:14; 2:29–32 are the others.

1:47 God my Savior: God's activity as Savior is highlighted in the hymn. Mary regards it as an honor to share in God's work. God the Father is the focus of this hymn as He is the source and executor of the plan. God's attributes are not discussed as abstractions but are related to His activities. The deliverance of the Savior is expressed in very earthly terms, so Mary has more in view here than just spiritual salvation. The variation in verb tense between this verse and the last (magnifies/has rejoiced) suggests the continual presence of praise.

1:48 henceforth: This phrase can also be translated "from now on." Things would never be the same again (5:10; 12:52; 22:69; Acts 18:6). all generations will call me blessed: Mary went from being a poor unknown Hebrew girl to the most honored woman in the history of the world.

1:49 He who is mighty: God is One who protects and fights for His children (Pss. 45:3; 89:8; Zeph. 3:17). holy is His name: God is unique and set apart from all other beings (Lev. 11:44, 45; Ps. 99:3; Is. 57:15).

1:50 The term mercy expresses the OT concept of God's loyal, gracious, faithful love (Ps. 103). those who fear Him: This is a key phrase in the hymn for it shows that God is not dealing with social classes and the humble without regard for their spiritual orientation. The hymn reflects covenant commitments (vv. 54, 55) as well as assuming response to God. God's mercy comes to those who look respectfully to Him. Therefore, use of the hymn to argue for political-social ends alone is not appropriate.

1:51–53 These verses portray a "reversal" in the end times, when those who have abused power will be judged and those who have suffered persecution will be exalted. The tenses, though past, look to the future since they portray the principles by which God acts and are expressed within the certainty of a past event. Mary was looking forward to the day when God's people are no longer oppressed, but are instead blessed by the Lord. God's strength with His arm figuratively describes His activity and power as Savior of His people (v. 47; Deut. 4:34; Pss. 89:13; 118:15).

1:54–56 His servant Israel: The idea of Israel as God's servant is found frequently in the Book of Isaiah (Is. 41:8, 9; 44:1, 2, 21; 48:20; 49:3). Israel has a special role in serving God and revealing Him. Mary sees a day when Israel will be delivered, and she can accomplish her commission. He spoke to our fathers: God's actions in the life of Mary were based on commitments He made centuries before (Gen. 12:1–3; 22:16–18). He will keep His promise, which is why Mary can be so confident.

1:57–59 they would have called him: It was an ancient custom to give the name of a family member to a newborn.

1:60, 61 John: The fact that Elizabeth does not follow custom shows their obedience to the Lord, who had given the name to Zacharias (v. 13).

1:62, 63 The fact that the people made signs to Zacharias indicates that he was deaf as well as mute (v. 20). A writing tablet was a wood tablet covered with wax.

1:64 Immediately: Zacharias has learned his lesson of faith as v. 63 indicates, so his sign-punishment comes to a swift end.

1:65, 66 fear: This is the normal response to the presence of God. This event brought two reactions: fear and reflective discussion.

1:67 filled with the Holy Spirit: Here the presence of the Spirit enabled Zacharias to announce God's promise. Zacharias's hymn is called the "Benedictus" from its first word in the Latin Vulgate translation. prophesied: Though Zacharias was a priest, the Spirit enabled him to prophesy. There are three types of prophecy in the Bible: foretelling future events, forthtelling the Word of God, and praising God. Zacharias's prophecy includes all three.

1:68 He has visited and redeemed: As also in Mary's hymn, God the Savior is the object of Zacharias's praise. The salvation referred to by Zacharias is both national (vv. 71, 74) and spiritual (vv. 75, 77, 79).

1:69, 70 The horn of an ox is a symbol of power (Deut. 33:17) and a picture of a warrior (1 Sam. 2:10; 2 Sam. 22:3; Pss. 75:4, 5, 10; 132:17; Ezek. 29:21). David: Jesus' royal ancestry is highlighted by Zacharias and tied to God's promise (v. 70).

1:71 God had promised to deliver the Israelites from their enemies. In Luke these enemies include both human and spiritual forces (4:16–30; 11:14–26).

1:72, 73 To perform the mercy … remember His holy covenant: God's actions represented His commitment to love the Israelites faithfully (v. 50) and to fulfill His promises to their ancestors (vv. 54, 73; Lev. 26:42).

1:74, 75 might serve Him: Zacharias longs to serve God in holiness and righteousness. Luke shows the priest has learned much through the events of this birth. Christ came to give us the freedom to serve God without fear of persecution by our enemies, and to live in holiness of heart before God and in righteousness of conduct toward others.

1:76 you will go before the face of the Lord: Though debated whether it is God the Father or Jesus who is alluded to here, the subject of the praise and the activity is God the Father. This comment by Zacharias repeats the remarks of Luke 1:16, 17, where it is clear that God the Father is meant. Luke consistently portrays salvation and benefits as God's act mediated through Jesus (Acts 2:30–36). On the other hand, John is to prepare the way for Yahweh, a reference to being the forerunner for the Messiah.

1:77 To give knowledge of salvation: This is also John's task as prophet: to prepare the people by informing them of their need to repent (3:1–14) and of the hope that comes in the One who comes after him (3:15–18). This remark is also not about Jesus since the subject of the phrase found in v. 76 is John the Baptist. John's work was preparatory and opened the door for Jesus. Salvation came through the remission of sin, since one cannot happen without the other. John's baptism pictured this possibility, while the "greater baptism" which Jesus brought with the indwelling Spirit (3:15–18) reflects its presence.

1:78, 79 Dayspring is a reference to the coming of Messiah (Num. 24:17; Mal. 4:2). This Greek word was also used to translate the Hebrew word for "branch" or "sprout," a concept with messianic overtones (Is. 11:1–10; Jer. 23:5; 33:15; Zech. 3:8; 6:12). To give light … To guide our feet: As the Dayspring or the "Rising Sun," the Messiah will provide the light of truth and forgiveness to those blinded by the darkness of their sins. Peace describes a harmonious relationship with God.

1:80 the child grew: This refrain ends the story of the birth of John the Baptist. Two similar refrains greet the account of Jesus (2:39; 52). The doubling is another stylistic touch that highlights Jesus' superiority to John, as does the difference in wording between the refrains. John had to wait for thirty years for the Messiah to manifest Himself to Israel. John had not only great humility but tremendous patience.

2:1, 2 Caesar Augustus … Quirinius: Augustus was the emperor of Rome (31 B.C.–A.D. 14), and Quirinius was the administrator of a major census organized to facilitate the payment of taxes. The only known census tied to Quirinius in extra-biblical records dates to A.D. 6, but this is too late to be the one referred to here. As a result, many have regarded this note by Luke as erroneous; but it is possible that Quirinius served as governor twice in his career, since there is a gap in the governorship records between 4 B.C. and A.D. 1 in the period between Varus and Gaius Caesar. The problem is that the gap follows Herod's death, rather than preceding it, as the timing of Jesus' birth requires (Matt. 2). It may well be that the census spanned the period from Varus to Quirinius and became associated with the name of the one who completed it sometime in the period immediately following Herod's death. In that case, Luke has historically compressed the data, as is common, and is not in error. Another possible explanation is that the term translated first can sometimes be translated "before" (John 15:18), in which case all Luke says is that this census preceded the governorship of Quirinius. Again, no error is present.

2:3, 4 The registration, following Jewish custom, took place at a person's ancestral home (2 Sam. 24). The journey from Nazareth to Bethlehem was about ninety miles, at least a three-day trip.

2:5 his betrothed wife: The fact that Mary made the journey with Joseph suggests that they were already married. However, the marriage had not yet been consummated (Matt. 1:24, 25).

2:6 the days were completed: There is a good historical basis as to why the traditional date of December 25, accepted by the ancient Greek and Latin churches, may be a good approximate date. The date of the birth can be fixed with some precision, since Matt. 2:19 makes it clear that Jesus was born near the time of Herod the Great. Josephus mentions that Herod's death occurred between an eclipse and Passover (Antiq. 18.167). The only eclipse recorded in this period was in March 4 B.C., while Passover would have been mid-April. So Jesus was born at least a few months before spring 4 B.C., either the winter of 5 B.C. or the following spring, which is why dates of Jesus' birth read 5 to 4 B.C. The fixing of the date of Christmas as December 25 dates at least from the time of Constantine (A.D. 306–337). The celebration became the church's way to celebrate Jesus' birth and have an alternative celebration to a popular pagan feast.

2:7 Swaddling cloths were strips of cloth wrapped around a baby to keep its arms and legs straight. Firstborn Son implies that Mary had other children (Matt. 1:25; 13:55; Mark 3:31–35). The manger was probably a feeding trough for animals. Jesus was probably born in a stable or in a cave that served as one. The inn was most likely a reception room in a private home or a space at a public shelter, not a large building with several individual rooms.

2:8 The night watch was kept to protect sheep from robbers and wild animals.

2:9 Glory refers to evidence of God's majestic presence, later associated with Jesus (Acts 7:55). In this scene the glory is the appearance of light in the midst of darkness.

2:10 good tidings … joy: The association of these two ideas occurs only here and in Luke 1:14, but they sum up what the response to Jesus' presence should be.

2:11, 12 The city of David here refers to Bethlehem. In other passages, the phrase means Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:7). Savior … Christ … Lord: These three titles together summarize the saving work of Jesus and His sovereign position. What God was called in 1:47, Savior, Jesus is called here. The word Christ means "Anointed," referring to Jesus' royal, messianic position. The word Lord was the title of a ruler. The meaning of the word is defined by Peter in Acts 2:30–36. Jesus is destined to sit and distribute salvation's benefits from God's side, ruling with the Father.

2:13 Heavenly host refers to an entourage of angels.

2:14 Glory here refers to praise given to God. goodwill toward men: The phrase means that people are the objects of God's goodwill. In ancient Judaism, this phrase described a limited group of people who were the objects of God's special grace. The promise of peace (1:79) and goodwill would come to those who welcome God's only Son.

2:15–20 marveled: Similar to John's birth (1:65, 66), Jesus' birth produced marvel and discussion.

2:21 eight days: According to the law, a Jewish boy was to be circumcised on the eighth day (Gen. 17:12; Lev. 12:3).

2:22–24 Her purification refers to a ceremony in which a new mother of a son was declared ceremonially clean again (Lev. 12:6). The ceremony took place forty days after the birth. At this ceremony, the mother could offer a lamb or two pigeons (Lev. 12:8). Jesus' family chose the pigeons (v.

24), suggesting that they did not have and could not afford to buy an animal. The journey to Jerusalem from Bethlehem was only five miles. Present Him to the Lord refers to the normal presentation of a firstborn son to God (Ex. 13:2, 12; Num. 18:6; 1 Sam. 1 and 2). Luke shows that Jesus' parents were faithful Jews who kept the requirements of the law.

2:25, 26 Simeon was waiting for the Consolation of Israel, the Comforter of Israel, a hope that parallels the hope of national deliverance expressed in the two hymns of ch. 1. This deliverance would involve the work of Messiah, as v. 26 suggests. Holy Spirit: Luke highlights the presence of the Spirit at the beginning of God's work in Jesus.

2:27, 28 into the temple: The location within the temple is not given, but Mary's presence suggests either the court of Gentiles or the court of women.

A Patient Believer

There was nothing special about Simeon that qualified him to take up the Christ child in his arms and bless Him (Luke 2:28). To our knowledge he was not an ordained religious leader, and he had no credentials or special authority. He was simply a "just and devout" man who had a close walk with the Holy Spirit (2:25–27).

Thus, Simeon, whose name means "God hears," is an example of how God honors those who engage in lifetimes of quiet prayer and constant watchfulness. Simeon was a man of patient faith, yet his wait for the Messiah must have seemed interminable. He likely had many opportunities for doubt, as numerous would-be Messiahs sounded false alarms in the land.

Yet somehow he knew that the Redeemer would first come not as a great, heavenly champion wrapped in banners of nationalism, nor with a political agenda of violence, but as a Baby carried in the arms of His parents. His kingdom would prove to be a stumbling block to some and the Rock of salvation to others, both Jew and Gentile. Simeon also knew that the young couple standing before him would be hurt by the controversy that would eventually surround their Son (2:34, 35).

2:29 According to Your word: Simeon thanks God (blessed God) and first recalls the fulfillment of the promise of God (v. 26). This promise is the one that suggests Simeon is old, although his age is never given. Simeon, a picture of faith, can rest knowing God's plan will be completed, even though he will not see it come to full fruition in his lifetime.

2:30 Simeon identified God's salvation as being personified in Jesus. For Jesus to come was for God's salvation to come.

2:31 You have prepared: This suggests God's design and the fulfillment of a plan.

2:32 A light to bring revelation to the Gentiles … the glory of Your people Israel: This is the first explicit statement in Luke that includes both Jew and Gentile. Salvation is portrayed as light (1:79). It would be a revelation to Gentiles because they would be able to participate in God's blessing with a fullness that had not been revealed in the OT (Eph. 2:11–22;

3:1–7). Jesus is the glory of Israel because through Him the nation would see the fulfillment of God's promises; the nation's special role in God's plan would be vindicated (Is. 46:13; 60:1–3; Rom. 9:1–5; 11:11–29).

2:33–34 the fall and rising of many: This is the first hint that Jesus' career is not all roses. The plan is emphasized by the phrase is destined. The picture of the rise and fall is conceptually parallel to Is. 8:14, 15 and Is. 28:13–16, which are used frequently in the NT to describe the division Jesus brought in the nation (Rom. 9:33; 1 Pet. 2:6–8; Luke 20:17, 18). There is some discussion whether one group in Israel that rises and then falls is discussed here or whether the reference is to a division of a nation into two groups. The latter is more likely, given Lucan appeal to the idea of division caused by Jesus (6:20–26; 13:28, 29, 33–35; 16:25; 18:9–14; 19:44, 47, 48; 20:14–17, especially 12:51). The reference that Jesus will be a sign … spoken against also adds to the note of division. In Acts, Luke shows many in the nation responding, but most do not.

2:35 a sword: The image is of a large, broad sword striking Mary. She will suffer much pain in watching Jesus' rejection and in watching Him form a new group with priorities that lead to such rejection. The remark, as the text notes, is a parenthesis. thoughts … revealed: This is the recognition that Jesus is a litmus test for where people stand before God. He is a judge who will expose the thoughts of people (Acts 10:42, 43; 17:30–31).

2:36, 37 It is not clear whether eighty-four years was Anna's age, or how long she had been a widow. The testimony of this pious woman complements Simeon's testimony. Both men and women observed God's work early in Jesus' life. Anna's work as a prophetess in the temple court suggests that she addressed all who would listen to her, as did Miriam (Ex. 15:20), Deborah (Judg. 4:4), and Huldah (2 Kin. 22:14). Philip's daughters are another example of prophetesses in the NT (Acts 21:9).

2:38 Redemption in Jerusalem is another way of speaking of the Consolation of Israel (v. 25).

2:39 Galilee: The family finally returns to what will be their home in Nazareth. Luke does not note any of the visits or travels that Matt. 2 relates.

2:40 the Child grew: With this note, the story of Jesus' infancy ends. The narrative picks up in v. 41 some twelve years later. These two verses reveal the growth of Jesus' human nature, whereas in the divine nature He was unchanging and infinite. Christians must balance both these natures when speaking of the Lord Jesus. Failure to do this has resulted in many unbiblical traditions about the boyhood of Jesus.

2:41 The annual pilgrimage to Jerusalem was customary for many who lived outside the city. The law commanded three pilgrimages for the men each year: for Passover, Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles (Ex. 23:14–17; Deut. 16:16). By the first century, most Jewish men made annual pilgrimages to Jerusalem because of the distance many had to travel due to the dispersion of the Israelites across Asia Minor.

2:42 twelve years old: Jesus is now at the age when intensive instruction for Him begins in preparation for His reaching the age of responsibility at thirteen, when a boy was accepted into the religious community as a man responsible to keep the law.

2:43—45 Entire families, including extended families, frequently traveled together. This would account for the parents of Jesus not noting His absence until the evening encampment.

2:46–48 The teachers were Jewish rabbis. Note that Jesus was not lecturing, but engaging the rabbis in theological discussion (v. 47).

2:49 I must: Even at twelve, Jesus knew that God had commissioned Him to accomplish certain tasks on this earth (4:43; 9:22; 13:33; 17:25; 19:5; 22:37; 24:7, 44). about My Father's business: This is the first indication in Luke's Gospel that Jesus knew He had a unique mission and a unique relationship to the Father. The Greek text is elliptical here and reads, "I must be in the … of my Father," without specifying a place or activity. Either Jesus must be about the work of God, as the translation suggests; or he must be in the house of God, discussing God's truth. In the end the two possibilities are not very different.

2:50–52 did not understand: Despite all of the revelation to which Jesus' parents were subject, they still were trying to understand aspects of Jesus' mission. The disciples will have similar troubles (9:45; 10:21–24; 18:34). The realization of who Jesus is sometimes takes time, since His person and mission are unique and break new ground (Matt. 16:21–23; John 18:10, 11).

Bust of Tiberius, emperor of the Roman Empire at the time when Jesus began His public ministry in Palestine (Luke 3:1)

3:1 Tiberius Caesar began to rule after his stepfather Augustus died in A.D. 14. Judea was a senatorial province, ruled by a governor or procurator. Pontius Pilate held this position and was responsible for administering the region and collecting taxes for Rome. Herod is Herod Antipas, who ruled Galilee and Perea from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39. Herod's brother Archelaus had control of Judea and Samaria until A.D. 6, when he was banished. Herod's other brother Philip ruled the northern area east of the Jordan River.

3:2 Annas the high priest (A.D. 7–14) was succeeded in office by Caiaphas, his son-in-law, around A.D. 18. Caiaphas served with brief breaks from then until A.D. 37. In addition to Caiaphas, all of Annas's five sons served as high priest at one point or another. It is clear that Annas retained the influence as well as the title of his former office. The various rulers that Luke lists show the complexity of the historical and political situation in Israel during Jesus' day. A first-century Israelite had to deal with the edicts of the Roman emperor, the regulations of the governor over Israel, and the judgments of the religious leaders of Israel. The date of these events about John the Baptist, given the date of A.D. 33 for the crucifixion and a date based on the arrival of Tiberius to total power, is A.D. 29 (23:12). John: The Baptist is also attested to in extrabiblical material (Josephus, Antiq. 18.116–119).

3:3 Baptism figuratively means "to be identified with," as an unbleached cloth is identified with the color in a vat of dye when it is dipped. As John the Baptist preached and the people identified with his message, they were baptized as an outward sign of their inward repentance or "change of mind."

3:4–6 Prepare the way: This citation from Is. 40:3–5 declares the coming of God's deliverance. Luke cites the text more fully than Matthew or Mark. He carries the passage through to its mention of salvation being seen by all flesh (v. 6), thus highlighting that the gospel is for all people. The preparation for the arrival of a king typically meant that a road was prepared for his journey. This is what Isaiah compares to the arrival of God's salvation, both after the Babylonian captivity and in God's final work of salvation. Isaiah 40 introduces the entirety of Is. 40—66, which discusses both these events (Is. 49:8–11; 52:11, 12; 62:6–10, especially 57:14–17). One event pictures, to a lesser degree, the other greater event, since God works in patterns. The Gospel writers compare John to the one who announces that the time is right to get ready for such an arrival. The preparation alluded to here is spiritual, the readiness of the heart, as his preaching shows.

3:7 As the multitudes flocked to hear John the Baptist, many people went through the outward motions of baptism, but their actions did not truly represent their inward attitude. These people were not genuinely interested in the kind of King and kingdom that John was presenting.

3:8, 9 John the Baptist warned that the fruits of repentance are necessary, not the claim of an ancestral connection to Abraham. External genealogical connections would not change one's attitude to God.

3:10–14 What shall we do: A genuine change of mind resulted in a change of action for the people, the tax collectors, and the soldiers. The repentant were instructed to give to those in need, to work at their jobs with integrity, to refrain from abusing their power, and to be content with earning a basic wage.

3:11 two tunics: One was an undergarment, and the other was an outer garment. A person did not need two when another person had none.

3:12–14 Tax collectors were Jewish agents employed by those who had purchased the right to collect taxes for the Roman state. Tax collectors often added interest to cover their own expenses and to pad their income. They were disliked both for their business practices and for their support of the occupying state.

3:15–17 One mightier than I: This is the first direct mention of Jesus by John. John's baptism was minor compared to what was coming from Jesus, who would bring the Holy Spirit and fire (Matt. 3:11). These two facets of Christ's work relate to His first and second comings. Baptism in the Holy Spirit is referred to seven times in the NT—four times in the Gospels (Matt. 3:11; Mark 1:8; John 1:33), twice in Acts (Acts 1:5; 11:16), and once in the Epistles (1 Cor. 12:13). As a result of Christ's work at His first coming, believers are placed into one family (1 Cor. 12:13) and commended to the care of the Holy Spirit. When Christ comes a second time, He will come with the fire of judgment. Notice that in the Gospels, the two of the four parallel passages that refer to the hypocrisy also mention the fire of judgment. Chaff refers to useless shells of grain that were separated from the useful wheat by the winnowing fan, a wooden forklike shovel that lifted the grain in the air so that the wind could separate it. The chaff was burned, picturing those who will undergo judgment. The unquenchable fire indicates the thorough nature of the judgment.

3:18–20 he shut John up in prison: This event is related earlier in Luke than in Matthew (14:3–5) and Mark (6:17–20) and is clearly moved up in chronology, since John cannot baptize Jesus in vv. 21, 22 if John is in jail! Herod had first married the daughter of Aretas IV of Arabia but then divorced her to marry his own niece Herodias, who already had been his brother Philip's wife. Not only was the divorce problematic, but marrying such a close relative was a problem (Lev. 18:16; 20:21). Only Luke notes that this was but one issue John raised. John lost his head for this. His ministry was not very successful with the powerful, but it was faithful to God. Josephus also notes this event (Antiq. 18.116–119).

3:21, 22 a voice came from heaven: This is one of two heavenly endorsements of Jesus' ministry. The other is found in 9:35. You are My beloved Son; in You I am well pleased: This statement combines two ideas. The idea of God's Son comes from Ps. 2:7, a psalm about God's chosen King. The idea of God's pleasure comes from the image of the Servant in Is. 42:1. This image depicts Jesus' election by God, and the special favor He enjoyed. The fact that Jesus is both King and Servant is fundamental to Jesus' identity.

3:23–38 as was supposed: People naturally assumed that Jesus was the physical son of both Joseph and Mary. Luke corrected this misunderstanding by emphasizing that Jesus was only apparently Joseph's physical son. Luke's genealogy is unlike Matthew's, although both go back to David and Abraham. Luke traces Jesus' line all the way back to Adam, showing Jesus' significance for all people. Matthew provides the legal lineage from David through Joseph to Jesus, while Luke provides the physical lineage from David through Mary to Jesus.

4:1, 2 The order of the temptations differs between Matthew and Luke. Luke has the temptation about Jerusalem last, probably because Jerusalem is the place Jesus is headed for His decisive confrontation with Satan (13:32–35). In His temptation Jesus demonstrated not only His ability to resist the devil, but also His allegiance to God. What Adam could not do, Jesus did. Where Israel had failed in the wilderness, Jesus succeeded.

4:3 If You are the Son of God: This is a conditional statement. In other words, Satan was saying: "Let's assume for the sake of argument that You are the Son of God." In fact, Satan was challenging Jesus' identity and authority.

4:4 It is written: Jesus responded to Satan's temptation by quoting Deut. 8:3. Jesus refused to operate independently of God. The Spirit had led Him into the wilderness to prepare Him for His ministry, so eating at Satan's instruction would have shown a lack of dependence on the Father.

4:5 all the kingdoms of the world: This temptation was an attempt to offer Jesus power by the wrong means. Satan's method involved a detour around the Cross, an inducement to "take the easy way" to power.

4:6, 7 this has been delivered to me: Satan's claim here is exaggerated. He has great authority over the earth (John 12:31; 14:30; 16:11; 2 Cor. 4:4; Eph. 2:2), but not the authority to deliver kingdoms.

4:8 Get behind Me, Satan: Later, Jesus makes the same statement to Peter when he becomes a channel for Satan's message (Matt. 16:23). In response to Satan's second temptation, Jesus cited Deut. 6:13. Jesus knew that only God is worthy of worship, that only God is to be served.

4:9 The pinnacle of the temple may refer either to the high temple gate or to the southeast corner of the temple that loomed over a cliff some 450 feet high, which Josephus described as making one dizzy (Antiq. 15.411–412).

4:10, 11 He shall give His angels charge over you: Satan cited Ps. 91:11, 12, reminding Jesus of God's promise of protection. However, the mere use of biblical words does not always reveal God's will, particularly if they are placed in the wrong context.

4:12 You shall not tempt the LORD: In response to Satan's third temptation, Jesus cited Deut. 6:16. God is to be trusted, not tested. The Deuteronomy passage refers to Israel's attempt to test God at Meribah (Ex. 17:1–7). Jesus would not repeat the nation's error of unfaithfulness to God.

4:13 until an opportune time: This was but the first of several encounters Jesus had with Satan and his forces (11:14–23).

IN COMPARISON

From Defeat to Victory: Adam and Jesus Confront Temptation

1 John 2:16	First Adam Genesis 3:6	Second Adam—Christ Luke 4:1–13
"the lust of the flesh"	"the tree was good for food"	"command this stone to become bread"
"the lust of the eyes"	"it was pleasant to the eyes"	"the devil . . . showed Him all the kingdoms"
"the pride of life"	"a tree desirable to make one wise"	"throw Yourself down from here"

4:14–17 Most synagogue services had a reading from the Law and one from the Prophets, with an exposition that tied the texts together. Jesus expounded from Is. 61. The scroll was kept in the synagogue and handed to Jesus by an attendant.

4:18, 19 By citing Is. 61, Jesus was claiming to be a royal figure and to have a prophetic mission (v. 24). Jesus healed the brokenhearted, referring to those who were discouraged because of their plight in life. Jesus proclaimed liberty to the captives. In the OT captivity refers to Israel's exile (1:68–74); here captivity refers to sin (1:77; 7:47; 24:47; Acts 2:38; 5:31; 10:43; 13:38; 26:18). Jesus gave sight to the blind, a reference to His miraculous works (7:22), though not without spiritual overtones (1:78, 79; 10:23, 24; 18:41–43). Jesus set at liberty the oppressed. This was originally the call of Israel, but the nation had failed in its assignment (Is. 58:6). What Israel had failed to do, Jesus does. The image here addresses both physical and spiritual realities. Jesus proclaimed the acceptable year of the LORD, an allusion to Jubilee. This was every fiftieth year, in which all debt was forgiven, slaves were given their freedom, and ancestral lands were given back to its original family. The Year of Jubilee allowed for a new start (Lev. 25:10). Jesus offers a total cancellation of spiritual debt and a new beginning to those who respond to His message.

4:20 Jesus closed the book in the middle of the sentence (Is. 61:2). He did not continue because the next phrase—"the day of vengeance of our God"—was not being fulfilled then. This is a classic example of telescoping events that have significant time periods between them.

4:21 Jesus proclaimed the fulfillment of God's plan and promise in Himself, since He is the figure described in the passage. Luke often notes the presence of fulfillment by including a reference to today (2:11; 5:26; 12:28; 13:32, 33; 19:5, 9; 22:34, 61; 23:43).

4:22 marveled: They are amazed at the power of Jesus' words and the nature of His message. Is this not? Doubt remains, since a humble carpenter's son surely cannot be such a central figure in God's plan.

4:23 Physician, heal yourself: The request for more signs was for Jesus to prove His claim by repeating the type of miraculous work He had done in Capernaum (Mark 1:21–27). Such requests for signs often contained a mocking tone (11:16; 22:64; 23:8, 35–37).

4:24 Jesus made it clear that He is God's messenger who declares God's ways. However, Jesus also knew that a prophet is often rejected. This is a lesson of the OT to which Jesus and other NT authors allude (11:47–51; Acts 7:51–53).

4:25–27 Jesus speaks of a period of widespread unfaithfulness to God (1 Kin. 17; 18; 2 Kin. 5:1–14). During this period, judgment came on the nation in the form of famine. The only people to receive healing were Gentiles. With such an allusion, Jesus warned His listeners not to be unfaithful like their ancestors by rejecting His message.

4:28–30 filled with wrath: The crowd, which knew its OT history, got the point of Jesus' accusation. They wanted to throw him down. This is the first hint of rejection in Luke, but it is not time for the full rejection of Jesus. Thus, He is supernaturally delivered by passing through the violent crowd that had taken Him to the cliff.

4:31, 32 Luke emphasizes Jesus' teaching (v. 15). The perception of Jesus' authority probably arose as a result of His discussing issues directly, rather than merely noting tradition.

4:33, 34 Let us alone: The demon knew that Jesus possessed divine authority, and he wanted nothing to do with Him. the Holy One of God: Even a demon witnessed to Jesus' divinity. In the OT the title Holy One referred to a person with a special call from God (see "holy man" in 2 Kin. 4:9 and "saint" in Ps. 106:16). Luke records the demon's use of this title as proof that Jesus is the promised Messiah (v. 41; 1:31–35).

4:35–37 rebuked: This term in Aramaic was a technical term for calling evil into submission. Jesus' authority over evil forces is clear. He possessed the authority and power to grant salvation, as well as to confront all opponents to it. Be quiet: Jesus, not Satan and his demons, controlled who would testify to His messianic identity. Why Jesus silenced such a confession is not clear. Possibilities include the following: (1) A messianic confession might label Him as a political revolutionary, something He was not. (2) Jesus might have preferred that His works testify to His messianic identity (7:18–23). (3) The Israelites might have thought it was not appropriate for a messiah to be announced until messianic works were achieved. Others regarded as messiahs by the Jews in this period, such as the Teacher of Righteousness at Qumran and Simeon ben Kosebah, were also hesitant to make direct messianic claims. (4) Jesus might not have welcomed a testimony from a demon. (5) It might not have been God's time for Jesus to reveal His messianic identity.

4:38, 39 The fact that Simon's mother-in-law served her guests immediately indicates that her recovery from fever was instantaneous. Miraculous healing in the Bible was always immediate (5:13).

4:40, 41 You are the Christ, the Son of God: This confession, unique to the Gospel of Luke, shows the close connection Luke makes between Jesus' sonship and messiahship.

4:42, 43 The kingdom is referred to thirty times in Luke and six times in Acts. Jesus announced the rule of God through His person, in dealing with sin (24:47), in distributing the Spirit as He mediates blessing from God's side (24:49), and in reigning with His followers according to the OT promise (Ps. 2:7–12; Acts 3:18–22).

4:44 Galilee: This probably refers to the whole of Palestine in this context (23:5; Acts 10:37; 11:1, 29; 26:20).

IN CONTEXT

Life on the Water

Fishing on the Sea of Galilee was big business. This now-famous body of water, eight miles wide and thirteen miles long, lay beside a fertile plain renowned for its agriculture. In Jesus' day, nine cities crowded its shorelines, each with no less than 15,000 citizens, possibly making the region's total population greater than Jerusalem's.

The names of the Galilean towns reflect the importance of fishing to the life and economy of the area. For example, at Tarichaea, "the place of salt fish," workers packed fish for shipment to Jerusalem and export to Rome. Bethsaida—from which at least four fishermen left their nets to follow Jesus (Matt. 4:18–22; John 1:44)—means "fish town"; most of the town was employed in the fishing industry.

Shoals just offshore were a fisherman's paradise. In Jesus' day, hundreds of fishing boats trawled the lake. Galileans ate little meat besides fish. It came highly salted, as there was no other way of preserving the "catch of the day."

Two kinds of nets were used—the sagene and the amphiblestron. The sagene (Matt. 13:47) was larger. Fitted with both weighted and buoyant material, it was used for trawling. In water, it stood almost upright and bagged fish as it was dragged behind a boat. The smaller amphiblestron was shaped like an umbrella and was used for casting off the side of a boat (Mark 1:16).

The fisherman's day did not end with a return to shore. Mending and washing nets, preserving fish, maintaining boats and supplies, training and supervising crews, and negotiating with merchants and others in the shipping industry made for long, tiring hours.

5:1 The Lake of Gennesaret is also known as the Sea of Galilee and the Sea of Tiberias.

5:2, 3 washing their nets: They were cleaning their nets from the evening's labor (v. 5).

5:4 let down your nets: This was a "parabolic action." Jesus commanded Simon to place his nets in the water in order to depict a spiritual reality. Jesus, in v. 10, explained the spiritual truth: Simon's new occupation would be fishing for people who would do the will of Jesus.

5:5, 6 at Your word I will let down the net: This is Peter's statement of faith. The fisherman noted that he and his companions had just failed to make a catch at the best time for fishing, the evening. The circumstances were not good for a catch at the time of Jesus' command, but Peter chose to obey His word and let down his nets anyway.

5:7 they began to sink: The success was overwhelming—two boats so full they were sinking.

5:8, 9 Peter's confession indicates that he recognized God's work through Jesus. Peter, as a sinful man, was not worthy to be in Jesus' presence, because Jesus was holy.

5:10 Do not be afraid: Jesus does not drive away the sinner who recognizes his or her wretched condition. He accepts the confessing sinner and offers that person the opportunity of reconciliation with God. Then He sends the forgiven sinner out to do the work of God. catch men: Peter's commission was to rescue men from the danger of sin.

5:11 forsook all and followed Him: Following Jesus became the main priority in the disciples' lives. Such priority is the essence of discipleship.

5:12 The term leprosy was used broadly in the ancient world. It included psoriasis, lupus, and ringworm. Lepers were isolated from the rest of society (Lev. 13:45, 46), but could be restored to the community when they recovered (Lev. 14). Leprosy is no longer a threat today but a similar equivalent in our culture to such ostracism may be AIDS.

5:13 The disease responded immediately to the Creator's touch (4:39). Jesus honored the leper's humble request for health because he recognized Jesus' power and authority.

5:14 show yourself to the priest: Jesus commanded that the regulation of Lev. 14 be followed. In silencing the healed leper, Jesus sought to avoid drawing excessive attention to His healing ministry. He wanted people to seek Him for spiritual healing, not merely physical healing. The leper's testimony was to God's faithfulness and His exercise of power through Jesus (7:22).

5:15, 16 to hear, and to be healed: Now it is teaching and healing that draw the crowds (Contrast 4:14, 15, but see 4:40).

5:17–19 The religious leadership of Israel began to watch Jesus closely. The Pharisees were a group of about six thousand pious, influential teachers in the synagogues. They were a group who meticulously followed the law, adhering to the traditional rules that kept a person from inadvertently breaking it. The teachers of the law were officials trained in the Law of Moses. Also known as scribes, these men were in effect the religious lawyers of the Pharisees. In the Judaism in the first century there was a wide range of factions, including the Sadducees and the Essenes. The Pharisees, despite their relatively low numbers, were very influential.

5:20 Luke directly links faith and forgiveness here. According to the OT, only God was able to forgive sin (Ps. 103:12). Rather than announcing that God would forgive the man's sin, Jesus proclaimed that the man's sins were forgiven. This act was blasphemous to the ears of Jesus' theologically sensitive audience.

5:21 blasphemies: The charge of the scribes and the Pharisees was that Jesus' claim dishonored God. This was a serious charge; the conviction of blasphemy would eventually lead to Jesus' death (22:70, 71).

5:22 perceived their thoughts: The reference here is to prophetic insight, since the leaders' thoughts had not been spoken. Jesus "knew what was in man" (John 2:25).

5:23 Jesus posed a riddle to His audience. From an external point of view, it would seem easier to declare sins forgiven than to actually heal a person. In reality, however, one has to possess more authority to forgive sin. Jesus linked the healing to what it represented, the forgiveness of sin. Jesus forgave the man's sins and healed him at the same time.

5:24–28 Son of Man is an Aramaic idiom that refers to a human being, meaning "someone" or "I." Jesus used this idiom as a title, taken from Dan. 7:13, 14 (21:27; 22:69; Mark 14:62). In the Book of Daniel, the phrase Son of Man describes a figure who shares authority with the Ancient of Days. Association with the clouds gives a supernatural aura to the figure, for only God rides the clouds (Ex. 14:20; 34:5; Num. 10:34; Ps. 104:3). In using the title here, Jesus claimed the authority to forgive sin, an authority that was limited to God.

5:29 This verse describes the first of several feasts or meals in the Book of Luke (7:36–50; 9:10–17; 10:38–42; 11:37–54; 14:1–24; 22:14–38; 24:28–32, 41–43). In ancient Israel the table was a place where spiritual points were taught and where fellowship occurred.

5:30 The issue of eating with sinners was sensitive in Judaism since some believed that eating with such company conveyed an acceptance of that person's sin. Jesus preferred pursuing relationships that might lead sinners to God rather than "quarantining" Himself from such people (1 Cor. 5:9–13).

5:31 no need of a physician: Jesus was not saying that the Pharisees and scribes had no need of spiritual healing. Instead He was saying that only those who know their spiritual need can be treated. As self-righteous people, the Pharisees would not come for aid, and in their own eyes, did not need a doctor.

5:32 Jesus' mission was to call sinners to repentance. Upon His ascension, Jesus commissioned His disciples to the same task (24:47; see also 3:3, 8; 13:1–5; 15:7–10; 16:30; 17:3, 4; Acts 26:20). In this passage repentance is pictured as a patient who recognizes that illness is present and that only Jesus, the Great Physician, can treat it. A humble approach to God for spiritual healing is the essence of repentance.

5:33 fast: The Pharisees fasted twice a week, on Mondays and Thursdays (18:12), as well as on the Day of Atonement (Lev. 16:29). They also fasted as an act of penitence (Is. 58:1–9) and to recall four times a year the destruction of Jerusalem (Zech. 7:3, 5; 8:19). The goal of fasting was to dedicate oneself to prayer and to focus on God. John led an ascetic life, which his followers also imitated (7:24–28; Matt. 11:1–19).

5:34 bridegroom: Jesus compared His presence to the joyous time of a wedding. In the OT this image was used for God's relationship to His people or to describe the messianic period (Is. 54:5, 6; 62:4, 5; Jer. 2:2; Ezek. 16; Hos. 2:14–23). Jesus explained that while He was on earth, the time was not right for fasts.

5:35 The image of the removal of the bridegroom is the first hint in Jesus' ministry of His approaching death (see 2:35 for the first allusion). The church will (and did) fast (Acts 13:1, 2; 14:23). Though such fasting returned, it was not required or regulated to the same degree as in Judaism.

5:36–38 the new makes a tear: Jesus pointed out that one cannot mix old things (Judaism) with new things (the new way He brings). The attempt to mix the two is compared to repairing clothes. The original cloth has already shrunk and when the new cloth shrinks a rip occurs. In addition, the two pieces do not match. Jesus' teaching here indicates the discontinuity between the old way and the new.

5:39 Jesus pointed out that someone who likes old wine will not even try new wine, since such a person is satisfied with the old. This analogy explained why some people in Israel had trouble turning to Jesus.

6:1 plucked … ate … rubbing: According to Jewish tradition, the disciples were reaping, threshing, and preparing food, and so were violating the commandment not to work on the Sabbath. It is clear that at this point the Pharisees were watching Jesus carefully (v. 7).

6:2 what is not lawful: The Pharisees wanted to know why the disciples had violated the traditions surrounding the Law of Moses (14:3; Matt. 12:12; 19:3; 22:17; 27:6; Mark 3:4; 12:14).

6:3, 4 In responding to the Pharisees' charges against His disciples, Jesus appealed to 1 Sam. 21:1–7; 22:9, 10. David and his men ate the showbread that only the priests could eat. This was not lawful, but God did not punish David for it. Such bread was taken from the twelve loaves placed on a table in the holy place and changed once a week (Ex. 25:30; 39:36; 40:22, 23; Lev. 24:5–9). Jesus pointed out that if David and his men could violate the law to satisfy their hunger, His disciples could do the same. Jesus may have been attempting to show that the law was never intended to be applied so absolutely that it would take precedence over the necessities of daily life (Mark 2:27).

6:5 Regardless of the laws and customs that the Pharisees cited (v. 2), Jesus has authority over the Sabbath. Jesus' claim of divine authority here is similar to His claim of authority to forgive sins in 5:21, 24.

6:6–8 knew their thoughts: Jesus functions like a prophet and whenever this phrase appears, one can expect Jesus either to act or correct improper thinking (5:22; 9:47; 11:17; 19:15; 24:38; John 2:25). The command to stand makes the healing a very public affair.

6:9 Is it lawful: The issue was the correct way of conducting oneself on the Sabbath (v. 2). Jesus chose to do good. The plots of the Pharisees represented doing evil and destroying. That was truly breaking the Sabbath (v. 7). To save here means simply to heal, as Jesus was about to do.

6:10–11 Rage here is irrational or mindless anger. The parallels in Matt. 12:14; Mark 3:6 make it clear that the Pharisees started to plot against Jesus in earnest after this confrontation.

6:12 in prayer: Here we find an example of Jesus spending time with God before an important event in His life (3:21; 22:41–44).

6:13 chose twelve: Jesus selected the main body of disciples, those who would become responsible for leading the early church (Matt. 10:2–4; Mark 3:16–19; Acts 1:13). The raw material was common humanity, but Christ shaped them to be the foundation stones of the church which was born at Pentecost (compare Eph. 2:20).

6:14 Bartholomew is probably Nathanael of John 1:45.

6:15 Matthew is Levi of 5:27–32 (Mark 2:14–17).

6:16 Judas the son of James is probably Thaddaeus (Matt. 10:3; Mark 3:18). This is not the Lord's half brother.

6:17, 18 A level place probably refers to a plateau on a mountain. The setting and the contents of the sermon that follows suggest that Luke is providing a shorter version of the Sermon on the Mount, omitting those portions that have to do with the law. Points of similarities between Luke's account here and Matthew's account in Matt. 5—7 are as follows: (1) Both begin with a series of beatitudes. (2) Both contain Jesus' teaching on loving one's enemies. (3) Both end with the parable of the two builders. The theme of the sermon is the disciple's walk. The audience for the sermon consisted of both disciples and the great multitude. Jesus did not restrict His remarks simply to those who believed. Tyre and Sidon: Jesus' fame extended even into Gentile regions. The people were drawn by His teaching and healing ministry.

6:19 power went out from him: It is clear that Jesus' healing draws upon resources related to the special work of the Spirit through Him (Acts 10:38).

The Poverty of the Kingdom

"Blessed are you poor, for yours is the kingdom of God." A consummate communicator, Jesus began His sermon with a sentence that certainly must have riveted His audience. Probably most of them were poor. Their lives were far from easy; their rough, worn hands attested to that fact. The difficulties and hardships of their lives drove them to travel the hot and dusty roads of Judea to listen to this prophet Jesus. Perhaps He would tell them more about the kingdom of God. Most of them had placed their hopes on the coming of this glorious kingdom. They longed for the day when the righteous Messiah, not the cruel Roman governor, would rule their lives.

Jesus began His sermon with an attention-grabbing, irony-filled series of blessings that have intrigued and puzzled Bible scholars and laymen for centuries. Often referred to as the Beatitudes, these statements contrast worldly goods and values with a heavenly estimation of people's affairs. The Beatitudes provide us with a heavenly perspective, evaluating the present in the light of eternity. They remind us that things are not always what they seem, and certainly not what they will one day be.

At face value, it appears that Jesus was making a blanket promise of salvation and blessing to anyone and everyone below the poverty line (6:20). Some have adopted just such an interpretation and have felt a special call to aim their ministries at the downtrodden. In this view, the poor are seen as God's chosen people. Though they suffer in this world, and perhaps because they suffer now, they can expect glorious blessing in the world to come. And the adherents of this view believe that while in this world the people of God should do everything possible to alleviate the suffering of the poor. In this way the kingdom of God is extended.

Many interpret the word poor as referring to the "poverty of spirit" that Jesus talks about in a very similar sermon, the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:3). In other words, Jesus was offering hope and joy to those who freely recognize their spiritual poverty before God. These individuals are blessed because they come to God with nothing to offer Him except their great need. Thus Christ's offer of the kingdom of God is not a promise to every poor person. Rather it is a statement about the future condition of those who humbly choose to follow Him. When a person rejects worldly values and embraces the godly teachings of Jesus, then that individual begins to experience the reign of Christ in his or her life. This is how we enjoy the kingdom of God now in this fallen world. One day we will experience the joys of this kingdom in a fuller, more glorious way.

To summarize, anyone, rich or poor (and in a spiritual sense we are all poor), can taste the deep joy of God's rule and the blessing of His kingdom. But doing so requires that we renounce the ways of the world and humbly submit our ways to God (Is. 66:2). This kind of poverty, an emptying of ourselves of our self-centered desires, is what God expects from everyone.

6:20 Though Jesus was speaking to the entire crowd, the beatitudes of vv. 20–23 were directed to the disciples. Blessed means "happy," referring to the special joy and favor that comes upon those who experience God's grace. poor … kingdom of God: In general, the disciples of Jesus were not wealthy (1 Cor. 1:26–29; James 2:5). They were poor men who had come humbly to trust in God. All of the promises of God's rule both now and in the future belong to such disciples.

6:21 The reason for the hunger and poverty is found in v. 22: persecution. Jesus promised that God would provide the disciples with all the sustenance they needed. weep … laugh: Any present suffering will be turned into joy.

6:22, 23 hate … exclude … revile you: Here is the cause of the disciples' precarious condition: persecution for the Son of Man's sake. Identification with Jesus usually leads to rejection and hardship, but the disciple who has left all to follow Jesus understands what placing Jesus first means. He or she also recognizes that God is aware of all suffering.

6:24 The woes of vv. 24–26 contrast with the beatitudes of vv. 20–23. A woe is a cry of pain that results from misfortune. Just as God presented blessings for obedience and curses for disobedience in Deut. 28, Jesus presented blessings and woes to His disciples who were anticipating the kingdom. The same blessings and woes apply to believers today when their works are evaluated (1 Cor. 3:12–15; 2 Cor. 5:10; 1 John 2:28; Rev. 22:12). you who are rich … have received your consolation: The background for this remark is found in Mary's song of praise in 1:51–53. All that the rich receive is what they acquire on earth (Matt. 6:19–21). Luke records many of Jesus' critical remarks about the wealthy. Their wealth typically blinds them to their spiritual poverty and their need for salvation (1:53; 12:16–21; 14:12; 16:1–14, 19–26; 18:18–25; 19:1–10; 21:1–4).

6:25, 26 full … hunger: This is called "eschatological reversal." Suffering will be their fate. laugh … mourn and weep: Again, comfort and ease is replaced with pain (1 John 2:28; Rev. 3:17, 18).

6:27, 28 The threat of religious persecution was very real when Jesus presented His command for extraordinary love. The reference to a cursing enemy suggests a context of religious persecution. do good: This makes love practical through visible expression.

6:29 offer the other: This is a description of being repeatedly vulnerable in the face of injustice. The one who seeks to love will always remain exposed and at risk. A tunic was an undergarment; a cloak was an outer garment.

6:30 do not ask them back: Jesus' instruction here is to forgive and forget. The commands of vv. 29, 30 are expressed in such absolute terms that they force the listener to reflect on them by contrasting them with the normal responses people would have to such injustices.

6:31 as you want men to do to you: This is the "golden rule." Note that Jesus' command is stated in the positive (contrast Lev. 19:18). Such love as Jesus describes recognizes the preferences of others and is sensitive to them.

6:32–34 what credit is that? Repeating the examples, Jesus' point is that a disciple's love is to be more than that of the world and that such love will require sacrifice.

6:35 The practice of loving one's enemies is modeled by God Himself, who is kind to the unthankful and evil. Jesus also notes that the reward will be great for the losses suffered while practicing this type of love. The divine compensation package is one hundredfold—that is, 10,000 percent (Matt. 19:28, 29).

6:36 be merciful: This is another way to define the essence of love. It is forgiving. The disciples are asked to apply a standard that matches what God does (just as God is merciful).

6:37 Judge not … Condemn not … Forgive: The idea here is not that one should ignore sin or refuse to discuss its consequences (11:39–52; Gal. 6:1, 2); rather, one should be gracious and quick to forgive.

6:38 good measure: This illustration comes from the marketplace where grain was poured out, shaken down, and then filled to overflowing so the buyer received the full amount purchased. Such is the full measure that will be returned to one who has been generous.

6:39 The blind here refers to teachers who cannot see where they are going and are unable to lead others. Jesus was warning against self-righteousness and arrogance. It is debated whether Jesus was describing the Pharisees here or simply warning His disciples about dangerous attitudes. The focus on the disciples' attitudes suggests the latter, though the remark would also have applied to the teachers with whom Jesus was in conflict.

6:40 will be like his teacher: Jesus remarks that usually the disciple will be like the teacher. The implication is, be careful who your teacher is.

6:41 A speck represents a small fault in another person in contrast to a plank, which represents a large fault in the one making the criticism.

6:42-45 First remove, and then: This makes it clear that confrontation about sin is to continue. Jesus says the confronter should look to see that sin is dealt with in one's own life, then he or she is in a position to help another person in that area.

6:46 Lord, Lord: Jesus pointed out that those who called Him by this title of respect acknowledged submission to Him. However, when these same people ignored His teaching, they were guilty of hypocrisy.

6:47–49 hears … and does: One who listens to and acts on Jesus' teaching can face any difficult circumstance. heard and did nothing: Not acting on Jesus' teaching will cause a person to be overwhelmed by circumstances, eventually resulting in total loss (1 Cor. 3:12–15; 2 John 8).

7:1 Capernaum was on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee. It was an important town in northern Galilee with an economy centered on fishing and agriculture. Heavily Jewish, it was the center for Jesus' Galilean ministry (4:31–44).

7:2–4 sent elders: The parallel in Matthew 8:5–13 does not mention emissaries at all. It is likely that Matthew has compressed his account as he often does (Matt. 9:2, 18, 19; 11:2, 3), since an emissary in ancient culture is regarded as speaking for the one who sends him (2 Kin. 19:20–34), just as today a White House press secretary speaks for the President. This verse also depicts exemplary cooperation between Jews and Gentiles in a culture where race was divisive. The elders were the Jewish leaders in the community.

7:5 built us a synagogue: The Roman government regarded synagogues as valuable because their moral emphasis helped maintain order.

7:6, 7 I am not worthy: The centurion, through messengers, communicates his exemplary humble attitude and faith, which Jesus commends in v. 9.

7:8 The centurion compared his authority as a commander of soldiers to Jesus' authority over life and health. The centurion knew that Jesus' word alone was sufficient to heal his servant.

7:9 not even in Israel: The centurion's example of faith came from outside the nation of Israel. This is one of only two cases where Jesus was said to "marvel" (Mark 6:6).

7:10 found the servant well: The healing occurred without Jesus being physically present, just as the centurion had believed.

7:11–13 a dead man was being carried out: This was a funeral procession. The cemetery was located outside the city gates. Funerals were normally held the day of death because keeping a body overnight rendered a house unclean. Before the funeral the body was anointed. In a town the size of Nain (v. 11) many would have stopped to share in the mourning.

7:14, 15 The fact that Jesus touched the coffin indicated that He preferred helping the dead man to remaining ceremonially clean (Num. 19:11, 16).

7:15 he who was dead sat up: An amazing contrast of description, which indicates the miracle was restoration to life. Other restorations are Jairus's daughter (8:40–56) and Lazarus (John 11:38–44). Again note the immediacy of response (4:39; 5:13, 25).

7:16, 17 The crowd recognized the parallel between Jesus' raising of the widow's son and the work of the great prophets Elijah (1 Kin. 17:17–24) and Elisha (2 Kin. 4:8–37).

7:18-21 Are You the Coming One: John's uncertainty may have been due to the fact that Jesus did not show signs of being the political and conquering messiah that most Jews were anticipating in that period.

7:22, 23 go and tell: Jesus prefers for His work to speak for His identity rather than make messianic claims. He appeals to His healing of the blind, the lame, the lepers, the deaf, and the dead, as well as emphasizing that He preaches the gospel. The allusions recall Luke 4:18, 19 and look back to OT texts, which describe what will happen when God brings salvation (Is. 35:5–7; 26:19; 29:18, 19; 61:1). The connections to Luke 3 and 4 show that Jesus claims to bring the end and, thus, is the figure whom John announced.

7:24–26 The questions that Jesus asked were designed to emphasize that John the Baptist played a special role in God's plan. The crowds did not go out to the wilderness to see scenery or a man dressed in special clothes, but to see a prophet.

7:27 My messenger: The citation here is from Mal. 3:1 (Matt. 11:10; Mark 1:2). John the Baptist was the promised Elijah figure who would point the way to the arrival of God's salvation (1:16, 17; 3:4–6). The reference to Your way before You is a reference to the preparation of the people (1:17). This reference to "You" is unique to the NT citation and may contain an allusion to Ex. 23:20 where the cloud went before the people to guide and protect them. That Luke refers to the people here and not to Jesus is indicated by the fact that response is the issue in vv. 29, 30, and the passage alludes back to Luke 1:16, 17, which speaks of a prepared people.

7:28 he who is least in the kingdom of God: Jesus emphasizes the contrast between the old and new eras. John was the greatest prophet ever born. But the lowest person in the new era of God's kingdom is higher than the greatest prophet of the old era.

7:29, 30 Luke, in an aside, contrasts the responses to John's message. The tax collectors justified God, which means that they responded to John's message by submitting to John's baptism. The Pharisees, however, rejected the will of God, which means that they refused to listen to John and were not baptized (Matt. 3:7–12).

7:31–34 Jesus made a comparison between children playing a game in the marketplace and the present generation of Israel, referring especially to the Jewish religious leaders. The leaders were like the children in that they complained no matter what tune was played. John the Baptist refused to eat bread or drink wine, and the religious leaders dismissed him as demon-possessed. In contrast, Jesus, the Son of Man, was accused of living loosely and associating with sinners. No matter what the style of God's messenger was, the religious leaders complained and rejected him.

7:35 God's wisdom is vindicated by those who respond to it and receive blessing.

IN CONTEXT

A Pharisee Outdone

The incident in Luke 7:36–50 contrasts a respectable Pharisee, Simon, against a disreputable, unnamed woman. Luke describes her as a "sinner" (7:37), a general term describing both those who failed to keep the ritual laws as well as those who flaunted the moral laws. How she gained entrance to Simon's feast is unclear.

The religious leader was probably restricted from even talking to the woman. Extensive Jewish religious laws had developed in the first century to ensure moral purity. Many men suspected women of being sexually aggressive and eager to trap unsuspecting men. So Jewish men in general and teachers of the Law in particular—such as Simon and Jesus—were to have as little to do with women as possible.

Jesus knew what kind of life the woman lived. Yet He accepted her anyway, violating taboos against speaking with her or allowing her to touch Him. In return, she gave to Jesus what Simon, the host, should have given —a kiss of welcome, a washing of the feet, and oil for the skin. These comforts were not merely symbolic but practical expressions of hospitality.

7:36 one of the Pharisees asked Him to eat with him: This event is not the same as the one in Matt. 26:6–13; Mark 14:3–9; John 12:1–8. The event described in those passages occurred in the house of a leper, a place where no Pharisee would ever have gone. sat down to eat: A meal with a religious figure in the ancient world was arranged so that the invited guest was at the main table while others were along the outside wall of the room listening to the conversation.

7:37, 38 The woman's sin is not specified. This woman is not Mary Magdalene of 8:2, since in that passage she is introduced as a new figure. The woman's anointing of Jesus was in response to Jesus' message of compassion for sinners (vv. 41–43, 50). An alabaster flask was made of soft stone to preserve the quality of the precious and expensive perfume. There is humility and devotion in the woman's act of service, as well as a great deal of courage, as she performed the deed in front of a crowd that knew her as a sinner. Although the woman does not say a word in the entire account, her actions speak volumes about her contrite heart.

7:39 if He were a prophet: The Pharisee doubted Jesus' credentials because He associated so openly with sinners. Jesus' association with sinners is a prominent theme in Luke (v. 34; 5:8, 30, 32; 13:2; 15:1, 2, 7, 10; 18:13; 19:7; 24:7). A Pharisee would reject such associations.

7:40 I have something to say: Jesus' reply indicates that He knew the reputation of the woman, but was more interested in what the woman could become through the grace of God.

7:41 Jesus often compared sin to a monetary debt. A denarius was a day's wage for a basic laborer, so five hundred denarii was approximately the wages of one and a half years.

7:42, 43 which of them will love him more: Jesus' point is that the amount of love showered on the Savior will be in direct proportion with one's sense of the gravity of the sins that the Savior has forgiven. The woman knew she had been forgiven much, and as a result she would love much.

7:44–46 Jesus contrasted the actions of the woman with the actions of the Pharisee Simon, implying that the woman knew more about forgiveness than Simon (v. 47).

7:47, 48 her sins … are forgiven: Jesus confirmed that the love of the woman, which was visible in her actions toward Jesus, had come from being forgiven.

7:49 Who is this: The grumbling over Jesus' declaration concerning forgiveness indicates that at least some people in the audience rejected His authority.

7:50 Faith is the human channel for receiving God's gift (Eph. 2:8, 9).

8:1–3 The fact that Mary called Magdalene is introduced here as though for the first time makes it unlikely that she was the sinful woman of 7:36–50. Mary Magdalene is also distinct from Mary of Bethany in John 12:3. Joanna the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward: News of Jesus had reached Herod's palace. provided for Him from their substance: This is an example of how some women of means used their wealth to benefit the work of God.

8:4–8 In the ancient world, fields were sown sometimes before and sometimes after planting. Paths often cut through fields. Sometimes seed would take root on these paths, where it could not mature. In addition, some soil was rocky and also could not support a successful crop.

8:9, 10 Jesus' parables both concealed and revealed truths. His parables contained fresh teaching—mysteries—concerning the kingdom of God. The disciples were privileged to learn the truths of the parables. For other listeners, the parables served as judgments that concealed truth, as the reference to Is. 6:9 indicates. On occasion, a parable was understood by an outsider but was not accepted, thus still functioning as a message of judgment (20:9–19).

8:11 word of God: The parallel in Matt. 13:19 speaks of the seed as the "word of the kingdom," a point that Luke makes in v. 10. The soils do not represent individual moments of decision as much as a "career" of response to God's Word. The explanations make clear that they cover a breadth of time.

8:12 Because those by the wayside never really gain an understanding (Matt. 13:19) of the word of God before Satan snatches it away, there is really no productivity at all.

8:13 believe for a while … fall away: Brief and superficial encounters with the word of God will not stand times of testing. A person needs to meditate on the truths in Scripture and establish them as principles for living in order to withstand the trials and temptations that will inevitably come.

8:14 According to this parable, cares, riches, and pleasures of life are three great obstacles to spiritual fruitfulness. The concerns of life can squelch spiritual growth. This type of "soil" is viewed as tragically unsuccessful (2 Tim. 2:4; 4:10).

8:15 keep it and bear fruit: This is the one praiseworthy group in the parable. The key here is a noble and good heart. This "soil" allows the word of God to settle in and become productive (John 15:2, 3; Col. 3:16, 17; James 1:21).

8:16 sets it on a lampstand: Continuing with the theme of the word of God introduced in vv. 4–15, Jesus compares His teaching to light. It should not be hidden, but displayed, so that people can benefit from the illumination it gives.

8:17 come to light: Eventually everything will be revealed by the light of the word of God (Heb. 4:12, 13).

Why Use Parables?

Jesus used parables often, the NT recording about forty separate stories. Jesus used parables for several reasons. (1) To attract attention. They have tremendous interest value, and everyone likes a story. (2) To prevent hearers from being repelled too quickly by normal direct statements. (3) To stimulate inquiry and to teach. These stories could easily be remembered, and were thus good vehicles for preserving the truth. (4) To reveal the truth, as some could understand a story taught in parabolic form more easily than regular teaching. (5) To conceal the truth. Often a story would protect the truth from the mockery of a scoffer who could not understand the meaning. One's spiritual condition frequently determined how much he would understand of what Jesus said.

8:18 take heed how you hear: Jesus explicitly warned His audience to listen to and follow the word of God (James 1:22–25). what he seems to have will be taken: This phrase introduces the principle of judgment. The one who responds to the word of God receives more. The one who does not respond to the word of God loses what he thought he had.

8:19, 20 Jesus' family was concerned about the direction of His ministry (Mark 3:31–35). Though some have suggested that the brothers here were sons of Joseph by a previous marriage or cousins of Jesus, most likely they were the sons of Joseph and Mary. Joseph's absence here may mean that he had died by this time.

8:21 My mother and My brothers: In a clear contrast to v. 19, Jesus declared that His true family consists of those who hear and do the word of God.

8:22, 23 windstorm: The calming of the wind is the first of four miracles in vv. 22–56 that demonstrate Jesus' authority over a variety of phenomena—nature, demons, disease, and death. Each enemy strikes nearer to the person and is overcome by Jesus, showing the comprehensiveness of His authority. This first miracle took place on the Sea of Galilee. Cool air rushing down the ravines and hills of the area collides with warm air, causing sudden and strong storms. Even the experienced fishermen in the boat feared this kind of storm.

IN CONTEXT

What Kind of Storm Was This?

The Sea of Galilee was no place to be caught in a storm. The kind of weather that caught Jesus and His disciples occurs there to this day. As one traveler described it: "The sun had scarcely set when the wind began to rush down towards the lake, and it continued all night long, with increasing violence, so that when we reached the shore the next morning the face of the lake was like a huge, boiling caldron. …

"We had to double-pin all the tent-ropes, and frequently were obliged to hang on with our whole weight upon them to keep the quivering tabernacle from being carried up bodily into the air."

The reason for such gale-force winds is the surrounding landscape. The lake is seven hundred feet below sea level, and is fed by rivers that have cut deep ravines surrounded by flat plains that are in turn hedged in by mountains. The ravines act like wind siphons or tunnels, gathering cooler air from the mountains as it crosses the plains. When the air mass runs into the hot lake shore, violent storms are whipped up with no warning.

Several of the disciples were experienced fishermen, well acquainted with such storms. However, they had never seen winds like those that attacked their boat (Luke 8:23), for they turned to the Lord in utter terror, certain that all was lost. Yet their fear of the wind and the waves gave way to wonder and awe when Jesus turned and calmed the sea.

8:24 they ceased: At Jesus' word, all the chaos of the storm stopped. Such control over nature is attributed to God in the OT (Pss. 104:3; 135:7; Nah. 1:4).

8:25 Where is your faith: Jesus' question was a rebuke of His disciples. Because God was aware of their situation, they could trust in His protection, for He was powerful enough to control the mighty winds and waves. Who can this be: This is the real question of Jesus' entire Galilean ministry, the beginning of which is recorded in 4:14. All of the displays of Jesus' authority during this ministry were designed to raise this question of His identity. they obey Him: This reflection hints at the reply, since Jesus controls nature. The closest precedent to such power is Elijah (1 Kin. 17), but the miracles come with such frequency and variety that this category is too limiting. The disciples already sense that someone more than a prophet is present. Luke is honest about how the disciples grew in their understanding about Jesus. They learned about Him gradually. Their view of Jesus grew "from the earth up to heaven." The greater our knowledge of God, the greater will be our faith. Every sin we ever commit is the result of inadequate and erroneous thinking about God.

8:26 The city of the Gadarenes (Matt. 8:28) was probably a town about five miles southeast of the Sea of Galilee. Whatever its exact location, it was situated in a predominantly Gentile region.

8:27 no clothes … in the tombs: The demons destroy the self-esteem of the possessed. He is closer to death than life. The man is a pawn in a cosmic battle that pits the authority of the two sides against each other. Only Matt. 8:28 mentions a second man.

8:28 The demon's confession of Jesus as Son of the Most High God recalls the angel's announcement to Mary in 1:31, 32 and the demonic confessions of 4:34, 41.

8:29 broke the bonds: The power of the demons is made clear.

8:30 Legion: This name reflects the fact that the man was possessed by multiple demons. A legion was a Roman military unit of about six thousand soldiers; thus the name suggests a spiritual battle.

8:31 The abyss is an allusion to the underworld and the destruction of judgment (Rom 10:7).

8:32 Swine were unclean animals for Jews (Lev. 11:7; Deut. 14:8). Even though this incident took place in a Gentile area, it is still interesting to note that the unclean spirits sought out unclean animals.

8:33 drowned: The visible display of demonic destruction of the pigs graphically shows that the man was freed of his tormentors.

8:34–36 sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in his right mind: This is a contrast to the same man who was roaming the tombs previously (vv. 27, 29). The man's position at Jesus' feet paints a picture of true discipleship (10:38–42).

8:37 There is some speculation that the reason the people asked Jesus to depart was to prevent further economic damage to their herds. According to Luke, the people were afraid of the authoritative presence of Jesus. Often economy is the bottom line.

8:38, 39 The man who was formerly demon-possessed wanted to go with Jesus and His disciples, but Jesus commissioned the man to be a witness in his own community. As an aside, it is helpful to notice how Jesus prioritizes His time and energy. There must have been many, like this man, who wanted to be His disciple but He limited them to twelve. The Synoptics are very instructive to us as we watch Jesus and the training of the Twelve. Jesus had done: Though Jesus wanted the Father to receive the credit for the man's healing, the man could not separate what God did from the role Jesus had played.

8:40 returned: Jesus apparently is back in Jewish territory.

8:41, 42 ruler: Jairus was the main elder of the synagogue. As such, he conducted the service and kept order.

8:43 Now a woman: The interruption of Jairus's request when his daughter was in such dire straits must have been heartrending.

8:44 her flow of blood stopped: This condition not only would have been embarrassing, it would have made the woman unclean (Lev. 15:25–31). It took great courage for her to seek out Jesus. Note that her action was not criticized, but commended (v. 48). The healing comes instantly; twelve years of suffering is halted in a moment (4:39; 5:13, 25; 7:15).

8:45, 46 Who touched Me? Jesus makes the woman's contact with Him known, especially since he felt power going out (v. 46) from Him.

8:47 she declared … the reason: The woman knew that she was not hidden, so she explained all. The knowledge that God's power is present and that He knows all should make one aware that hiding from Him is impossible.

8:48 your faith has made you well: Here Jesus commends the timid woman who has become bold in the knowledge that Jesus was aware of her desire to seek God's help.

8:49 Your daughter is dead: The delay caused by the woman with the blood disorder appeared to have been fatal for Jairus's daughter.

8:50 only believe: This miracle highlights not only the authority of Jesus, but also the response of faith that God honors.

8:51 He permitted no one to go in except Peter, James, and John: The reason Jesus singled out these three disciples is not given. Luke records a similar action in 9:28. Matthew and Mark record a similar singling out at Gethsemane (Matt. 26:37; Mark 14:33). We do well to watch carefully the prioritizing exercised by Christ in the training of the Twelve.

8:52 Sleeping, a common metaphor for death, indicates in this passage that the girl's death was not permanent.

8:53 they ridiculed Him: The term used here suggests that the derision included laughter.

8:54, 55 immediately: Again, the healing is instantaneous (4:39; 5:13, 25; 7:15; 8:44).

8:56 The reason for Jesus' command for silence in this verse is not entirely clear, given that anyone could have deduced what had happened. The situation seems odd in light of Jesus' instruction to the demon-possessed man to proclaim what had occurred to him in 8:39, 45–47 and the public raising of the dead in 7:11–17. Jesus may have wanted to curtail such healings so that they would not become the center of His ministry.

9:1 gave them power and authority: Now Jesus shows that His authority can be extended through the Twelve. The nation to which He came as King (Matt. 10:5, 6) needed to witness His power and authority. The Twelve were delegated to accomplish this task.

9:2 to preach … to heal: The entire nation of Israel needed to see the evidence of the kingdom of God and make a decision concerning the King and His kingdom. Jesus commissioned His disciples to spread the word about God's kingdom through preaching and healing.

9:3–6 Take nothing: To cover a country 75 miles by 125 miles would not take a long time. The assignment had definite closure.

9:7–9 At Herod's palace, opinions varied as to whether Jesus was John the Baptist, Elijah (Mal. 3:1), or one of the prophets. Though this passage suggests that Herod was uncertain about Jesus' identity, Matt. 14:2 and Mark 6:16 indicate that Herod viewed Jesus as John the Baptist raised from the dead.

9:10–12 spoke … healed: Jesus had the same two-pronged ministry that the twelve disciples had: preaching and healing (v. 2). The topic of Jesus' preaching was always the kingdom of God.

9:13–17 This is the only miracle of Jesus' ministry that appears in all four Gospels (Matt. 14:13–21; Mark 6:30–44; John 6:5–14). The feeding of the five thousand demonstrated Jesus' ability to provide. blessed and broke: Some see an allusion here to the Lord's Table. Though this is not made clear in Luke's presentation, the description is similar to the table fellowship of the Last Supper (22:19) and Jesus' meal with some of the disciples after His resurrection (24:30).

9:17 twelve baskets: This is merely a striking sum noting the excess and probably should not be interpreted to mean anything more. The lesson for the disciples is that He is the source of their sustenance.

9:18, 19 praying: Another major event that Luke notes was accompanied by prayer. say that I am: This is the major issue for Luke. Who is Jesus? Luke's description of what Jesus does is important only because it raises the issue of who Jesus is.

9:20 The Christ of God: The emphasis here is on the messianic role of Jesus. He is the promised One who was ushering in a new era. However, Jesus would soon reveal to the disciples that His messiahship would have elements of suffering that the disciples did not expect (vv. 22, 23).

9:21 tell this to no one: Jesus knew that the messianic role that the people and the disciples expected was much different from His actual role as the Messiah. The element of suffering that the Messiah would endure was not a part of popular expectation. Thus Jesus' messiahship could not be openly proclaimed before the true nature of the Messiah was revealed.

9:22 must suffer … be rejected … be killed … be raised: This is the first of several predictions in Luke of Jesus' suffering and vindication (v. 44; 12:50; 13:31–33; 17:25; 18:31–33). The disciples struggled to understand what Jesus was saying (v. 45; 18:34). They could not comprehend how Jesus' predictions fit into God's plan. Only after Jesus' resurrection and His explanation of the Scriptures to them did they begin to understand (24:25–27, 44–49).

9:23 deny himself … take up his cross daily … follow Me: Here we see the real difference between sonship and discipleship. We receive the position and privilege of sonship as a gift (John 1:12) whereas we receive the prize or reward of sharing in Christ's glory in His coming kingdom reign (Matt. 5:10–12; Rom. 8:17; 1 Thess. 2:12; 2 Thess. 1:15; 2 Tim. 2:12) by the suffering we endure for Him with the life we received as a gift (Eph. 2:8, 9).

9:24, 25 It makes no sense to attempt to save our lives on earth only to lose everything when our lives quickly and inevitably pass away. The wise course is to invest our earthly resources—our time, talents, and wealth—in what is eternal. Even if we lose our lives for Jesus' sake, that investment will produce returns for all eternity (19:11–27; Matt. 6:19–21; 19:27–30).

9:26 Recognition of Jesus will be rewarded in the coming judgment. Failure to recognize Him will lead to significant loss (1 Cor. 3:12–15; 2 Cor. 5:10; 2 Tim. 2:12; 1 John 2:28; 2 John 7, 8; Rev. 3:11; 22:12).

9:27 till they see the kingdom of God: Since these disciples died before Jesus' return, the reference here is no doubt to the Transfiguration (vv. 28–36). With this there is probably also a prediction of the descent of the Spirit at Pentecost (10:9; 11:20; 17:21).

9:28–29 At the Transfiguration Jesus was altered into a radiant figure, even down to His white and glistening clothes. The description here is similar to the description of the glory of Moses after seeing God (Ex. 34:29–35).

9:30, 31 Decease is literally exodus. This important allusion to the central OT event of salvation is unique to Luke's account of the Transfiguration. The comparison is made between Jesus' death and the journey to salvation that the nation of Israel experienced under Moses. Jesus' journey would take Him to the side of God, from which He will return to exercise authority (Acts 2:30–36; 10:42; 17:31).

9:32, 33 let us make three tabernacles: Peter desired structures for the two OT visitors and Jesus, perhaps as a means of prolonging their visit. not knowing what he said: This rebuke of Peter is probably for suggesting an equality between Moses, Elijah, and Jesus. In addition, he may have been rebuked here for wanting to celebrate the arrival of the eschaton before major events necessary for it have occurred. This is the first of several remarks in Luke 9 which suggest that the disciples have much to learn. We need to keep reminding ourselves that in the Gospels we are seeing Christ training the Twelve who are going to be put in place as the foundation stones (Eph. 2:20) of the church that was going to be inaugurated in Acts 2 at Pentecost. The ministry of Christ was not basically spent in reaching the masses but in training the Twelve. Christ operated on the principle that quality begets quantity, not vice versa. Church growth leaders today need to recapture this principle.

9:34, 35 This is My beloved Son: This is the second heavenly endorsement of Jesus (3:22). The reference to the beloved Son recalls the words of Ps. 2:7; Is. 42:1. The command to hear Him alludes to Deut. 18:15–18 and identifies Jesus as the Prophet promised in that passage. Jesus, as the new Prophet, would lead a new group of people into salvation (Matt. 21:43; Rom. 11:1–36; 1 Pet. 2:9, 10), just as Moses led the nation of Israel. As a Revealer of God's will, Jesus had much to teach the disciples about God's plan. The disciples needed to listen because they had much to learn.

9:36 told no one: In this passage, we are not told why the disciples remained silent about the Transfiguration. Matthew 17:8, 9; Mark 9:9, 10 note that Jesus commanded such silence and Mark makes it clear that the disciples did not yet understand the event (see 2 Pet. 1:16–21 for Peter's reflection on this experience).

9:37, 38 when they had come down: As three disciples had a great experience with Jesus, the others were struggling to perform a healing. The contrast and the failure is significant. Again, the disciples had much to learn.

9:39, 40 a spirit seizes him: The detailed description of symptoms shows the severity of the possession. The fact that the relative is an only child (v. 38) adds to the mood of the event.

9:41 O faithless and perverse generation: This rebuke suggests that the disciples lacked the faith to cast out the spirit described in vv. 38–40. There is also a hint of a competitive spirit among the disciples (v. 46). The same is true today. How much more we could accomplish for Christ and His kingdom if we did not care who got the credit.

9:42 rebuked the unclean spirit: Jesus' authority is again the issue.

9:43 all amazed: The majesty of God is what Jesus' authority reveals. There is a great popular reaction to Jesus, but He knows it will be short-lived (v. 44).

9:44 Note that Jesus predicted that He, the Son of Man, would be betrayed, even when many were still marveling at His ministry (v. 43).

9:45 they were afraid to ask: The indication here is that the disciples still had much to learn. Their fear shows that they understood something about what Jesus said, but they did not understand how and why Jesus could say such things about Himself, since He was the Messiah. The suffering of the Messiah was something the disciples did not yet understand. They would continue to be confused in their understanding of how such suffering fit into God's plan until Jesus' death and resurrection (24:25, 26, 43–49).

9:46 which of them would be greatest: Here is great irony. Jesus predicts His suffering, and the disciples are jockeying with each other about the kingdom (22:24; Mark 10:35–45). The disciples still have much to learn. We too have much to learn when we are seeking to build our own kingdom instead of building Christ's kingdom. There was nothing wrong with the desire to have positions of glory and honor in Christ's kingdom, but they were missing some basic principles that Christ gave them in the Upper Room (22:14–25; John 13:12–17; 33–35). It is as we seek to serve one another in love that we gain true greatness. All of these principles will be part of Christ's final evaluation of our stewardship of this life (9:23–24; 1 Cor. 4:5; 2 Cor. 5:10).

9:47, 48 he who is least … will be great: Jesus' point was that prominence is not measured by human standards of achievement, but by one's relationship to God. Anyone related to God is great, even "the least" of His disciples.

9:49 casting out demons in Your name: The issue here was that the disciples saw others who shared their gifts, and they thought it was wrong. They still were learning. Pastors of people today need to realize as well that their ministry is being fulfilled not when they do everything while the people look on but when they are training and enabling the people to use the gifts God has given them. It is not the role of leaders to be substitutes for the people but to be equippers of the people to do the work of the ministry.

9:50 Do not forbid him: Jesus notes that anyone exercising God's gifts, who is not opposed to Jesus and the disciples' ministry, is on their side and should be allowed to minister. Ministering for Jesus is not the privilege of a select few. All of God's children are gifted (Rom. 12:3–8; 1 Cor. 12:3–27; Eph. 4:1–16; 1 Pet. 4:10, 11). Again, we are not to be concerned with building our own little domains but rejoicing in the building of the kingdom of God regardless of who is doing it.

9:51 set His face to go to Jerusalem: This is the first indication that Jesus' attention was turning toward His final suffering in Jerusalem (v. 53; 13:22, 33–35; 17:11; 18:31; 19:11, 28, 41). The journey to Jerusalem was not direct, however. In 10:38–42, we find Jesus at Martha and Mary's house in Bethany. In 17:11 we find Him in Samaria and Galilee. The journey to Jerusalem proceeded only according to God's design and in His timing. Jesus was nearing the destiny of His mission—that is, His death. Luke's Gospel uniquely emphasizes this journey to Jerusalem. Luke records much of Jesus' teaching and parables on this journey as Jesus contrasted His way of suffering with the way of the Jewish religious leaders.

9:52 Samaritans were the descendants of Jews who had married Gentiles after the fall of the northern kingdom, Israel. The Samaritans eventually developed their own religious rites, which they practiced on Mount Gerizim instead of at the temple in Jerusalem. Though there was deep hostility between Jews and Samaritans, Jesus ministered to both groups.

9:53, 54 command fire to come down: James and John, the "sons of thunder," wanted Jesus to bring judgment upon the Samaritan villages that refused to respond to His message, just as Elijah had done in 2 Kin. 1:9–16. Their demand for judgment was antithetical to Jesus' loving response (v. 56).

9:55, 56 He turned: Jesus' action shows that He refuses the request. The disciples do not understand that they are to bring grace. The right of judgment lies in other hands for other times.

9:57—62 Here we gain insight into a class session with Jesus and a sampling of his disciples. Each of them is a distinct personality and each has a problem in advancing to the next level of discipleship. But all of their individual problems find their source in one main problem. See if you can discern it.

9:57 I will follow You: The first man volunteered without reservation. He was warm, ardent, and enthusiastic. His problem is that he has not realistically counted the cost. His enthusiasm is based on the feelings of the moment, which will not be strong enough to sustain him in the thick of battle.

9:58 Son of Man has nowhere to lay his head: Jesus warns the disciple that Jesus (Son of Man) does not have even the ordinary comforts of home, unlike the creatures of creation. And to follow Jesus today may require going without our beauty-rest mattress and goose-down pillow. This eliminates many candidates.

9:59 let me first go and bury my father: This aspiring disciple placed family responsibilities ahead of following Jesus. The concerns of home were this man's stumbling block. Unlike the previous volunteer (v. 57), this man was slow, meditative, and contemplative. He was counting the cost of discipleship. Cultic purity was viewed as very important in Jewish circles, so a quick burial of the dead was required (7:11–17).

9:60 Let the dead bury their own dead: Jesus makes it clear that a disciple is to have clear, biblically based priorities. The remark is rhetorical, because in fact the dead cannot bury their colleagues in death. It is an emphatic way to say the call of God receives priority. In periods of urgency such as the current time, burial is not necessary (Jer. 16:5–7). Social obligation is not to cancel the immediacy of ministry. It may well be the rhetorical remark about the "dead" refers to the spiritually dead; so the point is that the world can take care of the mundane matters of life and death, but the disciple is to prioritize ministry. His problem is that he did not have proper priorities and thus did not sense the urgency of taking action when Jesus called. Such improper priorities cause us to miss grand opportunities of investment (Phil. 4:15).

9:61 bid them farewell: This request is like the one Elisha made of Elijah (1 Kin. 19:19, 20), which was granted. The time of Jesus is more urgent so that now the request is denied.

9:62 looking back: Here is the vacillating disciple—hot and cold. Jesus makes it clear that entry into discipleship with Him in faith is something from which one does not turn back without great peril. The allusion to looking back recalls Lot's wife (Gen. 19:26). The remark about being fit (or usable) for the kingdom of God shows how seriously Jesus takes commitment to Him. The remark is a warning that the one who comes to Jesus should be prepared to stay with Him (1 Cor. 15:2; Col. 1:21–23; Matt. 7:21–23; 22:11–13; Luke 13:25–27). To put a hand to the plough is to engage in a task. Here, it is the task of serving the kingdom. Looking back militates against plowing straight furrows. The first disciple was too ready because he hadn't counted the cost. The second disciple was not ready at all because he hadn't sensed the urgency of moving when Jesus said move. And the third disciple was only half ready—hot to go when he looked forward but cold to go when he looked back. What lessons these are for those of us who aspire to discipleship and reign with Christ in His kingdom.

10:1 The account of Jesus calling seventy disciples is unique to the Gospel of Luke. The instructions that Jesus gave to these disciples are similar to the instructions He gave to the Twelve in 9:1–6.

10:2 The picture of a plentiful harvest suggests that a positive response awaited the laborers, even in the face of much rejection.

10:3–7 The image of lambs among wolves was popular in Judaism. It derived from Is. 40:11. Jesus uses a similar image in John 10:1–18. Actually, no one has even seen lambs among wolves. Lambs in wolves, yes! Lambs among wolves, no! This is naturally impossible. But it is made possible by the presence of the Shepherd. The key is the focus on the Shepherd.

10:8–12 kingdom … near to you: Like v. 11, 11:20, and 17:21, this text shows how aspects of kingdom authority accompanied Jesus' earthly ministry. The healing Jesus brought pictured what the kingdom offered (11:20). Jesus' ministry was the arrival of the initial stages of God's rule, which Jesus will consummate at His return (17:20–37). God's kingdom comes in stages. When Jesus came the first time, He was rejected. In His second coming, He will establish His complete rule over all.

10:13, 14 The mighty works of Jesus were so great that if they had been performed before the worst pagans of the old era, those people would have repented. Jesus' remark was meant to wake the people up to what their rejection of Him signified.

10:15 will be brought down: As with Luke 10:13, the cities are in view, not individuals. These judgments relate to the danger of the nation in rejecting Jesus, though they carry implications that apply to individuals who reject the offer.

10:16 He who hears you hears Me: Hearing the messenger is the same as hearing the One who sent him. Authority resides not in the messenger, but in the person the messenger represents, the source of the message.

10:17 even the demons are subject to us in Your name: The disciples rejoice at the authority that they exercise. The key, as they note, is the authority they have "in Jesus' name."

10:18 This verse provides a commentary on what the disciples' healing ministry meant. The reversal of the effects of sin and death, which Satan introduced through his deception in Gen. 3, are portrayed graphically as Satan falling from heaven. Jesus' ministry and what grows out of it represents the defeat of Satan, sin, and death.

10:19, 20 This verse records the transmission of Jesus' authority to His immediate circle of disciples. It should be noted that similar authority was not given beyond that circle of disciples. Note the authority that is given to the Eleven in Matt. 28:16–20; Acts 1:8. As Jesus makes clear in v. 20, authority was not the most important thing the disciples received. your names are written in heaven: More important than the disciples' authority over spirits was their position as God's children. Their names were known to God and were written in God's book. This was the disciples' greatest blessing.

10:21 Father: Here Jesus prays to His Father and reveals His joy that God has revealed His sovereign plan for the world to babes. Jesus' point is that it is not the great, in terms of human achievement and status, who receive these tremendous truths, but the simple who come to Him as dependent beings.

IN COMPARISON

Appearing Only in Luke …

In Jesus' day the Samaritans were despised by orthodox Jews because most of the Jews from that region had intermarried with foreigners. The irony of the parable of the Good Samaritan is that a scorned Samaritan knows how to show love to his neighbor, whereas a priest and Levite, who had intimate knowledge of God's Law, do not. The Book of Luke highlights Jesus' love for a variety of groups who were not esteemed in His day.

10:22 All things have been delivered to Me: This is Jesus' declaration of total authority as the Son of God (John 10:18; 17:2). He makes a similar statement in Matt. 28:18. except the Father … except the Son: Jesus declares His unique relationship with God the Father. The Lord reveals Himself only through Jesus. To know God, one must know His Son, Jesus.

10:23 Blessed are the eyes: Jesus notes the honor that comes from sharing in what He offers and teaches.

10:24 have not seen … heard it: Jesus contrasted the OT era of expectation, in which people desired to see the Messiah but did not, with the era in which the disciples were living. If they had the spiritual insight they could witness the fulfillment in Jesus of many of God's promises.

10:25, 26 The question posed by the lawyer is really a challenge, since the verse speaks of the testing of Jesus. This is a similar, though probably distinct, event from Matt. 22:34–40; Mark 12:28–34. To inherit something is to receive it. In other words, the man was asking, "What must I do to share in the reward at the resurrection of the righteous at the end?" (Phil. 3:11–14). The OT basis of this question is the hope of resurrection in Dan. 12:2. Jesus countered the lawyer's test by having him answer his own question.

10:27 you shall love the LORD … and your neighbor: The lawyer responded to Jesus' questions by quoting Deut. 6:5, a text that was recited twice a day by every faithful Jew. This text summarized the central ethical standard of the law. The lawyer also alluded to Lev. 19:18. The basis of the man's response is an expression of allegiance and devotion that also can be seen as the natural expression of faith, since the total person, heart, soul, strength, and mind, is involved. The theme of love for God is picked up in vv. 38–42 with its emphasis on devotion to Jesus, and in 11:1–13, where the disciples are taught to be devoted to God in prayer. In vv. 30–37 Jesus develops the theme of love for one's neighbor.

10:28 do this and you will live: Jesus was not saying that righteousness is the result of works. Rather He was saying that love for and obedience to God will be a natural result of placing one's faith in the Lord. Those who believe in Jesus and follow Him will receive eternal rewards. Jesus states this principle to Peter in Matt. 19:27–30.

10:29 Luke makes it clear that the lawyer was trying to place himself in the position of satisfying the highest demands of the law. who is my neighbor: This question was an attempt to limit the demands of the law by suggesting that some people are neighbors while others are not. The lawyer was looking for minimal obedience while Jesus was looking for absolute obedience.

10:30 Jerusalem to Jericho: This was a seventeen-mile journey on a road known to harbor many robbers. They would hide in caves along the way and attack their victims.

10:31, 32 by chance: This is a nice literary touch. The man was in danger and now help seemed to come fortuitously his way. passed by: Both a priest and Levite consciously avoid giving aid. How easy it is for those who handle the rituals of religion to become calloused and treat the opportunities to minister as trivial and commonplace.

10:33 Part of the beauty of the story of the Good Samaritan is the reversal of stereotypes. The priest and Levite traditionally would have been the "good guys." The Samaritan would have been a "bad guy," a person who compromised in religious matters. However, the Samaritan knew how to treat his neighbor. The neighbor here was not someone the Samaritan knew or even someone of the same race, just someone in need.

10:34 Oil was used to soothe wounds. Wine was used as a disinfectant.

10:35 two denarii … I will repay: The Samaritan, if he paid a typical rate of one-twelfth of a denarius a day, paid for twenty-four days at the inn. Given the man had been robbed, such support was necessary. Compassion expressed itself concretely in both time and money. The Samaritan also was prepared to do more, if it was necessary. How different from the statement, "Be warmed and filled" (James 2:16).

10:36 which … was neighbor: The central issue is not determining who one's neighbor is, but being a good neighbor to all.

10:37 He who showed mercy: The lawyer apparently could not bring himself to say "Samaritan" and lend credence to the surprising reversal of stereotypes in the story.

Martha: Too Much Service?

Jesus' visit to Martha's home (Luke 10:38–42) has given rise to a caricature of Martha as obsessively "practical," as opposed to Mary, her "spiritual" sister. In fact, some would use this incident to reinforce a hierarchy of "spiritual" concerns over "secular" ones: it is more important to "sit at Jesus' feet"—that is, to engage in religious pursuits such as prayer or attending church—than to be "distracted" with everyday tasks such as work or household chores.

But it would be unfair to read Jesus' words to Martha as a rebuke for her preparations. After all, He had come as a guest to her home with His disciples. Someone was obligated to prepare a meal—a large meal. Assuming Jesus and the Twelve, plus Mary, Martha, and Lazarus, there were at least sixteen hungry people. No wonder Martha was "distracted [literally, drawn away] with much serving" (10:40). She could not sit and chat with her guests if she was to prepare the food.

So what was Jesus getting at in vv. 41 and 42? Only this: that in addition to her marvelous preparations, Martha needed to add spiritual sensitivity. He was in no way setting up a dichotomy between the sacred and the secular, but merely emphasizing that in the midst of her busyness, Martha should not lose sight of who He was and why He had come. Without question, Mary had that insight, and Jesus was keen to preserve it.

Apparently Martha profited from Jesus' exhortation, for when her brother Lazarus died, she recognized His ability as the Christ to raise him from the dead (John 11:27).

Like Martha, we today are called on to strike a balance between faithful, diligent service in our day-to-day responsibilities and a constant attitude of dependence on the Lord.

10:38 a certain village: If this is the Martha and Mary of John 11:1—12:8, then the location is Bethany, just outside Jerusalem (John 11:1, 19; 12:1). This text suggests that the "Jerusalem journey" of 9:51—19:44 was not a direct trip to Jerusalem, but a journey of drawing near to the time for Jesus' death.

10:39 sat at Jesus' feet: A picture of discipleship, as Mary listens to Jesus teach.

10:40 Martha was distracted by the amount of serving she had to do. Her complaint to Jesus indicates that she was irritated that her sister was not helping her.

10:41 Jesus' tender reply is evident in the double address of Martha, Martha (6:46; 8:24; 13:34; 22:31). He notes that Martha was anxiety-ridden over ordinary matters.

10:42 that good part: Mary was a silent example. She said nothing, but did what was right by devoting herself to Jesus' teaching.

11:1 The Lord's Prayer illustrates the variety of requests that one can and should make to God, as well as displaying the humble attitude that should accompany prayer. The use of the plural pronoun us throughout the prayer shows that it is not just the prayer of one person for his or her own personal needs, but a community prayer.

11:2 Father: God is approached confidently as a caring figure. Hallowed: In the context of intimacy with God, there also is respect and recognition of His uniqueness. Hallowed means that God is holy, set apart, unique in His character and attributes. Your kingdom come: The reference here is to God's program and promise. This is more affirmation than request, highlighting the petitioner's submission to God's will and the desire to see God's work come to pass.

11:3 our daily bread: This request recognizes that one is dependent on God for daily needs.

11:4 forgive us our sins: This request recognizes that sin is a debt to God that needs to be acknowledged on the basis of His mercy. we also forgive: The petitioner recognizes that if mercy is to be sought from God, then mercy must be shown to others. We need to adopt the same standard that we expect others to follow. do not lead us into temptation: This remark is often misunderstood as suggesting that perhaps God can lead us into sin. The point is that if one is to avoid sin, one must follow where God leads. In short, the petitioner asks God for the spiritual protection necessary to avoid falling into sin.

11:5, 6 I have nothing to set before him: In ancient culture, to be a generous host was assumed. For his late night visitor the host had a choice —be rude or get food somewhere else. He chose to be a good host and seek some bread in the middle of the night.

11:7 Do not trouble me: The man responding does not wish to be disturbed. In an ancient house, all members of the family would have slept in one room. To pull the rod on the door would have awakened the children.

11:8 Persistence here refers to shameless boldness more than to tenacity. Jesus' point is that in prayer the disciple is to be bold. The example in the parable (vv. 5–7) is a man who goes boldly to his neighbor to seek what he requires. Likewise, the disciple is to go boldly to God for that which is needed.

11:9, 10 receives: This verse does not mean that we receive whatever we want in prayer. As v. 13 demonstrates, with its reference to receiving God's Spirit, the suggestion is that we receive what is spiritually beneficial.

11:11, 12 stone … serpent … scorpion: Here is another parable. What father gives a son worthless or destructive things when basic needs are requested?

11:13 how much more will your heavenly Father give: If people, who are evil, can give good gifts, imagine the value of God's gift of the Holy Spirit. If anyone does not have the Holy Spirit, that person does not belong to Christ (Rom. 8:9). In the triune Godhead, the Holy Spirit is the divine distributor (1 Cor. 12:11) of the good things purchased by the Son (Eph. 4:7, 8) and ordained by the Father (Eph. 3:1).

IN DEPTH

Demons

Scripture presents demons not as mythological creatures, but as real beings involved in historical events. Jesus, for example, frequently encountered demons during His ministry, as in the case of the demon-possessed mute (Luke 11:14).

Demons are fallen angels who joined with Satan in rebellion against God. The Bible does not explicitly discuss their origin, but the NT does speak of the fall and later imprisonment of a group of angels (2 Pet. 2:4; Jude 6). Their rebellion apparently occurred before God's creation of the world. Afterward, Satan and his followers roamed the new creation, eventually contaminating the human race with wickedness (Gen. 3; Matt. 25:41; Rev. 12:9). To this day they continue to oppose God's purposes and undermine the cause of righteousness.

Demon Possession

One of Jesus' primary purposes was to overcome the power of Satan, which is why He regularly challenged the demonic realm (Matt. 12:25–29; Luke 11:17–22; John 12:31; 1 John 3:8). One of His most compassionate activities was to release persons possessed by demons.

Our culture tends to dismiss demon possession as a quaint, archaic way of trying to explain physical and psychological conditions. But the Bible never suggests that all ailments are the result of demonic activity, only that demons can afflict people with physical symptoms such as muteness (Matt. 12:22; 9:17, 25), deafness (9:25), blindness (Matt. 12:22), and bodily deformity (Luke 13:10–17). The Gospels actually distinguish between sickness and demon possession (Matt. 4:24; Mark 1:32; Luke 6:17, 18).

Demons can also cause mental and emotional problems (Matt. 8:28; Acts 19:13–16). The demon-possessed might rant and rave (Mark 1:23–24; John 10:20), have uncontrolled fits (Luke 9:37–42; Mark 1:26), and behave in an antisocial manner (Luke 8:27, 35).

In casting out demons, Jesus and His disciples used methods that differed radically from the mystical rites so often employed in that time. Through His simple command Jesus expelled them (Mark 1:25; 5:8; 9:25). His disciples did the same, adding only the authority of Jesus' name to their command (Luke 10:17; Acts 16:18). Even some who were not His followers invoked the Lord's power (Luke 9:49; Acts 19:13).

Despite these straightforward means, Jesus' enemies accused Him of being in alliance with Satan's kingdom (Mark 3:22; Luke 11:15; John 8:48). The same accusation was made against Jesus' forerunner, John the Baptist (Matt. 11:18; Luke 7:33). But Jesus' works of goodness and righteousness showed that these claims could not be true (Matt. 12:25–29; Luke 11:17–22).

The Final Victory

Following the resurrection of Jesus and His return to heaven, demons have continued their warfare against Him and His followers (Rom. 8:38, 39; Eph. 6:12). Yet Satan and his allies will ultimately be overthrown by God. After Christ returns, the devil and his angels will be defeated and thrown into the lake of fire and brimstone (Matt. 25:41; Rev. 20:10)—a doom with which the demons are quite familiar (Matt. 8:29). God will achieve the final victory in a conflict that has been going on since the beginning of time.

11:14, 15 If Jesus was not to be believed, His miracles had to be demonic in origin. This was the ultimate blasphemy—attributing the credentials of heaven to hell. The Latin name Beelzebub was originally a reference to the Philistine god Baal-Zebub worshiped at the city of Ekron (2 Kin. 1:2, 3, 6, 16). The name means "Lord of the Flies."

11:16 sought from Him a sign: Others wanted more evidence. There is irony here as well as stubbornness, as if the miracles were not enough (7:22).

11:17, 18 The attribution of Jesus' miracles to Satan was not only blasphemous, it was illogical. If Satan had cast out the demon (v. 14), he would have been destroying the result of his own work.

11:19 by whom do your sons cast them out: Jesus' question and the implied reply to it can be taken in one of two ways: (1) How did Jewish exorcists expel demons? If the answer is by God's power, then why not give Jesus the same credit? (2) How did Jesus' disciples, who were the "sons" of Israel, drive out demons? The dissenters not only had to explain Jesus' miracles, but those of His followers. Most scholars prefer the former interpretation.

11:20 The finger of God is an allusion to God's power, like that demonstrated in the Exodus (Ex. 8:19; Deut. 9:10; Ps. 8:3). the kingdom of God has come upon you: Jesus' miracles represented the arrival of God's power and promise—in short, His rule. That rule comes in and through Jesus. The miracles of Jesus demonstrated God's victory over the forces of evil. The kingdom program, depicted as drawing near, will be consummated at the return of Jesus when this rule is manifested over every creature.

11:21, 22 Jesus portrays Himself as someone stronger than Satan who overruns Satan's house and gives the spoils of victory to those who are His (Eph. 4:8, 9 for a similar concept).

11:23 He who is not with Me … does not gather: Jesus' ministry forces everyone to make a choice. Neutrality is not an option. Either Jesus comes from God or He does not. Not to align with Jesus is to be against Him.

11:24 seeking rest: The picture is of an exorcised spirit seeking a home after God has acted on someone's behalf. I will return: The spirit decides to go back where he was.

11:25 swept: The exorcised person becomes like a clean house, although empty if God is not present, and still exposed to spiritual danger.

11:26 the last state … is worse: Jesus' point is that experiencing God's blessing and then ignoring it leaves one callous towards the work of God and exposed to the control of demonic forces.

11:27, 28 Blessed is the womb: The woman offered praise for Jesus' mother. Though Jesus always honored Mary, He commented carefully on the woman's blessing to keep the focus on the word of God. It is easy to allow traditional practices to take the place of the authority of the Scriptures. Jesus offers His blessing to those who respond concretely to God's will as expressed in the Bible.

11:29 The sign of Jonah here refers to his prophetic call to repentance rather than to the Resurrection foreshadowed by Jonah's return from the belly of the great fish.

11:30–32 Jesus warned that refusal to hear Him would result in condemnation from those in the OT who had responded to God's teaching. The examples Jesus offered included Gentiles such as the queen of the South (the queen of Sheba in 1 Kin. 10:1–10) and the Ninevites (Jon. 3). Because Jesus is greater than those who proclaimed God's word in those days—Solomon and Jonah, His word should have been heeded by the first-century Israelites.

11:33 may see the light: Light is to be a source of guidance. Luke 11:27–36 is about responding to the light of God's word as presented in Jesus' teaching. God has made it clear for all to see.

11:34, 35 It has been said that "you are what you eat." But even more accurately, you are what you see. This is why David said, "I will set nothing wicked before my eyes" (Ps. 101:3). A person who concentrates on what is good (God's teaching) is healthy. But a person who focuses on what is bad (the false teaching of the world) is full of darkness.

11:36 your whole body is full of light: A person can become like light, a living picture of what God's Word teaches, by concentrating on the light of the truth.

11:37, 38 He had not first washed before dinner: Such ceremonial washing is described in the OT (Gen. 18:4; Judg. 19:21), but not commanded.

11:39 make the outside … clean: These condemnations by Jesus are similar to those in Matt. 23. The Pharisees washed the outside of cups, making sure that the cups had not become unclean through contact with a dead insect (Lev. 11:31–38). Jesus pointed out that the Pharisees concerned themselves with outward appearances and ritual cleanness, while what was inside, what really counts, was full of selfishness and evil.

11:40 did not He who made: Jesus points out that the outside and inside were made by the same God and they demand equal care.

11:41 give alms: The giving of alms was the donation of support to the poor. As such, it pictures the labor of self-sacrifice and compassion. Jesus says that is the picture of the type of devotion one should give to the care of one's inner spiritual condition. Such care for the requirements of a needy soul lead to true cleanliness before God.

11:42 pass by: The Pharisees worried about tithing ten percent, even down to the smallest herbs, which were tithed according to the dictates of tradition, not the Law of Moses (Num. 18:21–32; Deut. 14:22–29; see also Lev. 27:30 for the practice of tithing herbs). The law spoke of tithing all produce, but what constituted food was debated. Some Pharisees took the strictest interpretation and counted almost anything, including spices. However, they neglected two basic things that the prophets also had spoken about: love and justice (Mic. 6:8; Zech. 7:8–10).

11:43 love the best seats … greetings: This condemns the pride of the Pharisees, but it also speaks volumes to every believer.

11:44 The Pharisees were like hidden graves. To have contact with a grave or with the dead was to become ceremonially unclean (Num. 19:11–

19). Anyone or anything in the same room as the dead was considered in Jewish tradition to be impure. This is Jesus' stronger condemnation. The Pharisees, the paragons of purity, were in fact the height of uncleanness.

11:45 You reproach us also: One lawyer attempts to defend the Pharisees by noting their close relationship to the scribes. If one group is rebuked, so is the other.

11:46 Jesus applied His woes to lawyers as well as to the Pharisees. In everyday Greek, the term translated burdens refers to a ship's cargo. The idea is that a heavy strain was being imposed on the people and yet, in the end, this burden did not bring them closer to God. Here Jesus rebuked the tradition that had grown up around the Law of Moses. you yourselves do not touch the burdens: The meaning of this phrase is debated. Was Jesus accusing the scribes of hypocrisy in not practicing what they taught and in making distinctions that freed them from obligations, as they did with oaths (Matt. 5:33–37)? Or was Jesus simply accusing the scribes of not offering aid and compassion to those who tried to follow their rules? The second interpretation is more likely, since the Pharisees were known for adhering to the law.

11:47, 48 you build the tombs of the prophets: Jesus made a biting, ironic comparison between the current generation of Israel and the generations of the past. Jesus was saying that the current generation finished the job of slaying the prophets that the previous generation had started. The building and care of tombs was supposed to be an act of honoring the prophets, but Jesus pointed out that something else was really going on.

11:49 The wisdom of God refers to God's knowledge of the people. The prophets and apostles who would be persecuted and killed were the disciples and the prophets of the early church. This is the basis of Jesus' previous rebuke (vv. 47, 48). Those who would come in the current generation with the message of God would suffer the same fate as the prophets of old.

11:50 Generation seems to refer to the people or nation of Israel. They had received and would receive judgment for the way they treated God's prophets. The judgment here refers specifically to the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, and ultimately to the final judgment of God in the Tribulation.

11:50, 51 Abel is pictured as the first prophet to be killed, going back to the foundation of the world (Gen. 4:10). Zechariah is probably the man described in 2 Chr. 24:20–25. He would be the last prophet slain in the OT if one considers the Hebrew order of the books of the OT.

11:52 Jesus charged the lawyers with doing the opposite of what they claimed their calling to be. Rather than bringing people nearer to God, they had removed the possibility of their entering into that knowledge, and had prevented others from understanding as well.

11:53, 54 seeking to catch Him: The scribes and Pharisees began challenging Jesus in the hope that He might make a blunder that would allow them to destroy His ministry. They were lying in wait for Him (6:11; 19:47, 48; 20:19, 20; 22:2).

12:1, 2 Leaven here represents the presence of corruption. Unleavened bread is what the Jews ate at Passover (Ex. 12:14–20). The corruption in view here is hypocrisy. Practicing hypocrisy is senseless because eventually all deeds—both good and evil—will be exposed.

12:3 will be proclaimed on the housetops: All secrets will be revealed by God (Rom. 2:15, 16; 1 Cor. 4:5). The inner room was a storeroom that was surrounded by other rooms; it was the most private part of a house.

12:4 do not be afraid of those who kill the body: This verse anticipates the presence of severe religious persecution in response to Jesus' remarks in 11:39–54.

12:5 Even in the context of physical persecution, the only One believers should fear is God, who sees how we live and judges us. Jesus was not guaranteeing physical preservation in this life, but was opening the prospect of deliverance in the next life.

12:6 This verse emphasizes that God knows the most minute detail of what happens on earth. The copper coins mentioned were the smallest coin in circulation, worth about one-sixteenth of a basic day's wage.

12:7 Do not fear: Jesus emphasizes that God knows the person, even down to the number of hairs on one's head. One is not to fear, in the sense that placing one's life in God's care means He knows what we need. If God knows what happens to sparrows, He knows what happens to His children.

12:8 The issue here is faithfulness in testimony to Jesus, especially in the context of religious rejection. Acknowledging Jesus before men means being acknowledged by the Son of Man before God.

12:9 denies … will be denied: Every act of denial of Christ on earth will meet with commensurate denial of reward at the judgment seat (1 John 2:28). This is not speaking of the gift of salvation, but of the prize or reward (1 Cor. 9:24–27).

12:10 A word against the Son of Man is forgivable because His deity was veiled, but blasphemy against the Holy Spirit is flagrant rejection of the works and words of Christ (Matt. 12:31, 32, note).

12:11 when they bring you to the synagogues: This is another indication that religious persecution is in view in these verses. Magistrates and authorities governed civil proceedings, while synagogues conducted religious tribunals. In such situations, the disciple should not worry about what to say.

12:12 the Holy Spirit will teach you: The promise of God is that the faithful will receive ability to speak up for Jesus. Examples of the fulfillment of this passage include Acts 3—5 (especially 4:8); 7:51, 56 and the defense speeches of Paul in Acts 21—28.

12:13 tell my brother: Jesus is asked to intervene in a family dispute, as an ancient rabbi would be.

12:14 who made Me a Judge: Jesus refuses to enter into a dispute over money, which is clearly dividing a family. Such disputes over money destroy relationships, so Jesus tells a parable that explains the danger of focusing on wealth.

12:15 beware of covetousness: Jesus' warning is made explicitly. life does not consist in the abundance of the things: Jesus disagrees with the philosophy, "The one with the most toys wins." Such a focus is to make life consist of the things of creation and of man's creation, rather than to focus on God and the people He has created. Creation is not an object to be served or possessed by man. Life is found in the relationships one has, while the creation is designed to enhance those relationships. Things do not make life, God and people do. Only people will last. Thus, invest in what will last (2 Pet. 3:10–12) 12:16 parable: Jesus illustrates His point with the story of a man who "by chance" came into wealth and did not respond to its presence properly.

12:17 What shall I do? The man faces his dilemma as anyone might, by determining how to preserve his abundant resources.

12:18, 19 Including v. 17, the word I appears six times, showing the selfish focus this man has as a result of his fortune. His plan is to store his abundant resources for himself, as though the assets were his alone and should be hoarded. This focus on the self is what Jesus is condemning.

12:20 God's judgment on selfishness is clear. What did the rich fool have for the next life? He could not take his grain with him. What he owned was no longer of any value after death. In a single day, the rich man became poor. All earthly wealth is temporary and ultimately worthless (Matt. 6:19–21; 1 Tim. 6:6–10, 17–19; James 5:1–6).

12:21 so is he who lays up treasure for himself: Jesus highlights the negative example. Of course, the opposite is exhorted here by implication. To be rich toward self without the greater priority of richness toward God is to be a double loser.

12:22 do not worry: This is a call to faith to trust God to provide. One of the reasons a person desires possessions is to secure control of his or her life and have comfort and provision. Jesus says that God will provide such needs.

12:23 Life is more than: Jesus mentions the basics of care here; food and clothing. He says that life is more than these basic things.

12:24 Jesus describes God's care of ravens, unclean creatures according to Jewish law and among the least respected of birds (Lev. 11:15; Deut. 14:14). Yet God even cares for them. How much more value are you, says Jesus, pointing out that God will surely care for the disciple as well.

12:25 It is uncertain whether Jesus is saying through His rhetorical question that worry cannot add to one's physical height or that worry cannot add to one's life span. In fact, worry can sometimes shorten life. What is clear is that worry is utterly useless and shows a lack of faith in God's plan for our lives.

12:26 If you then are not able to do the least: Jesus again highlights the pointlessness of worry. If worry does not help the basic things of life, why worry so much?

12:27–29 Even the wealthy King Solomon did not clothe himself as God has clothed the lilies. The illustration of grass indicates that God cares enough to provide beauty for the parts of His creation that have a short life. Why should we worry if God takes such care of even the smallest blade of grass? The Lord knows our problems and will provide us with what we need. do not seek … nor have an anxious mind: Since God will provide, there is no need for us to concentrate on mundane things such as food. This should not be our chief concern, but instead our first priority should be doing the will of God (v. 31).

12:30 The world pursues expensive food and luxurious clothing as ends in themselves. It has its heart set on things, without thinking of God and thanking Him for such pleasures. The materialistic world is like a group of passengers frantically scurrying to get the best deck chair on a sinking ship. When we are consumed with possessions, there can be little left in our heart for God. your Father knows: We can trust God to provide for us because God knows precisely what we need. It is not wrong to have possessions. The issue here is one of priorities.

12:31, 32 Jesus contrasts what the world pursues (v. 30) with what the disciple is to pursue (v. 31). Those who get their priorities right and overcome the world will receive power to reign with Christ in His kingdom (Rev. 2:25–29). Jesus desires to share His coming glory.

12:33 Sell what you have: In contrast to the world's hoarding of possessions, the disciple must be generous with what God gives. money bags which do not grow old: By serving God and others, you can invest in your eternal future. You cannot take possessions with you in the next life, but you can store up an eternal treasure by giving to others (see Paul's statement in Phil. 4:17).

12:34 What people consider valuable is where their energy will be spent. Knowing God and investing in His purposes should be the treasure we seek.

12:35 waist be girded … lamps burning: These are two pictures of readiness. A lamp was used at night, while girding the waist involved pulling up the hem of a robe so that one could run. Jesus was calling the disciples to be ready for service.

12:36 Jesus compared the disciples to servants who are ready to serve their master immediately. Paul also used this image in describing his relationship to God (Rom. 1:1).

12:37 Blessed: Here the blessing is on those who watch attentively for their master's return. Jesus was speaking of faithful and obedient service. One day Jesus will return to make an accounting of how people served Him (Rom. 14:10; 2 Cor. 5:10). In a reversal of the servant image, Jesus pointed out that the faithful servant will be served by Jesus on His return. Faithfulness will be rewarded.

12:38 This verse speaks of a return at an unusually late hour. The exact time referred to depends on which system of time was used. In the Roman system the second and third watch would be 9 P.M. to 3 A.M. By the Jewish method it would be 10 P.M. to 6 A.M. Luke usually uses the Roman pattern (Acts 12:4); but since Jesus is speaking, the Jewish system is also possible. The point is that constant attentiveness is necessary.

12:39, 40 he would have watched: Jesus changed the illustration slightly, comparing the watch to protecting against a robbery. Knowledge of the time would lead to vigilance. But since the time is not known, constant readiness is essential.

12:41 to us, or to all people: Peter asked if Jesus' teaching was for the disciples only or for all people. Jesus did not answer the question directly. Instead He described a variety of categories of servants. Servants are those who belong to the Master and have their stewardship evaluated (19:11–27). Several responses, from faithfulness to blatant disobedience, are described in vv. 42–48. The issue is who lives life in a way that looks for, and takes seriously, the return of Jesus (1 John 2:28).

12:42 Who then is that faithful and wise steward? This is the basic question. The faithful steward is the one who looks for the Lord's return and serves faithfully in His absence, knowing that such faithfulness is what the master desires (vv. 37, 40, 43, 44).

12:43 blessed: The waiting and faithful servant is the one whom Jesus calls blessed.

12:44 he will make him ruler: Such rule will be a part of the administration of Jesus' kingdom when He returns (19:11–27; 1 Cor. 6:2, 3; Rev. 20—22).

12:45 is delaying … begins to beat: This servant is depicted as consciously doing the opposite of caring for others and of treating the Master's return as irrelevant.

12:46 The image of being slain—cut him in two—indicates the severity of this judgment, especially in contrast to the whippings of vv. 47, 48. Unbelievers are those who did not take seriously the consequences of judgment (2 Cor. 5:10; Rev. 3:11).

12:47 knew … did not prepare himself or do: This is a category of disobedience, not as blatant as doing the opposite, but unfaithfulness nonetheless. This servant is disciplined with many stripes, though he is not rejected. Such evaluation of church leaders is described in 1 Cor. 3:10–15 and is broadened to apply to all believers in 2 Cor. 5:10.

12:48 Discipline for the ignorant is less severe—beaten with few. The parable suggests degrees of God's punishment: The faithful are rewarded, the ignorant are disciplined a little, the disobedient are disciplined moderately, and the blatantly disobedient are executed. In each case, the stewardship of the servant is evaluated.

12:49 I came to send fire: Fire is an image associated with God's judgment (Jer. 5:14; 23:29). Jesus' coming brings judgment on those who refuse to accept Him and divides the believers from the faithless. Though Jesus was ready for the judgment of humankind, other things had to happen first (v. 50).

12:50 As a figure for Jesus' death (Mark 10:38, 39), baptism in this verse refers to the coming of overflowing waters of divine judgment (Pss.

18:4, 16; 42:7; 69:1, 2; Is. 8:7, 8; 30:27, 28). Note Jesus' human response to what He recognized as His necessary death.

12:51 Part of Jesus' mission was to create a division within humankind. Other texts of Luke speak of Jesus bringing peace (2:14; 7:50; 8:48; 10:5, 6; Acts 10:36; Eph. 2:13–17). He offers peace to those who respond to Him.

12:52, 53 Jesus describes the division that enters into families.

12:54, 55 a cloud rising out of the west: In Israel a western breeze meant moisture coming from the Mediterranean Sea. the south wind blow: A south wind meant hot air coming from the desert.

12:56 Hypocrites: Jesus rebuked His audience for being able to discern the weather but not what God was doing through Him.

12:57 do you not judge what is right? A rhetorical question of reflection. They are to consider the wise course of action.

12:58, 59 make every effort … to settle with him: The picture here is of a magistrate who functions like a bailiff bringing a debtor into prison. Since the context of this passage is Jesus' mission, the judge likely represents God. The message of this parable is to become reconciled to God before judgment comes.

13:1 The details of the incident referred to here, in which Jewish blood was shed at or near the temple during a time of sacrifices, are not known. Pilate was known for his insensitivity to the Jewish people early in his rule. The event probably occurred during the Feast of the Passover or Tabernacles, when Galileans most likely would have been at the temple.

13:2 Do you suppose: Jesus' question reflected the opinion of His audience. The idea that judgment and death are the results of sin led to the belief that tragic death was the result of extreme sin. While such a view was common in Judaism, it was not always a correct conclusion (Ex. 20:5; Job 4:7; 8:4, 20; 22:5; Prov. 10:24, 25; John 9:1–3).

13:3 unless you repent: Jesus' point here is that everyone stands at the edge of death until repentance occurs. The death in view here is spiritual, not physical.

13:4 The event referred to here was a natural tragedy as opposed to the violent human act alluded to in vv. 1 and 2. However, the same question was raised. Were the people who suffered being judged for their sins? Siloam was located in the southeast section of Jerusalem.

13:5 The manner in which a person dies is not a measure of righteousness; what is important is not to die outside of God's grace and care. The way to avoid such a fate is to repent, to come to God through the care of the physician Jesus (5:32).

13:6 A fig tree often represents God's blessing or a people who have a special relationship with God (Mic. 7:1, 2). The man in this parable represents God; the fig tree represents Israel.

13:7 for three years: A fig tree was often given some time to bear good fruit since its root structure was complex and took time to develop. Three years would have been enough for the tree to yield some fruit.

13:8 this year also: The keeper asks that the tree have a little more time. It is an appeal for compassion. The keeper will try to care for the tree so it will produce a fruit.

13:9 But if not: If the tree, symbolizing Israel, would yield some fruit it could escape judgment; a failure to be fruitful would result in judgment. In v. 35, Jesus declares that the nation's house is desolate, so judgment comes. That judgment is described in 19:41–44. The fall of Jerusalem, which took place in A.D. 70, is in view. This theme is also addressed in 20:9–19.

13:10–12 loosed from your infirmity: This is a declaration that she is freed from Satan's power (v. 16).

13:13 immediately: The healing, as is common, occurs immediately and is followed by the praise of thanksgiving to God (4:39; 5:13, 25; 7:15; 8:44).

13:14 with indignation: The synagogue ruler is not pleased and tells the crowd, while rebuking Jesus, that such healings can wait until after the Sabbath, since God's Sabbath should be honored.

13:15 Hypocrite: When the ruler of the synagogue became indignant regarding Jesus' healing on the Sabbath (vv. 10–14), Jesus pointed out that if basic compassion was shown to animals on the Sabbath, how much more compassion should be shown to a suffering woman (v. 16). In fact, Jewish practice varied in such cases. Some Mishnaic texts show that some activity with cattle was allowed on the Sabbath, such as untying them, feeding them, and leading them to water, providing it was not too far; while at Qumran, an activity like the one Jesus describes is forbidden on the Sabbath, if one must go more than 2,000 cubits (about 1,000 yards) to get to the water. At Qumran, a man could only go 1,000 cubits out of town on the Sabbath for a journey (Num. 25:4); while in some instances, the Pharisees allowed up to 2,000 cubits.

13:16 daughter of Abraham: This description of the woman indicates how special she was. Jesus pointed out that there was no better day on which to overcome Satan than the Sabbath.

13:17 adversaries … multitudes: The contrasting responses show the division that Jesus brings (12:51).

13:18, 19 Jesus compared the growth of God's kingdom to a little seed that becomes a big tree where many birds can find shelter. A tree of the mustard family would grow to about twelve feet. The image of birds nesting in the trees is found frequently in the OT (Ps. 104:12; Ezek. 17:22–24; Dan. 4:10–12).

13:20, 21 In this illustration the leaven is hidden in meal or flour equaling about fifty pounds. Leaven permeates bread and makes it rise. Usually this image is negative, as in 1 Cor. 5:6; but in this parable, it is positive. The kingdom will start small, but will grow and eventually fill the earth. The emphasis is not so much on a process of growth as in the difference between the kingdom's beginning and its end.

13:22–24 the narrow gate: The suggestion here is that one must enter salvation on God's terms. Those who seek to enter but are unable are those who seek entrance on their own terms. Many will miss the blessings of God because they think they can achieve salvation on their own merit or on the basis of their own piety, rather than because they came to know God through Jesus (v. 25).

13:25 Once a person's life has ended, the door of opportunity to respond to Jesus is closed and access into God's presence cannot be gained. I do not know you: The issue here is being properly and personally related to God through Jesus. Verse 26 makes it clear that the Lord at the door is Jesus, since reference is made to His ministry. Those who seek entry after the door is closed will be rejected, since they did not come to God on His terms through Jesus.

13:26 We ate and drank … You taught: The appeal here is by people who experienced Jesus' presence. The passage primarily involves those Jews who witnessed Jesus' ministry. They were trying to gain entry into God's presence based simply on the fact that they had observed Jesus. Jesus refused them, pointing out that it was not enough for them to have been close to Him. In order to have a relationship with God, one must embrace Jesus and come to know Him.

13:27 I do not know you … Depart from Me: In this verse, Jesus turns a question about salvation (v. 23) into a question about personally knowing Him. Failure to seek salvation in Jesus means that sin remains in a person's life.

13:28 weeping and gnashing of teeth: This is a figure describing the reaction of someone to traumatic news. It is a figure of remorse, pain, and frustration. It is clear here (though not in every place of its occurrence) that the figure describes reaction to being excluded from salvation, as the reference to being thrust out also makes clear. Jesus says the great patriarchs and prophets will be inside, but the one who does not enter by the narrow way will be excluded.

13:29 east … west … north … south: The scene changes in v. 29 to those who will come from all corners of the earth for entrance into God's kingdom. This passage alludes to the inclusion of Gentiles.

13:30 There will be many surprises in God's kingdom. Those who are despised on earth—some Gentiles, for example—will be greatly honored in the kingdom. Conversely, those who are considered influential and powerful on earth may find themselves ashamed (compare John 2:28).

13:31–33 Herod wants to kill You: This warning from the Pharisees was apparently an effort to get Jesus out of the region and out of their hair.

It is hard to know whether the warning was true. fox: The reference here is to Herod's viciousness. Jesus' reply seems to take the Pharisees' warning at face value. I shall be perfected: Jesus predicted His resurrection in Jerusalem. Because it was His call from God, Jesus could not avoid ministering in the region. The verb translated perfected means to complete something, which is why it alludes to Jesus' resurrection, the decisive moment of His ministry. The reference to today, tomorrow, and the day following is figurative, since Jesus was speaking of more than three remaining days in His ministry.

13:32 perfected: Jesus predicts His resurrection in Jerusalem. He cannot avoid ministering in the region. It is His call. The reference to today, tomorrow and the third day are figurative, since Jesus is speaking of more than three remaining days of total ministry. The verb translated perfected means "to complete something," which is why it alludes to Jesus' resurrection—the decisive moment of His ministry.

13:33 it cannot be: Jesus followed a long line of prophets that were executed in the nation's capital (1 Kin. 18:4, 13; 19:10, 14; 2 Chr. 24:21; Jer. 2:30; 26:20–23; 38:4–6; Amos 7:10–17).

13:34 Jerusalem, Jerusalem: The double address indicates Jesus' deep sorrow (2 Sam. 18:33; Jer. 22:29). The city had executed many of God's messengers. Stephen makes a similar point about the nation of Israel in Acts 7:51–53. I wanted to gather: As a prophet, Jesus spoke for God in the first person. He compared God's desire to gather the nation to a hen sheltering and protecting her young. Sadly, the nation was not willing to be gathered.

13:35 Your house is left … desolate: Jesus declared that the nation stood under a judgment similar to the exile to Babylon (Jer. 12:7; 22:5). God would abandon the nation until they responded to the Messiah. Blessed is He: This is a citation of Ps. 118:26. The people of Israel would not see the Messiah again until they were ready to receive Him and recognize that He was sent from God. Psalm 118 reflects the greeting of a priest to a group entering the temple. Jesus used the language of this psalm to illustrate God's greeting to Him.

14:1 Sabbath: Luke covers yet another Sabbath event (4:16–30; 4:31–38; 6:1–11; 13:10–17). Luke notes that Jesus is being watched closely. The term used means “lurk about and watch closely.”

14:2 Dropsy is a condition in which water is retained in the body, leading to swollen limbs (Num. 5:11–27). Dropsy is a symptom and not a specific disease.

14:3 Is it lawful: Note that Jesus raised the question of Sabbath law here, preempting the questioning he had faced in 6:2 (6:9).

IN CONTEXT

Keeping the Sabbath

A man's withered hand is restored; a man with dropsy is healed. Most would rejoice in the restoration of health and marvel at Jesus' power over illness. But the Pharisees were filled with rage (6:11) or remained disapprovingly silent (14:4). Why?

To the Jewish leaders of Jesus' day, healing on the Sabbath was sacrilegious. They considered His healings to be work, and the Ten Commandments clearly prohibited work on the Sabbath (Ex. 20:8–11; Deut. 5:12–15). The Sabbath was holy, a day set apart for God. Just as the Israelites were commanded to tithe part of their earnings to God, they were to give Him their time as well. Breaking the Sabbath was a very grave matter, for God's law demanded death for those who ignored it (Ex. 31:14, 15; 35:2).

During the period of the second temple (515 B.C.–A.D. 70), scribes and rabbis pored over the words of Scripture, interpreting every detail. What constituted "work" on the Sabbath? What could be allowed "within the law?" According to the Law, burdens were not to be carried on the Sabbath. This meant that what exactly constituted a "burden" had to be clarified and defined. On the surface, the scribes had a good reason for interpreting the Law: they did not want anyone to break it inadvertently. But their interpretations increasingly emphasized external adherence to the Law instead of the cultivation of an attitude of submission before the Lord. Perfect obedience to the Law and its interpretation became a source of pride instead of a tangible expression of love for God. By Jesus' day, the rabbis and scribes had become so strict that they accused Jesus' disciples of breaking the Sabbath because they had simply plucked some heads of grain, rubbed them in their hands, and eaten them as they walked through a grainfield (6:1, 2).

Jesus' healings on the Sabbath enraged the religious teachers. It was obvious to them that healing was classified as work and prohibited by the fourth commandment (Deut. 5:14). But to Jesus it was common sense and a good deed. Jesus revealed the rabbis' hypocrisy with the example of an ox falling down a pit. The Pharisees would allow an ox to be rescued on the Sabbath, but they wanted to prohibit Jesus from rescuing a human being. Their outrage at Jesus' healing came from their own interpretation of the Law and not from the Law itself. The scribes and rabbis had thought through, categorized, and defined all the minutiae of the Law, but they had missed its central point. The Lord had given the Law to encourage the Israelites to love Him and to love others (Mark 12:30, 31). He had never prohibited doing good on the Sabbath.

14:4 silent: The absence of reply shows a hesitation to enter into dialogue; then Jesus heals the man in their presence.

14:5 Which of you: Now Jesus explains that many Jews would rescue an animal on the Sabbath. As noted in Luke 13:15, various and somewhat different rules existed within the differing groups of Judaism for this kind of Sabbath activity.

14:6–11 they could not answer: Jesus has silenced his opponents.

14:12, 13 True hospitality and service is what is given to those who cannot repay. Disciples must have a special concern for the poor, maimed, lame, and blind, as Jesus does (4:16–19).

14:14 you shall be repaid: Even though there may be no reward in this life, God will not overlook what His servants have done to carry out His love and mercy (2 Cor. 5:10; Heb. 6:20).

14:15 Blessed is he: One of the guests at the meal reflected on the glory of sitting at the banquet table of God, an image of being saved and living in God's presence. The man probably assumed that many of the people attending the meal with Jesus would be present at God's banquet table. Jesus responded to the man's assumption with a warning.

14:16, 17 those who were invited: In the ancient world, invitations to a feast were sent out well in advance of the meal. Then on the day of the feast, servants would announce the start of the meal. This parable is similar to the one in Matt. 22:1–14, but was probably spoken on a different occasion.

14:18 I must go: Something gets in the way of the celebration. In the ancient world, closing the purchase could require a post-purchase inspection. Other things are more important.

14:19 going to test them: To own five oxen suggests wealth, since most landowners had only one or two. Again, something is more pressing.

14:20 I have married a wife: While the OT exempted a man from military duty because of marriage (Deut. 20:7; 24:5), marriage was not an excuse for avoiding social duties. The general point here is that the man regarded his own affairs as more important than the feast.

14:21 poor … maimed … lame … blind: This list matches that of v. 13. The maimed were excluded from full participation in Jewish worship (Lev. 21:17–23). The master's second invitation extended the scope of the offer to those who were rejected by society.

14:22 still there is room: The response has not filled the hall.

14:23 The master's second invitation extended beyond the city limits, encouraging even more people to come to the feast. This may picture the inclusion of Gentiles in God's salvation (Is. 49:6). The instruction to compel them to come in does not mean to force people in, but to urge them. As outsiders, the people might not feel comfortable coming.

14:24 none of those … invited: This speaks of most of the Jewish nation to whom Christ was originally offered. Because they rejected Him, they will not share in the meal.

14:25 great multitudes: Jesus did not hesitate to discuss the demands of discipleship with those who were interested in His claims.

14:26 does not hate: The essence of discipleship is giving Christ first place. To "hate" one's family and even one's life is rhetorical. It refers to desiring something less than something else. This instruction was especially appropriate in Jesus' day, since a decision for Jesus could mean rejection by family and persecution even to the point of death. Those who feared family disapproval or persecution would not come to Jesus.

14:27 Jesus' call here is to follow Him in the way of rejection and suffering. A disciple will be rejected by those in the world who do not honor Christ. Therefore, a disciple must be ready to face and accept such rejection.

14:28 count the cost: The picture of the tower is a call to consider what it will take to follow Jesus. Christ does not give some emotional appeal to follow Him. He asks for careful consideration of the action the disciple may choose to take and whether he or she will be faithful to the task (9:57, 58).

14:29, 30 was not able to finish: Their mocking centers on the dishonor that results from an inability to complete the task. Following Christ is not something to be taken up on a trial basis. It calls for ultimate commitment (9:62).

14:31, 32 The picture here is of a king assessing his ability to do battle with another more powerful king. The king sends a delegation only after appreciating the weight and consequences of his decision. Jesus urged the people to think about what it would mean to follow Him, and not to take it lightly.

14:33 forsake all: The essence of discipleship is to place all things in God's hands. Jesus wants the crowds to understand this. Following Jesus is not a trivial matter. It is not how little you can give to God, but how much God deserves. cannot be My disciple: One is not really being a disciple if one is not fully devoted to God.

14:34 In the ancient world, salt was often used as a catalyst for burning fuel such as cattle dung. The salt of the time was impure and could lose its strength over time, becoming useless. Jesus' point is that the same is true of a "saltless" disciple.

14:35 throw it out: Jesus warned that an ineffective commitment leads to being cast aside. This apparently is a reference to those who are judged as unfaithful believers (1 Cor. 11:30). Remaining useful to God means remaining faithful to Him (9:61, 62).

15:1 the tax collectors and the sinners: The three parables of ch. 15 explain why Jesus associated with despised groups while the Pharisees and scribes did not. The parables in this chapter are found only in Luke.

15:2 eats with them: In the ancient world, table fellowship indicated acceptance of the other guests. This is why the Jewish religious leaders complained about Jesus' companions at His meals (5:30–32; 19:10; Mark 2:15).

15:3, 4 A hundred sheep was a medium-sized flock. The average herd ran from twenty to two hundred head, while a flock of three hundred or more was considered large.

15:5, 6 The call to rejoice at finding the lost sheep would have been natural enough, since sheep were valuable property in the ancient world.

15:7 likewise: Jesus compared the joy of finding a lost sheep to the joy of heaven over a sinner's repentance. The unstated conclusion is that the hope of such a conversion was the reason Jesus associated with the undesirable of society. Persons who need no repentance is a rhetorical way of describing the scribes and Pharisees. A similar description is found in 5:31, where it is said that some do not need a physician. The scribes and Pharisees believed that they did not need to repent because they were not lost.

15:8 ten silver coins: A drachma was a silver coin equal to a day's wage for a basic laborer. The woman needed a lamp because she lived in a windowless house. Her broom for sweeping would have been made of palm twigs. In this second parable of ch. 15, more detail is given regarding the search effort than in the first parable of vv. 4–7.

15:9 I have found: The response parallels Luke 15:6.

15:10 likewise: The comparison to sinners is again made as in v. 7; but here the response of the angels as heaven's representatives is in view.

15:11 A certain man: This parable, Luke 15:11–32, is really about the father, who pictures God's compassion, and his reaction to his sons.

15:12 the portion of goods that falls to me: In the ancient world, this son most likely would have been in his teens and single. As the younger son he would have received half of what the elder son received (Deut. 21:17), or a third of his father's estate. The early Jews warned fathers against breaking up an estate too early. Here the father granted the request, illustrating how God permits each person to go his or her own way.

15:13 wasted his possessions: The verb here means “to scatter or disperse something.” The term translated prodigal describes a debased, extravagant life (Prov. 28:7).

15:14 famine … began to be in want: Some of the son’s hardship was made worse by circumstances which were beyond his control.

15:15 Feeding swine was an insulting job for a Jewish person, since pigs were unclean according to the Law of Moses.

The pods of the carob tree—probably the coarse food in Jesus' parable that the lost son was tempted to eat (Luke 15:16).

15:16 pods that the swine ate: The unclean pigs eat better than the son does. This shows how low he fell. This type of "pod" or sweet bean was eaten only by the poorest people.

15:17 he came to himself: This means "he came to his senses." He knows his father's slaves are doing better than he is.

15:18, 19 I have sinned: The son's words represent the confession of a sinner. The son expected nothing and relied completely on the mercy of his father. So it is with the sinner who repents.

15:20 The description of the father's compassion in running to his son and kissing him illustrates the immediate acceptance of a sinner who turns to God.

15:21 no longer worthy to be called your son: Despite his awareness of being accepted by his father, the son continued his confession of his sin. He then asked to become one of his father's servants. Similarly, a sinner realizes that he or she brings nothing to and deserves nothing from God, but must rely completely on God's mercy.

15:22 The father accepted his son's confession but refused his request to make him a servant. Instead the returning son was made a full member of the family again. The robe probably represented the best clothes the father had to offer. The ring may have borne the family seal, signifying the son's acceptance back into the family. The son's confession of sin brought full restoration.

15:23 fatted calf: The father will celebrate with a great banquet. The fatted calf was usually kept for sacrifices on feast days and was specially fed for the occasion. Such a meal of meat was rare in ancient Palestine. The celebration parallels Luke 15:6, 9.

15:24 dead … alive … lost … found: The total transformation of the prodigal son is summarized in these two contrasts. Such a transformation is a reason to celebrate. It is also the reason Jesus chose to associate with the lost.

15:25–27 heard music and dancing: The party developed quickly, so that the other son, coming in at the end of the day, encounters the noise of the celebration as he approaches.

15:28 The older brother's unhappiness over a fatted calf (v. 27) being killed to celebrate the return of his undisciplined brother illustrates the response of the Pharisees and scribes at the prospect of sinners becoming acceptable to God.

15:29 I never transgressed … you never gave me: Note the contrast between the older son's attitude here and the younger son's attitude in vv. 19, 21. The older son proclaimed his righteousness and argued that justice had not been done.

15:30 harlots: We are never told whether in fact the charge of the older son is true. The complaint is a strong one, "Father, you honor immorality over faithfulness."

15:31 all that I have is yours: The father responded to his disgruntled older son by explaining that just because someone receives a blessing, that does not mean there is no blessing for others. The father also implied that the older son always had the opportunity to celebrate with a fattened calf, since the animals were his.

15:32 It was right: The father claims justice is being done and rejoicing should occur using the same dead/alive, lost/found contrast which appeared in v. 24. We are not told how the elder responds. The parable is left hanging for reflection. One is left to decide whether they rejoice at the return of the sinner like the father or complain like the elder son. If one is willing to rejoice at the presence of transformation in the sinner, one should also seek out the sinner who can benefit from it.

16:1 A steward was a servant who supervised and administered an estate. The charge brought against this steward is incompetence.

16:2 Give an account … you can no longer be steward: The rich man responded to the charge that his steward was incompetent by firing the steward and asking for his records to be brought up to date.

16:3 I cannot dig; I am ashamed to beg: The steward does not wish to engage in common labor or admit he is poor.

16:4 I have resolved: He says, "I have got it!" He produces a scheme that will encourage others to help him.

16:5, 6 A hundred measures of oil … fifty: Three explanations are commonly given concerning the steward's right to alter the amount his master was owed: (1) The steward simply lowered the price on his own authority; (2) the steward removed the interest charge from the debt, according to the law (Lev. 25:36, 37; Deut. 15:7, 8; 23:20, 21); or (3) the steward removed his own commission, sacrificing only his own money and not that of his master. The different rates of reduction reflect the different rates for different commodities.

16:7 hundred measures of wheat: This is the Hebrew measure of the "kor," which was ten ephahs or thirty seahs, though various standards are cited for the kor (also spelled "cor"), making an exact figure uncertain. By the highest standard used, this is around 1,100 bushels or 3,930 liters of grain, a yield of a 100-acre tract of land. It would be worth 2,500–3,000 denarii. On the smaller standard, it is only 5 percent of this total. More important than the exact size is the reduction of the bill.

16:8 The master recognized the foresight in the steward's generosity. It is debatable whether the steward was dishonest and robbed the master by such reductions or was shrewd in using his authority to discount the goods (vv. 6, 7). The fact that the master commended the steward may suggest that the master was not robbed, and that the steward's reduction was the result of either an adherence to the law or a lowering of the steward's own commission.

16:9 Mammon, or money, should be used generously to build works that last. Money is called unrighteous because it often manifests unrighteousness and selfishness in people (Tim. 6:6–10, 17–19; James 1:9–11; 5:1–6).

16:10 faithful … unjust … least … much: Small examples of selfishness now result in greater selfishness later. Likewise, small examples of generosity now result in greater generosity later.

16:11 mammon … true riches: This is the development of v. 10. A person who cannot handle money certainly cannot handle spiritual matters that are of much more value.

16:12, 13 another man's: Yet another application of v. 10. If one cannot handle something for someone else, why should he be entrusted to risk himself on his own possessions, where accountability is gone?

16:14–16 Jesus indicates a basic division in God's plan here. The time of promise extended from the Law and Prophets until John the Baptist. Now the promise of God's kingdom is preached. The new era approaches. Everyone is pressing into it can also be translated "all are urged insistently to come in," emphasizing the urgency of the message.

16:17 one tittle of the law to fail: Here the law is seen in terms of promise as v. 16 suggests. Jesus' point is not that all 613 commandments of the Torah remain in effect forever, but that the goal of the law, the promise of God's rule, is realized. The New Covenant fulfills and replaces the old (Acts 2:14–40; 3:14–26). This verse also is an important one for the doctrine of the inerrancy of Scripture. Christ says that the awesome act of the universe being destroyed is more likely than for something God has given in His Word to be inaccurate.

16:18 commits adultery: Jesus illustrates the moral demands of the law by citing the inviolate nature of marriage, so much so that a remarriage is seen as adulterous. In other texts (Matt. 5:32; 19:9), Jesus notes the exception of sexual immorality, which can be a ground for a permissible divorce, though divorce is never set forth as a preferred option. What the sexual immorality refers to and whether a "permissible divorce" exists and whether one can remarry after such a divorce are all heavily debated issues in the church. Jesus' point in Luke was not a detailed exposition of this question since the Matthean texts are more complete, but simply serves as an illustration of the moral authority of His teaching. He is the ethicist of the kingdom. Other relevant texts to the issue of divorce are: Deut. 24:1–4; Mark 10:1–12; 1 Cor. 7:7–16. In Judaism there also was debate. The rabbinic school of Shammai only allowed divorce for immorality, while the school of Hillel allowed it for a wide variety of reasons (Mishnah, Gittim, 9:10).

16:19 clothed in purple: Purple clothes were extremely expensive because they were made with a special dye extracted from a kind of snail.

16:20, 21 To have his sores licked by dogs threatened Lazarus with infection as well as ritual uncleanness, since dogs fed on garbage, including dead animals.

16:22 Abraham's bosom was the blessed place of the dead. Angelic escorts for the dead were also known in Judaism. This verse indicates that the dead know their fate immediately.

16:23 Note the reversal of fortune from vv. 19–21. Here the rich man was suffering and Lazarus was at peace. Hades in the OT was the place where the dead are gathered. It is also called Sheol in Pss. 16:10; 86:13. In the NT, Hades is often mentioned in a negative context (10:15; Matt. 11:23; 16:18). Hades is where the unrighteous dead dwell.

16:24 I am tormented: The rich man desired relief from his suffering. The image of thirst for the experience of judgment is common (Is. 5:13; 65:13; Hos. 2:3).

16:25 The standard by which the rich man treated others was applied to him. In his lifetime he lacked compassion, so now there was no compassion for him.

16:26 a great gulf fixed: This detail illustrates the fact that the unrighteous, once they have died, cannot enter into the sphere of the righteous.

16:27, 28 The rich man asked for a heavenly envoy to be sent so that his brothers would not repeat his irreversible error. It is difficult to know if his concern for his brothers was sincere, or just a backhanded way of saying that in his own life he had not received adequate warning about the judgment.

16:29 They have Moses and the prophets: Abraham made it clear that the rich man's brothers should have known what to do, since they had the message of God in the ancient writings. The point here is that generosity with money and care for the poor were taught in the OT (Deut. 14:28, 29; Is. 3:14, 15; Mic. 6:10, 11).

16:30 from the dead: The rich man's premise is that a resurrection will bring repentance.

16:31 If they do not hear: A person who rejects God's message will not be persuaded by resurrection. Though the rich man's request for a heavenly messenger is denied within the parable, it is honored in the telling of the account, because the parable is part of a gospel that announces Christ's resurrection.

17:1, 2 woe to him: Jesus warned that judgment awaits those who cause others to stumble. The severe form of the warning suggests that false teaching, or leading someone into apostasy, is in view here. A millstone was a heavy stone used in a grinding mill.

17:3 Take heed: This command probably closes the warning of Luke 17:1, 2. sins … rebuke … repents … forgive: Here Jesus makes disciples accountable to one another, but in a context that emphasizes being forgiving as v. 4 makes clear.

17:4 you shall forgive him: The repeated request for forgiveness is to be honored. The disciple is to be generous with compassion.

17:5 Increase our faith: The disciples desire to grow in their faith.

17:6–10 Even faith the size of a tiny mustard seed can do wonderful things. The black mulberry tree has a vast root system that allows it to live up to six hundred years.

IN CONTEXT

Only One Returned

Once again Jesus chose a route that made it likely that He would encounter Samaritans (Luke 17:11). And once again Luke's account has to do with the tension between Jews and Samaritans.

It's easy to see why Jesus would ask, "Where are the nine?" (17:17). He was amazed at their lack of gratitude. But why did He call the one man who did return a "foreigner"? Luke singles out the fact that he was a Samaritan. That meant that he and Jesus were divided by a cultural wall that was virtually impenetrable. In fact, it was said to be unlawful for a Jew even to associate with a "foreigner" (compare Acts 10:28). Yet Jesus openly violated that taboo as He marveled at the Samaritan's thankful heart.

What of the other nine? Were they not Samaritans as well? Possibly, since this incident was taking place in or near Samaria. But is it not equally possible, given Luke's comment and Jesus' remark, that the other nine were not Samaritans, but Jews who had been driven away from the Jewish community to the Samaritans because of their leprous condition?

If so, their ingratitude was inexcusable. There was no racial wall separating them from Jesus. The only barrier had been their leprosy—and Jesus had removed that. They had every reason to turn in faith toward the Lord, but instead they turned away.

By contrast, a man who had every reason to stay away from Jesus returned and gave glory to God. As a result, he received what the other nine —and most of the rest of Israel—did not: spiritual healing, and not just physical.

17:11–14 Samaria and Galilee: Though Jesus was traveling to Jerusalem, His journey did not follow a direct route.

17:15–18 The Samaritans were a despised race (9:52). A hated foreigner was the only former leper who gave glory to God for his cleansing.

17:19 Jesus commended the faith that heals, as He did in 7:50; 8:50. The Samaritan apparently received more than physical healing.

17:20 In ancient Israel there was an expectation that the kingdom of God would come with cosmic signs. Such expectation was rooted in texts that linked God's coming with great signs (Joel 2:28–32). Jesus' concept of the kingdom of God, however, was broader than the time of the final consummation, when such signs will be seen (Matt. 24:29).

17:21 within you: The marginal translation "in your midst" is clearer. Jesus would not tell Pharisees that the kingdom is in them. His point is that the kingdom comes with Him. They do not need to hunt in order to find it. This is one of the most important texts on the kingdom, for it indicates that an aspect of kingdom promise came with Jesus in His first coming. The kingdom is the rule of God manifested over a realm (eventually the earth, but it is specially manifested in this present period among believers in the church). The kingdom of God is among the kingdoms of men today; but one day, the kingdom of God will swallow up the kingdoms of men (Rev. 11:15). Jesus makes clear by vv. 22–37 that the kingdom has two phases—one now and one to come. In the beginning of His kingdom on earth, God first prepares a King to rule; then He gathers a people for Him to rule over; and then He gives the Ruler a realm (the earth) in which to reign. King David provides a picture of this in the OT. He was declared to be king. Then he gathered a people. Then he took the realm. As such, the kingdom is not the same as the church, though the church is a part of the kingdom. The kingdom now is the presence of God alongside the kingdoms of men. The power of God is shown now in the distribution and work of the Spirit (Rom. 14:17; 1 Cor. 4:20). One day, however, Jesus will rule over a kingdom that will swallow up the kingdoms of men and will share that rule with the saints that are overcomers (Rev. 2:26, 27; 5:9, 10; 20:4–6).

17:22–24 Lightning is sudden and visible to all. Likewise, the sudden day of the Son of Man will be visible to all. When the Lord returns, He will come quickly and obviously. There will be no doubt as to what has occurred.

17:25 first He must suffer: Jesus makes clear that His death comes first.

17:26 In the days of Noah people paid little attention to God and faced judgment as a result (Gen. 6:5–13). The same will be the case at Jesus' return.

17:27 until the day: Jesus details how life went on normally until the Flood came.

17:28 likewise as it was also in the days of Lot: A second example from the godless time of Lot in Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 18:16—19:28).

17:29 destroyed them all: The day of the Son of Man will be a time of total judgment, as were the days of Noah (v. 27) and Lot.

17:30 Even so it will be: As God acted in the past, so He will act when the Son of Man is revealed (i.e., when Jesus returns).

17:31 let him not come down … let him not turn back: When the time comes, one is not to pause but to move quickly, not longing for the old life. One is to flee quickly to escape the coming wrath.

17:32 Lot's wife represents those who are attached to earthly things, those whose hearts are still in this world. Like Lot's wife, such people will perish (Gen. 19:26).

17:33 whoever loses his life will preserve it: Those who invest their lives in advancing Christ's kingdom, even to the point of suffering and death, will receive great privilege and glory in the climactic reign of Christ (Matt. 5:10–12; 19:27–30; 2 Tim. 2:12; Rev. 20:4–6).

17:34 one will be taken … the other will be left: Some have seen this as a picture of the separation at the rapture; however, "taken" is better understood as judgment (such as the soldiers took Jesus to crucify Him). Furthermore, v. 37 makes it clear that those taken are taken to final judgment.

17:35-36 one taken … the other left: A second and third picture follow. The day of the Son of Man divides mankind into two groups—those taken to judgment and those left to live and reign with Christ.

17:37 Where, Lord? The disciples ask where the judgment will occur. the eagles will be gathered: Jesus does not answer the question directly. The term for eagles refers to vultures who gather over dead corpses. In effect, Jesus says that when the judgment comes, it will be final and tragic with the stench of death and the presence of vultures everywhere. Again, one will not need to look for it; the birds will reveal its presence. This language is heavily pictorial to evoke the foreboding mood of the climactic events described. Jesus brings salvation but also judgment, which is why a decision about Him is so important. He brings the kingdom (v. 20), and one either is with Him or suffers the fate of judgment.

18:1 always ought to pray … not lose heart: Luke makes clear why Jesus tells this parable.

18:2 The Romans allowed the Jews to manage most of their own affairs. This judge did not fear God, and was therefore probably a secular judge, not a religious one. The dishonest judge represents corrupted power.

18:3 The woman in this parable is a widow, dependent on society for her support. Luke often takes special note of the plight of widows (2:37; 4:25, 26; 7:12; 20:47; 21:2, 3; Acts 6:1–7; 9:39, 41). Get justice: Perhaps the woman was asking for help concerning a financial problem.

18:4, 5 The persistence of the widow is the lesson of the parable. God is a counterexample to the judge. God does not begrudge answering prayer. Jesus' point is that if an insensitive judge will respond to the continual requests of a widow, God will certainly respond to the continual prayers of believers.

18:6, 7 shall God not avenge His own elect: God will respond to injustice and religious persecution meted out to His people. In the end, He will avenge.

18:8 will He really find faith: Jesus' question here is whether upon His return believers will still be looking for Him. Persecution can cause the faithful to lose their enthusiasm. In asking this question, Jesus is exhorting believers not to lose heart (v. 1).

18:9 to some who trusted in themselves: Jesus always challenges religious pride and self-righteousness while commending humility (5:29–32; 7:36–50; 14:1–14).

18:10–12 God, I thank You: The tone of the prayer reveals the Pharisee's problem. He uses the pronoun I five times in two verses. The Pharisee's attitude seems to be that God should be grateful to him for his commitment. The man obviously looked down on other people and was proud of his fasting and tithing.

18:13 This is an example of the humble spirit of repentance that Jesus commends. The tax collector knew that he could not say or bring anything to enhance his standing with God. He knew that only God's mercy and grace, and not his own works, could deliver him.

18:14 Jesus identified the contrast between the Pharisee and the tax collector as one between pride and humility, between those who exalt and those who humble themselves. God will bring down the proud and will exalt the humble (1:52; 14:11).

18:15 they rebuked them: The disciples assumed that Jesus was too important and too busy for children. The parents' desire for Jesus to touch the children was probably a request to bless them.

18:16, 17 Jesus used the thoughtlessness of His disciples to make two points: (1) All people, even little children, are important to God. (2) The kingdom of God consists of those who respond to Him with the trust that a little child gives to a parent.

18:18–21 All these things I have kept: Like the Pharisee in vv. 11, 12, the ruler was certain of his own ability to live righteously.

18:22 Sell all that you have and distribute to the poor: This was a radical test of the ruler's concern for others (12:33, 34). Jesus was determining whether the ruler's treasure (Matt. 6:19–21) lay with God or money (16:13). Jesus was not establishing a new requirement for being saved. He was examining the ruler's orientation to God by directly confronting him with the very thing that was hindering him—namely, his wealth. By contrast, Zacchaeus was a wealthy man who responded to Jesus (19:8–10).

18:23 very sorrowful … very rich: Here is the sad commentary of his response. His wealth meant that he would not even consider Jesus' admonition.

18:24 How hard it is for those who have riches: Jesus knows that wealth can turn into a matter of pride and a sense of ownership. A wealthy person can easily think he has no need of God and that he is in control of life or is controlling it through things. This means becoming subservient to the creation and not the Creator. So Jesus says that it is difficult for the wealthy to set proper priorities for God and His kingdom as contrasted with material things. This is even more tragic when one considers that the former lasts forever whereas the latter passes away quickly (2 Pet. 3:10–12).

18:25 easier for a camel: This is hyperbole. It is impossible for a camel to go through the eye of a sewing needle, but even that is easier than a rich person entering into God's blessing. This would shock any Jewish hearer who might assume that wealth meant the presence of God's blessing.

18:26, 27 Who then can be saved: Jesus answered this question by explaining that the change of heart one must experience in order to know God is possible only through Him. Any person who enters the kingdom does so only by the marvelous grace of God (John 3:3).

18:28 we have left all and followed You: Peter wanted reassurance about the disciples' sacrifice as compared to the ruler.

18:29 for the sake of the kingdom of God: Jesus assured the disciples that the sacrifices they made in leaving everything to follow Him would be rewarded without measure in His kingdom. The disciples' wise stewardship of their lives exemplifies the principle of 9:24; 17:33.

18:30 shall not receive many times more … eternal life: Here we see the clear division of time into the present age and the age to come. Blessings abound in both periods for disciples. In the future comes the very eternal life about which the ruler asked in v. 18. The quality of that life will be as abundant (John 10:10) as the sacrificial investment of the present (9:24). In fact, Jesus cites the divine compensation as one hundredfold (Matt. 19:29). The remuneration is always much greater with God than the renunciation we endure.

18:31 Though Jesus referred to the suffering He was going to face in Jerusalem, a suffering that was predicted by the prophets, His disciples did not understand the implication of His words until after His resurrection. The theme of Jesus' suffering is repeated in 24:25, 26, 44–47.

18:32, 33 The entire sequence of events of Jesus' trial, crucifixion, and resurrection is predicted here in detail.

18:34 understood none of these things: The disciples may have understood something of what Jesus said, but they could not understand why God's Chosen One would have to face such suffering. For those who were expecting the Promised One to be an exalted figure who would deliver God's people, it would be very difficult to reconcile such an expectation with such terrible suffering. was hidden: The disciples did not understand the implications of Jesus' suffering and death until it was explained to them in detail after Jesus was raised from the dead (24:25, 26, 44–47).

18:35–37 Jesus was nearing Jerusalem: Jericho was about seventeen miles from the city.

18:38 Note the irony in this verse. The blind man recognized who Jesus was, the Son of David, more clearly than many people who were blessed with physical sight. The blind man's cry for mercy demonstrated his belief that Jesus had the power to heal him.

18:39–41 he cried out all the more: The crowd's rebuke does not stop the vibrancy of the blind man's faith.

18:42 your faith has made you well: Jesus again highlights the value of faith (7:50; 8:50; 17:19).

18:43 The gracious work of God led to praise, not only from the one who was blessed but also from those who saw the blessing.

19:1, 2 Zacchaeus, as chief tax collector, most likely bid for the right to collect taxes and then hired another tax collector to actually gather the money.

19:3, 4 A sycamore tree is similar to an oak tree, with a short trunk and wide lateral branches.

19:5 today I must stay at your house: Jesus takes the initiative with the tax collector. Jesus uses a key term for Luke, "today" (2:11; 4:21; 13:32, 33; 23:43). Jesus also says that He "must" stay there, using another key expression in Luke (2:49; 4:43; 9:22; 13:33; 17:25; 22:37; 24:7, 44). Together they suggest immediacy and the working out of Jesus' commission to fellowship with those who were rejected by society.

19:6 made haste: Zacchaeus does exactly as Jesus commanded in v. 5.

19:7 The crowd was not happy with Jesus' choice of whom to honor with His fellowship. In the crowd's opinion, Zacchaeus was a sinner. The term translated complained recalls the grumbling of 5:30 and 15:2, where the same issue was in view. Since tax collectors often took for themselves a high percentage of what they demanded, they were hated and despised in ancient Israel.

19:8 give half … restore fourfold: Zacchaeus determined to deal generously with others. In later Judaism, it was considered generous to give away up to 20 percent of one's belongings; giving away more than this was considered dangerous. Legal restitution for extortion was also 20 percent (Lev. 5:16; Num. 5:7).

19:9, 10 for the Son of Man: Jesus gives another mission statement. He declares that the Son of Man has come to seek and save that which was lost. Zacchaeus is an example of such success. The entire episode recalls the teaching of Luke 15, while the roots of the imagery go back to Ezek. 34:2, 4, 16, 22, 23 (John 10).

19:11 kingdom of God would appear immediately: Jesus corrects the disciples' thinking that when Jesus comes to Jerusalem, the consummation of the kingdom (judgment and rule) will come. They are still asking the same question in Acts 1:6. Jesus' answer is very appropriate for the many today who continue to set dates for the coming of Christ.

19:12 This parable is similar to Matt. 25:14–30, but the occasion is probably different. The story parallels in part what happened to Archelaus, a son of Herod the Great, who came to power in 4 B.C. The people disliked Archelaus, and they appealed to Augustus Caesar not to give him authority.

Jesus is not retelling the story of Archelaus, but the historical events meant that the parable had a well-known plot. A significant detail is that the kingdom is received during the journey away from the land to be ruled. This corresponds to Jesus' leaving this earth to receive the kingdom following His resurrection.

19:13 Do business till I come: This detail shows that Jesus' return would not be immediate (v. 11). The servants represent Jesus' followers. They are to serve faithfully until Jesus returns. ten minas: Each servant received one mina, or about four months' wages for the average worker. The master, symbolizing Jesus Himself, wants to see fruit, or dividends from his investment. Did his servants put the money they received to good use?

19:14 his citizens hated him: This is a separate group from the servants and refers to those who reject Jesus outright.

19:15 how much every man had gained: Having returned with authority to rule, the nobleman asks the servants to give an account of their labor in his absence.

19:16 The first servant earned ten times the amount he was given originally.

19:17 you were faithful … have authority over ten cities: Faithfulness is commended and rewarded with greater opportunity. The authority given to the servant represents a role in administering Jesus' kingdom (1 Cor. 6:2, 3; Rev. 2:26–28; 5:9, 10; 20:1–6).

19:18 five minas: The second servant adds five times to the original investment.

19:19 five cities: This servant is also given further responsibility as a reward.

19:20–23 I feared you: The unfaithful servant's excuse for failure reflects a negative view of the nobleman. If the servant had really feared the master, he would have done something with the money. Even putting the money in the bank would have yielded interest. As it was, the servant failed to respond to the nobleman at all or even to understand him.

19:24 take … give: The third servant ends up with nothing while the faithful servant receives even more (1 Cor. 3:15).

19:25 he has ten minas: The crowd offers a mild protest to the additional reward.

19:26, 27 what he has will be taken away: Unfaithfulness brings loss of reward (Rev. 3:11). It is possible that the loss for some will be so great that they will be excluded from the millennial reign with Christ on earth (Matt. 22:13). This latter servant may be an example of such millennial disinheritance.

19:28 going up to Jerusalem: Jesus now approaches the city where He must die (Luke 13:33).

19:29, 30 Jesus was in control of the events of the last week of His life, even though those events led to His death. Here He prepared to enter the city riding a colt. Bethphage and Bethany were located just east of Jerusalem, within two miles of the city. The Mount of Olives was in a range of hills just outside of Jerusalem, directly across from the temple.

19:31 the Lord has need of it: Such borrowing of an animal was not as strange as it may appear. There was an ancient custom by which a political or religious leader could commandeer property for short-term use. Jesus was entering Jerusalem to celebrate the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread, festivals that commemorated the great act of God's deliverance of the nation. Such feasts were often celebrated at this time with the hope that God's decisive deliverance would come.

19:32, 33 found it just as He had said: Jesus is in control of events and is aware of what is taking place. The events in Jerusalem did not catch Him by surprise.

19:34 The Lord has need of him: This occurs just as Jesus predicted. To control the major events of history (John 10:18), one must control all the events. Only God can do that.

19:35 The clothes were probably their outer garments. The scene recalls the declaration of Jehu as king in 2 Kin. 9:13. The ride on the colt or mule resembles the events of 1 Kin. 1:33, in which David made the new king, Solomon, ride to Gihon on a mule. Zechariah had prophesied that the coming King would ride into Jerusalem humbly on a donkey (Zech. 9:9). However, Luke does not emphasize these connections with OT prophecy as Matthew and John do (Matt. 21:5; John 12:15).

19:36 spread their clothes on the road: The actions here indicate that a dignitary was being greeted (2 Kin. 9:13). This is like "rolling out the red carpet" today.

19:37 disciples began to rejoice: Luke is more detailed than Matt. 21:8 and Mark 11:8 who attribute these actions to the crowd. Luke appears to be suggesting that what the disciples started, the crowd joined. The disciples rejoice and praise God for the mighty works they had seen. Here is the declaration of a regal figure (v. 38) who does the work of the eschaton (7:22). The last miracle that Luke described was a healing by Jesus as the Son of David (18:38–43).

19:38 This verse is a citation of Ps. 118:26, with the title of King added to it. The disciples recognized that Jesus was the promised King sent from God. He is the One who brings peace to the relationship between people and God (1:78, 79).

19:39 rebuke Your disciples: Some Pharisees were not pleased that Jesus allowed Himself to receive such honor; they wanted it stopped.

19:40 the stones would immediately cry out: Jesus replied ironically that if the disciples did not offer such praise, creation would. Creation is more sensitive than those who are making the complaint!

19:41 wept over it: Jesus knew that so many of the people of Israel had rejected Him that the nation would suffer judgment, in the form of the terrible destruction that came on Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

19:42 if you had known: They could have known if they had been in God's word (Deut. 9:24). In fact, this your day was a very specific day of prophecy. It was the 173,880th day from the going forth of the decree of Artaxerxes until Messiah the Prince (sixty-nine weeks of years is 483 x 360 days or 173,880. God picked out a specific day for the presentation of His Son as King to the nation, but they did not know "the time of their visitation" (v. 44).

19:43 build an embankment: This is a prediction of Rome's successful siege of Jerusalem under Titus. The details reflect a divine judgment for covenant unfaithfulness, similar to the Babylonian destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. (Is. 29:1–4; Jer. 6:6–21; 8:13–22; Ezek. 4:1–3).

19:44 level you, and your children: The totality of the destruction is made clear in this further description of the siege of Jerusalem. Even children would die, and buildings would be destroyed. your visitation: Jesus gave the reason for the judgment. They did not recognize the time of God's coming in Messiah.

19:45 Jesus' entrance into Jerusalem begins the final section of Luke's Gospel. Jesus cleansed the temple in anger after seeing that the place of prayer had become an excuse for corrupt commerce. Merchants were selling sacrificial animals in the outer court of the temple (the court of the Gentiles) at exorbitant prices. Money changers were making an excessive profit exchanging currencies for the temple shekel. John records a temple cleansing in John 2:13–22, but it is not clear whether that event is the same as this one in Luke. Since John places the event early in Jesus' ministry, Jesus might have cleansed the temple twice. The synoptic Gospels place the cleansing of the temple in the last week of Jesus' ministry (Matt. 21:12–17; Mark 11:15–19). Some have suggested that John purposely placed the cleansing of the temple out of chronological order as a foretaste of Jesus' judgment on contemporary religious practices.

19:46 The holy place of worship had become a site for taking economic advantage of people. Jesus' remark about a house of prayer alludes to Is. 56:7. His comment regarding the den of thieves comes from Jer. 7:11.

19:47 Jesus' actions at the temple, the most sacred location for Jews, caused the Jewish religious leaders to strengthen their resolve to destroy Him.

19:48 unable to do anything: The leadership is portrayed as paralyzed in the face of the people's interest in Jesus.

20:1–4 Here as throughout the Gospel of Luke, the ministries of John the Baptist and Jesus are linked (1:5–80; 3:10–18; 7:18–35). Jesus' question presented the Pharisees with a dilemma. If they recognized John's ministry as coming from heaven, they would be recognizing the same divine origin of Jesus' similar "independent," Spirit-directed ministry. But if the Pharisees denied that John was sent by God, they risked angering the majority of the people, who believed that John's ministry was divinely directed (vv. 5, 6).

20:5–8 they did not know: The religious experts, for expediency, claim ignorance on this key question.

20:9 In a variation of Is. 5:1–7, the vineyard here represents the promise made to Israel, while the vinedressers represent the nation of Israel. The man who planted the vineyard represents God. The imagery of the vineyard recalls the subject of Jesus' parable in 13:6–9. This parable is also found in Matt. 21:33–44 and Mark 12:1–12, with some slight variations of detail in each account.

20:10 beat him … sent him away empty-handed: The treatment of the servant in this parable represents the treatment of the OT prophets by the people of Israel. During the time of the prophets, the nation of Israel produced no fruit; disobedience abounded (11:49–51; 13:34; Acts 7:51–53).

20:11 beat … treated him shamefully … sent away empty-handed: Yet again, a servant is rejected. This shows such rejection was repeated.

20:12 wounded him … cast him out: A third servant is treated more harshly.

20:13 I will send my beloved son: This refers to Jesus (3:21, 22; 9:35).

20:14 This is the heir … let us kill him: The vinedressers hoped that with the son gone, the inheritance would fall to those who worked the property, a transfer that was possible in the ancient world. It should be noted that the details of this parable do not represent the thinking of those who crucified Jesus. The leaders of Israel thought they were stopping someone who was dangerous to Judaism, not that they were going to inherit Jesus' kingdom.

20:15 cast him out … killed him: The parallel here of course is Jesus' death. what will the owner of the vineyard do to them: the parallel question is "What will God the Father do to those who reject and murder His Son?"

20:16 come and destroy those vinedressers: God will exercise judgment on those who killed His Son. He will give the vineyard to others. Jesus is alluding to the inclusion of Gentiles in the promise of God's kingdom.

20:17 The stone which the builders rejected: This passage, taken from Ps. 118:22, pictures the exaltation of the Righteous One, Jesus, after His rejection. Opposition will not stop God from making the One who is rejected the center of His work of salvation.

20:18 Jesus is the stone. Anyone who goes against the stone will be destroyed. Jesus' statement is similar to a late Jewish proverb: "If the stone falls on the pot, alas for the pot; if the pot falls on the stone, alas for the pot." The imagery of Jesus as a stone is also found in 1 Pet. 2:4–8, where Peter compares the believers to living stones built into a spiritual temple for the Lord. chief cornerstone: This could be the large stone that joins the foundation of two walls of a building, or else the capstone at the top of a doorway.

20:19 The Jewish religious leaders wanted Jesus removed because of His direct challenges to them. But because they feared the reaction of the crowd, they waited for a more favorable time to do away with Jesus.

20:20 The religious leaders watched Jesus very closely. They pretended to be righteous, which in this context means that they tried to look sincere. They wanted to trap Jesus into saying something that would make Him look like a political revolutionary, then they planned to hand Him over to the Roman governor Pilate.

20:21 teach the way of God: This flattery comes across as very dishonorable when placed next to v. 20.

20:22 Is it lawful for us to pay taxes to Caesar or not: This question concerned the poll tax to Rome, which was different from the taxes collected by the tax collectors. The poll tax was a citizenship tax paid directly to Rome, as an indication that Israel was subject to that Gentile nation. The Pharisees' query was a trick question. If Jesus answered yes, the people would be angry because He respected a foreign power. If He answered no, He could be charged with sedition.

20:23 perceived their craftiness: Jesus, in control, knows their motives.

20:24 Whose image … does it have: Jesus' reply was clever. He had the Pharisees pull out a coin, indicating that they already recognized Roman sovereignty by using Roman coins themselves. A denarius was a silver coin that usually had a picture of the emperor Tiberius on it. On some of them the reverse bore an image of Tiberius's mother Livia portrayed as a goddess of peace, with the inscription "High Priest."

20:25 The Pharisees could not twist Jesus' wise reply into a charge of sedition (23:2). According to Jesus, Caesar, as the ruler of the empire, had the right to collect taxes. Yet at the same time, God should be honored above any ruler. Honoring God does not make a person exempt from supporting the basic functions of the state (Rom. 13:1–7), for all figures of authority have been ordained by God.

20:26 they marveled: Jesus escapes the trap, and the listeners are amazed.

20:27 The Sadducees, the Pharisees, and the Essenes were three major divisions in first-century Judaism. The Sadducees rejected the oral traditions that the Pharisees so stringently obeyed. Instead they based their teaching only on the first five books of the OT, the books of Moses. They denied that there could be a resurrection, and they contrived a ludicrous example to suggest that the doctrine was impossible.

20:28 In Judaism a childless widow would marry the brother of her late husband, according to the custom known as levirate marriage (Deut. 25:5; Ruth 4:1–12). The law was designed to perpetuate the name of a man who died childless.

20:29–32 seven brothers: The example goes through seven childless marriages and the woman's death.

20:33 whose wife does she become? This question was intended to show that resurrection leads to absurd results.

20:34, 35 Jesus contrasted life in the current age with life in the age to come. Because marriage will not be a part of the age to come, the Sadducees' absurd example (vv. 28–33) does not apply. Jesus upheld the doctrine of resurrection in His reply, speaking of both the age to come and the resurrection, so that the two concepts were clearly associated. Jesus also noted that only those counted worthy would receive the benefits of the age to come.

20:36 equal to the angels … sons of God: The everlasting life of a resurrected person makes that person something like an angel. Paul explains further that in the resurrection we will be given resurrection bodies similar to Christ's (1 Cor. 15:25–58). This will be a new experience that will not necessarily parallel experiences on this earth, such as marriage.

20:37 the God of Abraham … Isaac … Jacob: Jesus' reply here is more subtle. He says if God is the God of the patriarchs, then they must be raised and alive.

20:38 the God of the … living: Jesus points out that if God is the God of the patriarchs, then they must be raised and alive. God has a relationship only with those who are alive. Jesus' citation of the law (Ex. 3:1–6, 15) probably made an impact on the Sadducees, who revered the teachings of the books of Moses.

20:39, 40 scribes: The scribes, accepting the Pharisees' view of resurrection as derived from the Scripture, are pleased with the answer and commend Jesus.

20:41–43 Here Jesus takes His turn at raising a theological issue. The dilemma He poses is how the Messiah (the Hebrew word for Christ) could be called the Son of David, when David himself gave Him the title Lord. my Lord: This is a citation from Ps. 110:1 (22:69; Acts 2:30–36). The Messiah was David's descendant and yet David gave Him the respect due to a superior, the reverse of what normally occurred in ancient times. Jesus was not denying the title Son of David to the Messiah, He was simply noting that the title Lord, meaning "Master," is more central. Even David one day will bow at the Messiah's feet and confess that He is Lord (Phil. 2:10).

20:44 how is He then his Son? Jesus does not answer His question. It is to be reflected upon. For Jesus, the key title is Lord. As the subsequent discussions of the passage show, Messiah is Son of David; but that is less important than being David's Lord.

20:45–47 devour widows' houses: Jesus noted the scribes' hypocrisy and their taking advantage of others. Such activity will be judged.

Poorer Than Poor

Jesus called the widow in Luke 21:1–4 “poor.” The word He used referred to a person so destitute that she was literally in danger of death. It is hard to reckon what the two mites that she threw into the treasury would be worth in today’s currency. But even in her day they were not much. Each mite was worth about one-thirty-second of a denarius, the daily wage of a soldier, which would be less than fifty cents today.

The important thing to note is that the two coins were “all the livelihood that she had” (21:4). She was truly destitute—the sort of widow who would later be eligible for support from the church (1 Tim. 5:5). Nevertheless, she gave generously to the temple. Jesus praised her for her faithfulness, even though it meant sacrifice.

In doing so, the Lord showed that God’s accounting differs from ours. He pays attention to our attitudes in giving more than the absolute dollar amount of our gifts.

21:1 There were various places around the temple where people could leave contributions. Thirteen such locations were in the forecourt. The receptacles were made in the shape of trumpets. Each represented a different kind of offering. There was also a treasury room near the court of women.

21:2 The poor widow contributed two mites, small copper coins that were the smallest currency available.

21:3 has put in more than all: Jesus contrasted the giving of the rich (v. 1) with the sacrifice of the poor widow.

21:4 put in all the livelihood that she had: The widow did not refuse to give even when she needed more to live on. Her devotion to God through her contributions was her first priority (2 Cor. 8:1–5; 9:6–9).

21:5 how it was adorned: The temple was refurbished under Herod the Great with new foundation walls and enlarged areas outside the temple. Great stones of twelve to sixty feet in length were used. The entire effort took from 20 B.C. to around A.D. 64. Thus the refurbishing was in progress during Jesus' visit, around A.D. 30. The donations were gift offerings for the decoration of the temple and included gold and silver plated gates, grape vine clusters, and Babylonian linen tapestries, which hung from the temple veil. Even Tacitus, the Roman historian, called it an "immensely opulent temple."

21:6 not one stone: Jesus noted that the beautiful place of worship was temporary and would be destroyed. He was referring to the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, which itself was a picture of the destruction of the last days.

21:7 when … what sign: The disciples want to know what will lead to such a tragedy and when it will occur.

21:8 Take heed: The first century and early second century were times of great messianic fervor in Judaism, as the Israelites sought freedom from Roman rule. Many people claimed to be the Messiah. Jesus warned His disciples not to be fooled by such claims.

21:9, 10 wars: These and other commotions will also come, but these events are not the coming of the end.

21:11 A wide variety of cosmic and natural events will occur before the end times. Verses 8–11 give signs before the end, while vv. 12–19 speak of events that will happen before the signs of vv. 8–11.

21:12 persecute you … for My name's sake: Jesus predicted the arrests and suffering that the disciples would face as a result of identifying with Him. Some of these events are detailed in Acts 3–5; 7; 21–28. The reference to synagogues, kings, and rulers indicates that all nations would share responsibility for the massacre of the disciples.

21:13 an occasion for testimony: Suffering can be an opportunity to advance the kingdom of God. This is why those who endure suffering and persecution are called blessed (Matt. 5:10–12).

21:14 settle it in your hearts: Jesus speaks here of resolve ahead of time to stand up for the faith in the midst of rejection.

21:15 I will give you a mouth and wisdom: Jesus promises the disciples that the Holy Spirit will assist them in giving testimony (12:11, 12). The initial fulfillment of this promise is found in Acts 4:8–14; 7:54; 26:24–32.

21:16 You will be betrayed: The persecution of the disciples would be painful and severe. Identifying with Jesus often means risking the rejection and denunciation of family, and in some cases martyrdom.

21:17 you will be hated … for My name's sake: Jesus forces a choice and some, not liking the option, react against those who have joined Him.

21:18 not a hair of your head shall be lost: Since Jesus has noted that some will die in v. 16, this must be read as referring to everlasting life. They may kill the body but not the life (12:4, 5). This is a note of assurance. The investment you make in this life for the next will not be affected by "moth or rust" (Matt. 6:19–21).

21:19 possess your souls: Patient allegiance to Jesus leads to eternal life (9:24).

21:20 A siege would be the sign that the end was near for Jerusalem and the temple. The other synoptic Gospels (Matt. 24:15; Mark 13:14) allude to the abomination of desolation in Dan. 9:25–27; 11:31. This passage compares the desecration of the temple to what occurred in 167 B.C., when Antiochus Epiphanes erected an altar to Zeus in the temple. A similar desecration of the temple site occurred during the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

21:21 let those in Judea flee: The siege will be a terrible time, so it is best not to be in Jerusalem.

21:22 days of vengeance: Jerusalem had become an object of divine judgment because of its unfaithfulness. Jesus warned of this consequence throughout His ministry (13:9, 34, 35; 19:41–44). The premise for such judgment goes back to the curses of the Mosaic covenant and the OT prophets' warnings of coming judgment (Deut. 28:49–57; 32:35; Jer. 6:1–8; 26:1–9; Hos. 9:7).

21:23 woe: Jesus says it will be a hard time for those who are pregnant and have young children. Judgment and war are never pleasant; divine judgment is no exception. Great distress is the fate of the nation.

21:24 fall … be led away captive: This verse elaborates on Jerusalem's fall. There would be death and captivity, just as the nation experienced under the Assyrians and Babylonians. times of the Gentiles: There would be a period in God's salvation plan when Gentiles would be dominant, of which the fall of Jerusalem would be a clear sign. The fact that the time of the Gentiles will run its course also suggests that Israel will once again play a significant role in God's plan (Rom. 9—11).

21:25, 26 signs: Jesus shifts His focus to the end times with His second mention of cosmic turmoil (v. 11; Is. 24:18–20; 34:4; Ezek. 32:7, 8; Joel 2:30, 31). men's hearts failing them: The terror of cosmic chaos will cause apprehension about what is coming.

21:27 the Son of Man coming in a cloud: The reference here is to the authoritative return of Jesus. The allusion to the cloud and the figure comes from Dan. 7:13, 14, with its picture of One who receives authority from the Ancient of Days. Jesus viewed this text in terms of an apocalyptic deliverance. The image of the cloud is important, since God is identified as riding the clouds in the OT (Ex. 34:5; Ps. 104:3). with power and great glory: The Son of Man has divine authority to judge the world.

21:28 lift up your heads … redemption draws near: This is the sign of the deliverance of Jesus' followers. The Son of Man acts on behalf of those who have suffered in His name.

21:29, 30 The tender buds that appear every spring on trees show that summer is approaching; the appearance of the signs Jesus describes will warn of the coming of the end times.

21:31 when you see … know: The cosmic signs and earthly chaos are indications that the decisive and consummate rule of God is approaching.

21:32 The most likely meaning of this verse is that when the end comes, it will come quickly. The events of the end times will fall within one generation from start to finish (17:22–24). The word generation can also refer to a race. Thus, it may mean that the Jews will continue to exist as a people until the end.

21:33 by no means pass away: The disciples had the assurance that Jesus' promises concerning the end times were more certain than creation itself. God made an unconditional and unilateral covenant, and He will keep it (Gen. 12:1–3; 15:18–21; Ps. 89).

21:34 Though the events of the end times may not come to pass for a long time, believers should continue to look for their arrival. The Day of Jesus' return should not take us by surprise. We should live as if it is imminent.

21:35 a snare: The end is something all must deal with; it is like a trap for all on the earth. Judgment follows and one should be ready for it and live in light of its approach.

21:36–38 Watch … pray: Jesus encouraged His disciples to be persistent in prayer and faith, looking for the day when the Son of Man exonerates the faithful in the judgment, so that they are able to stand before Him (1 John 2:28).

IN DEPTH

Jerusalem Trampled by Gentiles

Those living in Jerusalem at the time of Christ had reason to believe His prediction that the city would eventually fall to an invading army (Luke 21:20; see also 19:41–44). Political tensions were at a breaking point.

The Jews bitterly resented Rome's occupation of their homeland, which brought the corrupting influence of Greek culture, crushing taxes, and cruel government. Some, like the Zealots, fanned the flames of revolution by leading tax revolts and launching terrorist strikes against Roman troops and officials.

The final chapter of the drama began in A.D. 66 when a skirmish broke out between Jews and Gentiles over the desecration of the synagogue at Caesarea. Unable to prevail politically, the Jews retaliated religiously by banning all sacrifices on behalf of foreigners, even for the emperor himself. Furthermore, access to the temple grounds at Jerusalem would be strictly limited to Jewish countrymen.

Meanwhile, the Roman procurator ordered an enormous payment from the temple treasury. The Jews balked and assumed that the ruler would back down. Instead, he unleashed troops on the city who raped and pillaged at will, even resorting to flogging and crucifixion. The slaughter claimed about 3,600 Jewish lives, including children.

The city went into riot. Arsonists torched official buildings along with the home of the high priest, long suspected of collusion with the empire. Elsewhere, Jews overran Roman fortresses and ambushed a legion of reinforcements, capturing arms for the revolt at Jerusalem. In the end, the Romans retreated, temporarily leaving the Holy City in the hands of the rebels.

Yet no matter how brave or committed the Jewish revolutionaries may have been, they were no match for the professional armies of Rome. Emperor Nero dispatched Vespasian, his top general, to the region. Beginning in Galilee and working his way south, he systematically cut off Jerusalem's lines of supply—and escape—from Babylonia, the Mediterranean, and Egypt. By A.D. 70, he was poised to launch the final assault on Jerusalem.

However, Vespasian returned to Rome to succeed Nero as emperor, leaving his son Titus to complete the campaign. Advancing on the city from the north, the east, and the west, his legions erected siege walls and finally took the city, fulfilling Jesus' prophecy. Herod's temple was destroyed only six years after its completion (compare Luke 21:5, 6), the priesthood and the council were abolished, and all Jews were expelled from the remains of the city.

Jesus wept to think of such carnage (Matt. 23:37–39). Yet it was one of the prices His generation paid for rejecting Him as its Messiah.

22:1 This verse begins the “passion narrative,” the account of Jesus’ death and resurrection. The Feast of Unleavened Bread took place immediately following Passover (Ex. 12:1–20; Deut. 16:1–8). The two feasts were often considered as one. Passover commemorated the night of the tenth plague in Egypt, when the firstborn of Israel were “passed over” and spared by the angel of death. The Feast of Unleavened Bread celebrated the Exodus (Ex. 12; Lev. 23:5, 6). Many Jewish pilgrims traveled to Jerusalem to celebrate these feasts.

22:2 how they might kill Him: The leaders still want to remove Jesus, but fear of His popularity with the people stop them (19:47, 48; 20:19).

22:3 The journey to the Cross was not just a matter of human effort or Judas’s plots. Cosmic forces were at work in the opposition to Jesus. Satan is mentioned in the temptations of Jesus, and in 10:18 and 13:16. The name derives from the Hebrew term for “adversary” (Job 1:9–11).

22:4 Judas’s involvement in the plot to betray Jesus was fortunate from the point of view of the Jewish religious leaders. They could arrest Jesus secretly and later claim that the driving force to stop Him came from within His own group of disciples. The captains, Levites who were members of the temple guard, were the ones who could make the arrest.

22:5 glad … agreed to give him money: This detail is why Judas has been called greedy. Matt. 26:15 notes that Judas raised the issue of money. Judas’s offer simplified matters enormously, so the leadership was pleased and ready to pay.

22:6 in the absence of the multitude: The leadership did not want to get Jesus in public, lest a commotion break out.

IN CONTEXT

Passover

The Passover and Feast of Unleavened Bread (Luke 22:7) was the first of three great festivals of the Hebrews. The name Passover recalls the deliverance of Israel from slavery in Egypt (Ex. 12:1—13:16). God sent His angel to kill all the firstborn sons of the Egyptians in order to persuade Pharaoh to let His people go. Hebrew families were instructed to sacrifice a lamb and smear its blood on the doorpost of their house as a signal to God that His angel should "pass over" them during the judgment.

Passover was observed on the fourteenth day of the first month, Abib (March–April), with the service beginning in the evening (Lev. 23:6). It was on the evening of this day that Israel left Egypt in haste. Unleavened bread was used in the celebration as a reminder that the people had no time to leaven their bread before they ate their final meal as slaves in Egypt.

In NT times, Passover became a pilgrim festival. Large numbers gathered in Jerusalem to observe the annual celebration. Thus an unusually large crowd was on hand to take part in the events surrounding Jesus' entry into the city (Luke 19:37–39) and His arrest, trial, and crucifixion (23:18, 27, 35, 48). Apparently many stayed on until the Feast of Pentecost, when they heard Peter's persuasive sermon (Acts 2:1–41).

Like the blood of the lambs that saved the Hebrews from destruction in Egypt, the blood of Jesus, the ultimate Passover Lamb, saves us from the power of sin and death.

22:7, 8 The synoptic Gospels are very clear that Jesus was betrayed on the day of Passover (Matt. 26:17–19; Mark 14:12–16).

22:9, 10 follow him: Jesus is again in control of events and tells the disciples where they will hold the meal.

22:11, 12 guest room: Such rooms were often made available to the thousands of pilgrims who came to Jerusalem for the celebration of Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread. Such a room would contain couches for guests at the feasts to recline for the meal. Access to the room was probably gained by stairs on the outside of the house.

22:13 as He had said: Jesus' remarks are correct, even in non-spiritual matters.

22:14–30 A comparison of this account with John 13:1–30 suggests that Luke has rearranged the order of events in a topical manner. Luke has the meal first and all the discourse afterward. In John's account, Judas was gone by the time the meal was shared. Luke's account does not mention Judas's departure. In addition, Luke mentions two cups, while the other three Gospels mention only one. A Passover meal had four courses and four cups. Thus, it is obvious that all the Gospel writers summarize the events of the meal. The words over the bread and cup recorded by Luke are very similar to those of 1 Cor. 11:23–26.

22:15 to eat this Passover: Jesus is able to enjoy the fellowship of His disciples one last time before suffering and is also able to give some basic teaching before He departs.

22:16 I will no longer eat of it until it is fulfilled: In the kingdom to come, when final victory is celebrated, Jesus again will eat (Rev. 19:9).

22:17, 18 I will not drink of the fruit: As is made clear in v. 16, Jesus will abstain from celebrating a meal until His return.

22:19 My body … do this in remembrance: Jesus instituted a new meal, which is not only a memorial of His death but also a fellowship meal of unity. It is a proclamation and a symbol of the believers' anticipation of Jesus' return, when all God's promises will be fulfilled (1 Cor. 10:16, 17; 11:23–26). The bread of the Lord's Supper represents the body of Jesus, offered on behalf of His disciples.

22:20 This cup is the new covenant: The wine of the Lord's Supper depicts the giving of life, a sacrifice of blood, which inaugurates the New Covenant for those who respond to Jesus' offer of salvation (Heb. 8:8, 13; 9:11–28). This is the strongest substitutionary image in the Gospel of Luke: Jesus died on the cross in our place and for our sins (Acts 20:28).

22:21, 22 Jesus would suffer as God's plan unfolded, and the one who betrayed Him would face woe.

22:23 which of them it was: The news creates discussion at the table as to which of these close associates would act against Jesus.

22:24 the greatest: Note the sad irony in this verse. While Jesus faced the reality of being betrayed and killed, His disciples argued about which of them was greatest.

22:25 benefactors: This title suggests that the people should be grateful for the generous leaders of their nation and that they should recognize their power and authority.

22:26 as the younger … as he who serves: Leadership in the church does not exalt; it serves. It shows respect to others, as a young person would show respect to an elder. True leaders labor for others, as a servant would. In short, the Lord's view of greatness is the exact opposite of the worldview.

22:27 as the One who serves: Jesus appeals to His own service as the example. It is intriguing to consider if Jesus is alluding to the foot washing, which only John 13 portrays, or is referring to the general tone of His ministry.

22:28 in My trials: Jesus recognized that the disciples had been present and had suffered with Him during His ministry.

22:29 Jesus passed on His kingdom authority to the apostles who would continue planting the church, a part of the kingdom. The authority that Jesus bestowed on them was like the authority that the Father had bestowed on Him.

22:30 eat and drink … sit on thrones judging: This is a promise of future blessing and authority. The disciples were promised a seat at the banquet of victory and the right to help Jesus rule over Israel on His return (Matt. 19:28; 2 Tim. 2:12).

22:31 Satan has asked for you: The Greek word for you here is plural, indicating that Satan had asked permission to trouble all of the disciples.

22:32 I have prayed for you … when you have returned: The Greek word for you here is singular, referring specifically to Peter. In effect, Jesus restored Peter even before his fall (vv. 54–62), and He instructed the disciple to shepherd the saints by strengthening them.

22:33 to death: Peter overestimates his loyalty and does not sense the danger in Jesus' remarks. Paul also said "I am ready" but his confidence was in the dynamic of the gospel (Rom. 1:15–17) rather than the vacillating enthusiasm of the flesh.

22:34 three times: Jesus predicts that a triple denial will come before the cock finishes his morning crow.

22:35, 36 When I sent you: The allusion here is to the disciples' mission recorded in 9:1–6; 10:1–24. When the disciples had depended on God to provide for their needs, those needs were met through generous people. However, the situation had changed. Jesus here instructed His disciples to take a money bag, a knapsack, and a sword on their journeys in order to be prepared for the rejection that was to come.

22:37 this which is written: Jesus cited Is. 53:12, which describes a righteous one who suffers as a criminal. Jesus noted that His death would fulfill Isaiah's prediction.

22:38 Misunderstanding Jesus' instructions in v. 36, the disciples indicated that they had weapons with which to fight (vv. 50, 51).

22:39 Mount of Olives: Matthew 26:36 gives the name Gethsemane, while John 18:1 speaks more generally of a garden.

22:40 Pray: Jesus advises the disciples to pray for God's protection in this hour.

22:41 prayed: Jesus does what He has told His disciples to do. A stone's throw would be several yards.

22:42 Jesus agonized over His approaching death and the effect of God's wrath. The cup is a figure of speech for wrath (Pss. 11:6; 75:7, 8; Jer. 25:15, 16; Ezek. 23:31–34).

22:43 strengthening Him: God's answer to Jesus' prayer did not allow His Son to avoid suffering. However, God did provide angelic help for Jesus to face what was coming. Sometimes God answers prayer by eliminating trials; sometimes He answers by strengthening us in the midst of them.

22:44 His sweat became like great drops of blood: Jesus' earnest prayer and emotion (vv. 42–44) led to a physical reaction. Though Jesus probably did not bleed here, His sweat became like blood.

22:45 sleeping from sorrow: The disciples are weary and so sleep from the emotion that has overcome them, but it cost them time needed for prayer.

22:46 pray: Jesus repeats His call to prayer. They need it more than ever in these key stress-filled moments, when temptation is so likely.

22:47 to kiss Him: The betrayal takes place with an action that is a great lie.

22:48 Not only did Jesus remind Judas of what he had done, He also noted the irony of being betrayed with a kiss.

22:49 shall we strike? The disciples ask if they should fight.

INSIGHT

A Fortunate Miss

Total confusion reigned in the Garden of Gethsemane as Judas led a band to arrest Jesus. The chaos boiled over when Peter drew a sword and swept the air with a stroke that lopped off the ear of Malchus, one of the arresting party (Luke 22:50; John 18:10).

Peter's impulsive act could have spelled disaster. Jesus and the Twelve were completely outnumbered and ill equipped to defend themselves against a mob that included soldiers from the Roman cohort. The arresting party might even have been looking for a pretext to use violence against this supposedly dangerous rabbi. Fortunately, Jesus acted swiftly to regain control of the situation by healing Malchus's ear and addressing the crowd (Luke 22:51–53).

Another stroke of fortune was probably Peter's bad aim. It's interesting that the account details an injury to Malchus's right ear. Modern readers might assume that Peter would have swung his sword laterally, with the blade parallel to the ground. But a first-century swordsman was more likely to sweep out his sword and come down on the head of an opponent with a vertical, chopping stroke. In battle, the idea was to place a well-aimed blow on the seam of an enemy's helmet, splitting it open and wounding the head.

Perhaps this was Peter's intention, but he aimed wide to the left. Perhaps, too, Malchus saw the blow coming and ducked to his left, exposing his right ear.

In any event, Peter caused no mortal injury. But he certainly drew attention to himself. Malchus happened to be a servant of Caiaphas, the high priest (Matt. 26:3). Later, one of Malchus's relatives recognized Peter warming himself by a fire outside Pilate's court. "Did I not see you in the garden?" he asked suspiciously, a claim that Peter denied (John 18:26).

22:50 one of them struck the servant: John 18:10 indicates that this impetuous disciple was Peter (Matt. 26:51; Mark 14:47). His violent act risked giving the impression that the disciples were seditious.

22:51 touched his ear and healed him: Jesus mercifully healed the ear of one who was taking Him to His death. Jesus illustrated here the love for His enemies that He had commanded in 6:27–36.

22:52 as against a robber: The Greek term for robber was used of both highway bandits and revolutionaries. Jesus rebuked His captors for treating Him as though He were a dangerous lawbreaker.

22:53 you did not try to seize Me: Jesus notes their cowardice in that they did not seize Him publicly while He taught in the temple. your hour … darkness: Jesus notes that forces of evil are at work (John 8:44; 13:30; 14:30).

22:54 This is Jesus' first appearance before Annas (John 18:13).

22:55 Peter sat among them: The fire indicates that it is a cool evening. Peter has followed along just to see what happens.

22:56 was also with Him: The servant girl identifies Peter as a disciple.

22:57 denied: This is the first denial.

22:58 you also are of them … I am not: Denial number two followed after some time (after a little while).

22:59 for he is a Galilean: According to Mark 14:70, Peter's accent gave him away as being from the same region as Jesus.

22:60 I do not know what you are saying: The third denial brings Jesus' word to pass. rooster crowed: The sign of Jesus' prediction follows.

22:61, 62 looked at Peter: Apparently a window opened into the courtyard, and Peter knew that the Lord was aware of his denials. wept bitterly: The Lord knew Peter better than Peter knew himself (v. 34). Peter was greatly grieved that he had failed Jesus.

22:63 mocked Him and beat Him: Matthew 26:67; Mark 14:65 further describe the abuse of Jesus at the hands of the soldiers as involving speaking, spitting, and slapping.

22:64 Prophesy: The soldiers played a game to mock Jesus. They covered His head and asked Him to identify who was striking Him.

22:65 blasphemously: They dishonor or slander Him. Again, irony is present; for blasphemy is what Jesus will be charged with at the trial (Mark 14:64).

22:66–68 The description here is of a major morning trial that involved all the Jewish religious leaders, the entire council or Sanhedrin. This trial violated various Jewish legal rules given in later sources: meeting on the morning of a feast; meeting at Caiaphas's home; trying a defendant without defense; and reaching the verdict in one day instead of the two days that were required for capital cases.

22:69 Hereafter means “from now on.” Jesus’ point was that authority would reside with Him from this point on. Though He was on trial, in reality He is the ultimate Judge. on the right hand of the power of God: Jesus’ reply here alludes to the regal enthronement image of Ps. 110:1. This reply is what convicted Him. Apparently what offended Jesus’ audience was His claim to sit in God’s presence and to exercise divine authority. In effect, His answer to their question about being the Christ was more than they expected. It was not blasphemous to claim to be Messiah. What was blasphemous was the claim to be the Judge of the Jewish people, with God’s authority. Jesus’ remark also implies the hope of vindication. Though the people would kill Him, Jesus would end up at God’s side. The title of the Son of Man is an allusion to Dan. 7 (Matt. 26:64; Mark 14:62).

22:70 Son of God: The Jewish leaders sensed that Jesus was claiming great authority here. They sensed that Jesus was asserting a unique and highly exalted relationship with God, making Himself the equal of God. In their view, this was not possible. You rightly say that I am: Jesus notes that they have made the implication, and He does not reject it.

22:71 from His own mouth: The Jewish leadership concluded that Jesus had made a confession of guilt. Jesus was “convicted” by His claim to a relationship to God in which He exercises an authority like God’s.

23:1 The Roman ruler Pilate was responsible for collecting taxes and keeping the peace. It may be that he was in Jerusalem for judicial hearings, a procedure called an "assize." The fact that others were crucified with Jesus makes this likely.

23:2 began to accuse: Three charges were lodged against Jesus: (1) perverting the nation, (2) forbidding payment of taxes to Rome, (3) claiming to be the Christ. The first charge, which was a general complaint, involved disturbing the peace. The other two charges could have been construed as challenges to Rome. The second charge was a blatant lie (20:20–26). The third charge was true, but not in the threatening sense that the prosecutors suggested. A three-part Roman procedure was followed at the trial: charges, examination, and verdict.

23:3 It is as you say: Jesus gave Pilate the same qualified reply He gave the Sanhedrin in 22:67, 68, 70. Jesus is a king, but He was not a threat to Rome (John 18:36).

23:4 I find no fault: Pilate's verdict was that Jesus was innocent. This is the first of several such declarations in this chapter (vv. 14, 15, 22, 41). Jesus' suffering and death were those of an innocent, righteous One (v. 47).

23:5 By mentioning the charge that Jesus stirred up the people, the leaders suggested that Pilate risked being found derelict in his duty if he let Jesus go.

23:6, 7 Herod's jurisdiction: Herod was responsible for Galilee, so Pilate "passed the buck" for the ruling and showed political courtesy at the same time.

23:8 he was exceedingly glad: Herod's curiosity about Jesus is noted in 9:7–9.

23:9 answered him nothing: Jesus may have remained silent because He had already been declared innocent and yet was still subjected to trial (Acts 8:32, 33).

23:10 vehemently accused Him: The pressure to convict Jesus continues.

23:11, 12 After deciding that he had nothing to fear from Jesus, Herod and his men entertained themselves at Jesus' expense. Dressing him in a gorgeous robe was probably a sarcastic reference to Jesus' claim to be king.

23:13, 14 I have found no fault: This is Pilate's second declaration of innocence.

23:15 neither did Herod: The report of Herod's verdict is nothing deserving of death.

23:16 chastise Him and release Him: Pilate hoped that a public whipping might satisfy the crowd and tame Jesus, avoiding the need to resort to the death penalty.

23:17 it was necessary … to release one to them: Pilate wanted to take advantage of this custom and let Jesus go (Matt. 27:15; Mark 15:6).

23:18, 19 Away with this Man: The entire crowd is portrayed as wanting Jesus to die. Luke makes it clear that Jesus' death was not only instigated by Jewish officials but approved by the Jewish people. Barabbas: The people preferred that a seditious murderer be freed instead of Jesus. The idea of Jesus' substitution for this noted murderer foreshadows the substitutionary death of Jesus for sinful people.

23:20–23 Luke mentions the chief priests separately from the crowd since they were the instigators of the plot against Jesus. Because Pilate feared the will of the people, he entered into the conspiracy and shared its guilt, agreeing to put to death someone he knew to be innocent (Acts 4:25–27).

23:24, 25 delivered Jesus to their will: Jesus is going to His death.

23:26 Jesus was apparently unable to carry His own cross. Simon a Cyrenian, a man from a leading city of Libya, was chosen to carry the cross for Him (Acts 6:9; 11:20; 13:1). Mark 15:20, 21 mentions that Simon's sons were Rufus and Alexander, believers known to Mark's audience.

23:27 The events of vv. 27–31 are unique to Luke's account. While such mourning for the dead was required by custom in the ancient world, Jesus' reply seems to take the people's mourning as sincere.

23:28 do not weep for Me: Though He was dying, Jesus pointed out that their weeping should be for Jerusalem and its inhabitants, since judgment was going to fall on the city (19:41–44). Jerusalem here represents the entire nation of Israel.

23:29, 30 barren: In the days of judgment, the children, who were usually thought of as cursed, would be better off than those with family because the terror of that time would be so great. Fall on us: Fear of the judgment would be so great that people would prefer to die rather than suffer what was coming. There is an allusion here to Hos. 10:8 (Rev. 6:16).

People who face God's judgment desire the relief of death rather than to endure His wrath.

23:31 what will be done in the dry: The idea here seems to be "If this is what is done to a live tree, what will happen to the dead one?" In other words, "If Jesus, the living tree, has not been spared, how much more will dead wood not be spared." This is Jesus' final lament over the nation of Israel.

23:32 Jesus' prediction of dying with the transgressors (22:37; see also Isaiah's prediction in Is. 53:12) was fulfilled when two criminals accompanied Him to death.

IN DEPTH

Crucifixion

The Romans used one of the most painful methods of torture ever devised to put Jesus to death (Luke 23:33). Crucifixion was used by many nations of the ancient world, including Assyria, Media, and Persia. The idea may have originated from the practice of hanging up the bodies of executed persons on stakes for public display. This discouraged civil disobedience and mocked defeated military foes (Gen. 40:19; 1 Sam. 31:8–13).

Crucifixion on a stake or cross was practiced by the Greeks, notably Alexander the Great, who hung 2,000 people on crosses when the city of Tyre was destroyed. During the period between Greek and Roman control of Palestine, the Jewish ruler Alexander Jannaeus crucified eight hundred Pharisees who opposed him. But such executions were condemned as detestable and abnormal even in that day as well as by the later Jewish historian Josephus.

From the early days of the Roman Republic, death on the cross was used for rebellious slaves and bandits. The practice continued well beyond the NT period as one of the supreme punishments for military and political crimes such as desertion, spying, revealing secrets, rebellion, and sedition. However, following the conversion of Constantine, the cross became a sacred symbol and its use as a means of execution was abolished.

Crucifixion involved attaching the victim with nails through the wrists or with leather thongs to a crossbeam attached to a vertical stake. Sometimes blocks or pins were put on the stake to give the victim support as he hung suspended from the crossbeam. At times the feet were also nailed to the vertical stake. As the victim hung dangling by the arms, blood could no longer circulate to his vital organs. Only by supporting himself on the seat or pin could he gain some relief.

But gradually exhaustion set in, and death followed, although usually not for several days. If the victim had been severely beaten, he would not live that long. To hasten death, the executioners sometimes broke the victim’s legs with a club. Then he could no longer support his body to keep blood circulating, and death by suffocation quickly followed. Usually bodies were left to rot or to be eaten by scavengers.

To the Jewish people, crucifixion represented the most disgusting form of death: “He who is hanged is accursed of God” (Deut. 21:23). Yet the Jewish council sought and obtained Roman authorization to have Jesus crucified (Mark 15:13–15).

The apostle Paul summed up the crucial importance of His manner of death when he wrote, “We preach Christ crucified, to the Jews a stumbling block and to the Greeks foolishness, but to those who are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God” (1 Cor. 1:23, 24). Out of the ugliness and agony of crucifixion, God accomplished the greatest good of all—the redemption of sinners.

23:33 The name of the place in Aramaic is Golgotha, which means “Skull.” Calvary is the Latin name for Golgotha. Possibly the name referred to a geographical feature of the locale, something that resembled a skull.

23:34 forgive them: Those who put Jesus to death acted in ignorance, not really understanding who it was they were killing. Jesus’ example of interceding for His executioners was followed by Stephen in Acts 7:60. divided His garments and cast lots: The language here alludes to the suffering Righteous One of Ps. 22:18.

23:35 sneered: Jesus is mocked and called upon to save Himself if He is the Christ (John 10:18). There is irony as they mock Him, thinking they have stopped Him and that He cannot save Himself. God is preparing a vindication whereby He will be saved and will save others.

23:36 The drink referred to here was probably wine vinegar, which was inexpensive and quenched thirst better than water. It was a drink of the poor.

23:37 save Yourself: The sarcastic call to save continues, as does the irony.

23:38 KING OF THE JEWS: This inscription, which gave the charge against Christ, was written in three languages. Jesus was killed for who He is.

23:39 save Yourself: The mocking had come from the rulers (v. 35) and the soldiers (v. 37), and now what Luke calls blasphemy comes from one of the criminals.

23:40 Not everyone rejected Jesus at His crucifixion. The second criminal rebuked his companion in death, warning that he should fear God.

The sarcastic thief, who would suffer judgment, was in no position to insult Jesus.

23:41 we indeed justly: One criminal knew the difference between those who had sinned and deserved to die and the One who did not.

23:42 remember me: This remark is amazing for its insight. While others mocked Jesus' seeming inability to save Himself, this thief recognized that Jesus would live and rule. He wanted to be saved and take part in Christ's kingdom.

23:43 you will be with Me: Jesus promised eternal life to the thief, doing what the mockers had asked Him to do in v. 39.

23:44 sixth hour … ninth hour: The first hour was sunrise, so the time was 12 P.M. to 3 P.M. During these three hours, signs of creation revealed that the hour was not one of light but of darkness (22:53).

23:45 the sun was darkened: This testimony of creation was designed to signal the importance of Jesus' death. Passover falls on the full moon, so this cannot have been an eclipse of the sun. The imagery is similar to that associated with the day of the Lord (Joel 2:10, 30, 31; Amos 8; 9; Zeph. 1:15). It is not clear whether the curtain that was torn was the one at the entrance to the tabernacle, or the inner curtain that separated the holy place from the Most Holy Place. The tearing of the veil symbolizes a renewed access to God through the death of Christ (v. 43; Heb 9; 10).

23:46 into Your hands: Jesus' final words are from Ps. 31:5, where this is the prayer of trust from a righteous sufferer. Jesus exercised that faith here.

23:47 In Matt. 27:54; Mark 15:39, the centurion's remark is noted as a confession of the Son of God. If Jesus was righteous and innocent, then He is who He claimed to be. Thus a second figure besides the thief on the cross had insight into Jesus' death.

23:48 beat their breasts: The customary mourning at death follows.

23:49 The Galileans stood at a distance to watch Jesus' crucifixion. Their sadness is further explained in 24:16–20.

23:50 Joseph, a council member: Not every Jewish religious leader opposed Jesus.

23:51 He had not consented: Joseph did not agree with the sentence of Jesus. Mark 14:64 suggests that "all" present were in favor of Jesus' execution, so Joseph may not have attended the trial. waiting for the kingdom of God: The description of Joseph in vv. 50, 51 recalls Zacharias and Elizabeth (1:5, 6) and Simeon and Anna (2:25, 38). The description suggests that Joseph was a follower of Christ.

23:52 the body of Jesus: There is no doubt that Jesus died. Efforts to explain the Resurrection as something like a return from a coma are more impossible than the idea of the Resurrection itself.

23:53 Jesus was given an honorable burial (Deut. 21:22, 23). The linen was probably fine cloth. The tomb had a stone to cover it in order to make it secure (Matt. 27:66). Guards were posted to stop anyone trying to steal the body (Matt. 27:65, 66).

23:54 Jesus was buried late on Friday on the day called Preparation, when everything was made ready for the Sabbath, the day when no labor could take place.

23:55 the women … observed the tomb: There is no doubt where Jesus was buried.

23:56 prepared spices and fragrant oils: On Friday the women prepared for the anointing of Jesus' body on the day after the Sabbath, since they could not make preparations on the Sabbath. The spices were used to delay decay and lessen the odor of the body. Mark 16:1 notes that spices were also purchased after the Sabbath. Apparently the women did not anticipate a resurrection.

24:1 very early: The women come early in the morning to anoint Jesus' body. John 20:1 notes that it was still dark, while Matt. 28:1 speaks of the dawn. Mark 16:2 says it was very early. Some manuscripts mention only the women of Luke 23:55 going.

24:2 Matthew 28:2 mentions that an earthquake moved the stone, which would have fit in a channel in front of the entrance to the tomb. Moving the stone would have been possible, though difficult, for a group of people. The earthquake settles the question of how the stone was moved.

24:3 did not find the body: The first citing of the empty tomb indicates that resurrection has occurred.

24:4, 5 It may be assumed that the two men who appeared were angels, based on the way their clothes are described as shining garments (v. 23). Why do you seek the living: Angels announced that Jesus was alive. Anointing Him would not be necessary.

24:6 is risen … Remember: The women were reminded that Jesus had predicted His resurrection as far back as Galilee (9:22).

24:7 delivered … crucified … rise: The contents of the predictions are reviewed and summarized (9:22, 18:32, 33).

24:8 remembered: The reminder triggers their memory.

24:9 told all these things: The first witnesses to the empty tomb give their report, which is summarized in Luke 24:23.

24:10 Three women are named: Mary Magdalene (8:2; Matt. 28:1; Mark 16:1; John 20:1), Joanna (8:3), and Mary the mother of James (Mark 15:40; 16:1). Other women also joined in the report of Jesus' resurrection. Mary, the last one at the Cross and the first one at the tomb, was given the privilege of relaying the first resurrection message.

24:11 Skepticism reigned among the disciples. It is clear that they did not expect a resurrection. they did not believe: The disciples thought the women's story was nonsense.

24:12 Peter arose and ran: Having already experienced a fulfilled prediction of the Lord (22:54–62), Peter hurried to the tomb to check out the women's story. It is hard to say whether Peter believed in the Resurrection when he left the tomb. Does his marveling indicate amazement or faith?

Modern Emmaus, named after the village toward which Cleopas and another disciple were traveling when Jesus appeared to them after His resurrection (Luke 24:13–27).

24:13-35 The Emmaus incident is recorded only in Luke.

24:13–16 eyes were restrained: The disciples could not recognize that Jesus was with them (v. 15). This indicates that Jesus was in the same, though glorified, body in which He died. Otherwise there would have been no need to keep them from recognizing Him.

24:17 What kind of conversation? Jesus asks about the topic that makes them so sad.

24:18 have you not known? Cleopas can't believe that their companion has not heard about what happened in Jerusalem.

24:19–21 Jesus of Nazareth … a Prophet: These disciples on the road to Emmaus regarded Jesus as the Revealer of God's way and the Doer of His work. He who was going to redeem Israel: The disciples had hoped that God would once again save Israel through Jesus.

24:22, 23 a vision of angels … said He was alive: The women reported that there was no body found in Jesus' tomb, and that angels had announced to them that Jesus lives. The fact that the men were still sad indicates that they did not believe the report. They were among the skeptics of v. 11.

24:24 As far as the disciples were concerned, there was still no decisive proof of Jesus' resurrection. They wanted to see the resurrected Jesus. Thomas was not alone in his doubts (John 20:25).

24:25 slow of heart to believe: Jesus, who at this time was still not known to the travelers, rebuked His companions and reminded them of the things that the prophets taught.

24:26 The prophets taught the suffering of the Christ and His entrance into glory. The passages referred to here would include Pss. 16; 100; Is. 53. See the Book of Acts for the apostle's use of these passages to prove that Jesus is the promised Messiah (Acts 2:14–36; 8:32, 33). Note how Jesus used the title of Christ (Messiah) to refer to Himself, while the disciples called Him merely a prophet (v. 19).

24:27 Going from the books of Moses to the Prophets, Jesus provided an overview of God's plan in the Scriptures. This plan is present throughout the entire OT (Acts 3:22–26; 10:43).

24:28, 29 Abide with us: This is an everyday use of a key verb in the first Epistle of John and in John's Gospel (John 15:1–8; 1 John 2:6). It means "to remain or to stay somewhere." They wish to have a meal with their interesting companion.

24:30–32 Did not our heart burn? They had sensed during the exposition that they were sharing in something special.

24:33, 34 Before the two travelers could report their experience, the other disciples reported that Simon had seen Jesus as well.

24:35 how He was known to them: The Emmaus experience is told to those who knew of Peter's sighting.

24:36 Jesus Himself stood in the midst: Though Jesus is "absent," He is present and appears to them again.

24:37 a spirit: The disciples had a difficult time adjusting to the fact that the physically raised Jesus was in their midst. They believed they were seeing a heavenly apparition (v. 39).

24:38 why do doubts arise: Jesus' appearances were designed to reassure the disciples about the reality of His vindication.

24:39 Jesus pointed out that a raised body is not a disembodied spirit. The presence of flesh and bones indicates that Jesus had been raised bodily, and that He was not a hallucination. He was raised in the same physical body in which He had been put to death. Otherwise it would have been a reincarnation, not a resurrection. The difference was that His resurrected body is not corruptible and not subject to death. Some have mistakenly taught that the character of the resurrection body is to walk through walls or dematerialize at will. There is no proof that these capacities are inherent in a resurrected body; remember that Jesus walked on water, a violation of physical law, before the Resurrection. Paul discusses the resurrection body in 1 Cor. 15:35–58.

24:40, 41 joy … marveled: They are convinced as Jesus asks to share a meal with them.

24:42, 43 The physical nature of Jesus' resurrected body was confirmed by the fact that he ate something.

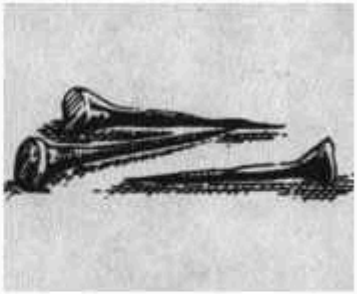
24:44, 45 The plan of God as outlined in the Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms was being fulfilled in Jesus. This threefold categorization of the ancient Scriptures summarizes the contents of the OT. opened their understanding: The disciples' comprehension involved seeing how God's plan, as outlined in the Scriptures, fits together.

IN COMPARISON

Jesus in Isaiah

Would you be able to explain to someone where the Scriptures speak about Jesus, "beginning at Moses and all the Prophets" (Luke 24:27)? That's what the Lord did with two of His disciples on the road to Emmaus. He explained how the OT—the only inspired Scriptures in existence at that time—foretold His coming as the Messiah.

An entire list of the OT texts to which Jesus probably referred would be too lengthy to publish here. But one book that He undoubtedly spent a lot of time on was Isaiah. No other OT prophet made as many references to the coming Messiah as did Isaiah. Notice his emphasis on the Messiah as a suffering servant, a role that Jesus fulfilled:



Isaiah's Prophecy Fulfilled in Christ
The Suffering Servant	Jesus
Would be widely rejected (Is. 53:1, 3)	Jesus "came to His own, and His own did not receive Him" (John 1:11; compare 12:37, 38).
Would be disfigured by suffering (Is. 52:14; 53:2).	Pilate had Jesus scourged (beaten); Roman soldiers placed a crown of thorns on His head, struck Him on the head with a stick, and spat on Him (Mark 15:15, 17, 19).
Would voluntarily accept the pain, suffering, and death that sinners deserve (Is. 53:7, 8)	As the Good Shepherd, Jesus laid down His life for His "sheep" (John 10:11; compare 19:30).
Would make atonement for sin through His blood (Is. 52:15)	Believers are redeemed and saved through the blood of Christ (1 Pet. 1:18, 19).
Would take upon Himself the grief of human sin and sorrow (Is. 53:4, 5)	Jesus was "delivered up because of our offenses" (Rom. 4:25); He "bore our sins in His own body on the tree," and by His stripes we were healed (1 Pet. 2:24, 25).
Would die on behalf of "the iniquity [sin] of us all" (Is. 53:6, 8)	God made Jesus "who knew no sin to be sin for us" (2 Cor. 5:21).
Would die in order to make "intercession for the transgressors" (Is. 53:12)	Jesus was crucified between two robbers, one on His right and the other on His left (Mark 15:27, 28; compare Luke 22:37). More generally, He is the one "Mediator between God and men" (1 Tim. 2:5).
Would be buried in a rich man's tomb (Is. 53:9)	Joseph of Arimathea placed the body of Jesus in his own new tomb (John 19:38–42).
Would bring salvation to those who believed in Him (Is. 53:10, 11)	Jesus promised that whoever believes in Him would not perish but have everlasting life (John 3:16). The early church proclaimed that same message (Acts 16:31).
Would be "exalted and extolled and be very high" (Is. 52:13)	God has "highly exalted [Jesus] and given Him the name" of Lord, to whom "every knee should bow" (Phil. 2:9–11).

24:46 Christ to suffer and to rise: Two parts of God's plan had been fulfilled. Jesus had been crucified and raised from the dead. OT texts that predict these events are Ps. 118:22 (Acts 4:11) and Ps. 22.

24:47 Jesus had been considered a pretender and a blasphemer. After His resurrection, people had to change their minds and serve Him for who He really is, the Son of God. This is the message Peter would preach at Pentecost, a message that would result in thousands of people declaring Jesus as their Lord. Jesus summarized the mission of the disciples as preaching repentance, calling people to turn from their own selfish ways to Christ, the One who had died for them. remission of sins: The content of the disciples' preaching would center on God's gracious offer of forgiveness to all who would believe (Acts 2:38; 10:43). in His name: This is a reference to Jesus' authority. Forgiveness and blessing come only through the work of the risen Jesus (Acts 2:30–39). The message of Jesus' salvation can go to all nations, to Jews and Gentiles alike. The offer is made to anyone who will receive it (Acts 10—15). The disciples' mission would begin in Jerusalem where Jesus died; from there, it would spread out into the entire world (Acts 1:8).

24:48 witnesses: Jesus pointed out that the disciples were called to testify to His work (Acts 1:8, 22; 3:15; 5:32; 10:39, 41; 13:31; 22:15; 26:16).

24:49 Promise of My Father: This is a reference to the baptism of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost (Acts 2). It was promised in Joel 2:28 (Acts 2:14–18), and in Jer. 31:31–33. Peter called this coming of the Spirit "the beginning" (Acts 11:15) because the real fulfillment of God's promise of salvation would start in those people united by the Spirit to establish the church. tarry in the city of Jerusalem until you are endued with power from on high: The disciples were to remain in Jerusalem until the Spirit empowered them on the day of Pentecost.

24:50 Bethany was just outside Jerusalem (19:29).

24:51 carried up into heaven: This is the first of two descriptions of the Ascension in Luke and Acts (Acts 1:9–11). Luke may be summarizing here what happened forty days later to create a link to the Book of Acts.

24:52 worshiped … joy: This is a proper response to the reality of the Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus.

24:53 continually in the temple praising and blessing God: The disciples' sorrow over Jesus' death had been totally reversed (v. 17). Now the disciples awaited the promise of God with joy. Luke's account continues in the Book of Acts. There he records the disciple's initial response to Jesus' commission to preach to all the nations (v. 47).

The Gospel According to John

———— THE WORDS “READ THIS FIRST” HAVE TAKEN AN important role in the packaging of modern consumer products. Most consumers think life is too short for instruction manuals, so the packagers state it plainly: If you cannot read the manual, at least read this very important part. “Read This First”—it is for your own good. The Gospel of John makes a similar claim. It is the only book in the Bible that statesits purpose clearly and succinctly: It was written to tell individuals how to find eternal life (20:31). This clearly identified purpose sets the Gospel of John apart from the other Gospels. It is not so much a life of Jesus as it is a powerful presentation of His deity. Every chapter presents evidence—both signs and statements—for His divine authority. According to John, believing that Jesus is the Son of God, the Savior of the world, is the beginning of eternal life (3:14–17). What could be more important? John’s statement about his Gospel is as good as a “Read This First” sticker for a person’s entire life.

The Gospel of John is a persuasive argument for the deity of Jesus. It concentrates on presenting Jesus as the Word, that is, God (1:1) who became a man (1:14). Thus, John meticulously records the statements and describes the miracles of Jesus that can only be attributed to God Himself.

Jesus called Himself the bread of life (6:35, 41, 48, 51), the light of the world (8:12; 9:5), the door for the sheep (10:7, 9), the good shepherd (10:11, 14), the resurrection and the life (11:25), the way, the truth, the life (14:6), and the true vine (15:1, 5). Each of these statements begins with the words, “I am,” recalling God’s revelation of His name, “I AM,” to Moses (Ex. 3:14). Jesus did not say He gave bread; He said He is the Bread which gives life. He did not say He would teach the way, the truth, and the life; instead He said He is the Way, because He is the Truth and the Life. These are Jesus’ clear claims to deity: He was not a mere man.

Then there are the signs of Jesus’ deity. Miracles in the Gospel of John are called “signs” because they point to Jesus’ divine nature. John records seven such signs: changing water into wine (2:1–11), healing a man’s son (4:46–54), healing a lame man (5:1–9), multiplying bread and fish (6:1–14), walking on water (6:15–21), healing a blind man (9:1–7), and raising Lazarus (11:38–44). These miracles show that Jesus is God; He possesses power over nature. Other indications of Jesus' deity include the testimonies of John the Baptist (1:32–34), Nathanael (1:49), the blind man (9:35–38), Martha (11:27), and Thomas (20:28)—not to mention Jesus' own words (5:19–26).

Jesus was also fully man. His body grew weary (4:6), His soul was troubled (12:27; 13:21), and He groaned in His spirit (11:33). At the same time, this God-man was Israel's Messiah. Andrew told his brother, "We have found the Messiah" (1:41). Nathanael concluded, "You are the Son of God! You are the King of Israel!" (1:49). Even the Samaritan woman testified to Jesus' identity (4:25, 26, 29). Jesus the Messiah was and is the Savior of the world (4:42; 11:27; 12:13).

John urges us to trust in Jesus for eternal life. Our trust is built on our belief that (1) the Father is in Christ, and Christ is in the Father (10:38; 14:10, 11); (2) Christ came from God (16:17, 30), and God sent Him (11:42; 17:8, 21; see 6:29); and (3) He is the Son of God (6:69; 11:27; 20:31). John reveals the Bible's most important message: Believe and follow Jesus, because He is the way to eternal life.

The author of the Gospel of John does not identify himself by name, but his identity can be learned from the dialogue recorded in 21:19–24. The author calls himself "the disciple whom Jesus loved" (21:20), a designation that occurs four other times in the book (13:23; 19:26; 20:2; 21:7). This was the same "disciple who … wrote these things" (21:24). The author had to be one of the twelve apostles, because he is described as leaning on Jesus' bosom at the Last Supper, an event to which only the apostles were invited (13:23; Mark 14:17). These details imply that he was one of the three disciples closest to Jesus: Peter, James, or John (Matt. 17:1). He could not be Peter, because 21:20 states that Peter looked back and saw this one Jesus loved, and in another place asked a question of him (13:23, 24). On the other hand, James was martyred too early to be the author of this Gospel (Acts 12:1, 2). Thus it is reasonable to conclude that this book was written by the apostle John. This conclusion is supported by early Christians such as Polycarp (A.D. 60–155), who was a follower of John.

In the nineteenth century, many critics claimed that the Gospel of John was written around A.D. 170. Then in 1935 C. H. Roberts discovered a scrap of papyrus in Egypt containing portions of 18:31–33, 37, 38 that disproved their theory. This fragment, the Rylands papyrus, was written around A.D. 125. The Gospel itself must have been written before A.D. 125, or even A.D. 110, allowing time for it to be copied and then carried to Egypt.

Conservative scholars typically date the book between A.D. 85 and A.D. 95. The book makes no reference to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, implying that such a significant event must have occurred many years earlier. Moreover, the statement about Peter in 21:18, 23 seems to indicate that the Gospel was written when John was an old man. Only then would John have had to explain the death of Peter, or contend with a long-standing rumor of the early church. Others have suggested a date before A.D. 70 on the basis of 5:2, which indicates that Jerusalem was still standing. But there is a question about the interpretation of the tense of the verb to be. It is likely that the reason John used the present tense in this verse was to describe Jerusalem vividly, not to describe its present condition. Without more evidence than the tense of the verb in 5:2, the date of around A.D. 90 still seems most reasonable.

Commentary

1:1–18 These first verses of the gospel according to the apostle John are among the most elegant and profound that may be found in the Word of God. They take us before the beginning of creation and move us into the time and space of human history. They reveal, like no other portion of Scripture, that the Jesus who came into human history (1:14) was the Creator God of Gen. 1:1. These verses identify the eternal relation of the Father and the Son and reveal that we may have light and life through our reception of Him—the One who is ultimate revelation of the Father.

1:1 In the beginning: Genesis 1:1 starts with the moment of creation and moves through time to the creation of humanity. John 1:1 commences with the beginning of creation and contemplates eternity past. Before the creation of a material universe there was the Word (Gk. logos). The Word was preexistent (note the contrast with v. 14, where the eternal Word "became" flesh). The term Word means "that which is spoken, a statement, a speech." In the Jewish translation of the OT into Aramaic, this term was used for God. It was also used in Greek intellectual circles to denote the controlling reason of the universe, the all-pervasive mind which ruled and gave meaning to all things. John has the OT concept in mind. The Word here is the expression or the manifestation of God (1:14, 18). John is obviously referring to Jesus Christ (John 1:14, Rev. 19:13). Thus, this Gospel begins with the thought that Jesus, the Word, the unique manifestation of God, was already continuously in existence when the material universe was created. The fact that the Word was with God suggests a face-to-face relationship. In the ancient world, it was important that persons of equal station be on the same level, or face-to-face, when sitting across from one another. Thus the word with indicates a personal relationship, but also implies equal status. The Word, Jesus Christ Himself, is an active Person in communication with the Father (1 John 1:2). Moreover, the Word was God. The Greek construction emphasizes that the Word was of the very quality of God while still retaining His personal distinction from the Father. If John had used the definite article before God, He would have taught a unitarianism of the Father rather than plurality in the Godhead. Thus, the Gospel of John opens with a simple, single sentence affirming the preexistence (eternality), personality and deity of the Logos, Jesus Christ. He is distinct from God and yet is God.

“God in Flesh”

John 1:1 is probably the strongest passage in the NT for declaring the deity of Jesus Christ. Because of this many who deny this biblical doctrine, especially cultists, have attempted to undercut it by arguing that this passage only teaches that Jesus is “a god” and so not fully Deity. This confused position falls on at least two grounds. Such a view is polytheistic, the belief in more than one god. Second, it betrays a misunderstanding of Greek grammar. Verse 1 of the first chapter of John reads, “In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.” The last portion of 1:1 is the major point of contention. It reads in the Greek theos en ho logos, or literally, “the Word was God.” God, or theos, occurs in this verse without the Greek article ho, so that some have contended that the lack of the article in the Greek text should cause the statement to be translated “the Word was a god.” The best understanding for the translation, however, as recognized by Greek scholars, is that since theos is a predicate and precedes the noun logos and a verb, it is natural for it to occur here without the article. Greek scholars are agreed that the verse should be translated as it regularly is in modern and ancient translations, clearly affirming that Jesus is indeed God.

1:2 Neither the Person of Christ, nor His Sonship, came into being at a point in time. Rather, the Father and the Son have always been in loving fellowship with one another.

1:3 All things were made (Gk. ginomai) through Him: Before creation the Word was (1:1). The tense speaks of continuous existence. Creation itself, however, was made (1:3); matter is not eternal. God the Father created the world (Gen. 1:1) through God the Son (Col. 1:16, Heb. 1:2). Christ was not part of the creation. All that is creation was made through Him; He is the Creator God. The biblical teaching on creation, confirmed in this verse, is that it is completed. Some who hold to evolutionary views and to reincarnation advocate an ongoing work of creation. Creation, however, ceased at the original creation by God recorded in Gen. 1; He is now sustaining His creative work (5:17).

1:4 Note that life is not said to have been created; life existed in Christ (5:26; 6:57; 10:10; 11:25; 14:6; 17:3; 20:31). Humans are dependent on God for life. Our existence, spiritually and physically, depends on God's sustaining power. In contrast, the Son has life in Himself from all eternity. The life, Jesus Christ, is also the light of men. This image conveys the concept of revelation. As the light, Jesus Christ reveals both sin and God to humans (Ps. 36:9). Later in this Gospel, Christ declares Himself to be both the life (11:25) and the light (8:12). Death and darkness flee when the life and light enter. The dead are raised and the blind receive their sight, both physically and spiritually.

1:5 light shines in the darkness: Christ entered this dark world to give it spiritual light (Is. 9:2). The word translated comprehend can mean (1) to take hold of; (2) to overpower; or (3) to understand. Therefore, this verse may mean that darkness did not positively take hold of or understand the light, or that darkness did not negatively overcome the light. Both statements are true. Humans did not appropriate or understand the light, nor did they overtake or overpower it. Although Satan and his forces resist the light, they cannot thwart its power. In short, Jesus is life and light; those who accept Him are "sons of light" (12:35, 36). As the creation of light was the beginning of the original creation (Gen. 1:3), so when believers receive the light, they become part of the new creation (2 Cor. 4:3–6).

John and the Other Gospels

Though all four Gospels trace the ministry of Jesus Christ, the fourth Gospel is different from the other three, containing 98 percent unique material. Unlike the synoptic Gospels which are in many ways alike, John does not include Jesus' genealogy, birth, baptism, temptation, casting out of demons, parables, transfiguration, the instituting of the Lord's Supper, Gethsemane, or His ascension. John also includes items the others do not such as the conversations with Nicodemus, the woman at the well, Jesus' "I am" statements, the Upper Room Discourse, and His high priestly prayer (John 17). The synoptics emphasize Jesus' Galilean ministry; John stresses Jesus' Jerusalem ministry. These differences are not contradictions, they are complementary. Each Gospel writer chooses material that supports his theme. In the case of John, his subject is Jesus, the Son of God and Messiah. The material he incorporates into his Gospel best develops that theme.

1:6 John the Baptist is here contrasted with Jesus Christ. Jesus is God (v. 1); John was a man sent from God. Jesus was the Light (v. 4); John was the lamp that bore witness to the Light (vv. 7, 8). Our task, like John's, is not to attract others to ourselves but to Christ. How great was the darkness so that God had to send a messenger to point out the light. Moral decay was not only in the world but in Israel and in the religious leadership of Israel. In the Gospel of John the name John never refers to John the apostle but always to John the Baptist. The writer of this gospel had previously been a disciple of "the Baptist."

1:7, 8 To bear witness means "to testify" or "to declare." John uses the word translated witness thirty-three times as a verb and fourteen times as a noun in his Gospel. The term is particularly important to his purpose, which is to record adequate witnesses to Jesus as the Messiah so that individuals might believe in Him (20:30, 31). Believe means "to trust." John uses this verb almost one hundred times in his Gospel to express what must take place for a person to receive the gift of eternal life. The noun faith does not occur in the book nor does the word repent.

1:9 In order to give due notice to the incarnation of Jesus, this verse may be rephrased: “That was the true Light coming into the world, which enlightens every man.” Jesus became man in order to reveal the truth to all people. Jesus Christ gives light to every human being by being the Creator. Creation gives light to every one on the earth that there is a Creator in heaven (Rom. 1:20). The inclusion of all people is in contrast to the exclusivism of the ancient world. The Jewish prophets taught and many Jewish people believed that in the last days Zech. 14 would be fulfilled and that Gentiles would be converted. This is in contrast to the Greek and Roman world. The Greek world never dreamed that knowledge was for every person. The Romans looked down on barbarians as the lesser breed without the law. Jesus Christ came to be the light to everyone, though not all would receive His light; this does not mean that all people would believe. John’s part was to bear witness to that light. And we, today, should use every opportunity to reflect the light. Depending on the context, world can refer to (1) the universe; (2) the earth; (3) humanity; or (4) the human system opposed to God.

The Seven Signs and Their Meanings

Turns water into wine (2:1–12)	Jesus is the source of life.
Heals a nobleman's son (4:46–54)	Jesus is master over distance.
Heals a lame man at the pool of Bethesda (5:1–17)	Jesus is master over time.
Feeds 5, 000 (6:1–14)	Jesus is the bread of life.
Walks on water, stills a storm (6:15–21)	Jesus is master over nature.
Heals a man blind from birth (9:1–41)	Jesus is the light of the world.
Raises Lazarus from the dead (11:17–45)	Jesus has power over death.

1:10, 11 Receive here means "to receive with favor" and implies "welcome." Instead of a welcome mat, Jesus had a door slammed in His face. The themes of rejection and reception (v. 12) introduced in the prologue (1:1–18) appear again and again throughout the Gospel of John.

1:12 The phrase believe in His name occurs three times in the Gospel of John (1:12; 2:23; 3:18). Name does not refer to the term by which He is called, but to what His name stands for—the Lord is salvation (Ex. 3:14, 15). In this context, the phrase means to believe that Jesus is the Word, the life, and the Light—that is, He is the Christ, the Son of God (20:31). To them He gave the right refers to the legitimate entitlement to the position of children of God. None of us was naturally a child of God. We were by nature children of wrath and condemned apart from Christ. Imagine being a pauper and then being given the right to inherit the riches of a king and the position of royalty. By believing, undeserving sinners can become full members of God's family.

1:13 born … of God: This new spiritual birth is not of blood, that is, by physical generation or by parents. Nor is the new birth of the will of the flesh, that is, by personal effort. Neither is the birth of the will of man, that is, something accomplished by human effort. The new birth is the work of God alone. It is a gift to be received (4:10, 14), not a reward achieved by individual effort. The new birth is based on relationship with Christ, not personal position. The relationship, however, proceeds from the position of Christ as the mediator. Christ is life (1:4; 14:6). Those who trust Him are born of God, meaning they are given spiritual life.

1:14 The Word (Gk. logos) who was (continuous existence) God (1:1) became (point action; Gk. ginomai) flesh (Gk. sarx) (1:14). Verse 1 speaks of Christ's nature and works being outside of space and time, before creation. Verse 14 presents the irruption of Jesus Christ into time and space, even the history of humankind. The Son of God who was from all eternity, at a point in time, took humanity to deity (Phil. 2:5–9). God became human with limitations in time and space. Jesus Christ uniquely and thoroughly identified with us as both God and man. He was fully God and yet He became fully human (He did not have sin but then sin is not part of the nature of humanity, but is an intruder). Since nothing of the essential nature of deity was lost in this event, we might better understand "became" to mean "took to Himself" flesh. John uses the word flesh for the physical nature of persons, not for the sinful disposition (unlike the apostle Paul; Rom. 8:1–11). God the Son will forever exist as a man with a resurrected body (Acts 1:11; compare 1 John 4:2, 3). God dwelt among us, that is, among the apostles. Dwelt comes from the Greek word for tent. It was used in the Greek OT for the tabernacle where the presence of God dwelt. He was not an armchair dictator issuing orders from a parapet of heaven. Rather, He was a man among humanity. In the OT, glory refers to the divine presence (Ex. 33:18). As God manifested His glory in the tabernacle, so Jesus displayed His divine presence before the apostles (18:6; 20:26, 27). Only begotten (3:16, 18) means unique, one of a kind. The same term is used of Isaac (Heb 11:17), who was not the only physical son of Abraham, but was the unique son of promise. All who trust Christ are born of God. In the Gospel of John, these "born ones" are called children of God (vv. 12, 13), but Jesus Christ is the unique Son of God. He is the only Son who is fully God. He is also full of grace and truth. When God revealed Himself to Moses, He proclaimed Himself to be "abounding in goodness and truth" (Ex. 34:6). As applied to Jesus Christ, this phrase marks Him as the author of perfect redemption and perfect revelation.

1:15 He was before me: Jesus was born after John the Baptist (Luke 1:36) and began His ministry later than John the Baptist. Yet John the Baptist said Jesus was before him, meaning that Jesus' existence is from eternity past (v. 30). John is an excellent example of the singlemindedness that is needed to fulfill a person's ministry before God. He knew the specific message God gave him to preach and he did not deviate from that message.

1:16 Most people take the words of v. 15 to be John the Baptist's. Probably the words of vv. 16–18 are those of John the writer of this Gospel, although they too may be John the Baptist's. Grace for grace means grace piled upon grace. The background of this doubled term, as well as the use of the term in v. 17, is found in Ex. 32—34. Moses and the people had received grace, but they were in tremendous need of more grace (Ex. 33:13).

1:17 Throughout the NT, grace is God's favor expressed to sinful humankind apart from any human works or worth. law was given through Moses: John is not denigrating the law or Moses in this verse. Law and grace in the OT were not antithetical. Persons in the OT who were under the law were also saved by grace. The reference for the teaching here is probably Ex. 34:6, 7. In Ex. 34:6, 7a, Yahweh is seen as merciful and forgiving sin, while Ex. 34:7b says He will not clear the guilty. This conflict is reconciled in Jesus, who brings grace (forgiveness) and truth (judgment of law on sin) together in His person. He receives the judgment for sin in His body and consequently forgives the transgressors. John is not saying that Moses began the law but Jesus brought grace. He is only saying that in Christ grace and truth became full. Though there was abundant grace and truth expressed by God through the Law He gave Moses, it is in the person of Jesus Christ that grace and truth are realized to the fullest.

One God in Three

The Gospel asserts that the Word, Jesus, "was God" (1:1). Jesus also said He was the Son of God, and "in the Father" (14:10). Yet when asked what the most important law was, He cited the creed of the Jewish people, first expressed in Deut. 6:4: "Hear, O Israel: the LORD our God, the LORD is one. And you shall love the LORD your God with all your heart (Mark 12:29, 30).

The Lord is one. Not two. Not three.

So how can the Lord be one, as Jesus admitted, and yet seem to be more than one, with the Son on earth praying to the Father in heaven?

The Gospel of John doesn't explain how, but the Prologue clearly asserts that the Word-Son-Jesus is God, yet distinct from God the Father (1:1–18). And the end of the book includes another testimony to Jesus' unique identity. After he touches the wounds of the risen Jesus, Thomas exclaims, "My Lord and my God!" (20:28). In telling us who Jesus is, John stresses both identity (Jesus is the Lord God) and distinction (the Son is closely related to but not identical with the Father or the Holy Spirit). The earliest Christians lived with this complex relationship but left it to theologians in later centuries to explain the complex oneness of God in the doctrine of the Trinity, when the divine nature of Jesus was challenged in the late third and early fourth centuries of the Christian era.

1:18 No one has seen God: God is Spirit (4:24) and is invisible (Col. 1:15, 1 Tim. 1:17) unless God chooses to reveal Himself. Humans cannot look at God and live (Ex. 33:20). Abraham, the friend of God, did not see God. Even Moses, the lawgiver, could not look at God's face (Ex. 33:22, 23). However, the Son is in intimate relationship with the Father, face-to-face with God (1:1; 6:46; 1 John. 1:2). God became visible to human eyes in the man Jesus. It is through seeing the Son that we see God. We cannot see Him today, but we know Him through His word. The bosom, or chest, is used here to designate a close and intimate relationship (13:23; Luke 16:23). The One who is the Father's only begotten Son and who knows God intimately came to earth and declared Him. Begotten speaks of His unique relationship to the Father. Declared can also mean "explained."

Thus, Jesus Christ, who is of the essence of God (1:1), became a man (1:14) to explain God to us (1:18), especially the resolution of God's mercy and judgment (grace and truth). One of the many blessings of grace (1:17) is knowledge of God (1:18). As we continuously behold His glory as revealed in Scripture, we are transformed into His image (2 Cor. 3:18). Imagine it! We who were created in the image of God but were defiled through sin now are restored by beholding Christ, the very essence of God. What better investment of time could there be than beholding Christ? It is the key to victory in the race (Heb. 12:2, 3).

1:19—2:11 This passage records the events of a week at the beginning of the ministry of the Lord. On the first day John the Baptist testified to the Jewish leaders (1:19–28). On the next day (1:29) John bore witness again (1:29–34). Again the next day (1:35) John testified to two of his disciples who became followers of Christ (1:35–42). The following day (1:43) Jesus added two more disciples (1:43–51). On the third day (2:1), that is, the third day from the last day mentioned, Jesus took His new-found disciples to Canaan. Travel from Bethabara (Bethany) near Jericho of Judea (1:28) would probably take three days of walking. Thus, 1:19—2:11 carefully marks out the first week of witnesses.

1:19, 20 the Jews: That is, the Jewish leaders, the Sanhedrin. It is tragic that Christians and non-Christians have been guilty of anti-Semitism, ostensibly under the guise of all Jewish people being guilty of the death of Christ in some special way that is not true for all mankind for which He died. We must remember that Jesus and His disciples, and the many that He loved, were Jews. It is true that many among His people rejected Him, and especially many within the leadership of Israel, but no more blame should be placed on them than upon the Romans, and in fact each of us, for we have all rejected Him at some time in our lives. John primarily uses the phrase "the Jews" for the leadership of Israel and those who opposed the Lord Jesus. The Sanhedrin was responsible to examine anyone who was accused by someone of being a false prophet. The members of the Sanhedrin were divided into Sadducees and Pharisees. The delegation which came to investigate John the Baptist, was of the Pharisaic faction (1:24). Who are you: In the first century many people were waiting for the coming of the Messiah promised by the OT prophets. John did not claim to be the Messiah, but the rulers were concerned about maintaining peace under the eye of Rome, and they kept a close watch on all prospective messiahs. John was quick to acknowledge that he was not the Christ.

1:21, 22 Are you Elijah: The OT promised that Elijah would come before the great day of the Lord (Mal. 4:5). Are you the Prophet: Moses had predicted that a prophet like himself would come (Deut. 18:15). John denied being either; he didn't have a "Messiah complex." We, like John, must not think of ourselves more highly than we ought (Rom. 12:3).

1:23 The voice: Christ is the Word; John the Baptist was the voice. When pressed to identify himself, John the Baptist claimed that he was the fulfillment of Is. 40:3. In Isaiah's day there were few roads. When a king traveled, roads were built so that the royal chariot would not have to travel over rough terrain or be stuck in the mud. Isaiah was saying that before God appeared to manifest His glory, a voice would be heard, inviting Israel to make straight the way by which God Himself would come. John was identifying himself as that voice calling people to make straight the way of the LORD.

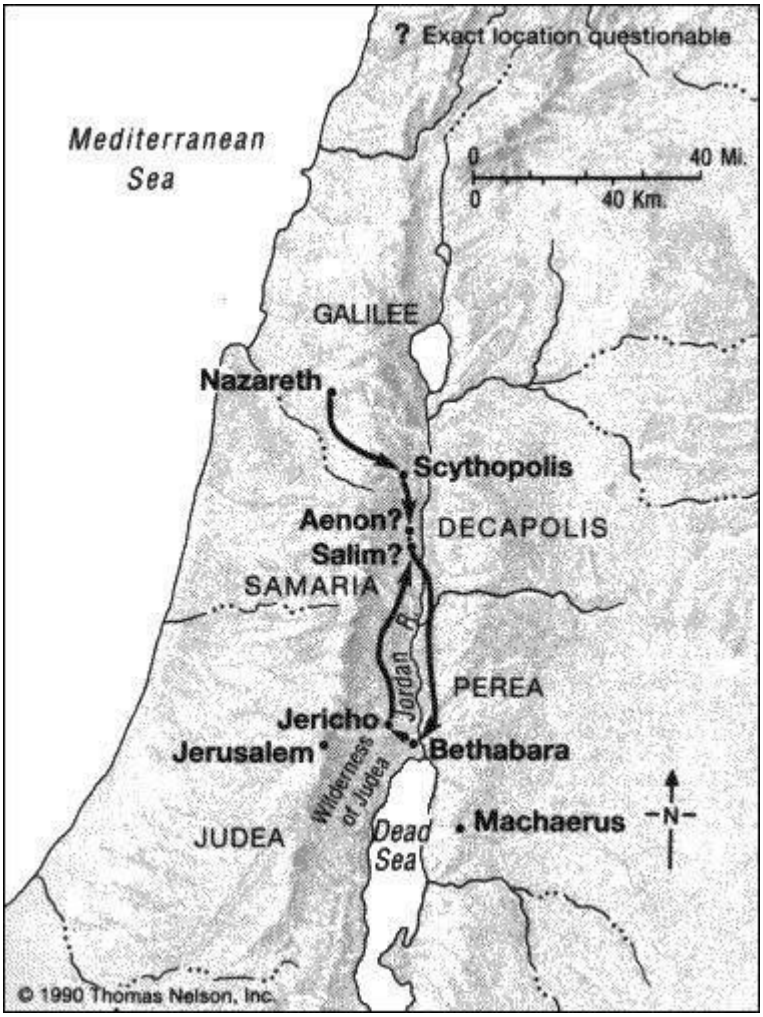
1:24 The Pharisees were an influential sect that numbered about six thousand. As strict interpreters of the Law in Israel, they were extremely zealous for ritual and tradition. Not all Pharisees were like the ones depicted by the apostle (Matt. 5:20), but as a general rule these religious leaders failed to accept the Messiah.

1:25 Why … do you baptize: Performing the rite of baptism was regarded as making a claim to authority. The Pharisees were asking, "By what authority do you perform this religious rite?" The Jewish authorities believed that they had the right to accredit religious speakers. John, however, had his accreditation from God. John clearly saw his mission (1:26) and performed it in the spirit and power of Elijah (Luke 1:17).

1:26, 27 Undoing the sandal strap was the job of a slave. The Jewish Talmud says, "Everything that a servant will do for his master a scholar shall perform for his teacher, except the menial task of loosing his sandal thong." Thus John was saying that "Jesus Christ is the living Lord and I am the voice, His servant and slave. Actually, I'm not even worthy to be His slave."



Jesus' Baptism and Temptation

Jesus came from Nazareth in Galilee to be baptized by John the Baptist. Though John had been baptizing in the Jordan River near Aenon and Salim (3:23), the exact location of Jesus' baptism is uncertain. Immediately after, Jesus was led by the Holy Spirit into the wilderness of Judea below Jericho. Following His temptation there Jesus returned to Galilee.

1:28 The location of Bethabara is unknown. Some think that Bethany is meant, but not the same Bethany as the familiar one near Jerusalem. Beyond the Jordan means east of the Jordan River. Evidently, this was John's normal place for baptizing.

1:29 The Lamb of God: In the OT, the Israelites sacrificed lambs at the Passover feast (Ex. 12:21) and as offerings (Lev. 14:10–25). Jesus Christ is the Lamb that God would give as a sacrifice for the sins not only of Israel, but of the whole world (Is. 52:13—53:12). In one masterful sentence of introduction, John summarizes the whole redemptive program revealed throughout the OT.

1:30 preferred before me: Superior in rank or honor. was before me: Prior in existence.

1:31 I did not know Him: At first John did not know that Jesus was the Messiah. Apparently even though Mary and Elizabeth were relatives (Luke 1:36), there is no evidence of contact between them in the childhood years of John and Jesus. All John knew was that he was to baptize with water and that the Messiah would be manifested to Israel through him by that means. God had given John a sign by which he would know the Messiah—the descending of the Holy Spirit as a dove. When Christ came to be baptized, the Holy Spirit descended upon Him (v. 32), revealing to John Jesus' identity (v. 33). Matthew's account adds that a voice came from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. 3:17).

1:32–34 He who baptizes with (Gk. en) the Holy Spirit: Seven times the NT mentions this ministry of Jesus. Five are prophetic (Matt. 3:11; Mark 1:8; Luke 3:16; John 1:33; Acts 1:5), one is historical (Acts 11:16–18), and one is doctrinal (1 Cor. 12:13). Although the English translations vascillate between "with" and "in," the Greek consistently uses en which speaks of the sphere into which Christ baptizes. This action of the Messiah did not occur while He was on the earth. The baptism in the Holy Spirit first occurred at Pentecost (Acts 1:5; 11:15, 16) and became the common reality of all Christians at the time of the new birth (1 Cor. 12:13).

1:35 One of the two disciples of John the Baptist was Andrew (v. 40). The other is not named but was probably John, the author of this Gospel.

1:36, 37 John was willing to lose his disciples if they followed Jesus. After John introduces Jesus, he fades out of the picture in the Gospel of John except for one mention at the end of ch. 3 (vv. 22–36). followed Jesus: The disciples at this point not only physically followed Jesus at that time, but with John's blessing they changed their allegiance to the Lord.

1:38 What do you seek? This question is one of the most important questions that a follower of Christ must answer. The question of Christ to these disciples is more profound than the response He received from them ("where are You staying?"). Christ was seeking to have them define their goals as new disciples. Were they looking for a revolutionary? Were they looking for an easy life? Christ, then, was not the choice. Jesus began to set forth the kind of commitment to Him that discipleship demands.

1:39 the tenth hour: There are six references to a time during the day in the Gospel of John (1:39; 4:6, 52; 18:28; 19:14; 20:19). The question is which system of telling time does John use? The Jews began their day either at approximately 6:00 in the morning (sunrise) or 6:00 in the evening (sunset). The Romans started the day at midnight as we do today. John, who probably wrote at Ephesus, apparently uses the Roman system. If John is not using the Roman system, then John 19:14 is in conflict with Mark 15:25. By the Jewish system of reckoning time, the tenth hour in this verse was 4:00 in the afternoon. According to the Roman system, the tenth hour was 10 A.M. Since John is evidently using the Roman system, the tenth hour here was 10:00 in the morning. Christ invited these disciples to spend virtually a whole day privately with Him during which they came to believe.

1:40–42 An early example of personal evangelism: Andrew brought his brother Simon the Good News, describing Jesus as the Messiah. Andrew appears two more times in the Gospel of John (6:4–9; 12:20–22); both times he is bringing someone to Jesus. Notice how Jesus uniquely meets the needs of each one. To Andrew He showed His humility. To Peter He showed His ability to change character. To Philip He showed His authority. To Nathanael He will show His omniscience. The testimony of each climaxes with the Son of God. Cephas is the Aramaic word for "rock" (Matt. 16:18). Jesus saw in Simon a rocklike character that would eventually enable him to become a leader and faithful witness.

1:43, 44 From this verse, it might appear that Philip followed Jesus without being evangelized by another disciple, but there are several indications that Philip was approached by Andrew and Peter before he actually met the Lord. Verse 44 says that Andrew and Peter were from the same city as Philip, suggesting that they had talked to him. Furthermore, when Philip told Nathanael what had happened, he said "we" have found the Messiah (v. 45).

1:45 Nathanael is not mentioned in the synoptic Gospels. But in every list of the apostles in Matthew, Mark, and Luke, the name Bartholomew is listed with Philip, as Nathanael is linked with Philip here. It is likely that Nathanael and Bartholomew were the same person. son of Joseph: Philip did not have knowledge of the virgin birth at this time. However, soon all of the disciples would recognize Christ as the Son of God (v. 49).

1:46 Nazareth: Nathanael knew that the OT prophets had predicted that the Messiah would be born in Bethlehem. Furthermore, Nazareth was an obscure village. Nathanael simply could not fathom that such a significant person as the Messiah could come from such an insignificant place as Nazareth. Come and see: Notice that Philip did not arrive with Nathanael. Truth is not best imparted by argument but by gentle invitation to "come and see."

1:47 an Israelite indeed: In his younger life Jacob, the first Israelite, was a cunning, scheming fellow full of deceit. Nathanael was an Israelite, a descendant of Jacob, but he was genuine and sincere. Jesus read Nathanael's character like an open book (2:24).

1:48, 49 under the fig tree: In the OT, this expression often suggests being safe and at leisure (1 Kin. 4:25; Mic. 4:4; Zech. 3:10). Nathanael may have been meditating under the tree about the dream of Jacob referred to in vv. 50, 51. I saw you: Jesus manifested His supernatural knowledge. Apparently, this incident convinced Nathanael that since Jesus had such knowledge of him, He had to be the Son of God, the King of Israel (20:31). These titles referred to the Messiah.

1:50 greater things: Jesus assured Nathanael that he would see even greater supernatural manifestations in the future. Jesus' statement may have referred to the miracles performed in chs. 2—11; it may also refer to the future glory of Christ as the coming Son of Man (1:51; Dan. 7:13).

1:51 Jacob had a vision of angels ascending and descending a ladder from heaven (Gen. 28:12). The thought here is similar, namely that there will be communication between heaven and earth. Son of Man, an expression used in Dan. 7:13 of a heavenly being, was Jesus' favorite designation of Himself (Matt. 8:20; Mark 2:10).

Cana of Galilee in the area where Jesus grew up and the village where He performed His first miracle at the beginning of His public ministry (John 2:1–12).

2:1, 2 The third day refers to the third day from the last day mentioned (1:43). To walk from where John was baptizing to Cana would probably have taken three days. Cana was about four and a half miles northwest of Nazareth. The wording of the text, the mother of Jesus was there … Jesus and His disciples were invited, suggests that Jesus and His disciples were invited because of Mary. Her prominence in asking Jesus to help when the wine ran out (v. 3) may indicate that she was in some way related to the family holding the wedding.

2:3 Hospitality in the east was a sacred duty. A wedding feast often lasted for a week. To run out of wine at such an important event would have been humiliating for the bride and groom. The family of Jesus was not wealthy, and it is likely their relatives and acquaintances were not either. This may have been a "low-budget" wedding feast. Although Christ had not publicly declared Himself to be the Son of God, the Messiah, Mary knew His divine position since surely she had not forgotten His miraculous birth. She remembered the words of the angel Gabriel (Luke 1:32, 33). But friends probably did not believe her. Perhaps she was anxious for the day she could be vindicated. But even though these ideas may have been swarming around in her head, technically she did not ask Him to do anything. She only told Him about the situation; she left all to His wisdom and will. Perhaps we could learn from Mary.

2:4 Woman was a term of respectful address (19:26). My hour has not yet come seems to mean that the time for Jesus to publicly work miracles, declaring Himself the Messiah, had not yet come. For the use of similar expressions, see 7:6, 8, 30; 8:20; 12:23; 13:1; 16:32; 17:1.

2:5 Jesus' response to Mary seems to have been a refusal to do anything about the situation. Yet she seemed to expect Him to do something. Perhaps something in the tone of Jesus' voice let Mary know that He would grant her request. "Whatever He says to you, do it." That is great advice. It reminds us of passages such as Prov. 3:5, 6, Ps. 37:4, and Matt. 6:33. Full obedience brings joy, satisfaction, and transformation.

2:6 six waterpots: Each waterpot held twenty or thirty gallons, for a total of 120 to 180 gallons of the finest wine (v. 10). purification of the Jews: Jewish tradition required several kinds of ceremonial washings. Strict Jews washed their hands before a meal, between courses, and after the meal. This "purifying" extended not only to washing hands, but also to washing cups and vessels (Mark 7:3, 4). Because the roads were not paved and people wore sandals, water was needed for foot washing. At a large Jewish wedding, a large amount of water would have been required.

2:7–10 master of the feast: At a Jewish wedding, one of the guests served as a governor of the feast, similar to a master of ceremonies at a banquet. Our modern equivalent is probably a head waiter. This person was responsible for seating the guests and the correct running of the feast. the good wine: Usually the better wine was served first. Then, after the guests' palates were dulled, the everyday wine was served. But this wine was so good that the master of the feast was surprised to see it being served late in the celebration. Some have argued that the wine here is merely grape juice, but the Greek word for unfermented grape juice is never used in the NT. The context here also militates against such a view. The biblical view regarding wine is always against excess.

2:11 Signs (Gk. semeion): In the Gospel of John the miracles of Jesus are called signs to indicate that these miracles point to His Messiahship. There are seven signs in John, which are an organizing principle of this Gospel (4:46–54; 5:1–9; 6:1–14; 6:15–21; 9:1–7; and 11:38–44). Here the text specifically mentions that the sign signified Christ's glory, that is, His deity. When He transformed water into wine He demonstrated His creative power. He did in a moment what is ordinarily done in weeks or in months. Milton said, "The conscious water blushed when it saw its Maker." This is the first time the text says that His disciples believed in Him. Following sometimes precedes believing and believing sometimes precedes following.

2:12 down: Cana was in the highlands and Capernaum was on the northwestern shore of the Sea of Galilee, which was below sea level. To go from Cana to Capernaum they had to go "down." Jerusalem, on the other hand, was situated on the top of a hill and one had to go " to get there (2:13).

IN CONTEXT

Water into Wine

Jesus' miracle of turning water into wine (John 2:1–12) was loaded with symbolism. Its placement at the beginning of John's Gospel is significant. For Jews, wine represented life and abundance. No proper wedding would be without it. Wine symbolized the life of the party and the expectation of a good life to come for the newlyweds. But at Cana, just as the young couple prepared to launch a new life, the unthinkable happened—they ran out of wine. That may have been a common problem in that day, given that wedding festivities often lasted as long as a week. Nevertheless, it was discouraging and probably quite an embarrassment to the host. The party immediately began to wind down.

But Jesus used the moment to reveal to His followers something of who He was. By producing wine from water, He astounded His disciples and encouraged their faith (2:11).

However, the product was not merely wine, but the best wine (2:10). In the same way, Jesus was the new wine bringing abundant life to Judaism, which, like the wedding, had run out of life and become spiritually empty.

2:13 the Passover of the Jews: Every male Jew was required to go to Jerusalem three times a year—for the Feast of Passover, the Feast of Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles (Ex. 23:14–19; Lev. 23). Jerusalem: The synoptic Gospels—Matthew, Mark, and Luke—concentrate on Jesus' Galilean ministry. John focuses on Jesus' ministry in Jerusalem. The different accounts do not contradict each other; instead, they complement each other.

2:14 The synoptic Gospels place the cleansing of the temple at the conclusion of Jesus' ministry (Matt. 21:12, 13), whereas John puts it at the beginning (vv. 14–17). Apparently Jesus cleansed the temple two different times. The language of the synoptic Gospels and that of John differ considerably, indicating two separate events. The Law of Moses required that any animal offered in sacrifice be unblemished, and that every Jewish male over nineteen years of age pay a temple tax (Lev. 1:3; Deut. 17:1). As a result, tax collectors and inspectors of sacrificial animals were present at the temple. However, these officials would not accept secular coins because they had an image of the Roman emperor, whom the pagans worshiped as a god. To put such coins into the temple treasury was thought to be an offense. So in order to accommodate visitors in need of animals and the right kinds of coins, animal merchants and money changers set up shop in the outer court of the temple. These inspectors, collectors, and exchangers, however, charged high prices.

2:15 Jesus' whip was probably more a symbol than a weapon; nevertheless, it was effective in scattering the money changers and the animals they were selling. Jesus' actions were a sign of authority and judgment.

2:16, 17 The cleansing of the temple was the first public presentation of Jesus to Israel; He presented Himself as Messiah. The Messiah's ministry began in the temple; He came to purify (Mal. 3:1–3). The expression My Father's house was a distinct claim to messiahship. At the wedding in Cana, Jesus demonstrated His deity and power; here He showed His authority. Recalling the words of Ps. 69:9, the disciples understood that Jesus was claiming to be the Messiah.

2:18 The Jews apparently refers to the religious authorities of Israel (1:19), who also understood that Jesus was representing Himself as the Messiah; therefore, they asked for a sign (1 Cor. 1:22).

2:19 Destroy this temple: Jesus was not talking about the physical building; He was referring to His body, as John emphasizes in v. 21. Jesus was speaking of His death. I will raise it up: Note that Jesus did not say, "I will build it again." He was referring to His resurrection, three days after His death. The sign Jesus gave the Jews was the sign of His death and resurrection (Matt. 12:39; 16:4).

2:20 forty-six years: Herod began restoring the temple about A.D. 19. The work was not finished at the time of this conversation. In fact, it was not completed until around A.D. 64, under Herod Agrippa.

Herod's Temple

During Jesus' time, the temple at Jerusalem was undergoing extensive reconstruction and renovation. Desiring favor among the Jews, King Herod pledged to build a magnificent temple that would perhaps recall some of the glory of Solomon's temple (1 Kin. 6:1).

At first the priests opposed Herod, suspicious that his real intent was to either do away with the temple altogether or erect something profane in its place. But Herod proved he was serious, hiring ten th ousand laborers and ordering one thousand wagons for hauling cream-colored stone. When finished, the structure shone so brightly in the Mediterranean sun that it was difficult to look at directly.

2:21, 22 The disciples understood that Jesus was the Messiah (v. 17; 1:41, 45, 49), but they did not understand that He was speaking of the resurrection of His body until it actually happened.

2:23 many believed in His name: John's purpose in recording Jesus' miracles was for people to believe and have eternal life (20:30, 31). Many have concluded that though the text says these people believed, they did not have true faith. Inasmuch as their faith was only based on Christ's miracles, they say it was not saving faith. Furthermore, they note that Christ did not commit Himself to them (v. 24); however, John says he recorded the miracles of Christ so that people would believe and have eternal life (20:30, 31). Also the text says they "believed in," a construction that everywhere else in the NT indicates saving faith. Moreover, they believed in His name, a phrase only used two other times in the Gospel of John and in both places it is of saving faith (John 1:12; 3:18).

2:24 Commit is the same Greek word translated "believe" in v. 23. There is a play on words here. These individuals trusted Jesus, but Jesus did not entrust Himself to them. Nicodemus is an illustration. John obviously ties these comments and the story of Nicodemus together. He says Christ "knew what was in man" (Gk. anthropos, 2:25) and then adds, "There was a man (Gk. anthropos) of the Pharisees named Nicodemus" (3:1). He, like Joseph of Arimathea, was a secret disciple (19:38, 39). Thus, the Lord did not commit Himself to him like He committed Himself to others, for example, the apostles (15:15). We need to ask ourselves how trustworthy we are (Luke 16:1–13). Christ may be using the principle of readiness for receiving truth (notice, for example, 16:4 as well as 15:5).

2:25 In the Greek text He is emphatic. Without being told by others, Jesus knew the hearts of people. He reads people like people read billboards, another indication of His deity. In the OT God alone was said to know the hearts of all people (1 Kin. 8:39).

3:1 The phrase ruler of the Jews indicates that Nicodemus was a member of the Jewish council, the group that had sent a committee to investigate John the Baptist (1:24). Nicodemus no doubt knew that John the Baptist had denied being the Messiah (1:20), but had said that the Messiah was present (1:26, 27).

3:2 The fact that Nicodemus came to Jesus by night may reveal the timidity of his faith (12:42); however, his faith was developing (7:50, 51; 19:39).

3:3 born again: The Greek word translated "again" can mean either "from above" or "anew." The new birth, or regeneration (Titus 3:5), is the act by which God imparts spiritual life to one who trusts Christ. Without this spiritual birth, a person cannot perceive spiritual things (1 Cor. 2:10, 13–16), nor can he or she enter the kingdom of God (v. 5).

3:4 How? The construction of the questions assumed a negative response. Nicodemus misunderstood Jesus' statement as referring to a second physical birth. old: An adult.

3:5 born of water (Gk. hudor) and the spirit (Gk. pneuma): Of water has been interpreted as: (1) water baptism. But the NT teaches that one is born again at the point of faith, not baptism (Acts 10:43–47); (2) a synonym for the Holy Spirit. The phrase could be translated "born of water, even the spirit"; (3) a symbol of the Word of God (Eph. 5:26; 1 Pet. 1:23); (4) physical birth; (5) John's baptism; or (6) a symbol, along with wind, in OT imagery for the work of God from above. The first three views are questionable since they must rely on future teaching in the Scripture which would not have been accessible to Jesus' listeners For interpretation 4, the idea is that Nicodemus brought up physical birth (3:4) and Jesus went on to say, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh" (3:6). If one could enter a second time into his mother's womb and be born, he would still be flesh. This position is not likely since Jesus' words would be trivial and do not advance the argument. Options 5 and 6 are the better choices for the meaning of the statement. Option 5 is a viable one since Nicodemus would probably be familiar with John's baptism. Jesus would be saying that one must identify with and accept John's message (baptism) and then one would receive Messiah's baptism in the Spirit as John promised (1:31–33). This view has both historical and theological support. Christ emphasizes by v. 6 that there are two realms, that of the flesh and the Spirit. Humans cannot save themselves but must rely on God's Spirit to regenerate them. Option 6 relies on the translation of pneuma, wind or spirit. Under this view the Greek term should be understood as wind rather than spirit and thus serve alongside of water as symbols for spiritual truths similar to how these terms are used in the OT (for example, Is. 44:3–5 and Ezek. 37:9, 10). Jesus, then, is contrasting the things from below (earthly womb) from the elements of water and wind from above (the divine work of the Spirit of God). A teacher of Israel should understand such OT imagery. Nicodemus may have been challenged by Christ, since he was a teacher of Israel, to understand the questions of Prov. 30:3–5: (1) Who has ascended into heaven, or descended? (2) Who has gathered the wind in His fist? (3) Who has bound the waters in a garment? (4) Who has established all the ends of the earth? (5) What is His name, and what is His Son's name? "Every word of God is pure; He is a shield to those who put their trust in Him" (compare John 3:15, 16).

3:6 flesh: (Gk. sarx). Flesh cannot be made into spirit. One must experience a spiritual birth (v. 7).

3:7 In the Greek text, you is plural. In v. 2, Nicodemus used the word we, probably referring to the Jewish ruling council, the Sanhedrin. Here Jesus spoke not only to Nicodemus, but to all whom he represented.

3:8 This conversation took place at night (v. 2). Conversations at night usually occurred on the flat roof of the house. Perhaps as they talked the wind was blowing. Jesus used the wind as an illustration of the work of the Holy Spirit. The Greek word translated "Spirit" also means "wind." As the wind seemingly blows where it wills, so the Holy Spirit sovereignly works. Likewise, no one knows the origin or destination of the wind, but everyone knows it is there. The same is true of the Holy Spirit.

3:9 Nicodemus wanted to know how he could experience the spiritual birth spoken of by Jesus.

3:10 Jesus answered Nicodemus's question (vv. 13–15), but first He rebuked Nicodemus for being a teacher of the Hebrew Scriptures and not knowing about spiritual birth (Prov. 30:4; Is. 44:3; Ezek. 36:26, 27).

3:11 you do not receive: Again you is plural (v. 7). Jesus had others in mind beyond Nicodemus. Here Jesus rebuked not only Nicodemus, but the other Pharisees as well.

3:12 Earthly things refers to things that occur on earth, like the new birth (vv. 3, 5–7), the wind (v. 8), and perhaps miracles. Heavenly things refers to events like Christ's ascension (6:61, 62) and the coming of the Holy Spirit (16:7). Nicodemus may have believed in Jesus' miracles (v. 2); the majority of the Jewish council did not (v. 11).

3:13 In v. 9, Nicodemus, referring to the new birth, asks, "How can these things be?" Here Jesus answers the question. New birth is by the Son, by the Cross (v. 14), and by faith (v. 15).

3:14 Every time the words lifted up occur in the Gospel of John there is a reference to Jesus' death (8:28; 12:32, 34). When Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness (Num. 21:9), those who looked at it lived. So it is with the Son of Man (1:51). Look and live! Look to the Lamb of God!

3:15 This is the first time eternal life is mentioned in John's Gospel (4:36; 5:39; 6:54, 68; 10:28; 12:25; 17:2, 3). When a person trusts Christ, he or she is born again and receives eternal and spiritual life, God's kind of life. The focus is not on our faith but on Christ, the object of our faith. Faith doesn't save. It is the channel to the One who saves—Christ.

3:16 God so loved the world: God's love is not restricted to any one nation or to any spiritual elite. World here may also include all of creation (Rom. 8:19–22; Col. 1:20). The Greek word for only begotten suggests a one and only son; it does not necessarily convey the idea of a birth. For example, Isaac is called Abraham's only begotten in Heb. 11:17 and in the Septuagint, the Greek OT (Gen. 22:2, 12, 16), when actually Abraham had two sons: Ishmael and Isaac. The Son of God is the Father's one and only, His unique Son.

3:17 At His first coming, Jesus came so that the world through Him might be saved. When Jesus comes again, He will come in judgment upon those who refused His offer of salvation.

3:18 To believe is to receive life (vv. 15, 16) and avoid judgment. A person who does not believe not only misses life, but is condemned already. The idea of believing in Jesus' name is also found in 1:12.

3:19 Condemnation refers to the reason for judgment. The light referred to here is Jesus, the light of the world (1:7–9; 8:12; 9:5).

3:20 People offer many excuses for not accepting Christ. Some cite the presence of hypocrites in the church. Others claim inability to believe some of the truths about Christ or the gospel. These are merely attempts to conceal a heart in rebellion against God. The ultimate reason people do not come to Christ is that they do not want to.

3:21 The one who does the truth (1 John 1:5) is obviously already a believer because his or her deeds are done in God. Therefore, "coming to the light” is more than exercising faith. A person who comes to the light not only believes, but also openly identifies with the light so that his or her works can be seen as things done in union with God. One who believes on the Son and practices the truth can be trusted by God to be given revelation and responsibilities for service.

God Takes All Kinds

Jesus' nighttime meeting with Nicodemus (John 3:1–21) and His midday encounter with the Samaritan woman (4:5–42) show two of the many different ways in which He dealt with people. Whether it had to do with a respected urban leader like Nicodemus or a hardened, street-wise loner like the woman of Samaria, Jesus approached people on their own terms, as individuals with unique concerns. He modeled for us what it means to live, work, and communicate the gospel message in a pluralistic society.

Nicodemus was an upper-class Jew, a Pharisee from one of the prominent families of Jerusalem. He approached Jesus, alone, at night. The Lord confronted him with his need to be "born again," then let him go away to think things over. The next time we see him, he is defending Jesus on a procedural matter (7:45–52). But Nicodemus apparently didn't openly identify with Jesus until after the crucifixion, when he helped prepare His body for burial (19:39).

The Samaritan woman, on the other hand, had lived a scandalous lifestyle with a succession of husbands and then with a live-in companion. As a result, her community despised her. She also probably came from mixed ancestry, for which the Jews despised her. She was spoken to by Jesus in broad daylight, in public, first by herself but later in the company of others. He told her of "living water" and the need to worship in spirit and truth. She responded much more quickly than Nicodemus. Furthermore, hers may have been not so much an individual choice as a clan decision (4:39–41).

John went on to record many other ways Jesus dealt with people, and many ways they responded to Him. Some became believers after they were fed (6:4–14), others after they were healed (9:1–38), and others after they had seen the resurrected Christ (20:24–29). Some responded to the Lord's miracles, others to His teaching. There was no one kind of response to Jesus.

3:22 baptized: The impression here is that Jesus baptized. John corrects this idea in 4:2. Jesus provided the authority, but the disciples performed the baptisms.

3:23 Aenon was probably west of the Jordan River. much water: There were a number of springs at Aenon. they came: The people of the area.

3:24 The synoptic Gospels, particularly Matthew and Mark, give the impression that the imprisonment of John the Baptist came right after the baptism of Jesus. This verse indicates that there was an interval between Jesus' baptism and John's imprisonment during which both ministered.

3:25 The Greek word translated then often means "therefore." The disciples of Jesus and the disciples of John were both baptizing people; as a result, a question arose. The question came from John's disciples when they entered into a discussion with the Jews. Purification here refers to baptism.

3:26 John the Baptist's disciples were loyal to him. They were deeply concerned that one of his "disciples," Jesus, was competing with and surpassing him. In their astonishment, they exaggerated the predicament, saying, all are coming to Him. They were concerned that John was losing his audience to another preacher.

3:27, 28 John the Baptist clarified the relationship between himself and Jesus. First, he talked about himself (vv. 27–29); then he talked about Jesus (vv. 30–36). John explained that he could not accept the position of supremacy that his disciples wanted to thrust upon him because he had not received it from heaven. To attempt to do any work, even God's work, must be done with divine approval. Too many of our tasks, even in the church, are patterned after the ways of the world. We need to be sensitive to follow God's commands, even if they fly in the face of what the world thinks is "smart." We don't have to be poured into the mold of this world's system. We can be transformed from the inside out by applying God's Word (Rom. 12:2).

3:29 In explaining why people were flocking to Jesus (v. 26), John the Baptist pointed out that the bridegroom receives the bride. John compared himself to the friend of the bridegroom, who was appointed to arrange the preliminaries of the wedding, to manage the wedding, and to preside at the wedding feast. When the friend of the bridegroom finished his job, he had to get out of the way. His joy came from the success of the bridegroom. John was satisfied with his position in life. He was content to be a "voice" (1:23) and a friend.

3:30 John the Baptist insisted that Jesus Christ had to increase in popularity and that he, John, had to decrease. John explained that Jesus had to increase because of (1) His divine origin (v. 31), (2) His divine teaching (vv. 32–34), and (3) His divine authority (vv. 35, 36). Even though John encouraged his disciples to also follow Jesus, there were still some found many years later in Ephesus (Acts 19).

3:31 He who comes from above refers to Jesus Christ. He who is of the earth refers to John the Baptist. John emphasized his earthly origin and its limitations. John proclaimed divine truth on earth; Jesus, on the other hand, is from heaven and above all.

3:32 no one receives His testimony: No one, apart from God's work in him or her (6:44), can accept Jesus Christ.

3:33 Certified means "to seal." In a society where many could not read, seals were used to convey a clear message, even to the illiterate. A seal indicated ownership to all and expressed a person's personal guarantee. To receive Jesus' testimony is to certify that God is true regarding what He has sealed.

3:34 Unlike human teachers, Jesus was not given the Spirit by measure—that is, in a limited way (Is. 11:1, 2). The Holy Spirit was given to Jesus completely. All three Persons of the Trinity are referred to in this verse: God the Father sent Christ the Son, and gave Him the Holy Spirit without measure.

3:35 God the Father not only gave Jesus, in His humanity, the Holy Spirit (v. 34), He also gave Him all things, including the authority to give life (5:21) and judge (5:22). The phrase into His hand signifies the Son's authority over the use of "all things."

3:36 The verb translated has is in the present tense. The one who believes has eternal life as a present possession. Likewise, the one who refuses to believe on Christ has the wrath of God abiding on him or her as a present reality.

4:1, 2 Therefore refers the reader back to 3:22–36. Christ's success in winning disciples had created jealousy among John's followers and provoked questions among the Pharisees. Since Jesus did not want to be drawn into a controversy over baptism at this stage of His ministry, He left Judea for Galilee (v. 3).

4:3 again: Jesus had been to Galilee before (1:43—2:12). He had left Capernaum to go to Jerusalem for the Passover.

4:4 The shortest route from Judea in the south to Galilee in the north went through Samaria. The journey took three days. Christ needed to go through Samaria if He wanted to travel the direct route. The Jews often avoided Samaria by going around it along the Jordan River.

4:5 Jacob had purchased a parcel of ground (Gen. 33:18, 19), which he bequeathed on his deathbed to Joseph (Gen. 48:21, 22).

4:6 the sixth hour: According to the Jewish system of reckoning time, the sixth hour was noon. By the Roman system it was 6 P.M. John seems to be using the Roman system (1:39, note).

4:7–9 Samaritans: When Assyria conquered the northern kingdom in 722 B.C., it exported half of the population to another country and imported Gentiles. The Jews who remained in the Northern Kingdom intermarried with the incoming foreigners; thus, they lost their racial purity. These racially mixed Jews were the Samaritans. When Babylon conquered and carried off the Judeans of the Southern Kingdom, they remained unalterably Jewish. After returning to the Holy Land, the pure Jews would have nothing to do with the Samaritans. To make matters worse, the Samaritans built a rival temple on Mount Gerizim. As a result of all this, the Judeans and the Samaritans hated each other.

IN CONTEXT

“Jews Have No Dealings with Samaritans”

Hatred between Jews and Samaritans was fierce and long-standing. It dated to the fall of the northern kingdom of Israel in A.D. 722 The victorious Assyrians deported twenty thousand Israelites, mostly from the upper classes, and replaced them with settlers from Babylon, Syria, and several other nations. These foreigners introduced pagan idols and intermarried with the Hebrews, creating an ethnically mixed population.

When the Jews of Judah returned from the Babylonian captivity, they met resistance from the Samaritans as they tried to rebuild the temple, Jerusalem, and the rest of their society. They looked down on their northern cousins because of their mixed marriages and idolatrous practices. Soon, permanent walls of bitterness had been erected by both sides. By Jesus’ day, the hostilities were so severe that the woman at the well was astonished that Jesus would even speak with her. As John explained, “Jews have no dealings with Samaritans” (John 4:9).

4:10 Living water (7:37–39; Is. 12:1–6) springs from an unfailing source and is ever-flowing. Jesus, of course, was talking about eternal life (4:14; Rom. 6:23).

4:11–15 The Samaritan woman did not comprehend Jesus’ spiritual message. She was thinking only of physical water and could not understand how Jesus could provide water without a means of drawing it, especially since the well was deep.

4:16 Jesus mentioned the woman’s husband in order to expose her sin (v. 18).

4:17, 18 The woman is definitely immoral, living in adultery with a man who is not her husband.

4:19 Because of what Jesus told her about herself, the woman concluded that Jesus Christ was a prophet, a person divinely inspired with supernatural knowledge (1 Sam. 9:9).

4:20 By mentioning the two different worship sites, the woman was perhaps trying to shift the conversation away from the subject of her own sins to theological questions. Or perhaps she realized that she was a sinner (v. 18), and knew that she was required to offer a sacrifice. The woman probably assumed that because Jesus was a Jew, He would insist that the sacrifice be offered in the temple at Jerusalem. The Jews insisted that the exclusive place of worship was Jerusalem. But the Samaritans had set up a rival worship site on Mount Gerizim, which according to their tradition was where Abraham went to sacrifice Isaac, and where later on he met Melchizedek. When the blessings and curses were read to the wilderness generation of Israel, the blessings were read from Mount Gerizim (Deut. 11:29; 27:12). Deuteronomy 27:4 instructed that an altar be erected on Mount Ebal, opposite Mount Gerizim. But the Samaritan scripture changed the verse to read "Mount Gerizim." The Samaritans altered history and tampered with the text of Scripture to glorify Mount Gerizim. This woman had been reared to regard Mount Gerizim as the most sacred spot in the world and to despise Jerusalem. No wonder she brings up the issue of the place of worship. She thinks Mount Gerizim is the place of worship and sacrifice, and here is a Jew she is convinced is from God. She is sure He would tell her to go to Jerusalem.

4:21–23 The hour is coming: Christ reveals to the woman that where a person worships is unimportant. It is not limited to Mount Gerizim or Jerusalem. The Samaritans worshiped what they did not know; they had created their own religion. The Jews had divine guidelines for worship. Salvation is of the Jews means that the Messiah would come from the Jewish people.

4:24 God is Spirit … worship Him … in spirit and truth: God is not limited by time and space. When people are born of the Spirit, they can commune with God anywhere. Spirit is the opposite of what is material and earthly, for example, Mount Gerizim. Christ makes worship a matter of the heart. Truth is what is in harmony with the nature and will of God. It is the opposite of all that is false. Here the truth is specifically the worship of God through Jesus Christ. The issue is not where a person worships, but how and whom.

4:25 The Samaritans believed that the prophet of Deut. 18:15 would teach all things when he came.

4:26 I … am He: Using the same words that God used when He revealed Himself to Moses (Ex. 3:14), Jesus clearly stated that He is the Messiah.

4:27 The disciples marveled that their rabbi was speaking to a woman (John 4:27). In their day it was considered disreputable and beneath his dignity for a rabbi to speak to a woman in public. But Jesus chose a more inclusive posture than His religious peers.

4:28, 29 all things that I ever did: In her excitement, the woman exaggerated. She did not report what Jesus actually told her, but what He could have told her. Note the woman's spiritual journey. She first viewed Christ as a Jew (v. 9), then as a prophet (v. 19), and finally as the Messiah.

4:30–33 As the Samaritan woman did not understand the switch from physical water to spiritual eternal life (4:15), neither did the disciples understand the switch from physical food to spiritual food. This is another instance of spiritual dullness. In 2:20 it was the Jews. In 3:4 it was Nicodemus; in 4:11 the Samaritan woman, and now the disciples (11:12; 14:5).

4:34 My food is to do the will of Him who sent Me: In v. 32 Jesus referred to the food He had and in this verse He tells what it is, namely, doing the will of His Father. Again, Jesus is modeling for His disciples."Food" is not simply knowing the will of God but doing it. Notice the difference between milk and solid food in Heb. 5:12. Milk is information or input but food is practice or output. Too often we stop with input rather than going on to output or productivity.

4:35 In vv. 35 to 38 Jesus puts before the disciples an opportunity for "doing" that will be "food" for them if they take advantage of it. The first part of v. 35 has been taken as a proverb and as an actual fact. No such proverb is known. If this is factual, then this conversation took place in December/January because the harvest began in the middle of April. Actually, Christ is speaking about the approaching Samaritans. In them He sees a spiritual harvest opportunity for which they will not have to wait long.

4:36 The reaper of a spiritual harvest receives wages—that is, fruit which brings joy. In this case, Jesus sowed by giving the message to the woman. He was about to reap because He would see the whole city saved. Also the disciples were going to reap the harvest that Christ had sown. Note the "hundredfold" wages Jesus promises in Matt. 19:27–29 (1 Cor. 3:6–8; 2 Cor. 5:10).

4:37 One sows … another reaps: A vital lesson in discipleship. There are various tasks and laborers in the work of the Lord, but all receive honor alike (1 Cor. 3:6, 7).

4:38 Jesus applied what He had just said to His disciples. The others may have been John the Baptist and his disciples. They had labored in Judea (3:22–36). Thus, Jesus' disciples were reaping what others had sowed (vv. 1, 2).

4:39–41 The Samaritans readily believed in (Gk. pisteuo eis) Him. The Judeans rejected the testimony of their own Scriptures, John the Baptist, and Christ's miracles and teachings. The Samaritans accepted the testimony of an outcast woman. Sometimes God uses the most unlikely source to accomplish His work, while those who should have been at the forefront of the work of God fail to follow Him.

4:42 The title Savior of the world is used only here and in 1 John 4:14. The Judeans of Jesus' day taught that to approach God one first had to be a Jew. By including this incident in the Gospel, John demonstrates that Jesus is for all people of the world.

4:43, 44 His own country has been taken to mean: (1) Judea, (2) Nazareth, or (3) Galilee. Having no honor or reception in Nazareth, Jesus went elsewhere in Galilee.

4:45 The feast refers to the Passover (2:13–25). The Galileans who had gone to the feast received Jesus when He came to Galilee. The specially designed supernatural signs were doing their work as God intended (20:30, 31). This is pre-evangelism.

The Nobleman's Son

The key to understanding the significance of Jesus' second sign miracle (John 4:46–54) is geography. The nobleman and his dying son lived in Capernaum, the main city of the Galilee region (Luke 4:31). But Jesus was twenty miles away at Cana (where, significantly, His first sign miracle had taken place, John 2:1–12). That means that the nobleman walked a forty-mile round trip—a two-day trek by foot—to implore Jesus to heal his son. But Jesus merely spoke a word (4:50), producing results twenty miles away, in a world that knew nothing of phones, faxes, or modems. No wonder the incident produced faith (4:53). Jesus was the master of distance.

4:46 Nobleman is literally royal officer, one in service of the king. Herod Antipas was technically the "tetrarch" of Galilee, but he was referred to as a king.

4:47–49 The royal officer was under two false impressions about the power of Christ. He thought Christ would have to travel to Capernaum to heal, and that Christ did not have power over death (before my child dies). Christ was concerned that the man's faith was based only on signs and wonders.

4:50–54 The nobleman is said to have believed twice, once in v. 50 and again in v. 53. In v. 50, he believed Jesus' promise that his son would not die. But believing that Jesus can and will heal is not enough to save. What was it that the nobleman believed in v. 53? The explanation is found in v. 54. The miracle that Jesus performed was His second sign (2:11). These signs were performed so that people might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that by believing they might have life (20:31). When the Jewish nobleman realized that his son had been healed, he knew that Jesus was more than a mere mortal. The nobleman and his household placed faith in Jesus and were born from above (3:3). Often in the NT entire households would express faith in Christ (compare Acts 10:44–48; 16:31–34).

5:1 The feast of the Jews is probably not the Passover, which John usually refers to by name (2:13; 6:4; 11:55). It may have been Purim, which is not a divine institution but a Jewish-instigated feast to celebrate the deliverance of the Jews and Queen Esther. It is literally a feast of the Jews.

5:2 The Sheep Gate was a gate in the wall of Jerusalem near the temple, through which sheep were brought for sacrifice. The pool of Bethesda was a double pool surrounded by Herodian colonnades on four sides, with a fifth colonnade standing on the dividing wall that separated the northern and southern pools. The five porches were in the colonnades on the two sides, with two on each end and one in the middle.

5:3–4 By this pool there lay a group of sick people waiting for the moving of the water. All the oldest manuscripts were copied without the latter part of v. 3 and all of v. 4.

5:5 The exact nature of the infirmity is not stated. Apparently it affected his ability to walk (v. 7).

The Man at Bethesda

Jesus' third sign miracle revolves around the issue of time. The man at the pool of Bethesda had lain there for thirty-eight years—an entire lifetime as a helpless cripple. Indeed, he had probably started lying there before Jesus was even born. Imagine the disappointment he must have experienced time after time when the angel stirred up the pool, but always he had arrived too late to experience healing. Yet Jesus healed him and immediately he was able to walk. Jesus showed Himself to be the master of time. However, was Israel ready for Him (John 5:16)?

5:6, 7 Why ask a sick man if he wants to be healed? Some accuse the sick man of losing hope, but he is at the pool and is trying to be the first to get into the moving water ("while I am coming" in v. 7). Christ asks to verify that the man does indeed want to be healed and to focus his mind on the One able to heal.

5:8 The bed was a pallet, which was standard furniture for the people of Judea.

5:9 John records this miracle because it was a witness to Jesus' deity. Jesus Himself told John the Baptist that the proof of His messiahship was that the lame would walk (Matt. 11:1–5), for the prophet Isaiah had predicted this long before: "The lame shall leap like a deer" (Is. 35:1–6). Carrying a bed on the Sabbath was considered a violation of the Law of Moses (v. 10).

5:10 The Jews probably refers to Jewish leaders who were members of the council (1:19, note). The Law of Moses taught that the Sabbath must be different from other days. On it, neither people nor animals could work. The prophet Jeremiah had prohibited carrying burdens or working on the Sabbath (Jer. 17:21, 22). Nehemiah made it clear that trading on the Sabbath as if it were an ordinary day was forbidden (Neh. 13:15–19). Over the years, the Jewish leaders had amassed thousands of rules and regulations concerning the Sabbath. By Jesus' day, they had thirty-nine different classifications of work. One of these categories of work consisted of carrying a burden, including carrying a needle in one's robe. They even argued over whether a person could wear artificial teeth or a wooden leg.

According to them, carrying furniture and even providing medical treatment on the Sabbath were forbidden. Jesus did not break the Law; He violated the traditions of the Pharisees which had grown up around the Law.

5:11–13 This man was healed without exercising faith. He did not know who Jesus was when he was healed (compare Acts 3:1–10) nor does he later express any thankfulness (v. 14). Perhaps we have here an illustration of the legitimacy of meeting a social need simply because there is a need, without any other purpose in view. This is pre-evangelism. Jesus had withdrawn: John records Jesus quietly withdrawing from a crowd on four occasions (8:59; 10:39; 12:36). However, Jesus caught up with the man later (v. 14).

5:14, 15 Sin (Gk. hamartano) no more (literally, "stop sinning") implies that this man's sickness was the result of sin, but this is not always so (9:1–3). The worst thing probably does not refer to hell. In this life, there are worse things than this man's sickness.

5:16 This is the first recorded declaration of open hostility toward Jesus in the Gospel of John.

IN CONTEXT

Does God Work on Sundays?

Jesus offered an odd retort to His critics in the controversy over observance of the Sabbath (John 5:16–17). God "rested" from His work on the seventh day of creation and "sanctified" it (Gen. 2:2, 3), or set it apart as something special. Later, one of the Ten Commandments made the seventh day a holy day, a Sabbath or day of rest in Israel (Ex. 20:8–11). This should not be confused with Sunday, which celebrates the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

According to rabbinical legal tradition, the healed man was violating the Sabbath rest by carrying his bed (John 5:10), as was Jesus by healing him on that day (5:16). But Jesus said that even God "breaks" His own Sabbath by continuing to work (5:17). Even though He has completed the Creation, He continues to maintain it and provide for His creatures—even on Sundays.

The point was that it's never the wrong day to do good.

5:17, 18 My Father: Jesus is "the only begotten Son" (1:14, 18; 3:16, 18)—that is, the unique Son of God. Here He claims not only a unique relationship with God the Father, but also equality with God in nature. Since God continually does good works without allowing Himself to stop on the Sabbath, the Son does likewise, since He is equal with God. Certainly the Jewish leaders understood the implications of Jesus' claims (v. 18).

5:19–47 As a result of the miracle (5:1–9) and the dispute that followed (5:10–18), Jesus gives a lengthy discourse (5:19–47). In it He makes claims (5:19–30), offers proof of His claims (5:31–39), and challenges His opponents (5:40–47).

5:19 His first claim is a special relationship with the Father—equality. He explains this further with four statements, each beginning with "for" (5:19b–22). His second claim concerns His relationship to people, that He has the ability to give life and to judge (5:24–30). The Son can do nothing of Himself means that action by the Son apart from the Father is impossible because of the unity of the Father and the Son (v. 17). Whatever He does, the Son also does is a claim of deity and unity with the Father.

5:20 The Son does what the Father does (v. 19) because the Father loves the Son. Moreover, because the Father loves the Son, He reveals all to Him. The Father would show the Son greater works than the healing of the sick man. Jesus would raise the dead (v. 21) and eventually judge humanity (v. 22).

5:21 the Son gives life: As God raises people from the dead and gives them life, so Christ gives people spiritual life (v. 24). Jesus claimed the same power as God, thus claiming that He is equal with God.

5:22 all judgment to the Son: The Jews recognized that God alone had the right to judge humanity. In claiming that the Father committed all judgment to Him, Jesus again claimed equality with God.

5:23 honor the Son just as they honor the Father: To claim the same honor as the Father is to claim equality with the Father. Here Jesus claimed equal authority with God.

5:24 The phrase believes in Him who sent Me is unusual. Christ, not the Father, is usually the object of this verb in John. The issue in this passage is the unity of the Father and the Son (vv. 17–23). All who believe in the One who sent Christ will believe in Christ. shall not come into judgment: A judgment to decide a person's eternal destiny is no longer possible for the one who has already been given eternal life. However, all believers will stand before the judgment seat of Christ (Rom. 14:10; 2 Cor. 5:10), not for punishment of sin, but to determine inheritance in Messiah's kingdom.

5:25 and now is: In the present, Christ gives spiritual life to the spiritually dead.

5:26, 27 For indicates that this verse explains the previous verse. Christ can give life because He Himself possesses life. He not only has a part in giving it, He is the source of it. This is another testimony to Jesus' deity, because only God has life in Himself.

5:28 the hour is coming: Christ not only gives spiritual life now (v. 25), He will give physical life later.

5:29 Two separate resurrections (Rev. 20:4, 5), the resurrection of life and the resurrection of condemnation are presented here in the fashion of the OT prophets, who often grouped together events of the future without distinction of time (Is. 61:2). Jesus was teaching the universality of resurrection, not the timing of it. those who have done good: The only "good" anyone can do is to believe on Christ, the One God sent (6:28, 29).

All other good actions flow from that. Anything good that is done without that belief means nothing to God and will result in the resurrection of condemnation.

5:30 Christ's judgment is righteous because it is in accordance with God's divine will. In v. 19 Jesus said, "The Son can do nothing of Himself"; here He says He can do nothing independent of the Father. This verse is the climax and conclusion of vv. 19–29.

5:31–47 The term witness (testimony, v. 34) is a prominent concept in John. Though Jesus' testimony about Himself was true, under Jewish law one's self-testimony was not admissible in legal proceedings. another (v. 32): The Father Himself is Jesus' primary and ultimate witness (v. 37). Jesus also points His hearers to three other witnesses: John the Baptist (vv. 33–35), Jesus' own works (v. 36), and the Scriptures (v. 39), especially the writings of Moses (vv. 45–47).

5:31, 32 The other witness was John the Baptist (v. 33).

5:33, 34 You have sent to John: The religious leaders sent a delegation to interrogate John (1:19). he has borne witness: The testimony of John was that Jesus was the living Lord (1:27, 34; 3:31) and the dying Lamb (1:29). Jesus declares that witness to be true.

5:35 Jesus is the Light (1:4, 5). John was a lamp. He was: Jesus used the past tense because by this time John's work had been ended either by imprisonment or by death.

5:36 the works: John did not perform any signs (10:41). Those were specific works that the Son was to perform, as predicted in the OT (Is. 35:5, 6) to attest to the fact that He was sent by the Father (vv. 1–15; 2:1–11; 4:43–54).

5:37, 38 the Father Himself … has testified: This is not a reference to the voice from heaven at the baptism of Christ, but to Scripture (v. 39).

5:39 The Jewish religious leaders of Jesus' day diligently searched the OT Scriptures, but did not see Jesus as the Messiah and did not believe in Him (v. 38). There are also those today who master the Scriptures but do not allow the Scriptures to master them. God doesn't promise to bless Bible reading but, rather, Bible heeding (Rev. 1:3; James 1:22–25).

5:40 Their problem was not a lack of evidence; it was a lack of willingness to consider any evidence that would bring them to Christ.

5:41 Christ said He did not receive testimony from men (v. 34) nor honor from men (v. 41), meaning He did not seek either.

5:42 The love of God here is not love from God but love for God. Love from God is evidenced in Christ (3:16; Rom. 5:8). Since God loves us, we should love Him (Deut. 6:5; 1 John 4:19).

5:43 Jesus came in the Father's name, revealing God to the people, but they rejected Him. Ironically, if someone had come in his own name, giving his own ideas in harmony with the people's ideas, the people would have received him. How evident depravity is when people reject the truth and receive a lie, reject Christianity and receive the cults.

5:44 The people did not believe in Jesus because they did not seek honor that comes from the only God. This honor may be similar to Paul's view of the glory that will be revealed in us in the presence of God (Rom. 8:18). How transient and futile is the praise of man. Movie stars honor each other for performances, most of which will be forgotten in a decade. Sports heroes revel in victories that are short-lived. Plaques and trophies they win will one day be consumed by fire (2 Pet. 3:10–13). Jim Elliot once said, "He is no fool who gives what he cannot keep, to gain what he can never lose."

5:45 Trust means "hope." Christ will not have to accuse the people on Judgment Day because the one in whom they placed their hope, Moses, will. The people will be condemned by the very Law they professed to keep.

5:46 he wrote about Me: Moses wrote about Christ in the promises to the patriarchs, in the history of the deliverance from Egypt, in the symbolic institutions of the Law, and in the prediction of a Prophet like himself (Luke 24:25, 26). If the people had believed Moses, they would have received Jesus gladly. Over three hundred OT prophecies were specifically fulfilled in the First Coming of Christ.

5:47 you do not believe his writings: The ultimate problem was that the people did not believe the Word of God written through Moses.

6:1 After these things: About six months elapsed between 5:47 and this verse. Herod Antipas had killed John the Baptist and was seeking Jesus. The disciples had preached throughout Galilee, and many people were curious about Jesus (v. 5). John further identifies the Sea of Galilee as the Sea of Tiberias, an indication that his Gospel was written for those outside of Palestine. The Jewish people called this body of water the Lake of Gennesaret. The Romans called it Tiberias, after the city built on its western shore by Herod Antipas and named for the Emperor Tiberius.

Feeding of the Five Thousand

John writes that the crowd that followed Jesus did so in response to His miracles (John 6:2), a link to the healing of the lame man in 5:1–17. This leads to a fourth sign miracle, the feeding of the 5,000.

What Jesus did was remarkable in every way. Consider, for example, that even today very few facilities in the United States can accommodate 5,000 people for a sit-down meal. Yet Jesus miraculously provided for at least that many—with leftovers! John mentions that they filled twelve baskets—perhaps one for each disciple, or perhaps one for each of the twelve tribes of Israel. The overall result was faith: Jesus must be the Prophet promised by Moses (Deut. 18:15), the crowd concluded (John 6:14).

Yet doubt and rejection were soon to follow. Detractors pointed out that Jesus' lunch may have been impressive, but it was only one meal. By contrast, Moses had fed Israel in the wilderness for forty years (6:30, 31). Incredibly, they had missed the point of the sign: Jesus was not merely a deliveryman; He was the Bread of Life itself (6:32–58).

6:2, 3 This was a world-renowned center of healing because of its hot mineral springs. Jesus apparently never went to Tiberias to do healing. If He wanted to gain worldwide reputation as a healer, that would have been the place to go. He had a different mission.

6:4 This is the second direct mention of Passover in John (2:23). At the time when His Jewish hearers were thinking of unleavened bread and manna, Jesus declared Himself to be the "bread of life" (v. 35).

6:5, 6 to test him: This was part of God's educational program (James 1:3, 13–15; 1 Pet. 1:7). It is for refining Philip's faith, not tempting him to do evil.

6:7 One denarius was a day's wage for a laborer or field hand (Matt. 20:2). Two hundred denarii would have been almost two-thirds of a year's wages.

6:8, 9 Barley loaves were an inexpensive food of the common people and the poor.

6:10 men … about five thousand: Women and children were not included in this number (Matt. 14:21). The crowd possibly exceeded ten thousand. They sat in groups of fifty and one hundred (Mark 6:40) and thus were easy to count.

6:11 The miraculous multiplication of the food demonstrated Jesus' deity, because only God can create. This is the only miracle of Jesus that is recounted in all four Gospels.

6:12, 13 There were twelve baskets (Mark 6:43) of leftovers, perhaps one for each disciple. The surplus emphasizes the sufficiency of the food created by Christ.

6:14 The Prophet is a reference to Deut. 18:15. The men's statement does not necessarily indicate that they believed Jesus was the Messiah. Some made a distinction between the Prophet and the Messiah (compare 1:20, 21). The bread (v. 11) may have reminded them of Moses and manna. Thus they concluded that Jesus was the Prophet that Moses had foretold.

6:15 make Him king: Moses had not only miraculously provided food for the Israelites, he had also led them out of bondage in Egypt. Perhaps these men felt that Jesus could lead them out of bondage to the Romans. Christ was at the zenith of His popularity, and the temptation to take the kingdom without the Cross must have been great (Matt. 4:8–10). The parallel passages say that He went to the mountain by Himself to pray (Matt. 14:23; Mark 6:46). Here is our greatest resource in times of testing.

6:16–18 His disciples went down to the sea: In Mark 6:45 we discover that the disciples went to the sea because Jesus compelled them to do so. It was already dark by the time the disciples got out on the lake. The wind began to pick up, setting the stage for Jesus to provide another revelation of Himself.

6:19–21 This miracle, the fifth sign recorded by John, pointed to Jesus' deity. Only God could walk on water, calm the sea, and supernaturally transport the disciples to their destination.

INSIGHT

Miracles at Sea

The fifth sign miracle that John included in his Gospel was a private affair for the disciples alone (John 6:15–21). What happened on the troubled Sea of Galilee revealed Jesus as master of the elements. John makes no explanatory comment on this incident, but its impact on the disciples is evident in Peter's words: "We have come to believe and know that You are the Christ, the Son of the living God" (6:69, emphasis added).

6:22–71 After the two miracles, Jesus spoke to the multitude in general (6:22–40), then to the Jews who questioned Him (6:41–59), to the disciples (6:60–66), and finally to the Twelve (6:67–71).

6:22–25 The multitude had seen that there was only one boat and that Jesus had not entered the boat with His disciples. They assumed that Jesus was still there and were looking for Him.

6:26 Jesus rebuked their motives. He stated that although the people had seen the signs, they had not accepted them for what they were (proof of His true messiahship), and they were only interested in the physical.

6:27 Do not labor for the food: The impression that one must work for eternal life is quickly corrected when Jesus adds which the Son of Man will give you. The Son provides life as a gift (4:10). We are reminded of the servant who said, "Lord, I believe. Help my unbelief." We are surrounded by a world of religions that require works to be saved; thus, it seems so difficult to only believe. Set His seal on Him means that the Father has authorized and authenticated the Son as the Giver of life.

6:28, 29 This is the work (Gk. ergon) of God, rather than man's work for God, which the people were wanting to do (v. 28). Salvation is totally by God's undeserved favor.

6:30 When Jesus said "believe in Him whom He sent," (v. 29), the people must have understood that He was claiming to be the Messiah. Therefore, they asked for a sign—despite the fact that they had just witnessed the miracle of the feeding of the multitudes.

6:31 There was a tradition that said the Messiah would cause manna to fall from heaven as Moses did (Ex. 16:4, 15). The people probably also saw this “miracle worker” as the perpetual provider of physical needs rather than spiritual ones.

6:32 The crowd misrepresented the truth, so Jesus corrected them. The manna had not come from Moses; it had been provided by God. Moreover, God still gives true bread—that is, eternal life (v. 33).

6:33 The bread is now called the bread of God, meaning it is bread from God—or Christ.

6:34 Lord can mean “sir,” which is no doubt the meaning here (4:11, 15).

6:35 Bread of life means “bread which supplies life.” Manna satisfied physical needs for a while; Christ satisfies spiritual need forever (4:13, 14).

6:36 seen … not believe: Seeing does not necessarily mean believing (v. 30; 11:46–57), although sometimes it does (11:45; 20:29). On the other hand, Christ blesses those who believe without having seen (20:29).

6:37 The Father gives implies divine election. the one who comes implies human agency. Election precedes human response (Acts 13:48).

6:38 For indicates an explanation of the previous statement. Christ will not cast out any who come to Him because He came to do the Father’s will.

6:39, 40 The will of the Father is twofold: (1) that all who come to the Son will be received and not lost; (2) that all who see and believe on the Son will have everlasting life.

6:41 The Jews referred to representatives of the council. They complained that Jesus said He was the bread which came down from heaven. Although this exact phrase is not found in Jesus’ statements, it is a fair summary of what He said (vv. 33, 35, 38). Jesus did claim that He was from heaven.

6:42 the son of Joseph: The religious leaders’ proof that Jesus was not from heaven was that they knew His parents. To them, there was nothing supernatural about Jesus’ origin.

6:43–44 Jesus returns to His message of life. In order for a person to come to the Bread of Life, the Father must draw him. This verb (Gk. helkuo) is also translated “draw” in the sense of dragged (Acts 16:19; 21:30). People cannot be saved at all unless God through the Holy Spirit draws them.

6:45 God draws people by teaching them. Everyone, then, who hears and learns from the Father will come to Christ.

6:46, 47 Hearing and learning (v. 45) fall short of seeing the Father. John declares, “No one has seen God at any time” (1:18; 5:37). Here Jesus adds that only the Son has seen the Father. Though a person has not seen the Father, he or she can believe in Christ and have everlasting life.

IN CONTEXT

The Bread of Life

When Jesus called Himself the "bread of life" (John 6:35; also 6:32, 33, 41, 48), He was using as an image more than a staple of the diet, He was drawing on a rich symbol of Jewish life.

Bread played an important role in Israel's worship. During the celebration of Pentecost, two loaves of leavened bread were offered as sacrifices (Lev. 23:17). In the tabernacle, and later in the temple, the Levites placed twelve loaves of unleavened bread, or bread without yeast, before the Lord each week to symbolize God's presence with the twelve tribes (Ex. 25:30).

Throughout the Exodus, God miraculously sustained His people by sending manna from heaven each morning (Ex. 16). The bread-like manna was a "small round substance as fine as frost" (16:14). It looked "like white coriander seed" and tasted like "wafers made with honey" (16:31) or "pastry prepared with oil" (Num. 11:8).

It was this manna that Jesus was recalling when He called Himself "the true bread from heaven" (John 6:32), "the bread which came down from heaven" (6:41), and the "bread of life" (6:48–51, 58). Symbolically, Jesus is the heavenly manna, the spiritual or supernatural food given by the Father to those who ask, seek, and knock (6:45; Matt. 7:7, 8).

However, it's also interesting that Jesus' "bread of life discourse" (as John 6:26–58 is called) was given during Passover, also known as the Feast of Unleavened Bread (6:4, 22; see "Passover" at Luke 22:7). Passover celebrated the deliverance of Israel from slavery in Egypt. On the night before leaving Egypt, the Israelites made unleavened bread, as they had no time to let their bread rise before taking flight (Ex. 12:8; 13:6, 7).

In this context, Jesus had just fed at least 5,000 people (John 6:1–14), an event that led directly to the bread of life discourse (6:22–27). Clearly, He was indicating that He was God's provision for the people's deepest spiritual needs. Just as God had provided for His people as they came out of Egypt, so Jesus had provided physical food for the 5,000 and was ready to provide spiritual nourishment and life to all of them as well.

Tragically, the people balked at His teaching (6:30, 31, 41, 42, 52, 60). Their hearts were hardened in unbelief. Soon, many began to turn away (6:66). But to those who believed, like Peter who declared, "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God" (6:69), Jesus gave abundant and eternal life.

6:48, 49 Christ is the bread of life. Those who believe in Him have life (v. 47). The manna in the wilderness did not ultimately sustain life. Those who ate it eventually died because it could not provide everlasting life.

6:50, 51 Eats of this bread is a synonym for faith (vv. 35, 48–50).

6:52 flesh to eat: They took in a nonfigurative way what was figurative.

6:53–54 Christ complicates the situation further by adding unless you … drink His blood. The Jews were forbidden to drink blood (Lev 7:26, 27) and this additional statement must have added insult to injury. However, the Jews misunderstood. Lev. 17:11 clearly states that life is in the blood. Accepting the sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ is the basis for eternal life.

6:53–58 Eats my flesh and drinks my blood is not a reference to the Lord's table, which He would institute a year later. For one thing, Christ has made abundantly clear in this context that eternal life is gained by believing (vv. 29, 35, 40, 47). These verses are teaching that the benefits of Christ's death must be appropriated by each person. Christ has made explicitly clear that such appropriation is by faith.

6:59 the synagogue … in Capernaum: In the ruins of a synagogue at Capernaum, a large stone with a pot of manna engraved on it has been found. Some have suggested that perhaps the synagogue in this passage had such a symbol.

6:60 Disciple means "learner" and is used in a variety of ways in the NT. It can include unbelievers (v. 64), believers who go beyond initial faith to baptism and obedience (8:31), or it can mean the apostles in particular (2:11). The context determines what meaning is intended. Here it simply means learner. Some of the crowd were students; they came to learn. Not all of these had believed in Christ. It was hard for the Jewish learners to accept the idea of eating flesh and drinking blood. Jews were forbidden to even taste blood.

6:61, 62 Jesus was asking, "If the thought of eating flesh and drinking blood offends you, would you be further offended at the idea of My ascension?"

6:63, 64 Jesus was trying to get the religious leaders to see beyond the physical aspects of His teaching to the real issue—namely, that if they believed on Him they would have everlasting life. Because they did not believe, many of these disciples did not follow Jesus any longer (v. 66).

6:65 The people did not believe (v. 64) because it was not granted to them by the Father. There is a balance in this chapter between God's initiative and human response. The multitude is told about the election of the Father (v. 37), and yet all are invited to believe (v. 40). The same is true of the Jewish leaders (vv. 44, 47) and those called disciples (v. 63).

6:66 From that time could mean "for this reason." Because of Jesus' teaching, they ceased to travel with Him.

6:67 This is the first time in John's Gospel that the apostles are referred to as the twelve (though there is perhaps an indirect reference to the Twelve in 6:13).

6:68, 69 John wrote so that people might believe "that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God" (20:31). The similarity between the confession of Peter and the purpose statement of John is inescapable.

6:70, 71 Judas Iscariot never made Peter's confession of faith in Christ. Though he was a disciple and even one of the twelve, it is never said that he believed.

7:1 The Jews here means the religious authorities, not the people in general (5:18). Many common people had responded to Jesus with joy (Mark 12:37).

7:2 The Feast of Tabernacles was one of the three great Jewish religious festivals (Passover and Pentecost were the other two). It was called the Feast of Tabernacles because for seven days the people lived in makeshift shelters made of branches and leaves. The feast commemorated the days when the Israelites wandered in the wilderness and lived in tents (Lev. 23:40–43). The festival was in September—October, about six months after the events of ch. 6.

7:3, 4 Jesus' brothers argued, "If You are really working miracles and thus claiming to be the Messiah, do not hide in obscure Galilee. If you are doing miracles at all, then do them in Jerusalem at the Feast to convince the whole nation." These words were sarcastic, as v. 5 explains.

Not All Will Believe

If you ever feel discouraged because family, friends, or coworkers refuse to accept the gospel, you may take some comfort from the fact that even Jesus' own brothers did not believe that He was the Christ (John 7:5). Even though they had seen His miracles and listened to His teaching, they still balked at the idea of placing faith in Jesus as the Son of God.

This is important to notice, because it shows that the person who hears the gospel bears responsibility for responding in faith, while the person who shares the gospel bears responsibility for communicating with faithfulness. If we as believers ever start holding ourselves responsible for whether unbelievers accept or reject the message of Christ, we are headed for trouble!

That's not to suggest that we can be careless in our witness or ignore our credibility. Notice that Jesus' brothers rejected Him in spite of His works and words. Is that true of us? Or do people dismiss our faith because our lives show little evidence that what we say we believe is true or that it makes any difference to us?

Eventually, at least some of Jesus' brothers did believe in Him. James, probably the oldest, became a leader in the church (Acts 15:13–21) and wrote the NT letter that bears his name. Likewise, the author of Jude may have been the half brother of Jesus.

7:5 brothers: Note that earthly kinship does not determine eternal life (1:13).

7:6 Earlier, Jesus had told His mother, "My hour has not yet come" (2:4; compare 12:23). Here He told His brothers also that the time for manifesting Himself to the world had not yet come. Jesus mentioned on several occasions that the time for Him to be publicly manifested on the Cross was in the future (2:4; 7:6, 8, 30; 8:20).

7:7 The world cannot hate you: The world was not about to hate Jesus' brothers, because they were part of it.

7:8, 9 The Feast of Tabernacles was a festival for work accomplished. His work was not finished; His time had not yet fully come. Jesus on several occasions mentions that the time for Him to be publicly manifested

(the cross) was yet in the future (2:4; 7:6, 8, 30; 8:20). Nothing could rush Him to this purpose. Only at the time of His intercessory prayer immediately before the arrest culminating in His death does He say His time had come (17:1).

7:10 When Christ did go to the Feast, He went not openly as His half brothers suggested (v. 4). He went "in secret"; He stayed concealed.

7:11–13 The Jews is a reference to the Jewish leaders, especially the members of the council (1:19).

7:14 The middle of the feast would have been the fourth day of the seven-day feast. During the first half of the festival Jesus remained in seclusion (v. 10). During the second half He began to teach publicly. This is the first mention in the Gospel of John of Jesus teaching in the temple.

7:15 Having never studied means never having attended a rabbinical school. Similar bewilderment was later expressed regarding Jesus' disciples (Acts 4:13).

7:16 not Mine, but His: Jesus' statement indicates that He did not receive His teaching from the rabbis, nor did He fabricate it. Instead His teaching came directly from God.

7:17 wills … shall know (Gk. ginosko): Truth is imparted only to open hearts. God imparts the truth in accord with our ability to receive it (John 2:24, 25; 15:15–17; 16:4).

7:18, 19 is true: The test of a teacher is whether or not he delivers God's message. Jesus gave God's message; so did Moses. The religious leaders were breaking Moses' Law by seeking to kill Jesus.

7:20 The people from the provinces who had come for the feast knew nothing of the plan of the hierarchy to kill Christ. Thus, they perceived that He was demon-possessed. Those from Judea were better informed (v. 25). Perception often does not square with the facts (v. 24).

7:21 The one work was the healing of the impotent man in Jerusalem on the Sabbath a year before to this occasion (5:1–14; see especially v. 16).

7:22–24 Circumcision began with Abraham (Gen. 17:10). The Law of Moses required infants to be circumcised on the eighth day (Lev. 12:3). The Jews obeyed this law, even if the eighth day fell on the Sabbath. Jesus asked why the leaders were angry with Him for making a man completely well on the Sabbath.

7:25, 26 They are amazed that Christ spoke boldly (openly) and for a moment think that perhaps the rulers have been convinced that He is the Messiah.

7:27 The Jewish people seem to have expected the Messiah to appear suddenly from nowhere. They reasoned that since they knew where Jesus came from, He could not be the Messiah. They were ignorant of the Scriptures, for Micah had predicted the Messiah would come from Bethlehem (Mic. 5:2).

7:28, 29 Cried out signifies a loud cry of strong emotion. You … know Me … where I am from: Jesus reminded the leaders that they knew His origin. Their problem was that they did not know God, who sent Jesus. He explained to them that He knew God, was from God, and was sent by God.

7:30 take Him: Because of Jesus' public claims of divine origin (v. 29), the religious leaders sought to arrest Him. because His hour had not yet come: John passes over the immediate reason they were unable to arrest Him and gives the ultimate explanation (2:4). God is sovereign and He alone sets the time. As with Jesus, so with us; no one can touch us without the Father's consent (10:29).

7:31 In contrast to the leaders, many of the Jewish people believed because of the miracles Jesus performed (20:30, 31).

7:32 to take Him: The Jewish leaders decided earlier that they wanted to kill Christ (5:16), but this is the first real attempt on His life.

7:33 a little while longer: Jesus' time on earth was limited; soon He would be crucified and then ascend to the Father. His life was not determined by the Jewish religious leaders (v. 32), but by the Father.

7:34–36 you cannot come: Christ would be in heaven; the people would not be able to come to Him there. Where does He intend to go: The Jewish leaders did not comprehend what Jesus meant. They could only think of one of the various places where Jews had been scattered.

7:37–39 On each day of the feast, the people came with palm branches and marched around the great altar. A priest took a golden pitcher filled with water from the Pool of Siloam, carried it to the temple, and poured it on the altar as an offering to God. This dramatic ceremony was a memorial of the water that flowed from the rock when the Israelites traveled through the wilderness. On the last day of the feast, the people marched seven times around the altar in memory of the seven circuits around the walls of Jericho. Perhaps at the very moment that the priest was pouring water on the altar, Jesus' voice rang out: If anyone thirsts, let him come to Me and drink.

IN CONTEXT

"We Will Interrupt This Program … "

Jesus' cry in John 7:37 was far more dramatic than most modern readers realize. He chose a time when Jerusalem was packed with holiday visitors and a crucial moment in the festivities when He could attract the most attention. It would be as if someone broke into the broadcast of a presidential state-of-the-union address to announce, "We interrupt this program to bring you a special report."

The annual Feast of Tabernacles (or Booths, or Tents; John 7:2) swelled Jerusalem with an overflow of festive crowds. Every Jewish family within twenty miles of the city was required to move out of its home and live in a booth or tent in remembrance of Israel's wanderings in the wilderness. Many chose to move into the city for the week. Reunions and parties alternated with solemn processions from the temple down to the Pool of Siloam, a reservoir (9:7). Pushing its way through the crowded streets, the throng sang Pss. 113—118 in anticipation of God's righteous reign over Jerusalem.

Jesus chose to keep a low profile at this year's festival (7:2–10). He taught in the temple (7:14), but waited for the right moment to declare Himself publicly. It came on the last day of the feast (7:37), probably at the climax of the daily processional.

As on the previous six days, the high priest filled a goblet of water from Siloam and carried it back to the temple, where he poured it out for all the people to see. Each day at that point the crowds chanted, "Oh, give thanks to the LORD" (Ps. 118:1), and "Save now, I pray, O LORD; O LORD, I pray, send now prosperity" (118:25), and again, "Oh, give thanks to the LORD." Then they shook myrtle, willow, and palm branches toward the altar, as if to remind God of His promises. Then, after a pause, sacrifices were offered.

On the last day, however, just after the crowds had not only waved their branches but, as was the custom, literally shook them to pieces in a frenzy of enthusiasm, a voice suddenly cried out: "If anyone thirsts, let him come to Me and drink" (John 7:37, emphasis added). Jesus' timing couldn't have been more perfect or His claim more explicit: He was declaring Himself to be none other than the long-awaited Messiah who would pour out the Holy Spirit, as many in the crowd immediately recognized (7:39–43).

In many ways 7:37 acts as the pivot for John's account. From that point on, the hostility of Jesus' enemies mounted until they finally arrested Him (18:12) in vain hopes of shutting off the "living water."

7:38 as the Scripture has said: The reference is not to a single passage, but to the general emphasis of such passages as Num. 24:7; Deut. 18:15; Is. 58:11; Zech. 14:8. In contrast to the small amount of water poured out each day during the feast, there will be a river of water coming out of those who believe in Christ. Not only will they be satisfied themselves, but they will also become a river so that others may drink and be satisfied (v. 39).

7:39 John explains that Jesus was speaking of the Holy Spirit who would satisfy personal thirst and produce a perennial fountain for the satisfaction of others. The Holy Spirit would come after Jesus' crucifixion and ascension. Jesus prepared His disciples for this in the Upper Room (14:16–20; 15:26, 27; 16:7–15).

7:40–44 Moses predicted that the Prophet, the seed of David, would come (Deut. 18:15, 18; 2 Sam. 7:14–16). These people knew that the Messiah was to come from Bethlehem (Mic. 5:2). However, they did not know that Jesus had been born there. They thought He was from Galilee (v. 41; Matt. 16:13, 14). They knew the Scripture, but they did not take the time to know the Messiah (5:39).

7:45, 46 The soldiers could have stated that they failed to arrest Christ because of the danger of the crowd but they did not. Instead, they reported that Jesus was not like anyone they had ever heard speak.

7:47, 48 After the soldiers reported that they did not take Jesus, the Pharisees gave a typical arrogant response, Are you also deceived? Surely, they reasoned, if the religious rulers did not believe in Jesus, He could not be the Messiah. In fact, though the poor heard Christ gladly, the religious rulers were among the least likely to believe in Christ. He threatened their positions. They had sold out to power and riches.

7:49 this crowd … is accursed: The Pharisees accused the people of being ignorant of the Law and thus under God's curse (Deut. 28:15). The irony of the situation was that it was the Pharisees, not the crowds, who were under God's wrath because they had rejected His Son (3:36).

7:50, 51 Nicodemus made a plea for justice (3:2; 12:42, 43), but his plea was rejected.

7:52 no prophet has arisen out of Galilee: Actually, the prophets Jonah, Hosea, Nahum, and perhaps Elijah, Elisha, and Amos were from Galilee or close to it.

8:1 The people went to their own houses (7:53). Jesus, who had no place to lay His head (Luke 9:58), spent the night on the Mount of Olives.

8:2 Early in the morning literally means "at dawn." all the people came: Because the Feast of Tabernacles had concluded the day before (7:2, 37), many visitors were still in Jerusalem. Attracted by the appearance of a noted rabbi, a crowd rapidly gathered. He sat: Teachers in ancient Israel sat when they taught. Jesus assumed the position of an authoritative teacher.

8:3 Abruptly bringing the adulterous woman into the midst of the proceedings was a rude disruption. The Pharisees were bent on confounding Jesus (7:45).

8:4, 5 such should be stoned: Stoning was specified in certain cases of adultery (Deut. 22:23, 24), though not all. The law required that both parties be stoned. Where was the male offender? They had already ignored the law by bringing the woman without the man. Why did the authorities intend to punish the woman but not the man? In the Greek text, the pronoun You is emphatic. The religious leaders were trying to trap Jesus into saying something that was contrary to the Law.

8:6 testing Him: If Jesus had said not to stone her, He would have contradicted Jewish law. If He had said to stone her, He would have run counter to Roman law, which did not permit Jews to carry out their own executions (18:31). What Jesus wrote on the ground is a matter of conjecture. Some suggest that He wrote the Ten Commandments recorded in Ex. 20. Had the content of His writing been critical, it would have been recorded. Perhaps the issue was not the content of what He wrote but the act of writing. In the OT, God wrote the law with His finger (Ex. 31:8). Maybe by writing the law Jesus is symbolically saying He is not the teacher of the law; He is the giver of the law. If He were merely a rabbi, He would only assert the Mosaic prescription of judgment. As the giver of the law, He could do for this woman what God had done for Israel at Sinai—He could forgive.

8:7 After pressing the issue, Jesus answered the accusers. In answering, He did not abolish Moses' law; rather, He applied that law to the lives of those who had accused the woman.

8:8 and again He … wrote: God wrote the Ten Commandments twice and here Jesus writes twice (8:6). Furthermore, in Ex. 31:18 and in John 8:6, the finger is only mentioned in the first instance.

8:9, 10 went out: Jesus had entered the temple at dawn (8:2). This scene could have happened in a few minutes. Thus, as this all happened, the sun was rising. As the scene was opened to the light of the sun, their guilty past was exposed by the light of the world (v. 12).

8:11 Sin no more implies that Jesus forgave her. He did not condemn her, but neither did He condone her sin. Some think the Lord will forgive them after they have done the best they can. Jesus forgave this woman after she did the worst she could. Jesus loves us just the way we are (Rom. 5:8), but He loves us too much to leave us that way.

8:12 I am the light of the world: As the sun is the physical light of the world, so Jesus is the spiritual light of the world. As the light of the world, Jesus exposes sin (vv. 1–11) and gives sight (9:1–7).

8:13–59 In vv. 1–11 the Jewish leaders attempted to discredit Christ. It did not work. Now they openly attack Him. In 8:13–59 they hurl a series of charges and questions at Him: (1) You have not proven Your case (vv. 12–18); (2) Where is Your Father? (vv. 19, 20); (3) Will He kill Himself? (vv. 21–24); (4) Who are You? (vv. 25–32); (5) How can You say, You will be made free? (vv. 33–38); (6) they claim Abraham and God as their father (vv. 39–47); (7) You have a demon (vv. 48–51); (8) Are You greater than Abraham? (vv. 52–56); (9) Have You seen Abraham? (vv. 57–59). Notice Christ's claims in this chapter: "I am the light of the world" (v. 12); "I know My origin and destiny" (v. 14);. "I judge no man" (v. 15); "I am from above" (v. 23); "I am not of this world" (v. 23); "I speak what I hear from My Father" (vv. 26, 29, 30); "I am of God" (v. 42); "I know God" (v. 55); "Before Abraham was I am" (v. 58).

8:13 Not true here does not mean "false"; it means "not sufficient." The Pharisees challenged Jesus on legal grounds, because no man on trial in a Jewish court was allowed to testify on his own behalf. Their point was that if Jesus was the only one testifying as to who He claimed to be, it would not be enough to prove His case.

8:14 My witness is true: In 5:31 Jesus argued on the basis of legality and offered other witnesses. Sometimes, however, an individual is the only one who knows the facts about himself. Thus, self-disclosure is the only way to truth (7:29; 13:3).

8:15 According to the flesh could mean either "according to appearance" or "by human standards." The religious leaders formed conclusions based on human standards and an imperfect, external, and superficial examination. Jesus did not judge according to human standards or outward appearances.

8:16–18 I am not alone: Jesus could claim that His pronouncements were true and accurate even though the Law of Moses required two witnesses for a testimony to be valid (Deut. 17:6; 19:15): Both He and the Father through the signs bore testimony to Jesus' words and works. The Pharisees charged Christ with not proving His case (v. 13). Christ's response is: your evaluation is superficial (vv. 14, 15). My proof, He says, is My Father and I (vv. 16–18).

IN COMPARISON

Jesus Takes on the Pharisees

Jesus told the Pharisees . . .	The Pharisees responded . . .
I know where I came from and where I'm going (John 8:14–18)	You were born illegitimately (8:19).
You do not know God (8:19).	No response.
You will die in your sin (8:21, 24).	Who are You? (8:25).
[My] truth will make you free (8:31, 32).	We've never needed freedom (8:33).
You are the slaves of sin (8:34–38).	We are children of Abraham (8:39).
You are murderers and liars, doing the deeds of your father (8:39–41).	We are not illegitimate [like You]; besides, God is our Father (8:41).
Your father is the devil, a murderer and liar (8:42–47).	You're nothing but a Samaritan and have a demon! (8:48).
I have power even over death (8:49–51).	Who do You think You are? (8:52–54)
My Father honors Me [as His Son]; but you are liars (8:54–56).	You're just a young upstart, yet You claim to have seen Abraham! (8:57).
I AM (8:58; compare Gen. 17:1; Ex. 3:14).	They picked up stones to throw at Him (8:59).

8:19 Where is Your Father: Since the Father was part of Jesus' proof of Himself, the Pharisees wanted to know where this Father was. You know neither: Even if the Pharisees could see the Father, they would not receive what Jesus said. Jesus came to reveal the Father (1:18), and they had not received Him.

8:20 His hour: See 2:4.

8:21, 22 kill Himself: Later Jewish belief placed suicide on the same level with murder.

8:23 from beneath: Jesus was not referring to hell, but to this world.

8:24, 25 I am was God's designation of Himself (Ex. 3:14). Jesus was claiming to be God. This assertion was not understood by the religious leaders at this time. Later, Jesus' claim to be the "I AM" (v. 58) prompted the Jewish leaders to seek His life (v. 59).

8:26, 27 Jesus had many things to tell them which would add to their judgment. Those things were true because He received them from the Father. The Jews were blinded by prejudice and unbelief. Jesus had clearly explained on several occasions that the Father had sent Him (5:36, 37), and yet they did not accept it.

8:28 Lift up is a reference to the Crucifixion.

8:29 Imagine a mere mortal saying, I always do those things which please Him. This is a distinct claim to deity.

8:30 The Greek phrase translated believed in occurs almost exclusively in John's Gospel (1:12; 2:11; 3:15, 16, 18, 36; 6:29, 35, 40, 47; 7:38, 39; 9:35, 36; 10:42; 11:25, 26, 45; 12:44, 46). The phrase describes faith in Jesus' message (1 Cor. 1:21), which results in eternal life.

8:31 believed (Gk. pisteuo) Him: Some argue that these believers were not genuine believers. To support their claim, they point to the fact that "believe" in this verse is not followed by "in." Jesus, however, is speaking to those who have genuinely trusted Him for eternal life. Thus, at least in this passage, there is no difference between "believe in Him" (v. 30) and "believe Him" (v. 31). Abide means to remain, to continue. A believer who continues to obey the Word is a disciple, a learner.

8:32 One who abides in the Word of God knows the truth (v. 31; 17:17). Notice that He does not say you shall know the word but that you shall know the truth. The antagonists searched the Scriptures, but they did not find Him who is the truth. Those who believed in Christ in v. 30 had to abide in words of Scripture to experience the truth. Such abiding leads to an experience of truth that sets us free. How a person abides is explained in ch. 15, especially v. 10. "If you keep my commandment you will abide in my love. The word free refers to freedom from the bondage of sin. Obedience to the Lord means fellowship with Him, protection from sin, and experiencing His love.

8:33 They answered Him: Throughout this chapter, Jesus was engaged in an exchange with His antagonists, the Pharisees (v. 13). They are also designated by the term Jews (vv. 22, 48, 52, 57) and the pronoun they (vv. 19, 25, 27, 33, 39, 41, 59). Verses 30–32 are a parenthesis to those in the crowd who believed in Him as they heard what He said to His opponents. In v. 33 the Jewish leaders once again speak. Thus, the objection in this verse is from Christ's antagonists, not the believers of vv. 30–32. We … have never been in bondage: The Pharisees' objection is startling. In their past the Israelites had been in bondage to the Egyptians, the Assyrians, and the Babylonians. At the time they spoke, Israel was under the power of Rome.

8:34 slave of sin: Jesus was speaking of spiritual slavery. Such a slave cannot break away from his bondage. He must have someone else set him free (Rom. 8:34).

8:35, 36 A slave was not a permanent resident of a house. A son remained a family member with family privileges forever. This proverbial saying is applied in v. 36. The application proves that the "Son" here is Jesus Christ (see "the Son of Man" in v. 28). As a family member, the Son can bestow family privileges on others.

8:37 Abraham's descendants may have been physical heirs of Abraham, but they were not his spiritual descendants unless they had faith. But instead of trusting Christ to forgive their sins, the religious leaders wanted to kill Him. They heard the word, but did not believe it. Thus, they could not experience its truth (compare v. 31).

8:38 Note the contrast between My Father and your father. He would eventually tell them who their father was (8:44).

8:39 Abraham is our father: The Pharisees believed that being a descendant of Abraham guaranteed them a place in heaven. The works of Abraham included paying honor to those who spoke in the name of God (Gen. 14 and 18).

8:40 However, these people wanted to kill Jesus. Such works were not characteristic of Abraham; consequently, these people were not Abraham's children.

8:41 We were not born of fornication: From ancient times, this has been interpreted as a sneer, as if to say, "We are not illegitimate children, but You are." Apparently gossip had followed Jesus for many years, alleging that He had been conceived out of wedlock.

8:42, 43 not able: Sin had so blinded their eyes and hardened their ears that they could not receive the words of Jesus. They did not, and they could not.

IN CONTEXT

Jesus and "the Jews"

John is more hostile to "the Jews" than any of the other three Gospels. When the other Gospels talk about the opponents of Jesus, they specify Jewish leaders, such as priests or scholars. But John simply calls them "the Jews' (5:16). In the Gospel of John, "the Jews" is a technical term that means the opponents of Jesus, not all people who are racially Jews.

John reports Jesus going so far as to say the Jews didn't descend from Abraham: "Your father the devil" (8:44). Physically, they came from Abraham. But spiritually, there was no resemblance. Not all Jews, however, opposed Jesus. In fact, Jesus was a Jew. So were all of His twelve disciples. So were the vast majority of His many other followers.

John probably wrote his Gospel in the last quarter of the first century, shortly after Jewish leaders had grown so weary of Jewish Christians worshiping with them that they expelled them from the synagogues. If so, this book was written during the height of an us-them, Christian-Jew antagonism. Many of the Christians were Jews, racially. And many continued to honor Jewish traditions, such as the Sabbath and Jewish holidays. But more and more they were also beginning to think of themselves as distinct. Religiously speaking, they were followers of Jesus. The Jews still worshiping in the synagogue, however, were not.

8:44–47 your father: Jesus knew what was in the hearts of people (2:25), so He could trace their actions to their source. The devil is a murderer; his agents wanted to kill Christ.

8:48 The Jewish leaders charged Jesus with being a Samaritan and having a demon. In the process, they turned back to Jesus both charges that He had brought against them, namely, that they were not legitimate children of Abraham (vv. 39, 40) and that they were of the devil (v. 44). The conversation between Jesus and the Jewish rulers had become very heated. On the Pharisees' part, emotions were running high and reason was being set aside.

8:49 The Jewish leaders were dishonoring Jesus even though their eternal destiny depended on what they did with His message (v. 51).

8:50 One: God the Father will seek Christ's glory and judge those who dishonor Him.

8:51 Jesus graciously held out to the Jewish leaders the promise of forgiveness and eternal life. My word refers to the word concerning who He is. Death here refers not to physical death, but to spiritual death resulting in eternal separation from God.

8:52, 53 greater than … Abraham: Abraham and the prophets kept God's word and died. Jesus was claiming not that He would prevent physical death, but that He could give eternal life. To the Jewish leaders, this was proof that Jesus was demon-possessed.

8:54, 55 a liar like you: Notice the continuing candor of Christ as He charges the religious leaders. Religious hypocrisy brought His wrath! But He extended mercy to the woman taken in adultery.

8:56 My day: Abraham looked for the One who would fulfill all that was promised to him—promises that included blessings for all nations (Gal. 3:8, 9, 29).

8:57 They misunderstood what He said. He said Abraham saw His day (v. 56). They asked, "have you seen Abraham?"

8:58, 59 I AM: Jesus was not just claiming to have lived before Abraham; He was claiming eternal existence. He was claiming to be God Himself (Ex. 3:14). This time the Jewish leaders understood that Jesus was claiming to be God, so they took up stones to stone Him for blasphemy (Lev. 24:16).

In this detail from a Roman sarcophagus (about a.d. 330), Jesus touches the eyes of a blind man with a paste of spittle before sending him to the Pool of Siloam (John 9:1–7).

9:1 The man who was blind from birth was a beggar (v. 8). Beggars waited by the gates of the temple for gifts from worshipers. Therefore, it is likely that this scene took place near the temple shortly after the confrontation recorded in ch. 8.

9:2 who sinned: It was commonly supposed that sickness was a result of sin. It would follow that sins committed by a baby still in the womb or sin committed by parents could result in a baby being born with a disease. Jesus rejected both suggestions (v. 3).

9:3 God allowed the man to be born blind so that Jesus could heal him and thus reveal the works of God, His healing power. Think of the years that this man carried the burden of blindness until the time it could be used for God's glory. May this comfort us in our pain and trial as we wait on the Lord.

9:4 work … while it is day; … night is coming: A reference to the earthly work of Jesus, which was soon to end.

INSIGHT

Jesus Heals the Blind Man

The sixth sign miracle featured in John's Gospel reveals Jesus as the light of the world (John 9:5). He was also unique among the prophets in that none of them had cured blindness (9:30–33).

The healing of the blind man speaks to the problem of human suffering. Then as now, sickness was often assumed to be divine punishment for someone's sin. Like Job's counselors (Job 4:7–9; 8:2–8; 11:4–20), Jesus' disciples asked, "Whose sin caused this manblindness?" (John 9:2). But Jesus replied with a radically new truth: God can use human suffering to reveal His glory (9:3). Jesus immediately showed what He was talking about by healing the man's blindness, thereby revealing Himself to be the Son of God.

9:5 For the second time Jesus claims I am the light of the world (compare note on 8:12).

9:6 Mixing clay with saliva was a common practice used for eye infections. Jesus may have used the clay to provide an opportunity for the man to exercise his faith in washing it off.

9:7 Siloam: Hezekiah had a tunnel cut through solid rock to transport water from Gihon (the "Virgin's Fountain") into the city of Jerusalem, to the Pool of Siloam (2 Kin. 20:20; 2 Chr. 32:30). John emphasizes that the name Siloam means "Sent," because Jesus had just announced that He had been sent by God (v. 4).

9:8–12 The neighbors were reluctant to acknowledge the miracle. See the cured man's understanding of Jesus grow: A Man called Jesus (v. 11), a prophet (v. 17), a Man from God (v. 33), the Son of God (vv. 35–38).

9:13, 14 Because the man had been healed on the Sabbath, the neighbors took him to the Pharisees. To make clay on the Sabbath was illegal.

9:15 His answer to the Pharisees is shorter than his explanation to his friends and neighbors (v. 11). Perhaps his impatience, which breaks out later (v. 27), is beginning to form at this point.

9:16 some of the Pharisees said … Others said: The Pharisees could not believe that Jesus was from God because He had healed on the Sabbath, thereby breaking the oral traditions that had grown up around the Law. But those who fairly evaluated Jesus' miraculous signs came to the conclusion that He was from God.

9:17–21 The blind man concluded that Jesus was a prophet. This does not mean he had decided that Jesus was the Messiah (1:20, 21; 6:14).

9:22, 23 To be put out of the synagogue was to be excommunicated. The Jews had three types of excommunication: one lasting thirty days, during which the person could not come within six feet of anybody else; one for an indefinite time, during which the person was excluded from all fellowship and worship; and one that meant absolute expulsion forever. These judgments were very serious because no one could conduct business with a person who was excommunicated.

9:24 The command to Give God the glory was a solemn charge to declare the whole truth (Josh. 7:19; 1 Sam. 6:5). Attempting to put words in the man's mouth, the Jewish leaders said they knew Jesus was a sinner. In their view, healing on the Sabbath was breaking the Law. So to them, Jesus was a sinner (5:16).

9:25 Not concerned about doctrinal disputes, the man gave his irrefutable testimony: Though I was blind, now I see.

9:26 How: Like a lawyer trying to disprove the testimony of a witness, they tried once more to shake the evidence.

9:27 Losing his patience with people who would not believe the facts before them, the man refused to relate the events again, saying sarcastically, "Do you also want to become His disciple?"

9:28, 29 You are His disciple: The healed man had not claimed to be Jesus' disciple. He only asked the Jewish leaders if they were interested in this case because they wished to become Jesus' disciples (v. 27).

9:30–33 unheard of: There is no healing of a blind man recorded anywhere in the OT.

9:34 Having no effective argument against the man's logic, the Pharisees resorted to abusing him. born in sins: Claiming that his blindness had been an evidence of sin, the very thing Jesus had denied (v. 3).

9:35, 36 Who is He: Faith must have a proper object. Jesus, not faith, saves. Faith is only a channel to the worthy object, the Lord Jesus Christ.

9:37, 38 Note the progression throughout this chapter of the healed man's understanding of the person of Christ. First, he called Jesus "a Man" (v. 11); then "a prophet" (v. 17); and finally he realized that Jesus is the Son of God (vv. 35–38). This is similar to the progression of understanding exhibited by the woman at the well in John 4.

9:39–41 For judgment I have come into this world: Jesus did not come into the world to execute judgment (3:17). Nevertheless, the inevitable result of His coming is judgment, because some refuse to believe (3:18). As the light of the world, Jesus came that the blind might see and those who think they can see will be made blind.

Jesus and Physical Pain

• Most of the healings that Jesus performed were intended to reveal His divine power and authority (John 9:2, 3, 32, 33).

• He healed people from all walks of life, both the untouchables and the well-off and well-connected.

• He did not heal everyone (Matt. 13:58).

• He recognized and dealt with the emotional side of illness—feelings of sadness, anger, disorientation, anxiety, conflict, fear, and aggression.

• He exhibited patience, compassion, and courage when confronting the sick.

• He never used spells, charms, incantations, drugs, incense, or herbs to ward off evil spirits or to heal people of their diseases. His power came directly from His person.

• He drew a parallel between physical sickness and spiritual need (Mark 2:15–17).

• He often linked the healing of disease with faith and the forgiveness of sins.

• He refused to see all sickness as a sign of God's judgment.

• He refused to allow religious traditions and taboos to prevent Him from relieving pain and suffering.

• His power to heal threatened the established authorities.

• His immediate followers experienced the same power over physical maladies, a sign that their message was from God.

• Sometimes illness and death showed God's judgment (Acts 5:1–11; 12:19–23).

• His followers were not spared from physical afflictions. God used their sufferings to form character.

• We can look forward to a time when suffering, sorrow, pain, and disease will come to an end (Rom. 8:18; Rev. 21:4).

10:1 In John 7, Jesus journeyed to Jerusalem for the Feast of Tabernacles (7:2, 10). All of the events between 7:10 and 10:39 take place on that visit to Jerusalem. Thus, chs. 9 and 10 are closely connected, suggesting that Jesus had the Pharisees of ch. 9 in mind when He spoke the opening words of ch. 10. A sheepfold was a walled enclosure or high fence made with stakes, and having one door or gate; often the enclosure was a cave. some other way: The Pharisees had secured their power by illegitimate means. A thief steals in secret; a robber plunders openly with violence.

10:2 In contrast to the thief, the true shepherd would come through the door.

10:3 The doorkeeper was the undershepherd. Calls expresses personal address rather than a general or authoritative invitation. by name: The naming of sheep was an ancient practice (Ps. 147:4; Is. 40:26). This was good practice for the undershepherd who has been given the charge of a portion of God's flock (1 Pet. 5:2).
