10:4 Brings out is a translation of the same Greek word used in 9:34, 35 of the Pharisees casting out the man born blind. The false shepherds put out the sheep to rid themselves of trouble. The true shepherd puts out the sheep in order to feed them. The sheep know the voice of the true shepherd.

10:5 A stranger is anyone whom the sheep do not know, not necessarily a thief and a robber. Sheep would not follow a stranger's voice even if he used the shepherd's call and imitated his tone.

10:6 They are the Pharisees of 9:40.

Jesus' Seven "I Am" Statements

Jesus' "I am" statements would have particular significance to the first-century Jewish listener. God had revealed Himself to Moses with a resounding "I AM" (Ex. 3:14). Now Jesus was using the same words to describe Himself (4:26; 6:20; 13:19).

Title	Reference	Context	Significance
"I am the bread of life."	6:35, 41, 48, 51	After Jesus had fed the five thousand and the people wanted more free food.	As bread sustains physical life, so Christ offers and sustains spiritual life. The nourishment and satisfaction He offers are permanent.
"I am the light of the world."	8:12	During the Feast of Tabernacles. At this feast a huge candelabra was lit in the women's court of the temple. It reminded the Israelites of the pillar of fire, which guided their ancestors during the wilderness wanderings.	To a world stumbling about in the darkness of sin, Christ offers Himself as a constant guide. Light is also symbolic of holiness.
"I am the door of the sheep."	10:7, 9	During a discourse with Israel's religious leaders in which Jesus in essence declared them to be unfit shepherds of the nation.	Shepherds guided their flocks into stone enclosures each night to protect them. These structures had no doors. The shepherd would sit or lie in the opening to prevent predators from attacking. Thus Jesus was describing His care and constant devotion to those who are His.
"I am the good shepherd."	10:11, 14	Same as above.	Unlike hirelings who might run away and leave the flock unprotected, Jesus is committed to caring for and keeping watch over His people.
"I am the resurrection and the life."	11:25	After Lazarus had died.	Jesus is the Lord of all life and possesses the power to raise the dead. Death is not the final word, for all who are in Christ will live forever.
"I am the way, the truth, and the life."	14:6	When the disciples were confused about Jesus' statements about heaven.	Jesus is the one and only way to the Father. He is the source of all truth and the source for all knowledge about God. He offers to spiritually dead people the very life of God.
"I am the true vine."	15:1, 5	In the Upper Room Discourse on the night of His arrest.	The OT contains many references to Israel as God's vine (Ps. 80:8; Is. 5:1–7; Ezek. 15; Hos. 10:1). But because of the nation's unfruitfulness, Jesus came to fulfill God's plan. By attaching ourselves to Christ, we enable His life to flow in and through us. Then we cannot help but bear fruit that will honor the Father. In this metaphor, He is the Gardener.

10:7–18 All of God's undershepherds should read 1 Pet. 5:1–4 along with this passage.

10:7 In vv. 1–5, Jesus is the shepherd; here He is the door. Some shepherds lay down across the entry of the sheepfold at night to sleep. Wild beasts would be discouraged from entering, and sheep would not exit. Thus the shepherd was also the door.

10:8 The thieves and robbers were the Pharisees (v. 1).

10:9 Jesus, the shepherd, gives spiritual life and access to spiritual food.

10:10 more abundantly: The thieves take life; the shepherd gives it. Abundant life includes salvation, nourishment, healing (v. 9), and much more. Life here refers to eternal life, God's life. It speaks not only of endlessness, but of quality of life. With Christ, life on earth can reach much higher quality, and then in heaven it will be complete and perfect.

10:11 Jesus is the good shepherd who gives His life for the sheep (3:16; 1 John 3:16), as opposed to the wicked thief who takes their lives. While life in v. 10 refers to eternal life, life here refers to physical life. Jesus laid down His physical life in order to give us eternal life.

10:12, 13 The hireling is a hired shepherd, a mercenary, who tends the flock for his own interest. When a hired shepherd sees a wolf coming he flees, not caring about the sheep.

10:14, 15 The good shepherd has an intimate knowledge of His sheep, and His own know Him. This interaction between Christ and His followers is something like the fellowship between the Father and His Son.

10:16 The other sheep were not Jews in heathen lands, but Gentiles. The Jewish people had asked if Jesus would go and teach the Gentiles (7:35). Jesus now declared that He had sheep among the despised heathen. One flock anticipates the salvation of the Gentiles and the formation of the church, in which converted Jews and Gentiles would form one spiritual body (1 Cor. 12:13; Gal. 3:28; Eph. 2:16).

10:17, 18 As the good shepherd, Jesus had the power—that is, the authority—not only to voluntarily lay down His life for the sheep (vv. 11, 15, 17), but also to take it up again. No one but God can do that.

10:19–21 After Jesus' analogy of the good shepherd, the editorial comment by John is fitting. In the analogy, Jesus was the good shepherd whose sheep hear His voice, implying that there are sheep who do not hear His voice. John's comment, true to the purpose of his Gospel, indicates that some believe and others do not. This is the same division that occurred in 9:16. People who look at the same evidence and hear the same testimony don't necessarily come to the same conclusions (12:9–11). See the apostle Paul's response to this in 2 Cor. 2:15–17.

10:22 The events of 7:1—10:21 occurred during the Feast of Tabernacles, which was about the middle of October. The Feast of Dedication was for eight days toward the end of December; thus, there was about two months between vv. 21, 22. This feast is also known as the Feast of Lights or Hanukkah. John notes that the events of 10:22 occurred in winter, not as a mark of time but as an explanation of why the Lord chose a sheltered spot to teach (v. 23).

10:23, 24 A pavilion surrounded the temple. Solomon's porch was a long, covered cloister or colonnade in the temple court, probably on the east side.

10:25 Jesus answered: Jesus reminded the Jewish leaders of His words and works. Jesus was the Messiah and said so. He told the woman at the well that He was the Messiah (4:25, 26), as well as the man born blind (9:35–37). His works include all the miracles He performed as signs pointing to His messiahship (20:31). Nevertheless, Christ usually did not claim publicly to be the Messiah. He had a reserve of dignity in not succumbing to their demands. Evidently, His method was to publicly tell everything about Himself that would lead to the conclusion He was the Messiah, but He stated His messiahship directly only to those who accepted it or were ready to accept it. Christ didn't develop robots as followers but people who could think. He followed a pattern of gradual self-disclosure to bring them to the day of discovery.

10:26 as I said to you: At the Feast of Tabernacles, Jesus had told the leaders that they were not among His sheep (vv. 14, 15; 8:42–44, 47).

10:27–29 Jesus described three characteristics of His sheep: (1) They hear His voice (v. 4). He knows them (Rom. 8:29). (2) They follow Him. The following of the sheep is a metaphor for faith. Other metaphors for faith in this Gospel include "drinking" water (4:14), eating bread (6:50, 51), eating flesh and drinking blood (6:54). (3) they shall never perish: In the Greek text there is a double negative with the word perish, "shall never, no never ever perish forever." Their eternal life can never be taken away. The Father's hand is more powerful than that of any enemy.

10:30 I and My Father are one: The Jewish opponents understood that Jesus was claiming to be God (vv. 31, 33).

10:31 again: This was not the first time that the Jewish leaders took up stones against Jesus (8:59). Those who cannot stand before the truth with arguments often find it necessary to silence the truth through forceful means.

10:32, 33 The Jewish antagonizers revealed the reason for their opposition to Jesus—He was claiming a unique unity with the Father, a unity that clearly indicated His own deity. The Jewish leaders considered this to be blasphemy.

10:34 In the OT, judges were called gods. They exercised godlike judicial sovereignty. This is also similar to Moses whom Yahweh said would be like a god to Aaron and Aaron would then be a voice or prophet for him. Psalm 82:6, the verse quoted here, refers to judges who violate the Law. Jesus' argument was that if the divine name had been applied by God to mere men, there could be neither blasphemy nor folly in its application to the incarnate Son of God Himself.

10:35, 36 Broken actually means "to loose, untie." This is a strong statement of the inerrancy of the Holy Scriptures. Notice how Jesus made the veracity of His argument rest on the absolute trustworthiness of Scripture.

10:37, 38 believe the works: Jesus asked the Jewish leaders to at least consider His miracles because these indicated and demonstrated His deity. Note that the heart of the issue is belief. John never deviates from this single means to being born again. The word translated believe is used ninety-nine times in this book.

10:39 escaped: No one could snatch His sheep out of His hand (v. 28), but He escaped out of theirs (see note on 5:13).

10:40–42 beyond the Jordan: This sojourn into Perea is also noted in Matt. 19:1; Mark 10:1.

11:1 Bethany, a small village on the southeast slope of the Mount of Olives, was located about two miles from Jerusalem (v. 18).

11:2 Mary who anointed: The anointing had not yet taken place (12:1–3). When John wrote, the anointing was well known, so he used the event to distinguish this Mary from other women with the same name.

11:3 The message simply states the facts. There is no request or plea, yet it implies a belief that Christ can and will heal him.

11:4 Not unto death means not having death as its final result. may be glorified: By raising Lazarus from the dead, Jesus would demonstrate His deity in an undeniable way.

11:5–8 stayed two more days: God's purpose was to glorify His Son (v. 4) and to cause the disciples to grow (v. 15). Had Jesus immediately rushed to Lazarus's bedside and healed him, Lazarus would not have died and Jesus would not have been able to manifest His glory by raising Lazarus. God's timing to accomplish His purpose is perfect. The disciples were skeptical. In their minds, for Jesus to go back to Judea would mean death.

11:9, 10 Twelve hours are the daylight hours during which work can be done. Jesus is saying that work must be done when there is opportunity. "I still have time, I will not die until my work is finished."

11:11–14 Lazarus sleeps: Death is often referred to as sleep (Gen. 47:30; Matt. 27:52; 1 Thess. 4:13). However, in no way do these passages teach a state of soul-sleep or unconsciousness. Death for the saint is restful sleep from the problems of this world, but a full consciousness of another world (Phil. 1:23).

11:15 Jesus was not glad that Lazarus was dead. He was glad for the opportunity the disciples would soon have to see an amazing miracle. The disciples had already believed (2:11), but each new trial offered an opportunity for their faith to grow (compare 2 Pet. 1:5–8).

11:16 the Twin: In Thomas, the twins of belief and unbelief contended with each other for mastery. He seems to have combined devotion to Jesus with a tendency to see the dark side of things. Jesus said, "Let us go," that the disciples might believe (v. 15). Thomas said, Let us also go, that we may die. While the Lord saw their development in faith, Thomas saw their deaths. Yet in his loyalty, he followed anyway.

11:17–20 Note the contrast in personalities. Martha is a woman of action, whereas Mary is a woman of quiet reflection (Luke 10:38–42).

11:24 Pious Jewish belief included acceptance of the resurrection (compare Dan. 12:13), a belief rejected by the Sadducees (compare Matt. 22:23; Acts 23:8).

11:25–27 Christ is the resurrection for those who believe and are physically dead. He is the life for those who believe and have not yet died. When Jesus asked Martha if she believed, she responded with words similar to the ones John used to describe the purpose of his book (20:31). In order to have eternal life, a person must place his or her faith in Jesus, who is the Christ, the Son of God, who came into the world to bring eternal life to those who believe.

11:28–30 secretly: Martha told Mary privately that Jesus had come so Mary could meet the Lord alone.

11:31 followed her: The secrecy (v. 28) was spoiled. To weep means to lament and bewail. It refers to a loud expression of grief, wailing, and crying, not merely the shedding of tears.

11:32 if You had been here: Mary said the same thing to the Lord as Martha had (v. 21). No doubt they had expressed this thought to one another often in the previous few days.

11:33, 34 Groaned means to be deeply moved. Troubled means to be stirred up, disturbed. Jesus was moved by the mourning of Mary and indignant at the hypocritical lamentations of His enemies.

11:35, 36 Wept simply means “shed tears.” Jesus did not weep aloud in hopeless grief like the others (v. 33). He knew what He was about to do, but His compassion for their pain moved Him to tears. It may also be that He truly felt empathy for the pain of death that Lazarus had endured.

11:37 Some people misinterpreted Jesus’ tears as powerlessness. They complained that He had healed others, but now was impotent.

11:38, 39 a cave: Having a private burial place indicates that the family was wealthy.

11:40–42 Did I not say: Christ’s statement here is apparently a reference to vv. 25, 26 and to the reply of the messengers in v. 4. Perhaps on both occasions more was said than is recorded. The key to receiving is believing.

11:43, 44 cried: This loud cry was either the result of strong emotion or in order that the multitude might hear. Lazarus: In a rhetorical flair, Augustine once said that if Jesus had not designated Lazarus by name, all the graves would have been emptied at His command (5:28). Raising

Lazarus from the dead is the seventh sign of Jesus' messiahship, the greatest miracle of all, giving life back to the dead.

11:45–48 Place refers either to Jerusalem or to the temple. The real concern of the Jewish leaders is seen here. They were not as upset at Jesus' supposed blasphemy as they were about losing their positions of authority.

11:49–52 In the opinion of Caiaphas, Jesus should die rather than plunge the nation into destruction. John adds that by virtue of his office, Caiaphas pronounced a message of God unconsciously: one man should die for the people. Caiaphas was a prophet in spite of himself. John also saw in Caiaphas's words a prophecy that Jesus should die not only for Israel but for the Gentiles as well.

IN DEPTH

Life to Lazarus, Death to Jesus

It was after the raising of Lazarus from the dead that the chief priests, Pharisees, and other religious leaders finally determined to put Jesus to death (John 11:53). Until now, the conflict between them and the upstart rabbi had been little more than a war of words. But the raising of Lazarus was an incredible miracle, witnessed by many. Jesus had raised at least two others, but those events had taken place in faraway Galilee (Mark 5:22–24, 35–43; Luke 7:11–17). By contrast, Lazarus's resurrection occurred in Bethany, a suburb of Jerusalem (John 11:18).

Not surprisingly, the miracle caused many to believe in Jesus (11:45). It provided undeniable proof that Jesus' bold claim must be true: "I am the resurrection and the life … and whoever lives and believes in Me shall never die" (11:25). Indeed, Lazarus became something of a curiosity, drawing numerous onlookers who wanted to see for themselves the man whom Jesus had brought back to life (12:9).

It was this kind of publicity that the leaders especially feared. Disputes over religious matters were one thing; a rapidly growing movement led by a popular Messiah-figure was something else. It was bound to have political repercussions, as the Romans were ever on the lookout for signs of rebellion (see "Jerusalem Trampled by Gentiles" at Luke 21:20).

It was Caiaphas the high priest (Matt. 26:3) who saw the usefulness of that fact. Why sacrifice the entire nation for the sake of Jesus, when Jesus could be sacrificed for the sake of the nation (John 11:49–52)? Thus the religious leaders began to scheme how they might bring Jesus before the Romans and, hopefully, have Him put away on a charge of rebellion. And even though Lazarus had just been brought back from the dead, they plotted to do away with him as well, as he was living evidence of Jesus' power (12:10, 11). The desire to kill a man raised from the dead, as well as the One who raised him, reveals the blindness of an unbelieving heart.

The plan succeeded brilliantly except for one detail that Caiaphas and his fellow leaders either overlooked or refused to believe: in arranging His death, they handed Him an opportunity to prove once and for all that He had spoken the truth when He said, am the resurrection and the life."

11:53 Humanly speaking, the resurrection of Lazarus was a major factor that led to the plot by the Jewish religious leaders to kill Christ. At this point the council decided informally, if not formally, to put Jesus to death. John marks the growth of the hostility step by step (5:16; 7:1, 32, 45; 8:59; 9:22; 10:39). It is ironic that these men believed they could put to death permanently One who could raise the dead.

11:54 no longer walked openly: Jesus withdrew from public life for a while. He met privately with His disciples. Wilderness usually refers to the desert of Judea, which extended to Jericho.

11:55–57 The Jews would purify themselves in preparation for the Passover by washing their bodies and their clothing so that they could enter the temple for worship. Some were looking for Jesus out of curiosity or loyalty (v. 56), but the chief priests (v. 57) sought to arrest Him.

12:1 six days before the Passover: If the crucifixion took place on a Friday, this dinner occurred during the evening of the previous Saturday. Verse 12 seems to support this conclusion, because the Jerusalem entry took place on Sunday.

12:2 They probably refers to the people of the village. The inhabitants of Bethany wished to express their thanks to Jesus, who by a glorious miracle had honored their obscure village. Lazarus was the guest of honor.

12:3–6 very costly oil: Judas Iscariot said that this oil cost three hundred denarii (v. 5). One denarius was a laborer's wage for one day (Matt. 20:2). Thus, the oil cost approximately a year's wages. anointed the feet: Mary also anointed Jesus' head (Matt. 26:7; Mark 14:3). The custom of that time was to anoint the heads of guests. Anointing Jesus' head was an act of honor; anointing His feet was a display of devotion.

12:7 My burial: Anointing was the first stage of embalming (19:39). Whether Mary knew it or not, she was anticipating Jesus' death, which would come within the week.

12:8 the poor you have with you always: We will never lack an opportunity to care for the poor (Deut. 15:11).

12:9–11 plotted to put Lazarus to death also: The chief priests were mostly Sadducees. They had an additional reason to kill Lazarus. He was a living refutation of their doctrine that there was no resurrection (11:57; Acts 23:8). Yet this was not a meeting of the Jewish council, nor was it a formal sentence of death. on account of him: The ultimate motivation for wanting to kill Lazarus was that because of him many were believing in Jesus. Went away implies that these individuals were withdrawing from the Jewish leaders.

12:12–15 took branches of palm trees: This was the Sunday before Christ arose, today called Palm Sunday. cried out … King of Israel: Until this point, Jesus had discouraged expressions of support from the people (6:15; 7:1–8). Here He allowed public enthusiasm. He entered Jerusalem on the back of a young donkey. This act fulfilled prophecy (Zech. 9:9) and as such was a symbolic proclamation that Jesus is the Messiah.

12:16 did not understand: The disciples did not catch the prophetic significance of Jesus' act. when Jesus was glorified: After Christ's death, resurrection, and ascension, the disciples finally understood that the OT prophecies concerning the Messiah had been fulfilled in Jesus.

12:17–19 These verses explain the series of events that led to the condemnation and crucifixion of Jesus.

12:20 The fact that these Greeks came to Jerusalem to worship at the feast indicates that they were Jewish proselytes. By recording this incident, perhaps John was hinting that the salvation rejected by many of the Jews was already passing to the Gentiles.

12:21, 22 Perhaps the Greeks came to Philip because he had a Greek name.

12:23 The hour has come: Prior to this, Jesus had stated that His hour had not yet come (2:4; 7:6, 30; 8:20). Now the time had come for Christ to die and be raised from the dead (13:1; 16:32; 17:1).

12:24 unless a grain … dies: When a seed dies, it produces fruit. Life comes by death. This principle is true not only in nature, but it is also true spiritually. Jesus was speaking first and foremost of Himself. He is the grain of wheat. His death would produce much fruit and would result in many living for God.

12:25, 26 The phrase loves his life describes those who serve only themselves. In a very short time, Jesus was going to give the disciples an opportunity to identify this problem in their lives (13:1–7). Hates his life involves serving Christ. Each believer must establish his or her priorities. We cannot give ourselves fully to this life and yet be committed to the life to come. Follow Me in this context means to follow Jesus' example of self-sacrifice (13:15). Jesus set the example of "hating" His life in this world so that He could accomplish eternal purposes (Phil. 2:5–8).

12:27 My soul is troubled: Jesus' agony over His impending death was not confined to Gethsemane, where He prayed, "O My Father, if it is possible, let this cup pass from Me" (Matt. 26:39). He felt the agony and expressed it almost a week before Gethsemane.

12:28, 29 Christ's ultimate desire is to glorify His Father's name. The Father answers from heaven that His Name has been glorified (through the obedient ministry of His Son), and it will be glorified again (through the death, burial, and resurrection of the Son).

12:30–33 The voice was also for the people so that they would recognize Christ as God. Christ is referring to His judgment of sin through His death, and His defeat of Satan (1 Cor. 15:54–57).

12:34 Christ remains forever: The people understood that lifted up meant removal from the earth by death. They argued that Scripture teaches that the Messiah would abide forever (Ps. 110:4; Is. 9:7; Ezek. 37:25). To them, the Messiah would not have to die. They did not understand that He would be raised.

12:35, 36 Instead of answering the people's questions (v. 34), Jesus gave them a warning. Walk while you have the light: Jesus is the light (1:4; 8:12; 9:5). He wanted the people to believe and abide in Him (v. 46).

12:37 they did not believe: Their unbelief is startling. However Jesus' predicted suffering and death did not fit the people's idea of the Messiah.

12:38 the word of Isaiah … might be fulfilled: John quotes Is. 53:1 to prove that their unbelief is predictable.

12:39, 40 The consequence of repeated rejection is loss of the capacity to believe. Isaiah taught that some could not believe because God hardened their hearts (Is. 6:10) after they repeatedly rejected the truth.

12:41 John uses the words His glory to speak of the manifestation of God Himself. John quotes Is. 6:9 (v. 40) as a prophecy of the people's unbelief and their rejection of Christ. In that verse, Isaiah was talking about God Himself. Therefore in this passage John is teaching that Jesus is God.

12:42, 43 Rulers refers to members of the council. Because the rulers did not confess Him, some claim that their faith was not genuine. The text, however, says that they believed in Him, a construction in Greek that typically indicates saving faith (8:30). Moreover, the word nevertheless marks a stark contrast between these believers and the unbelief spoken of in vv. 37–41. These men were genuine believers. Their problem was that they feared the opinions of their fellow leaders. Such believers will be ashamed at Christ's return (1 John 2:28).

12:44, 45 not in Me but in Him: Jesus insisted that anyone who believed in Him was at the same time exercising belief in God the Father. Jesus explained that He was the personal manifestation of God (1:18; Col. 1:15; Heb. 1:3).

12:46, 47 I do not judge may be rephrased as "I do not execute judgment." Christ will judge, but at His first coming He did not come to judge but to save (3:17).

12:48–50 I … speak: Jesus spoke what the Father told Him. To reject His Word is to reject God's Word.

13:1–6 An important principle of knowing and doing is demonstrated here. Notice that vv. 1 and 3 relate what Jesus knew and vv. 4 and 5 tell what he did. Our actions are the blossom of our deepest thoughts. Jesus did what He did because He knew what He knew. As a person thinks in his heart, so is he (Prov. 23:7).

13:1 To the end means either "to the last" or "utterly and completely." What follows in vv. 1–11 demonstrates Jesus' complete love. Jesus loved His disciples, even though He knew that one would betray Him, another would deny Him, and all would desert Him for a time.

13:2 Being ended may also be translated "having begun." It was customary for slaves to wash guests' feet as the guests arrived, before they sat down to eat (vv. 4, 5). In any case, it appears that the supper had not ended, but was in progress. The statement of Jesus' complete love in v. 1 is contrasted with the fact that Judas would soon betray Him.

13:3 knowing (Gk. oida): Christ loved them (v. 1), knowing the worst about them (v. 2) and the best about Himself (v. 3).

13:4, 5 His garments: Jesus laid aside His outer garment, which would have impeded His movements. towel: By putting on an apron, Christ looked like the slave to whom the task of washing the feet of guests was assigned. Though the disciples realized what Jesus was doing, none of them offered himself for the task. Servanthood was not on their minds. Jesus loved them knowing all about them, including the worst one of them, Judas. All of the disciples knew what needed to be done. All of them could have done it but none of them did. Luke 22:24 gives us a clue to the reason. They were arguing about who was going to be greatest. That kind of thinking will not lead to servant actions (Phil. 2:3, 4). Our actions are the results of our deepest thoughts. Why would Jesus do what He did, that is, take the role of a servant? Because He knew what He knew and thought deeply (vv. 1, 3). It didn't intimidate Jesus to take the tempory role of a servant because He knew where He came from and He knew where He was going to and He knew what He was commissioned to do. Thus, Paul urges us, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus."

13:5 began: John does not say with whom the Lord started, but from early times some have conjectured that it was Judas. Still none, including John, jumped up to take the menial task from His hands. The subject of this story is love. The ultimate in love is service.

13:6, 7 Impulsive Peter strongly objected to this act of humility. Christ responded to Peter's question by implying that there is a deeper meaning in washing feet. One day Peter would understand that this was a graphic illustration of Christ's humility.

13:8 no part with Me: The washing was a symbol of spiritual cleansing (vv. 10, 11). If Peter did not participate in the cleansing, he would not enjoy fellowship with Christ (1 John 1:9).

13:9, 10 but also my hands and my head: Given Jesus' dramatic statement, Peter had no choice but to submit. Only this time he went too far in the other direction. At first he wanted to tell the Lord what to do (v. 8). Now he wanted to dictate the manner in which Jesus did it. But Jesus told him he did not need a bath; he only needed Jesus to wash his feet that were dusty from the road. This is symbolic. A believer has already been "cleansed." He or she only needs the cleansing of daily sins that comes through confession (1 John 1:9). Thus Jesus' washing of the disciples' feet not only is a model of service, but it represents the ultimate in service—forgiveness of sins.

13:11 You are not all clean: This is the second indication of the presence of a traitor among the apostles (6:70). Apparently this comment did not attract much attention.

13:12, 13 Teacher and Lord were the ordinary titles of respect given to a rabbi.

13:14–17 you also ought to wash (Gk. nipto) one another's feet: Some have argued that the Lord instituted a foot-washing ordinance. Washing feet, however, was not a Jewish ordinance so they would not have understood that He was directing an ordinance, only an attitude. Christ did not tell them to do what He had done but as, or similar to, what He had done. What they needed was not an ordinance but simply one who was willing to do the thing that everyone knew needed to be done and everyone could have done but nobody did because they were too interested in being served rather than serving. Jesus is not instituting an ordinance but using His practical action to give an example of love to His disciples (13:1). Christ is not suggesting that a ritual of foot washing be established but that His humble example of love in self-sacrificing service and forgiveness be followed. The person who practices these things will be blessed.

13:18 Jesus quoted Ps. 41:9 to explain the action of Judas. Lifting up his heel was a gesture of insult, or a preparation to kick. The blow had not yet been given. This was the attitude of Judas at that moment. He was eating with the disciples, but he was ready to strike.

13:19, 20 I send: The betrayal of Judas should not hinder their faith (v. 19) or their service (v. 20). Not all had received Him, and not everyone would receive them (v. 16).

13:21 troubled: Faced with bereavement (11:33), His own death (12:27), and betrayal, Jesus was deeply stirred.

13:22 perplexed: They had no idea that Judas was the one who would betray Christ. Matthew and Mark record that each of them began to ask "Is it I?" (Matt. 26:22; Mark 14:19).

13:23 leaning on Jesus' bosom: At this time people did not generally sit at a table to eat. They reclined on the left side of a low platform, resting on the left elbow and eating with the right hand, their feet extended outward. Reclining in such a way, a man's head was near the bosom of the person on his left. The disciple whom Jesus loved is never named in Scripture, but the tradition of the early church designates him as John, the author of this Gospel.

13:24, 25 Peter … motioned to him to ask: Evidently Peter was not sitting next to Jesus. He was nearer to John, so he beckoned John to ask Jesus who was going to betray Him.

13:26, 27 First, the devil put ideas in the head of Judas (v. 2); here Satan entered Judas. Note that Judas's actions were the result of the deepest thoughts of his heart.

13:28, 29 The whole company of disciples did not understand this. Christ had addressed His statement about the bread to John and consequently, he was the only one who understood its implications.

13:30 it was night: Not only did Judas go out into the darkness of the night, he had also entered into spiritual darkness, separated from Jesus, the Light of the World (8:12; 9:5).

13:31, 32 the Son of Man is glorified: Jesus would be revealed as the divine Son of God and Savior of the world by His death and resurrection, and the gift of the Holy Spirit. God would be glorified in Him in that God's love, truth, and righteousness would be revealed in what Jesus was doing.

13:33 The time had come for Jesus to announce His departure to His disciples. Little children is an expression of tender affection used nowhere else in the Gospels. John did not forget the expression; he used it repeatedly in 1 John.

13:34 The command to love was new because Jesus gave it a new standard. Moses said, “Love your neighbor as yourself” (Lev. 19:18). Jesus said the new standard was as I have loved you. Jesus gave His disciples the example of love that they were to follow (vv. 1–17).

13:35 By this: Unbelievers recognize Jesus’ disciples not by their doctrinal distinctives, nor by dramatic miracles, nor even by their love for the lost. They recognize His disciples by their deeds of love for one another. (Compare a figurative literal correspondence to this plain literal meaning in 15:8). The early church caught hold of this fantastic principle of incendiary love (Acts 4:32–37, 1 Thess. 1:3). Francis Schaeffer called this “The Mark of a Christian.” It is the greatest apologetic for Christ.

13:36 Lord, where are You going: This question, which Jesus had already addressed twice before, indicates that Peter completely missed the point of what Jesus said in vv. 34, 35. It leads to the next childish question of which we are all guilty too often—Why?

13:37 I will lay down my life: Peter was ready to die for Jesus. Unfortunately, he was not ready, at this point, to live for Him. He was ready to attack single-handed a cohort of soldiers with his sword (18:10), but he was not willing to wash the feet of his brothers as Jesus had just done (13:4). Actually, Peter had things backwards. Christ was about to lay down His life for Peter, instead of Peter laying down his life for Christ. In spite of all this, Christ did not give up on Peter (Luke 22:31, 32). Later Peter would die for Christ (21:18, 19). Church tradition states that Peter was crucified upside down, at his request, for he felt himself unworthy to be crucified like his Lord.

13:38 till you have denied Me three times: At these words of Jesus, Peter was stunned and said nothing. He is not mentioned again until 18:10. But Luke helps us to know that Christ had prepared him for this shocking news (Luke 22:31, 32). Surely Jesus was the master counselor, as Is. 42:3 and Matt. 12:20 prophesied of Him.

14:1 After announcing Judas's betrayal (13:21), His own imminent departure (13:33), and Peter's denial (13:38), Jesus told His disciples not to be troubled, but to trust Him. believe … believe: The simple but profound solution to all of our problems is believing. We do what we do because we believe what we believe. Our actions are nothing more than the product of our deepest convictions. The key is what we believe—the object of our faith. Right thinking is basic to right action and right thinking begins by thinking right about God. Thus, the entire fourteenth chapter is input from Christ, the master counselor, about what God is like. He does not say anything more about Peter's forthcoming denial. Rather, He gives him truth to believe about God the Father (twenty-three references in ch. 14), God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit. This lifting is what is going to keep Peter trusting as he goes through Satan's sifting process (Luke 22:31, 32).

14:2 Mansions refers to dwelling places. Everybody has a longing for a permanent, secure place. Such places have already been set aside for all of God's children. Jesus has gone ahead to prepare our place. Peter never got over the wonder of his unfading, reserved, heavenly home (1 Pet. 1:3, 4). The Lord is telling them that though they are disturbed now, they will have rest and refreshment later.

14:3, 4 I will come again and receive you: Peter may have failed Jesus (13:38), but Christ will not fail to return for Peter and for everyone else who has believed in Him (1 Thess. 4:16, 17). Surely this is the essence of unconditional love. He loves us just the way we are, but He loves us too much to leave us the way we are. These are the kind of truths Christ was planting indelibly in their hearts. They will cause them to stand (Phil. 1:6).

14:5 where … how: Christ had just said He was going to His Father's house to prepare a place for them (v. 2) and they knew the way there (v. 4). Yet Thomas asks where He was going and how to get there! (see note on 14:8).

14:6 Through His death and resurrection, Jesus is the way to the Father. He is also the truth and the life. As truth, He is the revelation of God. As life, He is the communication of God to us.

14:7, 8 known My Father also: Jesus came to reveal the Father (1:18). To know Jesus is to know the Father (1 John 2:23). show us the Father: Jesus had just said that to see Him is to see the Father. Yet Philip asked to see the Father. Like Thomas, Philip seems to have been slow to comprehend (v. 5).

14:9 The Lord rebuked Philip because he should have known the answer to the question he asked. He who has seen Me has seen the Father: The Lord patiently explained again that He was revealing God the Father to them (v. 7). It is impossible to escape the claim Jesus was making. Clearly, He was claiming to be God.

14:10, 11 believe … believe: The Lord extends an appeal to believe because of His words (v. 10) and His works (v. 11). His words demonstrate who He is. He said I am "the water of life" (7:37), "the bread of life" (6:48), "the light of the world" (8:12; 9:5), and "the good shepherd who gives life" (10:11). He claimed to be equal with God (5:17, 18) and be sent from God (7:28, 29). He said He was the "I Am" (8:24, 28, 58) and that He and the Father were one (10:30). Furthermore, He stated the Father was in Him and He was in the Father (10:38). His works also demonstrate who He is. He changed water into wine (2:1–11). He healed people (4:43–54, 5:1–9), He miraculously produced bread and fishes (6:1–12), He calmed the sea (6:15–21), and He raised the dead (11:38–44). All along Christ has been informing and enriching their needs with truths to "believe" about God.

14:12 Jesus had accomplished the greatest works possible, including raising the dead. How could He say that believers would do greater works? The answer is seen in the extent of what the apostles did. Jesus' work on earth was confined to Palestine; the apostles would preach everywhere and see the conversion of thousands. Peter's message at Pentecost brought more followers to Jesus than did Jesus' entire earthly ministry. The disciples were able to do this work because Christ would go to the Father and send the Holy Spirit to empower them.

14:13, 14 Note the relationship of works to prayer (Acts 1:14; 2:42; 3:1; 4:31). Effective prayer is in My name. This is prayer in agreement with the desires of Christ. The result of prayer is the glorification of the Father, not self-glorification.

14:15 Love is not sentimental emotionalism; it is obedience to the commandments of God.

14:16 All three members of the Trinity are mentioned here. Jesus prayed to the Father who would give the Holy Spirit.

14:16, 17 Verses 16 and 17 contain three different prepositions that describe the relationship of the Holy Spirit to the believer. He is said to be with (Gk. meta) them for fellowship (v. 16), to abide beside them (Gk.

para), to defend them (v. 17), and to be in them (Gk. en) as a source of power (v. 17; Acts 2:1–4).

INSIGHT

A Helper

Jesus calls the Holy Spirit the Helper (John 14:16, 17). The Greek word, parakletos, means "one called alongside to help." In giving us the Holy Spirit, Jesus shows that leadership is not so much the ability to walk ahead of someone as the willingness to walk beside someone. Followers need support as well as direction, a hand that helps as well as a finger that points.

14:17 The Holy Spirit is called the Spirit of truth (15:26; 16:13; 1 John 4:6) because He is truth and guides us into all truth (1 Cor. 2:13; 2 Pet. 1:21). Neither sees Him nor knows Him does not mean merely that the world is not able to visually identify the Holy Spirit because He is spirit. Something more is meant: The Spirit of God is active in the world, but His acts go unnoticed by the world (1 Cor. 2:14).

14:18 orphans: Earlier, Jesus called the disciples "little children" (13:33). Here He told them He would not leave them fatherless; He would come to them. There are three suggested interpretations as to when that statement would be fulfilled: (1) after the Resurrection, (2) at Pentecost, in the person of the Holy Spirit, and (3) at the Second Coming.

14:19 you will see Me: Jesus would come to the disciples (v. 18), but not with the same kind of presence they experienced at that moment. The world saw Jesus only in the flesh; the disciples would see Him in a spiritual sense.

14:20, 21 These two verses are the conclusion of Jesus' answer to Philip's request, "show us the Father" (v. 8). As the believer lovingly obeys Christ's commandments, he or she will experience a more intimate knowledge of Him.

14:22 The disciples had expected the Messiah to come publicly and deliver Israel from Rome and the corrupt priesthood of the temple. Jesus had said that the disciples would see Him, but the world would not (v. 19). Judas (not Iscariot) wanted to know how that could be.

14:23 loves Me … keep My word: In response to Judas's question (v. 22), Jesus explained that His manifestation to the disciples would be in response to their love and obedience. make Our home with him: If a believer loves and obeys the Lord, he or she will experience fellowship with God.

14:24 not love … not keep: If a person does not love Jesus, he or she will not obey Him. Disobedience is a serious matter, for Jesus' words are the words of God.

14:25, 26 Jesus told His disciples these things while He was with them, but when the Holy Spirit came, He would remind the disciples of all things that Jesus had said, and would teach … all things (1 Cor. 2:13). This promise was primarily fulfilled through the lives of the apostles in the writing of the NT. Matthew and John wrote down Jesus' words. Peter wrote about the gospel in his two letters and may have dictated some of his memories of Jesus to Mark.

14:27 Peace: The customary good-bye among the Jews was to say shalom, meaning "peace." The Lord was about to depart, so He added to this farewell by saying, My peace. The word My is emphatic. This is no conventional wish; this is Jesus' personal, special grant of peace. The peace that Christ gives banishes fear and dread from the heart, for Jesus is in control of all circumstances.

14:28 My Father is greater than I: This does not mean that Jesus is less than deity. Greater indicates a difference in rank. As the humble, submissive Son, Jesus submitted Himself to the authority of His Father (1 Cor. 11:3; 15:28).

14:29–31 He has nothing in Me indicates Jesus' sinlessness. Jesus' yielding to what was about to happen did not mean that Satan had any power over Him. Jesus would soon voluntarily yield to the death of the Cross, in loving obedience to the Father (v. 31).

15:1 vine: This word can describe a single grapevine or an entire vineyard. Either way, the image evokes the picture of corporate dependence. Israel was the vine of God's planting, but it failed to bear the proper fruit (Is. 5:1–7; Jer. 2:19–21). Jesus, with His believers incorporated in Him, is the true vine—the true fulfillment and actualization of the vine. As the entire race of Israel sprang from the patriarch Israel, the new generation of God's people is here viewed as originating from Christ, organically united to Him, as branches emanating from the vine. This is a fulfillment of Ps. 80, in which "the son of man" (Ps. 80:17) is said to be the vine planted by God.

15:2, 3 Every branch is said to be in Christ. Paul uses the phrase "in Christ" to speak of a Christian's legal and family position as a result of God's grace. The emphasis of in Me in this passage, however, is on deep, abiding fellowship. Jesus' purpose was to move His disciples from servants to friends (vv. 13–15). This would involve a process of discipline in regard to His commandments. not bear fruit: No plant produces fruit instantaneously; fruit is the result of a process. Such is also the case with believers. Those who are not bearing fruit the vinedresser takes away (Gk. airo) which has as its basic meaning "to lift up." When the winter weather was over and the time for productivity was approaching, the vinedresser would move through the vineyard lifting the branches from the ground, where they had been for the winter, and propping them up with stakes where they would receive the warmth of the sun. The heat promotes the ripening of the fruit. Furthermore, by getting the branches off the ground, it keeps them from sinking many little roots directly from the branch into the surface of the soil where the moisture is not sufficient to produce anything but hard, sour grapes. If the branch is lifted out of the dirt, however, it is forced to get its moisture from the deep roots of the vine and produces luscious fruit. Prunes (Gk. kathairo) means "cleanses." Once the fruit is on the vine, the vinedresser cleanses the fruit of bugs and diseases. The spiritual counterpart is cleansing which is done through the Word (v. 3). The primary reference here is the words that He has just been lifting them with in the Upper Room, especially ch. 14. It is that word which is going to transform the disciples from shrinking, cowardly disciples to stalwart soldiers for Christ. But it will be a process over time. The noun form of this word is rendered "clean"in v. 3. Thus, the vinedresser lifts up fruitless branches and cleanses fruitful ones so they can be more fruitful. The point of the figure is not union but communion and consequent fruit.

15:4 For the branch to produce more fruit, it must abide, which means to dwell, to stay, to settle in, to sink deeper. The way to abide in Christ is to obey (15:10; 1 John 3:24). The believer who lovingly obeys the Word of God produces much fruit.

15:5 can do nothing: Apart from Christ, a believer cannot accomplish anything of permanent spiritual value.

15:6 Not abiding in Christ has serious consequences: (1) The person is cast out as a branch, indicating the loss of fellowship; (2) the person is withered, indicating a loss of vitality; (3) the person is burned, indicating a loss of reward. The fire here is figurative, symbolizing either fiery trials (1 Pet. 1:7; 4:12) or the fire at the judgment seat of Christ (1 Cor. 3:11–15). Failure to abide produces spiritual disaster. they gather them: Note the movement from "He" (the Father who is the vinedresser, v. 2) to "you" (the believer who does or does not abide, v. 4) to "they" (unbelievers looking for signs of life, 13:35).

15:7 abide in Me, and My words: There are five results of abiding in Christ: answered prayer (v. 7), fruit (v. 8), a fulfilled purpose, my Father is glorified (v. 8), experiencing love (vv. 9, 10), fullness of joy (v. 11) and effective evangelism (13:35; 15:8). Abiding in Christ involves personal communion with Him. Abiding in His Word includes obedience. Getting to know the Savior makes believing in Him an obvious response which leads to loving obedience. Notice how the apostle Paul presented this process (Phil. 3:10).

15:8 By this: Notice the striking parallel between this verse and 13:35. The love of 13:35 is pictured as fruit here. The text has come full circle in showing how strategic it is for disciples to love each other, as Christ's method of evangelizing the lost. "They shall know" becomes so you will be Christ's disciples. Where there is good fruit, there are also seeds for propagation.

15:9 As the Father loved Me, I also have loved you: The love of God the Father for God the Son is the measure of the love of the Son for believers.

15:10 abide in My love: Christ loves believers unconditionally (v. 9). But as believers obey Christ's Word and abide in His love, they come to experience and understand His love for them more and more (Eph. 3:14–19).

15:11 That your joy may be full is an expression peculiar to John (3:29; 16:24; 17:13; 1 John 1:4; 2 John 12). It describes a believer's experience of Christ's love: complete joy.

15:12 love one another: To abide, a believer must obey (v. 10). To obey, a believer must love other believers (13:34, 35).

15:13 lay down one's life: In rashness and with confidence in the flesh, Peter had offered to lay down his life for Jesus. In actuality, he was not ready to die for Jesus; he was not even ready to live for Him (18:17, 18, 25–27). The supreme example of love is Jesus' humility in sacrificial service (13:15).

15:14 if you do: Jesus is our model for love (v. 13). Intimacy with Him is the motive for loving as He loves. If believers obey His command to love, they enjoy the intimacy of His friendship. Note that friendship, unlike sonship, is not a once-for-all gift, but develops as the result of obeying Jesus' command to love.

15:15 No longer … servants: Until this point, Jesus had called His disciples servants (12:26; 13:13–16). A servant does what he is told and sees what his master does, but does not necessarily know the meaning or purpose of it. friends: A friend knows what is happening because friends develop deep fellowship by communicating with one another.

15:16 I chose you: Jesus had initiated the relationship with His disciples (1 John 4:10). It started with selection, moved to servanthood, and grew to friendship. that you should go and bear fruit: Having chosen the disciples, Jesus commissioned them to bring forth permanent fruit through prayer.

15:17 Again Christ returns to the theme of love. Loving one another is a command, not an option.

15:18–21 hated Me: As Jesus spoke these words, the Pharisees were planning to kill Him (11:45–57). The world hated Him, so it should not be surprising that the world hates His followers.

15:22–25 no sin … no excuse: The world's hatred of Jesus was a sin against God, for He revealed the Father Himself to them. My Father also: Since Christ and the Father are one, those who hate Christ hate the Father. The testimony of Jesus' words (v. 22) and His works (v. 24) made those who rejected Him accountable for their sin. In v. 25 Jesus quotes Ps. 69:4 to show how evil and irrational it is to reject the love and goodness of Christ.

15:26, 27 The third time in Jesus' last hours with the disciples that He spoke of the coming of the Holy Spirit (14:16, 26). Helper is sometimes translated "Advocate" or "Counselor." The Father and Son are equally involved in the coming of the Spirit. Both the Spirit and Spirit-empowered disciples will testify about Jesus.

16:1 made to stumble: Rejection by the world should confirm, not weaken, our faith. Both predictions of v. 2 were fulfilled in the lives of the apostles. He will testify … you also will bear witness: As the disciples spoke, the Holy Spirit would bring inner conviction to unbelievers concerning Christ. This in turn would make the disciples witnesses for Jesus.

16:2 They will put you out of the synagogues … kills you: The persecution that the disciples would face included excommunication and even execution. Excommunication had economic as well as religious implications, because much of the life of an ancient Jew revolved around the synagogue. Offers expresses the idea of offering a sacrifice. The murderers of believers would imagine that they were offering a sacrifice to God.

16:3 have not known (Gk. ginosko) the Father or Me: The ultimate issue is the fact that the persecutors do not know Christ or the Father (1 Cor. 2:8).

16:4 at the beginning: Jesus had been preparing His disciples to assimilate the truth (Prov. 22:6). In His wisdom, the Lord never gives us more than we can handle. The process of learning is as important as the product.

16:5 one of you asks Me, "Where are You going?": Peter had asked this very question (13:36) and Thomas had suggested it (14:5). However, things were different now. The disciples had learned about denials, suffering, and death. To go with Jesus involved the most serious consequences.

16:6 sorrow (Gk. lupe) has filled your hearts: The prospects of separation and suffering shut out all thoughts of consolation and strength.

16:7 The disciples must have thought, "How can it be to our advantage to be alone? The Romans hate us because they see us as disturbers of the peace. The Jewish leaders hate us because they see us as blasphemers. You alone love us, and You are leaving us." So Jesus explained the benefits of His departure. When Jesus left, the believers would have (1) the provision of the Holy Spirit (vv. 7–15); (2) the potential of full joy (vv. 16–24); (3) the possibility of fuller knowledge (vv. 25–28); (4) the privilege of peace (vv. 29–33). I will send Him: Jesus explained that the Holy Spirit will convict the world (vv. 7–11) and communicate truth to the apostles (vv. 12–15). to you: The Holy Spirit would not be given to the world, but to believers. The coming of the Spirit would be more profitable to believers than even the physical presence of Christ, since the Spirit could dwell in all believers at the same time.

16:8 Convict means "convince" or "reprove." The Holy Spirit would demonstrate the truth of Christ beyond the fear of contradiction. The Holy Spirit convicts unbelievers through believers who witness about Christ (15:26, 27). Believers are the mouthpiece for God's voice. The content of the witness that the Spirit reinforces includes truth about sin, righteousness, and judgment.

16:9 of sin: Note the singular sin, not sins. Our witness should not focus on sins (adultery, gluttony, pride, and other sins), but on the full payment that Christ has made for all sin. Reception of the full pardon is the only cure for the disease of sin.

16:10 of righteousness: After Christ's departure the Holy Spirit would convict the world of the nature of righteousness and the need for righteousness. Jesus' work on the Cross was completely righteous. This is demonstrated by the Father's emptying of the tomb, signifying His satisfaction with the righteous payment and His acceptance of Christ into His presence.

16:11 of judgment: Satan, the ruler of this world, rules in the hearts of unregenerate people and blinds their minds (1 Cor. 2:6–8). Satan was judged at the Cross, and the Holy Spirit would convince people of the judgment to come. Satan has been judged, so all who side with him will be judged with him. There is no room for neutrality. A person is either a child of God or a child of the devil.

16:12 You refers to the apostles. Technically, what the Lord says about the ministry of the Holy Spirit in vv. 12–15 applies primarily to the apostles. The Holy Spirit's ministry to them was threefold: (1) He would guide them into all truth (v. 13); (2) He would tell them of the future (v. 13); (3) He would help them glorify Christ (vv. 14, 15). Jesus' words were fulfilled in the apostles' preaching and writings. The Holy Spirit guided the apostles by revealing to them not only the truths embodied in Jesus' life and death, but also the glorious future of all believers. The apostles, in turn, wrote it down in the NT, which glorifies—that is, reveals—Jesus Christ. The word bear means "to carry a burden" and is used later of Christ carrying the Cross (19:17). In other words, there were truths that they could not understand (v. 13) or handle until the Holy Spirit came at Pentecost.

16:13 Spirit of truth: The phrase means that the Holy Spirit is the source of truth (14:17; 15:26). guide: The Holy Spirit would not compel or carry the disciples into truth. He would lead; their job was to follow. All truth refers to the truth necessary to be mature saints and thoroughly equipped servants (2 Tim. 3:16, 17). Things to come includes truths about the church (Eph. 3:1–7), as well as future events.

16:14 For indicates that the last part of the verse explains glorify Me. The Holy Spirit glorifies Christ by declaring Him or making Him known. It is the work of the Holy Spirit to throw light on Jesus Christ, who is the image of the invisible God. Christ is to be on center stage; that is the desire of both the Father and the Spirit. The apostles received truth from the Holy Spirit, truth about things to come, and truth about Christ. Then under the guidance of the Holy Spirit they wrote those truths in documents known today as the NT (14:25, 26; 1 Cor. 2:13).

16:15 To say that the Holy Spirit will take what belongs to Christ (v. 14) does not mean He will concentrate on Christ to the exclusion of the Father. There is no division within the Godhead. What the Father has, the Son has (17:10). What the Son has, the Spirit will declare (1 Cor. 2:13). However, the focus will be on Christ because He is the "image of the invisible God" (Col. 1:15). His steps are the only ones we can follow because He is the only one we have "seen."

16:16 You will see Me has been interpreted to mean: (1) the disciples would literally see Jesus after the Resurrection; (2) the disciples would spiritually see Jesus after the Ascension because of the work of the Holy Spirit. Verse 22 seems to support the literal sight after the Resurrection.

16:17 some … said: They were puzzled about the apparent contradiction of not beholding and yet seeing. The statement puzzled them also because He said He would depart. They were expecting a Messiah who would rule and reign, not die and depart (Luke 19:11; Acts 1:6).

16:18 A little while: The biggest question weighing on the disciples' minds was the time factor. They simply did not understand the strange intervals marked by their separation from Jesus.

16:19–21 weep and lament: When Jesus died, the disciples would openly express their intense sorrow. The world would rejoice, assuming that it was rid of Jesus. But the sorrow of the disciples would be turned into joy. This is not merely a case of sorrow being followed by joy, but of sorrow becoming joy. The sorrow itself would be transformed. The death of Jesus would be first a sorrow and then a joy. To explain His words (in v. 20), Jesus used the example of a pregnant woman. A woman … in labor has sorrow, but the very sorrow is transformed into joy in the birth of the child.

INSIGHT

Spiritual Birth Pangs

An alternative translation to sorrow (John 16:21) is "pain." There were few options available to first-century women for pain relief during labor. Since births took place at home, all of the disciples had probably heard a woman scream out in pain while giving birth.

As in most undeveloped countries today, childbearing in biblical times was often fatal for the child, the mother, or both. Many pagan women sought help from their gods, along with special charms, to protect them during pregnancy and delivery.

So Jesus was using a graphic metaphor by comparing the coming "sorrow" of His followers with that of a woman in labor. He was indicating that their pain could not be avoided. But He did give them a hope: He promised that they would see Him again, and when they did their joy would be as great as a woman whose baby has finally been delivered safely.

16:22 I will see you again refers to Jesus' postresurrection appearances. your joy no one will take: The disciples' sorrow would depart; their joy would remain. Jesus' death and resurrection brings the joy of forgiven sins (1 Pet. 1:8) that the world cannot take away.

16:23 In that day, that is, after the Resurrection and Ascension. you will ask Me nothing: Apparently Jesus means that they will not personally ask Him anything because He will not be physically present after the Ascension. Certainly they will ask Him through the work of the Holy Spirit.

16:24 in My name: After the Ascension they will pray as His representative and will receive answers to prayer that their joy may be full.

16:25 An example of figurative language is the allegory of the grapevine in 15:1–8, which presents the work of the Father in producing the fruit of love in believers. A figure of speech can be more vivid and graphic than ordinary prose.

16:26, 27 In My name means by Christ's authority. I do not say … I shall pray the Father for you: Because Jesus provides forgiveness of sins through His death and now intercedes for all believers at the right hand of the Father (Heb. 7:25), we have direct access to the Father. We do not need the intercession of a priest, because Jesus acts as our High Priest before

God. For indicates that v. 27 explains the previous verse. After Jesus' departure, the disciples would be able to pray directly to God the Father, who loves them because they believed in and loved His Son, Jesus.

16:28 This verse is a summary of the whole visit of the Son to the world. It includes His mission, nativity, passion, and ascension.

16:29, 30 we believe: Jesus had read the disciples' hearts (v. 19) and answered their questions. Like the Samaritan woman, they concluded that He knew all things (4:39). To the disciples, Jesus' supernatural knowledge proved His divine mission.

16:31 now believe: We continue in the Christian life the same way we begin, by believing in Jesus. The more we learn of Christ, the more we have to believe. The more we place our trust in Jesus, the more we receive. The more we receive, the more we can accomplish for His glory.

16:32 you will be scattered: The disciples would desert Jesus. Knowing this, Jesus still loved them, an amazing example of unconditional love.

16:33 Tribulation is literally "pressure," and figuratively means "affliction" or "distress." Be of good cheer means "be confident and courageous." When we place our trust in God, He can give us peace in the midst of pressure. Read Phil. 1:27–30 for Paul's explanation of the principle of joy in suffering.

17:1, 2 the hour has come: Throughout the Gospel of John, Jesus referred to the Cross as His "hour" (2:4; 7:30; 8:20; 12:23; 13:1). The time for Him to die had arrived. Glorify Your Son: Jesus was asking that His mission to the world would be made known through the Cross. The reasons for this request are twofold: (1) that Your Son also may glorify You. In the Cross, Jesus reveals the Father to the world, that is, His love and justice; and (2) that through Jesus' death on the Cross, God would provide forgiveness of sins and give eternal life to all those who believe in His Son.

17:3 that they may know You: Eternal life consists of a growing knowledge of the only true God, as opposed to false gods.

17:4, 5 I have glorified You: Jesus made known the Father by completing the work God gave Him to do. glorify Me: Jesus looked to the Father to restore Him to the glory He had in heaven before He left (Phil. 2:6). This is another indication of Christ's preexistence and deity (1:1–14).

17:6–8 The men, i.e., the apostles, the ones Christ trained to be the foundation stones of the church which had its beginning at Pentecost. He prays for these that He will leave behind to accomplish His mission.

17:9, 10 I do not pray for the world indicates that Jesus was praying only for present and future believers (17:20; Luke 23:34). I pray … for those whom You have given Me: The apostle Paul observes the same priority (Col. 1:4, 9). Too often Christians pray for the unregenerate until they accept Christ and then drop them from their prayer list. The point at which Christ and the apostles intensively began prayer, we tend to stop.

17:11 This verse reveals Jesus' keen sensitivity to the plight of His disciples brought on by His departure. He was going to the Father, but they would be left behind. Jesus asked the Father to keep the disciples through His name, that is, to keep them true to the revelation of God that Jesus had given to them while He was with them. The disciples would have a new union with the Father and Son through the future indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

17:12 none of them is lost: Jesus protected the disciples during His earthly ministry (18:9). Judas, the son of perdition, is distinguished from the rest of the apostles. He was never really one of those given to Christ (18:8, 9). He had never really been a believer (6:64–71); he had not been cleansed (13:11).

17:13 I speak in the world: Jesus prayed aloud (v. 1) so that His words would comfort the apostles when they remembered that Jesus gave them into His Father's keeping.

17:14, 15 not of the world: This is undoubtedly the biggest challenge of spiritual warfare that the Christian faces. The Lord doesn't want us "out of the world" (v. 15) but neither does He want us "of the world" (v. 16). We are to be in it (v. 18) but not of it. The tendency is one of two extremes: to be in the world and so saturated with it that there is no difference between the Christian and the world system or to get out of the world system and to be so isolated from it that our commendable lifestyle is not seen by this world. Both saturation by the world system and isolation from the world system fall short of the penetration of the world system that Christ calls for. Christ said, "I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves" (Rom. 12:1, 2; Phil. 2:14–16). take … out of: Although the Father lifts (Gk. airo) branches off the ground (15:2), Christ doesn't want them lifted out of (Gk. epairo) the world. This further supports the meaning of "lift" in 15:2 rather than "take out" or "cut off." evil one: This word can either be neuter (evil) or masculine (evil one, that is, Satan).

17:16–18 Sanctify means "to set apart." There are two ways to understand this statement: (1) as separate for holiness, or (2) as set apart for service. According to the first view, Jesus was praying not only that the disciples should be kept from evil, but that they should advance in holiness. However in v. 18, sanctification seems to refer to the disciples' mission, indicating that sanctify may also mean that Jesus was setting apart His disciples for this. Your word is truth is a strong statement of Jesus' confidence in the veracity of Scripture. People's opinions may vary, and experiences are notoriously untrustworthy, but God's Word always remains true.

17:19 I sanctify myself: Christ does not state that He is in the process of becoming holy; He is referring to His self-sacrifice and total commitment. It is His example that should stir His followers to that same type of surrender.

17:20 those who will believe: Jesus not only prayed for those the Father had given Him (v. 9) but for all future believers—for their unity (vv. 20–23) and their future glory (vv. 24–26). If you are a believer, these words are Jesus' prayer for you.

17:21 all may be one: The present tense of the verb "to be" indicates that Jesus was praying for the unity that takes place through the sanctification of believers. This is what Jesus was commanding in 13:34, 35: His followers had to love each other so that the world may believe in the reality of Jesus' love. The loving relationship of believers to each other is the greatest witness to Jesus Christ.

17:22 The glory, the revelation of Jesus Christ through His disciples, is the means to unity. Such unity begins with belief and correct thinking about Jesus and God the Father, that is, with doctrine. But correct belief must bear fruit—a life that demonstrates God's love and produces the unity between all the believers.

17:23 I in them, and You in Me: The mutual indwelling of the Father in the Son and the Son in the church is also the means to unity, the ultimate expression of God's love (3:35; Rom. 8:17).

17:24 May be with Me is a prayer for the future glorification of believers. may behold My glory: The apostles saw Christ's glory in His words and works (v. 22). Christ prayed for all believers to behold His glory, unveiled in the full revelation of His deity.

17:25, 26 Jesus concludes His prayer, summarizing several of the main themes: (1) knowing the righteous (holy) God; (2) Jesus' divine origin; (3) the revealing of the Father's name; and (4) the unity of mutual love between the Father, Son, and believers.

18:1, 2 The Brook Kidron was a ravine between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives.

18:3 A detachment was a cohort of about six hundred men, or one-tenth of a legion. However, sometimes this Greek word was used for one-third of a cohort, or two hundred men. These soldiers were probably the experienced Roman troops stationed at the Antonia, a fortress near the temple. The officers who came with the detachment were members of the temple police under the command of the Jewish council, the Sanhedrin.

18:4, 5 knowing all things: Knowing He was about to be arrested, Jesus could have escaped, but He did not. He submitted Himself voluntarily to the ordeal that was ordained by God.

18:6 fell to the ground: For a moment, Christ unveiled His majesty. His statement of deity, I am, manifested such glory that it literally threw the soldiers to the ground.

18:7–9 For the third time in this passage, Jesus claimed to be I am (vv. 5, 6), echoing God's self-revelation in Ex. 3:14. let these go: As He was being arrested, Jesus demonstrated His love for the apostles.

18:10, 11 Note the contrast between Peter and Jesus. By fighting the guard, Simon Peter vehemently exercised his own self-will; Jesus in contrast voluntarily submitted to the will of God. One swung the sword of self-will; the other drank from the cup of God's will. See Matt. 16:22, 23 for another attempt by Peter to control God's plan for Jesus. cut off his right ear: Jesus mercifully restored the ear (Luke 22:51) that Peter cut off. He often does the same in our lives when we act rashly. His purposes are fulfilled in spite of us.

Jesus in Court

Before Jewish Religious Authorities
• preliminary hearing before Annas (18:12–24).	Although the Romans had deposed Annas, in the eyes of the Jews he still functioned as the high priest because the office was for life. Annas questioned Jesus, but Jesus demanded a legal hearing.
• hearing before Caiaphas (Matt. 26:57–67; Mark 14:53–65)	Caiaphas was the high priest appointed by the Romans. Two false witnesses testified against Jesus and Caiaphas asked Jesus if He was the Messiah. Jesus answered yes, and Caiaphas concluded that Jesus was guilty of blasphemy.
• trial before the Sanhedrin (Matt. 27:1, 2; Mark 15:1; Luke 22:66–71)	The council of Jewish religious leaders confirmed Caiaphas's conclusion. In this trial, Jesus admitted He was the Son of God and declared that He would sit on the right hand of God the Father.
Before the Roman Authorities
• first hearing before Pilate (18:28–37; Matt. 27:11–14; Mark 15:2–5; Luke 23:1–5)	The Jewish religious leaders brought Jesus to Pilate in order to get permission to execute Him. They accused Him of treason. Pilate saw Jesus' innocence, but briefly questioned Him. In this interview, Jesus revealed to Pilate that His kingdom was not of this earth.
• hearing before Herod (Luke 23:6–12)	Pilate sent Jesus to Herod because Jesus was from Galilee, the region ruled by Herod. Jesus remained silent before Herod.
• final hearing before Pilate (18:38—19:16; Matt. 27:15–26; Mark 15:6–15; Luke 23:13–25)	Pilate did not want to condemn an innocent man, but he was afraid of another Jewish uprising. Therefore, he finally gave in to the cries of the crowd: "Crucify Him."

18:12 A captain was the chief officer of a Roman cohort (v. 3).

18:13 Annas was high priest from A.D. 7 to 14. He was deposed by the Romans. Then Caiaphas, Annas's son-inlaw, was appointed to the position and served from A.D. 18 to 37. However, according to Jewish law the high priest was a lifetime position, so the Jews still considered Annas to be high priest. So they took Jesus to Annas first. Caiaphas would soon be involved, however, since he had the authority to carry out the plan (v. 14).

18:14 In passing, John reminds the reader of the earlier prediction of Caiaphas (11:50–52): Jesus would die for the entire nation.

18:15 another disciple: Although this other disciple is never identified, the consensus is that he was John, the author of this Gospel.

18:16–18 I am not: This was the first of Peter's three denials prophesied by Jesus (13:38). An apparent contradiction exists between "the rooster crows" of Matthew, Luke, and John and "the rooster crows" twice of Mark 1:72. A possible solution has been given by Johnston M. Cheney and Stanley Ellisen in The Greatest Story.

18:19 The high priest: This refers to Annas (compare 18:13). This was not a true trial since the Sanhedrin had not been assembled. The purpose of this inquisition was probably to gather evidence. Annas was interested in Christ's disciples and His doctrine. He was interested in the number of followers that Christ had gained.

18:20 I spoke openly … in secret I have said nothing: Christ taught in public places. His purpose had not been concealed. He had not founded a secret society.

18:21 Ask those who have heard Me: According to the law, the witnesses for the defense had to be called first. Jesus should not have been questioned until witnesses had testified.

18:22 the officers … struck Jesus: This was illegal according to Jewish law. There was to be no punishment before conviction.

18:23, 24 bear witness: Jesus invited His accusers to present evidence that He had done something wrong.

18:25 I am not: This was the second of Peter's three denials prophesied by Jesus (13:38).

18:26, 27 Peter then denied again: For the third time, Peter denied the Lord, as Jesus had said he would (13:38). In the Upper Room, Peter had boasted that he would remain true to the Lord to the end (13:37; Matt. 26:33, 35). In the garden he surrendered to the desires of his body, by sleeping three times when the Lord had commanded the disciples to stay up in prayer (Mark 14:32–42). Now he submitted to the pressure of the world and denied the Lord three times.

18:28 The Praetorium was the Roman governor's official residence, probably the Fortress Antonia near the temple. Early morning refers to the fourth watch of the night, from 3 to 6 A.M. A Roman court could have been held immediately after sunrise, and this scene could have taken place around 6 A.M. defiled: During Passover, if a Jew entered a house that contained leaven, he or she would be ceremonially defiled and unable to celebrate the feast. Thus Jews would not enter the residence of any Gentile for fear of being ceremonially defiled. Passover: The main meal of the Passover had taken place. The synoptic Gospels report that Jesus celebrated that meal the night before (Matt. 26:17–29; Mark 14:12–25; Luke 22:7–22). However, there were other ceremonial meals during the Passover, which lasted the entire week.

18:29, 30 What accusation: Pilate was not ignorant of the accusation. He was merely requesting that it be formally stated. If He were not an evildoer: Jesus' accusers had no charge that would stand up in a Roman court. Therefore they sullenly replied, "If He were not a criminal we would not have brought Him to you."

18:31 You take Him and judge Him: The accusations did not warrant a trial before Pilate. It is not lawful: The Romans did not allow the Jews to impose capital punishment. These Jewish leaders had no interest in a just trial; they simply wanted permission from Rome to have Jesus executed.

18:32 signifying by what death He would die: Jesus had said, "If I am lifted up from the earth," indicating the method of His death, crucifixion (12:32, 33). The Jewish method of execution was stoning. However, Jesus had already indicated that He would be crucified. John is pointing out that the Jewish leaders' inability to impose capital punishment themselves fulfilled Jesus' prediction describing His death.

18:33 Are You the King of the Jews: The Jews charged that Jesus claimed to be their king. From their standpoint, this was the most damaging accusation possible because it would be regarded by the Romans as treason and would be punishable by death. In the Greek text, you is emphatic, perhaps indicating that Pilate did not think the forlorn figure before him looked like the defiant rebels he was used to dealing with as claimants to the Jewish throne.

18:34 Are you speaking for yourself: In reply to Pilate, Jesus gave no violent protest of innocence, nor was He sullenly defiant. Jesus politely but directly asked whether Pilate was asking on his own initiative or whether the charge was secondhand. If Pilate's question originated with him, he was using king in the Roman sense of a political ruler. If not, then king was being used in the Jewish sense of the messianic King.

18:35 Am I a Jew: Pilate was asking, "Is it likely that I, a Roman governor, would have any interest in a Jewish question?"

18:36 My kingdom is not of this world: Jesus pointed out that though He was a king, he was no threat to Rome because His kingdom would not come by a worldly revolution.

18:37 bear witness to the truth: The truth was the seal of God. hears My voice: If Pilate wanted to know the truth, he would understand what Jesus was saying.

18:38 What is truth: This question has been interpreted as (1) a cynical denial of the possibility of knowing truth; (2) a contemptuous jest at anything so impractical as abstract truth; and (3) a desire to know what no one had been able to tell him. No fault is a legal term meaning that there were no grounds for a criminal charge. Teaching the truth was not against the law. Pilate pronounced Jesus not guilty.

18:39 you have a custom: It appears that some in the crowd suggested that a prisoner should be released in honor of the Passover (Mark 15:8, 11). Pilate jumped at the possible compromise. By promising to release Jesus on account of the custom rather than by proclaiming Him innocent, Pilate would avoid insulting the Jewish leaders, who had already pronounced Him guilty.

18:40 The people demanded that Pilate release Barabbas, who was not only a robber, but a rebel (Mark 15:7) and a murderer (Luke 23:19).

19:1 Pilate orders Jesus to be scourged, hoping that the Jews would accept this rather than execution. The scourge was made of thongs to which were attached sharp pieces of metal and pieces of bone. The prisoners were beaten across the back, having the flesh and sometimes the organs torn. Many prisoners died from this cruel punishment.

19:2 The crown of thorns was in mockery of a kingly crown. Placing a purple robe on Jesus made Him a caricature of a royal conqueror.

19:3 Hail, King of the Jews was probably a sarcastic echo of what the soldiers had heard at Jesus' triumphal entry or at His trial.

19:4 I am bringing Him out to you: Perhaps Pilate was appealing to the people's compassion so that he could release Jesus.

19:5, 6 Crucify Him: The Jewish leaders anticipated an outburst of pity. Therefore they began demanding Jesus' death. You … crucify Him: Pilate was enraged. I find no fault in Him: This was the third time Pilate declared that he could find no legal grounds for capital punishment (18:38; 19:4).

19:7 We have a law: The Jewish leaders were telling Pilate, "If you are appealing to us, we say that according to our law, He must die." As governor, Pilate was bound by Roman custom to respect Jewish law. He made Himself the Son of God: The Jewish leaders were accusing Jesus of violating the laws against blasphemy (Lev. 24:16).

19:8 he was the more afraid: Though not mentioned earlier, Pilate had no doubt become fearful. The claim of Jesus' deity further excited his fears.

19:9 Jesus gave … no answer: Three times Pilate had publicly pronounced Jesus innocent (18:38; 19:4, 6). If he had really wanted to know the truth, he would have believed what Jesus had already told him (18:37).

19:10 I have power: Pilate was irritated by Jesus' refusal to speak.

19:11 given you from above: Jesus acknowledged that Pilate had the power to take His life, but only because God allowed him that power. The one who delivered Me to you is a reference to Caiaphas (18:24, 28), who had the greater sin because as a religious leader he had that much greater a responsibility to recognize the Messiah.

19:12 not Caesar's friend: The Jews shifted their focus from the religious charge (v. 7) to the political charge (18:33), which they backed up with an appeal to Caesar's own political interest. This new plea forced Pilate to choose between yielding to an indefinite sense of right or escaping the danger of an accusation at Rome.

An excavated area in ancient Jerusalem known as The Pavement (John 19:13), identified by some scholars as the place in the Fortress of Antonia where Pilate pronounced the death sentence against Jesus (John 19:13–16).

19:13 The Pavement no doubt referred to a large paved area in the Fortress Antonia.

19:14 The Preparation Day of the Passover refers to the Friday of Passover week (v. 31), the preparation for the Sabbath of the Passover. Some have suggested that this may be the Thursday before the Passover, the same time that the Passover lamb was offered as a sacrifice. However this interpretation appears to conflict with the narrative of the three synoptic Gospels, where it seems that Jesus is described as being crucified on Friday (Matt. 27:62). The sixth hour was 6 A.M. according to the Roman system of time.

19:15, 16 The Jewish leaders preferred proclaiming a heathen emperor as their king to acknowledging Jesus as their Messiah. Trapped by his own fear, Pilate handed over the innocent Jesus to endure a punishment Pilate knew He did not deserve.

19:17 The Place of a Skull probably got its name from the shape of the hill.

19:18 they crucified Him: Of all the apostles, John alone witnessed the crucifixion. However, he spares his readers the revolting details. The two others were thieves (Matt. 27:38; Mark 15:27).

19:19 wrote a title: It was a Roman custom to write the name of the condemned person and his crime on a plaque to be placed above his head at the execution. Mark calls this title "the inscription of His accusation" (Mark 15:26).

19:20 written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin: Multilingual inscriptions were common. The title was written in the local, common, and official languages of the day. Everyone could read the message in his or her own language.

19:21 The addition of the phrase of the Jews to the title chief priests (probably referring to Caiaphas and Annas) occurs nowhere else in the NT. The addition probably corresponds to the title given Jesus. The chief priest of the Jews objected to Jesus being called King of the Jews. They did not want a messianic designation connected with Him.

19:22 Pilate refused to change the title. As did Caiaphas, Pilate affirmed more than he ever intended. The title proclaimed to all that Jesus is indeed the promised Messiah.

19:23 the soldiers: According to Roman law, the garments of a condemned criminal belonged to the executioners. Jesus had two items of clothing. The cloak was a large, loose garment. The tunic was a close-fitting garment that went from the neck to the knees.

19:24 The outer garment could be conveniently divided, but the inner garment could not. Thus the soldiers divided the outer one and cast lots for the inner one. Unknowingly, the soldiers fulfilled David's prophecy in Ps. 22:18. This passage had long been considered a messianic prophecy.

IN DEPTH

The Women Around Jesus

Jesus went to His death attended by a loyal following of women who had stood by Him throughout His ministry (John 19:25). Women played a major part in Jesus' life and work. It was a woman or women who …

• nurtured Him as He grew up (Luke 2:51); • traveled with Him and helped finance His ministry (8:1–3); • listened to Him teach (10:39); • were featured in His parables (Matt. 13:33; 24:41); • shared the good news that He was the Messiah (John 4:28–30); • offered hospitality to Him and His companions (Mark 1:29–31); • were treated by Him with respect and compassion (John 4:5–27; 11:32, 33); • were healed by Him (Matt. 9:20–22; Luke 13:10–17); • were praised by Him for their faith (Mark 7:24–30); • were commended by Him for their generosity (12:41–44); • worshiped Him and prepared His body for burial before His crucifixion (Matt. 26:6–13); • stood by Him at the Cross (27:55; John 19:25); • assisted in His burial (Mark 16:1; Luke 23:55—24:1); • first saw Him resurrected (John 20:16); and • went to tell the rest of His followers that He was risen from the dead (20:18).

19:25, 26 The disciple whom He loved refers to John, the author of this Gospel.

19:27 Behold your mother: Jesus placed Mary in the care of John.

19:28 that the Scripture might be fulfilled: Everything foretold concerning the earthly life of Jesus had been accomplished.

19:29 Sour wine was not the same as the drugged wine that had been offered to Jesus earlier ("wine mingled with myrrh"; Mark 15:23). Jesus did not take that wine because He wanted to die fully conscious. He did take a sip of this wine; one of the agonies of crucifixion was incredible thirst, added to the terrible pain.

19:30 It is finished … He gave up His spirit: Having fulfilled every command of the Father and every prophecy of Scripture, Jesus voluntarily died. This was not a cry of exhaustion, but of completion. Jesus had done what He had agreed to do.

19:31–33 The Preparation Day was Friday, the day before the Sabbath (v. 14). bodies should not remain on the cross: It is ironic that in the midst of a deliberate judicial murder the Jews were scrupulous about keeping the ceremonial law. According to Jewish law (Deut. 21:23), it was necessary to remove the bodies of executed criminals before sunset. To avoid breaking the Law, the Jews requested that the legs of the condemned be broken so that the men would die quickly and could be removed from their crosses. Breaking the legs was not always part of crucifixion. But with his legs broken, a victim could no longer lift his body in order to breathe and would soon suffocate. High day is literally "great day." The coming Sabbath was especially important because it was the Sabbath of the Passover Week.

19:34 To make certain that Jesus was dead, one of the soldiers pierced His side with a spear. After the soldier did this, blood and water came out, indicating that Jesus was already dead. Only blood would have flowed from a living body.

19:35 he who has seen: John's words can be trusted because he is giving an eyewitness account, so that his readers will believe that Jesus is the Savior.

19:36, 37 One should trust Christ not only because John gives an accurate account of His death (v. 35), but also because He fulfilled Scripture (v. 37), proving that He is the Messiah. Both the lack of broken bones and the piercing of His side fulfilled prophecies recorded in the OT (Ex. 12:46; Zech. 12:10).

19:38 Joseph, a rich member of the Jewish council (Matt. 27:57; Mark 15:43), had not agreed with their decision (Luke 23:50).

19:39 Nicodemus, like Joseph (v. 38), was a member of the council (3:1). At last, Nicodemus identified himself with the One who had come from above (12:42). A hundred pounds was a large amount. Nicodemus intended to cover Jesus' entire body with spices—a common burial custom.

19:40 The custom of the Jews, in contrast to the Egyptians, who removed the soft organs and dried the muscular tissue with preservatives.

IN COMPARISON

Understanding Jesus' Death

The Jews viewed Jesus' death as a scandal. The church understood His death as fulfillment of OT prophecy.
Aspect of Jesus' Death	Old Testament Reference
In obedience to His Father (18:11)	Psalm 40:8
Announced by Himself (18:32; see 3:14)	Numbers 21:8, 9
In the place of His people (18:14)	Isaiah 53:4–6
With evildoers (19:18)	Isaiah 53:12
In innocence (19:6)	Isaiah 53:9
Crucified (19:18)	Isaiah 22:16
Buried in a rich man's tomb (19:38–42)	Isaiah 53:9

19:41, 42 a new tomb: Matthew specifies that the tomb belonged to Joseph (Matt. 27:60). This too was a fulfillment of a prophecy: The Messiah would be buried in a rich man's grave (Is. 53:9).

20:1 while it was still dark: Apparently Mary Magdalene arrived ahead of the other women (Matt. 28:1; Mark 16:1; Luke 24:10). Mary Magdalene, out of whom Jesus had cast seven demons, was the last one at the Cross and the first one at the grave.

20:2 The other disciple, whom Jesus loved, was John, the author of this Gospel. They have taken away the Lord: Mary Magdalene jumped to the wrong conclusion. we: Other women were with Mary Magdalene (Matt. 28:1; Mark 16:1; Luke 24:10).

20:3, 4 John probably outran Peter because he was younger.

20:5 the linen cloths lying there: No one who came to steal the body would have taken the time to unwrap it and leave the cloths behind.

20:6 saw: The Greek term implies an intense stare, in contrast to the more casual look described in v. 5. Peter went into the tomb to get a good look. He carefully examined the place where Jesus' body had been.

20:7 folded together: The handkerchief around Christ's head had not been thrown aside, as might have been done by a thief. It had been folded and laid aside. Perhaps the implication is that Christ did not rush out of the tomb, but left His grave clothes neatly folded.

20:8 The other disciple, commonly believed to be the apostle John, saw the tomb and the grave clothes and believed that Christ had been raised from the dead.

20:9, 10 they did not know the Scripture: The disciples believed because of what they saw in the tomb (v. 8), not because of what they knew from OT passages describing the Savior's resurrection (Luke 24:25–27). Jesus had prophesied His death and resurrection in the disciples' presence, but the disciples had not understood what He was talking about. Later Jesus would instruct them about how His life and death fulfilled the Scriptures (Luke 24:13–27, 44–47).

20:11–13 Mary must have returned with Peter and John (vv. 3, 4), lingering outside … the tomb after the men left. Angels (v. 12) are primarily God's messengers. Their message to Mary and the others is given in fuller form in Luke 24:4–7.

20:14–16 did not know: Overcome by grief, and with tear-dimmed eyes, Mary did not immediately recognize Jesus. When Christ uttered her name, Mary recognized His voice. Mary addressed Christ as Rabboni, an Aramaic term which John translates for his Greek readers. The Aramaic

Rabboni means “my lord,” but had become commonly used for Teacher, as had its Hebrew equivalent “Rabbi.”

20:17, 18 Cling means “to fasten oneself to” or “to hold.” Mary had grabbed Christ and was holding on to Him as if she would never turn Him loose. Christ explained to her that He could not stay because He had to ascend to His Father. My brethren referred to the disciples (v. 18). Jesus sent Mary to them with the first postresurrection testimony. Though it may be that Mary was formerly a woman of ill-repute, this did not keep Jesus from commissioning her to bring the gospel message to the apostles (Mark 16:11). My Father and your Father: God is the Father of Christ and of believers (1:14, 18; 3:16, 18).

20:19, 20 Jesus came and stood in the midst: Christ’s appearance was miraculous, because the doors were shut. Jesus, as God, could perform a variety of miracles without requiring a change in His humanity. Here Christ’s body was a physical body, the same body in which He died and was buried. The difference is that His flesh had been changed to take on immortality and incorruptibility (1 Cor. 15:53).

20:21 As indicates that the disciples were commissioned to carry on Christ’s work, not to begin a new one.

20:22 Receive the Holy Spirit: The ministry to which Jesus called the disciples (v. 21; see also Matt. 28:16–20; Luke 24:47–49) required spiritual power. The reference here is to a special preparation of the apostles who were to become the foundation of the church at Pentecost. Here Jesus breathed the Spirit into the disciples. At Pentecost the Spirit unified the believers into one body and empowered them to testify of Jesus (1 Cor. 12:13). The reception of the Spirit here is reminiscent of the creative breath of God into Adam in Gen. 2:7. Yet the gift here was not a human spirit, but the Spirit of the living God.

20:23 If you forgive: The apostles did not take Jesus’ words to mean that they had the power to forgive sins (Acts 8:22). They knew that only God could forgive sins (Mark 2:7). Neither the apostles nor the church had the power to forgive specific sins or to prevent forgiveness for any individual. Fundamentally, Jesus was speaking of the responsibility of the church to declare the gospel to all the world, so that those who believe in Jesus can find the precious gift of forgiveness (Matt. 16:19).

Lord over Doubt

Have you ever struggled with doubts or troubling questions about Christ, the Christian faith, or the church? Do you sometimes feel that tough questions are not welcome or acceptable among believers?

Thomas (John 20:24) was a classic skeptic. Even though he had traveled with Jesus and learned from His teaching for at least three years, he needed time, evidence, and personal convincing before he would accept the Resurrection (20:25, 26). But Jesus responded to his doubt by inviting him to check it all out. He presented Himself for Thomas's inspection (15:26, 27) and did not chide him for wanting to be certain.

Jesus seeks to honor the mind and heart of every seeker or doubter. He knows that easily developed loyalties often lack staying power. By contrast, many tenacious people who probe the corners of their doubts and fears finally reach the truth—and faith in the truth is what Christ desires. He even promised that the Spirit would aid those who seek it (16:12–16).

The encounter with Thomas welcomes every skeptic to bring his or her doubts to God. He delights in hearing our arguments and questions.

20:24, 25 Thomas was not present when Jesus appeared to the disciples in the closed room (vv. 19–23). Unless I see in His hands: When Jesus appeared to the other disciples, He showed them His hands and His side (v. 20). No doubt they told Thomas about it; hence his request.

20:26, 27 In spite of his misgivings (v. 25), Thomas was with them. He had not left the group, nor had they excluded him (Rom 14:1).

20:28 My Lord and my God: In awestruck wonder, Thomas not only believed that Christ was risen from the dead, but he also saw that the Resurrection proved His deity.

20:29 Those who have not seen includes all who have believed in Christ since His ascension to the Father (1 Pet. 1:8, 9).

20:30, 31 John states the purpose of his book. His purpose was to convince his readers that Jesus is the Christ, the Messiah who fulfilled God's promises to Israel. Jesus is the Son of God, God in the flesh. By believing these things, a person obtains eternal life (1:12).

21:1 Sea of Tiberias: The Sea of Galilee was renamed for the Roman emperor Tiberias Caesar.

21:2 John, the author of this Gospel, was one of the sons of Zebedee. The omission of his name here is consistent with his reserve about everything connected with himself in his book.

21:3 Peter said … "I am going fishing." Peter has been severely criticized for returning to his previous occupation, but there is nothing in the text to suggest that Peter did anything wrong. The Lord does not rebuke him for what he did.

21:4 the disciples did not know: Perhaps the apostles did not recognize Jesus because they were preoccupied with their work as Mary Magdalene had been with her sorrow (20:14). In addition, there was not much light at this time of day. When the morning had now come refers to daybreak.

21:5 have you any food: The question from the shore was probably regarded as a request to buy fish. The disciples answered that they had nothing to sell.

21:6 "Cast the net on the right side of the boat." Perhaps they thought the stranger had seen fish. Fish were sometimes detected in schools in the lake.

21:7 That disciple whom Jesus loved is commonly considered to be John, the author of this Gospel. Peter … plunged into the sea: John was the first to recognize the Lord; Peter was the first to act. Though Peter often made bad decisions, he had zeal that would eventually be channeled to good use (Acts 2:14–41).

21:8–10 Two hundred cubits is about a hundred yards.

21:11–14 The phrase the third time applies to the disciples as a group. John himself has related three appearances before this one, the first being to Mary Magdalene (20:19–23, 26–29).

21:15 More than these means more than the other disciples (Matt. 26:22). On two different occasions Peter had claimed extraordinary love for Christ, even comparing himself to other men (13:37; Matt. 26:33).

21:16 Tend means to shepherd. Lambs need to be fed (v. 15); sheep need to be guided. Peter would need to care for diverse people in different ways, as Christ had done with His disciples.

21:17 Peter denied the Lord at least three times. Here he affirmed his love for the Lord for the third time.

21:18, 19 Peter must have been bewildered by Christ's words to him. Jesus had just spoken of the future ministry of Peter; now He spoke of Peter's death. When Peter was younger, he walked where he wished, moving about without restriction. When Peter became older, he would stretch out his hands, looking for help. Another will gird you means that Peter would be bound as a condemned criminal. The day would come when Peter would be totally under the control of Roman executioners, who would carry him where he would not wish to go, to death (v. 19). His death is hinted at in 2 Pet. 1:13, 14. Jesus' words here confirm the early church tradition that Peter was crucified upside down.

IN DEPTH

Peter Forgiven

John is the only Gospel writer who records the account of Jesus restoring Peter to His ministry after Peter's three denials (18:17, 25–27; 21:15–19). Only a short time before this dramatic encounter with the risen Lord, Peter had boldly announced that he would give his life for Jesus. Jesus responded by informing Peter that he would actually deny Him three times that same night (13:37, 38).

Later that evening, Jesus was arrested. While He stood trial before the chief priest, Peter hid outside in the courtyard. Three times Peter was recognized as one of Jesus' followers; three times he denied knowing Jesus, thus fulfilling Jesus' words. Luke 22:62 tells us that when Peter realized what he had done, he "wept bitterly."

Imagine, then, Peter's emotions during his encounter with the resurrected Savior by the Sea of Tiberias. On the one hand, he was no doubt overjoyed to see the risen Lord. On the other hand, he may still have been ashamed and embarrassed about his desertion of Jesus in the hour of His greatest need.

Three times the Lord asked Peter if Peter loved Him. The first two times, Christ used the word agapao, signifying a love of commitment, a love of the will. Peter responded with the word phileo, indicating his strong emotion for the Lord. The word suggests warmth, fondness, and friendship.

When Peter acknowledged that he loved Christ, the Lord gave him the task of feeding His lambs and taking care of His sheep. Expressing love for Christ implies accepting a duty to do the work of God and to be faithful. Peter had some difficulty with such faithfulness during Christ's earthly ministry. As Christ was getting ready to depart, He wanted to elicit a commitment from Peter.

The third time Jesus asked Peter if he loved Him He used the word phileo, indicating strong friendship. Christ had taught that a friend who loves will lay down his life for a friend. Peter, instead, had denied Christ three times. With Peter's final response, "You know that I love You," Christ had drawn a commitment from Peter and assured the other disciples of the bond between Himself and Peter. In the process, He demonstrated His complete forgiveness of Peter. With this exchange, the Lord restored Peter to a position of leadership in the ongoing ministry of the gospel.

21:20, 21 The disciple whom Jesus loved is commonly considered to be John, the author of this Gospel. What about this man: Peter wanted to know if John too would suffer a violent death.

21:22, 23 You follow Me: The Lord told Peter that he should be concerned with following God's will himself and not worrying about God's will for others. this disciple would not die: The rumor was that Jesus would return before John died.

21:24 This is the disciple: The disciple was the one whom Jesus loved (v. 20). This is basically John's signature to his Gospel.

21:25 there are also many other things that Jesus did: The Gospel of John is truthful (v. 24), but it is not exhaustive.

Acts of the Apostles

——————— THE INFECTIOUS NEWS FIRST APPEARED IN Jerusalem, then spread quickly from person to person and from city to city. It faced opposition everywhere it went. But the world was ill-equipped to fight it. Empowered by the Holy Spirit, the followers of Christ relayed the Good News about Jesus everywhere. In less than thirty-five years, the gospel had reached cities from Jerusalem to Rome.

Luke wrote the Book of Acts to show the fulfillment of Jesus' words, "I will build My church, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it" (Matt. 16:18). Before Jesus ascended to heaven, He commanded His followers to make disciples of all nations (Luke 24:46–49). Luke begins Acts with a reiteration of that commission and a description of how it would be carried out (1:8). This commission not only ties the Book of Acts to the Gospel of Luke, but it also provides an outline for the book: the witness in Jerusalem and Judea (1:1—6:7); the witness in Judea and Samaria (6:8—9:31); and the witness to the ends of the earth (9:32—28:31).

The Book of Acts begins in Jerusalem with the disciples huddled in a room on the Day of Pentecost. Then the Holy Spirit came upon them and authorized them to be His witnesses. The rest of Acts describes the ripple effect of that great event. Jesus' followers first witnessed to the Jews in Jerusalem, with Peter at the center of the movement. Then persecution broke out (7:60), scattering believers into Samaria and the rest of the known world. Saul of Tarsus, once a leader of the persecution, became a leader of the persecuted. In ch. 11, the focus of the Book of Acts moves from Peter's ministry to the Jews to Saul's ministry to the Gentiles. Under his more familiar name Paul, this converted persecutor established churches in Asia Minor and Europe. The Book of Acts records three of Paul's missionary journeys, as well as his voyage to Rome to face his trial. The book ends abruptly with Paul under house arrest in Rome. The ending is fitting, because the entire Book of Acts is itself just a prologue. Jesus has not finished His work on earth. The narrative begun by Luke in this book will not end until Jesus Christ returns in glory (1:11; 1 Cor. 15:28).

The Book of Acts provides a condensed history of the early church, an eyewitness account of the miraculous spread of the gospel from Jerusalem to Rome. The book details how the Holy Spirit authorized our spiritual forebears to carry out Jesus' mandate to be His witnesses throughout the world. The accounts in Acts include stirring examples for us to follow, but the recurring theme of the Book of Acts is that our spiritual ancestors were empowered by the Holy Spirit. That same power is available to us. God has not left us at the mercy of our own weaknesses; He has sent the Holy Spirit to help us follow their example (Eph. 5:17, 18), and to be Jesus' witnesses in all of the earth.

The Book of Acts is a historical narrative, but at the same time it has profound theological significance. A believer's faith rests upon the facts of history: the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus. These historical events were recorded by Luke in his Gospel in order to evoke belief. If the historical fact of Christ's resurrection is not true, then a believer's faith has no foundation. As Paul states, "If Christ is not risen, your faith is futile; you are still in your sins" (1 Cor. 15:17). The Book of Acts reassures believers that their faith in Christ rests on fact. The extraordinary growth of the early church was based directly on the resurrected Christ. His command and empowerment of the disciples through the Holy Spirit is the only reasonable explanation for the incredible and rapid spread of the gospel in the first century. The early Christians were not testifying about a dead Christ, but a living Christ whom they had seen with their own eyes (1:1–5; Luke 24:36–53; 2 Pet. 1:16). The same is true for us today. Jesus lives and continues to work through the church.

The Book of Acts begins with a reference to the author's "former account" written to a man named Theophilus (1:1), a clear reference to the Gospel of Luke (Luke 1:3). Even though the author does not mention himself by name in either the Gospel or Acts, early tradition identifies Luke as the author of both volumes. As early as the second century, ancient authors, such as Irenaeus (c. A.D. 180), indicate this.

Called "the beloved physician" by Paul (Col. 4:14), Luke was a doctor whom Paul met in Troas (16:8–11). He cared for Paul during the illnesses he suffered on his missionary endeavors. Paul's references to Luke in 2 Timothy 4:11 and Philemon 24 portray Luke as Paul's faithful traveling companion. After the two met in Troas, Luke included himself with the missionary team recorded in Acts (16:10, the beginning of the so-called "we" sections in the book). Luke's faithful friendship to Paul continued until Pauldeath in Rome, for Luke was one of the few people who did not desert him (2 Tim. 4:11).

The Book of Acts does not record Paul's death. Instead it ends abruptly during Paul's residence in Rome (28:30). Paul's house arrest in Rome occurred around A.D. 61, marking the earliest possible date for the book's completion. Acts makes no reference to the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 or to Nero's persecution of Christians following the fire of Rome in A.D. 64. Surely Luke would have mentioned these significant events if they had occurred when he wrote. Moreover, the many references to Paul's vindication before Roman officials would not make sense if Nero had already started his vehement persecution of Christians. Therefore, it is reasonable to assume that Acts was written between A.D. 60 and 64.

Commentary

1:1 Luke addressed his Gospel to the "most excellent Theophilus" (Luke 1:3), using a title that indicates Theophilus was a person of high rank. The formal title is dropped here. Theophilus may have been a mayor, a governor, or some other type of officer. It is possible that Theophilus had become a Christian some time between the writing of the Gospel of Luke and Luke's second journal, the Book of Acts, and thus could be addressed as a Christian brother.

1:2, 3 Taken up refers to Christ's ascension, the end of His earthly ministry. These verses look back to Luke 24:51 and ahead to vv. 9, 22. the apostles … to whom He also presented Himself alive: The resurrected Jesus presented Himself "not to all the people, but to witnesses chosen before by God" (10:41). In the forty days between Jesus' resurrection and ascension, there are recorded some ten or eleven appearances of Jesus to believers confirming His resurrection from the dead. On the last of these appearances, Jesus gathered His apostles together and commanded them not to leave Jerusalem (v. 4). Many infallible proofs serve as the basis for the believer's confidence in the resurrection of our Lord. The Greek word translated infallible proofs speaks of "convincing, decisive proof." Christian belief is not built on speculation or myth but on the sovereign acts and words of God incarnate in the time-space universe. The birth, ministry, death, resurrection, and ascension of the Lord Jesus Christ are solidly rooted in history. The kingdom of God was the central topic of discussion between Christ and His apostles during the forty days between Jesus' resurrection and ascension. The goal of history is not the Cross, but the crown—the time when King Jesus reveals Himself in all His majesty and reigns in glory (Is. 11; Dan. 7:13, 14; 1 Cor. 15:24–28; Rev. 20:4–6).

IN DEPTH

A Worldwide Gospel

Grand Strategy

Speaking on the Mount of Olives at Bethany (Acts 1:4, 12), Jesus outlined a vision that would affect the whole world (1:8). He began by pointing to the starting point of gospel penetration—Jerusalem, two miles to the west. From there the message would spread to the surrounding region, Judea, and its estranged cousin to the north, Samaria. Eventually it would reach the entire world (though the crowd in Acts 1 probably understood "the end of the earth" as meaning the extent of the Roman Empire).

While Jesus' mandate sounds admirable today, it probably met with less than enthusiasm then. All of the places mentioned represented trouble and danger, both real and imagined. Jews—which almost all of Jesus' listeners were—were a small minority in the Roman Empire.

In fact, most of the apostles came from the Galilee region, north of Samaria. Galileans endured the scorn of their Jewish brothers from Judea, especially those from Jerusalem, who considered themselves more pure and orthodox, less contaminated by foreign influences. The lake region was derided as "Galilee of the Gentiles." Even the Galilean accent was chided.

Jerusalem

Jerusalem was not the apostles' home, but it was Judea's key city, center of its religious, political, economic, and cultural life. Jesus' crucifixion had recently taken place there. Leaders still plotted to stamp out what was left of His movement.

Yet Christ told His followers to start their witness there, in the place of greatest hostility and intimidation. They must have wondered: Could He protect them from the inevitable opposition they would encounter? Would they suffer the same terrible end that He had?

Judea and Samaria

The relationship of Jerusalem to Judea was that of urban center to province, or of city to state. By penetrating the city, the gospel would also permeate the city's surroundings.

However, Jesus was careful to link Judea to Samaria, its cousin to the north. The two regions endured a bitter rivalry dating to the early eighth century B.C., when the Assyrians colonized Samaria with non-Jews who intermarried with Israelites and thereby "corrupted" the race. Judea, which means "Jewish," considered itself the home of pure Judaism and viewed Samaria with contempt. As John points out in his account of the woman at the well at Sychar, "Jews have no dealings with Samaritans" (John 4:9).

In reaching Judea with the gospel, the Galilean apostles would have to surmount barriers of regional pride and cultural arrogance. But in moving into Samaria, they would have to overcome long-held ethnic prejudices.

The End of the Earth

Talk of the gospel spreading to "the end of the earth" signaled the eventual inclusion of Gentiles—the ultimate shock to the apostles. In their mind, the world was divided into Jews and non-Jews (Gentiles or "foreigners"). Extremely orthodox Jews would have nothing to do with Gentiles. Even Jews like the apostles, who had grown up alongside of Gentiles, avoided contact as much as possible.

For the gospel to spread to the Gentiles, then, Jesus' followers would have to overcome centuries of racial, religious, and cultural prejudice and break down well-established walls of separation. Eventually they did—but not without great conflict and tension.

1:4 As predicted by John the Baptist (Matt. 3:11; Mark 1:8; Luke 3:16; John 1:33) and reiterated by Jesus Himself, the Promise of the Father was the promise of baptism in the Holy Spirit. There are seven references in Scripture to baptism in the Spirit. Five are prophetic (v. 5; Matt. 3:11; Mark 1:8; Luke 3:16; John 1:33); one is historical (11:15, 16), referring to the Day of Pentecost; and one is doctrinal (1 Cor. 12:13), explaining the meaning of baptism in the Spirit.

1:5 shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit: The passive tense of the verb indicates that baptism does not depend upon our efforts to obtain the promise, but upon the Lord's will. The simple future tense demonstrates that there is no uncertainty or doubt in the promise. The Greek word for baptized means "to immerse" or "to dip." It also connotes being identified with someone or something. Spirit baptism means we have been placed in spiritual union with one another in the body of Jesus Christ, the church (1 Cor. 12:12, 13).

1:6 Therefore: Christ's statement that the Spirit was about to be given evidently triggered concern among the disciples about the establishment of the kingdom. They had expected this event to occur during Jesus' ministry; now, after the Resurrection, surely this was to be the time. Connecting the coming of the Spirit and the coming of the kingdom was consistent with OT thought (3:21; Is. 32:15–20; 44:3–5; Ezek. 39:28, 29; Joel 2:28—3:1; Zech. 12:8–10). At this time expresses the anxiety of the apostles as they anticipated the kingdom rule that Christ had spoken of in the preceding days and weeks (v. 3). The popular expectation and hope was that Christ would establish His kingdom immediately.

1:7 It is not for you to know: Jesus did not correct His disciples' views concerning the restoration of the kingdom to Israel (v. 6). Instead He corrected their views concerning the timing of the event. This was the same erroneous thinking that He had sought to correct with His parable in Luke 19:11–27, the parable of the minas. times or seasons: These words speak to the issue of timing differently. Times refers to chronology or the duration of time—"how long." Seasons refers to the epochs or "events" that occur within time. The disciples were not to know how long it would be before Christ set up His kingdom, nor were they to know what events would transpire before the establishment of it. Peter points out that even the OT prophets did not know the timing between the sufferings of Christ and the glories that would follow (1 Pet. 1:11). All things will happen in God's time and in God's way. This verse alone should keep anyone from attempting to set dates for the return of Christ.

Power with a Purpose

At the beginning of Acts, Jesus' followers appear confused and fearful. But by the end of the book they are well on their way to transforming the Roman world with the gospel. What accounts for this dramatic change? Acts 1:8 provides the answer: "You shall receive power." But notice: (1) The power promised was not force or political authority. Israel had enjoyed superiority under David and Solomon, but those days were a distant memory. Jesus was not indicating a revival of Jewish dominance. Instead, the word "power" means ability or capacity. Jesus promised that once the Holy Spirit came upon them, His followers would have a new ability.

(2) The ability had more to do with being than doing. The believers would "be witnesses," not just "do witnessing." Evangelism is a process, not just an event. It involves a total lifestyle, not just occasional efforts.

(3) The power came from without, not from within. The believers were not to manufacture their own ways of proclaiming the gospel, but to look for supernatural ability from the Spirit to make them effective in gospel presentation. The power came when the Holy Spirit arrived, not before.

(4) The believers were to be witnesses to Christ, not to themselves. They were to make disciples not to themselves but to the risen Lord (Matt. 28:18–20).

1:8 Instead of being concerned about the date of Christ's return, the disciples' job was to carry His message throughout the world. you shall receive power: This does not refer to personal power for godly living, as demonstrated in the lives of OT saints (see Abraham in Gen. 22; Joseph in Gen. 39; Moses in Ex. 14; Daniel in Dan. 6). This was power for a new task —namely, to take the gospel to the ends of the earth. Be witnesses is Christ's command to His disciples to tell others about Him regardless of the consequences. Church tradition tells us that all but one of the eleven apostles who heard this promise became martyrs (John died in exile). God empowered His disciples to be faithful witnesses even when they faced the most vehement opposition. That same power for witnessing is available to us today. Our task is not to convince people, but to testify of the truth of the gospel.

1:9–11 Jesus promised that He would not leave or forsake us, but would be with us always, even to the end of the age (Matt. 28:20; John 14:18). He fulfilled this promise in the form of the Holy Spirit, who dwells within believers (John 16:4–7). taken up … cloud received Him … He went up: These three statements portray the gradual, majestic departure of Jesus from the earth. The Ascension has very little place in the Gospel records. Rather, it is fitting that it should come at the beginning of Acts as the preparation for the Day of Pentecost, the birthday of the church, which is founded upon the death, resurrection, and ascension of its exalted head to the right hand of the Father. Christ had earlier said that the Holy Spirit would not come until He had departed (John 16:7), so Acts gives the leaving of Christ in ch. 1 and the coming of the Spirit in ch. 2 in juxtaposition to one another. will so come: The Second Coming of Christ and the establishment of His kingdom (vv. 6, 7) will occur the same way Jesus ascended: physically, visibly, and in the clouds.

1:12 A Sabbath day's journey was the distance permitted by Jewish custom for travel on a Sabbath day (Ex. 16:29; Num. 35:5; Josh. 3:4), about a half mile. Anyone who traveled farther than this would be regarded as breaking the fourth commandment.

1:13 The upper room could have been the room where Jesus spent the last Passover with His disciples, or the room in which He appeared to them after His resurrection (Luke 24). It is possible that the same room was the site of both events. This room may have belonged to Mary, the mother of John Mark. Her house is mentioned in 12:12 as a meeting place of the disciples. Jesus' followers were staying in this upper room, waiting in Jerusalem as the Lord had directed, until they received the power Jesus had promised (v. 5). Except for Peter, James and John, this will be the last mention of the apostles by name. The unmentioned, along with Peter, James, and John, go on to significant ministries for our Lord, giving their lives to accomplish the goal of the Great Commission. Peter was crucified upside down. Thomas was speared to death for his faith. Matthew was murdered by being thrust through with a spear. Matthias was beheaded. James was put to death with a fuller's club. Jude, Philip, and Bartholomew were crucified. The story of the Resurrection is powerfully authenticated by the willingness of the apostles to die rather than repudiate the truth of their testimony. People may lie when it suits their convenience, but will they cheerfully sacrifice their lives in order to perpetrate what they know to be a hoax? Not one of the apostles denied that he had been an eyewitness to the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus. Not one of these men backed off their testimony and their personal witness to the resurrection of Jesus Christ; they sealed their witness with their own blood.

1:14 with one accord: This phrase, which is found eleven times in the Book of Acts, is made up of two words that mean "same" and "mind." The phrase speaks of people sharing the same mind or thinking like-mindedly. It does not refer to people who all think and feel the same way about everything, but to people who set aside personal feelings and commit themselves to one task—in this case witnessing to others about the Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. 15:5, 6). Jesus said the world would know that He was sent from the heavenly Father when people saw the love between believers (John 17:21): the unity among the believers described in Acts was a demonstration of this love. Mary the mother of Jesus receives special recognition in the group. While on the Cross, Jesus had requested that John care for His mother (John 19:25–27).

1:15–17 From the earliest days of the apostles' calling, Peter assumed a position of leadership. Though he often made mistakes, he was never bashful about dealing with problems. It was inevitable that the matter of Judas Iscariot be dealt with. In the upper room a hundred and twenty people gathered. No doubt the majority of them were among those who saw the risen Christ (1 Cor. 15:6). Though Christ spent most of His time with the Twelve, there were many other disciples who traveled with Jesus (John 6:66). Holy Spirit spoke … mouth of David: Peter equated the speech of David with the voice of the Holy Spirit. This is an example of the biblical doctrine of inspiration, which asserts that the words of Scripture are equally the words of God and the words of men, with no error (2 Tim. 3:16; 1 Pet. 1:11; 2 Pet. 1:20, 21).

1:18, 19 purchased a field: The field that was obtained with the money Judas received for betraying Jesus was actually purchased by the priests after Judas hanged himself (Matt. 27:6–8). Since the money legally belonged to Judas, the priests purchased the field in his name. burst open … entrails gushed out: Apparently the noose Judas used to hang himself broke and his body fell, rupturing in the middle. This is why the place was called the Field of Blood.

1:20–23 Peter applied Pss. 69 and 109 to the apostles' situation. Psalm 69:25 speaks of the removal of the psalmist's enemy. Psalm 109:8 mentions the replacement of an enemy by someone else. Peter, enlightened by the teaching of Jesus (1:3; Luke 24:44–46), regarded these scriptural references as ultimately speaking of Judas the traitor. It was the defection of Judas, not his death, that caused Peter to ask the disciples to choose another to replace him. When James was later killed (12:2), no replacement was chosen for him. Peter specified two qualifications for the appointed apostle. First, he had to have accompanied the disciples from the beginning of Jesus' ministry, His baptism. The replacement had to be someone who had seen what the apostles had seen and heard what they had heard, an eyewitness to the miracles and teachings of Jesus. Second, he had to be an eyewitness of Jesus' resurrection.

1:24–26 cast their lots: It was customary for the Jews to determine the will of God on certain questions by this method. The names of Matthias and Justus, probably written on stones, were put in a jar that was shaken until one of the names fell out. The name that fell out of the vessel would be the one that God had chosen to take the place of Judas. The fall of the lot was determined not by chance but by God's sovereignty.

2:1 Pentecost was one of the three major Jewish festivals; the other two are the Passover and the Feast of Tabernacles. From the Greek word for "fifty," Pentecost was so named because it fell on the fiftieth day after the Sabbath of the Passover. Pentecost was also known as "the Feast of Weeks," "the Firstfruits of the Wheat Harvest," and "the Day of Firstfruits." During this harvest celebration, the Jews brought to God the firstfruits of their harvest in thanksgiving, expecting that God would give the rest of the harvest as His blessing. This particular Day of Pentecost was the day of firstfruits of Christ's church, the beginning of the great harvest of souls who would come to know Christ and be joined together through the work of the Holy Spirit. There are also some scholars who believe that Pentecost was an observance of the giving of the Law at Mount Sinai. This day in the Book of Acts is significant because it marks when God would begin writing that Law within our hearts. they were all: Many assume that the entire 120 persons mentioned in 1:15 were present when the Holy Spirit came on Pentecost. This is probably not the case. Several days may have passed from the occurrence of Peter speaking of Judas until the happenings at Pentecost. Luke does not say the next day, following 1:26 but when the day of Pentecost had come. Second, the they were all most naturally refers to the last mentioned group, namely, the apostles in 1:26. Third, the ones who spoke in tongues of 2:1–4 are described as Galileans, reminiscent of 1:11 which referred only to the apostles (compare 1:2, 3). Last, when Peter stands to speak in 1:14, he is spoken as being with the eleven other apostles, not a larger group of disciples. in one place: The place may have been part of the temple. It is difficult to imagine how the large crowd mentioned in v. 5 could have observed the activities in the upper room or congregated in the narrow streets outside the upper room of a house where the disciples were meeting.

The Nations of Pentecost

In the first Christian century, Jewish communities were located primarily in the eastern Roman Empire, where Greek was the common language. There were Jewish communities as far west as Italy and as far east as Babylonia. In addition to people from the nations shown here, those present on the Day of Pentecost (2:9–11) included visitors from Mesopotamia and even farther east, from Parthia, Media, and Elam (present-day Iran).

2:2 A sound like a rushing mighty wind was needed to attract the multitudes to the small gathering of apostles who were sitting, the normal position for listening to someone speak, rather than standing for prayer.

2:3 there appeared to them divided tongues, as of fire: After the great crowd-gathering sound of v. 2 came the visual manifestation of God. Fire often indicated the presence of God. God initially appeared to Moses in a burning bush that was not consumed (Ex. 3). God guided the children of Israel with a pillar of fire by night (Ex. 13:21, 22), and He descended before them in fire on Mount Sinai (Ex. 19:18). God sent fire to consume Elijah's offering on Mount Carmel (1 Kin. 18:38, 39), and He used a vision of fire to warn Ezekiel of His coming judgment (Ezek. 1:26, 27). This fire, in the form of tongues which divided itself upon each one of them, would immediately bring back thoughts of all of these OT examples of fire.

2:4 The word translated tongues here is the normal Greek word for known languages. Speaking in "tongues" or diverse languages underscored the universal outreach of the church. These witnesses were speaking foreign dialects to the people who had gathered for Pentecost from other nations. The Day of Pentecost, as one of the three major Jewish celebrations, was a pilgrimage event. People who lived outside Israel traveled to Jerusalem to celebrate the festival. They came from Arabia, Crete, Asia, and even as far away as Rome. Many of these people stayed in Jerusalem for the entire fifty-day celebration. Spirit gave them utterance: Note that the text does not say that the Spirit spoke through the apostles, but that the Spirit gave them the ability to speak in languages that they had not previously known.

2:5–11 men … from every nation under heaven: People from all over the known world were in Jerusalem. Most of them probably knew Greek, but they also spoke the various languages of the Mediterranean world. everyone heard them speak in his own language: The visitors to Jerusalem probably expected the apostles to use Aramaic or Greek, but instead they heard their own dialect. The visitors were astonished because they knew this was most unlikely unless the speakers had come from their land. This was a sign from heaven, a supernatural event. the wonderful works of God: It appears that the "speaking in tongues" did not consist of proclaiming the gospel. Rather, the apostles were praising God's mighty works (10:46; 1 Cor. 14:16).

2:12, 13 A contrast is made between two groups of people, the Hellenists and the Hebraists (6:1). Both groups heard the apostles speaking in tongues. Verse 12 speaks of the reaction of the Hellenists, who were from various parts of the world: they understood the dialects in which the apostles spoke and consequently viewed the event as miraculous. On the other hand, those mentioned in v. 13 were Judeans and did not understand the foreign languages the apostles were speaking. They concluded the apostles were drunk and speaking gibberish.

2:14 Peter, the first disciple to recognize the truth about Jesus (Matt. 16:13–19), was also the first to bear witness of Him. Peter preached his sermon to men of Judea who had judged the whole episode as being the effect of too much wine (vv. 13, 15).

2:15 these are not drunk: It was only 9:00 in the morning. Jews abstained from eating and drinking on a holy day until later in the day.

2:16–21 Peter began his sermon by quoting Joel 2:28–32 from the Greek translation of the OT. In that passage, God had promised that there would be a time when all those who followed Him would receive His Spirit, and not just prophets, kings, and priests. Peter pointed out that that time had come to pass. God would speak to and through all those who would come to Him, whether in visions, dreams, or prophecy. This was the beginning of the last days. God's final act of salvation began with the pouring out of His Spirit. This final act of deliverance will continue to the end of this age.

The Spirit of Prophecy

Old Testament passages associate the Spirit with creation, with new life, and with empowerment for various divine missions, most often for the mission of a prophet. By Jesus' day, Jewish interpreters most frequently emphasized prophetic empowerment: the Spirit empowered God's servants to hear Him and to speak His message the way He desired.

Many Jewish people believed that God had withdrawn the Spirit after the death of the prophets Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi. The general assumption was that prophecy continued occasionally on a lower level, but the full restoration of the Spirit was yet to come. Prophets like Isaiah and Ezekiel had promised the final restoration of the Spirit (Is. 44:3; Ezek. 39:29). Nevertheless, the Spirit was not expected until the end time, in the period in which the Messiah would come, and most Jewish people did not believe that the Messiah had come yet.

Peter, recognizing that the Messiah had come in Jesus and that the Spirit who empowered the prophets was now fully active among God's people, chose an OT text about the outpouring of the Spirit of prophecy (Joel 2:28–32). To make it clear that Joel's prophecy refers to the end time, Peter added explanatory words to his quote of Joel: "in the last days" (Acts 2:17).

Further, Peter was teaching that the end time had already begun because the Messiah had already come and taken His heavenly throne (2:34–36). Thus, some "signs in the earth" (2:19) had been fulfilled by Jesus (2:22). This in turn meant that the time of salvation of which Joel spoke had also arrived. Thus, Peter viewed the Spirit of prophecy as an end-time gift. God's servants should consider themselves to be empowered by the same Spirit who empowered Isaiah, Jeremiah, Huldah, Samuel, Deborah, and others.

So thoroughly did Peter wish to emphasize this point that he took a liberty used sometimes by Jewish interpreters in his day. He added some more explanatory words to the text he was quoting: "And they shall prophesy" (2:18).

2:22–24 being delivered by the determined purpose: Jesus Christ was God's provision for the judgment of sin; yet it was our sinfulness that made

His death necessary. In other words, it was both the sinfulness of humanity and God's plan to save humanity that put Jesus to death on the Cross (Is. 53:10). God exercises sovereign control over all events—even the death of His Son. Yet at the same time, people are still responsible for their own sinful actions.

2:25–36 Joel prophesied that the Spirit would come; Jesus fulfilled that promise when He sent the Spirit (John 14:16). If Jesus was dead, He could not have sent the Spirit. Therefore, He must be alive. Furthermore, Jesus could not have sent the Spirit unless He had ascended as Lord to heaven. Therefore, Jesus is both our Master and our Savior. let me speak freely: Peter knew (v. 29) that no one could dispute the point he was about to make from Ps. 16:8–11, in which the Messiah is described as not decaying. Because David had been buried and had not come back to life, the psalm had to be speaking about someone else, David's heir. Peter pointed out that this heir is Jesus, who was put to death and resurrected. Not only had Jesus been raised from the dead, He is now at the right hand of God. As further proof of this Peter quoted David again. According to Ps. 110:1, the Messiah would sit at the right hand of God. David had not ascended to the heavens. But the apostles declared themselves to be witnesses of the very ascension spoken of in this psalm, the ascension of Jesus. Based on these points, Peter's conclusion is clear: Jesus, the One who had been crucified, is both Lord and Christ.

2:37 Peter's argument was irrefutable. Cut to the heart, the Judeans asked what they should do. This was the point of new birth. The Spirit of God brought conviction to their hearts, the springboard of action.

2:38 Repent: Repentance for the Judeans involved rejecting their former attitudes and opinions concerning who Jesus was. In faith they had to accept Him for who He declared Himself to be while on earth, a declaration that was confirmed by His resurrection and ascension. be baptized: When a person recognizes who Jesus Christ really is, the result is the desire to do what He commands. The first action that Jesus requires of a new believer is baptism (Matt. 28:19, 20), the outward expression of inward faith. The idea of an unbaptized Christian is foreign to the NT (v. 41; 8:12, 36; 9:18; 10:48; 16:15, 33; 18:8). Faith and baptism are integrally connected. Baptism comes after faith in Christ but it is the first Christian sign of faith in Christ. Faith is to baptism what words are to ideas. It is possible to have ideas without words but for the ideas to be understood by others words are needed. The same is true with baptism and trust in Christ. If a person says that he has placed his faith in Jesus Christ as his Savior, then he or she should want to obey Him as Lord and do what is pleasing in God's sight. for the remission of sins: Is Peter saying that we must be baptized to receive forgiveness of our sins? Scripture clearly teaches that we are justified by faith alone, not by works (Rom. 4:1–8; Eph. 2:8, 9). The critical word in this phrase is the word for, which may also be translated "with a view to." A comparison of Peter's message in 10:34–43 makes it clear that "remission of sins" comes to "whoever believes." Believers are baptized in view of God's work of forgiveness, not in order to receive that forgiveness. God's forgiveness in Christ gives baptism its significance. Baptism is a public declaration that a person's sins have been forgiven because of Christ's work on the Cross. Another grammatical option may be to understand it as "(you) repent for the remission of your sins, and let each of you be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ." Others have interpreted baptism as a sign and seal of God's grace, similar to circumcision, which was a sign of the Abrahamic covenant. The gift of the Holy Spirit was the promise of Jesus in John 14:16, 17. The Holy Spirit puts us in communion with the Father and the Son. This indwelling of the Spirit is a beautiful promise of the New Covenant (Jer. 31:33, 34), an indication not only that our sins are forgiven, but also that the Lord has placed His law within us.

2:39 Peter exhorted his listeners to repent. In other words, each person had to make the decision to turn away from his or her sinful habits and turn to God in faith (16:31, 33, 34). Then God would forgive that person's sins and declare them righteous because of Jesus' work on the Cross. to you and to your children: In first-century Israel, a father held tremendous influence in his home. When a father chose to receive Christ and be baptized, his children would follow his lead.

2:40–43 three thousand souls: The response to Peter's sermon was tremendous. Such impressive growth in the number of believers created additional needs and responsibilities. The apostles had the duty of training this large group and bringing them into fellowship with the other believers. This was a four-step process: (1) The new believers were to be trained in the apostles' doctrine. Uniformity of belief concerning the person of Jesus Christ—based on the eyewitness testimony of His followers—was essential. (2) The new believers were to be trained in the fellowship of the church. The Greek word translated fellowship means sharing in the lives of other believers. (3) The new believers were to be trained in the breaking of bread, probably a reference to the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 11:23, 24). Some believe this is a broader reference to the "love feast," a meal of fellowship in the early church. (4) The new believers were to be trained in the discipline of prayer. Corporate prayers were viewed as an essential part of the spiritual growth of the church. Wonders and signs apparently were given by the Lord to the apostles to validate their divinely ordained position and to verify the truthfulness of their witness in the establishment of the early church (Heb. 2:3, 4).

2:44, 45 The disposal and distribution of possessions in the early church was directed among all, as anyone had need. When a physical or spiritual need became known in the church, action was taken to address it (1 John 3:17). The NT believers demonstrated their love for one another by giving self-sacrificially. Was this a form of early communism? Most definitely not. Communism teaches that possessions should be distributed to everybody equally, so that nobody will have more than anyone else. Here, the disposal and distribution of the possessions of the early church was based on need. In communism the state uses the police power to accomplish the desired result. Here, the pooling of resources was not obligatory but a free expression of love to those who were poor and hurting. Communism desires a permanent restructuring of society, while the distribution in this case was limited and temporary until the severe crisis was dealt with because of the great influx of Christian converts.

2:46, 47 They continued with one accord, not in isolation, but in the temple.

IN COMPARISON

The Powerful Name of Jesus

Using none of the sophisticated marketing strategies of today's corporate giants, a small-town carpenter's name managed to become a byword in the first-century world. Why? Because there was power in His name.

Jesus means "Jehovah {God} is salvation" or "Jehovah delivers." Early Christians discovered just how true to His name Jesus was. In Acts 3 and 4, Luke records a sequence of events resembling a five-act drama, in which the name of Jesus features prominently.

The Five-Act Drama of Acts 3 and 4
Act One, 3:1–10	The lame man healed at the gate.	The name of Jesus healed him (3:6).
Act Two, 3:11–26	Peter's sermon identifies Jesus with the "I Am" of Israel's history. Jesus is Lord!	Faith in the name of Jesus brings salvation (3:16, 26).
Act Three, 4:1–12	Peter and John imprisoned and tried.	No other name but Jesus can be called on to bring salvation to all the earth (4:12).
Act Four, 4:13–22	Peter and John warned and released.	Though opposed, the name of Jesus rings true—"God delivers" (4:18, 21).
Act Five, 4:23–37	The church responds by worshiping Jesus, caring for each other, and witnessing about Christ.	Signs and wonders continue to be done through the name of Jesus (4:30).

3:1 went up … to the temple: The disciples of Jesus continued to follow Jewish tradition. A prayer service accompanied each of the two daily sacrifices, one in the morning and the other in the afternoon. The ninth hour would have been 3 P.M.

3:2, 3 The lame man was laid near the gate called Beautiful. This gate opened into the Court of the Women from the outer Court of the Gentiles. It served, in a sense, as the front door to the temple proper. The Beautiful Gate would have been an ideal place for the man to position himself for begging. Those who ignored the man's pleas may have found it difficult to worship due to the guilt they felt for refusing to help such a powerless person. Moreover, as people left the temple they would be more apt to give to someone who was waiting there for help.

3:4, 5 Look at us: It was important to get the man's undivided attention, even more important than an outstretched hand (Mark 10:51).

3:6 The apostles indicated immediately that they did not represent themselves in what they were about to do. They represented Jesus Christ. Because of His name—who He is—the beggar would receive the miracle of God. The phrase "in the name of Jesus" is not a magical formula used to give some affirmation or guarantee to a prayer. A person's name represented that person's authority and influence. The power in the name of Jesus comes from what the Holy Spirit will do because of that name. Note that Peter and John did not lay their hands on the beggar and pray for God to heal him. Rather, as apostles with the power of God to perform signs and wonders, they simply told him to rise up and walk.

3:7, 8 his feet and ankle bones received strength: Luke, a physician by profession, described what took place. Instantly strength was given to the portions of the body that needed it. Blood supply was increased to the muscle. The brain sent signals to the nerve endings of the ankles and feet. The hardened fluid between the joints was softened, and the atrophied muscles and ligaments regained flexibility. The feet suddenly could bear the man's weight.

3:9 the people saw him: Public opinion was an important factor in the decision of the leaders, both in their condemnation of Jesus (Matt. 27:24) and in their treatment of the apostles (Acts 4:16, 17).

3:10 The people had seen the beggar day after day, maybe year after year. His healing was not a staged event. When the beggar stood and walked, the only reasonable explanation was that God had healed him.

3:11, 12 the people ran together to them: People were following after them, but the apostles immediately gave all the glory to Jesus.

3:13–16 glorified His Servant Jesus: Peter's reference to "His Servant" comes from Is. 52:13, a messianic psalm. Jesus can be considered the Servant of God because He gave His life as a guilt offering for the sins of all humanity. The Father raised Jesus from the dead as confirmation that His sacrifice was accepted. Peter pointed to the healing of the beggar as a sign of the glorification of Christ. The people had handed Jesus over to Pilate to be crucified. Yet God had raised the crucified Jesus from the dead. It was in the name of this very same Jesus that the crippled man was healed.

3:17, 18 you did … God foretold: Throughout Peter's sermon in ch. 2, he balances the human responsibility of the Jews and Romans with the eternal plan of God.

3:19, 20 The word translated refreshing refers to restoration of strength and nourishment. Strength is restored when hope is restored. Peter challenged the people to repent and be converted, to change their thinking about Jesus as their Messiah and to serve Him.

3:21 The restoration may allude to the expected rule of the Messiah after His return (1:11; 17:31).

3:22, 23 The Jewish leaders expected a fulfillment of the prediction in Deut. 18:15 (John 1:21, 22). Peter announced its fulfillment and identified the Prophet as Jesus.

3:24–26 sons of the prophets, and of the covenant: These Jewish people were the first recipients of the blessings promised to Abraham, prophesied by the prophets, and provided by Jesus. all the families of the earth: We too are included in the blessing of being turned away from our iniquities —God's purpose in sending Christ.

4:1–4 The Sadducees were greatly disturbed for two reasons. First, the Sadducees were skeptics who rejected all the OT except the books of Moses, and who denied the resurrection from the dead. Peter's teaching about the Resurrection challenged their beliefs and teaching. Second, the Sadducees were leaders of the Jews at that time. They came from wealthy families and consorted with the Roman government in order to maintain their position, influence, and wealth. The last thing the Sadducees wanted was for a couple of Jewish men to declare the resurrection of a king. laid hands on them … believed: The attempt to silence God's truth by arresting His messengers did not hinder His work. Though God's servants are chained, His word is never chained (2 Tim. 2:9). The result of the Sadducees' taking two men into custody was that five thousand people believed the gospel message.

4:5, 6 were gathered together: The Sanhedrin, which consisted of 70 men plus the high priest, was the highest Jewish court. The group consisted of the wealthiest, most educated, and most powerful Jewish men in Israel. Annas the high priest: Annas had been removed as high priest in A.D. 14 by the Romans. At the time of Christ, the high priests were appointed by the Roman governors. Apparently Annas had become a political threat to Rome. The Jewish people refused to acknowledge Roman authority over such matters; so even though Annas was officially removed from his office, the Jewish people still considered him high priest. Caiaphas, the son-in-law of Annas, was the actual high priest. John was most likely the son of Annas who succeeded Caiaphas in A.D. 37.

4:7 Because the healing of the lame man was indisputable (3:1–10), the question was how the man was healed and by whose authority or name the healing had been performed.

“filled with the Holy Spirit”

(Gk. pletho pneumatos hagiou) (2:4; 4:8, 31; 9:17; 13:9; Luke 1:15, 41, 67) Strong’s #4130; 4151; 40: The Greek word pletho is used for describing the filling of anything from a sponge to a boat (Matt. 27:48; Luke 5:7). Luke uses this common term to describe how the Holy Spirit influences a person. He uses the expression filled with the Holy Spirit eight times in his writings. In every case, the filling of the Holy Spirit enables the person so endowed to speak or preach for God. Thus, the filling of the Spirit is directly related to the prophetic ministry, the revelation or explanation of God’s Word.

4:8–10 Peter, filled with the Holy Spirit: This is the second description in the Book of Acts of someone being filled with the Holy Spirit (v. 31; 2:4; 9:17; 13:9). The initial filling accompanied the baptism in the Spirit. This filling brought boldness for God’s work. Jesus had promised His disciples that they would stand before kings and rulers and that the Spirit of God within them would implant in their minds exactly what to say to these leaders (Matt. 10:16–20). It is interesting to compare the actions of this Spirit-controlled Peter with the Christ-denying Peter when he stood in the courtyard intimidated about his faith before a servant maid in Matt. 26:69–75. On that occasion, Peter denied Christ three times. Now, Peter stood unafraid and unashamed before the Sanhedrin, the highest Jewish court in the land.

4:11 the chief cornerstone: The OT refers to the cornerstone as the foundation of the earth (Job 38:6), the foundation (Is. 28:16), the stone for the corner (Jer. 51:26), the head cornerstone (Ps. 118:22), or the headstone (Zech. 4:7). Thus the image of a cornerstone is used as both the chief stone and the stone at the corner of a foundation. In the first century A.D., the expression chief cornerstone was also used to refer to the stone placed on the summit of the Jerusalem temple. The cornerstone was the uniting stone at the corner of two walls that joined them together. It was the stone built into one corner of the foundation of an edifice and was the actual starting point of the entire building. Thus, Peter used the phrase to point out that when the people rejected Jesus Christ, they rejected the One who completed the plan of God for humankind. The phrase and its significance here would have been well understood in the first century, especially among the Jewish rabbis and people who knew the Scriptures.

4:12 no other name: Only by placing faith in the historical Jesus—the One who came, died, and was raised again—can a person be saved.

4:13 Even though Peter and John were uneducated Galilean fishermen, they spoke with confidence and freedom. Their presentation of the gospel was powerful because they were personal witnesses of everything they spoke about (1:22).

4:14–18 they could say nothing: The Sanhedrin knew that the miracle was real. The apostles offered their explanation: the miracles were the work of the resurrected Christ. But instead of believing, the members of the Sanhedrin concerned themselves with "damage control." They tried to intimidate the apostles by warning them not to speak or teach in the name of Jesus.

4:19–22 listen to you more than to God: There is no authority apart from God. When human authority rejects God's authority, it becomes twisted and loses its right to demand compliance (5:29). From the beginning, God's people have resisted any command that was against God's will (for example, the Jewish midwives of Ex. 1; Moses' parents in Heb. 11:23; Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-Nego in Dan. 3).

4:23–31 The response of Peter and John's companions after the apostles' release was a spontaneous outburst of praise, song, and prayer.

Sharing Things in Common

The first Christians were extraordinarily generous. In fact, “they had all things in common” (Acts 4:32–35), an ideal that pure communism advocated but never achieved. So were these first believers in some sense communists?

No. In the first place, they were not setting up an economic system here, but simply responding to each other with gracious, Christlike compassion. Such behavior was one powerful result of the outpouring of the Spirit (2:1–4). Unfortunately, not all NT believers demonstrated that kind of concern (5:1–11; 1 Cor. 6:8; James 4:1, 2).

Furthermore, Scripture never mandates an equal distribution of goods, nor does it call for the elimination of property or ownership. This passage (along with Acts 2:44, 45) is a historical account, not a doctrinal treatise. It documents the work of God in building the early church.

In that day, as in ours, there were both rich and poor Christians (2 Cor. 8:2; 1 Tim. 6:17–19). And when the NT does address issues such as wealth, care for the poor, work, equality, widows, slaves, and public justice, it inevitably calls believers to compassion and generosity; but not to asceticism, the idea that one can become more godly through self-denial and renouncing worldly wealth. In fact, Paul warns against that (Col. 2:18–23). The Bible condemns the love of wealth, not its possession, as a root of all kinds of evil (1 Tim. 6:9, 10).

4:32–37 Luke notes that for the early Christians, being filled with the Holy Spirit meant not only proclaiming the Word of God, but also sharing their possessions with those in need.

5:1, 2 Ananias and Sapphira wanted to have a reputation like that of Barnabas (4:36, 37), but they did not have the same character he had. At a time when others were seeking to serve their fellow believers, Ananias and Sapphira were seeking to serve themselves.

5:3 why has Satan filled your heart: Ananias and Sapphira believed in the Lord Jesus Christ; however, they had succumbed to the temptations of greed and pride. Note that the same word filled is used here in connection with Satan as is used in 4:8 of the Holy Spirit. The term means to take possession of or control. God's children, who have been freed from the tyranny of Satan, have the ability to choose whom they will allow to control them. When we choose to sin, we open the door to Satan. The Evil One tempted Ananias and Sapphira with wicked desires and thoughts, and they yielded their will to these temptations. lie to the Holy Spirit: The author of all lies is Satan (John 8:44). When Ananias and Sapphira deliberately lied, they took upon themselves the moral character of the one who is behind all lies, the devil himself.

5:4 You have not lied to men but to God: The Holy Spirit is the third person of the triune Godhead. To lie to Him (v. 3) is to lie to God. in your own control: Ananias and Sapphira could have kept a part of their proceeds or they could have kept it all; their stewardship was between them and the Lord. But the problem was that they wanted others to believe they had sacrificed everything when in fact they had given only a portion to the Lord.

5:5–7 fell down and breathed his last: The severity of the punishment may seem extreme to some people, much like the story of Achan in Josh. 7:16–26. However, Prov. 6:16–19 tells us how God feels about deception and division. The early church was vulnerable to great spiritual danger. Yet Jesus had promised (Matt. 16:18) that the power of hell would not destroy this fledging church in its infant stage. God would move with great discipline to ensure its purity and survival.

5:8 Peter gave Ananias's wife an opportunity to tell the truth. Sapphira would not be disciplined for the sin of her husband. Even though Ananias and Sapphira were married, they were also brother and sister in Jesus Christ. Sapphira was responsible for her own personal relationship with God. When Sapphira committed the same sin of rebellion and deception that her husband had committed, she received her own punishment.

5:9 to test the Spirit: A challenge to God to expose their duplicity.

5:10, 11 the great fear: Evidences the great respect Ananias and Sapphira had among the believers. If God was so severe with these believers, they knew they had better watch their step.

The Danger of Lying to God

The dramatic account of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:1–11) immediately after the mention of Barnabas (4:36, 37) draws a stark contrast between two kinds of people. On the one hand, Barnabas serves as a positive model of sincere faith, as evidenced by his open-handed generosity. On the other hand, Ananias and Sapphira serve as negative models.

Externally, they appeared the same. Like Barnabas, they sold land and brought money to the church, where they "laid it at the apostles' feet" (4:37; 5:2). But internally, they had a radically different commitment.

The sins that Peter named—lying to the Holy Spirit (5:3) and testing the Spirit (5:9)—indicate that they were playing games with God. Peter noted that the source of their deception was Satan. As the ultimate liar (John 8:44), Satan had filled their hearts with lies, in contrast to the Holy Spirit, who fills the heart with truth (14:16, 17; Eph. 5:6–21). And like Israel, they were testing the Spirit (1 Cor. 10:1–13), testing the limits of what He would permit, trying to see how much they could get away with.

God dealt severely with this couple by making an example of them. As a result, fear came upon the church (Acts 5:5, 11)—not a cringing fear of dread, but a heightened respect for God's holiness, His moral purity. The incident still stands as a bold warning to believers today about relating to God.

5:12 Signs refers to supernatural occurrences that point to a warning, instruction, or encouragement from God. A sign gave credibility to the fact that what was being said was from God. Wonders points to the response to a sign. By its very nature a wonder caused awe in those who saw or heard it. Signs and wonders were given by God to confirm His word (Matt. 12:38, 39).

5:13 none … dared join them because of the recent discipline (5:1–11).

5:14 Not only did fear come upon the church because of the discipline, but believers were increasingly added to the Lord.

5:15 In the ancient world many people believed that a person's shadow could possess magical healing powers. The people referred to in this verse were not necessarily Christians, but those who believed that Peter, as an advocate of a new religion, had magical powers. The people imposed their superstitions upon this new faith.

5:16 they were all healed: God, working miracles through the apostles, never failed to bring complete physical restoration.

5:17 Sadducees … filled with indignation were threatened by the teaching of the apostles. The people were sympathetic to this movement that challenged the Sadducees' denial of the Resurrection and charged them with the murder of the Messiah.

5:18 The imprisonment of the apostles apparently was a common event in the early church.

5:19 an angel of the Lord: The word for angel basically means "messenger." The phrase "angel of the Lord" is commonly used in the OT to refer to a spiritual messenger of God, and probably refers to the preincarnate Christ in most instances. Considering the events of this particular passage, it is clear that a supernatural visitor is in view.

5:20 Note that the angel's orders were not to escape from the city, but to return to the temple courts, where the disciples had been first arrested, and speak to the people. The fact that the disciples would return to the place of their arrest was an open testimony to the Jewish leaders and the general public that these men were willing to die for the truth they were proclaiming.

5:21–25 While the council was meeting to deal with the problem, their prisoners were back at the temple teaching the people (v. 25).

5:26 How powerless the captain and the officers were before God's witnesses.

5:27, 28 bring this Man's blood on us: A response to the apostles' accusation that the Jewish leaders had personally crucified Jesus (v. 30 and note; 4:10). They were not rid of Jesus yet and felt increasingly on the defensive. They refused to accept Jesus as Messiah because they did not want to lose their authority.

5:29 We ought to obey God: As to the accusation of disobedience to authority, Peter put the charge in context. Jesus had said, "You shall be My witnesses" (1:8). The council said, "You shall not be His witnesses" (v. 28). All authority comes from God. When any authority commands what God has forbidden, or forbids what God has commanded, a Christian must obey the Author of all authority, God Himself. We submit to governmental authority because the One who instituted the authority is God Himself. When we submit to government, we are submitting to God.

5:30 Tree here refers to the Cross (Deut. 21:22, 23; 1 Pet. 2:24).

5:31, 32 The declaration that God has exalted Him to His right hand would have been understood by the Sanhedrin as a reference to the Resurrection. The apostles' claim regarded the resurrected Jesus as equal with God (John 5:18; 10:33).

5:33 The council plotted to kill them, as they had disposed of Jesus and later would also of Stephen, all in the name of religion.

5:34 Gamaliel was a highly respected Pharisee, the grandson of the famous Rabbi Hillel, a brilliant spiritual leader. Gamaliel was the teacher of Saul, who would later become the apostle Paul (22:3). Gamaliel was given the honored title of "Rabban," meaning "Our Teacher." It is said in the Mishna—the commentary on the Torah, the first five books of the OT—that when Gamaliel died, "the glory of the Torah ceased, and purity and sanctity died out also." This is an impressive eulogy for a Jewish teacher.

5:35–37 A certain Theudas is mentioned by the Jewish historian Josephus, who places Theudas's revolt against Rome around A.D. 44. According to Gamaliel, the revolution by Theudas took place before Judas of Galilee, who began the Zealot movement around A.D. 6. The Romans quickly punished Theudas and his followers, forcing the movement underground. Some scholars believe Luke erred in placing Theudas before Judas of Galilee. However, it is more likely that Gamaliel and Josephus spoke of two different men. Theudas was a very common name. There were a number of insurrections and revolution attempts recorded: Josephus himself refers to ten thousand of them. Most likely, the revolution of Theudas that Gamaliel referred to took place before A.D. 6 and was led by a different Theudas than the person Josephus mentions in his history.

5:38, 39 This influential Pharisee argued boldly that the teaching of the apostles might be of God. If so, he knew that teaching would refute the position of the Sadducees that there was no resurrection.

5:40 they agreed with him: God first delivered the disciples from jail by supernatural means, sending an angel from heaven (vv. 19, 20). Then God delivered them through natural means, causing an enemy of Christianity to argue for their release. This passage is proof of the work of God's sovereign hand in history. He can even use the thoughts of those who oppose the gospel to preserve and protect His servants.

5:41 This verse provides the first instance of physical persecution against the followers of Jesus Christ—in this case against the leaders of the Christian movement. The apostles' response would set a precedent for other Christians who would be persecuted. Instead of complaining or feeling sorry for themselves, they rejoiced that they were counted worthy by God to endure the abuse. The apostles knew that more important things than preserving their health and life were at stake. God was using the suffering of the disciples to bring people into His kingdom (Matt. 5:10–12; Phil. 1:29; 2 Tim. 2:12).

5:42 In defiance of the ban they continued daily, in public and in private, teaching the Good News that the Messiah had come.

Transformed Disciples

Once you've read the early chapters of Acts, and compared them to the closing chapters of any of the Gospels, you can't help but notice the radical change in the disciples. On Passover weekend, in early spring, they run for their lives when Jesus is arrested. They are afraid to stand with Him when He faces death. Peter, the lead disciple, won't even admit to household servants that he is a disciple.

Fifty days later, each disciple is willing to face death alone on behalf of Jesus. In the temple courtyard, within the viewing of Jewish leaders who plotted the execution of Jesus, they speak the same words that got Jesus killed: they proclaim Him Messiah and Son of God.

Something happened during those 50 days to change the disciples—something that wiped away their fear of death.

They had seen the afterlife. They talked with the resurrected Jesus and ate fish with Him along the seashore. Months before they had heard His words, "Do not fear those who kill the body but cannot kill the soul" (Matt. 10:28). But now they believed Him. And then the Holy Spirit fell upon them, making them bold to witness to the risen Jesus, who is Lord over all.

Fearless of death, they witness to Jesus by continuing His teachings and actions. Eventually, early Christian writers report, this costs them their life. But, Jesus would quickly add, not their soul.

6:1 The Hellenists were those of Jewish descent who grew up outside the land of Israel. They spoke Greek, were raised in Hellenistic culture, and used the Greek translation of the Hebrew OT, the Septuagint (2:5). The Hebrews were Palestinian Jews who spoke Aramaic and used the Hebrew OT. There may have been an animosity between the groups, even among the new believers, which gave rise to distrust and tension over the care of the widows who were neglected. In Jewish law, a woman did not receive an inheritance. She was dependent on her husband or another relative.

6:2 should leave the word of God: The issue here was not blame, but rather what could be done to remedy the apparent injustice. The apostles knew that the problem of supporting the needy required attention. Though the apostles were sensitive enough to recognize the problem, they were also careful to recognize the priorities that are placed on church leaders by God. They could not leave what God had called them to do—declaring and teaching the word of God and establishing the church in prayer. serve tables: In NT times, business was transacted over tables. The work of administrating and distributing care to those in need would have been carried on over tables and thus was a ministry of service rather than a ministry of speaking. The words serve here and ministry in v. 4 translate Greek words that are related to the English word deacon.

6:3 seek out: The leaders of the church included the congregation in the search process. The local council in Jewish communities usually consisted of seven men known as the "seven of the town." The men who would be chosen would be known among the people for their good reputation because they were full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom. The men's lives were consistent with their confession of faith. They knew the will of God and understood how to carry it out in their lives (Eph. 5:15–18). They could be trusted with responsibility and authority.

6:4 prayer and … word: Note the order here. Prayer was primary for the apostles (2:42).

6:5 they chose Stephen … Nicolas: All these names are Greek. The selection of Hellenists no doubt was a wise and gracious gesture to the people who had initially raised the complaint concerning the widows (v. 1).

6:6 The laying on of hands was not for these men to receive the Holy Spirit, because the seven men were already "full of the Holy Spirit" (vv. 3, 5). Instead the apostles were conferring on these men the responsibility of carrying out the ministry. The laying on of hands was a meaningful tradition that dated back to the days of Moses (Num. 27:15–23), and it identified people with the ministries to be performed.

6:7 the word of God spread: What Jesus Christ had done in the lives of these people was spreading throughout the region. Men and women became disciples who lived in submission to Christ's lordship. They were not ashamed of their faith, but with great boldness they went out to bear witness to the truth of the gospel that had changed their lives. This is what Jesus promised would happen. Through people sharing with those who had yet to hear the Good News, the church experienced dramatic growth. Those who came to know Christ did not keep that knowledge to themselves, but went out and told others. a great many of the priests: It is estimated that in Jerusalem there were some eight thousand priests. Luke is not referring here to those who attacked the faith (4:1, 2; 5:17, 18). Most priests were not from the high priestly families. They had ordinary vocations that permitted them to serve their turn in the temple periodically—much like Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist. These were humble, devoted men of God who became obedient to the faith, recognizing Jesus as the Christ. Their service in the temple was enhanced because they understood the truth behind the rituals they performed.

6:8 Stephen was full of wisdom (v. 3), full of the Holy Spirit (v. 5), and full of faith and power. He had the gifts, the boldness, and the brilliance to be a powerful witness; yet even his witness would be rejected by the religious leaders. Hearts are opened only by God, not by our gifts, boldness, or brilliance.

IN CONTEXT

The Hebrews and the Hellenists

Tensions developed in the Jerusalem church over alleged discrimination on the basis of language and culture. Scholars differ in their descriptions of the two opposing groups: the "Hebrews" and the "Hellenists." The Hebrews are often described as Aramaic-speaking Jews native to Palestine. The Hellenists were possibly Greek-speaking Jews from outside of Palestine. Most Jews in Jerusalem, however, would have spoken Greek as at least one language, so more likely the Hellenists were Diaspora (foreign) Jews, or their children, who had settled in Jerusalem. Some of these foreign Jews probably had come from places such as Cyrene, Alexandria, Cilicia, or Asia (Acts 6:9).

Widows were a disadvantaged segment of ancient society, invariably poor and easily oppressed. Jewish people traditionally cared for the widows and other poor through the charity collections of local synagogues. The Hellenist synagogues, however, probably had more widows to care for than other synagogues, hence were stretched to the limit in their capacity to help. Since it was considered pious to spend one's last days in Jerusalem, many foreign Jewish men moved to Jerusalem when they retired, eventually leaving an inordinate number of foreign Jewish widows needing support.

This broader societal problem spilled over into the church: how would they care for the foreign Jewish widows among them? And how could they be sure to keep this minority group within the church from feeling second-class? Most people in antiquity simply told offended minorities to be quiet, but the apostles had a different solution: they selected members of the Hellenist minority to run the food distribution program. All seven of those selected have Greek names (6:5), suggesting that all or most were foreign Jews. These seven Hellenists were commissioned for the office of charity distributor, a highly respected position in Jerusalem (6:6).

6:9–11 the Synagogue of the Freedmen: A synagogue was a local place of worship, a community center for worship and studying the Scriptures. In contrast, the temple was the one worship center for all Judaism, the focus of Jewish rituals such as sacrifice. There were many synagogues both in Judea and throughout the Roman world. The one referred to in this verse was for Hellenistic Jews from outside Jerusalem.

6:12, 13 Resistance to the gospel had gone from discussion to debate, from debate to slander, and from slander to violence. The antagonist stirred up the people by convincing them that the essence of the Jewish faith—the things held as most sacred: the temple, the Law, Moses, and even God—was under attack by Stephen. The issue was not the work of Christ on the Cross but the core of traditional Jewish religion.

6:14 this place: The importance of the temple would be ended by the gospel that Stephen preached (7:48). That gospel would fulfill the revelation of God to Moses, but also change the Mosaic customs as understood by the Jewish leaders. The rest of Acts describes these conflicts (15:22–29; 21:27–29; 24:5–21).

6:15 Stephen was so full of the Spirit that his face was radiant (2 Cor. 3:18).

IN CONTEXT

The Synagogue

In nearly every city in which we find Jesus or Paul in the NT, we also find a synagogue for the Jewish population—even in Jerusalem, the home of the temple, the center of worship. No one knows when synagogues came into being. Some scholars believe that synagogues are hinted at in Ps. 74:8. Certainly instruction and debate must have occurred in some organized manner and in some building within the villages and cities away from Jerusalem during OT times.

Yet most scholars agree that the NT form of the synagogue probably began taking shape after the temple in Jerusalem had been destroyed and during the Exile. With their people scattered around the known world, displaced Jews needed meeting places within their new communities where they could learn about the faith of their fathers and worship God.

By the time of Jesus and Paul, synagogues served as local centers of worship, education, and government in the Jewish community. Although subject to the law of the land, each synagogue had its own government, led by elders who were empowered to exercise discipline and punish members. The rebuilt temple in Jerusalem remained the center for sacrificial worship and the site at which to celebrate appointed feasts. But the synagogue played an ever-increasing role in the religious instruction of the Jews. In fact, one tradition claims that there were anywhere from 394 to 480 synagogues within Jerusalem itself around A.D. 70.

According to tradition, a synagogue was established wherever there were as many as ten Jewish men. The principal meeting was on the Sabbath, and a typical service consisted of the recitation of the Shema, a confession of faith in the one God (Deut. 6:4–9), prayers, scripture readings from the Law and the Prophets, a sermon, and a benediction.

It was in first-century synagogues that the Christian faith began taking hold. Paul and other missionaries never rejected their Jewish faith, but rather saw Christ as the fulfillment of all that they had been taught in the synagogues. Their fellow worshipers also believed in the one true God, studied the Scriptures, and looked for the coming Messiah. For the early Christian missionaries, the local synagogues were the logical places to start their ministries.

7:1 The high priest presumably was Caiaphas, the man who had presided over the Sanhedrin's trial of Jesus.

7:2, 3 The God of glory appeared: God intervened in history again and again to speak to His people. When God first spoke to Abraham, it was not in the temple of Jerusalem; it was not even in Palestine.

7:4 The text does not explain why Abraham settled in Haran when the Promised Land was Canaan. All we know is that Abraham chose to wait for his father to die before he journeyed to the Promised Land (Gen. 12:1).

7:5 gave him no inheritance in it: God moved Abraham along his spiritual pilgrimage from blessing to blessing. Possession was not the goal, apparently, since God would not let Abraham settle down—to stagnate in God's past blessing.

7:6, 7 Before Abraham's descendants would be allowed to enjoy the land as their home, they would be tested in a furnace of affliction in a foreign land.

7:8 The covenant of circumcision was the symbol given to Abraham that he might never forget that God had promised to bless him. The sign of this promise was transmitted from generation to generation, from Gen. 17 to the time of Stephen's confrontation with the Sanhedrin. Abraham was saved by faith (Gen. 15:6), and the symbol of circumcision was an outward sign demonstrating the genuineness of his faith. Similarly, God would bless Stephen's audience not because of their circumcision, but because of their faith.

7:9, 10 The patriarchs refers to Jacob, the grandson of Abraham, and his twelve sons. Jacob's name, meaning "Usurper," was changed by God to Israel, meaning something like "God's Defender." His twelve sons were the founders of the twelve tribes of Israel.

7:11–13 The famine proved to be the providential means of bringing Joseph's brethren to Egypt in search of grain—and more importantly, of reconciling them with Joseph.

7:14, 15 Stephen stated that seventy-five people in all went to Egypt. Genesis 46:26 indicates that sixty-six people accompanied Jacob to Egypt, not including Jacob, Joseph, and the two sons of Joseph. Stephen derived the number seventy-five from the Septuagint translation of the OT. The translators apparently added nine wives (Gen. 46:26 says the number sixty-six did not include the wives). It was only nine and not twelve because the wives of Judah and Simeon had died and Joseph’s wife was already in Egypt.

Stephen, the First Christian Martyr

Ethnic tension played a decisive role in the trial and death of Stephen, the church's first martyr. Other members of the early church faced the council (Acts 6:12; 4:1–23), but it was Stephen, probably a Hellenist, who first died for his faith.

Hellenists, Jews born outside of Palestine, were among those first attracted by the gospel. Treated as second-class citizens by native-born Jews, many found acceptance in the early church. But it could be that as the new faith threatened to further alienate Hellenistic Jews from the full-blooded majority, some Hellenists (6:9) had a motive to try to discredit the Christian movement.

Their opposition focused on Stephen, a dynamic, emerging leader who enjoyed in the church a prominence that would have been denied him in the Hebrew community. His trial and murder (ch. 7) show that the Hellenists were willing to sacrifice one of their own as a demonstration of loyalty to the ruling system.

The strategy worked. Stephen's death precipitated a great persecution of believers, sanctioned by the council and led by a new young leader, Saul of Tarsus (8:1–3; 9:1, 2).

The Council

• The council, or Sanhedrin, was the highest ruling body and supreme court of the Jews.

• Led by the high priest, the most powerful Jewish official in the city.

• 71 members, including priests, leading men (elders), and experts in Mosaic law (scribes).

• In the first century, dominated by two major parties, Pharisees and Sadducees (see "Party Politics of Jesus' Day" at Matt. 16:1).

• Allowed by Rome to oversee religious, civil, and criminal issues in the province of Judea.

• Politically: could appoint kings and high priests, make war, gerrymander the city, and expand the temple.

• Judicially: could judge traitorous priests, false prophets, rebel leaders, and rebellious tribes.

• Religiously: could ordain certain services, such as the Day of Atonement.

• Had its own police force.

• Prevented by Rome from exercising capital punishment.

• Prominent members mentioned in the Bible: • Joseph of Arimathea (Mark 15:43) • Annas and Caiaphas, high priests (Luke 3:2) • Nicodemus (John 3:1; 7:50) • Gamaliel (Acts 5:34) • Ananias (23:2) • Possibly Tertullus, an orator (24:1, 2) • Possibly Saul, a student of Gamaliel (22:3) 7:16 Why did Stephen make the point that the patriarchs were buried in Shechem? At the time of Stephen's defense, Shechem was the center of Samaritan life. Nearby was Mount Gerizim, the site of another temple (John 4:20). Stephen was charged with speaking against the temple in Jerusalem as if this were tantamount to speaking against God Himself. Stephen's point was that God had been speaking and moving in the lives of His people in and out of Jerusalem, with and without a temple. The most important address God made to His people was at Mount Sinai, which was nowhere near Jerusalem.

7:17–19 Abraham's descendants enjoyed prosperity and great growth that proved threatening to the Egyptians and to Pharaoh, who did not know Joseph.

7:20, 21 One might say, "what an unfavorable time for Moses to be born." In reality, it proved to be very timely.

The Education of Moses

"It doesn't matter whether you have an education," some people say, "God can use you anyway." True, God can use anyone, with or without formal education. But Moses' learning "in all the wisdom of the Egyptians" (Acts 7:22) proved to be a valuable asset when the Lord called him to lead Israel out of captivity.

Moses spent the first third of his life—40 years—in Egypt. Raised among royalty, he was exposed to the impressive culture of the pharaohs. The curriculum likely included political science, public administration, religion, history, literature, geometry, and perhaps even engineering and hydraulics.

But that was not the end of Moses' education. He spent another 40 years in "graduate school" in the desert, studying animal husbandry while interning as a shepherd. He also learned about public health and primitive communities. Altogether, the first two-thirds of Moses' life prepared him for his most challenging job—leading Israel through the wilderness.

Intelligence and education alone don't make someone fit to serve God. Indeed, an educated person can hide behind his or her learning in order to avoid dealing with God. Young Saul fell into that trap (Acts 22:3–5), as did his fellow Pharisees. So did the philosophers at Athens (17:16–34). But as Stephen pointed out, the problem is not with the intellect but with the will; the danger comes not from embracing knowledge but from resisting God (7:51).

7:22 No person has been given the attention in Jewish tradition that Moses has. It is said that Pharaoh initially had no son; therefore, Moses was being prepared by Pharaoh's daughter to succeed to the throne. For this reason, Moses was educated in all the wisdom of the Egyptians. Later, Pharaoh had a son of his own to succeed him instead of Moses. Jewish tradition also states that Moses became a great captain among the Egyptians, leading them to victory against the Ethiopians. Thus he was mighty in words and deeds.

7:23–29 In the opinion of some Jewish rabbis, forty was the age at which a man had grown to maturity. Moses' life is divided into three parts:

the first forty years in the palace of Pharaoh, the second forty years in the desert, and the third forty years carrying out God's will to deliver His people. Moses began his period of wilderness training after he had tried to free the Israelites in a way that God had not chosen. We must be careful to do God's work in God's way, in God's time, and for God's reasons. It has been said that Moses spent forty years thinking he was somebody, then spent forty years finding out he was nobody. Finally, he spent forty years finding out what God could do with somebody who was nobody.

7:30–34 In relating the burning bush incident, Stephen once again underscored the fact that God is free to reveal Himself wherever He pleases. Wherever God does so, that ground becomes holy ground.

7:35–41 Stephen pointed out that Moses, the very one the Jewish leaders accused him of speaking against (6:11), was rejected by the leaders' forefathers as God's appointed leader and redeemer—just as the leaders were rejecting Jesus. It was this same Moses who spoke of the coming of Jesus in Deut. 18. Stephen challenged the religious leaders of his day either to believe all of what Moses taught or none of it. our fathers would not obey: The Talmud, the Jewish commentary on the OT, calls the rebellion involving the golden calf "that unspeakable deed." The rabbis did not want to talk about it, forbidding a translation of the account in the vernacular for the synagogue services. The Jewish religious leaders wanted to bury the incident, but Stephen wanted to dig it back up.

7:42, 43 God … gave them up: Stephen warns his accusers that God may abandon Israel if the light of the gospel is rejected, just as He once sent idolatrous Israel beyond Babylon.

7:44, 45 The ancient tabernacle had been the focus of the Israelites' national worship. Even after the miraculous deliverance from Egypt there was a tendency among the people to forget God's presence with them. The tabernacle was a constant testimony of God's presence no matter where the people went. Paul tells us that we are the tabernacle, the temple of God (1 Cor. 3:16). We can never move out of the presence of God, for we carry His presence with us (Ps. 139).

7:46–50 It was David's desire to give God a permanent dwelling place. The danger of David's request was that some might identify the presence of God with one place, as if God were confined to that location. God honored David's desire by permitting his son Solomon to build such a house and by filling it with the Shekinah glory, a demonstration of His presence. But God did not live in the temple. The Creator cannot be confined by anything He has made. His presence fills all that He has made. Solomon understood this when he dedicated the temple (1 Kin. 8:27–30). In his speech, Stephen emphasized that God could not be confined to temples made with hands.

7:51 You always resist the Holy Spirit: Here Stephen turned from history to direct accusation.

7:52 Which of the prophets: Stephen put the council on the spot. The members of the council wanted to appear open to God's truth, but they and their ancestors rarely wanted to hear God's truth through His messengers. Jesus made essentially the same charges in Matt. 23:34–36. Stephen did not shrink from accusing the Sanhedrin of handing Jesus over to death, thus becoming His murderers. He used even stronger language than Peter had (3:13–15).

7:53 Their guilt was deepened because they had received the law but refused to obey it. Angels were present at Sinai (Gal. 3:19; Heb. 2:2).

7:54 cut to the heart: An expression frequently used to express conviction of sin or anger (2:37). The Holy Spirit still works this way today.

7:55 Stephen at that moment was full of the Holy Spirit, which was evidenced by the fact that all he wanted to do was please God. He was consumed only with doing God's will by responding to this terrifying moment in the way that would glorify Him. Stephen completely trusted the Holy Spirit to empower him to respond in the proper way.

7:56 I see … the Son of Man: Gazing at death may be terrifying, but gazing past death to the presence of Jesus waiting for the believer is the hope that dissolves the fear. We have the opportunity to glorify God in the face of death, boldly declaring our confidence in the fact that we will spend eternity in the presence of God. Stephen's use of the title Son of Man is similar to the Lord's appellation of Himself in Matt. 16:13 and the apocalyptic statements about the Messiah in Dan. 7:13. The term usually carried the idea of the One who is God's coming ruler. Unusual here is that Jesus was standing rather than seated. His being seated indicates His rule, while the standing may indicate His coming, especially here in a pre-second coming to receive Stephen.

7:57 stopped their ears … with one accord: The truth was too painful to bear; anger unified them in a mob spirit.

7:58 They … stoned Stephen in violation of the law. The Romans did not permit the Jews to inflict capital punishment; Pilate had to authorize the death of Jesus. This is the first mention of Saul of Tarsus.

7:59, 60 Because Jewish law did not allow an execution within the walls of the Holy City, the religious leaders took Stephen outside the city walls. Jewish custom was that the first witness would push the condemned person face forward into a pit some twelve feet deep. If the man survived the fall, the body would be turned over and large boulders would be thrown down on his chest to crush his ribs. If he remained alive, stones would be thrown by the whole congregation. The situation may have been a little different with Stephen, perhaps due to the executioners' haste; the text indicates that Stephen knelt (v. 60). Lord Jesus, receive my spirit: Stephen's work was done. He was immediately ushered into the presence of Jesus (Luke 23:43; 2 Cor. 5:8; Phil. 1:21–23). Lord, do not charge them: As Jesus had done, Stephen requested mercy for his killers.

Witness in Samaria

Jesus said that His disciples were to be His witnesses not only in Jerusalem, but also to Judea, Samaria, and the ends of the earth (Acts 1:8). As ch. 8 opens, several years had probably gone by, but the church had not yet left Jerusalem. In fact, it took persecution to move the Lord's people to obedience.

Why was that? Jerusalem was not the apostles' home. The church had no buildings there. The authorities certainly had not welcomed it. Why, then, the reluctance to leave?

One probable factor was that the apostles had grown up in a culture deeply divided along ethnic lines. For them to preach the gospel to Jews at Jerusalem was a challenge, but a manageable one. But to preach to Samaritans was hard. Perhaps that's why the apostles chose to stay in Jerusalem despite Saul's persecution (Acts 8:1).

But a man who was probably a Hellenistic (Greek-speaking) Jew, Philip, crossed the Jewish-Samaritan barrier. A veteran of cross-cultural work (Acts 6:1–7), Philip knew by personal experience what it meant to be a second-class citizen. When he preached Jesus in the city of Samaria, multitudes responded. The gospel breached the wall of separation.

News of the revival reached the apostles in Jerusalem, and they dispatched Peter and John to investigate. The two Galileans must have been stunned and no doubt humbled by what they found. John, who once had asked to call down fire from heaven on unbelieving Samaritans (Luke 9:52–54), now joined Peter in praying for the Holy Spirit to come upon the new believers.

Ironically, Peter condemned Simon the magician for trying to purchase the Spirit's power with money. "I see that you are poisoned by bitterness and bound by iniquity," he told him (Acts 8:23). But the poison of bitterness and the bondage of iniquity also were behind those who allowed ethnic differences to prevent Samaritans and others from entering the kingdom.

As they returned to Jerusalem, Peter and John were changed men. Notice that they finally began to preach in the Samaritan villages (8:25). The wall of ethnic hatred was breaking down. Samaritans were now embracing the gospel—and at least two of the apostles were beginning to embrace Samaritans.

8:1, 2 The church father Augustine wrote that the church owes Paul to the prayer of Stephen. Saul, who later became the apostle Paul, never forgot the way Stephen died—he also did not conceal that he was in full agreement with the killing (22:20). God promises in Rom. 8:28 that all things work together for good. Even though Paul was struggling against the work of the early church and the church was experiencing its worst persecution up to that time, it was this struggle that would eventually lead Paul, the man who wrote at least half of the NT, to eternal life. they were all scattered: This phrase speaks of scattering seeds on the ground so that something will grow. The members of the church in Jerusalem may not have understood what was happening to them, but Jesus would not let His church become limited racially, culturally, or geographically. These early believers became missionaries as much as refugees. Previously the efforts to suppress the followers of Jesus were confined to beating and imprisoning the apostles. At this point the entire church began to pay the price of discipleship. Even today God is building His church and through His sovereignty will direct our ways. except the apostles: The initial target of the great persecution was the Hellenistic or Greek-speaking Jewish believers, in the person of Stephen.

8:3 Stephen's death supplied the spark for the persecution, and Saul supplied the leadership (v. 1). He made havoc describes a wild boar ravaging something in an attempt to destroy it (22:4, 19; 26:9–11). Saul had all the legal papers he needed to direct this persecution, and he had the authority to put people to death. Saul was arresting the Christians, men and women, and taking them to prison. After Saul was converted to Christ, the Lord appeared to Ananias, instructing him to go minister to Saul. However, because Ananias had heard about the tremendous pain and suffering Saul had afflicted upon the Jewish believers, he was afraid to go (ch. 9).

8:4 everywhere preaching the word: The church would no doubt increase greatly if more believers did this today.

8:5–12 Philip went to preach the gospel to Samaria as Jesus had commissioned (1:8). In the first century, the Jews and the Samaritans hated each other. The Jews considered the Samaritans half-breeds and religious deviants. Following the fall of the northern kingdom of Israel in 722 B.C., Samaria had been resettled by colonists brought to the land by the Assyrians. These colonists intermarried with the remaining Jews, and the Samaritans were descendants of these mixed marriages. The Samaritans rejected the OT Scriptures beyond the five books of Moses. Furthermore, they built a rival temple on Mount Gerizim. To express their disdain for the Samaritans, Jews traveling to Galilee would generally avoid Samaria by crossing over the Jordan River into Perea. But the gospel message transcended the first-century barrier between the Jews and Samaritans. The Spirit of God created a loving fellowship of believers out of the hate that existed. The formation of the Samaritan church indicates that there is no room for racism in the church (1 Cor. 12; Gal. 3:26–28), for Jesus died for the sins of the whole world.

8:13 Simon himself also believed: Though this man was baptized, he had a long way to go in Christian doctrine and personal growth. Some people believe Peter's words in v. 21 indicate that Simon's confession and baptism were not genuine. Church history later associates Simon with heresy and identifies him as an enemy of the Christian faith. His actions have given to the vocabulary of the church the word "simony," which means buying and selling of church offices.

8:14 the apostles … sent Peter and John: Jesus had given "the keys of the kingdom" (Matt. 16:19) to Peter. He was the one God would use to open the doors to the Jews (ch. 2), the Samaritans (ch. 8), and the Gentiles (ch. 10).

8:15, 16 that they might receive the Holy Spirit: Peter and John were the official messengers from Jerusalem to tell the Samaritans what had occurred at Pentecost. The Samaritans had to know that salvation came from the Jews; the Jews, in turn, had to understand that the same salvation had come to the Samaritans. Jesus said in John 17 that the world would know that Jesus came from the Father when the world saw the unity of the body of Christ. With the tremendous hatred that existed between the Jews and Samaritans, God demonstrated to both sides that they would be united together as a church. The dependence of the Samaritans upon the Jews to receive the gift of the Holy Spirit was the healing sign that the two sides were to become one. When Peter later preached to the Gentiles, they immediately believed and received the gift of the Holy Spirit without the laying on of hands (ch. 10). This served as a sign to the Jews that the same gift was being given to the Gentiles as well. The Holy Spirit was the unifying factor that would bring Jews, Samaritans, and Gentiles into one body.

8:17 laid hands on: A common practice in the early church (13:1–3; 1 Tim. 4:14). In this case it was evidently done in connection with the prayer for the Samaritan believers to receive the Holy Spirit.

8:18–25 Simon saw … the Holy Spirit was given: The text does not indicate what exactly Simon saw. The gift of tongues was a sign to the nation of Israel (1 Cor. 14:20–22), so it is likely that the same sign was present at each step of the opening of the gospel—at Jerusalem, at Samaria, and at the home of Cornelius (ch. 10). Alternatively, the word saw may simply mean that Simon perceived what was happening. Give me this power: Verse 13 indicates that Simon was a believer. However, he confused the work of God with his previous magical practices. Because others had paid him for the secrets of his magic, he may have simply thought that this was the best way to approach Peter. He soon learned the error of his ways.

8:26 go toward the south along the road: This road descended from Jerusalem to Gaza, southwest of Jerusalem, near the Mediterranean coast of Palestine. Gaza was the last settlement before the desert wasteland stretching to Egypt. This was the road most travelers took to Africa. God had a divine appointment for Philip to meet the Ethiopian eunuch. The gospel would take a leap from the Samaritans to the "end of the earth" (1:8)—in this case, Africa.

8:27 he arose and went: Compare Philip's response with the unquestioning obedience of Abraham (Gen. 22:3). Faith in God means being ready to move without explanation. a eunuch of great authority: Technically a eunuch is a man who has been emasculated. However, by the first century the term had become a government title used for important military or political officials. The ancient kingdom of Ethiopia was ruled by a queen mother or Candace, who ruled on behalf of her son the king. Because the king was considered the child of the sun, he was too holy to become involved in secular affairs. Therefore, his mother took over the responsibility. The eunuch in this passage was the minister of finance, a prominent position in the Ethiopian regime. He was responsible for distributing the funds of the treasury based on the desires of the queen mother. had come to Jerusalem to worship: Many Gentiles in the first century had grown weary of the multiple gods and loose morals of their nations. They were searching in Judaism for the truth. If they accepted Judaism as their faith, they would obey all the rules and regulations of the Law of Moses. This would include being circumcised and baptized. This type of convert was called a proselyte. Gentiles who did not become proselytes but did attend the Jewish synagogues to listen to the Scriptures were called God-fearers. We cannot be sure which the Ethiopian eunuch was.

Philip and the Ethiopian Treasurer

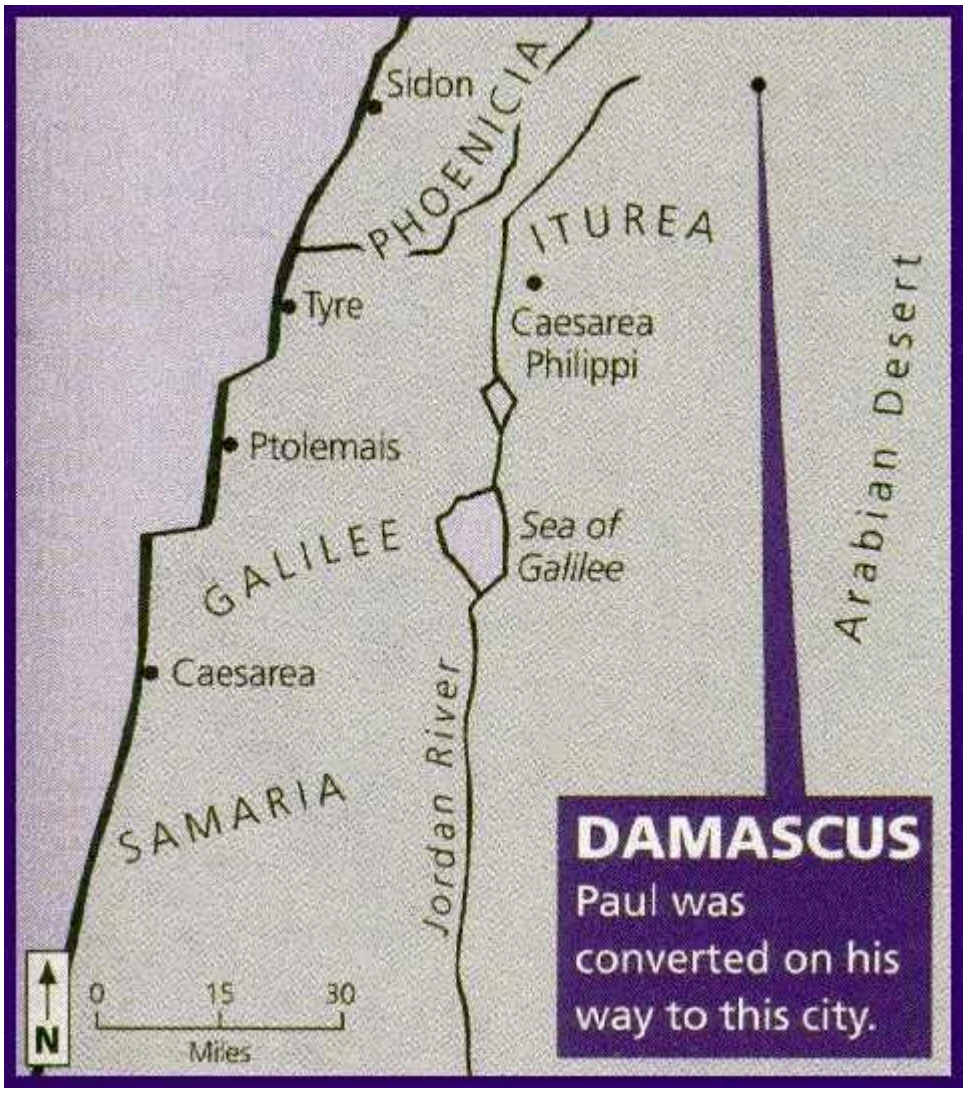
The Ethiopian treasurer was probably a convert to Judaism. He had a great yearning to know the God of Israel, as demonstrated by his reading of Is. 53 (Acts 8:28–33) and by the fact that he had to travel at least 750 miles one way to worship in Jerusalem. The trip would have taken him and his servants at least 30 days by chariot. How long would he have stayed? A month? Then he faced a return trip. So he spent at least a quarter of a year to travel to Jerusalem to worship God.

What he heard in the city about the followers of Jesus and their persecution is not recorded. But he responded warmly to Philip and the message about Christ, and became the first known witness—black or white—to Africa. For the second time in Acts 8, the gospel moved outside of the narrow confines of Jerusalem and Judea.

Once again God used Philip, the Greek-speaking Hellenist table-server, to accomplish the task rather than Peter, John, or the other apostles, who were just beginning to realize that the gospel reaches out to all peoples—Hellenists, Samaritans, even Gentiles of all colors and races.

8:28, 29 The chariot referred to in this passage was probably an ox-drawn wagon. Most likely the eunuch was part of a caravan journeying in the same direction, moving slowly down the road. As was the practice of the day, the man was reading aloud. Philip, prompted by the Spirit, spoke to the man about the prophecy of Isaiah, explaining the prophetic words about Christ.

8:30–34 Do you understand what you are reading: This question indicates the diligence that is required in the study of Scripture (2 Tim. 2:15). The Spirit of God does not eliminate the need for human teachers or diligent study. The Spirit is not given to make study needless but to make study effective.



The City of Damascus

Damascus was a transportation and commercial hub for Palestine and Egypt to the south, the Tigris and Euphrates River valleys to the east, and Antioch and Asia Minor to the north. It sat at the intersection of the two main international highways of the ancient Near East, the Way of the Sea and the King's Highway.

8:35 preached Jesus to him: First-century Jews did not speak much about a suffering Messiah. The Jewish people, facing the yoke of Roman rule, believed that the Messiah would come as the Lion of Judah, a delivering King, not a weak lamb. They believed and taught that the suffering One spoken of by Isaiah was the suffering nation of Israel. Most likely this eunuch had heard the "official" teaching of this passage in Jerusalem but still had some questions. Philip showed him that suffering One was Jesus. He had to suffer on the Cross for the sins of all of humanity.

8:36–38 What hinders me from being baptized: Having heard the message of Christ's sacrifice for sin, the eunuch responded to the conviction of the Holy Spirit. Irenaeus, an early church father who lived between A.D. 130–202, wrote that the eunuch returned to Ethiopia and became a missionary to his own people.

8:39, 40 caught Philip away … Philip was found: The Greek word translated caught here is also used in 1 Thess. 4:17 for the catching away of the church into the air. Though this passage may say only that Philip went from the desert to Azotus, most likely the terminology indicates a miraculous transportation.

9:1 Saul was still restless in his zeal to defend his Jewish faith from the new, supposedly dangerous Jewish messianic sect (8:3). the disciples: Christians were originally referred to as “disciples” and “belonging to the Way.” Jesus Himself had used both of these titles (Matt. 28:19; John 14:6). Disciple means a follower, an imitator, one who has a master.

9:2 The letters were documents authorizing Saul to arrest Christians in Damascus, 140 miles northeast of Jerusalem. Rome permitted the Jewish Sanhedrin to control Jewish affairs. At this time the new church was a Jewish affair. synagogues: The early Jewish believers in Jesus were still attending the synagogues. The synagogues in Damascus had to cooperate with anyone who had the authorization that Saul possessed. Saul planned to take the followers of Jesus who had escaped to Damascus back to Jerusalem to stand trial before the Sanhedrin (26:9–11), and probably to face a death sentence. The Way was a title for the followers of Jesus (19:9, 23; 22:4; 24:14, 22; John 14:6).

9:3–9 A light shone that was brighter than the sun and continued to shine around Saul (26:13). The light was so intense and penetrating that Saul fell to the ground, as did everyone who was with him (26:14). persecuting Me: In persecuting the church, Saul was persecuting the body of Christ whose individual members are in Christ (1 Cor. 12:27). The arguments of Stephen in his final speech, the spread of the gospel, and the extraordinary response of believers to the gospel were like goads to Saul, but Saul in his fury continued to resist such promptings from the Holy Spirit. hearing a voice but seeing no one: The men with Saul stood speechless, hearing the voice but not seeing the individual speaking. In ch. 22, Paul indicates that those with him saw the light but did not understand the voice, even though they heard the sound of it. when his eyes were opened he saw no one: Ironically while Saul was blind, he would see his own spiritual blindness.

Entrance to the "street called Straight" in Damascus, Syria, where Ananias was sent by the Lord to restore the sight of the apostle Paul (Acts 9:10–19).

9:10 Not an apostle but a layman, a certain disciple … named Ananias was ready and available to be used by God. He did not know that God would send him to Saul, the man who had been vigorously persecuting the Christians.

9:11 In ancient Damascus, the street called Straight went from one end of the city to the other.

9:12 Saul had received God's revelation by a light, a man, and now, in a vision.

9:13 So far in Acts, Christians have been called "disciples," "believers," and "those belonging to the Way" (5:14; 6:1; 9:2). Here the word saints is used. It means those set apart by God for use in His service. It has more to do with why we are here than with how good we are. God is not so much here for us; we are here for Him and His good pleasure.

9:14 authority … to bind: The hesitation of Ananias is not surprising. Those who call on Your (Jesus') name was one of several designations for early believers (v. 21; 11:26; 22:4; 24:5).

9:15, 16 he must suffer: The persecutor became the persecuted. Suffering was prominent in Paul's life and his theology; it lent authenticity to his claim to apostleship (2 Cor. 11:23–31; Phil. 3:10).

9:17 Jesus, who appeared to you: Saul was not dreaming on the road to Damascus but instead had seen the resurrected Lord.

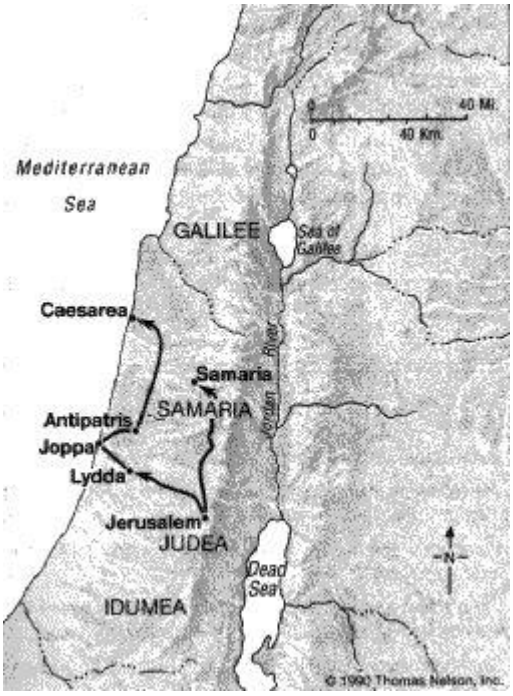
9:18–21 The people in Damascus were amazed that Saul was preaching, because Saul had come to kill Christians, not defend their faith. Saul's fame as a persecutor of Christians was well-known to the Jews in Damascus. The leaders of the synagogues were probably notified of his coming and instructed by the high priest to welcome this zealous defender of Judaism. They seem to have been unnerved at first, not only by the fact that Saul had become a Christian, but by the strength of his faith and of his argument from Scripture that Jesus was indeed the promised Savior of Israel, the Messiah.

9:22, 23 So powerful was Saul's argument from Scripture that Jesus is the Christ that the Jews plotted to kill him. They even enlisted the cooperation of the governor of Damascus under King Aretas IV of Arabia, who reigned from 9 B.C. to A.D. 40.



Peter's Missionary Journeys

Peter and John traveled to Samaria to join Philip in the revival there (8:14–25). Peter's missionary efforts described in 9:32—10:48 show the power of God at work. He traveled to Lydda where Aeneas was healed, and in Joppa he restored Dorcas to life and stayed many days with Simon the tanner. The vision of the unclean animals and birds prepared Peter to accept Cornelius's invitation to come to Caesarea, where the gospel was powerfully effective among the Gentiles.

9:24, 25 let him down through the wall in a large basket: If the Jewish leaders had caught the Damascus disciples helping Saul pursue his service to the Lord, the result probably would have been widespread persecution. In ancient times city walls contained all kinds of openings—windows without glass. Saul's escape here recalls the spies' escape from Jericho in Josh. 2:15 and David's escape from King Saul in 1 Sam. 19:12. Basket here refers to a wide, flexible container used to carry large quantities of things. This was the first of many attempts on Paul's life. Even with this kind of pressure upon Saul, he still did not hesitate to travel and preach, entrusting his protection and care to the sovereign hand of God.

9:26, 27 It is no wonder that the disciples in Jerusalem were cautious about Saul, wondering whether his "conversion" was actually an attempt to infiltrate their ranks and catch them all. Barnabas, who had the gift of encouragement, saw Paul's true heart and defended him to the other apostles.

9:28, 29 Stephen had also debated the Hellenistic Jews (6:9). In a sense, Saul picked up where Stephen left off. The sting of rage against Stephen is now felt by Saul.

9:30 Tarsus, the birthplace of Saul, was about three hundred miles north of Jerusalem and about ten miles inland from the Mediterranean Sea. Tarsus was a well-known university city, surpassed in educational opportunities only by Athens and Alexandria.

9:31–33 Then the churches … had peace: This peace was not due solely to Saul's conversion. Tiberius, the emperor of Rome, died around this time. He was replaced by Caligula, who wanted to erect a statue of himself in the temple at Jerusalem. Thus Jewish energy was directed away from persecuting Christians and toward Caligula. Here we see God's sovereign hand at work, giving the early church a short season of respite.

9:34, 35 Jesus the Christ heals you: Everyone who witnessed the healing believed. The outcome of the one physical healing was many spiritual healings. Many turned to the Lord because they saw more than a crippled man walking around; they saw proof that Jesus was alive from the dead and had authority over disease.

9:36–38 At Joppa there was a certain disciple named Tabitha. Today known as Jaffa, Joppa was a Mediterranean coastal city about ten miles northwest of Lydda. There also was a Christian community in which a certain disciple was named Tabitha or Dorcas (Gk. dorkas, meaning gazelle), who had endeared herself to that Christian community because she was full of good works and charitable deeds. However, Dorcas had fallen ill and died. She was prepared for burial and placed in the upper chamber. Apparently having heard of the healing of Aeneas by Peter, some disciples from Joppa sent to Lydda to fetch Peter, hoping that he could come and perform an even greater miracle on the behalf of their beloved Tabitha.

9:39, 40 Tabitha, arise: Peter follows the example of the Master because he was with Jesus one day when the Lord addressed another little girl who had died (Mark 5:38–42). In Aramaic Jesus would have said, "Talitha cumi" ("little girl, arise"). In Aramaic Peter would have said, cumi"—the difference of only one letter. Immediately her life was restored. The power and authority of the risen Jesus was over life and death.

9:41–43 To be a tanner was not desirable or socially acceptable in Israel. A tanner had to deal with dead animals, contrary to Jewish ceremonial practices, not to mention the unpleasantness of the work itself and its attendant odor.

Peter’s Missionary Work

The Book of Acts records two missionary journeys made by Peter. On his first trip he confirmed the evangelistic work of Philip in Samaria (Acts 8:14). Peter subsequently made a trip along the Mediterranean coast from Joppa to Caesarea, where a Roman garrison was commanded by the officer Cornelius. Peter’s ministry to the Gentile household of Cornelius was accepted by the Jerusalem church only when Peter convinced them that the Gentiles had become believers in the same sense as had Jesus’ followers, who were filled with the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost (11:1–18).

The church continued to grow as a result of persecution, for the scattered Christians shared their faith in their new home cities (11:19). Meanwhile, in Jerusalem, opposition to the church continued to mount: Herod Agrippa I, whom the emperor Caligula had given the title “king,” had James executed and arrested Peter. Agrippa died in A.D. 44 of abdominal pains, according to Josephus (12:23).

The first church to include Gentile Christians was the church at Antioch. More innovative than the Jerusalem church, Antioch became the center of missionary outreach to Gentiles, yet still maintained close ties with Jerusalem. Josephus and other historians record the famine that occurred in A.D. 46 or 47, during the reign of Claudius Caesar (A.D. 41–54). Christians at Antioch sent to Judea by way of Barnabas and Saul their collection for famine relief (11:27–30).

10:1, 2 The following two chapters mark an important turning point in the Book of Acts. Those who were scattered by persecution from Jerusalem had been preaching the gospel only to Jews (11:19). At this point, they began to overcome their prejudices and carry the message of Christ to the Gentiles. As a centurion, Cornelius would have been part of a cohort, a regiment of the Roman military. A legion numbered about six thousand men. Each legion had ten cohorts of about six hundred men each. The cohorts were divided into centuries of a hundred men, and each century was commanded by a centurion, something like a modern sergeant. Cornelius was a Gentile of Italian descent. He and his family were "God-fearers," similar to the Ethiopian eunuch (8:27). Caesarea, which was about thirty miles north of Joppa on the coast, was the capital of Judea under the Roman procurators.

10:3 The ninth hour (3 P.M.) was the hour of prayer in Jerusalem (3:1).

10:4 a memorial before God: Arising like incense in the temple. Prayers of all sincere seekers are effective, as Peter learned to his surprise.

10:5, 6 lodging with Simon, a tanner: God cut away Peter's prejudices by having him stay for many days not only with a Gentile, but with one whose trade Peter likely considered repulsive.

10:7 when the angel … departed, Cornelius called: Cornelius's desire was to be pleasing to God. The fact that he readily obeyed the angel is a sign of how much he desired the truth. With this kind of attitude, there is no question that Cornelius was open to receiving the truth of the gospel the moment he heard it.

10:8 Joppa: About 30 miles (48 km) south of Caesarea (v. 1).

10:9–16 While his host was preparing the noon meal, Peter fell into a trance during which he was commanded to kill and eat all kinds of animals, reptiles, and birds. The problem was that the animals were mixed: clean and unclean beasts were gathered together (Lev. 11). Jewish people were taught from childhood never to touch or eat any animal that was unclean. However, here Peter was being commanded by God to do just that. Three times God corrected Peter's resistance with the words, what God has cleansed you must not call common. Food may have been his first consideration, but Peter would soon understand the greater message. The vision was a sign from heaven that Jews were no longer to call Gentiles unclean. From that point on, these two groups would be on equal footing before the Father. God was breaking down Peter's prejudices.

10:17–23 Peter went away with them: Though Peter chose to travel in public with three Gentiles, who came from Cornelius, he was careful to take six believing Jewish brethren with him (11:12) as witnesses. Thus, he would have double the number of witnesses required by law (Deut. 19:15) in case he was called into question for entering a Gentile house (11:2, 3).

“one who feared God”

(Gk. phoboumenos ton theon) (10:2, 22; 13:16, 26) Strong’s #5399; 2316: Simply stated, this expression means “God-fearer.” Luke identifies such a category of people throughout the Book of Acts (10:2, 22, 35; 13:16, 26 for the expression “fearing God,” and 13:43, 50; 16:14; 17:4, 17; 18:7 for the expression “worshiping God”). The God-fearers were Gentiles who were interested in Judaism but were not necessarily converts or proselytes. They worshiped the same God and observed the same laws as the Jews did, but they did not become circumcised. Many of these God-fearers were the first Gentiles to become Christians. Cornelius was the prototype of such a God-fearer.

10:24–26 Cornelius … worshiped him: The Greek term indicates veneration of God or of an important person. But Peter was quick to disclaim deity (14:15).

10:27, 28 many … had come together: The great faith of Cornelius is demonstrated by the fact that he had a house full of people when Peter arrived. They were eager to hear his message (v. 33).

10:29, 30 Fasting was practiced by devout Jews and those who commissioned Paul and Barnabas. As one who feared God, Cornelius followed this Jewish custom.

10:31–42 God shows no partiality: The Good News of the gospel is not for a certain population. In every nation every kind of person is welcome into the kingdom of God. This is precisely what Christ had told the apostles (Matt. 28:19).

10:43 In order to receive remission of sins, one has to believe—nothing more, nothing less.

10:44–46 the Holy Spirit fell upon all those who heard: The Jewish believers present were amazed because they saw that the Gentiles had received the same gift of speaking in tongues that they had received (ch. 2). Both here and in Acts 2:4, the Spirit came upon those listening to the word of God, not those praying for the Spirit (compare 11:17). The Jewish believers were amazed because they saw that these Gentiles had received the same gift, speaking in tongues as in Acts 2 and exalting God for His grace to them. This would complete the circle. The Good News had reached the Jews, the Samaritans, and now the Gentiles. All were united by the same faith in the same Lord with the same gift of the Holy Spirit.

10:47, 48 Willingness to be baptized is the consistent response in the Book of Acts of all who placed their faith in Christ. It is the appropriate response (Matt. 28:19, 20) of a regenerated heart (2:36–38).

11:1 The Jews were not fond of the Gentiles. In some rabbinical writings, the Gentiles were considered to have been created by God to kindle the fires of hell. They were called dogs (Matt. 15:26) and unclean (10:14). Later we will see Judaizers—Christian Jews—who are so legalistic that they tell the Gentiles they must become Jewish and follow all the rites of Moses, including circumcision, before they can come into the church. This was another sign of the prejudice Jews had toward the Gentiles.

11:2 Those of the circumcision refers to Jewish Christians who believed that Gentiles had to become Jews when they became Christians. The Jewish Christians had been circumcised as a seal of the Mosaic covenant and had kept the Jewish laws. They were not pleased that the Gentiles were considered equal to them in the eyes of God, based on nothing more than their faith in Christ. They wanted the Gentiles to be circumcised and to keep the Law of Moses in order to become Christians. contended with him: This was not a polite discussion, but an intense quarrel. The Jewish Christians were upset because Peter had broken Jewish law by going into the home of a Gentile and eating with him. The Jewish Christians justified their prejudice by claiming that it was God who had forbidden eating with Gentiles. However, the Levitical laws were not intended to teach ostracism.

11:3 You … ate with … uncircumcised men: Peter had violated one of the three tests of Jewish fidelity to the law. In their eyes this failure invalidated his Judaism.

11:4–10 in a trance I saw a vision: Because of the importance of the issue of personal prejudice, Luke repeats the account of the vision of the sheet and the unclean animals that God used to free Peter from his racial bigotry (10:9–16).

11:11 At that very moment (10:17) the timing of God is a beautiful thing to observe.

Overcoming Barriers

A major breakthrough in race relations is described in Acts 10. For years a virtual wall between Jews and Gentiles had hampered the apostles in sharing Jesus with the Gentile world. But when Peter met Cornelius—an officer of Rome's occupation troops in Palestine—two conversions took place: Cornelius, his family, and his friends came to faith; and Peter came to realize that God wants Gentiles in the church.

God easily could have used Philip the evangelist (Acts 8:5) to bring the gospel to Cornelius. After all, he lived in Caesarea and had already shown his willingness to share the gospel across ethnic lines. But no, God called Peter to bring His message to the Roman centurion. Apparently He wanted to break down barriers against Gentiles in Peter's heart.

How Peter Saw Cornelius

- Living in Caesarea, Roman military capital of Palestine (Acts 10:1).
- A centurion, commander of 100 occupying Roman troops (10:1).
- Of the Italian Regiment, all men from Italy (10:1).
- Gentile (10:1).
- Unclean, like the unclean animals of the OT dietary laws (10:11–16).
- Unlawful for a Jew to visit, as he was from another nation (10:28).
- Uncircumcised, therefore not right to eat with (11:3).

In Peter's mind, these factors disqualified Cornelius from serving him dinner, let alone coming to faith. But Peter was following a "Jewish gospel."

God's intention had been that Hebrews would treat their Gentile neighbors cordially (Num. 35:15; Deut. 10:19; Ezek. 47:2). Of course, He also charged His people to exclude heathen practices, particularly idolatry (Lev. 18:24—19:4; Deut. 12:29–31). Inter-marriage was condemned, though sometimes allowed (compare Ex. 34:16; Deut. 7:3; Ezra 9:12; 10:2–44; Neh. 10:30). But the main concern was moral purity.

Through rabbinic tradition strict separation became the rule. By Peter's day, four hundred years of Greek and Roman oppression had only hardened Jewish resolve to avoid as much contact as possible with foreigners.

Peter and the other Jewish believers brought these attitudes with them into the church, which made it almost impossible for them to reach out to Gentiles.

How God Saw Cornelius

• Devout (Acts 10:2).

• A God-fearer, along with his household (10:2).

• Generous to the poor (10:2).

• A man of prayer whose prayers and alms were received by God (10:2, 4).

• Obedient to Gods angel (10:7, 8).

• Cleansed by God, so not unclean (10:15).

• Crucial for Peter to visit (10:5, 19, 20).

God's view of Cornelius was a contrast to Peter's. Because of Christ, God was ready to throw the doors of faith wide open to Gentiles: "What God has cleansed you must not call common," He sternly declared to Peter (10:9–16). Because of Christ, the centurion could be "cleansed" from sin and be acceptable to God.

But Peter was confused. Should he break with his culture and visit this Gentile, violating traditional codes handed down as if carrying the force of God's law? He had at least two days to sort out his thoughts as he walked to Caesarea to meet Cornelius. His emotional struggle can be seen in his first words to the assembled group: "You know how unlawful it is for a Jewish man to keep company with or go to one of another nation" (10:28).

But God broke down the wall in Peter's heart by pouring out the Holy Spirit on these Gentile believers (10:44, 45).

11:12–14 Peter had wisely taken six brethren with him when he visited Cornelius's home (10:23). He anticipated the argument from "those of the circumcision" (v. 2).

11:15 began to speak: Apparently Peter considered the words he spoke in Caesarea (10:34–43) to be just the introduction to the sermon he had intended to preach. as upon us: The manifestation of the Holy Spirit was the same to the Gentiles at Caesarea as it was to the Jews at Jerusalem (10:44). At the beginning is a reference to the Day of Pentecost (2:4), approximately ten years earlier.

11:16 baptized with the Holy Spirit: This statement is found seven times in the NT (1:5; Matt. 3:11; Mark 1:8; Luke 3:16; John 1:33; 1 Cor. 12:13). The reference is to a once-for-all act whereby Christ places believers in the care and safekeeping of the Holy Spirit until the day He returns.

11:17 the same gift: The Holy Spirit given to Jewish believers at Pentecost (2:4; 15:8). It is clear from vv. 15–17 that Peter considered Cornelius and his household to have become believers in the same sense as had Jesus' followers, who were filled with the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost.

11:18 granted to the Gentiles repentance to life: This section begins a bold new step in the mission of the church. The Samaritans were part Jewish; the Ethiopian eunuch and Cornelius were Jewish proselytes. Finally the Jewish Christians that made up the early church understood Jesus' commission to them: they were to bring the gospel message to the Gentiles too (1:8).

11:19–21 This persecution began when Stephen was murdered for his faith (ch. 7). God often uses tough times to accomplish His will. Jesus said, "You shall be witnesses to Me in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and to the end of the earth" (1:8). God allowed persecution to be the impetus for spreading Christ's witness throughout the land. Those who face such persecution will receive "great reward" in heaven (Matt. 5:10–12). the Jews only: At this time it was primarily the Jewish believers who were being persecuted. Consequently, the Jewish Christians were the ones who were moving out and sharing the gospel of Jesus Christ in various regions. They shared the gospel with the Jews because they still met in the local synagogues and held on to many of the Jewish customs.

A Gospel for the Cities

Christianity eventually prevailed as the dominant worldview and social force in the Roman world. One reason: it planted churches in dozens of the empire's major cities by the end of the first century. Christians spread the gospel "to the end of the earth" (Acts 1:8) by establishing strategic, visible communities in urban areas such as Antioch (11:22, 26; 13:1). These groups of believers stood apart from the culture in their beliefs and values, yet engaged the culture in their daily lives and work.

The NT word for "church," ekklesia, means assembly or congregation. In the Greek world, the ekklesia was a public assembly called together by a herald to discuss legal issues and make community decisions. For example, Paul faced such a gathering at Ephesus, a town meeting that turned into a riot (19:32–41). But ekklesia always referred to people—originally to the citizens of a city, and later to a gathering of believers. There is no evidence that it meant a church building until the fourth century A.D.

Interestingly, eight times out of ten the NT uses the word ekklesia to refer to all of the believers in a specific city, such as "the church that was at Antioch" (13:1) or "the church of God which is at Corinth" (1 Cor. 1:2). Elsewhere it implies all Christian believers, regardless of geographic location or time in history—what is often called the universal (or catholic) church (Eph. 1:22; 3:10, 21; 5:23–32).

In forming churches, the early Christians did not drop out of society, nor did they form congregations that competed with each other for members (though sometimes members competed with each other, 1 Cor. 1:10–12). Instead, they lived and worked as members of the larger community. Meanwhile, they related to the other believers in their cities as members of a common family in Christ.

11:22–24 Seleucus I founded the city of Antioch, naming it after his father. The city was cosmopolitan, attracting people of various cultures and ethnic backgrounds—including people from Persia, India, and even China. The gospel proclaimed in Antioch would have had tremendous potential for reaching other areas of the world. Moreover, because the city was culturally diverse, it was not controlled by one religious group, making the people there more open to hearing the truth of the gospel message. Barnabas, nicknamed "Son of Encouragement" by the apostles (4:36), was sent to discern what God was doing in the lives of the new converts. When Barnabas saw the grace of God in these converts, he was true to his name and encouraged them in their new faith. Purpose of heart describes a resolve of the will to make up one's mind about one thing. The resolve here was to remain with the Lord. Barnabas was a man who understood commitment. We would do well to receive the encouragement of Barnabas in our lives. We waste so much of our lives being double-minded (James 1:6–8), not making up our minds about what we believe and what we are going to do.

11:25 Barnabas departed … to seek Saul: Because Barnabas was sensitive to the leading of the Holy Spirit (v. 24), God was able to bring Saul of Tarsus to his mind again. The disciples in Jerusalem were afraid of Saul and refused to believe that he was a disciple (9:26). Barnabas, however, had defended Saul before the apostles (9:27).

11:26 The believers were called Christians because they worshiped Christ, the Messiah. The historian Josephus called them "that tribe of Christians." Tacitus, the Roman historian, referred to them as "Christians, a name derived from Christ." Originally, the church called themselves "The Way." But later they began to refer to themselves as Christians, despite the fact that the name most likely was originally used to ridicule the believers.

11:27–30 And in these days prophets came from Jerusalem to Antioch. In the first-century church, a prophet belonged to a recognized order in the church (compare 2:17, 18; 13:1; 20:23; 21:9, 10; 1 Cor. 12:28, 29; Eph. 4:11). One of these prophets was a man named Agabus who indicated, prophesying under the influence of the Spirit of God, that there was going to be a great famine throughout all the world. Luke is interested in pinpointing the exact time of this famine. Thus he goes one step further in identifying it by saying that the famine occurred in the days of Claudius Caesar (A.D. 41–54). Many extrabiblical sources make note of a succession of bad harvests and extreme famine throughout the entire Roman Empire, especially Palestine, during the reign of Claudius. In response to this prophetic announcement, the believers at the church of Antioch determined to send relief to the brethren who lived in Jerusalem and its environs. Thus, they set aside a certain percentage of their income to collect a contribution to be sent to the believers of Judea. This relief fund was to be sent to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul. This social and communal interest the church at Antioch had for the church at Jerusalem is not only a pleasing expression of the love of the Lord Jesus for the brethren (10:35), but it marks the beginning of the Pauline practice of accepting the responsibility for caring not only for the souls of those to whom he ministered but for the bodies as well. The church at the end of the twentieth century could well take a lesson from the church at the end of the first century.

12:1–3 Herod the king is Herod Agrippa I, the nephew of Herod Antipas who murdered John the Baptist, and the grandson of Herod the Great who had the children of Bethlehem put to death in his search for Jesus. Herod was not a Jew but an Edomite. The Jews resented this fact, and Herod knew it. James was the first of the twelve apostles to die for the sake of the gospel, and the only one whose death is recorded in the NT. Being put to death with the sword meant being beheaded. Jesus had told both James and his brother John that they would drink the same cup of suffering He did (Matt. 20:20–23). For James, this suffering was execution. For John, it was exile. The killing of James by Herod was an attempt to win the favor of the Jewish leaders.

12:4 Four squads of soldiers were to see that Peter did not escape a second time (5:19).

12:5–10 Peter was arrested and slated to be executed like James (v. 2). However, Peter's execution was delayed because it was against Jewish law to have a trial or sentencing during the Feast of Unleavened Bread, better known as Passover. This was Peter's third arrest (4:3; 5:18). During a previous incarceration, Peter had miraculously escaped with the help of an angel of the Lord who opened the gates of the prison (5:19, 20). This time Peter was placed under maximum security in the care of four squads of soldiers of four men each. The soldiers worked three-hour shifts. Both of Peter's wrists were chained, and he had a soldier on each side. Outside Peter's cell, two more soldiers stood guard.

12:11 delivered me from the hand of Herod: Why was Peter's life spared while James's life was taken? The answer is the sovereign will of God. If we believe that God is good and wise, we can trust that what He allowed to happen was part of His wise plan for the good of all of His people. When we place our complete trust in the goodness of God, we can find true peace. God is in control despite any appearance to the contrary.

12:12–15 You are beside yourself: It is interesting to note that those who were praying so fervently for Peter's deliverance (v. 12) should regard as insane the person who informed them that their prayers had been answered. It is his angel: This statement may imply a belief in individual guardian angels being assigned to believers (Dan. 10:21; Matt. 18:10).

12:16 Peter continued knocking because those praying inside could not believe their prayers had been answered.

12:17 James: The brother of Jesus (15:13; 21:18; Mark 6:3). the brethren: Other leaders of the church.

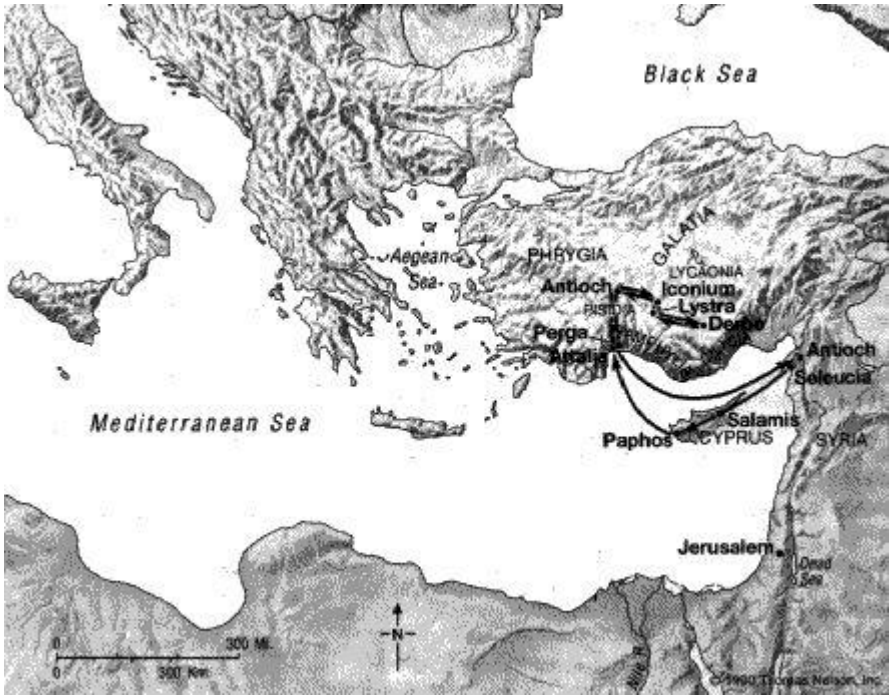
12:18, 19 Then as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers. One can imagine the consternation that would have occurred in the minds of the two soldiers on either side of Peter, chained now to no one, the soldiers who stood guard outside the cell, now with no one to guard, and those who guarded the first two wards leading to the outside of the prison. No one had an explanation as to what happened to their prisoner. When Herod looked for him and the report came that he was not to be found, he examined the guards and commanded that they should be put to death. The penalty for losing a prisoner was severe in the Roman Empire, and these men took very seriously their responsibility in keeping prisoners secure. But now nothing could be done; the prisoner was gone. Because of this, Herod Agrippa I departed from Jerusalem and went to reside at Caesarea, his other capital. Although these verses do not advance the narrative, they do provide great insight into the death of Herod Agrippa I. Luke is always interested in keeping a historical perspective in the Book of Acts. Thus, he includes these verses.

12:20 It is unclear why Herod was so angry with the people of Tyre and Sidon. Both cities were seaports, like Caesarea, the provincial capital of Judea. The dispute may have been an issue of seaport business, since competition was great. The important point was that the cities did not want the angry king to set an economic embargo against them. Through the royal official Blastus, the people of Tyre and Sidon received an appointment to present their case to the king.



Paul's First Missionary Journey

Sent out from the church at Antioch (13:1–3), Paul and Barnabas went to Cyprus, then to the cities of Galatia in Asia Minor. The Jewish synagogues in these cities provided Paul a platform for preaching the gospel. However, at times he encountered opposition from the synagogues.

12:21–24 The voice of a god: The Jewish historian Josephus also provides an account of this display, informing us that in an attempted appeasement of the king the people confessed that he was "more than a mortal." Herod, instead of rebuking the address of deity, enjoyed the adulation—until he discovered the consequence of such blasphemy. The essence of arrogance is the desire for personal divinity, the expectation of being treated as a god. The essence of humility is remembering that God is God and we are not.

12:25 They had fulfilled their ministry, bringing famine relief from Antioch to Judea (11:29, 30).

13:1 Prophets functioned in the early church as proclaimers of God's revelation. Teachers explained the meaning of the revelation and helped the people apply it to their lives. In the early church the prophets were the preachers—the ones who communicated revelation directly from the Spirit of God. Evangelists, pastors, and teachers (Eph. 4:11) took what was taught or declared and made it applicable for the daily nurture of people's lives. Pastors and teachers today are often made to refer to the same person on the basis of the Granville-Sharp rule but is not relevant to plurals. In Acts, we have already passed several examples (see "prophets and teachers" [13:1] and "apostles and elders" [15:6–22]) where the two nouns do not refer to the same person even though there is only one article joining the two nouns. There seems to be two offices (elders or bishops and deacons); five ministry functions (apostles and prophets who are the foundation [Eph. 2:20]) and evangelists, pastors, and teachers who lead in erecting the superstructure on the foundation; and sixteen spiritual gifts (four sign gifts, five speaking gifts and seven serving gifts). Antioch was the base of operation for Saul.

The City of Antioch

Antioch of Syria was the third largest city of the Roman Empire, with 500,000 to 800,000 residents. Here the followers of the Way were first called "Christians" (Acts 11:26).

13:2 ministered to the Lord: As the people carried out what God had given them to do as prophets or teachers, their ministry to the church became their ministry to the Lord. Whenever we serve each other, God accepts that service as directly unto Him (Matt. 25:31–46). fasted: Fasting was practiced by the early church, a practice associated with Judaism. The abstention from food and other distractions was for the sake of praying. It was to help believers focus on what they were taking to God in petition. The idea of fasting was to be able to devote oneself with less distraction to the contemplation of divine things.

13:3 The laying on of hands was the church's way of identifying with and affirming the mission to which God had called a particular person.

13:4, 5 John was John Mark, the nephew of Barnabas (12:25).

13:6–12 Luke presents Sergius Paulus as the first Gentile ruler to believe the gospel. The island of Cyprus was a senatorial island, which means it was Roman-controlled. As a Roman official, Sergius was a Gentile. Unlike Cornelius (10:2), there is no evidence that Sergius attended the temple or was a God-fearer. This pagan government official was amazed at the power of God and believed the truth.

13:9–11 Saul, who also is called Paul: It was not unusual for a person to have two names. In Paul's Jewish surroundings, the name Saul was used.

But in his mission to the Gentiles, his Roman name Paul was used. The name Paul means “Small One.” Over against the name Saul, the first king of Israel, was now Paul, one who was small in stature and humble in spirit.

13:12 the proconsul believed: Luke intends for us to see Sergius Paulus as the first Gentile ruler to believe. We can conclude this because of the title given to Sergius. The island of Cyprus was a senatorial island, ruled directly by Rome. Since Sergius was a Roman official, he was a Gentile—and unlike Cornelius (Acts 10:2) there is no evidence that Sergius attended the temple and was a God-fearer. The proconsul had no religious background in Judaism. This government official, steeped in pagan traditions, was amazed at the power of God and believed the truth.

Why Did John Mark Go Home?

Luke does not tell us why John Mark returned to Jerusalem (Acts 13:13), giving rise to all kinds of speculation. A few possibilities: He was young and felt homesick. Possibly, but we don't know exactly how old Mark was. He had been to Antioch (12:25), but otherwise might never have been outside Palestine.

He reacted negatively to the interaction with Gentiles. On the first leg of the trip (Cyprus), cultural and ethnic overload may have set in. We know how controversial the inclusion of Gentiles in the church proved to be for believers at Jerusalem (15:1–29). If Mark departed because of prejudice, it might explain Paul's refusal to take him on a later journey (15:37, 38). On the other hand, he had worked with the multiethnic church at Antioch with no apparent problems (12:25).

He didnt want to work with Paul. We know that Paul was a hard charger and that his standards were quite high. Perhaps Mark didn't measure up, or perhaps the relational chemistry didn't work, and so Mark decided to go home rather than endure a lengthy trip with a demanding person. But later Paul was eager to have him on board (2 Tim. 4:11) and included him among his fellow laborers (Philem. 24).

He got seasick. No evidence for that except that Mark left as soon as the party hit the mainland at Perga in Pamphylia. But why return home over seasickness?

He was afraid. In Antioch, Mark met a diverse community of believers who showed extraordinary concern and compassion for each other. But on Cyprus he encountered characters like Elymas the sorcerer (13:6–12) and discovered that in gospel outreach, opponents use live ammunition. So he might have left out of fear.

The pace was too hard. Luke calls Mark an "assistant" (13:5), which probably involved making arrangements for travel, food, and lodging, and possibly some teaching. Again, Paul's pace may have outstripped the young man's capacities, and once they arrived at Perga he decided to throw in the towel. But this is pure speculation.

Scripture doesn’t tell us why John Mark made the decision to go home. But the encouraging thing is that his return didn’t disqualify him from the faith or diminish his spirituality, no matter how strongly Paul felt about it later (15:38, 39). With time and the encouragement of Barnabas, Mark developed into one of the key leaders of the early church who had a lasting impact on the faith.

13:13 John, departing from them: Whatever the trouble was between Paul and John Mark, it was enough for Paul not to want John Mark to accompany him on a later journey (15:36–39). John Mark would prove faithful later in Paul’s ministry (2 Tim. 4:11).

Paul, the Apostle to the Gentiles

Ironically, Paul's background not only prepared him to be the early church's chief opponent, but also to become its leading spokesperson. Devout, energetic, outspoken, stubborn, and exacting, Paul became far more troublesome to the Jews than he had ever been to the Christians, not in terms of violence, but ideology. Indeed, he lived with a price on his head as his former colleagues among the Jews sought to destroy him (Acts 9:23–25, 29; 23:12–15; 2 Cor. 11:26, 32, 33).

Perhaps the chief irony of Paul's life was his calling to be the "apostle to the Gentiles" (Acts 9:15; Gal. 1:16; 2:7–9). Paul had been a Pharisee, the very title meaning "to separate." Some Pharisees even refused to eat with non-Pharisees for fear of being contaminated by food not rendered ritually clean. They also separated from women, from lepers, from Samaritans, and especially from Gentiles (or "foreigners").

So for Paul to take the gospel to the Gentiles was a reversal of his life and a thorough repudiation of his background as a Pharisee. Perhaps three people proved invaluable in helping him make this dramatic change: Barnabas, who like Paul was a Hellenistic Jew and came from a Levite background—he embraced Paul and mentored him in the faith when no one else would come near him (Acts 4:36, 37); and Priscilla and Aquila, fellow tentmakers—they joined Paul in business in Corinth and probably discussed the faith and its implications with Paul much as they did with Apollos (18:1–3, 24–28; Rom. 16:3–5).

Paul eventually became Christianity's leading evangelist and theologian. But even as his status in the church rose, his perspective on himself changed. At first he saw himself as an important Christian leader, but then as "the least of the apostles" (1 Cor. 15:9). Later he realized that he was capable of "nothing good" (Rom. 7:18) and was "less than the the least of all the saints" (Eph. 3:8). Finally he described himself as the "chief" of sinners (1 Tim. 1:15)—and threw himself on God's mercy and grace.

The fearsome Pharisee of Pharisees became the fearless apostle to the Gentiles whose credo was, "To live is Christ, and to die is gain" (Phil. 1:21).

13:14 Why did Paul and his party pass through Perga without any reported sharing of the gospel there? Paul might have had some physical affliction that forced him from the lowlands of Perga to the cooler, higher altitudes of Antioch in Pisidia, some 3,600 feet above sea level. Later, when Paul wrote to the Galatian churches, he spoke about an illness (Gal. 4:13). Paul's affliction may have affected his eyes in some way. Some think Paul had malaria, which left him with disabling headaches, described by the ancients as like a red-hot bar thrust through the forehead. Possibly this was what Paul meant when he referred to his "thorn in the flesh" (2 Cor. 12:7). Antioch in Pisidia was a different city from the Antioch located just north of Palestine in Syria (11:22).

13:15 It was customary for the rulers of the synagogue to invite guests to speak to the congregation.

13:16–19 Paul stood up: The rabbis usually remained seated to teach; Paul stood perhaps to be heard better (Luke 4:20, 21).

13:20, 21 Some early manuscripts apply the four hundred and fifty years to the period before the judges referred to in vv. 17–19. In either case the intended extent of the time reference is vague.

13:22–35 David … a man after My own heart: What God saw in David was a deep desire to do His will. Throughout David's entire life that drive never changed. Unlike King Saul, who was a self-willed man, David confessed his sins and quickly repented of them (Ps. 51).

13:36, 37 He whom God raised up saw no corruption: Paul argued that David could not have been speaking of himself in Ps. 16:10 (v. 35). When David died, his body returned to dust just like everyone else's (see Peter's comments in 2:29–31). David was speaking of the Messiah, who would be raised from the dead as the final proof of His divine Sonship (Rom. 1:4).

13:38–44 everyone who believes is justified: Justification is a legal term meaning "declared innocent." It is a legal declaration that a person is acquitted and absolved. It is by justification that a person is righteous and acceptable to God. The death of Christ was the payment of our sin debt, so that we might be forgiven.

13:45 When Luke refers to the Jews, he is not speaking of all Jews. The Jews mentioned in v. 43, those who were urging Paul and Barnabas "to continue in the grace of God," honestly wanted to know the truth. The Jews in this verse were the Jewish leaders, those in the positions of religious authority. When the Jewish leaders saw the crowds following Paul, they changed their minds about Paul and became filled with jealousy, especially since many of the people who had gathered were Jews.

13:46–50 judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life: A person who convinces himself that he does not need forgiveness from the Holy One has already condemned himself.

13:51, 52 Jews shook off the dust when they left a Gentile town. These Jews who rejected the gospel were no better off than unbelieving Gentiles.

14:1–5 Following their previously established pattern, Paul and Barnabas went first to the synagogue of the Jews which was located in Iconium, in the eastern district of Phrygia. The text indicates that a great multitude (v. 1) of both Jews and Greeks believed. However, the unbelieving Jews began to stir up opposition again to the message of the apostles. Since it took a while for the opposition to become effective, Paul and his team were able to remain there preaching for a long time. In Luke's typically historical fashion, he does not indicate how long a period of time this actually was, making an exact chronology of Paul's travels almost impossible. Finally, the hostile Jews succeeded in inciting a riot which caused Paul and Barnabas to have to leave Iconium. Verse 3 indicates that the message of the gospel was the word of His grace and that their ministry was also accompanied by signs and wonders, or miracles.

14:1–7 Paul and Barnabas spoke with authority because they spoke the truth. The power of God is not in the person who witnesses, but in what is witnessed to.

14:8–13 the gods have come down: The Roman poet Ovid told of an ancient legend in which Zeus and Hermes came to the Phrygian hill country disguised as mortals seeking lodging. After being turned away from a thousand homes, they found refuge in the humble cottage of an elderly couple. In appreciation for the couple's hospitality, the gods transformed the cottage into a temple with a golden roof and marble columns. All the houses of the inhospitable people were then destroyed. This ancient legend may be the reason that the people treated Paul and Barnabas as gods. After witnessing the healing of the cripple, they did not want to make the same mistake as their ancestors.

14:14 tore their clothes: The tearing of robes was a Jewish expression of distress and grief. This custom went all the way back to Joshua and Caleb, who tore their clothes after hearing the people of Israel wanted to go back to Egypt instead of entering the Promised Land (Num. 14:6). Later, when the high priest accused Jesus of blasphemy, the high priest also tore his own clothes (Matt. 26:65). The tearing of clothes was from the neck down and usually extended about the length of one's hand. The Jews would also do this during times of distress (Josh. 7:6) and especially during seasons of sorrow (2 Sam. 1:11).

14:15–18 The sermon by Paul in these three verses is a condensed version of his sermon on the Areopagus in 17:22–31. These Gentiles did not know or believe in the Scriptures, so Paul preached truths that were self-evident to all and led his listeners to biblical truth.

14:19–22 supposing him to be dead: The physician Luke may be saying that Paul did not die here. However, some believe that the text speaks of Paul's resurrection. We're not sure whether Paul experienced a miracle of healing or a miracle of resurrection.

14:23, 24 appointed elders: It is difficult to know whether these elders were appointed by Paul and Barnabas or by a vote of the people. However, the process outlined in 6:1–7 for selecting the seven men may provide a clue to the process used for selecting elders here. Both the assembly and the apostles were involved in the selection process. in every church: Here is a clear passage presenting a plurality of elders for leadership in each church. This would parallel what we find in Acts 20:17 concerning the plurality of elders in the church at Ephesus.

14:25, 26 the word: The Good News that the Messiah has come to save from sin.

14:27, 28 all that God had done: God's action in saving Gentiles demanded a change in theology and church strategy.

15:1, 2 The Council of Jerusalem is one of the great turning points of the Book of Acts, as are the conversions of Paul and Cornelius. The relation between the Jewish and Gentile believers in terms of admission to membership in the church was the issue of this discussion. In the beginning, the church consisted almost entirely of converted Jews who had automatically been circumcised as OT believers. Even Peter, earlier, had great difficulty making the transition to full fellowship with the Gentiles. The establishment of a predominantly Gentile church in Antioch and now the success of the Gentile mission in Galatia refocused attention upon fellowship with these growing churches. Church growth certainly underlies the basic themes represented by Luke in the Book of Acts. The power of the message of the gospel is demonstrated by the fact that it gains reception and response almost everywhere. When the Jewish converts from Judea arrived in Antioch, they insisted that believers must be circumcised in order to be saved (v. 1). The text later (v. 5) indicates that these converts were from among the Pharisees, the strictest of the sects of the Jews. The disputations would also seem to indicate that some of the early believers still looked upon Christianity as a movement within Judaism at this point.

15:1–4 Later those who taught the need for circumcision among new believers were known as Judaizers. They wanted the Christian faith to become a sect of Judaism. In other words, they wanted Gentile believers to become Jewish proselytes. As proselytes, the Gentile believers would need to be circumcised as a sign of coming into the covenant of God along with the Jews.

15:3–6 The Jerusalem church welcomed the delegation from Antioch and listen eagerly to the story of their successful evangelization of the Gentiles in Galatia, which caused great joy to all the brethren. Objections by the Pharisees who believed (or Christian converts from among the Pharisees) led to a formal conference of the apostles and elders with the delegation from Antioch. While the leaders were involved in the discussion, vv. 12, 22 show that the whole church participated in the ultimate decision. The wrong decision at this point would have thrown the church back under Jewish bondage to the law and would have stalled the expansion of the church as designed by her Lord.

15:5, 6 some of the sect of the Pharisees: These people believed in Jesus Christ but were still identified as Pharisees. Jews who became followers of Christ could still be Pharisees. The same could not be said for the Sadducees, for they denied that there was a resurrection, and thus could not believe that Jesus had been raised from the dead. It is necessary to circumcise them: This statement summarizes the problem. Is salvation granted through faith alone? Or does a person have to have faith plus the works of the law in order to be forgiven by God?

15:7–9 It was from the mouth of Peter that Cornelius and his Gentile friends heard the gospel of Jesus Christ (10:11–43).

15:10 Yoke here refers to the law (Gal. 5:1).

(Gk. charis) (15:11; Rom. 3:24; 5:15; Eph. 2:5; Titus 2:11) Strong’s #5485: The Greek word for grace is probably equivalent to the Hebrew word chesed meaning “lovingkindness,” a word frequently used by the psalmists to describe God’s character. In the NT, the word charis usually means divine favor or goodwill, but it also means “that which gives joy” and “that which is a free gift.” This is a noteworthy occurrence of the word grace, because while it was one of Paul’s favorite words for God’s free gift of salvation, here we see Peter using it in the same way.

15:11 we shall be saved in the same manner as they: These are the last words of Peter in the Book of Acts. He leaves us with the eternal truth that we are saved through faith by grace alone. The emphasis in the Book of Acts now moves from Peter to Paul, from the presentation of the gospel message among the Jews to its presentation to the Gentiles.

15:12 Barnabas and Paul reported what God was doing in changing the lives of Gentiles with the gospel of Jesus Christ. Their testimony at this council was critical.

15:13, 14 The council listened to James because he was the first of the three pillars of the church (Gal. 2:9). He was the leader of the church in Jerusalem until he was stoned to death at the insistence of the high priest in A.D. 62. James was the Lord’s half brother, the one who did not believe until the Lord appeared to him privately after the Resurrection (1 Cor. 15:7). He is probably the author of the Book of James, which explains to Jewish believers the true essence of genuine faith.

15:15–18 While the testimony of Peter, Barnabas, and Paul was important for the council in making their decision, something more than the experience of the Gentiles had to be taken into consideration. The council needed to know what the Word of God said. James pointed out that what was happening among the Gentiles was in full agreement with the OT (Amos 9:11, 12).

15:19, 20 The testimony of Paul and Barnabas—those who worked among the Gentiles—and most importantly the teaching of Scripture, indicated to James that God was truly at work (v. 18). In view of this, he suggested that a letter be drafted that alleviated Jewish requirements for Gentiles who placed their trust in Jesus. Though James did not want to trouble Gentiles with Jewish ceremonial regulations, he believed certain practices should be followed. He mentioned four issues: eating food offered to idols, sexual immorality, eating food from animals that had been strangled, and eating food with blood. If Gentiles continued such practices, there would continually be tension between the Gentile and Jewish Christian communities. There is a debate as to whether these requirements were ceremonial or moral in nature. If they were ceremonial, "things polluted by idols" would refer to food offered in pagan temples (1 Cor. 8—10). "Sexual immorality" would refer to the marriage laws of Lev. 18:6–20. The prohibition against eating blood would be from Lev. 17:10–14. On the other hand, if these prohibitions were moral in nature, the food polluted by idols would relate to the problem of Rev. 2:14, 20. Evidently some Gentile Christians were attending the celebrations and banquets held in pagan temples that frequently involved sexual immorality. The prohibition against eating blood preceded the Law of Moses and extended back to the contract God made with Noah (Gen. 9:3, 4).

15:21 For Moses has had … those who preach him: James may have been saying that since there were Jewish communities in every city, it would be wise to remain sensitive to Jewish convictions. He may also have been saying that since the Gentile believers would learn more and more about the Scriptures, the Spirit of God would cultivate godly convictions in their hearts.

15:22–27 it pleased the apostles and elders: It is interesting to note the process the council followed in resolving this conflict. First, the problem was clearly stated: Each side was presented in a debate. Second, the facts were presented by those who were acquainted with them. Third, the counsel was given by a person who was trusted for his objectivity and wisdom. Fourth, unanimity was sought in the decision. Fifth, the attitude of preserving the unity of the Spirit remained utmost on the council's mind. This same formula would be helpful in resolving conflicts found within the church today. chosen men of their own company: The apostles and elders sent a representative from both sides of the dispute—a Judean (Judas) and a Hellenist (Silas)—along with Paul and Barnabas to bolster and confirm the ruling of the council.

15:28, 29 the Holy Spirit, and … us: The Jewish Christians showed a constant dependence on the guidance of the Spirit. The Spirit should have an equally large role in our spiritual decisions.

15:30–33 they rejoiced: Freed from unnecessary restrictions, salvation by grace through faith brings joy.

15:34, 35 Teaching and preaching are equally important.

15:36–38 Paul was adamant that John Mark not accompany him on his impending journey. Earlier John Mark had deserted Paul and Barnabas in Pamphylia (13:13). It is unclear why he did so. Some have speculated that John Mark returned to Jerusalem because he did not like the idea of Gentiles coming into the church by faith alone. Whatever the reason for the desertion, it is interesting to note that John Mark was reconciled to Paul and again helped him in his ministry. In 2 Tim. 4:11, Paul, who was in prison, writes, “Get Mark and bring him with you, for he is useful to me for ministry.”

15:39–41 the contention became so sharp that they parted: There was a heated argument between Paul and Barnabas over John Mark’s usefulness to them. Note that Luke does not assign blame for the disagreement. There are times when Christians will not agree on certain aspects of ministry. Perhaps the best course of action in some of those situations is to work separately. Barnabas left with John Mark, refusing to make the disagreement an issue before the church at Antioch. Barnabas had led the church in its early days (11:22–25). He was the church’s main representative at the Jerusalem council, but he did not use his prominence to seek a reprimand of Paul. Instead he accepted the situation and proceeded to faithfully serve the Lord.

16:1 Timothy was the son of Eunice, a Jewish woman of great faith (2 Tim. 1:5). Eunice had taught the Holy Scriptures to Timothy from infancy (2 Tim. 3:15). The NT's silence about the faith of Timothy's father suggests he was not a believer.

16:2 Well spoken of may be rephrased as "well witnessed." In other words, people did not have to be told that Timothy was a Christian.

16:3 took him and circumcised him: In Jewish law, Timothy should have been circumcised and raised a Jew, even with a Gentile father. But in Greek law, the father dominated the home. The fact that Timothy was an uncircumcised Jew would have limited his effectiveness in ministering to the Jewish Christians. Salvation was not the issue here. Instead Timothy became circumcised so that God could use him to reach all people—even the Jews—with the message of the gospel.

16:4, 5 The council's decision (15:24–29) brought great joy and comfort to the Gentiles. Apparently the decrees from the Jerusalem council were considered reasonable and not burdensome.

16:6–10 sought to go to Macedonia: With both the southwesterly route and the northern path closed by the Holy Spirit (vv. 6, 7), Paul headed in the only direction left open to him—northwest—until he came to the Aegean port of Troas, where he could go no further. Paul was at the right place at the right time to receive the call to go to Macedonia. We: This is the first of four "we" sections in the Book of Acts (16:10–17; 20:5–15; 21:1–18; 27:1—28:16). This indicates that Luke, the author of Acts, accompanied Paul at least these four times.

“the Spirit”

(Gk. to pneuma) (16:7; Rom. 8:9; Phil. 1:19; 1 Pet. 1:11) Strong’s #4151: The Greek word for Spirit is derived from the verb pneo, meaning “to breathe” or “to blow.” It is sometimes used to refer to the wind and sometimes to life itself (John 3:8; Rev. 13:15). It can refer to the life of angels (Heb. 1:14), demons (Luke 4:33), and human beings (7:59). Yet this word is also used for the Spirit of God (1 Cor. 2:11)—that is, the Holy Spirit (Matt. 28:19), the third Person of the Trinity, the One who lives inside believers (James 4:5; 1 John 4:13). This same Spirit is called “the Spirit of Jesus Christ” (Phil. 1:19), and as the marginal note indicates, many older manuscripts have the title the Spirit of Jesus in 16:7. This title emphasizes the unity of action between Jesus and the Spirit that permeates this book and its companion volume, the Gospel of Luke. During the days of Jesus’ earthly ministry, the disciples were directed by Jesus; now, after His resurrection and ascension, by the Spirit of Jesus.

16:11 Troas: A seaport of Asia Minor near the site of ancient Troy. Samothrace: A large island between Asia and Europe. The name Neapolis means “New City.” It was the port for Philippi.

A New Direction for the Gospel

Paul's vision and subsequent trip from Troas to Neapolis (Acts 16:9–11) proved to be a major fork in the road for Western civilization. One small step for Paul became one giant leap for Christianity as it spread west, gaining a foothold at Philippi in Macedonia, moving on into Europe, and eventually pervading the entire western hemisphere.

16:12 Named after the father of Alexander the Great, Philippi was a Roman colony loyal to the empire. The city itself was organized by the state of Rome and functioned as a military outpost. The people who settled the city were probably army veterans, who were given the rights of Roman citizens. Typically such a colony would possess an autonomous government and be immune from tribute and taxation. Because of its proximity to the sea as well as to one of the major roads to Europe, Philippi was a commercial center in Macedonia. Its influence throughout the region made it a good place to begin preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ.

16:13 where prayer was customarily made: According to Jewish custom, a congregation consisted of ten households. If ten male household heads could be found in a city, a synagogue was formed. If not, a place of prayer was established, usually near a river under the open sky. Paul's habit was to go first to the synagogue of a new city. However in Philippi, he searched for a Jewish prayer meeting.

16:14, 15 Thyatira was well known for purple dyes and cloth dyeing. Purple dye had to be gathered drop by drop from a certain shellfish. Because it was so expensive, purple dye was used on garments worn by royalty. As an artisan in purple dyes, Lydia was a wealthy woman who had come to Philippi to practice her trade. Paul preached the gospel, but the Lord opened Lydia's heart to it.

16:16 Luke's description of the slave girl in Greek indicates that she had a "spirit of Python." The python was a mythical serpent killed by Apollo, who took both the serpent's gift of predictions and sometimes its form. Apollo became known as Pythian Apollo. When it was said that one had a "spirit of Python," it meant that the person was controlled by an evil force. Apparently those who knew the girl did not regard her as insane or fraudulent. Rather they viewed her ability to foretell events as genuine. People paid the girl for her divination services, earning her masters a lot of money. This particular cult was popular in Greece, especially in Corinth. The chief shrine to Apollo was at Delphi across the isthmus from Corinth.

16:17–19 greatly annoyed: Paul was upset not because what the girl said was untrue, but because the girl was being viewed as the source of truth.

16:20, 21 These claims were as false as those leveled first against Jesus and then Stephen. Those who desire to stop the truth of God are often unscrupulous about the truthfulness of their statements. Nothing Paul and Silas had preached remotely related to Roman customs or laws.

16:22–24 Before prisoners were beaten with rods, their garments were literally torn off so that their flesh would be exposed for the flogging. Paul experienced this particular Roman ordeal on three separate occasions. Later Paul would refer to this beating with wooden rods (2 Cor. 11:23, 25).

16:25 praying and singing … prisoners were listening: The word translated listening here means "to listen with pleasure," as if listening to beautiful music. It is in times of darkness that the light of a Christian witness shines brightest (Phil. 2:14–16).

16:26 immediately all the doors were opened: In ancient prisons each door was secured by a bar. The earthquake, as it passed along the ground, probably forced the doorposts apart so that the bars fell to the ground.

16:27–29 Under Roman law, a guard who allowed the escape of a prisoner was generally put to death. Believing that all the prisoners had escaped, the keeper of the prison assumed that death was certain for him.

16:30–36 what must I do to be saved: The events surrounding the arrest of Paul and Silas, the way they responded to suffering, and the mighty acts of God brought the jailer to his knees. He finally knew he needed God's salvation. But how could he be reconciled to God? Paul and Silas's answer was simple—just believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. No other work was needed. The jailer and his family placed their trust in God and immediately expressed that faith by being baptized.

16:37–40 Once the magistrates learned that Paul and Silas were Roman citizens, they realized that they were in danger of the wrath of Rome. It was unlawful to whip a Roman citizen or deny that person the right to due process. Paul refused to leave when he had the opportunity because he was protecting the infant church in Philippi. Because Paul and Silas were beaten in public, people probably believed that they had done something wrong. If Paul left quietly, then the perception would be that those associated with him, in particular the members of the Philippian church, had also done something wrong.

17:1–4 reasoned with them from the Scriptures: There was a great deal of evidence in Scripture that Paul could use in his argument. For example, Ps. 22, written over one thousand years earlier by David, describes the crucifixion of the Messiah. Paul could quote Is. 53 and Zech. 12 to demonstrate that the suffering, death, and resurrection of the coming Messiah was predicted by the prophets. The OT abounds with evidence of the Messiah's character and life that clearly matches that of Jesus (Luke 24:25–27).

17:5, 6 The Jews here refers to the Jewish leaders of the synagogue who felt threatened by the gospel because it contradicted their own teachings.

17:7, 8 acting contrary to the decrees of Caesar: In A.D. 49 the Roman emperor Claudius expelled all Jews from Rome due to riots that were ignited by a group of zealous Jews. These insurrectionists were advocating revolution against Rome and were opposing the installation of a new king. Paul's accusers were trying to paint him as a revolutionary who was bringing sedition to Thessalonica.

17:9, 10 had taken security from Jason: Taking security was similar to posting bond today. It was meant as an assurance that there would be no repetition of the trouble caused by the apostle Paul, and that he would not return to Thessalonica. Instead, Paul and Silas traveled 50 miles southwest to the city of Berea.

17:11–14 These Jews searched the Scriptures to discover the truth. It is God's plan for Christians also; that is why He gave us the Word.

17:15 Arriving in Athens, Paul apparently saw that he would need the help of Silas and Timothy. He sent word for them to join him there.

17:16 Paul was greatly distressed at the sight of numerous pagan temples and altars in Athens. In his letter to the Corinthians Paul explained why he was indignant (1 Cor. 10:20). The people's offerings were being sacrificed to demons. By doing this, the Gentiles were having fellowship with the powers of darkness. For these people to be so deceived by the devil was deeply troubling to Paul.

17:17 Paul was not a tourist. He was in the marketplace witnessing to those who passed by.

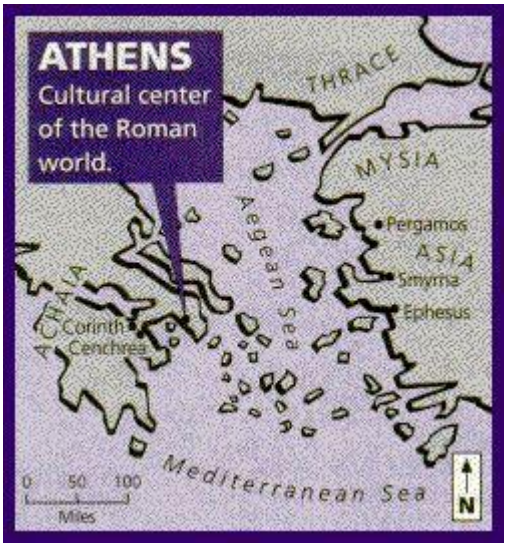
“Epicurean and Stoic philosophers”

(Gk. Epikoureioi kai Stoikoi philosophoi) (17:18) Strong’s #1946; 2532; 4770; 5386: The Epicureans were those who followed the teachings of Epicurus (341–270 B.C.), who said the chief end of humankind was pleasure and happiness. This pleasure, they believed, was attained by avoiding excess and the fear of death, by seeking tranquillity and freedom from pain, and by loving other people. They believed that if gods existed they were not involved in events on this earth. The Stoics were followers of Zeno (c. 334–262 B.C.). They got their name from the Greek word stoa (meaning “porch”), for Zeno taught at a place in Athens called the Stoa. The Stoics were pantheists who thought the universe was ruled by an absolute Purpose or Will, to which a person had to conform his or her will, unmoved by all external circumstances and changes. The person who did this would reach the perfection of virtue. The byproducts of such a philosophy were pride and self-sufficiency, as can be seen in their arrogant response to the gospel (17:18, 32).

17:18 this babbler: Some of the philosophers in Athens mocked Paul, calling him a “seed picker” or gutter sparrow, a small bird that snatches up scraps of food. Paul was being accused of grabbing at bits of knowledge without fully digesting or thinking through what he taught. Because Paul did not speak eloquently (1 Cor. 2:1), some philosophers in Athens arrogantly ridiculed him, arguing that he was not sophisticated enough to be taken seriously. Others thought that Paul was advocating foreign gods named Jesus and Resurrection, incorrectly understood to be a male and female deity.



The City of Athens

Athens was the principal city of ancient Greece and capital of the district of Attica. Although Paul won several converts to the gospel in Athens, it may have been years later before a church began.

17:19–21 the Areopagus: Just southwest of the Acropolis in Athens was a hill called the Hill of Ares (Mars in Latin), the god of war. This was where court was held concerning questions of religion and morals. In Athens, the gospel message was examined by the supposed experts of philosophy and religion.

17:22–31 Because the men of Athens had scant knowledge of the Hebrew Scriptures, Paul started with the general revelation visible in creation itself. In the sixth century B.C. it was said that a poet from Crete named Epimenides turned aside a horrible plague from the people of Athens by appealing to a god of whom the people had never heard. An altar was built to honor this god, whom the Athenians now called the UNKNOWN GOD. Paul obviously knew of Epimenides; he quoted the poet in Titus 1:12. Thus Paul began his presentation of the gospel by appealing to natural revelation and to certain true statements of the Athenian poets. He has made from one blood: God sovereignly created one man, Adam. As Adam's descendants multiplied and formed nations, it was God who designed their course (Dan. 2:20, 21). that they should seek the Lord: God has placed within each one of us the yearning to worship and seek Him. We grope for Him by creating images to worship, whether they are pieces of stone or personal pleasures. Without a definite revelation from God, we would continue to worship such gods. But Paul points out that God is not far away; we can have fellowship with Him. In fact, every day we depend upon Him for our life and breath. Our loving Creator has sent His Son, Jesus Christ, to demonstrate His love for us. It is our responsibility to respond to His Son and to follow Him.

17:32, 33 Paul's reference to the resurrection of the dead ignited a reaction among the Athenians. The Greeks repudiated the idea of a bodily resurrection. Though they embraced the concept of the soul living forever, they were repulsed by the idea of a bodily resurrection because they considered the body to be evil, something to be discarded. This idea, known as dualism, was derived from the teachings of the Greek philosophers Socrates and Plato. It held that everything physical is evil and everything spiritual is good, and that it makes no difference what one does with one's body so long as the spirit is good. Tragically, the Athenians' adherence to this philosophy blinded them to the truth of the gospel.

Dionysius and Damaris

Apparently none of the Epicurean or Stoic philosophers of Athens responded to Paul's message about Christ, but Luke does name a council member and a woman as the nucleus of a group that believed (Acts 17:34). Dionysius was a member of the court and likely a person of some standing. Later writers name him as the first bishop of the church in Athens.

As for Damaris, it is remarkable that a woman should be among the first believers. Greek women of the day rarely took part in philosophical discourses. They generally stayed at home in seclusion while their husbands, freed by slaves from the menial tasks of life, pursued leisurely activities such as gymnastics, politics, and philosophy.

There are several possibilities to explain how Damaris managed to hear Paul and decide to follow Christ. One is that she was among a class of women known as hetairai, specially trained companions to wealthy men who were educated in subjects usually reserved for men, such as rhetoric and philosophy. Their purpose was to entertain their partners. The role of hetairai was not as respected as that of wives, but they enjoyed far more freedom and opportunity—including the opportunity to attend the philosophical discussions held daily in the marketplace and the Areopagus (17:17, 19).

Of course, there is no way to know for certain whether Damaris was a hetaira. But no matter what her role in the society was, she courageously went against the prevailing culture by siding with Paul, Dionysius, and the message about the resurrected Jesus.

17:34 some … believed: The sermon was not a failure, although with a different type of audience Paul decided to preach differently in Corinth (1 Cor. 2:1, 2). Believers in Athens included some influential people, even a judge—Dionysius.

IN CONTEXT

Paul’s Speech to the Areopagus

The purpose of Paul’s visit to the Areopagus and its council is not certain, but he may have been on trial to defend his beliefs. Although ancient references to the council of the Areopagus are few, it is evident that it was an aristocratic body that advised the king. It then assumed royal functions after the Athenians deposed their monarchy (sometime before 800 B.C.). With the rise of democracy in 500 B.C. the council lost some of its power and became largely an esteemed group with religious functions.

By the first century A.D. the council of the Areopagus had regained much of its former authority. The assembly to which Paul preached was again the chief governing body in Athens, a position it would keep until the advent of Christian domination in the fourth century A.D.

18:1 Corinth was the political capital of Achaia. It was also a center for the worship of Aphrodite, the goddess of fertility, and it housed the major temple of Apollo. Because of the sensuous nature of the religious cult of Aphrodite, Corinth had a reputation for being a city of immorality. Beginning in the fifth century B.C., the Greeks used a word meaning "to act like a Corinthian" as a synonym for sexual immorality.

18:2, 3 All young rabbinical students had to learn a trade. Tentmakers were leather workers. The province of Cilicia, from which Paul came, was noted for its cloth made from goats' hair. It is likely that Paul's skill involved making such cloth.

18:4–6 Paul's custom was to go to the Jews first whenever he entered a new city. Thus, in Corinth he began his proclamation of Jesus in the synagogues. After several attempts to reach the Jews of Corinth (v. 4), attempts that had few results, Paul turned his attention almost exclusively to the Gentiles.

18:7 Justus: Most Romans had three names. This man's name was Titius Justus. Based on Paul's letter to the Corinthians, it is likely that Justus was the man called Gaius in 1 Cor. 1:14.

18:8–11 In view of the severe treatment he had received elsewhere, Paul must have been very comforted by Christ's statement that he would not be hurt or beaten in Corinth (16:22–24).

18:12, 13 In the spring of A.D. 51 or 52, a proconsul named Gallio was appointed by the Roman senate to govern the province of Achaia (Greece). Gallio was a brother of the famous stoic philosopher Seneca, who possessed great influence in Rome. The Jewish leaders thought they would take advantage of the new governor and rid themselves of Paul and the gospel of Jesus Christ. Bringing Paul before the judgment seat of the governor was a momentous event. If the Roman governor ruled Christianity illegal, it would set a precedent and encourage immediate persecution of all Christians.

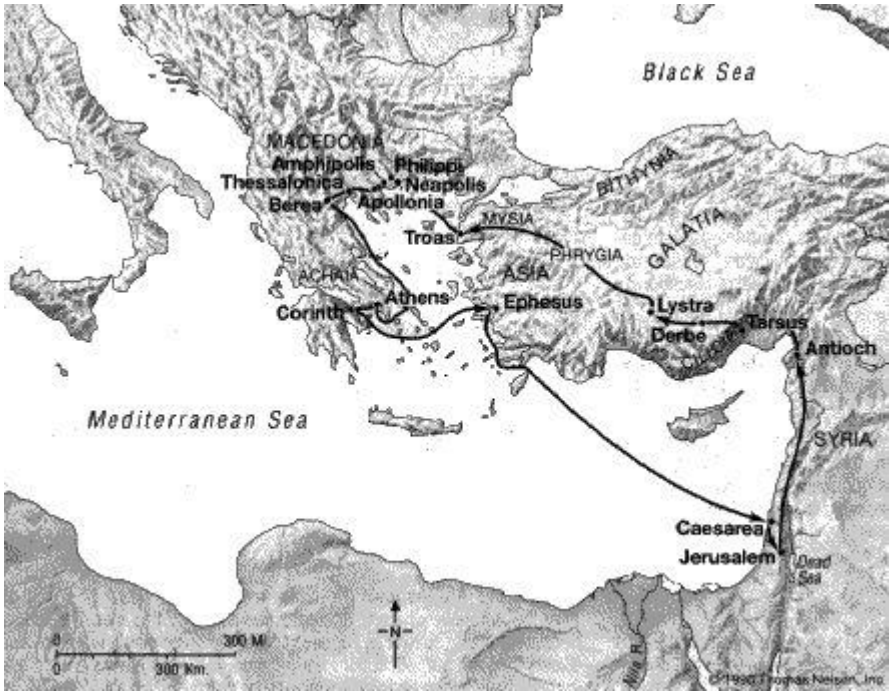
18:14–17 Paul did not even have to open his mouth to defend the faith. God had already provided for Paul's defense; he had prepared Gallio to make the correct decision. No crime had been committed against Rome. Gallio considered Christianity to be a Jewish sect. Because Judaism was an established religion in the Roman Empire, this "sect" was not in violation of Roman law. Gallio had his bailiffs drive the accusers out of his presence.

Once again the sovereign hand of God preserved the life of His faithful servant.

18:18 Paul had his hair cut as part of a Nazirite vow he had made (Num. 6). Such a vow had to be fulfilled in Jerusalem, where the hair would be presented to God. Vows were made either in gratitude for God's blessing (like Paul's safekeeping in Corinth) or as part of a petition for future blessing. The vow involved abstinence from drinking wine and a commitment not to cut one's hair for a period of time. At the end of this set period, the hair was cut and then burned along with other sacrifices as a symbol of offering oneself to God (21:23–26). Paul redirected his entire travel schedule because he wanted to get to Jerusalem in time to make this vow.

18:19–21 Paul had tried to go to Ephesus before but was forbidden by the Holy Spirit (16:6). We are not told how or why, but during his second missionary trip, the Holy Spirit kept Paul from traveling the southwestern route, which would have taken him to Ephesus. Instead, Paul went northwest to the Aegean port of Troas, where he received the Macedonian call to take the gospel to Europe. If we will entrust our way to God's timing as Paul did, we will end up at the right place at the right time.

18:22 Paul completed his vow (vv. 18–21) when he went to Jerusalem and greeted the church there. Paul then returned to his sending church in Antioch, completing his second missionary journey, one that covered over three hundred miles. he went down: Antioch was north of Jerusalem but lower in elevation.



Paul's Second Missionary Journey

Starting from Jerusalem, Paul took Silas to visit the churches of Galatia. Timothy joined them in Lystra, and together they went to Macedonia and Achaia (present-day Greece). On this journey, the Philippian jailer was saved, the Bereans "searched the Scriptures daily" (17:11), and Paul preached at the Areopagus in Athens.

18:23 he departed and went over the region: On his third missionary journey Paul traveled back through Asia Minor to visit the churches that had been established on his previous trips. The cities included Derbe, Lystra, Iconium, Antioch, and Ephesus.

18:24 Apollos, born at Alexandria: This Jew with a Greek name was from the second largest city in the Roman Empire. Alexandria was a seaport on the northern coast of Egypt. Founded by Alexander the Great, the city was very cosmopolitan. Egyptians, Romans, and Greeks all lived there; over a quarter of the population was Jewish. The Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures had been produced in that city about 150 years before the birth of Jesus. The city was famous for its great library and was considered the cultural and educational center of the world.

18:25–27 John's baptism was a baptism of repentance in preparation for the coming of the Messiah. John's followers had scattered throughout Asia Minor and into Egypt. Apollos was a disciple of John the Baptist. Apparently he did not know about the finished work of Jesus Christ on the Cross, the Resurrection, the Ascension, and the sending of the Holy Spirit.

18:28 he vigorously refuted the Jews: Many of the believers in Corinth were Gentiles and were easy targets for opponents who knew the Hebrew Scriptures. However, the arguments of these Jews did not stand up against the brilliance of Apollos, the new Jewish Christian apologist (v. 26).

19:1, 2 These twelve men (v. 7) had been baptized into the baptism of John the Baptist, but they had never heard about the Holy Spirit. All they knew was that One mightier than John was to come. They did not know that Jesus the Messiah, the One mightier than John had already come. He had died for their sins, had been raised from the dead, had ascended to the Father, and had already sent the Holy Spirit. They needed to hear the rest of the gospel. As soon as this happened, these men could place their faith in Jesus and receive the Holy Spirit.

19:3, 4 Baptism was a ritual used by the Jews as a picture of cleansing and purification. Gentiles who converted to Judaism would go through the rite of purification as their first act of worship. They would dip themselves in water as a sign of being cleansed from their old way of life. Before entering into the temple to worship, Jews would dip themselves in ritual bathing pools to show their desire for purification. But the dipping performed by John the Baptist was a call for repentance rather than mere ritual cleansing. His baptism was a call to people to turn to God and to identify with the coming Messiah who would forgive their sins (Matt. 3:1–12).

19:5 in the name of the Lord Jesus: This phrase was a declaration of ownership, an identification with Jesus as Lord and Savior of one's life.

19:6, 7 laid hands on them: The Holy Spirit was received without the laying on of hands in 10:44–48. By laying on his hands here, Paul was demonstrating his apostolic authority. He was also affirming the unity of the new church in Ephesus with the church in Jerusalem, whose members also were empowered by the Holy Spirit to speak in foreign languages (2:4, 11). This speaking in tongues was a sign to others that they were part of the body of Christ (1 Cor. 14:22).

19:8–10 From Ephesus, other churches were born in Asia Minor—in Colosse, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea. Note the sequence of events. Paul tried explaining the things of the kingdom of God to the Jews in the synagogue for three months. After he was finally rejected, he took those who had believed and started a new "school" for the study of the Scriptures in the facilities of a philosopher named Tyrannus. During the two years that Paul conducted these classes, all who dwelt in Asia heard the gospel. This indicates that Paul and the students of the school did more than study; they must have witnessed to others as well.

IN DEPTH

The Gospel in Ephesus: A Case Study

Evangelism in Ephesus was explosive and unpredictable. People from vastly different backgrounds formed a diverse coalition of believers who had a far-reaching impact on the city's culture and economy (Acts 19:10).

Laypeople Laid a Foundation

Start-up began with Priscilla and Aquila, the entrepreneurial couple that Paul met in Corinth (Acts 18:1–3). Joining Paul's team, they sailed with him to Ephesus, a major city of 350,000. While he traveled to Palestine and Galatia, they remained and set up key contacts, working in the tent manufacturing industry (18:18–23).

One beneficiary of their efforts was Apollos, a powerful orator from Alexandria who stirred things up in Paul's absence. Eloquent in delivery but incomplete in his theology, he learned from them about Jesus. After mentoring him in the faith, they sent him to Greece where he strengthened the believers, including their old friends at Corinth (18:24–28; 1 Cor. 3:6).

The Message Took Hold

Returning to Ephesus, Paul encountered a new breed of religious zealots. Like Apollos, they were unaware of Jesus, knowing only of John the Baptist. But they became ecstatic as Paul related the fulfillment of John's ministry in Christ. Twelve of their number received the Holy Spirit, arousing the religious establishment (Acts 19:1–7).

Paul exploited the interest by initiating a three-month campaign in the local synagogue. However, his arguments met with opposition from obstinate synagogue Jews who maligned the movement publicly. In response, Paul relocated to the school of Tyrannus where for two years he engaged the Ephesians in a dialogue on Christianity during their midday, off-work hours (19:8–10).

Rapid Growth

Concentrated focus brought extraordinary results. The Christian message proved contagious among both open-minded Jews and intellectually curious Gentiles, impacting the city's educational system. Residents and merchants of Ephesus and from throughout Asia Minor were exposed. As word spread among workers in regional commerce, the arts, and the transportation system, “all … in Asia heard the word of the Lord” (Acts 19:10). Philemon’s house church in Laodicea and probably other Asian churches were started by those attending Paul’s “university lectureship.”

Meanwhile, God validated Paul’s message with dramatic miracles among the sick and diseased. This drew the notice of health professionals, including esoteric healing artists who become jealous. One group, the seven sons of Sceva, attempted to imitate the apostle through an occult ritual but were routed by the very powers over which they claimed to have mastery. The incident produced even more converts to Christianity, driving occult practitioners and publishers out of business (though not all; 2 Tim. 3:8). The growing community of believers lit a bonfire that consumed magic books valued at no less than 400,000 hours of wages (Acts 19:11–20).

Economic Impact

At this point the civic leaders started receiving complaints from artisans and craftsmen, particularly metalworkers, about the economic impact of the message. Paul’s meddlesome habit of attacking idolatry threatened the city’s thriving tourist trade, centered around the internationally acclaimed temple to Diana, one of the “Seven Wonders of the Ancient World.” The metalworkers, led by Demetrius, mobilized the entire city to save a key industry. Recruiting their associates in other trade guilds, they fomented a riot and rushed to the amphitheater.

This brought city hall into the act. At great pains to keep law and order —as well as his job—a Rome-appointed civil servant finally silenced the crowd and urged them to use the court system for redress of their grievances. His tactic forestalled violence, bought time, and saved the economy. It also spared Paul and his companions (Acts 19:23–41).

An Established Community

The riot brought Paul’s lecture series to an end, but not the impact of the gospel. Departing the city, he left behind a growing, dynamic church, pastored by his young protégé, Timothy (Acts 16:1–3; 1 Tim. 1:3). Not only did these believers continue to penetrate their own community with the message of Christ; they also reached out to the many travelers to and from their strategically placed import export city—tourists and religious pilgrims, shipping merchants, sailors and other transportation workers, military personnel, political refugees. Dozens of churches sprang up throughout Asia Minor, thanks to the Holy Spirit’s coordinated use of three tentmakers (Priscilla, Aquila, and Paul), a fiery evangelist (Apollos), and countless unnamed laity.

19:11 God confirmed Paul's apostolic authority by performing miracles through him. The writer of the Book of Hebrews helps us understand why miracles were accomplished through the apostles (Heb. 2:3, 4). The miracles verified that the apostles represented God and that the gospel they preached was from heaven.

19:12 handkerchiefs or aprons: A handkerchief was a cloth used to wipe away perspiration and was usually worn tied around the head. The apron was tied around the waist. These were sweat rags used by Paul in his tent-making trade as he worked with leather. Why would God perform healings in this way? Ephesus was a focal point for magicians and wandering priests. The city was filled with wizards attempting to exercise power over the dark forces. God may have used such unusual means in order to show that His miraculous power was greater than the powers of darkness.

19:13–16 to call the name of the Lord Jesus: The use of magical names in incantations was common in the ancient world. Jewish practitioners of magic enjoyed great prestige because they claimed to know the true pronunciation of the sacred name of God, and thus were able to release God's full power. These practitioners had latched onto the name of Jesus to use as an incantation. overpowered them: The seven so-called exorcists found out that it was not enough to know the name of Jesus; they needed to know Jesus personally.

19:17–19 These books were filled with formulas, spells, and astrological forecasts. The volumes were expensive; fifty thousand pieces of silver would have taken ten laborers twenty years to earn. Burning the books indicated real repentance on the part of those who had practiced magic.

19:20 The word of the Lord … prevailed over pagan religion in this political and religious capital of the province of Asia (now western Turkey).

19:21, 22 Paul made plans, under the guidance of the Spirit, for his continuing ministry.

19:23–27 Silver shrines of Diana refers to small shrines containing a miniature image of the fertility goddess of Ephesus. Sales of these idols were falling off as people were introduced to the truth of Jesus Christ.

19:28, 29 into the theater: This amphitheater seated 25,000 people.

19:30, 31 The officials of Asia were prominent citizens, friendly to Rome. They had been given the title of honor, “Asiarch,” and were also friends of Paul.

19:32–34 The Jews wanted to distance themselves from Paul, so they put Alexander forward to explain that the Jews had nothing to do with Paul. However, Alexander never got the chance to speak once the crowd discovered he was a Jew.

IN CONTEXT

The Riot in Ephesus

Paul's work in Ephesus during his third missionary journey (c. A.D. 54) began to turn the allegiance of some from paganism to Christ. When the success of the gospel threatened the trade of silversmiths in Ephesus, money motivated an attack against Paul. A civil disturbance was instigated by Demetrius, a silversmith who manufactured devotional shrines for the worship of Diane (the Greek goddess Artemis).

"Diana of the Ephesians" (Acts 19:34) was the mother goddess of Asia. Her temple in Ephesus was one of the Seven Wonders of the ancient world, and people came from all parts of the Roman world to worship her. A legend told of an "image which fell down from Zeus" that was kept in Diana's temple (19:35). The "image" may have been a meteorite similar to others that were venerated at various places in the ancient world, most notably the "image of the Great Mother" brought to Rome from Pessinus.

19:35–41 image which fell down from Zeus: Some feel that the first image of Artemis was possibly carved out of a meteorite. we are in danger: The riot at Ephesus could have brought the discipline of Rome down upon the city. The Pax Romana, the peace that the Roman Empire brought to the Mediterranean world, was important to Rome. Therefore, the empire severely disciplined unruly cities. The Romans would not tolerate any kind of uprising or rebellion. Ephesus risked losing its freedom and being ruled directly by the Roman army.

20:1, 2 The word translated encouraged has a full range of meanings, from rebuking to comforting. Encouragement included instruction, appeal, affirmation, warning, and correction. People need to know that God has something to say to them and has said it in many ways. Paul didn't just bring sweetness and light. He told them everything they needed to hear—both the tough words and the kind words.

20:3–6 he decided to return through Macedonia: Often Jewish pilgrim ships left for Syria taking Jews to the Passover. Paul had intended to sail on such a ship, but after the plot against his life was discovered he decided he would celebrate the Passover with his friends in Philippi. It would have been easy for his enemies to arrange for Paul to "disappear" over the side of the boat and never be heard from again. Paul was very sensitive to the leading of the Holy Spirit in his life and ministry. Sometimes the Spirit of God led him into difficult circumstances; other times the Spirit protected him from such circumstances.

20:7 The first day of the week was Sunday. The people gathered to worship on this day for the same reason we do today, to celebrate the day of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The Jewish believers continued to worship on the Sabbath, which is Saturday. The Book of Hebrews tells us that Christ and His finished work is our Sabbath, our rest (Heb. 4:8–10). to break bread: The primary purpose of the gathering was the Lord's Supper.

20:8–12 Because the rooms had many lamps, it was probably stuffy and hot. No wonder Eutychus had difficulty staying awake.

20:13–16 to go on foot: Luke and the others left Troas for Assos, some 30 miles south by sea. Paul wanted to walk to Assos alone. Paul may have felt the need to spend some time alone with God, to pray and reflect on what God wanted him to do. When Paul met up with the others in Assos, it is clear that he had received guidance. He was now in a hurry to get to Jerusalem to deliver the offering taken by the Gentile churches for the suffering church there.

20:17–21 The Greek term for elders is presbuteros, a term borrowed from the Jewish synagogue. It referred to those who were held in respect as the leaders of a particular fellowship. In v. 28 the elders are called "overseers" (Gk. episkopos, translated bishop in Titus 1:7). The terms appear to be interchangeable in the NT (Titus 1:5–7).

20:22, 23 I go bound in the spirit: Some say that Paul was out of the will of God in going to Jerusalem after the warnings of bonds and afflictions. But there is no evidence that Paul was rebelling against God. On the contrary, Jesus Himself confirmed that the trip was part of His good and perfect will (23:11). While Paul was in a Jerusalem prison, Jesus appeared to him to tell him to take courage. The Lord explained to Paul that just as he had solemnly witnessed for the cause of Christ at Jerusalem, he would do the same in Rome. There was no condemnation, but rather affirmation, of the fact that Paul bore witness to Jesus Christ in Jerusalem.

20:24 nor do I count my life dear to myself: Paul no longer desired to hold on to his life. He sought only the furtherance of God's kingdom and the honor of Christ, no matter what the earthly cost was.

20:25–28 with His own blood: It was the blood of the Son of God that was shed for the sins of the church.

20:29, 30 wolves … men: There are always two threats to the church, one from the outside and one from the inside. Unbelievers are a dangerous threat from the outside; the arrogant and self-serving are a threat from within.

20:31–34 Watch is reminiscent of Peter's warning about the devil in 1 Pet. 5:8. Elders protect the flock by their care and teaching.

20:35 It is more blessed to give: This saying of Jesus is not found in the Gospels, but through Paul's knowledge of it has been recorded here.

20:36–38 The touching farewell gives us a keen insight into the warm fellowship of the early church. Paul knelt down and prayed with his converts and they all wept … and kissed him (following the common early Christian greeting of the "kiss of peace"). It is also interesting to note that they sorrowed most because they would not have the opportunity to hear him speak again, more so than sorrowing over missing his presence. The implication here is clearly that their loyalty to Paul was based on his message of truth rather than on his personality.

21:1 When we had departed from them may be rephrased as “after tearing ourselves away from them.” The apostle Paul’s affection for his fellow believers ran deep (20:37). It must have been a difficult life for Paul, constantly leaving friends and family as he traveled about proclaiming the gospel. In Patara, a seaport, Paul and his companions could find a larger ship that would sail the four hundred miles directly to Phoenicia, with its ports at Tyre and Sidon. In the summer months, the wind of the Aegean Sea blows from the north, beginning very early in the morning. In the late afternoon the wind dies away. Sunset brings a dead calm, and later a gentle south breeze blows. If a ship was heading down the coast, it would typically anchor at evening and wait for the winds of the morning.

Paul's Third Missionary Journey

Paul visited the churches of Galatia for a third time, and then settled in Ephesus for more than two years. Upon leaving Ephesus, Paul traveled again to Macedonia and Achaia (Greece) for a three-month stay. He returned to Asia by way of Macedonia. On this third journey Paul wrote 1 Corinthians from Ephesus, 2 Corinthians from Macedonia, and the letter to the Romans from Corinth.

21:2, 3 finding a ship: Paul wasted no time because he wanted to get to Jerusalem by Pentecost, which occurs just 50 days after Passover. Paul had celebrated Passover with his friends in Philippi more than three weeks earlier, so he had less than 30 days to reach Jerusalem in time for the festival.

21:4 In this verse, a warning was being given by the Holy Spirit of the danger that was waiting for Paul in Jerusalem. It is doubtful that the warning meant that Paul was actually not supposed to go. The warning did cause the disciples, who loved Paul and did not want to see him hurt, to discourage Paul from continuing his journey. But Paul had already demonstrated sensitivity to the leading of the Holy Spirit (16:6). He had already said that he was "bound in the spirit" to go to Jerusalem (20:22). Later Jesus Himself encouraged Paul concerning his decision to go (23:11).

21:5, 6 we knelt down … and prayed: Kneeling must have been their usual posture when in prayer (Eph. 3:14).

21:7 Ptolemais: The ancient seaport of Acco (modern Acre) was renamed by Ptolemy of Egypt to perpetuate his memory. one day: Haste limited their visit with the brethren there.

21:8 Some believe that Philip's house was the place where the believers of Caesarea assembled to worship God.

21:9 four virgin daughters: Here we see a fulfillment of what Peter said in ch. 2 about how young men and women both would be gifted by the Spirit of God to prophesy and proclaim the truth of God.

21:10–14 Agabus had predicted in 11:27–30 the famine that would fall upon Judea. In response to his prediction, the Gentile believers had collected money for the suffering believers in Jerusalem. Here Agabus predicted Paul's imprisonment and suffering. The Holy Spirit did not forbid Paul to go to Jerusalem, but warned him of what it would cost him.

21:15, 16 we packed and went up to Jerusalem: Although they had been told repeatedly that Paul would be beaten and arrested in Jerusalem, Paul's traveling companions continued to travel with him. They would not leave Paul in his moment of crisis. During times of suffering, true friends stick close to provide comfort and assistance (Prov. 17:17). Mnason of Cyprus possibly was one of the original 120 mentioned in 1:15.

21:17, 18 James and the elders were the leaders of house churches meeting in Jerusalem. It is interesting that none of the apostles are mentioned here. Seven years had passed since the Jerusalem council meeting of ch. 15. At that time, the apostles and the leaders of the church had gathered to settle the question of whether Gentiles had to become Jews before becoming Christians. That question was settled in the negative; the Scriptures and the Holy Spirit both taught that the gospel was for all people. Apparently the apostles left Jerusalem after that conference to carry out Jesus' commission to be witnesses to the "end of the earth" (1:8).

21:19 things which God had done: The evidence of how God changed the lives of Gentiles was presented to the Christians in Jerusalem. The strongest evidence was the Gentile believers themselves who had accompanied Paul to Jerusalem. At this time, Paul may have also given the money he had been collecting from the Gentile Christians (11:27–30; 1 Cor. 16:1). The love the Gentiles expressed to their suffering Jewish brethren was a mark of their genuine conversion.

21:20, 21 informed about you: Reports were circulating that Paul had been urging Jews to abandon Mosaic traditions. However, Paul never derided his Jewish heritage nor demanded that Jewish Christians renounce the Law of Moses. He only made it clear to everyone that the law could not function as a means of salvation. There is evidence that Paul was continuing to keep the Law when he stood before Felix in 24:11, 12. The fact that he was coming to Jerusalem to worship was evidence of this. What Paul did resist was any attempt to force Gentiles to become Jews. Salvation was through faith alone. Relying on adherence to the Jewish law was repudiation of the gospel message that salvation proceeds from faith in Christ and that alone.

21:22–24 Paul paid the expenses of the four men who had taken a vow, because the men were impoverished by the famine in Judea and did not have enough money to complete their vow by offering a sacrifice in the temple. But there might have been another reason as well. The Jewish historian Josephus tells us that when Herod Agrippa I began his reign over Judea in A.D. 41, he paid for a considerable number of Nazirite vows to show his respect for the Mosaic Law. For the sake of showing his Jewish brethren that he had not forsaken the laws of Moses, Paul did what they asked. Reputation was an issue for the apostle, as it is for all believers (1 Tim. 3:7).

21:25 they should keep themselves: The Christian leaders were not asking Gentiles to live like Jews; neither did they want to compel Jews to live like Gentiles. The spiritual unity of the body of believers is realized in its diversity, not in its conformity. From our diverse backgrounds and cultures we honor the same Lord.

21:26–29 defiled this holy place: The temple in NT times was surrounded by three courts. The innermost court was the Court of Israel where Jewish men could offer their sacrifices. Only consecrated priests actually entered the temple building itself, and only the high priest could enter the inner sanctuary of the Most Holy Place—once a year on the Day of Atonement (Heb. 9:7). The second court was the Court of the Women where Jewish families could gather for prayer and worship. The outer court was the Court of the Gentiles, open to all who would worship God. If any Gentile went beyond the barrier into the second court, he or she would be liable to the death penalty. The Roman authorities, out of respect for the Jewish religion, authorized the death sentence for this trespass even for their own Roman citizens.

21:30, 31 garrison: Between six hundred and a thousand men were stationed in the Fortress Antonia on the northwest side of the temple. From a tower overlooking the temple courts they could watch for any trouble. When the riot broke out against Paul, at least two hundred soldiers were dispatched from the fortress into the Court of the Gentiles.

21:32–36 They stopped beating Paul only because the Roman soldiers intervened to save his life. ran down to them: Herod had built the Fortress of Antonia adjacent to the temple area. A tunnel permitted soldiers of the garrison to appear suddenly in the temple grounds to maintain order.

21:37–40 When Paul spoke Greek, the commander realized that he was not the Egyptian assassin who had come to Jerusalem in A.D. 54 claiming to be a prophet. This Egyptian had led four thousand fanatical Jews up to the Mount of Olives, promising that at his word the walls of Jerusalem would fall and the Roman Empire would be destroyed. Felix, the governor of Jerusalem at the time, ordered his men up the Mount of Olives, where they killed some four hundred Jews and captured another two hundred. However, the Egyptian and some of his followers slipped away into the desert. These followers were called sicarii, meaning “dagger men.” They would mingle with the crowds in Jerusalem during festivals and murder pro-Roman Jews.

Paul Arrested in the Temple

After arriving in Jerusalem, Paul went to James, the brother of Jesus, and to the elders, telling them about his work among the Gentiles. The leaders of the church rejoiced over the conversion of Gentiles, but they were worried about Jewish hostility. Rumors were circulating that Paul had taught Jews living outside of Palestine not to keep the Jewish law. To avoid a dispute, Paul was urged to join with four men who had taken a Nazirite vow. By accompanying them to the temple and paying the expenses of the sacrificial offerings, Paul would demonstrate that as a Jew he was keeping the law, despite his witnessing to Gentiles.

Paul was also accused of profaning the temple by bringing a Gentile into its inner courts. Gentiles were allowed in the outer court, called appropriately the Court of the Gentiles, but they were forbidden to come into the Court of Women or the Court of Israel. Signs warned that Gentiles entering these courts would be put to death.

Though Paul had not brought Gentiles into the temple, accusations of such led to an attack against him. The mob stopped beating Paul only because the Roman soldiers intervened to save his life.

22:1 hear my defense: This was the first of five defenses Paul would make.

22:2 After speaking Greek to the commander (21:37), Paul addressed the people in the Hebrew dialect, most likely Aramaic. When the people heard him speaking to them in their own language they were reminded that Paul was not a Gentile but a Jew like themselves. Therefore, they listened to what he had to say.

22:3–5 as you all are today: Paul explained to the crowd that he understood why they were beating him and wanted him dead. They were zealous for God. Paul was not blaming them for what they had done to him. He pointed out that in his former zeal he would have done the same thing. Paul showed compassion even to his attackers; we should model that same type of compassion for all people who have not yet placed their faith in Jesus.

22:6–8 Now it happened: Paul shared his personal testimony. God has given to each of us a testimony of how He has changed our lives. We must share that testimony to everyone who will listen (1:8). Peter exhorts us in 1 Pet. 3:15 always to be ready to give an answer for the hope that lies within us.

22:9, 10 did not hear the voice: The men who had accompanied Paul heard the sound but could not understand the words that were being spoken to Paul. We are not told why they could not understand the sound they heard.

22:11 I could not see for the glory: Jesus told Paul to get up and go into Damascus. A divine appointment was waiting for him there. Paul arose but could not see. In the silence of his blindness there was deep repentance as he looked into the darkness of his own heart. In quiet times of honest reflection honest repentance may be experienced.

22:12–16 Calling on the name of the Lord saves us. Baptism is the declaration of that calling (Rom. 10:9–13).

22:17 returned to Jerusalem: Three years later (Gal. 1:17–19).

22:18–21 to the Gentiles: The Jews refused to hear him further because they believed that to share their privileges with non-Jews would jeopardize their nation’s unique relation to God.

22:22, 23 they listened to him: The Jews did not hate all Gentiles. In fact, they permitted God-fearing Gentiles to worship in the Court of the Gentiles. A Gentile could even become a proselyte, recognized as a Jew, by being circumcised and obeying the laws of Moses. Thus the Jews in this passage were not upset about allowing Gentiles to worship God, but at the idea that Gentiles could be on an equal footing with them before God without being proselytes. The fact that the Gentiles could come to God directly by faith in Jesus Christ was offensive to them.

22:24 The scourge was a leather whip, studded with pieces of metal or bone, fastened to a wooden handle. Paul had been beaten before with whips and rods (2 Cor. 11:24, 25). But scourging was worse. The punishment was used to cripple for life or to kill. The victim endured this torture either stretched out on the floor, tied to a pillar, or tied to a hook suspended from the ceiling.

Faith and Rights

Human rights" is not a new concept. Nearly every social structure has at least some rules to protect its members. As a Roman commander arrested Paul and ordered that he be beaten, Paul used his Roman citizenship to protect his rights (Acts 22:25–29). He had done the same thing at Philippi after being illegally jailed (16:36–40). In Jerusalem, he insisted on due process rather than endure unjust mob retaliation. He set the record straight so that the authorities could intervene appropriately.

Rumor, anger, or distortion regarding the faith need to be met forthrightly, as Paul's example shows. There's no need to allow discrimination to hinder one's practice of Christianity in society, particularly in one's workplace. As believers, we need a clear understanding of the laws and rules and their application, and we need to ensure that they are applied fairly on behalf of everyone—including ourselves.

22:25 Is it lawful: The Roman law was that no Roman citizen could be chained, scourged, or killed without a proper trial. Failure to obey this law resulted in severe punishment for the one who commanded the illegal punishment. Paul had been chained and was about to be scourged without any formal charges having been made.

22:26–30 Originally the privileges of Roman citizenship were limited to free people living in the city of Rome. Later, citizenship was granted to others living in the Roman Empire. Sometimes the emperor would offer citizenship to those who had rendered outstanding service. Possibly Paul's father or grandfather had became a citizen this way with the result that Paul was born a Roman. Ultimately God used Paul's Roman citizenship to spread the gospel to Rome.

23:1–3 whitewashed wall: Whitewash is a thin paint used to make something dirty look clean. The fact that Ananias had someone else "do his dirty work" did not absolve him from the ordering of the act. Ananias deserved this rebuke because his having Paul slapped in the face was unlawful. No Israelite was to be struck in the face by another Israelite (Lev. 19:15).

23:4, 5 Note that Paul did not defend his behavior (v. 3), but rather repented of it. I did not know: There are several possible reasons why Paul did not know Ananias was the high priest. It could be that Paul's eyesight was poor, and he could not see Ananias clearly. Or perhaps this was not a normal assembly of the Sanhedrin, and the high priest was not wearing his normal robes or sitting in his usual place. It had been 20 years since Paul had associated with this group. Possibly he did not know who was the current High Priest.

23:6–8 The Sadducees did not believe in the resurrection of the dead, miracles, life after death, or the existence of angels. On the other hand, the Pharisees believed in the supernatural and affirmed the very things the Sadducees denied.

23:9, 10 let us not fight against God: Perhaps they remembered the warning of their famous teacher Gamaliel (5:39).

23:11 bear witness at Rome: Warned by friends not to go to Jerusalem, Paul may have begun to doubt his decision. The Lord encouraged Paul not to be afraid because he was under the sovereign care of God. As Paul had borne witness to Jesus as a prisoner in Jerusalem, so he would do as a prisoner in Rome. Paul's chains would glorify God in ways that would have been impossible without them.

23:12–15 The willingness of the Jewish council to cooperate with the assassination plot against Paul shows how conscious they were of their weak case against him.

23:16–24 Paul was to be escorted out of the city under cover of darkness surrounded by hundreds of soldiers. Apparently the commander thought the threat of assassination was serious enough to commit almost half of the entire garrison at the Fortress of Antonia to escorting Paul at least part of the way to Rome.

23:25–30 He wrote a letter: Roman law required a subordinate officer to send a written statement of the case with a prisoner when he referred the case to his superior.

23:31, 32 Slipping out of Jerusalem when the city was quiet, the foot soldiers and cavalry probably attracted little attention. Ahead lay Antipatris, 40 miles away, by way of a winding downhill road where an ambush would have been disastrous. Antipatris was used by the Romans as a relay station for their troops. The rest of the journey was over open plain where there was no need for a large number of soldiers. The foot soldiers returned to Jerusalem, leaving the seventy horsemen to escort Paul the remaining distance to Caesarea, the capital of Judea. The hand of God over Paul's life can be seen in the provision of such extraordinary protection.

23:33, 34 the governor: Antonius Felix governed Judea from A.D. 52 to 60. Felix had been a slave, but had gained the status of freedman under the Emperor Claudius. Because Felix's brother was a friend of the emperor, Felix's political career blossomed, even though he was not popular among his peers. Felix was known for indulging in every kind of lust, and the writer Tacitus described him as "exercising the powers of a king with the character of a slave." he was from Cilicia: After reading the letter from Jerusalem, Felix wanted to know Paul's home province. When he learned it was Cilicia he decided to hear the case, because the political status of Cilicia did not require its natives to be sent back there for trial.

23:35 As the official residence built by Herod the Great, Herod's Praetorium included cells for prisoners (John 18:28; Phil. 1:13).

24:1–5 we have found this man: There were three basic charges against Paul: political treason, religious heresy, and temple desecration. His opponents argued that Paul had been causing riots throughout the empire, that he spoke against the Law of Moses, and that he had brought a Gentile into the Jewish temple courts.

“Nazarenes”

(Gk. . Nazoraios) (24:5; Matt. 2:23) Strong’s #3480: The name means “those who belong to the Nazarene.” Jesus was called “the Nazarene” (Matt. 2:23). It was not a flattering designation, but an insulting one. The Jewish leaders never thought the Messiah could come from Nazareth, a small town in Galilee, a region that was populated by many Gentiles and therefore was held in contempt by orthodox Jews. The early church was stigmatized with the same name; they were known as “the sect of the Nazarenes” (Acts 24:5). This meant they were considered an aberrant Jewish group (or sect) that believed that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah.

24:6–12 Paul first addressed the charge of sedition, knowing that if he was found guilty it would mean his life. He demonstrated how ridiculous the charge was in that it had only been twelve days since he had come to Jerusalem. This was hardly enough time to incite riots or start revolutions in Judea.

24:13, 14 Paul openly admitted that he was a follower of the Way, but he contended that he still believed the Law and the Prophets. That is, he was a follower of Judaism, a religion protected by Rome.

24:15–17 offerings to my nation: Paul had brought a gift from the Gentile churches to the Christians at Jerusalem as an expression of thanks for the gospel (1 Cor. 16:1–4; 2 Cor. 8; 9; Rom. 15:25–33).

24:18, 19 The reference to Jews from Asia indicated to Felix that Paul’s real accusers were not present, creating some suspicion about the charges against the apostle.

24:20–22 having more accurate knowledge of the Way: How did Felix know about the Christian faith? His wife Drusilla was Jewish. She was the great-granddaughter of Herod the Great, who had tried to kill the baby Jesus. She was the great-niece of the Herod who killed John the Baptist. Her father was the man who had the apostle James put to death (12:1, 2). Also, Felix was well acquainted with Christianity from having governed Judea and Samaria for six years.

24:23–25 Felix had taken Drusilla from her former husband, the king of Emesa in Syria. She was Felix’s third wife. His first wife was the granddaughter of Mark Antony and Cleopatra. His second wife was a princess whom he also divorced. When Paul talked about righteousness, self-control, and the coming judgment, Felix must have been reminded of his immoral life. He refused to talk any more about the Way because of the guilt he felt.

24:26 Felix may have hoped that Paul had money from the Gentile churches or that perhaps Paul's friends would pay a ransom for him. Felix wanted to talk about a payoff; Paul wanted to talk about righteousness (v. 25).

24:27 after two years: It may be that this was the time Luke wrote most of the Book of Acts, considering that he had access to people in Jerusalem and Caesarea for information about the early church. After two years, another riot broke out in Caesarea. Felix crushed it with such force that he was removed as governor around A.D. 60.

25:1–4 The Jews hated Felix, and they wrote letters to Rome detailing their outrage over his brutality against them. As a result, Felix was replaced as governor by Porcius Festus. Festus learned from the mistakes of Felix. Three days after arriving in Caesarea, Festus headed to Jerusalem to meet with the Jewish leaders to establish some sort of working arrangement with the high priest and the Sanhedrin. they petitioned him: The Jewish leaders pressured Festus not for a concession or a favor. They wanted Festus to send Paul back to Jerusalem for trial. Their plan was to assassinate Paul on the way (23:15).

25:5 see if there is any fault in him: Festus reopened Paul's case in an attempt to appease the Jewish leaders.

IN CONTEXT

Paul's Roman Citizenship

When it suited his needs, Paul used his status as a Roman citizen to frustrate his adversaries. His citizenship made kings and governors, soldiers and priests, and Romans and Jews all think twice about their intended actions toward him. But what did it mean to be a citizen of Rome?

The Roman Empire was the reigning power of its day. Being a citizen of the empire carried certain rights, responsibilities, and status. A citizen was liable for Roman property taxes and municipal taxes, but also had the right to vote in Rome (although during Paul's time different social classes had different rights). A Roman citizen was guaranteed a fair trial and was protected against certain forms of harsh punishment. A Roman citizen could not be executed without a trial and could not be crucified except by order of the emperor. A citizen could even appeal to Caesar in order to be tried in Rome.

Paul was born a Roman citizen, but how his family gained that citizenship is unknown. There were several ways to become a Roman citizen. Being born to a Roman parent was one way. Retiring from the Roman army was another. Citizenship could be granted by an emperor or a Roman general to an individual or to an entire group. Finally a person could purchase citizenship.

The empire of Rome was so powerful that few wished to incur its wrath by breaking its laws. Paul was intelligent enough to know all of his rights and savvy enough to know how to use them to his and especially God's advantage. Not only did his rights as a Roman citizen often save his life in dangerous situations (22:25), they also allowed him to carry the gospel message to jailers, shipmates, kings, and to the emperor in Rome (25:11).

25:6–12 Paul knew that as a citizen of Rome he could insist on a trial before the Roman judgment seat, and not the Jewish Sanhedrin, where he would find little justice. The appeal to Caesar was the right of any Roman citizen. If a citizen thought he was not getting justice in a provincial court, he could appeal to the emperor himself. If the appeal was declared valid, all other proceedings in the lower courts ceased and the prisoner was sent to Rome for disposition of his case.

25:13 Festus decided to present the problem to King Agrippa II (A.D. 53 to about 100). He and Bernice were children of Herod Agrippa I who died at Caesarea (12:23). Although Agrippa was king of only a small area in northern Palestine, he had the right of appointing the Jewish high priest and was considered an expert on Jewish affairs (26:3).

25:14–22 Festus laid Paul's case before the king: Festus had a problem. In the case of an appeal, a letter had to be written providing the details of the case. Festus did not understand what was going on with Paul or why the Jewish leaders hated him. When King Agrippa arrived to bring his official greetings, it gave Festus an opportunity to get an opinion from one who might have understood such things.

25:23–26 my lord: The Roman emperor, Nero (A.D. 54–68).

25:27 unreasonable … not to specify the charges: Hence the opportunity for Agrippa to hear Paul, which the king welcomed. Paul was equally pleased to bear witness before such a distinguished audience and a relatively friendly king.

26:1 Stretched out his hand: In salutation to the king.

26:2–5 I lived a Pharisee: The Jewish historian Josephus described the Pharisees as “a body of Jews with the reputation of excelling the rest of the nation in the observances of religion, and as exact exponents of the laws.” Paul pointed out that he was not some stranger or foreigner trying to start a new religion. He was a Jew, a Pharisee, who lived out his Jewish faith better than most.

26:6–9 for the hope of the promise: Paul was not being judged because he had done something wrong. He had not turned against his own Jewish heritage. Instead he fervently believed in the promises God had made to the nation of Israel: the promise of a coming Messiah and the reestablishment of the kingdom of God. Paul did not reject the hope of salvation for Israel. Instead he saw that hope fulfilled in the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus. The fact that Jesus had been raised from the dead confirmed to Paul that all believers would be raised from the dead to enjoy the blessings of the promised kingdom of God.

26:10 I cast my vote against them: Some have concluded that Paul must have been a member of the Sanhedrin at some time, since he mentions casting a vote. However, Paul was probably too young to belong to such a body of aged men or elders. Paul may have been the Sanhedrin’s chief prosecutor, urging a verdict of guilty against those Christians he had hunted down in the course of his campaign of persecution.

26:11 The imperfect tense of the verb compelled does not tell us whether or not Paul had actually been successful in causing believers to blaspheme their faith, only that he had tried to compel them to do so.

26:12, 13 a light from heaven: Nothing less than an act of God could have changed the zealot Saul into the apostle Paul.

26:14 kick against the goads: A young ox, when it was first yoked, usually resented the burden and tried kicking its way out. If the ox was yoked to a single-handed plow, the plowman would hold a long staff with a sharpened end close to the heels of the ox. Every time the ox kicked, it struck the spike. If the ox was yoked to a wagon, a studded bar with wooden spikes served the same purpose. The point was that the ox had to learn submission to the yoke the hard way. Before his encounter with Jesus on the Damascus road, Paul was resisting God in a similar manner (1 Tim. 1:13).

26:15 I am Jesus, whom you are persecuting: You are sinning against Me, but I am forgiving you.

26:16, 17 Gentiles, to whom I now send you: Paul's primary calling was Gentile evangelism (Eph. 3:6, 7). The fact that Paul was born in the Gentile city of Tarsus uniquely qualified him for this ministry.

26:18 from darkness to light: God's enlightenment promised by the prophets had come (Is. 42:6, 7, 16; Col. 1:12). To follow Christ meant leaving the reign of Satan and submitting to the control of God. Both forgiveness and sanctification come by faith in Christ. Those who are forgiven may receive an inheritance among those who are sanctified.

26:19 I was not disobedient: We must never forget that grace and faith must be followed by obedience.

26:20–22 Repentance indicates a complete change in thinking. In Rom. 12:2, Paul speaks of the "renewing of your mind." We do what we think is best, what makes sense to us. Paul was killing Christians because he thought it was the correct course of action. Christ's revelation changed his thoughts, but his preaching of the Good News was visible proof that he had repented of his former ways. Genuine repentance is evidenced by changed behavior.

26:23 Christ would suffer … rise … proclaim light: The gospel in a capsule.

26:24–32 Agrippa realized that Paul was doing more than just defending his faith; he was actually trying to persuade Agrippa to become a follower of Jesus Christ. If Agrippa had told those gathered that he did not believe the prophets, he would have angered the Jews. If he had acknowledged that he did believe the prophets, he would have had to give weight to Paul's words. Agrippa avoided being maneuvered into an embarrassing corner by sidestepping the issue. The interview was becoming too personal for Agrippa's comfort, so he ended the dialogue.

IN PERSON

Agrippa, Paul's Judge

Marcus Julius Agrippa was the Roman name of Agrippa II, the last of the Herodian dynasty of five Roman-appointed kings in Palestine. He and his father, Agrippa I, were descended from the Jewish-born Herod the Great, ruler of Judea at the time of Christ's birth (Matt. 2:1).

The writings of the Jewish historian Josephus (A.D. 37–100) provide the most information about Agrippa. Since he was too young to receive the throne of Judea in A.D. 44 when his father died, the Romans appointed a governor. Agrippa himself was given other territories to rule, notably in Galilee.

At the beginning of the Jewish revolt in A.D. 66 Agrippa came to Jerusalem to quell the disorder. Unsuccessful in this venture, he became an ardent Roman sympathizer. Josephus (The Wars of the Jews 2:345) attributes a speech to Agrippa in which he warned that the Romans were much too strong for the Jews to resist, and thus they should side with them. After the revolt in A.D. 70 the Romans gave Agrippa additional territory in reward for his loyalty.

In A.D. 59 the apostle Paul stood trial before Agrippa, who was considered an expert on Jewish affairs, and was interested in Paul's case (Acts 25:13—26:32). The king was accompanied at the trial by his sister Bernice (25:13, 23). Rumors about Agrippa, who apparently never married, having an incestuous relationship with Bernice were denied by Josephus while supported by the Roman writer Juvenal. Paul's judge was a Jewish king, a Roman sympathizer, and a man of questionable moral reputation. As Paul defended his Christian faith, he appealed to Agrippa's Jewish background, challenging even him to become a believing Jew (26:2, 3, 26, 27).

27:1 we: Luke accompanied Paul on this journey (for other “we” passages, see 16:10–17; 20:5–15; 21:1–18). other prisoners: Some of the other prisoners may have also appealed to Caesar, or they may have been under sentence of death and were on their way to Rome to appear as combatants in the arena.

27:2 The pronouns we and us indicate that Luke was also a member of the party.

IN FOCUS

"Christian"

(Gk. Christianos) (11:26; 26:28; 1 Pet. 4:16) Strong's #5546: This word means "one who belongs to Christ." It was first used as a term of contempt against the believers at Antioch (11:26). In the NT, the word is found in only three places (26:28; 1 Pet. 4:16). In the early days of the church, the believers did not have a distinctive name. They called each other "brothers" (6:3), "disciples" (6:1), "believers" (1Tim. 4:12), followers of "the Way" (9:2), or "saints" (1 Cor. 1:2). Jews who denied that Jesus was the Messiah would never call believers Christians, but called them the Nazarenes (24:5). In Antioch, where many Gentiles were converted and where missionary work beyond the Jewish community began in earnest, the believers were no longer considered a Jewish sect, so their pagan neighbors began calling them by a new name, Christian.

27:3 Julius treated Paul kindly: Roman officials treated this prisoner with great respect (16:35–39; 18:12–16; 23:12–24).

27:4–6 the winds were contrary: This was not a good time for sailing. It was just before the winter months when sailing became difficult because of storms. Because of headwinds, the ship had to sail north of the island of Cyprus, using it and the mainland to break the force of the gale. Eventually the travelers reached the port of Myra where a larger ship was found to sail to Italy.

27:7–9 Paul and his shipmates neared Cnidus on the southwest tip of Asia Minor, some 130 miles from Myra, which would have been their last port of call before sailing across the Aegean Sea to the coast of Greece. However, the wind was so strong that the ship was forced southward. The ship sailed along the southern coast of the island of Crete, again using the island to break the force of the wind. Finally the ship docked at a small port called Fair Havens. The season for sailing was over, and continuing the journey would have been dangerous.

27:9–12 Paul advised them: Paul had been at sea many times before. He had been shipwrecked at least two other times (2 Cor. 11:25), so he had some basis for what he was saying. However, his counsel was rejected. Because Fair Havens was a little town, the sailors decided to try to reach Phoenix, the major port on the west side of Crete, some 60 miles away. It could be that the owner of the ship wanted to get his grain to a larger port so that he could sell it. Furthermore Julius, the centurion in charge, probably wanted a better place to winter his men. In other words, greed and the desire for comfort may have gotten in the way of good sense.

27:13–16 In the morning there was a calm over the sea and a breeze blowing from the south, so the travelers quickly set sail, hugging the shoreline for protection. Suddenly a violent northeasterly storm called Euroclydon (a name given to all northeasterly storms) hit the ship, preventing the crew from sailing into the wind. The word translated tempestuous is the root of our word typhoon. The storm drove the ship south of a small island named Clauda, which broke the force of the gale long enough for the crew to take some measures to save the ship.

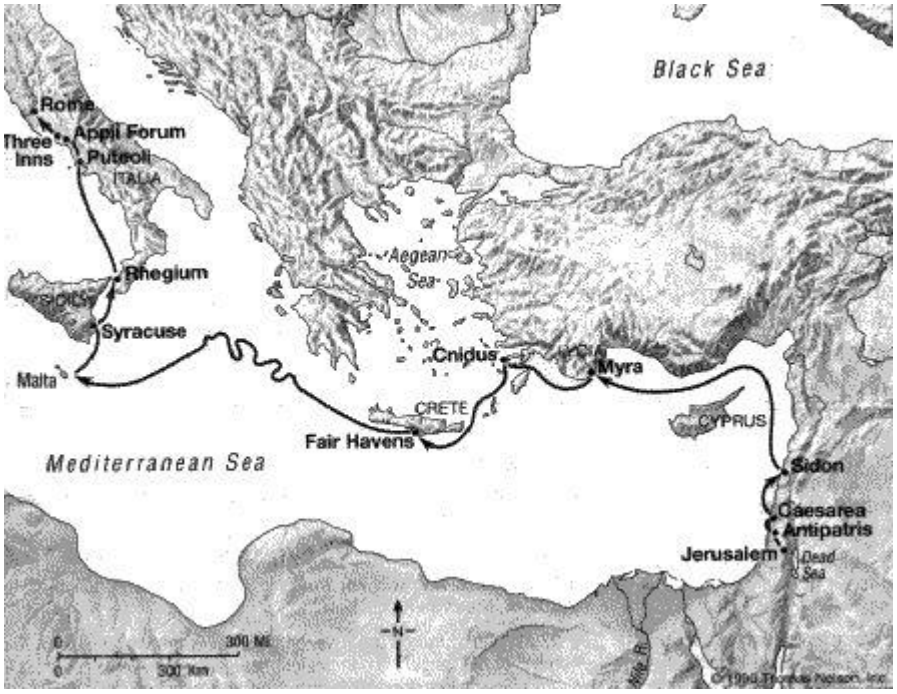
27:17, 18 cables to undergird the ship: Because the ship's timbers could come apart, the sailors passed strong ropes under the ship, pulling up tight to hold the ship together. run aground on the Syrtis Sands: The sailors were fearful of the sandbars of Syrtis, just off the northern coast of Africa. The crew of Paul's ship let down a sea anchor, attempting to slow themselves down.

27:19 the ship's tackle: Everything that added weight to the hull.

27:20–27 no loss of life: Paul had been given absolute assurance by the all-powerful and all-knowing God that no one would be lost on the ship. Yet in v. 31 Paul warned that if the sailors were successful in escaping from the ship, the Roman soldiers would lose their lives. Because of Paul's comments, the soldiers stopped the sailors from leaving the ship and everyone made it ashore alive (v. 44). God fulfilled His purpose and promise through the warnings of Paul and the choices of the soldiers.

27:28 A fathom equals six feet (2 m).

27:29–41 place where two seas met: A shoal on the north side of Malta bears the name "Bay of St. Paul." Since Paul's visit in A.D. 60, without interruption, the inhabitants of the island have been Christian.



Paul’s Journey to Rome

In Jerusalem after his third missionary journey, Paul struggled with Jews who accused him of profaning the temple (21:26–34). He was placed in Roman custody in Caesarea for two years, but after appealing to Caesar was sent by ship to Rome. After departing the island of Crete, Paul’s party was shipwrecked on Malta by a storm. Three months later he finally arrived at the imperial city.

27:42, 43 The soldiers planned to kill the prisoners because they knew Roman military law. If a prisoner escaped, the soldier on guard would be liable for the punishment of the one who escaped.

27:44 some on boards: Perhaps some on planks and some on other debris from the broken ship.

28:1 Malta was part of the Roman province of Sicily and was located about 60 miles south of that island near the toe of Italy.

28:2 natives: The people spoke their own dialect instead of using Greek, the language of cultured people.

28:3, 4 justice does not allow to live: Justice may refer to the goddess of that name. In any case the Maltese believed the universe was under moral law.

28:5–8 lay sick of a fever: This fever was possibly Malta fever, which was common in Malta, Gibraltar, and other Mediterranean islands. The microorganism has since been traced to the milk of the Maltese goats. The fever usually lasted four months, but sometimes could last as long as two or three years.

28:9–11 This Alexandrian ship bore a figurehead of the sons of Zeus called the Twin Brothers, Castor and Pollux, the mythological figures revered by sailors as protectors on the sea.

From Malta to Rome

Springtime on the Mediterranean meant the return of cargo-laden ships from Alexandria, Egypt. They used westerly winds to deliver their goods to the empire's key ports. Paul was transported from Malta to Rome on one such vessel, a voyage that covered 180 nautical miles in less than two days at sea (Acts 28:11). On the journey he was able to visit three important cities and continue his movement-building work: Syracuse, the dominant city of Sicily; Rhegium, a key harbor town on the Italian side of the Strait of Messina; and Puteoli, gateway to southern Italy, just 33 miles from Rome.

Throughout Christian history, the gospel has invariably traveled the routes of commerce. For example, many have been introduced to the Good News through the witness of: • merchants doing business in foreign countries; • employees of multinational corporations stationed overseas; • consultants advising governments and businesses worldwide; • medical personnel serving in developing nations; • faculty and students studying and teaching around the world; and • soldiers in foreign lands during war or occupation.

28:12–15 Some Christians from Rome traveled 33 miles south to a place called Three Inns to meet Paul. Others traveled ten miles farther south to meet Paul at Appii Forum. Three years earlier in his letter to the Roman Christians, Paul had expressed his deep desire to see them some day (Rom. 15:24). The day had come.

Paul met a group of Christians from Rome at the town of Appii Forum, probably situated on this ancient Roman road known as the Appian Way (Acts 28:15).

28:16 Because Paul had not been accused of a dangerous crime and was not considered a political threat, he was permitted to dwell by himself under house arrest. This meant he could entertain his friends and minister to groups such as Roman Jews and Gentiles.

28:17 leaders of the Jews: By this time, the decree of the emperor Claudius (18:2) had been allowed to lapse, and Jews had returned to Rome.

28:18–22 The Jewish leaders had not received any news about Paul from Judea. It may be that after Paul's appeal to Caesar, Paul was on the first ship that made it to Italy. Or the Jewish antagonists may have given up their attacks on Paul, having already failed with Felix, Festus, and Agrippa. A third reason may be that the Jews, only recently back in Rome after the expulsion of Claudius, wanted to avoid trouble.

28:23–25 some were persuaded … some disbelieved: These contrasting reactions were experienced by Jesus and by every evangelist thereafter.

28:26, 27 you will see, and not perceive: This quotation (Is. 6:9, 10) is cited five times in the NT to explain rejections of gospel truth.

INSIGHT

Looking Beyond Rome

Paul felt driven to get to Rome (Acts 19:21; Rom. 1:15), no doubt because it was the capital city. But he also intended to stop there on his way to Spain (15:28). Why was Spain significant? It's impossible to say exactly what Paul had in mind. But the OT prophet Isaiah predicted that in the end times Gentiles would join Jews at Jerusalem to worship God, inaugurating a marvelous new era (Is. 66:19–24). Isaiah's text refers to "Tarshish," thought to mean Spain. Is it possible that Paul believed that getting the gospel to Rome meant being one step closer to the fulfillment of Isaiah's glorious vision (Acts 26:23; 28:28)? We don't know whether Paul ever made it to Spain.

28:28–30 two whole years: During this time Paul was permitted to minister to anyone who came to his rented house. Paul also wrote four of the NT letters (Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon) during this period.

28:31 Luke does not reveal what happened to Paul's case. Apparently it had not yet been decided when Luke finished Acts. There are good reasons for believing that Paul was released, since he had been found innocent by all Roman officials up to this point. Ancient tradition tells us that Paul actually went to Spain as he desired (Rom. 15:24). In his captivity letters, Paul expressed his hope of being released (Philem. 22) and his confidence that he would be released (Phil. 1:25). Paul's Pastoral Epistles contain items that cannot be fitted into the Book of Acts, suggesting that they were written later. For instance, Titus 1:5 implies that Paul ministered on the island of Crete, something that is not reported in the Book of Acts. Paul most likely resumed his missionary travels for two more years before being rearrested, retried, condemned, and executed as a martyr some time between A.D. 64–67.

The Epistle to the Romans

———— ROMANS SERVES AS THE FLAGSHIP OF THE FLEET of Pauline letters within the New Testament. This letter has also loomed large in the history of Christianity. Countless men and women of faith have singled out Romans as the weapon God graciously used to bring about their surrender to Christ. Augustine, Martin Luther, John Wesley, and others received unexpected spiritual volleys from Romans that pierced their defenses and ended their rebellion against God.

Romans combines breadth, logic, and a mature understanding of the Old Testament Scriptures into a powerful arsenal. By the time it was written, the Holy Spirit had shaped the apostle Paul into a skillful communicator of the faith. The result is his letter to the Romans, a theological treatise that perfectly fits Paul's description of all Scripture as "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. 3:16). The letter represents a full expression of apostolic theology. Paul's arguments challenge the secular, pagan mind, yet they also pierce the shallow spiritual confidence of many nonpagans. Romans is a mighty leveler, for it declares that "all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God" (3:23). Since all are sinners, it comes as a delightful shock that "God demonstrates His own love towards us, in that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us" (5:8). This is the Good News, which Paul so eloquently and systematically defends in this theological treatise addressed to the Romans.

All of Paul's other letters arise from a particular occasion and have a definite purpose. Romans is different; from the content it seems to have a much more general didactic aim. Having said this, it is possible to see at least three purposes Paul had in writing the book.

His first purpose was to prepare the Romans for his planned journey to Rome and later to Spain. His immediate itinerary involved a trip to Jerusalem, but his vision was toward the west. He clearly suggests that he expects assistance from them in his endeavor to carry the gospel to Spain (15:24). But if that had been his only purpose, a brief note would have been enough. Obviously Paul had more in mind.

A second purpose involved Paul's understanding that the believers needed to "be established" (1:11). Paul wanted to give them a well-instructed faith. His letter is a kind of syllabus of Paul's apostolic teaching. Romans is a masterful presentation of Godplan of salvation for Jews and Gentiles.

The third purpose for the letter was pastoral. Paul wanted to exhort Jewish and Gentile believers to live in harmony. As in most of the early churches, the gospel brought different groups of people together who otherwise would have stayed apart, whether for reasons of nationality, status, or culture. Once they came together under one roof, the challenge was to preserve their oneness in Christ. Thus, throughout the letter, Paul deals with problems arising from Jewish and Gentile differences. He emphasizes what everyone shared. Since there is only one God, He is the God of both Jew and Gentile. Both groups are under sin (3:9), and both are saved through faith (3:30). This theme of Jew and Gentile living together surfaces most clearly in chs. 14 and 15, where Paul deals with the practical aspects of being together in one body. Paul hammers home his central theme: the righteous God justifies and ultimately glorifies both Jew and Gentile by grace through faith.

Romans includes the most systematic presentation of theology found anywhere in Scripture. It explains the meaning of the Cross for the believer's life. While expounding why Jesus died for all of humanity, Paul clarifies the core concepts of the Christian faith: sin and righteousness, faith and works, justification and election. The letter contains (1) a detailed description of the sinfulness of man (1:18—3:20); (2) an extensive discussion of justification by faith (3:21—5:11), including a clear interpretation of the death of Christ (3:24–26); (3) an elaborate explanation of sanctification (5:12—8:39); (4) a strong section on the doctrine of election (9:1–29); (5) a developed exposition of what happened to the nation of Israel and the destiny of God's people (9:1—11:36); (6) an extended section addressing spiritual gifts (12:1–8); and (7) instructions on the believers' relationship to government (13:1–14). Certainly Romans is the most doctrinal book in the Bible. Because it provides a systematic outline of the essentials of the Christian faith, it is as useful to the mature believer as it is to someone who wants a short introduction to the Christian faith.

The author introduces himself in the first verses of Romans by name (Paul), by identity (bondservant), by vocation (apostle), and by purpose (separated to the gospel of God). Romans has been recognized as an epistle of Paul throughout church history. The character and message of Paul, which we read so much about in Acts, appear in Romans as his signature to the letter.

This letter was written to a vibrant church in the city of Rome. Although the origins of the church are unknown, it could have been established by new believers returning from Jerusalem following the Resurrection and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. When Paul wrote this letter he had not personally visited Rome, although he had desired to do so for some time.

Few clues are included in the Epistle to the Romans about the Roman believers. Paul admired their faith and prayed regularly for them. It is evident that the church included both Jews and Gentiles. On the surface it does not appear that any problem in the church at Rome was the occasion for the epistle. However, there is some indication that the believers at Rome needed to be exhorted to live in harmony (14:1—15:13). Evidence in the Corinthian letters, in Romans, and in Acts indicates that Paul wrote to the Roman church from Corinth on his third missionary journey. When Paul composed the Corinthian epistles, he referred to a collection for the poor Christian believers in Jerusalem that was being gathered from the various Mediterranean churches (1 Cor. 16:1–3; 2 Cor. 8:1—9:1). By the time Romans was written that task had been completed and Paul was about to depart to Jerusalem to deliver the funds (15:22–29).

The implication is that Paul planned to sail for Judea directly from Corinth. Phoebe also, a fellow believer, was about to leave Corinth for Rome. She was presumably the bearer of the letter from Paul to the Romans. Since practically all navigation on the Mediterranean Sea ceased after November 11 and was not resumed again until March 10, Romans was likely written in the fall of A.D. 57.

A plot by the Jews, however, changed Paul’s travel plans. Instead of taking a ship from Corinth, he went through Macedonia by foot (Acts 20:3) and eventually left for Jerusalem from Philippi the next spring (Acts 20:6). Little did Paul know that his eventual arrival in Rome would be in captivity (Acts 28:17–31).

Commentary

1:1–7 In NT times the opening section of a letter named the sender and the recipient. Paul (v. 1) wrote this letter to all who are in Rome (v. 7). In addition to his greetings, Paul includes a brief summary of the gospel of God to be treated in this epistle. That gospel was promised in the OT (v. 2), was about Jesus Christ (vv. 3, 4), and was the basis of Paul's apostleship and mission (vv. 5, 6).

1:1 Bondservant means "slave." Paul is talking about a slavery undertaken voluntarily out of love (Ex. 21:1–6), unlike the forced slavery well known to many in the Roman Empire. Paul emphasizes his personal subjection to Jesus Christ. By calling himself an apostle, Paul places himself on the level of the twelve apostles and claims authority from God for His work. separated to the gospel of God: Paul was set apart for the ministry of the gospel long before the Damascus road experience (Gal. 1:15). With the pedigree of Paul (Phil. 3:5, 6), he would have made an excellent minister to his people, the Jews. But in the providence of God, Paul was separated unto the gospel of God as an apostle to the Gentiles (Acts 9:15). Thus, a disastrous schism between the Jewish and Gentile factions of the early church was avoided through the unique ministry of Paul.

1:2, 3 Humanly speaking, Jesus was a descendent of David (Matt. 1:1). He was truly and completely human; but at the same time, He was God's Son. The fact that Jesus was a descendent of David also links Him to the Davidic covenant. When Christ returns to reign over all, He will fulfill God's promise to David to give him a dynasty that will last forever (2 Sam. 7:8–17).

1:4 The word translated declared means "designated." Jesus did not become Son of God by the resurrection. Instead, the Resurrection proved that Jesus was the Son of God.

1:5–6 grace and apostleship: Probably better translated "grace of apostleship," Paul regards his calling as a heavenly gift. The purpose of his apostleship is for obedience to the faith among all nations, for His name. Paul wants to bring the nations of the world, both Jew and Gentile, into obedience to the faith (i.e., the body of doctrine which he teaches). among whom you also are the called of Jesus Christ: The expression the called is a favorite one of the apostle to indicate those who have trusted the Lord Jesus as Savior (compare 8:28).

1:7 saints: Holy ones, people set apart for God. Because God is holy, His people must be morally holy (1 Pet. 1:15, 16). Grace: Unmerited favor of God, which enables us to be, and to do, what God wants. peace: Perfect harmony with God, others, and oneself—Christian wholeness. Only after we have experienced God's grace can we experience His peace.

1:8 your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world: So strong was the faith of these Roman believers that, as the church of the Thessalonians (1 Thess. 1:8), Paul speaks of it in worldwide terms. The expression throughout the whole world is the common one for "everywhere."

1:9, 10 always in my prayers: Paul prayed for them every time he prayed. In other words, they were on his prayer list. The greatest of saints, and even our Lord Jesus, knew they could not do their work for God or live their lives without praying.

1:11, 12 To impart … some spiritual gift does not mean that Paul would bestow spiritual gifts like teaching, healing, or prophecy. It means that he would exercise his spiritual gift and in so doing would bless them.

1:13 His ministry elsewhere hindered (Gk. koluo) Paul from coming to Rome sooner (15:22).

1:14 Paul felt he had a duty to preach to the cultured and uncultured, to the educated and uneducated. Although not many wise people are called, some are (1 Cor. 1:26–29); all need to hear.

1:15–17 Ready to preach the gospel states Paul's commitment. Verses 16 and 17 give his reason for that commitment and summarize the message of the entire epistle.

1:15 I am ready to preach: This expression appears to be the middle statement of a trilogy of three first-person statements concerning Paul's preaching of the gospel of Christ. The first segment is I am a debtor. The third statement is I am not ashamed. All of us are debtors to Christ. All of us should be unashamed of the gospel of Christ. But not all are ready to preach that gospel. Paul was not only able and willing, but he was ready to preach as well. He was a clean vessel, not just a chosen vessel. He was ready to be used of God.

Salvation

In the letter to the Romans we find the apostle Paul's clearest and most detailed explanation of the gospel message. After his customary salutation, Paul explains his unabashed passion for taking the Good News of Christ to the ends of the earth: "it is the power of God to salvation for everyone who believes" (1:16). The Greek word for salvation used by Paul literally means "deliverance" or "preservation." In a spiritual context, the idea is rescue from the power and dominion of sin. Paul's fervor for preaching the gospel was rooted in its power "to free" or "to rescue" people from the tragic consequences of their own sin.

Paul and the other NT writers portray Jesus Christ, on the basis of His sacrificial death on the Cross in the place of sinners, as the Author and Provider of salvation (3:24, 25; 5:21; Acts 4:12; Heb. 12:2). This spiritual deliverance is graciously and lovingly offered by God to all people, but only those who repent and trust in Jesus will experience its blessings (John 3:16; Eph. 2:8, 9; Heb. 2:3).

What exactly are those blessings? Some Bible teachers summarize them as salvation from the penalty of sin, salvation from the power of sin, and salvation from the presence of sin. Theologians use the terms justification, sanctification, and glorification. Justification is the divine act of declaring sinners to be righteous on account of their faith in Jesus. He paid for their sins completely and finally on the Cross, and through faith in Him their sins can be forgiven (3:21; 4:5; 5:1). Closely related to justification is regeneration, in which the Spirit of God indwells a repentant sinner and imparts eternal life to his or her spiritually dead soul (Eph. 2:1–5). Sanctification is the process in which God develops the new life of the believer and gradually brings it to perfection (6:11; Phil. 1:6). Glorification is the ultimate salvation of the whole person. This occurs when we are face to face with our Savior in His coming kingdom. At that time, God will completely mold us into the image of Christ (8:29, 30; Phil. 3:21). Then we will be able to enjoy complete fellowship with God, singing His praises forever.

Other benefits of salvation include reconciliation and adoption. When our sins are forgiven, we move from a position of being God's enemies to being His beloved children (John 1:12; Gal. 4:4, 5; Eph. 1:5).

Is it any wonder that the apostle Paul was so excited about the gospel and its power to save? The more we consider the marvelous truth of salvation, the more enthusiastic we will be, thankful to God and eager to share with others the hope that is in us (1 Pet. 3:15).

1:16 The NT speaks of salvation in the past tense (Eph. 2:8), the present tense (2 Cor. 2:15), and the future tense (13:11). In the past, the believer has been saved from the penalty of sin. In the present, the believer is being saved from the power of sin. In the future, the believer will be saved from the very presence of sin (Matt. 5:10–12; 8:17; 2 Cor. 5:10; 2 Tim. 2:11–13; Rev. 22:12). not ashamed: Paul was ready to preach the gospel of Christ. When we really believe in it, we too are eager to make it known. the power of God: He was not ashamed because it works. Salvation delivers us from the judgment of God and the power of sin. It makes us God's children, giving us peace with Him and a share in future glory. Christ's atonement makes salvation available to everyone who will accept His offer. believes: Accepts the truth about Jesus revealed by God and acts accordingly. the Jew first: The Jews were first in that God worked with them throughout the OT to prepare salvation for the entire human race. For Paul the term Greek includes all people who are not Jews.

1:17 From faith to faith means faith is at the beginning of the salvation process, and it is the goal as well. When a person first exercises faith in Christ, that person is saved from the penalty of sin and declared righteous. As the believer lives by faith, God continues to save him or her from the power of sin to live righteously (v. 16). the righteousness of God: A key concept in Romans. God is righteous because He always acts in accord with His holy character and His promises to people. Because He is righteous, He condemns sin and judges sinners (1:18—3:20). Because of that same righteousness, He has provided through Christ forgiveness for all who believe (justification; 3:21—5:21) and power for living a holy life in right relationship to Himself (sanctification; 6:1—8:39). God's righteousness shows itself in His faithful keeping of His promise to the Jews (9:1—11:36), and in His careful instructions for the Christian's daily walk of holiness (12:1—15:13).

1:18–32 God's judgment is a fact (v. 18). Rejection of the knowledge of God is the cause of His judgment (vv. 19–23); increased wickedness is the tragic result (vv. 24–32). There is repetition of the phrase God gave them up (vv. 24, 26) or over (v. 28), indicating a progression. Each time the phrase is used it indicates that they have become more degenerate.

1:18 As the next verse indicates, the truth is truth about God. Having departed from godliness and righteousness, people suppress the truth about God: that God is their loving Creator and deserves their worship and praise. Sinful people can mentally perceive the revealed truth of God (vv. 19, 20), but they have chosen to suppress it. They are without excuse. God's anger is being revealed (the present tense) against sin and the suppression of the truth.

1:19, 20 what may be known of God: Not only are divine attributes clearly seen in humanity, but they can be seen in the material universe as well (v. 20; 10:18; Ps. 19:1–4). Nature itself speaks eloquently of its Creator. From the intricate design of the human cell to the majestic strength of the Rocky Mountains, all of God's works testify to His wisdom and power. God's invisible attributes, such as His eternal power and Godhead, meaning His divine nature, can be clearly seen by contemplating His awesome works in all of creation.

Facing the Facts About Sin

The Bible is straightforward about the ultimate cause behind suffering and evil. It gives a sobering account of how we human beings, who were created as pure and noble creatures, have become wicked and hurtful toward each other. The Book of Romans speaks candidly about our condition, which it calls sin (Rom. 3:23). This separation from God has resulted in our thoughts becoming futile and our foolish hearts being darkened (1:21). God has given us up to the full outworking of our rebellion against Him (1:24). This has produced: • Sexual immorality, wherein we dishonor the bodies that God gave us (1:24).

• Idolatry, wherein we turn away from our Creator and exalt the works of our own hands (1:25).

• Vile passions, wherein we become irrational pleasure seekers, often dominated by a perverted sensuality, rather than thoughtful servants of each other and responsible stewards of God's good gifts (1:26, 27).

• A debased mind, wherein we come under terrible spiritual bondage that makes us incapable of doing good; we become slaves to sin (1:28).

Paul concludes this severe but enlightening assessment with a list of ugly consequences, including approval of each other's sins (1:29–32). The candor of this list is painful, but honest. Any resistance to sin seems to be overridden by a compulsive search for freedom from all restraints to fulfill unbridled pleasure. Rules, laws, values, traditions, or any other restraints are steadily removed.

Thus, like the people of Sodom and Gomorrah, we are traveling the road to disaster. God declares that because of our sin, we are deserving of death (1:32), inexcusable (2:1), and treasuring up wrath and judgment for ourselves (2:5). This is true of every human being (3:10–12; compare Ps. 51:4).

The Book of Romans carefully spells out the eternal implications of this sinful rebellion. It warns us that sin is real. It is not just bad feelings or an overly sensitive conscience. We have alienated ourselves from a righteous and holy God, and there is a penalty to pay—the penalty of eternal death, of everlasting separation from Him.

However, Romans does not stop there. It tells of God's wonderful provision for us in Jesus Christ, who brought the opportunity for peace with God, access by faith to His grace, and hope of returning to His glory (Rom. 5:1–5). To demonstrate His love, Jesus paid the penalty for our sins on the Cross (5:8). Thus with Paul we can say, "Thanks be to God for His indescribable gift!" (2 Cor. 9:15).

1:21, 22 They knew, that is "perceived," truth about God through creation (v. 18). Nature reveals God as great and good. Its gentle rain and rich soils provide humans with all varieties of delicious food. God is good. Even with all this evidence in creation, people refuse to recognize their Creator, worship Him, or glorify Him as God.

1:23 The ultimate human folly (v. 22) is idolatry.

1:24 In God's present wrath (v. 18; there is also a wrath to come when Christ returns, see 1 Thess. 1:10), He gave them up, that is "over," to their sin (vv. 26, 28). God did not give up on humanity, but He did allow them to go deeper and deeper into sin. He gives us an opportunity to see how evil sin really is and how desperately wicked people can become.

1:25 The lie refers to idols. They are satanic counterfeits of God, void of truth and power.

1:26 The next verse makes clear that this verse refers to unnatural sexual relations between women. Lesbianism is against nature; it is contrary to the intention of the Creator.

1:27 Homosexual acts are sin (Lev. 18:22). In this passage, the point is not that homosexuality is a sin that should be punished. Rather homosexuality itself is the punishment. Having rejected God and become idolaters, some men have been given over to their shameful passions (v. 26). Thus, they receive in themselves the penalty of their error.

1:28 a debased mind: A mind totally devoid of moral sensitivity.

1:29–32 These verses contain one of the most extensive lists of sins in all Scripture. The list shows the exhaustive sweep of human moral depravity (compare all in v. 29). Note that while society tends to rationalize certain sins, God judges all sin. These sins particularly reveal our rebellious hearts. All, without exception, deserve God's punishment.

2:1–16 How does God judge? He judges justly (v. 2), according to a person's deeds (vv. 6–10) and in the light of what one knows (vv. 11–16).

2:1 In 1:18–32, Paul declares that all unrighteous people are without excuse. Now he demonstrates that the self-righteous (those who judge others) are inexcusable, by revealing the standards by which everyone will be judged. Judgment will be (1) according to truth (vv. 1–5), (2) according to works (vv. 6–11), and (3) according to the light one has of the law (vv. 12–16).

2:2 Truth as used in this verse is different from the truth in 1:18, 25. There it referred to the evidence of God in creation; here it refers to the true condition of humanity.

2:3 The man who knows what is wrong, condemns it in others, but thinks his own sins will be overlooked by God.

2:4 Repentance literally means "to change one's mind." In this context, it means to reject one's sinful habits and turn to God. This is the only occurrence of this word in Romans.

2:5 Wrath as used here is different from the "wrath of God" in 1:18. There God's wrath was His present anger; here the word refers to God's future wrath. Most take this future wrath to refer to the day of judgment. Thus, people who continue in their rebellion against God are accumulating wrath for themselves.

2:6 who will render to each one according to his deeds: When unsaved men appear before the final judgment bar of God, the Great White Throne Judgment, salvation will not be the issue there. This is a judgment to determine the degree of punishment. Thus, God will mete out punishment in relation to the evil deeds of the individual. By the same token, at the judgment seat of Christ, where only believers appear, God will reward us according to our deeds.

2:7 According to this verse, it seems that eternal life can be gained by doing good. But Romans clearly teaches justification by faith (3:22). But Paul does not contradict himself. The subject of this verse is judgment, not justification. Believers who continue in good works will receive rewards in the life to come. Whenever the NT speaks of eternal life as a present possession, it is a gift received by faith (John 3:16); but whenever it refers to eternal life as something to be received in the future by those who are already believers, it refers to eternal rewards (5:21; Gal. 6:8; 1 Tim. 6:17– 19; Titus 1:2; 1 Pet. 1:7). Rewards will be based on works accomplished here on earth.

2:8, 9 The self-seeking and disobedient will experience God's punishment. Tribulation and anguish are the fate of every person who does evil. Truth refers to the gospel message (Gal. 2:5).

2:10 All believers doing good works will be rewarded.

2:11 For there is no partiality with God: An eternal truth is that as God deals in condemnation without favoritism, likewise He deals in salvation without favoritism. God is impartial because He does not change His pattern "to the Jew first," whether righteousness or unrighteousness is involved.

IN CONTEXT

The Law

Paul's reference to "law" (Rom. 2:12) has to do not with laws in general, but with the specific code of rules and regulations that God gave to Moses on Mount Sinai. The Law was part of the covenant that set Israel apart as God's people. It governed their worship, their relationship to God, and their social relationships with one another. The Ten Commandments form a summary of that Law.

Israel was not the only nation to have a law code. Indeed, such collections were common in the ancient world. Most of them began by explaining that the gods gave the king power to reign, along with a pronouncement about how good and capable he was. Then came the king's laws grouped by subject. Finally, most of the codes closed with a series of curses and blessings.

What set the Mosaic Law apart from these other codes was, first of all, its origin. The Law was given by God Himself. It issued from His very nature; like Him it was holy, righteous, and good. Thus, all crimes in Israel were crimes against God (1 Sam. 12:9, 10). He expected all of the people to love and serve Him (Amos 5:21–24). As their final judge, He disciplined those who violated the Law (Ex. 22:21–24; Deut. 10:18; 19:17), though He also held the nation responsible for insuring that justice was carried out (13:6–10; 17:7; Num. 15:32–36).

Furthermore, God ruled over Israel, in effect, as the nation's King. Ancient kings often enacted laws to try to outdo their predecessors in image, economic power, and political influence. God, however, gave His law as an expression of love for His people, to advance their best interests (Ex. 19:5, 6).

The Law can be divided into three categories—moral laws, ceremonial laws, and civil laws. The latter regulated in great detail matters having to do with leaders, the army, criminal cases, crimes against property, humane treatment, personal and family rights, property rights, and other social behavior.

The ceremonial laws contained specifications regarding public worship and ritual, giving high priority to the concept of holiness. Because God is holy (Lev. 21:8), Israel was to be holy in all its religious practices.

The Law was given specifically to Israel, but it rests on eternal moral principles that are consistent with God's character. Thus, it is a summary of fundamental and universal moral standards. It expresses the essence of what God requires of people. That's why when God judges, He can be impartial. Gentiles will not be judged by the Law (Rom. 2:12), since it was not given to them, but they will still be judged by the same righteous standard that underlies the Law.

2:12 Those without law are the Gentiles (v. 14). Those in the law are the Jews.

2:13 hearers … doers: It is not enough to know God's will; only those who do His will are pleasing to God (Luke 6:46). justified: By having their sins forgiven and being accepted into right relationship with God.

2:14 by nature do the things in the law: Gentiles who do not have the Law still do such things as honor their parents, which indicates that they believe in a basic moral law (v. 15). They know within their hearts that there is a difference between right and wrong. This "law of conscience" serves as a judge to them in place of Moses' law.

2:15 The Law is not inscribed in our hearts, but the work of the law is written on our hearts. The Law of Moses was engraved in stone, and there is a similar moral law within every person.

2:16 According to the gospel Paul preached, God will judge not only people's actions, but their motives, or secrets, as well (1 Cor. 4:5).

2:17–29 Paul applies God's standards of judgment directly to His chosen people. They claim to be instructed in God's will and thus able to distinguish right from wrong. They aspire to teach others (vv. 17–20), yet their inconsistent conduct contradicts their knowledge (vv. 21–24). Their covenant of circumcision has been made useless by their faithless conduct (v. 25). The uncircumcised Gentile is made acceptable to God by his righteous conduct (vv. 26, 27). God looks at the attitude of a person's heart (vv. 28, 29).

2:17 Indeed you are called a Jew, and rest on the law: Israelites who remained in Israel, or who returned to it after the Babylonian captivity, were designated as "Jews," even though tribes other than Judah were included. Paul calls himself a "Jew" in Acts 21:39 but "an Israelite" in Rom. 11:1 and "a Hebrew" in Phil. 3:5. All three names refer to the same people; but in a technical sense "Hebrew" is the racial name, "Israel" is the national name, and “Jew” is the religious name of the sons of Jacob. The Jews rested on the law because it was described as “wisdom and … understanding in the sight of the peoples” (Deut 4:6). The Jew did not have to travel around the world to study in a distant university. He did not have to rely on the philosophy of the Gentiles. The Jew trusted his law to be all that he needed and the best education he could get. Thus, he boasted in the God who gave that law.

2:18 things that are excellent: What is morally important.

2:19, 20 The Jewish people Paul addressed were not only confident before God (vv. 17, 18), but they felt superior to others and considered themselves to be guides, lights, instructors, and teachers.

2:21–23 There is a touch of sarcasm in Paul’s question, You, therefore who teach another, do you not teach yourself? The Jews were prepared to teach the heathen Gentiles the commandments of the law, but were themselves breaking these commandments. Do you steal? (the eighth commandment), do you commit adultery? (the seventh commandment), do you rob temples? (the second commandment). The Jews were ready to preach morality but their lives did not back up their message. They were stealing from one another, perhaps by collecting an extreme interest; they were committing adultery; they were profaning the house of God by commercialism; and thus Paul asked the biting question, You who make your boast in the law, do you dishonor God through breaking the law? Transgression of the law brings dishonor to God. The Jews claim to have known the law but were silent in claims to have kept it.

2:21 Special privileges like having the law do not guarantee having righteousness.

2:22 Apparently it was not unusual for their enemies to accuse the Jews of robbing temples. Paul may be using the phrase in a figurative way as an equivalent of “to be sacrilegious or impious.”

2:23, 24 Paul argues that these particular Jews who thought they were guides to the blind (v. 19) were actually breaking their own laws and dishonoring God (Matt. 15:3–9). Paul applies Is. 52:5 as proof of his point. As a result of their hypocrisy, the Gentiles themselves blasphemed God.

2:25, 26 Circumcision becomes a useless ritual unless the person develops an obedient heart that is completely submitted to God (1 Sam. 15:22; Is. 1:11–20). On the other hand, if a Gentile was keeping the law, circumcision would not matter. God judges a person according to the state of his or her heart, not according to external appearances.

2:27 judge you: These self-righteous Jews believed they would escape judgment. According to them, God's judgment was reserved for the Gentiles. However, Paul confronted their hypocrisy. A Gentile who kept the law would be able to judge a Jew who broke it.

2:28, 29 Paul pronounces circumcision as being of no value (vv. 25–27). Circumcision that is only outward is of no avail before God because God wants the outward demonstration to be the sign of an inward reality. Paul's teaching is consistent with the Law and the OT prophets, for both proclaimed the need for internal circumcision (Deut. 10:16; Jer. 4:4). in the Spirit, not in the letter: The change of heart that Paul describes with the image of internal circumcision is the work of the Holy Spirit, not the result of external obedience to the Law. In fact, God condemns external observance if it is not the product of a righteous heart (Is. 1:10–18).

3:1 What advantage then has the Jew? If the Jews are condemned along with the heathen, what advantage is there in being the chosen nation of God? Or what is the profit of circumcision? Since circumcision is the sign of Israel's covenant relationship with God, what advantage is that relationship if being Jewish will not save?

3:2 Much in every way: This verse indicates that the Jewish people have numerous advantages (9:4). The oracles of God refers to the entire OT, the laws and the covenants that had been given by God Himself to the nation of Israel. This phrase reaffirms the belief of the apostles of the inspiration of the OT. The Bible is God's Word for us.

3:3, 4 Even if some Jews do not believe the Word of God, God will be faithful to what He has promised (Ps. 89:30–37).

3:5 Speaking from a foolish human point of view, Paul asks: If humanity's unrighteousness reveals God's righteousness, why then should God punish unrighteousness? Paul explains that this is an absurd question that is nonetheless asked by many, when he adds parenthetically, I speak as a man. The suggestion that God is unjust is simply ridiculous.

3:6 Paul answers his own question (v. 5) with another question. If God does not punish unrighteousness, then He is not just and there will be no Day of Judgment. The flaw in logic is evident: God's justice demands that He judge unrighteousness. To claim that God is unjust because He judges is a ludicrous argument.

3:7 The question in this verse is the same basic objection as in v. 5, except this time the sinner objects to being called a sinner if his or her sin enhances God's truth.

3:8 Paul takes the erroneous argument a step further. If God can bring good out of evil, then we should not be judged for doing evil, because good may come of it. God will be proved righteous and in that way glorified by our sin. Obviously such a position is preposterous. Paul does not even try to argue against such a senseless view; he simply assigns those who hold it to God's judgment.

3:9–20 The Jews are not better than the Gentiles; both are guilty of sin (v. 9). Quotations from the Jewish OT (vv. 10–18) prove their guilt (v. 19). No man can earn a right relationship with God by doing the requirements of the Mosaic law (v. 20).

3:9 better than they: This question means "Do we Jews have an advantage over the Gentiles?" (v. 1). In other words, "Is there anything we can cling to for protection?” The answer is no, since all are under sin.

Good News for Sinners

It's common today for people to excuse their faults with the attitude, "Hey, nobody's perfect!" True enough. People can only be expected to be human—and that means fallible. Unfortunately, though, few people take that reality seriously enough. Indeed, when it comes to their standing before God, all too many take a different stance: they may not be perfect, but they're "good enough."

The question is, Are they good enough for God? Romans says they are not. That's what Paul means when he writes, "all are under sin" (Rom. 3:9) and then cites a number of OT passages to back up his claim (3:10–18).

It's not that people are evil through and through, or that they never do any moral good. Quite the contrary. People are capable of impressive acts of courage, compassion, and justice. But in light of God's holy (morally perfect) character, which is the ultimate standard against which people's goodness is measured, people are indeed far from perfect. Their good behavior turns out to be the exception rather than the rule.

The Good News that Paul writes about in Romans, however, is that God has reached out to humanity despite its imperfect ways. His attitude has not been one of rejection, as if to say, "They're not good enough for Me," but one of grace and compassion that says, in effect, "I will make them into good people—people as good as I AM—by means of Christ My Son."

3:10–18 To prove that all are under sin Paul quotes without formal introduction a number of different verses from the OT. The collection of citations can be divided into two parts. The first half is made up of negative statements emphasizing humanity's deficiencies (vv. 10–12); the second half mainly exposes human depravity (vv. 13–18).

3:10 This is a quotation from Ps. 14:3 that says, "There is none who does good." Paul uses the word for righteous because he is discussing the unrighteous condition of all people (1:18). No one can be justified on the grounds of his or her own righteousness before God.

3:11 People do not understand spiritual truth (1 Cor. 2:14) nor do they diligently seek after God. At best, people are satisfied with externals, with being "religious."

3:12 turned aside: This means turning away from God's way. unprofitable: That is, useless to God or His good purposes. Good: Apart from God, people lack true goodness and kindness. While some unbelievers are gracious and kind, these acts ultimately have no value because they do not come from believing hearts that seek to glorify God (1:21). Even a "good person" can be rebelling against God and seeking his or her own welfare through goodness.

3:13 In showing humanity's total depravity, Paul quotes passages in the Psalms that describe the evil that can come from the throat, tongue, lips, mouth, feet, and eyes. The heart is compared to a tomb, for buried in it is the seed of death. The throat reveals the corruption inside, the spiritual decay. The lips are like the fangs of an asp; they contain deadly poison.

3:14 Humans apart from God are not blessing others; they are often cursing them. They are not loving; they are bitter.

3:15–17 swift to shed blood: People apart from God are prone to violence. They murder and kill because they have no respect for the life of another.

3:18 Fear of God is an OT expression for respect and reverence for God, and is said to be the very beginning of knowledge (Job 28:28; Prov. 1:7). Because people without God are spiritually dead, they produce only deceit, damage, and destruction.

3:19 Whatever the law says refers to vv. 10–18. All the world, whether Jewish or Gentile, stands in guilty silence before God.

3:20 A legal term used of the defendant in a trial, justified means "declared righteous." No one will be declared righteous by doing what God requires in the Law. This is confirmed by the fact that the Law was not given to justify sinners but to expose sin (v. 19).

3:21 In this context the righteousness of God is not an attribute of God, but an act of God whereby He declares a sinner righteous. This is righteousness from God. This righteousness is apart from the law. This expression is a strong expression categorically stating that righteousness is given totally apart from any law. See the same use of this word in Hebrews 4:15 where the Lord Jesus was tempted in all points as we are "yet without sin." Just as sin and Jesus Christ have nothing in common, so too the righteousness was not manifested in keeping the law but it was manifested at the Cross when "He (God the Father) made Him (God the Son) who knew no sin to be sin for us, that we might become the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. 5:21).

3:22, 23 God revealed to people how they should live, but no one can live up to God's perfect way. all have sinned: No one can live up to what God created us to be; we all fall short of His glory. We cannot save ourselves because as sinners we can never meet God's requirements. Our only hope is faith in Jesus Christ.

3:24 Those who believe (v. 22) are justified, that is, "declared righteous," freely, without cost, by God's grace, or "favor." Christ Jesus died to provide redemption, which means He died to pay the price required to ransom sinners. By paying the penalty of their sin through His death, Jesus can free people from their sin and transfer His righteousness to those who believe in Him. On the basis of Christ's righteousness alone, believers can approach God's throne with praise. Through God's initiative, they have been restored to a proper relationship with Him.

“propitiation”

(Gk. hilasterion) (3:25; Heb. 9:5) Strong’s #2435: This term is derived from the Greek verb hilaskomai, a word which has three meanings: (1) “to placate” or “to appease”; (2) “to be propitious and merciful”; or (3) “to make propitiation for someone.” The NT never describes people appeasing God. Instead, as Luke 18:13 and 1 John 2:2 make clear, the NT describes God as being merciful to, or making propitiation, for us. God provides a merciful expiation, or atonement, of the sins of believers through the death of Christ. But since Paul also speaks of God’s wrath, it must also speak of the conciliation of God’s anger by means of a sacrifice—namely, the sacrifice of His Son. John states that God demonstrated His love to us by sending His Son to become “the propitiation for our sins” (1 John 4:10). Just as in the OT God met His people when the blood of the sin offering was sprinkled on the altar, so Christ’s death brings us into fellowship with God.

3:25, 26 By His death, Christ satisfied the justice of God. He paid the penalty of sin in full. Paul cites two reasons why the righteousness of God comes through Christ’s death. The first is to demonstrate that God Himself is righteous, and did not judge the sins committed prior to the Cross. The second reason for the Cross is that God wanted to show that He is both righteous and at the same time the One who can declare sinners righteous. Because of Christdeath, God does not compromise His holiness when He forgives a sinner.

3:27 law of faith: Paul uses a wordplay here. The “law,” or the standard of God, is commonly associated with “works.” But here Paul says that a person can only boast in the standard of God that excludes human “works.” This “law” is faith (John 6:28, 29). Thus, the Jews who were boasting in their knowledge of the law and their adherence to it were silenced by Paul (2:17, 23). The law could only condemn them, but God was the One who saved them. Therefore, their boast should only be in Him.

3:28 Man is justified, that is, “declared righteous” (v. 20), apart from doing what the law requires. Thus, salvation is through faith alone (4:23–25). No matter what we do, we cannot earn our salvation. God alone saves, and His salvation is a free gift. No one can stand before God and boast of their good deeds. God is the only One who is righteous, and for this reason He should be praised.

3:29 If God gave salvation through the Law of Moses, He would be the God of the Jews only, because only the Jews had that law.

3:30 one God: He is the God of both Jews and Gentiles. He will justify them both through faith.

3:30 Although a distinction may be made between “by” and “through” in the text, Paul is probably using variety to express the same idea that both the circumcised and uncircumcised are saved by the same method—faith.

3:31 Law can have three different meanings in this passage, and the gospel fulfills all of those meanings. If law here refers to the Law of Moses, the Pentateuch, then the passage is referring to the way Jesus completely fulfilled the requirements of the law. If law is the entire OT, then the gospel fulfills the promises of the coming of Christ and of the forgiveness of sins. If law is the moral law, then the gospel fulfills it because it is through Christ that people are empowered by the Holy Spirit to live in a way that pleases God.

Abraham, Man of Faith

As father of the Hebrews, Abraham (Gen. 12:1; Rom. 4:1) features prominently in the NT. Here in Rom. 4 he is recalled as an individual. Elsewhere he represents the entire people of Israel, and especially those who have placed faith in God (Rom. 9:7; 11:1; Gal. 3:6–9).

Indeed, Abraham's faith is what makes him so important to the NT writers. God made important promises to him and his descendants, Isaac, Jacob, and Jacob's twelve sons—promises that God repeated throughout Israel's history. Abraham is remembered as the man who believed that God would do what He said He would do (Rom. 4:3)—a remarkable thing when we consider that at the time of the promises, Abraham had very little evidence that God would follow through, certainly far less than the NT writers or we who live today.

One of the most important promises was that God would send a Messiah, an "Anointed One." Jesus claimed to be that Messiah. So the central question of the NT becomes, Do we believe that? Do we take Jesus at His word? Do we accept His claim and its implications? Abraham believed God; do we?

Another important question raised by the coming of Jesus was, What happens to Israel? Even though many Jews believed Jesus' claims and followed Him, by and large the nation rejected Him. What did that mean for the promises of God? Paul deals with those issues in Rom. 9—11.

4:1–25 This chapter is pivotal in establishing that justification is by God's grace through faith alone. Verses 1–8 demonstrate that justification is a gift and cannot be earned by works. Verses 9–12 argue that since Abraham was justified before he was circumcised, circumcision is not a basis of justification. Verses 13–17 prove that since Abraham was justified hundreds of years before the Mosaic Law, then justification cannot be based on the Law. Verses 18–25 summarize Paul's argument by concluding that Abraham was justified by his faith and not by his works.

4:1 According to the flesh means "according to his own labor." As the next verse indicates, Paul is asking, "Was Abraham justified before God by his works?"

4:2, 3 Paul quotes Gen. 15:6 to prove that Abraham was not justified by works. God made a promise to Abraham, and Abraham trusted God to fulfill it. Because of Abraham's faith, God credited Abraham with righteousness. In gaining this righteousness from God, Abraham did not obey some law or perform some ritual like circumcision; he simply believed God.

4:4 The fact that Abraham was counted righteous when he believed is an indication that he did not work to earn it.

4:5 God gives righteousness to those who believe (v. 3). The person who does not work, who comes to God by faith alone without having performed rituals or followed Jewish laws—that person will be counted righteous. Paul continues to build his case that righteousness is apart from works of the law.

4:6–8 According to Jewish law, a question was settled by two or three witnesses. Paul calls two witnesses from the OT to testify to justification through faith: one from the Law (4:1–5) and one from the Prophets (4:6–8; see also 3:21; Acts 2:29, 30 where David is called a prophet).

4:9, 10 Given the understanding that people can become righteous by faith alone, apart from obeying the Jewish law, the obvious question from Paul's readers is: "Is this righteousness actually available to the uncircumcised?" Many of the Jews of Paul's day assumed that blessing from God and forgiveness applied only to those who had been circumcised, the Jews. Abraham, however, received righteousness from God before he was circumcised. This fact opens the door to a new understanding of God's grace. It is available to all people, both Jews and Gentiles.

4:11, 12 Abraham is a father both of the uncircumcised who believe as well as of the circumcised who believe. Circumcision was a sign and seal. As a sign, it pointed to the fact that Abraham possessed righteousness, and as a seal it verified that Abraham was righteous. Technically, circumcision was a sign and a seal of the covenant that God gave Abraham for the land. But God would not make a covenant with one who was not righteous. Note that the conditional promise of Gen. 12:1–3 becomes an unconditional covenant in Gen. 15:18. God declared His unconditional covenant with Abraham after declaring him righteous because of his belief (15:6).

4:13 The promise to Abraham was not through circumcision (vv. 9–12) nor through the law (vv. 13–16), but through the righteousness of faith. Heir of the world means that Abraham and his seed, in particular Christ, will inherit the earth, a promise that will be fulfilled in the kingdom to be established when Christ returns.

4:14 Those who are of the law is not a reference to the Jewish people but to any who depend on the law for their righteousness.

4:15 Transgression means “stepping over.” The law draws the line that should not be crossed.

4:16 Therefore it is of faith: Paul concludes that God’s promises to Abraham were founded on his faith so that it would be acknowledged that salvation was only through grace, that is, God’s favor. Since the promise was not based on adherence to any law or the performance of any ritual, such as circumcision, Abraham is the forefather of all who believe.

4:17 Gives life to the dead is a reference to the birth of Isaac from Abraham’s “dead” body and Sarah’s “dead” womb; both were far beyond the age of childbearing (v. 19).

4:18 When Abraham was physically beyond any hope of having a child, he based his hope on God’s promises instead. He believed that his offspring would be as numerous as the stars of the heavens, because the all-powerful God had promised it.

4:19 deadness of … womb: Sarah had no children previously in her life, and by the time God gave this promise she was well past childbearing age.

4:20 glory: Glorifying God means declaring who God is. Abraham, by his faith, acknowledged that God was faithful and powerful enough to keep His promise.

4:21 Abraham was not just wistfully hoping that God would make him the father of many nations, but was fully convinced that what He had promised He was also able to perform. History teaches us that what God promises, He also performs.

4:22 Abraham's faith was credited to him as righteousness (v. 3, note).

4:23, 24 God had Abraham's faith recorded in Scripture not to immortalize Abraham but to be a model for others. who raised up: Abraham's faith was a model because he believed in a God who can raise the dead. We follow Abraham's example when we have faith, when we believe that God raised Jesus from the dead and will grant us eternal life also. Belief in Jesus' resurrection and ours is central to the gospel (1 Cor. 15:4).

(Gk. dikaiosis) (4:25; 5:18) Strong’s #1347: The Greek noun for justification is derived from the Greek verb dikaioo, meaning “to acquit” or “to declare righteous” (used by Paul in 4:2, 5; 5:1). It is a legal term used of a favorable verdict in a trial. The word depicts a courtroom setting, with God presiding as the Judge, determining the faithfulness of each person to the Law. In the first section of Romans, Paul makes it clear that no one can withstand God’s judgment (3:9–20). The Law was not given to justify sinners but to expose their sin. To remedy this deplorable situation, God sent His Son to die for our sins, in our place. When we believe in Jesus, God imputes His righteousness to us, and we are declared righteous before God. In this way, God demonstrates that He is both a righteous Judge and the One who declares us righteous, our Justifier (3:26).

4:25 Jesus was delivered up to death, taking the penalty of our sin on Himself. Just as God brought life from Abraham and Sarah, who thought they were unable to have children, so God raised Jesus back to life. Jesus’ resurrection brought us justification before God because the Resurrection proves that God accepted Jesus’ sacrifice for us.

5:1–11 Justification brings peace with God (v. 1), grace for present living (v. 2), hope for the future (v. 2), victory in tribulations (vv. 3, 4), and assurance brought by God's love put in our hearts by the Holy Spirit (v. 5). Because of God's great justifying love (vv. 6–8), we can rejoice that our hope of eternal reward will be fulfilled (vv. 9–11).

5:1 Peace here is not a subjective feeling of peace. Rather, this peace is the state of being at peace instead of at war. The hostility between God and the believer has ceased. The believer has been reconciled to God.

5:2 To have access means "to approach," as if by introduction into a king's throne room. Believers have been granted admission to stand before God. Even though they were once rebels, they do not have to face His judgment. Instead they approach His throne in the realm of grace, or in the King's favor. Rejoice means "to boast" and hope means "expectation." Believers boast in the sure expectation of the glory of God. They are confident, for God Himself has placed the Holy Spirit in their hearts (v. 5).

5:3 Glory is the same Greek word that is translated "rejoice" in v. 2. Believers can rejoice, glory, and boast not only in their future hope (v. 2) but also in their present troubles. Tribulations refers to physical hardship, suffering, and distress. Perseverance means "endurance." Trials and tribulation produce endurance when we exercise faith during those difficult times (James 1:2, 3). Such faith produces its own reward (Matt. 5:10–12; 2 Tim. 2:12).

5:4 Perseverance produces character, the quality of being approved. As believers endure tribulation, God works in them to develop certain qualities and virtues that will strengthen them and draw them closer to Him. The result is fortified hope in God and His promises.

5:5 The hope that believers have of their future glory with God will not disappoint them by being unfulfilled. They will not be put to shame or humiliated because of their hope. The reason the believer can be so confident is that the love of God has been poured out. The moment a person trusts in Christ, that person receives the Holy Spirit (8:9), who constantly encourages them in their hope in God.

5:6 Paul now explains the nature of God's love. God loved us when we were still without strength and ungodly. God loved us so much that He sent His Son to die for us (v. 8). God loves us just the way we are, but He loves us too much to leave us the way we are (John 15:16; Phil. 1:6).

5:7, 8 God's love is truly remarkable. It is unlikely that anyone would die for a righteous man (Gk. dikaios); the just man; the upright, respected citizen; or a good man (Gk. agathos); the helpful, benevolent man. while we were still sinners, Christ died for us (Gk. hamartolos): This is a clear demonstration of God's love. He receives us just as we are and then begins to make something beautiful.

5:9, 10 If God loved us when we were helpless, ungodly enemies, how much more will He love us now that we are His children? By His blood … through the death of His Son we have been justified, that is "declared righteous," and reconciled, meaning our state of alienation from God has been changed. Believers are no longer enemies of God; they are at peace with God (v. 1). we shall be saved: Many take these verses to refer to final salvation from the presence of sin. But in this context, Paul goes on to discuss being saved from the power of sin (ch. 6). Thus, wrath here is God's present wrath (1:18), and His life is the life of Christ in believers (v. 18). The point is that since God's love and the death of Christ have brought us justification, then as a result of that love, we can also expect salvation from God's wrath. To experience this truth, the believer must fully cooperate with the process that is explained in 6:1–14 (John 8:32). The believer must die to sin and present himself or herself to God as an "instrument of righteousness" (6:14).

(Gk. katallage) (5:11; 11:15; 2 Cor. 5:18, 19) Strong’s #2643: The Greek word basically means “change” or “exchange.” In the context of relationships between people, the term implies a change in attitude on the part of both individuals, a change from enmity to friendship. When used to describe the relationship existing between God and a person, the term implies the change of attitude on the part of both a person and God. The need to change the sinful ways of a human being is obvious; but some argue that no change is needed on the part of God. But inherent in the doctrine of justification is the changed attitude of God toward the sinner. God declares a person who was formerly His enemy to be righteous before Him.

5:11 Not only shall the justified person escape the wrath of God by the death of Christ, but also he or she shall obtain joy in God because of Christ’s life. The word translated rejoice is the same as is translated glory in v. 3. The blessings which justification brings to its recipients terminate in joy through our Lord Jesus Christ. This last expression is identical to that found in v. 1 of this chapter. All that we have we owe to Him, the Lord Jesus Christ.

5:12–21 This paragraph contains a comparison between Adam and Christ which is interrupted with a parenthetical thought (vv. 13–17). The comparison begins in v. 12, is formally stated in v. 18 and then explained in v. 19.

5:12 The one man is Adam. Through him sin entered the world. Sin brought death. The result is that death is now a universal experience. The phrase because all sinned does not mean just that “all have sinned” at some time in their lives, thus referring to individual sins. Paul takes his readers back to the beginning of human history, to the one sin that brought death upon us all. The unity of the human race is demonstrated here. In Adam, we all sinned (1 Cor. 15:22). The result is physical and spiritual death for everyone. From Adam we inherited a sin nature. Furthermore, as a result of our sin in Adam, we face a common judgment—death.

5:13, 14 Until the law, that is until the Law of Moses was given, sin was not imputed. Imputed means “to charge to one’s account,” as by an entry made in a ledger. In other words, sin was present in the world from Adam to Moses, but God did not keep an account of sins before the giving of the Law because there was no Law to obey or disobey. not sinned: Those after Adam and before Moses did not sin like Adam because there were no prohibitions similar to the Law of Moses. But they did sin, and the way we know this is that death reigned. They all died.

5:15 Through one man, Adam, death came. Yet through one Man, Jesus Christ, grace and the gift of God, eternal life, was given. much more: The works of the two men, Adam and Jesus, are not merely antithetical. Christ's work is greater, for it brings God's grace to those stuck in the sinfulness which originated in Adam.

5:16 Through Adam came condemnation, a word used only three times in the NT, and all three times in Romans (v. 18; 8:1). The word refers to "the punishment following a judicial sentence." In the face of this, through Christ came the free gift that resulted in justification. That is to say, the aim or goal of the gift is justification, or "righteousness." In v. 18, the same word is translated "righteous act." In other words, the goal of the gift of eternal life is righteous living. This does not refer to justification by faith but to the practical outworking of faith through righteous acts (6:16). Thus, this verse contrasts the penal servitude of a sinner with the righteous life of a believer.

5:17 When death reigns, people are destroyed. When Christ reigns, we are given eternal life and share in His glory.

5:18 Here Paul completes the comparison begun in v. 12 between the sinful work of Adam and the righteous work of Jesus. Through Adam came condemnation. Through Christ came justification of life, a justification that produces life.

5:19 Made means "to make," "constitute." As the result of Adam's sin, people became sinners. By Christ's death many will be made righteous (in contrast to declared righteousness, see 4:3). That is, believers are actually being constituted or made righteous. Through the sanctifying work of the Holy Spirit, the believer who has been declared righteous by God is continually becoming more righteous.

5:20 the offense might abound: Law magnified sin. What was inherently wrong became formally and explicitly wrong once the Law was revealed. grace abounded much more: The Greek term Paul uses means "superabounded." Not only can sin never exceed the grace provided by God, sin loses its threat when compared to the superabounding grace of God.

5:21 This verse contains the double contrast between sin and righteousness and between death and life. From the very moment sin entered the universe it has reigned, bringing about physical and spiritual death. Its principle of rulership has been to separate mankind from his Creator and to cause his end to be a mortal one. But through the blood of Jesus Christ, sin has been dethroned and righteousness now rules in its stead. Whereas death was the order of the day in Adam's society, now life eternal is the order of the day for those who have believed in Jesus Christ. The contrast is a great one. It is a contrast between man's sin and Christ's obedience, between the wages of sin and the gift of God. Some have thought that universal salvation is taught in this passage, thinking that just because all were condemned, now all will be saved. Such is not the case. New birth is mandatory for eternal life and the qualifying expression, those who receive in v. 17, teaches that faith in Jesus Christ is absolutely essential for salvation.

6:1–14 As Christians we died to sin when we identified with Christ in faith (vv. 1–4); thus, we have been freed from the dominion of sin to live a life of obedience to God (vv. 5–11). This new beginning should become a continuing reality in our lives (vv. 12–14).

6:1 Since sin in a way makes grace more abundant (5:20, 21) why not continue in sin? This is certainly a possible conclusion, though a wrong one, from the teaching about grace in ch. 5. Apparently Paul had been accused of teaching this false doctrine, called antinomianism. To silence his accusers, Paul shows in this chapter that a believer who continues in sin would be denying his or her own identity in Christ.

6:2 Certainly not: The Greek expresses a response of shock, that has even been translated "God forbid." The thought of a believer living in sin in order to take advantage of grace was abhorrent to Paul. The reason believers should not live in sin is that they have died to sin, as is explained in vv. 3, 4.

6:3 baptized: Paul uses the common experience of believers being baptized as a picture of being identified with Jesus Christ. Baptism expresses faith the way a word expresses an idea. There can be an idea without words, but normally they are expressed in words. Water baptism is a symbol of the spiritual union of Christ and the believer. When a person trusts Christ, he or she is incorporated into, united to, Jesus Christ, which includes being united to His death. Jesus' death becomes our death. Christian baptism makes these spiritual realities vivid.

6:4, 5 newness of life: If the believer's identification with Christ means being identified with His death, then it logically follows that the believer also identifies with Jesus' resurrection. Having died and having been raised with Christ, the believer should live a new kind of life.

(Gk. sumphutos) (6:5) Strong’s #4854: The expression, which occurs only here in the NT, means “to grow in union” or “to plant in union.” The word describes two plants that have been planted together and are growing together, closely entwined or even united. The context speaks of union, our union with Christ in His death (6:4) and resurrection (6:5). Our union with Christ in death is like being planted with Him. Like a seed, our sinful natures must die with Christ so that we might grow in Christ and bear spiritual fruit (John 12:24). Our union with Christ is now a loving union, in which we are growing with Him “in the likeness of His resurrection.”

6:5–11 Verse 5 states that participation in Christ’s death assures us that we shall share in His resurrection. Verses 6, 7 show that by this crucifixion we are freed (i.e., “justified”)from sin. Verses 8–10 assure us that having been made free from sin, we are prepared to live with Christ. Verse 11 is a plea that this experience of having died to sin shall become a reality in our lives.

6:6 Some say old man refers to part of us, namely our old nature, our sinful disposition. However, the word man does not refer to part of a person; instead, the word describes the entire inner person before conversion, the person connected to the sin nature of Adam. The old man was crucified with Christ (Gal. 2:20). Simply put, a believer is not the same person he or she was before conversion; a believer is a new creation in Christ (2 Cor. 5:17). There are two reasons (see the two clauses that begin with that) for crucifying the old man. First is that the body of sin might be done away. The body of sin is either a reference to the physical body, that is, the body that is enslaved to sin, or the phrase is a figurative expression for the sin in a believer’s life. Colossians 2:11, a parallel passage, indicates that sin in a believer’s life is meant. The sinful nature of a believer is abolished when the old self is crucified with Christ. The second purpose is that we should no longer be slaves of sin. Believers are new people who are no longer enslaved to the old sinful nature.

The Perilous Nature of Sin

Some people scoff at the concept of sin by defining it as a prohibition against fun made by the few who hate it against the many who enjoy it. In a way, this was the original lie that the serpent told Eve. He suggested that God was withholding things from her that she truly needed and would benefit from (Gen. 3:4, 5).

But Scripture presents sin as anything but fun or beneficial. Sin has devastating consequences of which we need to be aware. As the Book of Romans points out, sin enslaves people and demands that they obey its lusts (Rom. 6:6, 12, 20).

Several phrases in the NT help to define the perilous nature of sin: • To sin is to "fall short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23). People trapped in sin's tight snare cannot live up to the holy lifestyle that God intended when He created them.

• "Sin is lawlessness" (1 John 3:4). It involves living for "me first" rather than for God, being "a law unto oneself."

• "All unrighteousness is sin" (1 John 5:17). When we sin, we offend the God who loves justice and righteousness (Rom. 1:18).

• If we know what is good and yet do not do it, we sin (James 4:17). Thus sin involves conscious disobedience against what is right, even to the point of approving the sin of others (Rom. 1:32).

This is a sobering picture, but even more startling is that every human being is a part of this picture. "There is none righteous, no, not one" (Rom. 3:10; compare 2 Chr. 6:36; Rom. 5:12). "All have sinned and fall short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23).

Nor is sin limited to a few matters of religion or personal habits. Because God is the sovereign owner of the whole world—its lands, nations, people, and all resources—misuse of any part of the creation means sinning against Him. We are accountable for every dimension of life. Nothing is really "secular" in the sense of being outside His concern.

6:7 Freed here translates the Greek word for "justification," which is a legal term. The idea is that the believer no longer has any obligation to sin.

6:8 Dying and living with Christ summarizes vv. 3–7. Believe introduces a new idea. Christians must not only know that they have died to sin (vv. 6–8) and have been made alive with Christ, they must also believe it.

6:9, 10 Christ died for sin once for all. He is now alive at the right hand of God. Since believers have been joined to Christ and to His death and resurrection, they can now believe that they too are alive to God.

6:11 Reckon is an accounting term that means "to take into account," "calculate," or "decide." Verses 3–10 reveal the truth that believers have already died to sin because they have participated in Jesus' death. Since believers have died with Christ and have also been raised with Him, Paul now urges Christians to consider themselves dead … to sin. Although before conversion they were still enslaved to the power of sin, now they are free to resist it.

6:12 Though believers in Christ have died to sin, sin is still a problem. The sin principle is still present and can express itself through the mortal body, the body that is subject to death. The difference is that sin has no right to reign. Thus, Paul admonishes the believer not to obey it.

6:13 Verse 12 has the whole body in view; v. 13 focuses on the individual parts of the body such as the hands or mouth. Believers are not to present the parts of their bodies as a means of sinning. Simply put: Do not use your hands to steal or your tongue to lie. Rather, believers should present themselves to God and the parts of their bodies as instruments of righteousness.

6:14 Not under law means not under the Law of Moses. Yet the believer with God's help, the believer under grace, fulfills the law (3:31; 13:8–10). The Mosaic system consisted of external laws which revealed the sin prevalent in human hearts. In contrast, God's grace places the believer in Christ, and the Holy Spirit in the believer. Therefore, a Christian does not have to sin; he or she can resist temptation and do what is right (2 Cor. 3:15–18).

6:15 Since believers are not under law but under grace (v. 14) and grace cancels sin (Col. 2:14), why not sin? This is similar to the question in 6:1. There the issue was whether believers should sin so grace could be displayed. Here it is whether believers should sin because they are not under the Mosaic law system.

6:16 slaves to obey: Paul highlights the principle that everyone is a slave to someone or something—whether it is a person, possession, or activity. But a Christian should be a slave to God's righteousness.

6:17 you: Paul moves from the principle (v. 16) to the experience of the Roman believers. Form of doctrine is a unique expression. Form means "pattern," "type," or "example." The gospel message is the pattern. It is the message that Christ died for our sins and rose from the dead (1 Cor. 15:3, 4). This message demands a response from the hearer and with it must be the command to believe (Acts 16:31). Obeyed from the heart: The Roman believers voluntarily obeyed the message. There was no external law imposed on them.

6:18 slaves of righteousness: Being a slave in the ancient world meant being owned by a master. Whether slaves obeyed did not change their status as slaves, although it would affect the relationship between slave and master (Luke 19:20–26). The question is one of obligation. A person who has been freed from sin can act as though still a slave to sin (v. 16), or that person can live as a "slave" to righteousness, as a servant to a kind master who gives great rewards.

6:19 In human terms refers to Paul's illustration of slavery. The analogy of slavery to the Christian life is imperfect, because Christians are God's children (8:15, 16). Having been set free from sin and having become a slave of righteousness (v. 18), the believer should serve righteousness just as he or she served sin before trusting Christ. The result will be holiness.

6:20, 21 The result of sin is death. The child of God who lives in sin lives in the sphere of death (1 John 3:14, 15). The ultimate result is physical death (James 1:13–15).

6:22 free from sin: (v. 7). The new relationship with God results in a new person, which makes a new kind of fruit possible: righteousness. This verse and the next present the beginning and end of the salvation process. Christians have been freed from sin so that they can be given eternal life. Eternal life is a gift (John 3:16) from God to each believer.

6:23 Paul explains that sin results in death, but God gives the gift of eternal life. Most often this verse has been used as a promise of regeneration. The phrase eternal life is used 42 times in the NT, and it usually refers to something we receive as a gift at the moment of belief in the gospel (John 3:16; 5:24; 6:40). But 11 of these 42 times, eternal life is presented as something to be attained (v. 22; 2:7; Matt. 19:16, 29; Mark

10:17, 30; Luke 10:25; 18:18–30; John 12:25, 26; Gal. 6:8). Thus, we learn from the Bible that eternal life is not simply a static entity. It is a dynamic and growing relationship with Jesus Christ Himself (John 10:10; 17:3). Through living in faith and obedience, Christians can fully enjoy God’s free gift of eternal life.

7:1–3 Paul returns to the question of 6:15: Shall we continue to sin while under grace? Paul's answer is no, and now he illustrates his negative answer by a comparison with marriage. Marriage is lifelong. But if one partner dies, the other is no longer bound by the law and is free to marry someone else.

7:4 An exact application of the illustration would be that the law died, and now the believer is free to "marry" grace. Paul's words are that believers died to the law. Having died to the law, the believer is now free to marry God and bear fruit for Him. Out of the marriage relationship comes children. So out of intimacy with Christ comes the fruit of practical righteousness (6:22).

7:5 In the flesh refers to the period before the believer's conversion. In this context, those in the flesh are unregenerate, or not born again, and those in the Spirit are regenerate. On the other hand, both believers and unbelievers may walk according to the flesh, but only believers can walk according to the Spirit. The law aroused sinful desires that were expressed through the members of the body and resulted in death.

7:6 At conversion, believers died to the law (v. 4), with the result that they are now able to serve in newness of life (6:4). They have a new life in the Holy Spirit, not in the old way of the letter, the old way of trying to gain life by means of the law.

7:7–12 Sin and the law both held people in bondage. Is the law, then, something evil like sin? Not at all. The specific commandments of the law made the knowledge of sin clearer. Sin takes advantage of that clearer knowledge to stir us to rebel and thus leads us into greater sin. The good purpose of the law was to show us how to please God in order that we could have life. Sin twisted God's purpose for the law so that it actually brought spiritual death (v. 10).

7:7 The next logical question (6:1, 15) is: Is the law sin? Certainly not! (6:2, 15). Paul emphatically denies that the law is sinful. I: Beginning here and in the rest of the chapter, Paul uses his personal experience as an illustration. The law reveals sin.

7:8 The law also stirs up sin (v. 7). sin was dead: Sin can exist without the law (5:13), although without law it may be dormant. Without standards of right and wrong, there can be no judgment of what is sin and what is not. The law, however, with its commands against certain behaviors, can arouse the desire to perform those evil behaviors (v. 5).

7:9 I was alive: There was a time when Paul was alive to God (6:8, 11, 13) and without the law (vv. 4, 6; 6:14). Then some time after his conversion, when he was enjoying fellowship with God, he was confronted by the law, and he died. This is a figurative way of saying that his sin nature broke his fellowship with God.

7:10, 11 bring life: Since the law points out the path of righteousness, it points to life. But since sin reigns in our natures, the law means judgment and death for us. When we focus on the law we are deceived into sinning, which thus "kills" our spiritual lives.

7:12 The conclusion is that the law as a whole and the individual commandments are holy. Our problem with sin is not the fault of the holy law of God, only of how our sinful nature (vv. 8, 11, 13) responds to the law.

A Slave to Sin

The apostle Paul was willing to take a long, hard look at his deepest, darkest inner life. What he saw there was troubling, but true: he was a slave to sin (Rom. 7:15). In fact, he realized that nothing good lived in his flesh (7:18)—a fact that caused him to cry out in wretchedness (7:24).

Paul was not just having a bad day when he wrote Rom. 7. He was not merely suffering from a sense of inadequacy and low self-esteem. Paul's realistic appraisal of his spiritual life came from measuring himself against the high and holy expectations that God has for all of us, what the Book of Romans calls the law (7:7). The more Paul became aware of what God wanted, the more aware he became of his inability, in his own strength, to live as God wanted.

The only answer to Paul's wretched condition—and to our own—is Jesus Christ (7:25). Only Jesus makes it possible to fulfill the righteous requirements of a holy God (8:3, 4). Thus, Paul's honesty led to hope.

The same is true for us. In confession we can find God's forgiveness. In admitting our weakness we can find His strength. If we deny our true condition, we deceive ourselves, and doom ourselves to lives enslaved to sin (1 John 1:8–10).

7:13–25 Verse 13 picks up the theme of v. 5: life in the flesh under the control of sin, aggravated by the demands of the law. Verses 14–25 paint a picture of the experience of such an individual. Here is the moral person who attempts to deal with the demands of the law and the power of sin. But he is using only his own resources without the power of Christ and the enabling of the Holy Spirit. He wants to do what God requires, but he is not able. Non-Christians who have been convicted by the Holy Spirit live with this struggle. Also Christians who are not living a victorious life in the Spirit experience similar struggles, even though God has given them a measure of victory over sin (8:9; 1 Cor. 3:1–4).

7:13 Paul asks another rhetorical question (v. 7; 6:1, 15). Has then what is good (that is, the law, v. 12) become death to me? Certainly not is again Paul's emphatic denial (v. 7; 6:2, 15). The problem is not the law; the problem is sin. Sin used the good law to produce evil, that is, death. But through the law, sin is shown for what it is, and its evil and tragic consequences are clearly revealed.

7:14 spiritual: The law comes from God. In contrast, Paul said his problem (and that of all believers; see 1 Cor. 3:1–3) is that he was carnal, meaning he was like a slave sold over to sin. Even though Paul was a Christian dedicated to serving God (v. 25), he continued to fall short of God's moral standards.

7:15–17 Being fleshly, sold over to sin, involves a conflict that mystifies Paul and other believers. Paul feels he does not understand himself. He finds himself defeated, not doing what he wants to do, and doing what he hates to do. The conflict indicates that there is battle between two identities in the believer. First, there is something that acknowledges that the law … is good. Second, there is something within, called sin, which produces evil.

“law”

(Gk. nomos) (6:14; 7:21–23, 25; 8:2–4; Gal. 2:16; 5:3; Heb. 8:4) Strong’s #3551: The Greek term for law here means an inward principle of action—either good or evil—operating with the regularity of a law. The term also designates a standard for a person’s life. The apostle Paul described three such laws. The first is called “the law of sin” which was operating through his flesh, causing him to sin. Paul, like all other believers, needed another law to overcome “the law of sin”: this is “the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus,” which makes us “free from the law of sin and death” (8:2). By following this law, believers can actually fulfill the righteous requirements of God’s law (8:4)—which is the third law in this section; it is the standard for human action that corresponds to the righteous nature of God.

7:18 The problem is the flesh, the part of the believer in which there is nothing good. The will is the desire to do good (v.12). Yet the ability to perform is lacking.

7:19 Basically a repetition of v. 15.

7:20 The same exact conclusion mentioned in v. 17.

7:21 Paul confesses that he is carnal, sold unto sin (v. 14), that more specifically the problem is in his flesh in which nothing good dwells (v. 18) and now that evil (Gk. kakon) is present.

Two Kinds of Sin

Sin is what made necessary God's plan of salvation through Christ. In a technical sense any lack of conformity to God's will or standards is a sin—it is not in accord with His plan for us. Thus, in the OT there were sacrifices commanded for sins committed in ignorance. It is this broader conception of sin that leads some to believe that all Christians "sin in word, thought, and deed every day." The Scriptures, however, indicate that God holds us primarily accountable for known acts of transgression, rebellion, or omission (John 9:41; Rom. 1:20, 21; James 4:17).

The second form of sin described in the Bible is the quality of the fallen human nature that inclines people to commit individual acts of sin. Every person comes into the world with this inclination to evil, inherited from Adam (Rom. 5:12–14, 18, 19). This universal tendency to oppose God's will has been called "original sin," "the carnal mind," "inherited sin," "the old man," "inbred sin," "moral depravity," and "sinful nature." It is an inherent sinful disposition that inclines persons to sinful acts.

It is important to understand how Scripture distinguishes between acts of sin and a sinful nature. Acts of sin are commonly, though not always, referred to in the plural: "How many are my iniquities and sins?" (Job 13:23) and "forgive us our sins" (Luke 11:4). In contrast, the sinful nature is usually referred to as a single quality or disposition of the human spirit (Rom. 7:14, 17, 20, 25; 8:2).

When the difference between sin as nature and sin as an act is not indicated by the singular and plural terms for sin, the context must determine the writer's thought. Sin as nature is evident when the context emphasizes an inherent inclination to evil, as in Paul's criticism of the Corinthians in 1 Cor. 3:3, "Where there are envy, strife, and divisions among you, are you not carnal?" David's cry, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a steadfast spirit within me" (Ps. 51:10), reflects a sinful reality deeper than actions, a sinfulness that requires cleansing.

7:22 The inward man is virtually synonymous with the mind (v. 23; 2 Cor. 4:16; Eph. 3:16), and it finds delight in the law of God. This delight causes believers in Christ to want to align themselves with the new nature that God has imparted to them.

7:23 The law of sin is a reference to the sinful nature's rejection of the law of the mind that seeks after God. The sinful nature seeks to draw us away from following God's work in us.

7:24 The wretched, or "distressed, miserable," man is the believer whenever he or she is defeated by sin (vv. 14, 23). This defeat occurs whenever the believer fails to live in the power supplied by the Spirit. body of death: This is a figurative expression for the sin nature. Paul wants to be freed from sin, which leads to death.

7:25 thank God: Paul breaks forth in jubilant praise to God that there is victory through Jesus Christ, who delivers believers from the body of death, the flesh. So then: Paul concludes that the problem is not the law; the problem is the flesh. From this argument, Paul moves into the solution —salvation found in Jesus Christ.

8:1–30 Paul described life “in the flesh” (7:5). Now he describes the opposite—life “in the newness of the Spirit” (7:6). The person controlled by the Spirit is not condemned by the law because his past is forgiven, and through the Spirit he is enabled to do what the law requires as he waits for his final resurrection into glory (vv. 1–11). The Spirit makes us God’s children (vv. 12–17) and assures us of a wonderful future hope (vv. 18–30).

8:1 therefore: This Greek word does not draw a formal conclusion, but an informal inference, from 7:25. In contrast with the preceding vivid description of sinfulness, Paul depicts the freedom of living in the Spirit. no condemnation: In Christ, we are no longer under the sentence of the law, but empowered by the Spirit to live for Christ.

8:2 the law of the Spirit: The Spirit refers to the Holy Spirit who energizes our renewed spirit. It is also possible that the word refers to the spirit in us that has now been brought to life.

Transformed by the Spirit

Paul's words about the Law being unable to produce righteousness because of the weakness of the flesh (Rom. 8:3) should not be interpreted as if he thought little of the Law. On the contrary, he took seriously the high calling and expectations that God revealed through Moses. In fact, walking "according to the Spirit" (8:4) involves the fulfillment of these expectations. That's why Paul urged believers to: • Turn from evil to good (Rom. 12:2, 9).

• Seek love (1 Cor. 13).
• Not misuse liberty (Gal. 5:13–16).
• Choose to do good toward all people (Gal. 6:10).
• Live with a new, godly lifestyle (Eph. 2:1–3; 4:1–3).
• Learn how to serve others in humility, with love (Phil. 2:1–7).
• Undo patterns of sin within ourselves (Col. 3:5–11).
• Develop godly contentment with what we have (1 Tim. 6:6–11).

This is life in the Spirit—a lifelong adventure of reclaiming what God intended for us from the beginning (Eph. 5:8–10).

8:3 The law could pronounce judgment on sin, but the law could not do anything about sin itself. It had no power to put sin to death in a person's life. God accomplished what the law could not do by sending His own Son. Jesus came in the likeness of sinful flesh: Jesus, as God, took on our human nature, a nature that was susceptible to temptation. Although He was tempted, He never gave in. He never sinned.

8:4 The purpose of the coming of Christ was that the law might be fulfilled. The believer gains the righteous standard of the law—love (13:8–10)—not by means of the law but by being in Christ and walking according to the Spirit.

8:5 The Greek word rendered set their minds includes a person's will, thoughts, and emotions. It also includes assumptions, values, desires, and purposes. Setting the mind on the things of the flesh or on the things of the Spirit means being oriented to or governed by those things on which we focus.

8:6 Peace is the resolution of the intense warfare described in ch. 7, as well as the inward harmony and tranquility that results from yielding to God.

8:7–11 A believer can live according to the flesh with the result of death (James 1:13–15), or else by the renewed spirit, so as to experience life. In vv. 7–11, Paul elaborates on these two possibilities, showing the possibility and the benefit of living according to the spirit.

8:7 The reason that being carnally minded results in death (v. 6) is that the carnal mind is an enemy of God. The mind of the flesh is hostile to God and can never submit itself to the law of God.

8:8 Being in the flesh is different from "walking according to the flesh." Being in the flesh means being unregenerate or sinful. People in that state cannot please God.

8:9 Christians no longer live according to the flesh, under control of their sinful human nature. Instead, with the Spirit living in them and empowering them, they can live in a way pleasing to God.

8:10 Dead because of sin refers not to physical death but to the "body of death" of 7:24 (v. 6). The problem that Paul is dealing with in this passage is how the "dead" body, in which sin dwells, can be made the vehicle for expressing the life of God.

8:11 The solution to the problem of the flesh is the Holy Spirit. He gives life to your mortal bodies. Being spiritually minded means overcoming the deadness of the body and experiencing life and peace. This is the resurrection life (Phil. 3:10).

8:12, 13 you will die: Death here does not refer to physical death, because those who live according to the Spirit also die physically. It refers to the experience of those who live their lives apart from God. by the Spirit: By walking according to the Spirit (v. 4), by being spiritually minded (v. 6), the believer can put to death sinful deeds and live for God.

8:14 Being led by the Spirit is virtually synonymous with walking according to the Spirit. "Walking" highlights the active participation and effort of the believer. "Being led" underscores the passive side, the submissive dependence of the believer on the Spirit. these are sons of God: Those led by the Spirit are God's children, and the sovereign Lord, in turn, is their Father (2 Cor. 6:18).

"adoption"

(Gk. huiothesia) (8:15; Gal. 4:5; Eph. 1:5) Strong's #5206: The Greek word for adoption is derived from the word huios, meaning "son," and the word thesis, meaning "placement." It is a legal term that in this context indicates that believers have been given the full privileges of sonship in God's family. Concurrent with this placement into sonship, God places the Spirit of His Son into our hearts so that we become, in effect, His natural-born children. As such, we are not just "adopted" (in the sense the word now conveys) but genuinely "begotten" by God. God makes children of men into children of God, just the reverse of what happened to Christ when the Son of God became the Son of Man.

8:15 Believers are sons of God because they received the Spirit of adoption. In ancient Rome, an adopted son would possess all the rights of a son born into the family. Christians have been adopted into God's family, receiving an eternal inheritance. Abba: Jesus Himself prayed to God using this Aramaic word for Father (Mark 14:36).

8:16 A further indication of believers' sonship is that the Holy Spirit bears witness with their spirits. When believers cry out to the Father in prayer (v. 15), the Holy Spirit intercedes for them (v. 26).

8:17 heirs: All of God's children have an inheritance based on their relationship to God, which is incorruptible, undefiled, and is reserved in heaven (1 Pet. 1:4). Their inheritance includes an expectation of eternal life (Titus 3:4–7). As joint heirs with Christ, they share His suffering now (Phil. 3:10) and will share His glory later (Phil. 3:11–14).

8:18 The sufferings of the present are slight when compared with the glory later. Paul calls the sufferings "light affliction" compared to the "eternal weight of glory" (2 Cor. 4:17). The divine compensation package is "a hundredfold" (Matt. 19:29).

8:19–27 The creation (vv. 19–22), believers (vv. 23, 24) and even the Holy Spirit Himself (vv. 25–27) groans now for the glory later.

8:19 Earnest expectation literally means "to watch with outstretched neck." Creation is impatient to see the revelation of the sons of God.

8:20 Futility, which means "vanity, emptiness," refers to the curse on creation (Gen. 3:17–19).

8:21 Creation awaits the coming glory because it also will be delivered. The bondage of corruption further describes the futility of v. 20. Nature is a slave to decay and death because of sin.

8:22, 23 The firstfruits of the Spirit may refer to the first workings of the Holy Spirit (8:9–11), which is a pledge of more work to come, like the redemption of our body. Otherwise, the expression firstfruits may be in apposition to the word Spirit; thus, firstfruits is the Spirit. The firstfruits of a harvest was a foretaste of the harvest to come. So the Spirit, or His work, is God's assurance of the greater blessings to come. Elsewhere the Spirit is called a "guarantee of our inheritance" (Eph. 1:14).

8:24 Hope is a constant expectation of an unseen reality. We are saved by faith, but our hope is in the return of Christ in all His glory and our complete deliverance from our sinful natures.

8:25 If we are expecting something unseen, we wait with perseverance; that is, we are willing to endure the present.

8:26 Though more may be involved in the concept of weaknesses, the primary reference here is to mental ignorance. The contrast offered by Paul in this verse is between our inability to know how to pray and the effective prayers of the Spirit Himself. The emphasis indicates that the Spirit Himself prays for us when we are incapable of praying. He intercedes on our behalf before the throne of God (1 John 2:1). But His intercession cannot be uttered, which means it is "unexpressed, unspoken." No language is in view here, only the inner groanings of the Spirit.

8:27, 28 As children of God, we do not always know what to pray for or how best to pray (v. 26), but we can know the purpose of God which the Holy Spirit desires to accomplish. work together for good: The primary reference of all things is the "sufferings of this present time" (v. 18). All circumstances will work together in cooperation for the believer's good—that is, the believer will be conformed to Jesus Christ now and reign with Him later. Those who love God are in fact those who are the called by God. Our love is our response to the work of the Holy Spirit in us. We are called according to His purpose. God does everything, including redemption, in order to accomplish His overarching plan.

(Gk. proorizo) (8:29, 30; Acts 4:28; 1 Cor. 2:7; Eph. 1:5, 11) Strong’s #4309: To predestine means “to mark out beforehand,” “to establish one’s boundary, or one’s limits, beforehand.” Our English word horizon is a derivative of this Greek word. The Christian’s ultimate destiny or horizon has been fixed by God from all eternity: to be made like His Son. Note how the words predestined, called, justified, and especially glorified in Rom. 8:29, 30 are in the past tense. That is because God, from His eternal perspective, sees this process as having been completed already. From God’s perspective, we have been glorified already because He sees us righteous because of the work of Jesus on the Cross. But still, in the march of time, we must undergo the process of being conformed to the image of God’s Son.

8:29 God foreknew, which means simply “to know beforehand,” but carries more than mere knowledge of people or events. It expresses knowing people, not merely knowing about them. This has been interpreted by some as God’s free and merciful choice of certain people who receive His gift of salvation apart from any works they do. His knowledge of future events and people, however, do not determine His choice (1 Pet. 1:2). Instead, He chose those who would be saved out of His own free will and for His own purpose. Only God saves; people never earn salvation through any work.

8:30 God not only foreknew and predestined (v. 29), He also called believers through the preaching of the gospel message (2 Thess. 2:14). This, however, is not the general call of the gospel to all people. If it were, we would be forced to universalism, the view that everyone will be saved. Instead, those who are called by God have been foreknown, predestined, and justified. This call refers to the internal work of the Spirit in the hearts of God’s elect to bring them to belief in Christ (Acts 16:14). Being justified means being “declared righteous.” Finally, God glorified. Though glorification is in the future, it is stated here in the past tense. Everyone then, who was foreknown by God in eternity past, has such a certain future that the apostle speaks of their glorification as already accomplished.

8:31 Paul now asks a series of four rhetorical questions in relation to the eternal purpose of God. What then shall we say to these things? In essence, this verse is the conclusion Paul draws to the first eight chapters of Romans. What will our response be to what has been said? If God is for us, who can be against us? This is not one of the four rhetorical questions but rather the answer to the first question. Paul's only response is he has complete assurance that the eternal purpose of God will come to fruition because God is God. Who can be against us? does not mean that we have no adversaries. Verses 35 and 36 list a great number of adversaries. By this Paul means that there is no adversary too great to thwart the eternal purpose of God.

8:32 Paul answers the rhetorical question of v. 31 with a question. Since God has done the greatest thing, giving His own Son, will He not also freely give us all things?

8:33 This is a rhetorical question equivalent to an emphatic denial. Elect recalls God's eternal program (vv. 28–30). If God, the Supreme Judge, justifies, then who is going to successfully bring a charge against us?

8:34 Christ … died … makes intercession: Since Christ had fully justified us and is presently interceding for us, then no one can possibly condemn us. The death of the Lord Jesus on our behalf would avail little apart from His resurrection. It is the living Lord that insures the security of Godeternal purpose. Consequently, He is now sitting at the right hand of God where He is highly exalted in glory and sovereignty. By the authority which is innate to His deity, the Lord Jesus makes intercession for us to God the Father. By His victorious death, His victorious resurrection, His victorious ascension into heaven, and His victorious intercession for us, the Lord Jesus has sealed the eternal purpose of God. In the whole universe there is nothing which can provide greater assurance than the finished work of Christ.

8:35 If no one can successfully oppose us (v. 31), charge us (v. 33), or condemn us (v. 34) with regard to our personal relationship with God, then it follows that no one can separate us from Christ's love for us. The list in this verse covers the full range of experiences that could seem to pose a challenge to the reality of Christ's love.

8:36 sheep for the slaughter: Those who love God (Ps. 44:17–22) have always had to face death daily (2 Cor. 4:11).

8:37 The trials and difficulties listed in v. 35 not only do not separate us from Christ's love; they make us more than conquerors by forcing us to depend even more on God.

8:38, 39 Absolutely nothing can separate believers from God's love. The apostle struggles for words to describe the absolute certainty of God's love for believers. Nothing hard or dangerous, neither death nor life, can separate us. If God, the uncreated One, is for us, and no created thing can separate us, then our security in Him is absolute.

9:1–3 At the end of ch. 8 Paul established that: (1) God has a purpose for believers, (2) nothing can prevent that purpose from being fulfilled, and (3) no one can separate God's people from His love. But what about the Jewish people? God had a purpose for Israel and God had said He loved Israel. Yet Israel appears to be excluded from God's program. Paul addresses this problem in chs. 9—11. accursed from Christ: Paul's pain was so great that he was willing, if possible, to be separated from Christ if it meant Israel could be united to Him (Ex. 32:32).

9:2, 3 great sorrow (Gk. lupe) and continual grief (Gk. odune): Paul begins with an expression of his sadness for Israel's unbelief.

9:4, 5 Paul lists some of the great privileges of Israel. For example, they were called Israelites. Israel was the name given to their ancestor Jacob as an expression of God's favor (Gen. 32:28). Christ: Their supreme privilege was that the Messiah came through them. eternally blessed God: Jesus Christ is God in the flesh.

9:6 The word of God in this context is a reference to God's promises to Israel. Paul is declaring that God's purposes and promises have not failed. not all Israel: Not all the physical descendants of Jacob (Israel) inherited the promises of God.

9:7 Abraham is another illustration of Paul's point that physical descent is no guarantee of a place in God's family. Abraham had two sons, Ishmael and Isaac; but Isaac inherited the promises, not Ishmael.

9:8 of the flesh: Just being a physical descendant of Abraham does not mean inheriting God's promise to Abraham and his offspring.

9:9 For this is the word of promise: At this time I will come and Sarah shall have a son: This quotation from Gen. 18:10 is in accordance with the promise that Isaac would be born, a promise which seemed so unlikely that it provoked Sarah to laughter (Gen. 18:12). Nevertheless, Isaac was born and, although not the firstborn of Abraham, he was God's choice as the son through whom the promises of God would be manifested. God chose Isaac. It was His purpose that, in "Isaac your seed shall be called" (Rom. 9:7). Paul advances Isaac as an illustration that God deals on the principle of His sovereignty, not human initiation.

9:10 The children of Isaac are still another illustration of Paul's point. God's promise to Isaac was never intended to be fulfilled through Esau.

9:11 not yet … born: God chose Jacob over Esau before they were born. Neither had done any good or evil at the time the choice was made. It was not based in any way on their works. It was solely based on Him who calls. God did not elect Jacob because of anything Jacob did; his election was based on grace.

9:12 older: The descendants of Esau. younger: The descendants of Jacob (Gen. 25:23 and note).

9:13 hated: Actually God made provision for Esau (Gen. 27:39; 36; Deut. 23:7). Hated is an idiom where the opposite is used to express a lesser degree. For example, Gen. 29:30 says Jacob loved Rachel more than Leah, but the next verse (literally translated) says that Leah was hated. What Paul is saying is that Esau was not the object of God's electing purpose.

9:14 If God chose some of Abraham's descendants (v. 6), like Isaac over Ishmael (vv. 7–9), or Jacob over Esau (vv. 10–13), then is there unrighteousness with God? The complaint is that if God chose Isaac or Jacob without regard to their works, then this would have been unrighteous or unjust. If God's election and rejection was based on the evil deeds of one or the good deeds of the other, the question of God's "fairness" would never have arisen. This question is the theme of chs. 9—11.

9:15 Paul's response to the question posed in v. 14 is not to justify God's actions or choices but to state the unequivocal sovereignty of God in doing as He wills. I will have mercy: In this passage from Exodus, God states His absolute right not to be questioned by His creatures about His decisions (Ex. 33:19). With these words about mercy and compassion God revealed His character to Moses when he asked to behold the glory of God. Those who question God in these matters have not seen the glory of God that Moses was allowed to see.

9:16 but of God: The basis of God's sovereign choice is not a person's conduct, but God's compassion. God is free to show mercy to whom He chooses.

9:17, 18 Pharaoh refused to obey the Lord (Ex. 5:2) and hardened his heart (Ex. 7:13, 14, 22; 8:15, 32; 9:7). God used Pharaoh's sin to demonstrate His power and magnify His name. hardens: God only gave Pharaoh over to what Pharaoh had already chosen to do. Nevertheless, the fact remains that God sovereignly chooses to have mercy on some and to withhold it from others.

9:19, 20 Find fault means "to blame." Paul again poses human questions that he will answer in vv. 20, 21. If God hardens whom He wills (v. 18), why blame the one who was hardened? His will: If God hardens, how can it be said that person is resisting God? Isn't the hardened one only doing what God has willed him to do? Reply means "to make a rejoinder," implying an argumentative attitude. Paul rebukes anyone who would raise such objections, which in the end are only protests against God's ways, and not a sincere request for an explanation.

9:21 The word translated power can mean "right" or "authority." Paul insists on God's right to do as He pleases.

9:22, 23 What if: Some insist that Paul is raising only the possibility of a vessel designed for destruction. Others take the passage literally, that God prepares some for eternal doom. prepared for destruction … prepared beforehand for glory: The grammatical structure of the first prepared, referring to the vessels of wrath, is different from the second prepared, referring to the vessels of mercy. The first may literally mean "prepared themselves," while the second is "which He prepared." If we are doomed, it is because of our rejection of God; if we are redeemed, it is because of the grace of God. The question is not: Why are some saved and some condemned? Everyone deserves condemnation. It is only by God's grace that anyone is saved.

9:24–29 God calls both Jews and Gentiles. Paul quotes several OT passages to support this point.

9:29 Unless God had been merciful, Israel would have been utterly destroyed.

Righteousness

What is righteousness? Most of us immediately think of a person trying to keep a list of rules, like a little boy or girl who never steps over the line. When Paul speaks of righteousness in Romans, he means far more than this commonsense understanding of the word. He draws on the OT concept of righteousness, which speaks of a proper relationship between God and a person, or between God and His people.

In the OT, righteousness is fundamentally an attribute of God (Pss. 71:15; 119:42). He alone is truly righteous. He is the One who remains faithful, to His promises, His covenant with Israel, and the Law. In turn, the Israelites as God's people had the responsibility to exemplify God's righteousness on this earth. Ultimately, this meant they had to love and worship the living God alone. The Law of Moses could be summed up in that command and its corollary, "You shall love your neighbor as yourself" (Lev. 19:18; Mark 12:31). Tragically, the Israelites did not comply. They proved unfaithful to the covenant, although God proved Himself as faithful. By sending prophets to His people, the Lord warned them again and again of their sinfulness. Finally He had to discipline them, with famine, military defeat, and even exile in Babylon. But God remained faithful, and He restored His people to the land and to Himself when they repented and turned to Him.

After their return from Babylon, the Israelites confused righteousness with a strict adherence to the Law as recorded in the Pentateuch. Indeed, the Jewish religious leaders added numerous amendments to the Law to ensure that no one would inadvertently break it. Zealous obedience to the Law was equated with righteousness. Yet mere external compliance to a set of rules did not please the Lord. What God wanted was repentant, humbled hearts that truly worshiped Him. He wanted to be the God of their hearts and minds, and the center of their devotion.

In his letter to the Romans, Paul clearly states that no one has achieved this standard; no one has completely loved and worshiped the Lord as they should (3:23). All have sinned. No good work or outward appearance of piety can restore a proper relationship with the Holy One (Is. 64:6). On the one hand, the Gentiles did not pursue a right relationship with their Creator, so they had been given over to all kinds of evil (1:18–31). On the other hand, the Jews through external obedience to the Law and their traditions were attempting to justify themselves before God (9:31, 32). Both failed. Jesus is the only One who can stand before the glorious God; He is the only One who is truly righteous. Remarkably, He has offered us a way out of our slavery to sin. By placing our faith and trust in Him, we can be declared righteous. We can have a righteousness that has nothing to do with our own works but instead relies on Jesus' sinless life and His sacrificial death for our sins. The Lord forgives us and declares us righteous because of our identification by faith with the righteousness of His Son (4:5). Through Jesus, we can finally be released from the guilt of our sins. Not only can we approach the Holy One in praise and thankfulness, but we can do God's will.

9:30–32 The question is: Since Israel had the law and pursued righteousness, why have they not attained it? Was it because they were not elected? The answer is that they did not obtain righteousness because they did not believe. They tried obtaining righteousness by the works of the law. Being committed to a righteousness by works, they stumbled over the righteousness of faith offered in Christ.

9:32, 33 The great tragedy of the Jewish nation was that the Messiah they so long awaited became to them a stumbling stone rather than a shelter in which to hide. The quotation here is from Is. 28:16, which is set in the context of Israel trusting Egypt for deliverance from the Assyrians instead of trusting in the power of God. Those who trust in God need never fear that their trust has been ill-placed or is ill-founded. Whoever believes on Him will not be put to shame: Had Israel trusted in her God rather than her law and her neighbors, she would not have been confounded and dispersed throughout the world. But the partial blindness of Israel, in the eternal purpose of God, has resulted in good for the Gentiles and the world in general. God is now calling out a people unto His name from both Jews and the Gentiles.

10:1–21 The groundwork for ch. 10 has already been laid in 9:30–33. The emphasis here is on righteousness and why Israel lacks it. Paul will lay the responsibility for the lack of righteousness squarely on the shoulders of the individual. He knows that when sinners are brought into the presence of divine sovereignty, their frequent response is to justify themselves by placing the responsibility for their sin on God. Paul does not apologize in any way for what he has said about God's sovereignty in ch. 9. He does not retreat at all from his strong belief that God has always worked by the principle of election. However he does demonstrate that God is not responsible for the unbeliever's lost condition. Man alone is responsible and it is futile to try to hide behind divine sovereignty and the doctrine of election as an excuse for personal sin.

10:1 saved: This word is used in the NT in several different ways (1:16). In Romans, Paul seems to make a distinction between justification and salvation (5:9, 10); the reader must pay attention to the context. Justification is what takes place at the moment of faith in Christ. Salvation, at least in Romans, refers to the work of God in the believer that continues after justification. It is deliverance from God's wrath (1:18; 5:9, 10). The logical conclusion from ch. 9 is that Israel is under divine wrath (9:22). Paul's deep desire and prayer is that Israel may be justified and saved from His wrath.

10:2 Israel had a zeal for God; outwardly, they were very religious. But their effort was not according to knowledge. They lacked a correct understanding of the kind of worship God wanted from them. Paul explains Israel's ignorance in vv. 3–13.

10:3 God's righteousness is the righteousness that belongs to God, and more specifically in this context, the righteousness God gives when a person trusts Christ. not submitted: This means "to obey." Israel did not obey God's command to believe (1:5; 6:17; Acts 16:31).

10:4 End can mean "fulfillment"; that is, Christ fulfilled all the requirements of the law. It can also mean "goal," to say that Christ was the object to which the law led. The point is that Israel was ignorant of God's righteousness because they failed to comprehend what the law was intended to do. The law revealed sin and showed that people could not hope to keep the law. Christ came and fulfilled it, then offered us His righteousness through faith in Him.

10:5–8 There are two kinds of righteousness, by works or by faith. One is inaccessible, the other is very accessible. Paul uses the words of Deut. 30:11–14 to demonstrate that righteousness by faith is not far off and inaccessible, but is as near as a person's mouth and heart. All one has to do is repent, believe in Jesus, and confess that belief.

10:9 Confess comes before believe in this verse because "mouth" precedes "heart" in Deuteronomy (v. 8). The order is reversed in the next verse. One has to confess with the mouth to be saved.

10:10 For indicates that this verse explains v. 9. The condition for righteousness, that is for being justified, is internal faith. The condition of salvation, meaning deliverance from wrath and from the power of sin, is external confession (v. 1; 5:9, 10), which is calling on the Lord for help (vv. 12, 13).

10:11–13 Paul emphasizes the universal offer of salvation. Whoever in vv. 11, 13 means "all." Verse 12 explains that this includes Jew and Greek (Gentile).

10:14, 15 If salvation is to be made possible for everyone, God must send preachers so people can hear, believe and call.

10:16 they: Israel. Not all Jews have obeyed the command to believe in Christ.

10:17 One must hear the word of God and then believe.

10:18–21 Israel heard but was disobedient; only a remnant believed the gospel.

11:1–36 Even though Israel heard and rejected the gospel (10:16–21), God has not entirely rejected them. Even now some Israelites have accepted God's grace (vv. 1–10). Moreover, the rejection of the nation as a whole is not final (vv. 11–24), for God wills to save both Gentiles and Jews by grace (vv. 25–32). Praise His name (vv. 33–36)!

11:1 One of the proofs that God has not cast away the Jewish people is Paul himself. He was an Israelite, a descendant of Abraham, a member of the tribe of Benjamin. He was a Jew, and he was chosen by God to be a believer and an apostle.

11:2 In this verse, His people refers to the nation of Israel and not just the elect within the nation. In vv. 4–7 Paul differentiates between the nation and the remnant, but his point there is that God's saving of the remnant proves that He has not abandoned His plan for the nation (v. 26). whom He foreknew: See 8:29.

11:3–5 Paul cites Elijah as an illustration. Elijah thought that the whole nation of Israel had fallen away, but he was wrong. The remnant in Elijah's day was proof that God had not cast off His people, and the remnant in Paul's day was continuing proof of His faithfulness.

11:6 if by grace, then it is no longer of works: Grace and works are mutually exclusive. God's election was established solely on the basis of grace (v. 5).

11:7 What Israel seeks is righteousness (9:31—10:3). The elect have obtained righteousness by faith. The others were blinded because they did not believe.

11:8–10 Paul quotes Isaiah and David to show that Israel's spiritual indifference was a continual pattern. Their rejection of Christ would bring untold misery on the nation.

11:11 fall: Does Israel's rejection mean the end of God's program for the nation? Certainly not! Israel's unbelief brought salvation … to the Gentiles, and it will ultimately lead to Israel's salvation (v. 26).

11:12, 13 fullness: The nation of Israel, chosen by God to receive salvation, will be saved along with believing Gentiles, resulting in great blessing for everyone (v. 26).

11:14 save some: Paul is revealing his great desire to see the salvation of all of Israel (vv. 12, 26).

11:15 life from the dead: The failure of Israel in rejecting Christ will make their eventual acceptance as vivid and wonderful as the resurrection that all believers will experience; it will be as if they had come back from the dead.

11:16 Firstfruit and root are references to the conversion of some Jews (v. 14) and the Gentiles (v. 15).

11:17 The wild olive tree is the Gentile Christians. The olive tree refers to Israel, those who inherited the promises of the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 12:1, 2; 17:7, 8; Hos. 14:6). grafted in: Paul intentionally stretches the analogy of grafting in order to communicate his point that Gentiles have been supernaturally connected to the family of God.

IN CONTEXT

Unity in the Body of Christ

By the time Paul wrote his letter to the Christians at Rome, Gentiles were probably becoming a majority of believers throughout the church. Jews had less and less influence theologically, culturally, or politically. Gradually—and tragically—the attitudes of pride and prejudice with which Jews had looked down on Gentiles were coming back to haunt them, as Gentile believers began to turn away from their Jewish brothers.

In Rom. 9—11, Paul pleaded with his Gentile readers to remember that God has not forgotten Israel. God made promises to the nation that He cannot forsake (11:29). Furthermore, Gentiles have no room for arrogance: they were not originally included among God's people, but were allowed in, like branches grafted onto a tree (11:17, 18).

Paul saw the possibility of a church divided, with Jewish and Gentile believers going their separate ways. If that happened, Gentiles would ignore the Jewish community altogether rather than show compassion and communicate the gospel so that Jews could be saved. That's why here, as elsewhere, Paul challenged believers to pursue unity in the body of Christ and charity among the peoples of the world.

11:18–24 If it had not been for the grace of God, Gentiles would never have been grafted into the life of God which the Jews enjoyed. The new life which enables them to produce fruit grows from the same root that the old stock of Israel grows. NT believers must not assume that they are better than the Jews because they were cut off for their unbelief. The Gentile church must never forget its reliance upon the divine grace of God, else her end will be the same as that of the old branches. The process of being grafted into the life of God finds its basis in the grace of God. We must never lord the grace of God over those who have been cut from the tree, for it is much easier to put the natural branches back than to graft different branches in their place. We therefore must rest totally on the grace of God for our salvation, as the remnant does.

11:18 Gentiles, who have been grafted into the Abrahamic covenant and therefore become recipients of God's blessing, should not boast. Gentile believers should not despise the Jews, the branches of God's vine.

11:19 The reason Israel was broken off (v. 17), “cast away” (v. 15), and “has fallen” (v. 12) is so that Gentiles could be grafted into the tree.

11:20 Well said: Paul agrees with the objector (v. 19) that Israel was broken off because of unbelief and that Gentiles stand by faith. But he goes on to warn that Gentiles should not be haughty, but fear. Standing before God is based on faith. Feelings of superiority are out of place.

11:21 Paul was warning the Gentiles not to be arrogant (v. 20), but to remember that they depended on God and were accountable to Him no less than the Jews were.

11:22, 23 If Gentiles continue in God’s goodness, they will not be cut off, and if Jews turn to God in faith, they can be grafted in again. This is not a reference to individual salvation but to God’s program for Jews and Gentiles.

11:24 It is far more natural to expect Israel, the natural branches, to be grafted in, than to expect Gentiles, the wild branches, to be included.

“mystery”

(Gk. musterion) (11:25; 16:25; 1 Cor. 2:7; Eph. 1:9; 3:3, 4, 9) Strong’s #3466: The word mystery, so often used by Paul, does not mean something incomprehensible, but something that had been kept secret and now has been disclosed. In Paul’s cultural and religious milieu, the term was often used with reference to the mystery religions. Adherents to the mystery religions used the term to speak of the secret knowledge of the religion revealed only to the initiated ones. In contrast, Paul uses the word to speak of a secret that has been openly revealed to all.

11:25 If believers do not understand this mystery, chances were they will be wise in their own opinion, meaning they will be haughty (v. 20) and boast (v. 18). The mystery is that Israel has been temporarily and partially hardened, but God has not rejected them.

11:26 All Israel does not mean that every individual in the nation will turn to the Lord. It means that the nation as a whole will be saved, just as the nation as a whole (but not every individual in it) was now rejecting the Lord.

11:27 For this is My covenant with them, When I take away their sins: Paul continues the quotation of Is. 59:21, but then passes into the promise of Jer. 31:33 to indicate that God will not fail to keep His covenant with Israel.

IN COMPARISON

The Christian Life

Description of the Christian:	Result:
Presents himself to God (12:1)	Becomes a sacrifice that is living, holy and pleasing to God (12:1)
Receives transformation by a renewed mind (12:2)	Discovers and displays the will of God (12:2)
Has spiritual gifts according to grace from God (12:6–8)	Uses spiritual gifts as part of Christ's body (12:6)
Honors civil law (13:1)	Honors God (13:1)
Loves others (13:8)	Fulfills God's law (13:8)
Pursues peace (14:19)	Serves to edify all (14:19)
Becomes like-minded toward others (15:5)	Glorifies God with others (15:6)

11:28, 29 The Jews are enemies in that they reject the gospel. For the sake of the fathers refers to the promises God made to the patriarchs. Irrevocable means "not to repent." God does not change His mind. He made promises to the patriarchs (v. 28) and He will fulfill them.

11:30–32 Israel's disobedience (Gk. . apeitheo) doesn't change the fact that God can still have mercy as He did on disobedient Gentiles.

11:33 God's method of dealing with Jews and Gentiles is a display of deep divine wisdom.

11:34, 35 The OT indicated in several places that God's wisdom is unobtainable by man in his own strength.

11:36 God is the source, means, and end of all things. He is the Creator, Sustainer, and the goal of everything. Therefore, He should be praised and glorified forever.

12:1—15:13 The transformation made by God in the spirit of the believer must be shown in the daily life. The practical instructions in 12:1—15:13 are based on Paul's doctrinal teaching in 1:18—11:36. Christian doctrine must lead to Christian ethics. In 12:1 and 2 is the basic commitment required of the Christian in light of all that God has done. The rest of this section describes how this commitment is carried out in the changing situations of daily life.

12:1 Based on God's mercy (9:11, 15, 16, 18, 23; 11:30–32), Paul entreats believers to present their bodies as a living sacrifice, meaning they should use their bodies to serve and obey God (6:13). Such giving of the body to God is more than a contrast with a dead animal sacrifice, it is "newness of life" (6:4). Holy means set apart for the Lord's use; acceptable means pleasing to Him; and reasonable indicates that such a gift is the only rational reaction to all the good gifts God has showered on us.

(Gk. metamorphoo) (12:2; Matt. 17:2; 2 Cor. 3:18) Strong’s #3339: The Greek word means “to change form,” as does the English derivative metamorphosis. In the NT, this word is used to describe an inward renewal of our mind through which our inner spirit is changed into the likeness of Christ. Paul told the Roman believers: “Be transformed by the renewing of your minds” (12:2). As our Christian life progresses, we should gradually notice that our thought life is being changed from Christlessness to Christlikeness. Transformation does not happen overnight. Our regeneration is instantaneous, but our transformation is continuous. We are conformed to Christ’s image gradually as we spend time in intimate fellowship with Him (2 Cor. 3:18).

12:2 Conformed means “to form” or “mold.” World is the normal word for “age” or “era.” Instead of being molded by the values of this world, the believer should be transformed, that is, changed by the renewing of the mind. Spiritual transformation starts in the mind and heart. A mind dedicated to the world and its concerns will produce a life tossed back and forth by the currents of culture. But a mind dedicated to God’s truth will produce a life that can stand the test of time. We can resist the temptations of our culture by meditating on God’s truth and letting the Holy Spirit guide and shape our thoughts and behaviors.

12:3–13 Instructions on how a person is to live within the Christian community. We Christians are closely united because we are all members of the body of Christ (vv. 3–8). In humility we are to use our God-given spiritual gifts to strengthen one another. Our conduct toward each other is best expressed as love (vv. 9–13).

12:3 think of himself: A renewed mind (v. 2) begins with thinking soberly about oneself. The first step in changing behavior is self-observation (1 Cor. 11:28–32). to each one: God has given everyone one or more gifts that can be used in His service. dealt … a measure of faith: The measure refers to God’s sovereignly given gifts mentioned in vv. 6–8. These gifts are not the result of intense prayer or spirituality. Instead, God simply gives everyone certain gifts so each person can strengthen the church (1 Cor. 12:11, 18, 28).

12:4, 5 As the human body is a unity with many members, each having its own function, so is the body of Christ. The church is a unified body under the headship of Christ, but the members have different functions (1 Cor. 12:12–31).

12:6 gifts: The Greek word (charismata) refers to God-given abilities that should be used to build up other members in the church. Although they are "irrevocable" and, thus do not change (11:29), they are to be pursued and developed (1 Pet. 4:10). prophecy: This word is used here in a general sense for all types of gifts that involve speaking God's word. For example, in 1 Cor. 14:3 "exhortation" appears as a prophesying gift. In its narrower sense, prophecy means the revealing of God's will in a particular situation (Acts 13:1–3).

12:7, 8 Ministry means "service" and is in contrast to the speaking gifts (1 Pet. 4:11). The Scriptures list five speaking gifts: prophecy, teaching, encouragement, the word of wisdom, and the word of knowledge. In addition, seven serving gifts are named: helps, mercy, faith, discernment of spirits, leadership, managing, and giving.

12:10 There are at least four Greek words for love, not all of which are used in the NT. (1) The highest form of love is agape. This is a self-sacrificial love. It involves an act of the will whereby one seeks the best for another. Agape is used in v. 9. (2) The Greek word philos means "affectionate regard," and the derived form philadelphia is translated brotherly love in this verse. (3) Philostorgos means "family affection" and is translated kindly affectionate in this verse. (4) Eros means physical love and does not occur in the NT. preference to one another: The greatest proof of the truth of the gospel message and of the reality of Jesus' love is the love believers show to each other. Christ is the model for such self-sacrificial love (Phil. 2:3–8).

12:11 in diligence: Christians should not offer their service half-heartedly or in a lazy manner. Instead, Paul encourages the Romans to serve eagerly and in earnest.

Antidote for Comparisonitis

One of the most debilitating diseases of the modern world is "comparisonitis"—the tendency to measure one's worth by comparing oneself to other people. You won't find this illness listed in any of the standard medical textbooks, nor will your company's disability or health insurance or worker's compensation program reimburse you for it. But make no mistake: comparisonitis is a scourge as widespread and destructive as any physical or emotional malady known today.

Comparisonitis happens when people find ways to look down on others and think highly of themselves because they enjoy greater abilities, intelligence, status, or wealth than they. Comparisonitis is an ancient disease. Certainly Paul was aware of how deadly it could be. That's why he offered an antidote for it—to see ourselves not as we stack up against others, nor as others evaluate us, but as God sees us (Rom. 12:3). Ultimately, His estimation of our worth is what matters. And to Him we matter a lot!

God does not define us according to culturally defined externals. Even our gender, ethnicity, family heritage, or body type are not of primary importance to Him. No, He uses an altogether different set of criteria as the basis for how He deals with us, as several people in Scripture indicate: • Paul found that God's grace made him who he was (1 Cor. 15:10). He also discovered that despite his past, God had made him into a new person (2 Cor. 5:17).

• Peter learned that God's power gave him everything he needed to live his life and pursue godliness (2 Pet. 1:3).

• Job realized that all he had—family, friends, possessions, health—was ultimately from God (Job 1:21).

• One of the psalmists understood that God Himself had created him, "fearfully and wonderfully." Imagine what that did for his self-image! (Ps. 139:14).

12:12 The believer who is constantly praying will be rejoicing in hope and patient (Gk. hupomeno), or, enduring, in tribulation.

12:13 Hospitality means “love of strangers.” The primary reference is to housing travelers, though all forms of hospitality are included. The progression in this verse is significant. As we dedicate ourselves to meeting the needs of our fellow believers, we will have opportunities to serve strangers and thus witness to them about the love of Christ.

12:14–21 As we relate to non-Christians, we are to respond in love to our persecutors (v. 14), to live at peace with unbelievers (v. 18), and to do good even to those who treat us badly (v. 20).

12:14 Bless means “to speak well of” or “praise.”

12:15 rejoice … weep: Because believers are a body, when one part hurts, everyone feels the pain; when one is joyful, everyone can rejoice. Christians cannot be indifferent to the suffering or joy of their fellow believers (1 Cor. 12:25, 26).

12:16 Be of the same mind: Keep harmony among yourselves. Do not be haughty, conceited, or maneuver to associate with the great.

12:17 The word good in this verse means “morally good,” “noble,” or “praiseworthy.” This is the positive side of the negative command not to return evil for evil (1 Pet. 3:9). A Christian should not concentrate on the evil in others, but instead should focus on what is good. By doing so, we encourage others around us to aspire to the good.

12:18 The believer’s aim should be to live peaceably. But sometimes peace is not within our control; this is why Paul limits the command.

12:19 Believers are not to seek personal revenge, but rather to let God punish.

12:20, 21 Freed from vengeance, believers can give themselves to mercy, even toward their enemies. By acts of kindness, the believers will heap coals of fire on the head of their enemies, perhaps bringing shame and repentance to them. It is possible for an enemy to become a friend. This is the phenomenal power of God’s love that believers are connected to through Christ.

Submitting to Authority

Scripture challenges us as believers to subject ourselves to whatever governments we live under (Rom. 13:1–7). Submission to authority is never easy. Human nature tends toward resistance and even rebellion, especially if government is imposed, incompetent, and/or corrupt. But as we struggle with how to respond to the systems in which we live, this passage offers some helpful perspectives: (1) God is the ultimate authority (13:1). Government as an institution has been established by God to serve His purposes. God raises up and does away with leaders.

(2) Both followers and leaders are ultimately accountable to God (13:2). Submission to human authorities reflects our submission to God's authority.

(3) God uses governments to carry out His good purposes on earth (13:3). Without question, some governments sometimes persecute those who do good. Paul had firsthand experience with that. But mainly, it's the lawbreaker, not the law-abiding citizen, who has something to fear from government.

(4) Obedience is a matter of inner conviction as well as external law (13:5). Our motivation to obey must go beyond fear of punishment. As believers, we serve the highest of all authorities, God Himself.

Only when a government commands us to do what God prohibits (worship, taking of innocent life, etc.) or prohibits us from doing what God commands are we to be in disobedience.

13:1 God, the supreme Sovereign, has ordained (v. 2) that there should be governing authorities. Every believer is to be subject to these various authorities, even if these authorities are evil as Nero (A.D. 54–68), the emperor of Rome who cruelly persecuted Christians. When Paul wrote this letter, Nero was in power. Yet Paul exhorted the Roman believers to submit to Nero's authority, because that authority was ordained by God Himself, although God may not approve of all acts that a government or leader may do.

13:2 Judgment does not necessarily include eternal punishment. God may judge people through the human authorities He appoints.

13:3 Government is to be obeyed because it is ordained to punish evil (Gk. kakon) and promote good (Gk. agathos).

13:4 The sword is an instrument of death. Government has the right in the proper circumstances to impose capital punishment as well as to wage war. In Paul's day, the common method of capital punishment was decapitation with a sword.

13:5 for conscience' sake: Believers must obey government not only because it is their civic duty, but because it is their spiritual duty before God.

13:6 Paying taxes is the most obvious and universal expression of support for civil government.

13:7 Civic loyalty and obedience to God normally run parallel (Mark 12:17). We are to fear and honor God above all others, but taxes and customs are likewise Christian obligations. In a democratic society the Christian has a share in civil authority and therefore must do what he can to see that its actions conform to God's moral law.

13:8 In the present context, owe no one anything primarily means respect and honor (v. 7). No doubt money is also included, but this passage does not prohibit borrowing (Ps. 37:21; Matt. 5:42). except to love: Love is a debt that is never paid in full.

13:9 as yourself: This verse is not a command to love ourselves. It is a recognition that we do love ourselves, and commands us to love others just as genuinely and sincerely as we love ourselves.

13:10 Love excludes murder, adultery, stealing, and lying (v. 9). Therefore when we love, we automatically fulfill the prohibitions of the law. If we attempt to live by the law, we quickly discover that we are breaking the law (7:5). But when we act in accordance with God's love, without being under the law, we fulfill it.

13:11 sleep: Believers are pictured as being asleep or inactive. Salvation here refers to the future, when believers will be saved from the presence of sin. Thus, salvation here speaks of the imminent return of Christ.

13:12, 13 Night is the present age during which we live in Satan's domain. Day is the beginning of a new life with Christ in His glorious reign. At hand means "is imminent"; the Lord could return at any moment (Phil. 4:5; James 5:8; 1 Pet. 4:7). Note that Paul puts strife and envy on the same level as drunkenness and lust.

13:14 put on the Lord Jesus Christ: Believers should clothe themselves with Christlike characteristics such as truth (John 14:6), righteousness (1 Cor. 1:30), and peace (Gal. 5:22, 23; Eph. 2:14; 6:10–17).

The Key Terms of Salvation

Paul, in the Epistle to the Romans, attempts to portray God's plan of salvation in a concise and clear manner. In doing so, he uses Greek words whose meanings are not widely known today. Here is a brief glossary of the key terms of salvation in this book:

English Term	Greek Term	References	Meaning
Faith	pistis	(1:17; 4:9; 12:6)	"Belief, trust"; faith is the means by which sinful people can experience and enjoy all the blessings of salvation. It is a complete trust in Jesus for salvation from sin and the coming judgment.
Gospel	euangelion	(1:16, 11:28)	"Good News"; Paul uses this word to refer to the wonderful message of forgiveness and eternal life in Christ.
Grace	charis	(1:5; 5:2; 12:3)	"The unmerited favor of God"; this term refers to God's inexplicable giving of good things (especially salvation) to undeserving people who could never earn it. Salvation is a free gift made possible by Christ's death on our behalf.
Justification	dikaiosis	(4:25; 5:18)	"The act of being declared righteous"; a legal term used by Paul to describe the spiritual transaction whereby God (the Judge) declares those who trust in Christ and what He has done for them on the Cross, to be acceptable before Him. Such a verdict is possible only because Christ has settled all the claims of the Law against sinners.
Law	nomos	(2:12; 4:13; 7:12; 10:4; 13:8)	"The commandments given by God"; Paul emphasizes both the holy character of the Law and the inability of sinful people to live according to it. The Law becomes a burden and a curse, until we allow it to point us to Christ, who perfectly fulfills all its requirements.
Propitiation	hilasterion	(3:25)	"The satisfaction of God's holy wrath against sin"; rebellion against God results in the wrath of God and must be met with judgment. By dying in our place and taking our sins upon Himself, Jesus satisfies God's righteous anger against all who believe.
Redemption	apolutrosis	(3:24; 8:23)	"The act of freeing someone by paying a purchase price"; this economic term is used by Paul in a theological sense to describe how Christ paid the penalty required by God for our sins (that is, death) by giving His own life on the Cross. When we believe, Jesus frees us from sin.
Righteousness	dikaiosune	(3:5; 5:17; 9:30)	"God's standard of purity" or "God's own truthfulness and faithfulness"; God is holy, therefore He cannot tolerate sin. It is through Jesus Christ that we can find righteousness that is acceptable to God. Christ not only takes away our sin, but He grants us His perfect purity.
Salvation	soteria	(1:16; 10:10)	"Deliverance"; this word is often used in the Bible to describe someone being rescued from physical harm. The word is used by Paul chiefly to denote deliverance from sin and its deadly consequences.
Sin	hamartia, hamartema	(3:9; 5:12; 7:11; 8:2; 14:23)	"Missing the mark" or "disobedience to God's law"; several different Greek words are used by Paul to describe the tendency of humans to rebel against God. Sin can be broadly defined as any attitude or action that opposes the character and will of God. Sin is what brings death—that is, separation from God.

14:1–13 Paul refers to disputes between those who are strong in faith and those who are weak (15:1). The strong were Christians who disregarded as nonessential certain prohibitions that were not specifically declared in Scripture. Their faith was strong enough to participate in such conduct without a guilty conscience (v. 22). The weak in faith were Christians whose consciences were troubled by these same prohibitions. Some Christians thought they could eat anything served as food; others did not (v. 2). Some held that Jewish festival days should be kept as holy days; others did not (v. 5). Paul was concerned that, on these nonessential issues, the strong should not despise the weak as ignorant and the weak should not judge the strong as profane or worldly (v. 3). He reminds us that both the strong and the weak are accountable to God (v. 12; 1 Cor. 8:4–13).

14:1, 2 Those who were weak in the faith did have faith: they had trusted in Christ. Some of the Roman believers might not have accepted the apostle's teaching concerning certain practices, such as accepting that all food was clean if received with thanksgiving (1 Tim. 4:4, 5). Instead, they ate only vegetables. The strong in the faith are told to receive the weak and not to dispute over doubtful things, which literally means "reasonings" or "opinions." The mature believers were not to pass judgment or to enter into dispute with those who were less mature.

14:3 The strong are not to despise the weak, that is, to treat them with contempt. The weak are not to judge the strong by attempting to place excessive prohibitions on them.

14:4 another's servant: Christ's follower. In a particular issue, whether a person stands approved by God or falls into sin is God's decision, not ours. Paul prohibits a censorious interference with another's freedom.

14:5 one day above another: This verse probably relates to the many holy days of the OT ceremonial law. fully convinced: The exhortation does not mean it is wrong to have strong convictions, but that all people have a right to their own convictions. This principle is basic in dealing with disputes.

14:6 Days and diets are not the issue, but whether what is being done is committed to the Lord.

14:7–9 None of us refers to believers, not people in general. Believers belong to the Lord. They live and die in relation to Him. Therefore, Christians should aim to please Him.

IN CONTEXT

Are Sundays Special?

In the OT, God commanded the Hebrews to set aside one day a week as a "Sabbath," a holy day of rest (Ex. 20:8–11; Is. 58:13, 14; Jer. 17:19–27). Yet here in Romans, Paul seems to take a nondirective posture toward the Sabbath (Rom. 14:5). Does that mean that there is no such thing as a "Lord's day," that God's people are no longer required to observe a Sabbath, whether it be Saturday or Sunday?

Not exactly. For Paul, every day should be lived for the Lord because we are the Lord's possession (14:8). If we act as if Sunday is the Lord's day but the other six days belong to us, then we've got a major misunderstanding. All seven days of the week belong to the Lord. The early church worshiped on the first day because it was the day of the Resurrection.

So the real question is, Should one of those days be observed in a special way, in light of God's instructions regarding a Sabbath? Paul says that neither pressure from other people nor tradition should bind our consciences. Instead, we are to seek guidance from the Spirit of God as to what we should do. Having inspired the Scriptures, God will help us determine what we should do as we study them.

14:10 Again (v. 3) Paul addresses the weak and the strong. The weak are not to judge, and the strong are not to show contempt, the same word that is rendered "despise" in v. 3. All believers are accountable to their Master, Jesus Christ, for they will appear before Him. At the judgment seat of Christ, every believer's life will be evaluated to determine his or her reward (1 Cor. 3:11–15; 2 Cor. 5:9, 10).

14:11 every knee: One day everyone will submit to God's authority. He will judge all people before His great throne (Rev. 20:11–15).

14:12, 13 Let us not judge sums up Paul's instruction in vv. 1–12 on how weak and strong Christians should behave toward each other. but rather resolve: Addressed chiefly to the strong Christians whose position Paul deals with in vv. 14–23. stumbling block: Any action that causes others to fall into sin.

14:14 Unclean means “common” and refers to things prohibited by the Jewish ceremonial law. to him: If anyone considers some activity to be unlawful, then it is wrong for that person to engage in that activity (14:23).

14:15 Do not destroy: Paul here builds on the principle of conviction with the principle of consideration for the brother who is weak. This is a step in maturity. If eating meat (v. 2; 1 Cor. 8:7–11; 10:25–28) destroys a weak believer, then the strong believer should not eat it.

14:16 Your good is what you, the believer, consider to be good. Be spoken of as evil means “reviled” or “slandered.” Do not cause your freedom, a good thing, to be reviled because of the way in which you use it.

14:17 The kingdom of God does not consist of external things like food, but in spiritual realities like righteousness in action and thought, peace that seeks harmony, and joy that comes from the Holy Spirit. Those who understand the spiritual realities of the kingdom will not choose the brief joy of satisfying selfish desires over the spiritual joy of putting aside those desires for the sake of others.

14:18 acceptable to God: Because our service to Christ is rooted in “righteousness and peace and joy” (v. 17). approved by men: Opposite to “spoken of as evil” (v. 16).

14:19, 20 The believer should edify, that is, “build up.” Do not destroy: That is, do not “throw down” or “demolish.” Paul has already exhorted mature believers to have consideration for the weak believers (v. 15). Here Paul exhorts the mature believer to identify ways to build up those weaker in the faith.

14:21 There is little distinction between stumbles, offended, and made weak. Paul uses all three words to reiterate that a mature believer should not cause the downfall of another believer (vv. 12, 13, 20).

14:22 Paul does not require the strong to abandon their convictions about things not condemned by the law. Instead he encourages them to have faith about such issues. Although mature believers may refrain from eating meat in front of weaker believers, they can still believe that Christ gives them the freedom to eat all types of food (v. 2) privately before Him (v. 5).

14:23 whatever is not from faith: Any action that violates my Christian conscience is a sin.

15:1, 2 scruples: Because there are no clear guidelines in Scripture for some issues, the weak are overcautious. We are not to please ourselves at the expense of others. Rather, we are to help our neighbor by doing what will strengthen him spiritually.

15:3 Christ is the ultimate model for the strong believer. He renounced self-gratification so that He could clearly represent God and His cause (Phil. 2:5–8).

15:4 Through patience (endurance) and the comfort (or encouragement) of Scripture, believers learn that they have hope. In this case, if strong believers are patient with the scruples of the weak, they have hope of being rewarded (14:10; 1 Cor. 9:17, 24–27).

15:5 the God of patience: Attributing to God the same virtues just ascribed to the Scriptures (v. 4), Paul prays for the unity of all believers.

15:6 If believers are divided over some amoral issue, God will not be glorified by the unified whole (Phil. 1:27—2:2).

God's Rainbow

Societies and their systems tend to encourage people to divide along racial, ethnic, and cultural lines, or else to abandon their distinctives by assimilating into the dominant power group. Paul called for a different approach. He didn't ask Jews to give up their Jewish heritage and become Gentiles, nor did he ask Gentiles to become Jews. Instead, he affirmed the rich ethnic backgrounds of both groups while challenging them to live together in unity (Rom. 15:7).

That kind of unity is costly, and the attempt to practice it is always under attack. Yet that is the church that God calls us to—a diverse body of people who are unified around Christ. Our backgrounds—whether Japanese, Anglo-Saxon, African, Middle Eastern, Puerto Rican, Chinese, Italian, or whatever—are God's gifts to each of us and to the church. He has placed us in our families as He has seen fit. We can rejoice in the background He has given us and be enriched by the background He has given others.

15:7 Therefore introduces the conclusion of the discussion begun in 14:1, where Paul began with the command to receive the weak believer. Thus, the command to receive one another is addressed not just to the strong believers, but to all believers.

15:8–13 Jesus Christ became a servant to the Jews for two purposes: (1) to confirm God's promises to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and (2) to demonstrate God's mercy to the Gentiles so that they might glorify Him. Paul cites four passages from the OT to prove that God intended the Gentiles as well as the Jews to glorify Him. as it is written: Paul quotes from all three divisions of the OT (the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms or Writings), and from three great Jewish leaders (Moses, David, and Isaiah), to demonstrate that God's purpose was always to bless the Gentiles through Israel. Although the nation of Israel has been set aside for the present (11:1–31), both Jews and Gentiles are being brought together in the church (3:1–12; Eph. 2:14–22). root of Jesse: This is a title for the Messiah. Jesse was the father of David, and the Son of David was the promised Messiah.

15:12 root of Jesse: Jesus was descended from David, whose father was Jesse.

(Gk. elpis) (15:13; 1 Cor. 9:10) Strong’s #1680: The Greek term denotes “confident expectation” or “anticipation,” not “wishful thinking” as in common parlance. The use of the word hope in this context is unusual and ironic, for it suggests that the Gentiles, who knew nothing or little about the Messiah, were anticipating His coming. However, we need only think of Cornelius (Acts 10) to realize that some Gentiles had anticipated the coming of the Jewish Messiah. For Jesus was sent, not only for the salvation of the Jews, but also for the Gentiles. Since God is the Author of our salvation, we can call Him the God of hope for He has given us hope (15:13).

15:13 A prayer that concludes Paul’s exhortations. We are able to fulfill God’s will only through the power that the Holy Spirit gives.

15:14 This is probably primarily a reference to the exhortations concerning doubtful things. They were able … to admonish (Gk. noutheteo) one another so they would not ignore the spiritual life of the weak.

15:15 as reminding (Gk. epanamimnesko): Paul did not write to teach them something they did not know but to remind them of what they already knew (2 Pet. 3:1). Believers need to be reminded regularly of truths like these.

15:16 Ministering means rendering priestly service. Paul pictures himself as a priest offering a sacrifice to God. The sacrifice is Gentile believers who have been made acceptable to God because they have been sanctified, that is, set apart by the Holy Spirit for God’s service.

15:17 Since his ministry was all by God’s grace (v. 15), Paul could glory (Gk. kauchesis) in it (v. 18).

15:18 to make the Gentiles obedient (Gk. hupakoe), that is, to the command to believe on Christ.

15:19 By performing mighty signs and wonders, Paul demonstrated that God had granted him apostolic power (2 Cor. 12:12). Illyricum is roughly modern-day Albania and north, between Greece and Italy.

15:20, 21 Paul’s aim to preach where the gospel had not yet been heard is aptly expressed in v. 21 by the quotation from Isaiah.

15:22 For this reason: Paul's ambition to preach Christ where He was not yet known (vv. 20, 21) had hindered him from going to Rome.

15:23 a place (Gk. topos), that is, where Christ has not been preached (v. 20). no longer having a place : Having finished his work there.

15:24 Paul desired to enjoy (Gk. empimplemi) their fellowship, minister to them (1:10, 11) and be helped (Gk. propempo) by them. He did not specify the kind of help he had in mind. Paul had his eyes on Spain, the frontier of the Roman Empire in the West. He hoped the Romans would support him in his mission farther west.

15:25, 26 Paul planned to minister to the believers in Jerusalem by taking the contribution from Macedonia and Achaia (1 Cor. 16:1–4; 2 Cor. 8 and 9). This money was not only aid from Gentile believers to Jewish believers, but an expression of love that would unify the church even more.

15:27 Because the Jewish Christians had shared the gospel with the Gentiles, it was only right that the Gentile churches minister to the material needs of their Jewish brothers and sisters.

15:28 this fruit: The collection referred to in v. 26. Spain: No one knows for sure whether Paul ever got to Spain, but he had it on his travel itinerary.

15:29 when I come: Paul did get to Rome but not in the time frame or way he had thought. God had a special plan for Paul. The Lord would give him the opportunity to testify of his faith in the emperor's court, but he would do so as a prisoner (Acts 27 and 28).

15:30–32 strive together … in prayers: Intercession for his plan for Jerusalem was Paul's earnest request. He expressed three concerns: (1) deliverance from unbelievers in Judea, (2) the success of his mission to Jerusalem, and (3) a satisfying visit to the church in Rome.

15:31 Delivered means rescued from serious danger. He had been warned about the danger of a trip to Jerusalem (Acts 20:22, 23).

15:32 Be refreshed pictures rest and relaxation. Paul anticipated conflict in Jerusalem. He looked forward to a time of refreshment from the believers in Rome.

15:33 A blessed benediction.

Phoebe, Paul's Helper

Paul called Phoebe (Rom. 16:1) a diakonos (translated here as "servant," elsewhere as "deacon" or "minister") of the church at Cenchrea, the eastern port of Corinth. Does that mean she held a formal position of responsibility? Possibly. Paul frequently referred to himself as a diakonos and used the same term in writing about male coworkers such as Apollos, Tychicus, Epaphras, and Timothy (1 Cor. 3:5; Eph. 6:21; Col. 1:7; 4:7; 1 Thess. 3:2).

Our understanding of exactly what it meant to be a diakonos in the early church is incomplete. Where the word appears in secular literature of the first century, it refers to a helper of any sort who was not a slave. Whatever the role entailed, Paul commended Phoebe to the believers in Rome as a valued sister and one to be esteemed as one of his coworkers.

One important way that Phoebe may have assisted Paul was by taking his letter to Rome. The terms used to describe her suggest that she was a wealthy businesswoman of some influence. Perhaps she agreed to carry the document with her on business to the capital. Since couriers in the ancient world served as representatives of those who sent them, it is possible that Phoebe not only delivered the letter but also read it at different gatherings of Christians and discussed its contents with them.

16:1, 2 Servant is the word used for the office of deacon (Phil. 1:1; 1 Tim. 3:8, 10, 12). The fact that it is used here with the phrase of the church seems to suggest an official position. Helper means "patron" or "benefactor." It implies that Phoebe was a person of wealth and position.

16:3–16 This list of greetings is the longest in any of Paul's letters. Twenty-six people are mentioned, about one-third of them women.

16:3, 4 Priscilla and Aquila worked in the same trade as Paul, tentmaking (Acts 18:1–3), and labored with him in Corinth and Ephesus (Acts 18:1–3, 18, 26). This married couple is never mentioned separately, perhaps because they ministered so effectively together. The NT does not record how or where Priscilla and Aquila risked their own necks for Paul, though it probably happened at Ephesus.

16:5 the church … in their house: In NT times churches met in private houses for worship.

16:6 Greet Mary, who labored much for us: The labor which this woman bestowed probably refers to her association with Priscilla and Aquila from the inception of the Roman church. We know nothing of her but that she bore the name Mary, one of the six persons so named in the NT.

16:7 Of note among the apostles as a phrase can mean either that they were well known to the apostles, or that they were distinguished as apostles. It is probable that they were known to the apostles because there is no mention of them in the Gospels or Acts.

16:8–10 Amplias … Urbanus … Stachys … Apelles were common slave names. The same names have been found in lists of slaves who served in the imperial household. Aristobulus was a familiar Greek name. In fact, the family of Herod the Great used the name often. Some have suggested that this Aristobulus was the grandson of Herod the Great and the brother of Agrippa I.

16:11 my countryman: Herodion must have been a Jew, like Paul. Some have suggested that this Narcissus was a famous freedman of that name who was put to death by Agrippa shortly after Nero came to power.

16:12 Greet Tryphena and Tryphosa, who have labored in the Lord: Tryphena and Tryphosa were probably sisters and possibly even twins. It was a common practice to name twins of the same root word. The name means those who live voluptuously. Although these names stem from a pagan, Anatolian root, Paul nevertheless associates them with labor in the Lord. Greet the beloved Persis, who labored much in the Lord: Persis

(the name means Persian woman) is said to be beloved but with a woman Paul delicately avoids using the phrase "my beloved." Her name appears on Greek and Latin inscriptions as that of a slave or freedwoman.

16:13 Though a common name, this Rufus is often identified with the one in Mark 15:21. Since chosen in the Lord is true of all believers, many interpret this phrase to mean "outstanding" or "eminent." But it is possible that just as some believers demonstrate God's love and others reflect God's justice, so Rufus was an exceptional example of God's election.

16:14 Greet Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes: Little is known of these believers other than that they were apparently of one community and were all men. Hermas is an abbreviation of some names such as Hermogenes or Hermodorus and very common (compare The Shepherd of Hermas in apocryphal literature). Patrobas was abbreviated from Patrobius. Hermes was the name of the god of good luck and became a common slave name.

16:15 Greet Philologus, and Julia, Nereus, and his sister, and Olympas: Philologus and Julia were perhaps husband and wife. Both names occur several times in connection with the imperial household of Rome. Nereus, according to a tradition which goes back to the fourth century, is associated with Flavia Domitilla, a Christian woman who was banished to the Island of Pandateria by her uncle Emperor Domitian in A.D. 95. She was released after his death the following year. Olympas is an abbreviated form of Olympiodorus. These all appear to have been a community of faith.

16:16 holy kiss: This kiss on the cheek was practiced by the early church as a symbol of the love and unity among the early Christians (1 Cor. 16:20; 2 Cor. 13:12; 1 Thess. 5:26; 1 Pet. 5:14).

16:17 Cause divisions means "to stand apart" or "to cause dissension." In the NT it occurs only here and in Gal. 5:20. Strife and rivalry cause dissension, which eventually leads to divisions in a church (13:13; Gal. 5:20). Such dissension causes offenses—that is, it becomes a snare or stumbling block to others (this word occurs at 14:13). Contentious, divisive people can cause others to stumble, so they should be avoided. Paul teaches this type of church discipline in his other letters (1 Cor. 5:9–13; 2 Thess. 3:6; 2 Tim. 3:5; Titus 3:10).

16:18 Their motive was wrong. They were not serving our Lord Jesus Christ. They were serving their own belly, meaning they were selfish if not sensual. They were walking according to the flesh (8:4, 5). Furthermore, their methods were deceptive. Smooth words (Gk. chrestologia) mean "good, kind, gracious." Flattering speech (Gk. eulogia) means smooth, praising speech. Thus, with gracious praise they deceive (Gk. exapatao) … the simple (Gk. akakos), the gullible.

16:19 Paul quickly explained that he didn't mean to imply that the Romans were simpletons. Your obedience (Gk. hupakoe) indicates there was no dissension in the Roman church for which Paul was glad (Gk. agalliaomai). But Paul wanted them to be wise (Gk. sophos) as well as obedient and simple concerning evil.

16:20 Divisive people destroy the peace and unity of the church, but God, who is the source of peace, will crush this work of Satan through the wisdom and obedience of believers. Ultimately, God will totally defeat Satan and bring peace to the whole church. Paul closes with his customary prayer that the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ would be with them.

16:21 Timothy worked with Paul and later received two letters from him. Some think Lucius here is Luke, the author of the third Gospel and Acts. But Paul includes this Luke among his countrymen, meaning he was a Jew. Luke the author was a Gentile. Jason is mentioned in Acts as Paul's host on his first journey to Thessalonica (Acts 17:5, 7, 9). Sosipater is likely the same person referred to in Acts 20:4.

16:22 Paul, the author of Romans, dictated the letter to a secretary named Tertius, who actually wrote the words. Tertius here sends his greetings to the Romans.

A theater inscription at Corinth, mentioning the name Erastus. This may have been the same Erastus, "the treasurer of the city," who sent greetings to the Christians in Rome (Rom. 16:23).

16:23 Gaius of Corinth (1 Cor. 1:14) not only gave Paul lodging, but also offered his house as a meeting place for the church. In Acts 19:22 a man named Erastus was sent by Paul to Macedonia. This may have been the same man.

16:24, 25 The word establish is used only twice in Romans. At the beginning of the book, Paul expresses a desire to visit the Romans that he might impart some spiritual gift to them so that they would be "established" (1:11). Now he praises God who is able to do it. God used the gospel, which is the preaching of Jesus Christ, to establish the Roman believers. Paul speaks of his message as a mystery (11:25) because God's complete plan of salvation was at first hidden but now was being revealed. The revealed mystery is that the church will consist of both Jews and Gentiles united in the one body of Christ (Eph. 3:1–13).

16:26 by the … Scriptures … all nations, according to the commandment … for obedience: God has commanded that His Scriptures be preached in all nations so all people can obey His command to believe.

16:27 God in His wisdom saves people who, upon hearing the Scripture and especially the gospel, trust Jesus Christ forever.

The First Epistle to the Corinthians

———— THE CHURCH AT CORINTH WAS A SERIOUSLY troubled church. Infected with sexual immorality, split by factions that dragged each other into court, and crippled by abuse of the spiritual gifts, this church was in need of radical spiritual surgery. Though true believers, the Corinthians had a lot of growing up to do. They had to stop following the immoral, selfish, and contentious ways of their pagan neighbors in Corinth, the notoriously immoral city of that day. One can sense the disappointment of a hurt father in Paul's stern words for the Corinthians. Yet Paul, like a surgeon, diagnosed the problem and aimed his efforts straight at the source: pride and a lack of true love in the church.

First Corinthians is a reply to two letters. Paul had left the Corinthian church under the leadership of Aquila and Priscilla in the spring of A.D. 53 to continue his second missionary journey. On his third journey, during his stay at Ephesus, he received two letters from the Corinthian believers. One was a disturbing report from the household of Chloe (1:11). The report detailed the divisions and immorality in the church. These problems arose because the young Corinthian church had failed to protect itself from the decadent culture of the city. The immaturity of the Corinthians had given way to sectarian divisions. The believers were identifying themselves as followers of specific Christian leaders rather than as followers of Christ (3:1–9). They were also dragging each other into court (6:1). Their desire to sue each other rather than settle their disputes within the church betrayed their immaturity and misplaced trust in human wisdom. Sexual immorality had become a problem in the church in spite of a previous letter (that has not been preserved) in which Paul warned against it (5:9–11).

The second letter Paul received was a set of questions that Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus had brought from Corinth (16:15–18). The detailed questions were about marriage and singleness (7:1–40) and Christian liberty (8:1—11:1).

Paul wrote First Corinthians to answer both letters and to give some additional instructions. He taught about decorum in worship services (11:2–16), the solemnity of the Lord's Supper (11:17–34), and the place of spiritual gifts. Though the Corinthians were very gifted, in their immaturity and pride they had abused their gifts. Paul reminded the Corinthians that gifts come from God (12:11) and are to unify and edify the church (12:24, 25; 14:1–4). In conclusion, Paul corrected a doctrinal matter by writing the New Testament's most detailed explanation of the resurrection of Christ and Christians (15:1–58). Even though the church was riddled with problems, Paul ended his confrontational letter with a note of hope. The Corinthians could have victory over sin and death because Jesus in His death and resurrection had already decisively obtained it (15:57).

Corinth was an important city in ancient Greece. Geographically, it was an ideal hub for commerce between Italy and Asia. Along with the flow of merchandise, Corinth received travelers from both east and west, creating ethnic diversity among the city's inhabitants. Although Corinth was ransacked by the Romans in 146 B.C., it was rebuilt by Julius Caesar in 46 B.C. Roman control of Corinth allowed them to dominate east-west commerce as well as the Isthmian Games (9:24–27), which were surpassed in importance only by the celebrated Olympic Games.

Corinth's commercial success was rivaled only by its decadence. The immorality of Corinth was so well known that Aristophanes coined the Greek verb korinthiazomai (meaning "to act like a Corinthian") as a synonym for sexual immorality. Greek plays of the day often depicted Corinthians as drunkards and reprobates. The Corinthians drew attention to their lewdness through their worship of Aphrodite, the goddess of love and beauty. Yet Corinth was also a strategic location for the propagation of the gospel. The city's corrupt nature made for a unique opportunity to display to the Roman world the transforming power of Jesus Christ.

Acts 18:1–18 records the founding of the Corinthian church. Paul visited Corinth on his second missionary journey, after leaving Athens. This initial visit probably occurred in the fall of A.D. 52. Paul, Silas, Timothy, and Luke had left Troas for Macedonia about eight months earlier and had started churches in Philippi, Thessalonica, and Berea. Luke remained at Philippi and Silas and Timothy at Thessalonica, while Paul journeyed on to Athens. Paul's ministry at Athens proved disappointing, perhaps leaving him discouraged as he entered Corinth, where he made tents during the week and preached in the synagogue on the Sabbath. After the Jews of Corinth rejected Paul's message, he began to reach out to the Gentiles. He ministered in Corinth for eighteen months, eventually establishing a church.

This church, like the city, had a mixture of nationalities. Though some Jews had been converted, most of the believers were Gentiles (12:2).

While the Corinthian church reflected the city's multinational character, it also mirrored some of Corinth's immorality. The sharp tone of First Corinthians results from Paul's urgent desire to get the church back on course.

First Corinthians twice names the apostle Paul as its writer (1:1, 2; 16:21). Paul's authorship of First Corinthians is almost unanimously accepted throughout biblical scholarship. One of the earliest witnesses to Paul's authorship of the book was Clement of Rome (c. A.D. 95).

Most likely Paul wrote the letter while he was ministering at Ephesus during his third missionary journey. In 16:8, Paul said that he would remain in Ephesus until Pentecost. This, coupled with Acts 20:31, indicates that he wrote it in the last year of his three-year stay in Ephesus, some time in the spring of A.D. 56. The Corinthian church would have been about four years old at that time.

1:1–3 Paul's words of introduction are more than simple words of greeting. The first few verses introduce the themes of his letter. Thus in his greeting, Paul introduces his apostolic authority (9:1–27), the sanctification of his readers (5:1), and the unity of all believers (1:10–17), all major themes of the letter and concerns for the Corinthian believers.

1:1 through the will of God: The Corinthian church greatly valued human wisdom. This misplaced emphasis had caused some in the church to challenge Paul's authority (v. 12; 9:1, 2). They forgot that Jesus Christ Himself had called him to his ministry as an apostle of Jesus Christ (Paul uses the same title in 2 Cor. 1:1).

1:2, 3 A local church of God is a group of people who identify themselves with God and gather together to worship and serve Him. sanctified in Christ Jesus: The Corinthians' holiness came from their position in Christ, not from their own goodness. The tense of the verb sanctified indicates that God had sanctified the Corinthians at a specific time in the past, producing a condition that they still enjoyed in the present. called to be saints: The work of Jesus Christ makes a believer holy forever in God's eyes. But in everyday living, sanctification involves small, daily changes (Heb. 10:14). This is why Paul could call the Corinthian believers to become saints, even though the problems in their church testified that they were far from the goal of holiness. In every place is most likely a reference to local churches throughout the Roman Empire (1 Tim. 2:8).

1:4–9 The thanksgiving Paul offers to God for the Corinthians seems odd, considering the many problems the church was experiencing. However, Paul focuses his praise not on the troubled Corinthians but on the eternally faithful God. Paul does not praise the Corinthians for their good works as he does some other churches (Eph. 1:15); instead, he praises God who works in them. When we focus on people's faults, hope soon wanes and discouragement follows. But when we concentrate on the Lord, even the darkest hours can be filled with praise.

1:5, 6 Enriched means that the Corinthians had been spiritually destitute but had become abundantly prosperous through God's grace.

1:7 Gift here is probably a reference to the spiritual gifts described in chs. 12—14. Despite the Corinthians' boasting, their many gifts had come from God (12:11, 18, 28). The Corinthians were richly blessed with spiritual gifts because God was giving them everything they needed to do His will (12:14–27).

1:8, 9 Because God is faithful to His word, Paul was confident that even the sin-plagued Corinthians would stand blameless before Him. This blamelessness does not refer to the Corinthians' works, but to their standing in Christ, their justification (3:14, 15).

(Gk. koinonia) (1:9; Acts 2:42; Phil. 2:1; 1 John 1:3, 6, 7) Strong’s #2842: The Greek term means “that which is shared in common.” In the NT the word was used to denote the believers’ common participation in the triune God—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. The Father and Son have enjoyed communion with each other before the creation of the world. When the Son entered into time, His fellowship with the Father also entered into time. During the days of His ministry, Jesus was introducing the Father to the disciples and initiating them into this fellowship. Then once the disciples were regenerated unto eternal life, they actually entered into fellowship with the Father and the Son. Thus, the unique fellowship between the Father and the Son begun in eternity was manifested in time through the incarnation of the Son, was introduced to the apostles, and then through the apostles was extended to each and every believer through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit (2 Cor. 13:14; Phil. 2:1).

1:10–17 Paul began his response to the disturbing report concerning the Corinthian church by attacking the worldly wisdom which had divided the church.

1:10 Paul pleaded for an outward expression that comes from an inward spirit. Not only did Paul encourage the Corinthians to speak the same thing and have external unity; he also urged them to be joined together in a unity of hearts and minds that expresses the unity of the one body of Christ.

1:11 Paul avoided dealing in rumors or secrecy; he openly named his sources: Chloe’s household. We know little of this woman and her household except what this verse implies. Chloe lived in Corinth or Ephesus, and the Corinthians respected her word.

1:12, 13 The Corinthian church was divided into at least four factions, following four prominent leaders.

1:14–16 Paul said I thank God that I baptized none of you, because the Corinthians had taken to identifying with their spiritual mentors rather than Christ. Crispus was the ruler of the synagogue in Corinth when Paul began to preach there (Acts 18:8). He was instrumental in the conversion of many other Corinthians. Gaius may be the same person who hosted Paul and the entire church (Rom. 16:23). Stephanas was one of Paul’s first converts in Achaia, the region of which Corinth was capital. Paul praised him and his household for their devotion to the ministry and for their assistance (16:15). Stephanas was one of the couriers who took correspondence to and from Corinth.

1:17 Paul's primary ministry was to preach the gospel. Baptism naturally followed conversion but was secondary in importance. With the phrase not with wisdom of words, Paul addressed the Corinthians' tendency to place undue emphasis on human wisdom. The immature Corinthians were so impressed by clever oratory and learned debate that many of them ignored the relatively "simple" message of the cross.

1:18–25 In this section, Paul emphasizes that salvation is in the message of Christ, not in human philosophies. The powerful simplicity of Christ over human wisdom negates any cause for people to boast. Many people stumble over this simplicity because the religions of the world make the source of salvation something we do rather than a message we believe.

1:18 The message of the cross is the gospel, the Good News about Christ's death and resurrection for our sins. The gospel penetrates to the core of self-centeredness. For those who exalt self, the message sounds absurd. But for those who bow humbly in faith, it becomes the power that is able to snatch them from death and impart eternal life. No wonder Paul put such confidence in this message (Rom. 1:16).

1:19 In Is. 29:14, the Lord rebuked OT Israel for their hypocritical worship and their human rules for salvation (Is. 29:13). He declared He would confound their carnal wisdom. Paul used this quote to illustrate his point that God has voided any human attempts to find favor with God.

1:20, 21 The wise is probably a reference to Greek philosophers. The scribe is a technical term for a Jewish scholar trained to handle details of the Law. The disputer refers to a Greek person, especially one trained in rhetoric. These professionals tried to solve every problem with logic and debate. The point of this passage is that all human efforts to find favor with God fall woefully short (Rom. 3:9–28). Only through faith in Christ can we be saved from our sins.

1:22, 23 The Jews sought miraculous signs from the Messiah to signal the beginning of the deliverance God had promised (Mark 8:11; John 6:30). The Greeks, especially the philosophers, sought to use wisdom to answer their questions about God and life. To the Jews, who expected a political savior, Jesus was a stumbling block. To the Greeks, whose self-centered wisdom could not make sense of the cross, to believe in Jesus was foolishness.

1:24, 25 Paul uses a paradox to say that the most insignificant thought or work of God is greater than the most extraordinary achievement of humans.

1:26 Wise refers to the Greek philosophers. Mighty refers to influential, politically powerful people. Noble includes all the aristocratic upper classes. Most of the Corinthians came from the lower classes.

1:26–31 Although the Corinthians thought highly of themselves, Paul challenged them to survey their own congregation and realize that most of them came not from the upper classes, but from the lowly of the world. Paul attacked the pride that had caused schisms by comparing humans to God (1:20–25), then by comparing the church to the world around them (1:26–31). Both arguments display the greatness of God's wisdom in saving the insignificant of the world so that none have a basis for boasting.

1:27 God's plan of salvation does not conform to the world's priorities. In fact, it seems foolish. Yet in reality, eternal salvation is more valuable than all the fame, wealth, and success pursued by the world.

1:28 base … despised: Paul's use of these two terms for the slave class would capture the attention of his readers in Corinth, where many slaves lived. the things which are not: No doubt many of the Corinthian believers were people who did not count in the eyes of the world but had found grace in God's eyes.

1:29–31 God uses what is considered foolish and despised in this world to reveal His truth, so that He alone will receive the glory. Otherwise, the powerful would boast that they had found the truth. Instead, God sent His Son to become a humble carpenter and to die in the most despicable way, on a cross. Jesus' life and death reveals God and His wisdom. Since Christ not only imparts wisdom but also righteousness, the Christian cannot boast, except in the Lord.

The Message, Not the Messenger

One of the main problems facing the first-century Corinthian church was division. When Paul wrote to Corinth, the church was divided into at least four factions, each of them aligned with one of four prominent Christian leaders. One group identified itself with the apostle Paul. The members of this faction may have been attracted by Paul's emphasis on his ministry to the Gentiles. A second group identified itself with Apollos, one of Paul's fellow missionaries. He may have attracted a following because of his eloquent speaking abilities (Acts 18:24–28). A third group identified itself with Cephas, another name for the apostle Peter. This group may have been mostly of Jewish background. A fourth group identified itself specifically with Christ. While on the surface it might seem that this group was the "godly" contingent of the Corinthian church, this may not have been the case. Paul does not commend any of the groups, not even the "I am of Christ" faction, suggesting that all of their professed allegiances were causing division and dissension in that church.

Paul uses three rhetorical questions, each expecting a negative response, to show the absurdity of the Corinthian divisions. "Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were you baptized in the name of Paul?" Paul pointed out that in the act of baptism, a person identifies himself or herself with Christ, period. Baptism does not align the believer with any human leader or with any faction of Christianity, but with the Lord Himself. The Corinthians, who prided themselves on their wisdom and understanding, had misconstrued this truth. They had begun to identify themselves with the men who had performed the baptisms rather than with Jesus Himself.

We might be tempted to write off this problem, attributing it to "those silly, immature Corinthians," if it were not for the fact that the tendency to exalt dynamic leaders is still prevalent today. Witty, engaging Christian speakers and vibrant, charismatic spiritual leaders still have the power to mesmerize and motivate believers today. And there is nothing inherently wrong with such power. The danger comes when the speaker or leader, and not the message, becomes the focus of attention.

Christian speakers and leaders are merely vessels through whom God's Word is communicated. Exalting them for the message they proclaim is a misunderstanding of their purpose. Put simply, it's the message, not the messenger.

As believers today, we must guard ourselves against identifying too closely with human leaders or placing too much emphasis on them. Our loyalty and identification belong only to Jesus Christ and His message.

2:1–5 Paul continued his illustration of the futility of human wisdom by using his own ministry in Corinth as an example. Paul's preaching, by human standards, was unimpressive (2:1), but it was the vehicle of God's Spirit to save the Corinthians. Paul's obvious weakness had moved his readers to trust not in Paul, but in God.

2:1, 2 excellence of speech or of wisdom: Paul did not rely on his eloquence or on Greek wisdom to convince his listeners. Instead, he gave the testimony of God which had not been explained before, but which was being revealed by the Holy Spirit (vv. 10–14). The focal point of Paul's preaching was Jesus Christ.

2:3–5 Whereas the Corinthians gloried in their strength, their wealth, and their gifts, Christ was glorified in His humility and death. Paul wanted to model Christ's humility by presenting his "weaknesses." Then the "strength" of the gospel message could be clearly seen. My speech probably refers to the way Paul spoke; my preaching probably refers to the content of his message. not with persuasive words … but in demonstration of the Spirit: Even though Paul had many strengths of his own (Phil. 3:4–9), he wanted to be counted among those who relied on God's strength. Rather than using the rhetoric of the day to win converts, he gave a straightforward message. power of God: Miraculous signs had sometimes accompanied Paul's preaching (2 Cor. 12:12; 1 Thess. 1:5; Heb. 2:3, 4). Such signs were intended to magnify God, not the human speaker.

Is Christianity a Crutch for the Weak?

Is Christianity just another crutch for people who can't make it on their own? In one sense, yes. "Those who are well have no need of a physician," Jesus said, "but those who are sick. I have not come to call the righteous, but the sinners, to repentance" (Luke 5:31, 32). Jesus bypasses those who pretend to be invincible, those who think they have it all together. Instead He reaches out to those who know that something is wrong, that their lives are "sick" with "illnesses" such as greed, lust, cruelty, and selfishness.

Jesus knows that no one is spiritually healthy. No one is righteous enough to stand before a holy God. That's why He came into this world, to restore people to God. The good news is that Christ gives us the power to overcome sin and the ways it pulls us down time after time.

What happens to the "weak" who avail themselves of this "crutch"? Consider Mother Teresa, who emerged from an insignificant nunnery to love the helpless and homeless of Calcutta and became a worldwide symbol of compassion. Or consider Alexander Solzhenitsyn, a forgotten political prisoner rotting away in the gulag system of Stalinist Russia. Surrendering himself to Jesus, he gained renewed strength to challenge a totalitarian regime on behalf of human dignity and freedom.

These are but two examples from the millions who have thrown away the self-styled crutches on which they used to limp along the road of life, opting instead for the seasoned wood of the cross of Christ which has transformed their weakness into strength.

In one sense, Christianity is a crutch for the weak. But those who dismiss it for that reaon usually do so to deny their own inadequacies. They use that excuse as a way to evade the claims God has on their lives. They cannot accept that He takes wounded, fractured people and makes them whole.

2:6 among those who are mature: After having heard eloquent addresses by men like Apollos, the Corinthians may have viewed Paul's message as elementary or unpolished. Paul assured the Corinthians that he was imparting wisdom—instruction that mature Christians would appreciate. rulers of this age: In some passages Paul used the word rulers to refer to spiritual beings (Eph. 6:12; Col. 2:15); here he referred to earthly rulers, the Roman and Jewish leaders who presided over Jesus' crucifixion. If these rulers had been among the wise, they would have worshiped the Lord instead of crucifying Him. coming to nothing: People look at beauty, wealth, and power as greatly desirable. But all earthly splendor will be rendered meaningless and worthless by death and the coming of God's judgment (Luke 16:19–29; 2 Pet. 3:10–13).

2:7 The mystery that Paul referred to here is defined in Rom. 16:25, 26 as "revelation … kept secret since the world began, but that now has been made manifest." The message was hidden, known only to God, until He chose to reveal it (Eph. 3:1–11). This is in contrast to the teachings of the Gnostics, a group of false religious teachers who would infiltrate the early church (1 John 2:18–27). They claimed that there existed a body of secret knowledge that was only available to those initiated into an inner circle of spiritual teachers.

2:8 Lord of glory: Though Jesus emptied Himself of His majesty when He became human, He remained fully equal with the Father.

2:9–12 through His Spirit: Only the Holy Spirit could reveal the truths of God (2 Pet. 1:19–21). knows … know: The first verb refers to innate knowledge; the second refers to experiential knowledge. We could never have discovered the mysteries of God or the benefits of Christ's death by ourselves. But we can know them by experience because they have been freely given to us by God.

2:13 the Holy Spirit teaches: Paul emphasized that the intellectuals of this world could not teach the knowledge he was giving to the Corinthian believers. Note that the Spirit did not simply dictate words to Paul and the other apostles; He taught them. The apostles related with their own vocabulary and style what they had learned from the Spirit. comparing spiritual things with spiritual: These words are difficult to translate and interpret. The Greek term translated comparing may also mean "to combine" or "to interpret." The two references to spiritual may mean interpreting spiritual truths to spiritual persons, or else combining spiritual truths with spiritual words. The latter seems better. In other words, the phrase teaches that the spiritual truths of God are combined with the spiritual vocabulary of the apostles (2 Pet. 1:20, 21; 2 Tim. 3:16).

2:14–16 natural man: The natural person does not have the Spirit of God, in contrast to the Christian who does have the Spirit (15:44–46).

Receive here means “to welcome.” This verb does not pertain to discovering the meaning of a passage, but applying the meaning to life.

IN CONTEXT

Judging All Things

Paul's claim about judging all things (1 Cor. 2:15) sounds rather presumptuous. Is he urging believers to become moral policemen, passing judgment on everyone and everything around us?

Yes and no. Paul was challenging the spiritually immature believers at Corinth to grow up by applying spiritual discernment to the world around them. In this passage he mentions three categories of people: • natural (2:14), those without Christ, still living in the lost condition in which they were born; • spiritual (2:15), believers in Christ who have been born of the Spirit and in whom the Spirit of God lives and is producing growth; and • carnal (3:1), believers who remain immature in the faith because they don't allow the Spirit to work in their lives.

Spiritual people "judge" all things that come their way (2:15) in the sense of scrutinizing, examining, and investigating spiritual value and implications. This is not something that we should do merely as individuals, but also corporately with other believers. For example, in the workplace Christians in various occupations need to band together to explore how the faith applies to particular vocations. By analyzing work situations in light of Scripture, we can discern what the issues are and how we might respond with Christlikeness.

"Judging all things" has nothing to do with damning others, but with recognizing and doing what God would want. Instead of pride, it calls for humility, since God will be the final Judge of everything we do (2 Cor. 5:10).

3:1 Paul says he cannot speak to them as spiritual but as to carnal. How can a person be spiritual and yet carnal? Observe that the specific terms carnal and natural do not speak to the same truth. The natural person (2:14) is devoid of the Spirit of God. The carnal person is not equated with the natural person but with a babe in Christ. The person has not attained spiritual maturity but is considered in union with Christ. The carnal person is spiritual in the sense of having the Spirit of God but is not living consistently or maturely. This is often the experience with Christians today, but it was equally the problem of many Christians in the first century (Heb. 5:11–14).

3:2 fed … milk: Paul did not expect the Corinthians to be mature in Christ at the time of their conversion. By placing their faith in Christ, they had been justified. They had been united with Him and his death on the Cross (Rom. 6:3–5), and the Spirit of God had come to live in them (2:12; Rom. 8:9). They were considered righteous before God because of Jesus' righteousness. Thus, when Paul first established the church at Corinth he taught them as new converts, as those justified. Yet he expected them to grow in their faith—that is, become sanctified. The behavior of the Christians in Corinth should have begun to line up with their righteous position in Christ.

3:3, 4 for you are still carnal: An immature Christian naturally lacks many Christian traits, but no one should expect this condition to last. Paul was surprised that the Corinthians had not yet grown into spiritual maturity or become able to distinguish between good and evil (Heb. 5:14).

Who Gets the Credit?

Paul pointed out that the work of planting the church at Corinth was a joint venture between himself, Apollos, and the Lord (1 Cor. 3:5–8). Actually, many others were involved as well. But the point was that cooperation, not competition, is what God desires.

Paul was speaking about the start-up of a church, but the principles apply in the workplace as well. An attitude of competition worries about who gets the credit for success, which is really a selfish concern. By contrast, cooperative efforts over time generally result in achievements far greater than what any individual could do in isolation. That's because the skill, insight, and energy in an organization's work force have enormous potential. But that potential will never be realized if everyone's chief objective is to take credit for results.

3:5–10 Paul had planted, or started, the church in Corinth; Apollos had watered it—had a significant ministry there after Paul left. But both men were only servants through whom God worked. The ones who plant and water have nothing to boast about because God gives the increase: Only God draws unbelievers to Himself. It is our responsibility to do our job no matter what the results, for God will reward us for our efforts and the quality of our work (9:24–27). We are like tools in the hands of the craftsman. As long as we are usable, God will use us. When we cease this function, we could be put on the shelf or disqualified (1 Cor. 9:27). Paul develops four conclusions from his observation in v. 6: (1) We are God's servants, helpers of Christ who do our assigned tasks. Without Him we can do nothing (John 15:5). Even the faith of those who believe through us is a gift from God. (2) The servants in their diverse tasks are really one. They are not competing with one another. They are all doing the work of God who gives the increase. (3) Even though the servants are one, each person's reward will be based on the quality of work done. The kind of material used will determine the kind of reward one gets. (4) Paul concludes that the church is God's building to be worked on by God's fellow workers (that is, Paul, Apollos, and other ministers, v. 9).

3:11–15 Paul had established the church at Corinth on the foundation of Christ. gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, straw: These building materials refer to the quality of work done by the Corinthians, and possibly also to their motivations or the kinds of doctrines they taught. The Day speaks of the time when Christ will judge the merits of His servants' work (2 Cor. 5:10), not whether they receive forgiveness of sin. Likewise, fire does not refer to the "eternal fire" of damnation (Rev. 20:10) but to the evaluation of believers' works (Rev. 2:18, 19; 3:18; 22:12). Fire proves the quality of gold, but it consumes wood, hay, and stubble. Some "good work" is actually self-centered aggrandizement. The true value of such "service" will become obvious to all in the day of God's judgment (Rev. 3:17, 18).

3:16, 17 Do you not know: This phrase, found in nine other places in 1 Cor. (5:6; 6:2, 3, 9, 15, 16, 19; 9:13, 24), always introduces an indisputable statement. temple: There are two words translated temple in the NT. One refers to the temple building and all its courts; the other refers strictly to the Most Holy Place where no one but the high priest could go. Paul uses the latter term to describe the local church, in whom God dwells. Unlike 6:19, where the word temple refers to the individual believer, and Eph. 2:21, where the word speaks of the church universal, these verses speak of the local church as God's temple. God takes very seriously our actions in the church. destroy: Any person who disrupts and destroys the church by divisions, malice, and other harmful acts invites God's discipline (11:30–32).

3:18–23 The wisdom of this world does not coincide with God's wisdom, the foolishness of Christ crucified (1:18–25). Paul quotes from Job 5:13 and Ps. 94:11 to urge the members of the Corinthian church to humble themselves. all things are yours: The Stoic literature of the time, which the Corinthians would have known, often spoke of the wise man as possessing everything. Everything God has done in the church, and in the entire universe, benefits all believers. There is no place for foolish boasting or competition among Christians.

(Gk. mataios) (3:20; 15:17; Titus 3:9; James 1:26) Strong’s #3152: This word means “pointless” and “purposeless.” The NT writers, especially Paul, used it to depict the meaninglessness that pervades the thought life of fallen human beings. Paul characterizes the “thoughts of the wise” as being futile (3:20), and he describes the Gentiles as living “in the futility of their minds, having their understanding darkened” because they are “alienated from the life of God” (Eph. 4:17, 18). The ideas of the unregenerate are futile and aimless because they lack divine insight; they produce a life of purposelessness and ineffectiveness. Salvation from such futility comes from the indwelling Spirit of Christ in believers (Rom. 8:10, 11, 26, 27).

3:21–23 let no one boast in men: This is the conclusion of ch. 3. The Corinthians had seriously limited themselves by boasting in different teachers, when Christ is the source of all things. Earthly teachers are simply God’s servants for the benefit of His people (v. 5). Life and death belong to the Christian who lives and dies victoriously by the power of Christ (15:55–57). In Him we have nothing to fear from things present or things to come.

4:1–21 These verses escalate the discussion of workers as servants of Christ. First Corinthians 4:1–5 states that those called servants of Christ are also accounted as stewards or managers who have been committed a trust. Thus, we should not compare ourselves with other servants. Our accountability is to Christ.

4:1 Servants had no unique position, but stewards did. A steward was a slave who administered all the affairs of his master's household, though he himself owned nothing (compare the testimony of the early church in Acts 4:32). Joseph held such a position in the house of Potiphar (Gen. 39:2–19). As stewards, believers manage the message and ministry God has entrusted to them.

4:2–5 each one's praise will come from God: A steward was not to worry about the evaluations of those around him or even his own self-assessment; he needed only to please his master. Similarly, while believers can benefit from the constructive evaluations of fellow believers, their ultimate Judge is the Lord Himself. Since God is the Judge, we should be careful not to make any premature evaluations of others.

4:6–13 Paul upbraided the Corinthians for their immense pride (6). He reminded them that they boasted of gifts which God had graciously distributed (vv. 7, 8). Then, almost in a sarcastic manner, he contrasted their "greatness" with the servant attitude of Apollos and himself (vv. 9–13). The very men they exalted to the point of causing schisms in the church (1:11–17) viewed themselves as destitute servants of God (vv. 10–13).

4:6, 7 The Greek term translated learn is related to the word translated disciple in Matt. 28:19. It implies the use of a skill and not just knowledge. The Corinthians knew about humility, so Paul called on them to become humble. Greeks considered humility to be a fault, a characteristic of slaves. To the Christian, however, it exemplifies the attitude of Christ (Phil. 2:5–8). in us: Paul presented himself and Apollos as models to follow (v. 16; 11:1). what is written: This word is often used to introduce a quotation of the OT (Rom. 14:11). Paul was exhorting the Corinthians not to go beyond the teachings of Scripture. Then they would avoid the pride and divisions that were fracturing their church. A true minister of God's Word will use Scripture to unify and strengthen the church. Only those who want to exalt themselves will misuse Scripture and thus weaken and divide the church.

4:8 The Corinthians thought that Christians were to be full, rich, and to reign in the present. But Paul knew that we must go through trials now if we are to reign when Christ returns. I could wish: That you were indeed involved in the reign of Christ and that we might be united in His true kingdom.

4:9, 10 Spectacle alludes to the public executions carried out by the Romans. In these executions condemned men were brought into the coliseum, where they were tormented and killed by wild animals as cheering crowds looked on. Paul pointed out that the whole world and the angels were witnesses to the humiliation of God's servants. With biting sarcasm Paul contrasted the Corinthians' lofty evaluation of themselves with the world's evaluation of him. Paul knew that true strength is found in understanding our weakness and Christ's sufficiency (2 Cor. 12:7–10; Phil. 4:11–13).

4:11–13 Paul lists the hardships he had suffered in Christ's ministry, both physical challenges and verbal abuse (2 Cor. 11:22–30).

4:14 Although the Corinthians should have been ashamed of their conduct, Paul's aim in writing was to warn them of the serious consequences of their actions. As my beloved children emphasizes the responsibility of parents to practice tough love in appropriate discipline.

4:15 instructors … fathers: Paul used these two terms to differentiate between his role and the role of the Corinthian teachers, slaves who took care of their masters' children. Paul was the Corinthians' spiritual father. He had final responsibility for them and the right to command them to follow his example.

4:16 Paul urged his readers to imitate him as he followed Christ (11:1). The word refers to the way a student would follow a teacher or the way an actor would play a role (11:1).

4:17 For some reason Paul could not come immediately to Corinth, but he had confidence in Timothy to teach the Corinthians properly. Timothy was already doing what Paul hoped his readers would begin to practice: following Paul's good example.

4:18–20 Some people in Corinth, probably the instructors who had caused divisions (v. 15), acted as though Paul would never return to hold them accountable for their actions. puffed up: These people were conceited and prone to boasting. The kingdom of God here does not refer to the future reign of Christ, but to Christ's present rule in the hearts of His people. This reality guaranteed that Paul would have the power to expose and discipline those who afflicted the Corinthian church.

4:21 Paul uses the same Greek word for rod here that Luke uses to describe the instrument that was used to beat Paul and Silas (Acts 16:22–24). The term also is used figuratively of Christ's authority to judge (Rev. 19:15). God had given Paul authority to punish the agitators in Corinth, though he preferred not to use that power.

5:1–13 Paul has just concluded a lengthy segment dealing with the divisions within the Corinthian church (1:10—4:21). Now he moves into the problem of incest in the church and the failure of the Corinthians to deal with it.

5:1 The sexual immorality of incest was forbidden by OT law (Lev. 18:8; Deut. 22:30) and by Roman law. Paul used the phrase his father's wife instead of "his mother" probably to indicate that the woman was the offender's stepmother. The omission of discipline for the woman implies that she was not a believer. The church is responsible for disciplining only its members, not unbelievers.

5:2 puffed up: The Corinthians had a twisted view of grace that caused them to be proud of their tolerance of the sexual offender. They believed that because God's grace is limitless, the freedom that every Christian enjoys is also limitless.

5:3–5 Paul displays the apostolic power he spoke of earlier (4:20, 21). He had already judged the sin and gave the church his authoritative command to remove the man from the congregation. When a person is living in sin, he or she is open game for Satan.

5:5 Destruction of the flesh may refer to God's turning the sexual offender over to Satan for physical affliction or even physical death. After being separated from the spiritual protection of the church, ideally the offender would recognize his sin, repent, and return to the church. All church discipline has restoration as its ultimate goal.

Danger from Within

Evil can never be remedied by ignoring or hiding it. In fact, covering it up is the worst that can happen, for like yeast, evil does its terrible work from within (1 Cor. 5:6–8). The same is true of believers who live in consistent disobedience to God's expressed will. Their behavior will badly infect the larger groups of which they are a part. It can even lead to a distorted perception of sin in which the group tolerates or even approves of disobedience among its own members yet condemns outsiders for the very same activity (Rom. 1:32; 1 Cor. 5:9, 10).

Paul challenged the Corinthians to confront the subtle deterioration they had allowed within their congregation (5:5). However, once the perpetrator had repented, they were then to seek his restoration. Even though corrective activity among believers may be severe, confrontation should always be to promote healing rather than to expel wrongdoers (compare Matt. 18:15–22; 2 Cor. 10:8). There are no throwaway people in the kingdom of God.

5:6–8 The backdrop for this passage is the Passover (Ex. 12), when the Israelites removed yeast from their homes in preparation for the feast. The removal of leaven was a reminder of the Israelites' quick departure from Egypt. They did not have time to wait for leavened bread to rise. The point here is that a little leaven has tremendous impact or influence on whatever it is in. The Corinthian church was tolerating sexual sin. This leaven of sin, though small in size, was dangerous, because it could spread through the church. Like cancer, sin demands drastic surgery.

5:6 Like a tiny pinch of leaven spreading through a loaf of bread, unchallenged sin can soon contaminate the whole church. The sexual offender was guilty of sin, but the whole congregation was also guilty of ignoring the man's disobedience and failing to hold him accountable. Left unchecked, this sin could have caused many new believers to commit sexual immorality.

5:7 Jewish people were required to sweep all leaven out of their houses in preparation for the Passover (Ex. 12:15). The leaven here symbolizes the powerful influence of sin.

5:8 The feast is a figure of speech for Christ. As Israel was to remove all leaven from the celebration of the Passover, so the Corinthians were not to contaminate their relationship with Christ with any malice or wickedness.

5:9–13 Paul here corrects a misunderstanding arising out of his previous letter (v. 9). He had commanded the Corinthians to withdraw themselves from sexually immoral people. In this letter, Paul explains that he was not speaking of the pagan culture around them. If they withdrew totally they would be unable to function in the world. Instead, he was talking about the immorality in their midst. They should judge the sin among themselves, while still reaching out to the lost in Corinth.

5:9 My epistle refers to an earlier letter from Paul to the Corinthians that no longer survives.

5:10 out of the world: Christians are called to influence the world, not run away from it (Matt. 5:13–16). They are agents of God to carry the light of Jesus Christ into a dark world (Phil. 2:14–16; 1 Pet. 2:11, 12).

5:11 not even to eat with such a person: Eating together is a key part of fellowship and closeness with others. The Corinthians were not to have fellowship with those who claimed to be Christians but whose lives were dominated by sin.

5:12, 13 do you not judge … God judges: The church's responsibility is to discipline its members while trusting the Lord to judge the world (Matt. 13:30).

6:1–11 In these verses, Paul instructs the Corinthians to stop taking their personal disputes into the pagan courts. The Corinthians had been carrying their conflicts to the Roman courts and thus were making a mockery of Christianity by feuding in public. Their inability to settle personal disputes illustrated the sharp divisions in the church (1:10–17). Paul wanted to bring home several important ideas to these Corinthians: Public litigation is a disgrace to a Christian congregation (v. 1). Personal disputes should be settled within the church (vv. 2–6). The presence of contentions indicates spiritual defeat (vv. 7, 8). All unrighteousness, such as the disputes, should have been vanquished when the Corinthians became believers (vv. 9–11).

6:2 do you not know: Paul uses this phrase six times in this chapter (vv. 3, 9, 15, 16, 19) to introduce truths that the Corinthians should have known. This phrase must have deflated the pride of a church infatuated by its own knowledge and wisdom.

6:3 Believers will participate in judging fallen angels (Rev. 19:19, 20; 20:10). Paul suggested that if the Corinthians were going to be judging with Christ in His future kingdom (Matt. 19:28), then surely they had the means to settle their own personal differences.

6:4–6 Those who are least esteemed refers to judges in civil courts. The Corinthians, though they had the ability to judge the issues themselves, took their disputes to pagan court for the judges there to decide.

6:7, 8 cheated … cheat: In all of their bickering, the Corinthians made frivolous and even dishonest charges against one another. Paul suggested that it was better to be cheated by one of these dishonest people than to dishonor one's Christian witness before pagans.

6:9, 10 The kingdom of God here seems to refer to a future time when God will rule the earth in righteousness (Matt. 6:10; Luke 11:2). do not be deceived: Tragically, Christians sometimes deceive themselves into thinking that God does not require them to live righteously. Paul emphasizes that the kinds of people listed in these verses will not inherit or possess the kingdom of God.

6:11 In this verse, Paul uses three terms to describe the conversion of the Corinthians. The tense of all three verbs indicates an action in the past that is complete. Washed means spiritually cleansed by God. Sanctified means set apart as God's people. Justified means declared righteous by God because of Christ's work on the Cross.

Freedom from the Tyranny of Things

As Christians we live under grace, not law. We enjoy a certain freedom of choice and commitment. But Paul reminds us that our choices and commitments, while freely made, do not always bring freedom (1 Cor. 6:12). Often they overpower us: we no longer possess our possessions—they possess us! We can be consumed by our jobs, our wealth, our houses, our hobbies, even our churches.

Are there any ways to manage this problem? Here are a few suggestions: • (1) Determine your limits. What can you actually handle? What is realistic?

• (2) Let time go by before making decisions and commitments. Sooner or later you need to decide, but very few choices are better made sooner than later.

• (3) Pay attention to agreement or disagreement with your spouse and/or a close friend or associate. There is wisdom in mutual decision making.

• (4) To manage the commitment you are taking on, what are we willing to give up? Taking on new responsibilities means trading one set of problems for another. Are we prepared for that?

• (5) Commit to giving away as well as taking on. That declares your freedom from the tyranny of things and responsibilities.

6:12–20 Paul moves from his discussion of the relationship of the Corinthians to the law courts to personal integrity in body and spirit. Paul tackled the issue of Christian liberty by addressing three Corinthian slogans that reflected their attitudes toward sexual sins (vv. 12, 13, 18). In the process he presented a greatly elevated concept of the human body as created by God the Father, redeemed at great price and service to Christ the Son, and made the temple of God by the indwelling Spirit. Thus, the triune God is involved in what we do with our bodies. We call the room where the church meets the “sanctuary.” Actually, we are God’s sanctuary—His temple. What a difference it would make if we lived with that realization. Our bodies are not garbage dumps. They are temples!

6:12 All things are lawful for me was a slogan the Corinthians had coined to justify their immoral behavior. Paul reminded the Corinthians that freedom from the ceremonial laws of Moses did not give them license to sin or indulge their own selfishness. This would only enslave them in the sin from which Jesus had freed them. under the power of any: The only power that should control us is the Holy Spirit. Sin should never dominate our lives because the Spirit empowers us to fight temptation.

6:13, 14 Foods for the stomach and the stomach for foods was another phrase the Corinthians used to justify their sinful lifestyles (v. 12). Food was gratifying and essential for life. When the Corinthians became hungry, they ate. Following the same logic, whenever the Corinthians craved sex, they indulged themselves. In their opinion any physical activity should not affect one's spiritual life, just as digesting food did not affect one's spirituality. The Corinthians' reasoning had two faults: (1) The stomach and the digestive process are in a sense no more than earthly and without function in eternity. But the body, through the resurrection power of Christ, is eternal. It has been sanctified by God to bring Him glory (v. 20). (2) While the stomach's purpose is to digest food, it is not the purpose of the body to commit immorality. Furthermore, by design God put restrictions on both eating and sexual activity. Eating to the point of gluttony and having wanton sex outside of marriage violate God's intent and are therefore sinful.

6:15–17 Believers' lives are greatly altered when they are joined to Christ. The union affects both the believer and Christ. When a believer commits immorality, he or she is dragging the union with Christ into the illicit relationship. By quoting Gen. 2:24, that the two … shall become one flesh, Paul illustrates the seriousness of sexual sin.

(Gk. naos) (3:16; 6:19; 2 Cor. 6:16; Eph. 2:21; Rev. 21:22) Strong’s #3485: This Greek word for temple refers more to the building itself than hieron, which was used to indicate the entire temple complex. Paul told the believers that each one of their bodies was a naos, a sanctuary for God (6:19). Paul also said that the church, as Christ’s body, is a spiritual temple for God (3:16, 17; 2 Cor. 6:16; Eph. 2:21). What a special privilege it is to be God’s spiritual dwelling place, both individually and corporately. The glory of God filled the tabernacle (Ex. 40:34) and the temple (1 Kin. 8:10, 11). Now the glory of God in the person of the Holy Spirit dwells within every believer (John 14:16, 17) and thus inhabits the entire church. In the New Jerusalem, there will be no need for a physical temple because God and the Lamb will be the eternal temple (Rev. 21:22).

6:18 Every sin that a man does is outside the body was another slogan used by the Corinthians to justify their immorality (vv. 12, 13). Paul pointed out that the opposite is true: sexual sin is done against the body, not outside of it. Paul exhorted the Corinthians to flee any temptation to indulge in sexual sin (Gen. 39:1–12).

6:19 The temple (3:16, 17) was the congregation of believers. The temple was recognized as the sacred dwelling place of God. The Shekinah glory of Yahweh filled the tabernacle (Ex. 40:34) and the temple (1 Kin. 8:10, 11). Now, the glory of God in the person of the Holy Spirit dwells within every believer (John 14:16, 17) and thus inhabits the entire church. The OT priests took great pains to maintain a pure sanctuary for God’s presence. Every Christian ought also to care diligently for his body, the temple of the Holy Spirit, in order to honor God and the church.

6:20 Bought at a price alludes to someone purchasing a slave at a slave auction. With His death Jesus Christ paid the cost to redeem us from our slavery to sin (Eph. 1:7; 1 Pet. 1:18, 19). While it is true that this is applicable to all people, even those who deny the Lord (2 Pet. 2:1), it has a very unique and special significance for the believer (compare 1 Pet. 2:9; 1 Tim. 4:10). Paul concludes with the imperative therefore, glorify God in your body. In other words, use your bodies in order that other people may see that you belong to God.

7:1 things of which you wrote to me: After addressing the problems reported by the people of Chloe's household (1:11), Paul began to answer questions that had been sent to him (7:1—14:40). It is good for a man not to touch a woman: There were two extreme positions in the Corinthian church. Both groups falsely separated the physical and the spiritual, believing that neither affected the other. One group was hedonistic. This group claimed that sin only had to do with the physical body, and that believers could sin in their body without any consequence to their spiritual lives. Paul corrects this misunderstanding in ch. 6. The other group believed that all things spiritual are good, and all things physical are bad, and that in order to be truly spiritual a person has to suppress every physical desire. Proponents of this view claimed that celibacy is the only proper lifestyle. Paul corrects their misunderstanding here and explains that while sexual relationships in marriage are good, he chose celibacy in his own personal situation.

7:2 Because of the rampant immorality in Corinth, Paul encouraged those who might be tempted to commit sexual sin to marry. It is better to develop a permanent relationship with a wife or husband than to lapse into sexual sin.

7:3–5 affection: Husbands and wives have a duty to maintain sexual relations with each other so that neither will be tempted by Satan to have sex outside of marriage.

7:6–9 I say this as a concession, not as a commandment: This brief clause reveals for us an important understanding of Paul's method of argument and also what we believers must consider as mandate over against option. If Paul had indicated this teaching was a commandment, we would have been under an obligation. The apostle Paul at times gave direct commands or spoke so directly to an issue that it is the teaching of the Lord. For example, 1 Cor. 11:28–34 provides commands of how things should be conducted at the Lord's Table. His teachings on gifts in 1 Cor. 12—14 are not mere opinion but apostolic truth. In v. 7 he stated his preference that the unmarried remain even as he is but recognized that God has different purposes and capabilities for His people. good: To ones who were married but now are widows, it is a good thing to be like Paul for this gives greater opportunity to work for Christ. On the other hand, he recognizes that few have the gift of self-control to refrain from sexual relationships. The good of v. 8 must be balanced with the teaching of Gen. 2:18 where God said it was “not good” for man to be alone. it is better to marry than to burn: Those who burn with passion should go ahead and marry rather than struggle with sexual passion.

Divorce and Remarriage

Jewish law permitted only the husband to initiate a divorce. Only under extreme circumstances could the wife request a court to compel a husband to divorce her. By contrast, Roman law viewed marriage as a matter of mutual consent, and so dissolved a marriage if either party requested it. Under Roman divorce, the children went to the father. Rapid remarriage was customary and society encouraged it (especially for young women), so the church congregation in Corinth probably included some new converts who had been remarried one or more times before their conversion.

Paul addressed the Christians who wanted to divorce spiritually incompatible spouses. Offering his own judgment, he contended that spiritual incompatibility did not provide adequate grounds for a divorce (1 Cor. 7:12–14]. In addition, by giving the command of "the Lord" (1 Cor. 7:10, 11), he seemed to cite Jesus' general prohibition of divorce (Mark 10:11, 12).

Ancient interpreters commonly qualified general principles, modifying or interpreting them to account for specific situations. In this manner Paul interprets Jesus' general principle as needing to be qualified for those who are divorced against their will. In cases in which an unbelieving mate deserted the marriage, Paul declared, the believer was "not under bondage" (7:15).

In using the phrase "not under bondage," Paul was echoing the exact language of ancient divorce contracts, which spoke of marriage as "binding" a woman to her husband and divorce as "loosing" or "freeing" a woman for remarriage. Such divorce terminology appears in Jewish texts, such as the Mishnah, and in actual first-century Jewish divorce contracts that have been recovered. Ancient readers would have understood "not under bondage" as Paul's permission for an abandoned person to remarry.

7:10–16 Paul turns from the concerns of celibate persons to those who are married. He speaks of the commands that Christ gave on the subject while on earth, along with insight that he has as an apostle of the Lord.

7:10, 11 not I but the Lord: When Christ was on earth, He told us not to divorce a spouse; instead of divorce, Paul uses the word translated depart, which refers to wives leaving their husbands. The idea is the same: a believing husband and wife should not leave each other. The further statement that if the couple divorced they were to remain unmarried is consistent with Jesus' teaching (Mark 10:9–12).

7:12, 13 I, not the Lord, say: Paul now presents a problem that was not addressed by Jesus. Sometimes a husband or wife would become a Christian, but the spouse would not. Paul exhorts the believer to remain married if the unbelieving spouse does not want to divorce.

7:14 Sanctified primarily means "set apart." Here the term refers to the special situation an unbelieving husband or wife enjoys when his or her spouse is a believer, being exposed to God's teachings. Unclean here probably means the opposite of sanctified. Children with one believing parent may learn about God and come to Christ.

7:15: If an unbeliever seeks to divorce a believing spouse, the Christian is not under bondage or obligation to continue the marriage. There is no conflict here between Paul's advice and that of our Lord in Matt. 5:32. The point is that the divine standard cannot be imposed upon the unregenerate. There is nothing the believer can do but submit to the divorce. The overriding principle is that God has called us to peace.

7:16 how do you know: The Greek grammar suggests that Paul asked the question expecting a negative answer. The promise given in 1 Pet. 3:1–6, however, reminds us that consistent obedience to God can make a skeptical spouse into a believing one.

7:17–24 so let him walk: This section develops the theme of faithfulness to the Christian calling rather than to social status. Whether you are slave or free—upper class or lower, powerful or powerless, married or single—is irrelevant; what matters is your calling from God (Col. 3:11).

7:25–40 I have no commandment from the Lord: Paul clearly distinguishes his words as an apostle from the words of Christ. virgins: This classification of the unmarried in the church is probably smaller than the one mentioned in v. 8, which included widows and those who had been married before. Though Paul is concerned with both celibate men and women, the attention here is on the women. Although the Greek term used in v. 25 could refer to either men or women, the other instances in this passage refer to women (vv. 28, 34, 36, 37). By the second century, the church had developed important offices for virgins, widows, and deaconesses. Since they were unencumbered with the duties of a wife, they could assist the pastors and deacons in baptizing, ministering to the sick, and other works of mercy.

7:26, 27 present distress: Paul saw turbulent days ahead for married Christians because in times of persecution, consideration for family can make it difficult to live out Christian convictions to the fullest extent. A virgin would have lesser family responsibilities and would not be deterred by the possibility of repercussions affecting her husband or children.

7:28–35 Paul does not want to be understood as prohibiting the marriage of virgins. Again, this is his preference, not an apostolic command. If the virgin or unmarried person should marry, they have not sinned. Even if they should marry, however, they should consider themselves similar to those who are unmarried as far as their dedication to God's work. He admonishes them not to get caught up in the world around them because it is only temporary.

IN CONTEXT

Women and Work in the Ancient World

Paul's observation that a married woman must care about "the things of the world" (1 Cor. 7:34) hints at the busy lives that first-century women lived, especially in the large cities of the Roman Empire.

The NT shows that women carried out a wide range of tasks: for example, drawing water, grinding grain, manufacturing tents, hosting guests, governing and influencing civic affairs, making clothes, teaching, prophesying and filling other spiritual functions, burying the dead, and doing the work of slaves, to name but a few. Additional evidence from the period reveals that women also served as wool workers, midwives, hairdressers, nurses, vendors, entertainers, political leaders, and even construction workers, among many other occupations.

If a woman was among the upper classes, she enjoyed relative economic security and social privileges. According to the Roman ideal, her role in society was to marry a citizen, produce legitimate heirs for him, and manage the household according to his orders. However, by the first century few families attained that ideal.

Wealthy women used slaves to perform such household tasks as cooking, making clothes, washing laundry, and caring for children. Slaves also functioned as nurses, midwives, hairdressers, stenographers, and secretaries, and it was common for a high-ranking slave to be designated the household manager.

Female slaves were not only considered to be household property, but sexual property as well. The master of the house could legally force a slave to have sex with him, or with anyone he chose. Any children that she bore became his property. In this way a citizen could increase his number of slaves.

Women who were former slaves, or freeborn, lacked the economic security of either the citizen or the slave. Nevertheless, many women sought to buy their way out of slavery. Some of these working-class women earned their living as vendors, selling fish, grain, vegetables, clothing, or perfume. Others became wet nurses, and some chose to become entertainers or prostitutes—occupations that were considered beneath the dignity of respectable women.

7:36–38 One interpretation of this passage is that any man refers to the father of an unmarried virgin. She is past the flower of youth indicates that the virgin is approaching an age at which marriage would be unlikely. Under these circumstances, it would be perfectly acceptable for the father to give her in marriage. A second interpretation suggests that the any man of v. 36 refers to a fiance who is maintaining a celibate state with a virgin but is having difficulty doing so. In this view, the Greek term otherwise translated "she is past the flower of youth" is translated "he has strong passions." If the man has difficulty in controlling his sex drive, he should marry (v. 9). On the other hand, if he can control himself (has power over his own will), he should maintain his celibacy (v. 8). having no necessity: If the man can control himself and keep himself from immoral action, he should stay single. On the other hand, if the man's will is weak, he should go ahead and marry.

7:39, 40 bound by law: This passage is similar to Rom. 7:2, where Paul used marriage to illustrate obligation to the law. Here he emphasizes that marriage should be lifelong. In a case where a marriage partner has died, the only restriction concerning remarriage is for the person to marry a fellow Christian. Even though remarriage is permitted, Paul still believes that it is wiser to remain unmarried (v. 8). I also have the Spirit of God: The Holy Spirit enabled Paul not only to speak with apostolic authority, but also with spiritual wisdom.

8:1–13 Chapter 8 answers their question on Christian liberties that goes through 11:1, with the first subject being meat sacrificed to idols. In ancient Corinth, when a person went to the marketplace to buy food, among the meat for sale was some which had been offered to a pagan god. Supposedly, a portion of a sacrifice would be taken by the god with the remainder to be eaten by the priests. What they did not eat would be taken to the marketplace. A Christian buying meat might inadvertently be eating meat offered to a false god. Two schools of thought developed at Corinth on this question. The first perspective was that such meat was tainted by the pagan worship, while the other view held that this meat could be eaten by believers.

8:1 We know that we all have knowledge appears to have been a slogan used by certain Corinthian believers as an arrogant statement against weaker Christians. The weaker Christians believed that eating food offered to idols was a sin. Other Corinthian believers thought that such concerns were ridiculous. They argued that if the idols were worthless, then the meat offered to them was fine to eat. Paul agreed that food offered to idols was not contaminated, but he wanted the knowledgeable Christians not to flaunt their enlightened point of view. Knowledge puffs up, but love edifies: This is one of Paul's five attacks on the arrogance of some of the church members at Corinth (4:6, 18, 19; 5:2). These people belittled their weaker brothers and sisters with their knowledge. They had missed the point. They should have been using their knowledge to help other believers in the church.

8:2 We know nothing about God as we ought unless our knowledge leads us to love others.

8:3–6 The Corinthian believers who claimed to have knowledge readily admitted that an idol is nothing (Is. 37:19; Jer. 16:20; Gal. 4:8) and that there is only one God (Deut. 6:4). But Paul did not dismiss the idea of idols altogether because though these gods are not real, they exist in the minds of those who worship them (10:20).

8:7–13 The knowledgeable believers were correct in their view of idols, but it did not matter. If the weaker brothers and sisters saw other believers eating food offered to idols, they might also eat, in violation of their own conscience. To go against the conscience was in fact sinning. By their knowledge the stronger believers were causing the weaker believers to stumble. Paul exhorted the strong believers to show love to the weaker ones by refraining from offending them.

(Gk. exousia) (7:37; 8:9; 9:18; Matt. 7:29; Rom. 9:21) Strong’s #1849: The Greek term usually denotes “right,” “authority,” or even “privilege.” In certain contexts, as this one, it connotes the freedom to exercise one’s right. Specifically, Paul was addressing the Corinthians’ right to eat meat that may have come from pagan temples. To be clear, the eating of sacrificial food—the cultic meals in pagan temples—was censured by Paul because it was understood that the participants in those meals were uniting themselves to demons (10:19–21). However, Paul had no problem with those who purchased food that had been left over from these events and that was later sold in the marketplace. In his judgment if they ate it at home they were not participating in idolatry. They had the liberty—or right—to eat this food in good conscience. The exception was if they would be destroying a weaker believer by doing so. For the sake of such believers, one should abstain.

9:1, 2 Am I not an apostle: Paul substantiated his apostleship with two arguments: (1) he had seen the resurrected Lord (Acts 1:21, 22), and (2) the church at Corinth was his work in the Lord, a seal of his apostleship.

9:3–18 Paul had the right to eat and drink whatever he wanted, to have a wife, and to receive wages for his ministry. But he did not exercise these rights. Is it oxen God is concerned about: God requires that ministers should be paid for their work just as He requires beasts of burden to be compensated for theirs. those who preach the gospel should live from the gospel: To support ministers of the gospel is commanded by God. Even as the priests in Israel were supported for their work, NT ministers were to be provided for as well (1 Tim. 5:17, 18).

9:19–23 I have made myself a servant to all, that I might win the more: Paul put his ministry of the gospel above his personal desires. He was willing to conform to the customs of other people, whether Jew or Gentile, in order to bring them to Christ. For example, in order to relate to the Jews in Jerusalem he made a Nazirite vow in the temple (Acts 21:23, 24). Around those who were under the Law—the Jews—Paul obeyed the Law. Around those who were outside the Law—the Gentiles—Paul did not observe Jewish custom. Paul clarified this, however, lest anyone misunderstand his actions. He obeyed God's law through obedience toward Christ (v. 21). This was a broader law than the Mosaic legislation; this was the fulfillment of Christ's will (11:1; Rom. 13:8; Gal. 6:2).

9:24–26 Paul had a passion to fulfill his ministry at all costs. This was similar to the kind of commitment that goes into preparing for athletic competition. I run thus: not with uncertainty: Paul had a clearly defined goal and knew that perseverance was needed to achieve it. In order to prepare properly for the race or boxing match, he knew he had to force himself to maintain the strenuous, consistent practice needed for success.

9:27 I myself should become disqualified: The Greek word for disqualified means "disapproved after testing." Although some have cited this verse as evidence that Christians can lose their salvation, this clause most likely does not refer to salvation. A careful distinction should be made between the prize and the gift. The free gift of justification cannot be the result of good works (Rom. 4:1–8). However, the prize or crown is the reward for endurance and suffering for the cause of Christ (Phil. 1:29; 2 Tim. 2:12).

IN DEPTH

The Race for the Crown

What does it take to be a champion in a given sport? For one, it is necessary to have a dedication to succeed no matter what the cost. A passion for the game is certainly essential, as is a single-minded determination to accomplish the task at hand. A willingness to train incessantly is also required. And a burning desire for the trophy or prize awarded to the one who wins is an absolute must.

In his letter to the Corinthians, the apostle Paul drew a direct comparison between the Christian life and an athletic competition. This comparison would have had immediate resonance with Paul's Corinthian readers. Corinth was the site of the Isthmian games, a great athletic festival that was very similar to the Olympic games. Contestants in the Isthmian games endured ten months of mandatory training. Anyone who failed to complete this training was barred from competing in the games. The highlight of the Isthmian games was a great endurance race. It was this race that Paul used as an illustration to depict the faithful Christian life.

In the Isthmian games, several athletes competed for one prize; there could be only one winner. In contrast, the Christian life offers the opportunity for many people to be winners. The winner of the Isthmian games received a pine wreath crown. Those who faithfully complete the Christian life, on the other hand, will receive an imperishable crown.

Paul illustrates the "champion" mindset required to faithfully complete the Christian life with his statements, "I run thus: not with uncertainty" and "Thus I fight: not as one who beats the air" (9:26). Paul was not an aimless competitor. He had a clearly defined goal. Like an athlete preparing for a race or a boxing match, Paul knew that he had to discipline his body; he had to force himself to maintain the strenuous, consistent practice needed for success.

The race that Paul prepared himself for, the race that all Christians need to prepare themselves for, was the calling of God. Paul taught that Christians are rewarded for the calling that God gives them. Paul had an apostolic ministry for which he sacrificed all things. He knew that if he was faithful to his calling he would receive a reward from the Lord for his service (4:2). Paul also knew that if he ignored or treated lightly his mission he would not receive from God the victor's crown for service. Having seen some of his close friends forsake their calling (2 Tim. 4:10), Paul recognized that the loss of the victor's crown was a very real possibility for any believer, regardless of his or her standing in the Christian community. The apostle's overwhelming passion was to fulfill his ministry at all costs, to stay faithful to the "fight" (9:26) to the very end. In Paul's last letter, written shortly before his death, we discover that he accomplished his goal (2 Tim. 4:6–8).

Paul's spiritual training was the very best available. Yet he did not assume that he would automatically persevere to the end of the race. He continued to discipline himself, to fight, and to follow his calling from God. In doing so, Paul provided an ideal model for all Christians striving to become champions.

10:1–5 Paul places the story of Israel's unfaithfulness to God after his exhortation to the Corinthians to persevere in God's work. He emphasizes the blessings the Israelites enjoyed in the desert. They all had the protection and guidance of God. They all experienced God's miraculous deliverance. They all identified with their spiritual head, Moses. They all enjoyed the bread from heaven. Finally they all drank the water God provided. Paul's key point is that although all of the Israelites received these wonderful blessings from God, most failed to please Him.

10:1 For the ancient Israelites under the cloud in the wilderness, the cloud served two functions: (1) It provided protection (Ex. 14:19, 20), fire by night in the cold desert and shade by day from the blistering sun. (2) It guided the people through the desert (Ex. 13:21). all passed through the sea: Every Israelite who left Egypt in the Exodus experienced the deliverance of God at the Red Sea.

10:2 all were baptized into Moses: The acts of God in the cloud and in the sea joined the people with their spiritual head, Moses.

10:3–5 the same spiritual food … the same spiritual drink: They all followed the same God and the same laws (John 4:13, 14; 6:32–35).

10:6–10 our examples: The discipline of God exercised against the disobedient Israelites should serve notice to Christians that God will punish His people's sin.

10:6 The first failure of the ancient Israelites was that they lusted, or "craved." They were not satisfied with God's provision but looked back to the provision that they had in Egypt (Num. 11:4–34).

10:7, 8 The ancient Israelites were notorious idolaters. Even though the true God had brought them out of Egypt, they insisted on worshiping lifeless idols. Furthermore, the ancient Israelites engaged in sexual immorality, a sin that also plagued the Corinthians (5:1; 6:18). twenty-three thousand: The account in Numbers gives the figure twenty-four thousand (Num. 25:6–9). There are several possible reasons for the difference. Some have suggested that Paul's number reflects the number that died in one day, while the Numbers account may be a record of all who died in the plague. Another explanation may be that the Numbers account includes the death of the leaders (Num. 25:4) while Paul's figures do not.

10:9 tempt Christ: Apparently this phrase relates to the Israelites' questioning of the plan and purpose of God while on their way to Canaan (Num. 21:4–6).

10:10 The ancient Israelites complained against their God-given leaders so much that many were destroyed, or put to death (Num. 16:41–49).

10:11 as examples: Paul emphasizes again that the things that happened to Israel are not merely historical events to be read but warnings to heed. This is especially true, in Paul's view, since the ends of the ages have come. God's plans were reaching culmination. The God bringing about the end of all things is the same God who brought judgment on the Israelites by killing them; he might do so again (compare 11:30; Rom. 11:22).

10:12 lest he fall: The Corinthians may have had the attitude that since they were justified by God, nothing could happen to them. The discipline of God, however, is not to be taken lightly. No one can sin with impunity (Gal. 6:7, 8).

Watch Out for Temptation

Opportunities for temptation are almost endless. And since human nature is not getting any better, nor is any of us immune to the corrupted appetites of the flesh, we need to take Paul's warning seriously and watch out for temptation, or we will surely fall. Yet Scripture offers several alternatives for dealing with temptation as we find it: (1) We should avoid temptation whenever possible. Prov. 4:14, 15 urges us, "Do not enter the path of the wicked, and do not walk in the way of evil. Avoid it, do not travel on it." Often we know beforehand whether a certain set of circumstances is likely to lead to sin. Therefore, the obvious way to avoid sin is to avoid those circumstances. Paul described a "way of escape" from temptation (1 Cor. 10:13). Often the escape is to stay away from the place or the people where temptation lurks.

As believers, we can help others in this regard. We can avoid setting up situations that encourage people to do wrong. Teachers, for example, can help students avoid cheating by making assignments, giving tests, and communicating expectations in ways that reduce the need or incentive to cheat. Likewise, business owners and managers can devise procedures that don't needlessly place employees in a position where they might be tempted to steal cash, inventory, or equipment. It's not that a teacher or employer can't trust students or employees, but that no one can trust human nature to be immune from temptation.

(2) We should flee from powerful temptations. Earlier in this letter, Paul warned the Corinthians to flee sexual immorality (6:18). Here he warned them to flee idolatry (10:14). Elsewhere he warned Timothy to flee the lust for material possessions and wealth (1 Tim. 6:9–11), as well as youthful lusts (2 Tim. 2:22). The message is clear: don't toy with temptation. Flee from it!

(3) Chronic temptation is something we need to confess and offer to Christ, and ask for His cleansing work. Some temptations are powerful inner struggles, with thoughts and attitudes that graphically remind us of how fallen we really are. What should we do with that kind of temptation?

Rather than deny it or try to repress it, we should bring it to Christ. He alone is capable of cleaning up the insides of our minds.

(4) Finally, we must resist temptation until it leaves us. When Christ was tempted by the devil, He resisted until the devil went away (Matt. 4:1–11). James encouraged us to do the same (James 4:7). Resistance begins by bathing our minds with the Word of God and standing our ground. We have the promise, after all, that the temptations we experience will never go beyond the common experiences of others, or beyond our ability to deal with them (1 Cor. 10:13). That is great news!

10:13 Paul provides the Corinthians with a word of comfort. The various temptations they were experiencing were normal; all believers throughout the ages have had to resist temptation. God is so good that He will not let believers experience anything for which He has not prepared them. He will give every believer the grace and power to endure. Furthermore, endurance will bring its own reward (9:24–27).

10:14—11:1 In this section the apostle Paul addresses the problem of idolatry in the Corinthian church. Worship of various gods was totally ingrained in Greek culture. In the ancient Greek world there were idols on street corners and in houses. Various civic societies paid homage to their favorite gods. Cities adopted certain gods as their special protectors. The pagan temples were frequented often, especially in Corinth with its temple prostitution. Most of the food in the marketplace had been offered in worship to different gods. Paul first addresses the demonic nature of idol worship and then expounds on the nature of Christian liberty, especially concerning food offered to idols.

10:14–22 flee from idolatry: Pagan worship is a violation of the believer's union with Christ (v. 21). The idols themselves are not a threat (v. 19); the danger lies in the demons (v. 20) who, unknown to the worshipers, are the real objects of idol worship.

(Gk. eidololatreia) (10:14; Gal. 3:20; Col. 3:5) Strong’s #1495: This word refers to the practice of worshiping idols. Related Greek words are translated “idolater” in 5:10, 11; 6:9; 10:7; “idol” in 8:4, 7; 10:19; 12:2; and “things offered to idols” in 8:1, 4, 7; 10:19, 28. The fullest discussion in the NT concerning idolatry is found in First Corinthians. Paul had told the Corinthians not to associate with those who called themselves believers but were still idolaters (5:9–11). The Corinthians must have asked Paul for clarification on this matter, for in First Corinthians Paul warns the believers to refrain from all forms of idol worship.

10:21 You cannot drink: Paul reminded the Corinthians of the fellowship and unity they had in their participation in the Lord’s Supper. Participation in idol worship is a violation of that unity.

10:22–24 All things are lawful for me: Though we have freedom, we also have a responsibility to help others in their Christian growth. Our first duty is to others, not ourselves.

10:25, 26 Eat whatever is sold: Paul himself did not ask whether meat was sacrificed in the temple, because pagan worship could not contaminate what God had made clean (Ps. 24:1; Acts 10:15).

10:27–30 These verses present a scenario of a knowledgeable Christian being invited to a private home for dinner. If no one makes an issue of meat offered at the temple, the believer should not make a point of it; this strong believer accepts the truths enunciated in v. 26. On the other hand, if a weak or unknowledgeable believer is present and brings to the strong Christian’s attention that the meat is from idol worship, the knowledgeable Christian should refrain from eating out of consideration for the weaker Christian.

10:31—11:1 Doing all to the glory of God involves encouraging fellow Christians and spreading the good news about Christ. Paul accomplished this by refusing to offend Jews, Greeks, or the church of God, even if it meant restricting his freedom. Like Christ, Paul did not seek his own way or do things for his own pleasure; instead, he desired to help others (v. 24). This should be our desire as well.

11:2–34 These verses follow a lengthy section about the improper way the Corinthians had taken advantage of their freedom in Christ. After a series of gentle rebukes (1:10, 11; 3:1; 4:7–13, 18; 5:1–3; 6:1–6; 7:1–5; 8:9–12; 10:1–14) the apostle begins this section with praise because they were following certain traditions he had taught them.

11:2 Now I praise you reflects genuine appreciation on Paul's part. The Corinthians had made many mistakes, but they were not totally corrupt. The Corinthians had followed the apostle's instructions in certain areas.

11:3 But introduces an exception to the praise Paul had given the Corinthians in v. 2. He wanted to instruct the Corinthians on another point of confusion. Head primarily means "authority" when used in the context of human relationships. Some have said that head can also mean "source" or "origin," a claim now rejected by Greek lexical authorities. the head of woman is man: The relationship between men and women does not involve inferiority, for, in the parallel clause, Christ is not inferior to God the Father. Submission does not indicate inferiority, but subordination. Just as Christ and God are equally divine, men and women are equal beings. But just as Jesus and God the Father have different roles in God's plan of salvation, so men and women are given different roles.

11:4 Praying or prophesying may refer specifically to intercessory prayer similar to that of OT prophets (Gen. 20:7; 1 Sam. 12:23; Jer. 27:18), or Anna (Luke 2:36–38), or to the combination of tongues and prayer (14:13–16; Acts 2:4; 10:46). Having his head covered probably refers to the wearing up of hair on a man's head. dishonors his head: It is impossible to decide whether head here refers to the man's physical head or to Christ, the man's authoritative head (v. 3). Either interpretation is possible; Paul may even have meant the word to have a double meaning.

11:5, 6 every woman who prays or prophesies: Women were obviously allowed to pray and prophesy in the Christian assembly because it would have been meaningless for Paul to give instructions for something they were not permitted to do. Dishonors her head refers either to the woman's own physical head or to her husband as her head, or possibly both (v. 4). For a woman not to cover her head with her own hair was as shameful as having a shaved head, a sign of public disgrace.

11:7–9 man is not from woman, but woman from man: The woman was taken from the side of the man (Gen. 2:21). Woman for the man is Paul's way of stating the concept of the "helper" in Gen. 2:20. This does not mean the woman is inferior to the man; it refers only to the purposes of God for man and woman in the creative order.

11:10 Women were to wear a covering on their head because of the angels. Evidently God's angels are present at the meeting of the church and actually learn of God's work of grace through the lives and worship of God's people (Eph. 3:10). symbol of authority: This might be a symbol of the woman's authority to prophesy in the new church age, which was inaugurated with the giving of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost (v. 5). It also might refer to a symbol of the man's authority over the woman (v. 3).

11:11, 12 neither … independent: Men and women need each other, and as creatures of God, both depend on Him. Neither man nor woman can have any claim to special status other than what God has purposed for them as their Creator.

11:13–15 Nature seems to refer, in Paul's usage, to how things naturally ought to be (compare Rom. 1:26; 2:14, 27; also read 11:21, 24; Gal. 2:15; 4:8). To Paul, it is natural for men and women to be different. Women are able to manifest this by wearing their hair longer than men.

11:16 no such custom: Paul's question presupposes his pointed question in v. 13 and his view of what is natural in v. 14. To the question, "Is it proper for a woman to pray to God with her head uncovered?" one must answer a resounding, "Certainly not!"—that is, if one is to make any sense of Paul's discussion to this point. The Christians at Corinth should observe this universal custom. No other church allowed a woman to prophesy without covering her head, and the Corinthian church should not let this occur in their assembly.

11:17–34 This passage concerns the improper activities that were occurring when the church met to participate in the celebration of the Eucharist or Lord's Supper.

11:17 I do not praise you: In contrast to Paul's praise in v. 2, that the Corinthians had followed many of his teachings, here he expressed concern for their sinful practices at worship. Come together is a technical term for the meeting of the church and is used three times in this passage (vv. 18, 20).

11:18 divisions: It is tempting to equate the divisions here with the problems occurring in ch. 1, but the divisions in this verse seem to relate to events happening when the church met for the Lord's Supper. Possibly the difficulties were over class distinctions of rich and poor, or Jew and Gentile.

When the church meets, all the parties should come together as equals, but such was apparently not the case at Corinth. Instead of the unity urged by Paul in 11:17 and emphasized again in chs. 12—14, there was fractionalism among the believers.

11:19 those who are approved: One of the positive results of division or factions in the church is that it becomes obvious who the genuine Christians are in the congregation.

11:20–22 The Lord's Supper was the centerpiece of early Christian worship. Gathered around one table, fellow believers met with the Lord and with each other in unity. Christ had expressed this type of humility and unity when He instituted the Supper (Matt. 26:26–30; Mark 14:22–26; Luke 22:14–23). Corinthian believers were taking their own supper ahead of others, violating the spirit and purpose of the meal. In acting this way, they showed contempt for the church of God and shamed those who had nothing.

11:21 For in eating … one is hungry, and another is drunk: In the early church, the Lord's Supper was commonly preceded by a fellowship meal, later known as the Agape Feast. Eventually, so many problems accompanied these feasts that at the Council of Carthage (A.D. 397), they were strictly forbidden. And such was the case at Corinth. In their coming together, they were not eating together; hence it could not be called communion, and their behavior was so dishonoring to the Lord, it could hardly be called the Lord's Supper. Some were actually getting drunk.

11:22–25 I received speaks of Paul's revelation from Christ, which he had delivered to the people. Paul explained it again.

11:24, 25 Take, eat … broken, are all omitted in the best manuscripts. this is My body: Certainly not literally, but figuratively. He was there in the midst participating with the disciples in the element of the bread which signifies His incarnation. which is … for you: This signifies the sacrificial and vicarious character of the death of Christ. Christ is memorialized at this table, not as a great example, or teacher, or even prophet, but as the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world. do this in remembrance of me: In contrast to the often thoughtless and reckless gathering of Corinthian believers at their so-called love feast, Jesus asked of His disciples, "Remember me."

IN DEPTH

The New Covenant

The NT describes the new covenant (1 Cor. 11:25), or agreement, that God has made with humanity, based on the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. In the Bible, a covenant involves much more than a contract or simple agreement. A contract has an end date, but a covenant is a permanent arrangement. Furthermore, a contract generally involves only one aspect of a person, such as a skill, while a covenant covers a person's total being.

God entered into numerous covenants with people in the OT. For example: with Adam and Eve (Gen. 3:15); with Noah (8:21, 22; 2 Pet. 3:7, 15); with Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3); with Israel (Deut. 29:1—30:20); and with David (2 Sam. 7:12–16; 22:51).

The agreement with Israel was especially significant, because it established a special relationship between God and the Hebrews. They were made His "chosen people" through whom He would bring blessing and hope to the rest of the world. However, because the recipients of God's law could not keep it perfectly, further provision was necessary for them as well as for the rest of humanity.

That's why God promised a new covenant through the prophet Jeremiah. Under the new covenant, God would write His law on human hearts. This suggested a new level of obedience and a new knowledge of the Lord.

The work of Jesus Christ brought the promised new covenant into being. When Jesus ate His final Passover meal with the Twelve, He spoke of the cup as "the new covenant in My blood" (Luke 22:20), the words that Paul quoted to the Corinthians to remind them of the need for purity and propriety in their worship (1 Cor. 11:25–34).

The new covenant in Jesus' blood rests directly on the sacrificial work of Christ on the Cross (which was prefigured by Israel's system of sacrifices) and accomplishes the removal of sin and the cleansing of the conscience by faith in Him (Heb. 10:2, 22). So every time Christians celebrate the Lord's Supper, they remind themselves that God has fulfilled His promise: "I will be their God, and they shall be My people … I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their lawless deeds I will remember no more" (Heb. 8:10, 12; compare Jer. 31:33, 34).

11:26 you proclaim the Lord's death till He comes: The Lord's Supper looks back to Christ's death and forward to His second coming (Matt. 26:29; Mark 14:25; Luke 22:18).

11:27–29 In an unworthy manner refers to the way in which a person eats the Lord's Supper. The Corinthians had been making the meal a time of overeating and getting drunk rather than a time of reflecting on the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ.

11:30 Sleep here refers to the death of Christians (15:18; 1 Thess. 4:15, 16). In this passage, it refers to untimely death, a punishment suffered by some Christians who failed to examine themselves at the Lord's Supper (v. 28).

11:31, 32 If we would judge ourselves, God would not need to correct us. But when Christians are unwilling to do this self-examination, God Himself will chasten them.

11:33, 34 wait for one another: Paul concludes his discussion of the Lord's Supper with a practical exhortation that the Corinthian believers show proper concern for one another. He implies his disapprobation of the common love feast in the words eat at home. And he demonstrates again pastoral concern when he expresses the thought lest you come together for judgment: Paul takes no delight in the chastening hand of the Lord. I will set in order (Gk. diatasso) refers to outward practical arrangement (compare Matt. 11:1; 1 Cor. 9:14; 16:1; Gal. 3:19). Any other details pertaining to the Lord's Supper, Paul will clarify upon his visit to the city.

12:1—14:40 Paul continues his discussion of proper order in the church with the subject of the exercise of spiritual gifts in the church. He presents the proper interrelationship between unity of the body, yet diversity of gifts, the proper function of gifts, and the primacy of love in the operation of spiritual gifts.

12:1 Now concerning: The apostle is responding to another question in the letter from the Corinthians (7:1, 25; 8:1). spiritual gifts: The Greek text does not contain the word gifts but merely reads "spirituals" (pneumatikon), which may refer to spiritual things or to spiritual persons. Many have assumed it refers to the gifts (charismata) of 12:4–11 (Matt. 7:7–11; Luke 11:9–13), but this is probably not the case, in view of how the term is used in chs. 12—14, specifically 12:1–3; 14:1–3; and 14:37.

12:2 Gentiles were looked upon as barbarian or unlearned which Paul uses to emphasize their state of ignorance. Unfortunately, people who are ignorant don't like to admit it, so Paul has to drive it home. Because of their ignorance, they have been carried away or swept off their feet. Paul considers demonic forces behind idol worship (10:20) so this personal action of being captivated forcefully may be behind his expression. The term reflects the eroticism of much pagan religion in which the participant was taken by ecstasy and did not use self-control characteristic of the work of the Spirit as taught by the apostle in ch. 14. Dumb idols is an expression that would be immediately recognized by the Corinthians familiar with the OT idolatry (compare 1 Kin. 18:26–29; Ps. 65:4–8; Is. 46:7). Bruce suggests that Paul is contrasting the silence of the idols with the noisy (demon-inspired) outcry of their worshipers.

12:3 calls Jesus accursed … say that Jesus is Lord: A person truly speaking by means of the Holy Spirit will never curse (i.e., demean or defame) Jesus, and all who genuinely proclaim the lordship of Christ do so by the Spirit's enabling.

12:4–6 gifts: The first use of the word for gifts stands in contrast to pneumatikon of 12:1. Charismata refers to "grace-gifts" of God on the individual Christian through which He may strengthen His people. diversities … differences … diversities (same Greek word): Note the diversity in the work of the Trinity. In v. 4 the Spirit distributes each one to the believer (12:11). In v. 5 the Son of God assigns the believer the particular way the gift is manifested in the body (12:12–27). In v. 6, the Father provides the energy to the believer in exercising the gift (12:28).

God works His will through His people in many ways. Not everyone is intended to be the same or perform the same function in the body. same Spirit … same Lord … same God: Though people are gifted differently by God, God and His work is unified. Regardless of which gifts various persons have or do not have, the one God … works all in all.

12:7–11 To each one for the profit of all expresses Paul's main teaching on the work of the Spirit. God works in believers to benefit the entire body, not simply the individual Christian (vv. 25, 26). The Christian is a vehicle through which God works toward the upbuilding and unity of the entire body, not the end of God's work. For to one … to another: The two Greek words (allos … heteros) point up the diversity and begin a list of charismata that are distributed by God throughout His body. No one is given every gift nor are all given one gift, like tongues. Rather, the various charismata, or grace gifts, are distributed so as to bring diversity among the unified body. The various gifts of wisdom … knowledge … faith … gifts of healings … working of miracles … prophecy … discerning of spirits … kinds of tongues … interpretation of tongues were probably very understandable to the Corinthians, but their exact nature is difficult for us to know two thousand years later. Word of knowledge appears to be the ability to discourse on doctrine; not the knowledge itself but the skill of discourse. Word of wisdom is quite the opposite of word of knowledge and refers to practical or ethical outworkings of the knowledge, similar to what one observes in the Proverbs. This gift helps solve the problem of the distribution of food in Acts 6. Faith appears to be the capacity to believe God for extraordinary deeds. Miracles would probably be the ability to do deeds similar to Moses, the prophets, or maybe some nature miracles one observes in the Gospels. Notice that God particularly used these gifts to confirm truth spoken through the early apostles (Heb. 2:3, 4). Prophecy is the forthtelling or foretelling of the revelation of God, either "new" revelation or divine elucidation of what is already known. More than merely teaching or preaching, this action results from the empowering but not inspiration of the Spirit. Peter demonstrated this gift at Pentecost. Discerning of spirits may refer to the ability to distinguish the works of God from demonic activity in the church. Kinds of tongues probably refers to the ability to speak various languages that one has not studied. Interpretation of tongues is the ability to explain or translate the tongues spoken in the congregation so that the entire group of believers might benefit from the prayer spoken (14:16) by the tongues-speaker (14:13, 28). As He wills, not as we will. Whether or not Christians are to seek for any of the gifts of the Spirit is discussed at 12:31.

IN COMPARISON

Spiritual Gifts vs Spiritual Responsibilities

Spiritual gifts—or grace gifts, more accurately—are extraordinary abilities that the Spirit gives to a believer to build up the church. Even though such attributes as faith, teaching, and giving are considered gifts, all Christians are exhorted to develop these traits.
Some Christians are given . . .	But all believers are called . . .
Divine wisdom (12:8)	To live wisely (Rom. 16:19; Eph. 5:15; Col. 4:5)
Extraordinary faith (12:9)	To walk by faith (2 Cor. 5:7) and abound in faith (2 Cor. 8:7); to take up the shield of faith (Eph. 6:16) and pursue faith (1 Tim. 6:12; 2 Tim. 2:22)
Special teaching gifts (12:28; Rom. 12:7)	To teach others the truths of God (Matt. 28:20; 2 Tim. 2:2, 24)
Supernatural ability to help (12:28)	To serve one another in love (Gal. 5:13) and to minister to others (Rom. 12:7)
The gift of exhortation (Rom. 12:8)	To exhort one another daily (Heb. 3:13)
The ability to give with liberality (Rom. 12:8)	To give "not grudgingly or of necessity" but cheerfully (2 Cor. 9:7)
Divine power to show mercy (Rom. 12:8)	To be merciful (Luke 6:36; James 2:13)

12:12–31 Paul attempts to help the carnal Corinthian Christians to turn from selfish desires and to seek for the unity of the body and to serve with the gifts God has given (vv. 7, 25, 26).

12:12–14 For … For … For: Note the development of thought as the Spirit of God continues to give Christ the glory (John 16:12–14; 1 Cor. 12:3).

12:12, 13 so also is Christ: The analogy of the human body illustrates the need for unity in diversity in the body of Christ.

12:13 one … one … one: The apostle continues to emphasize unity: one Spirit, one body, one Spirit; Paul denies that the Spirit is partitioned into the groups mentioned in chs. 3 and 4. All believers (v. 3) are infused by the same God. by one Spirit we were all baptized: The verse might be better translated “in one Spirit we were all baptized into one body.” Christ, the exalted and ascended Head of the body, is the active agent who places the new member of the body in the sphere of the Holy Spirit for His care and safekeeping. All believers are baptized into the body in the sphere of the Holy Spirit and thereby made part of the body of Christ, whether Jews or Greeks, slaves or free. No one has it over another in Christ's church; everyone enters the same way: by faith into the promise of Abraham (Gal. 3:26–29). Each of us has equal share in the same Spirit of God: we have all been made to drink into one Spirit. Some of the Corinthians—probably the pneumatikon (v. 1)—believed that only certain gifted individuals were especially in tune with the Spirit, but Paul puts every believer on an equal footing in the Spirit. It is unlikely that "drinking" refers to common participation in the cup of the Lord's Supper. The Spirit not only surrounds us in baptism; but since we have drunk of the Spirit He also dwells within us.

12:14–27 These verses emphasize one major idea: the body is a magnificent picture of both unity and diversity at one and the same time (vv. 14–19, unity in diversity; vv. 20–27, diversity in unity). None should exalt themselves because of the gift given to them, nor should any think themselves less because they receive a gift some view as less significant.

12:25–27 That introduces the main purpose, namely, no schism in the body. should have the same care for one another: This emphasizes the purpose of the gifts as stated in v. 7—"for the profit of all." Rather than bickering with other Christians and being jealous about other people's positions or gifts, our task is to give of ourselves to others so that if any part of the body is having difficulty or is hurting we seek to minister and heal that part.

12:28–30 God has appointed continues to emphasize sovereign appointment of gifts by the Spirit (v. 11), Son (v. 18), and Father (v. 28). The gifts are not by our choice. The persons of apostles, prophets, and teachers are listed first and with ordinal numbers, probably because they are foundational for the body of Christ, although the Corinthians had valued them less than the spectacular gifts, such as tongues. Sometimes "apostles," used in a general sense, approximates "missionary" (compare 15:7; 2 Cor. 11:5; 12:11; Gal. 1:17, 19; Rom. 16:7); used more specifically, it refers to a small group who witnessed the resurrected Christ and were specially appointed by Him as His representatives (the Twelve and Paul; 15:5 and 9:1; 15:8). The apostle speaks of OT prophets elsewhere (Rom. 1:2; 3:21; 9:3; 1 Thess. 2:15), but in 1 Corinthians and Eph. 2:20 he may use the term for only NT prophets, whose activity is referred to in ch. 14. As in OT prophecy, the chief job of prophets was not foretelling but forthtelling. NT prophets guided the church in its infancy, along with the apostles. Teachers expound the truth of the written revelation of God, as indicated in Gal. 6:6 and 2 Tim. 2:2. After these three major positions, the apostle Paul mentions a variety of other helpful gifts, listing tongues, their favorite, last. The concluding questions—Should we expect all to be apostles, or prophets, or teachers, or workers of miracles? Do all have the various gifts like healings, or tongues, or interpretation?—expect the answer no! What kind of body would it be that was one big hand, or toe, or tongue? This body would not be functional. It would be grotesque!

Are Some Jobs More Important?

Does a hierarchy of gifts (1 Cor. 12:28–31) mean God values some jobs more than others? Judging by popular opinion, one might conclude that He does. In fact, for centuries Christians have subscribed to a subtle yet powerful hierarchy of vocations.

In our culture, that hierarchy tends to position clergy (missionaries and evangelists, pastors and priests) at the top, members of the helping professions (doctors and nurses, teachers and educators, social workers) next, and secular workers (business executives, salespeople, factory laborers, and farmers) at the bottom.

So what determines the spiritual value of a job? How does God assign significance? The hierarchy assumes sacred and secular distinctions, and assigns priority to the sacred. But does God view vocations that way? No.

All legitimate work matters to God. God Himself is a worker. In fact, human occupations find their origin in His work to create the world (Ps. 8:6–8). Work is a gift from Him to meet the needs of people and the creation.

God creates people to carry out specific kinds of work. God uniquely designs each of us, fitting us for certain kinds of tasks. He distributes skills, abilities, interests, and personalities among us so that we can carry out His work in the world. That work includes "spiritual" tasks, but also extends to health, education, agriculture, business, law, communication, the arts, and so on.

God cares more about character and conduct than occupational status. Paul's teaching in this passage is about gifts, not vocations. At the time Paul wrote it, there were few if any "professional" clergy in the church. Paul himself was a tentmaker by occupation, along with his friends, Aquila and Priscilla (Rom. 16:3–5; 1 Cor. 16:19). Other church leaders practiced a wide variety of professions and trades. God may assign rank among the spiritual gifts, but there's no indication that He looks at vocations that way.

Furthermore, Scripture says there is something "more excellent" than exercising certain gifts (1 Cor. 12:31). Chapter 13 reveals that to be the way of Christlike love and character. Implication: If we want status in God's economy, we should excel at love, no matter what we do for work. Love has the greatest value to God (13:13; Matt. 22:35–40).

12:31 The translation of earnestly desire presents a problem: Should it be translated as the NKJV does, as an imperative, or as an indicative, a statement of fact: “You are desiring the sensational gifts”? The Greek word zeloo, normally a negative term, allows either. The imperative is chosen by most interpreters, but the indicative is possible and would fit with the correction at which chs. 12—14 aim. In contrast to such unprofitable desire, Paul directs them to a more excellent way in ch. 13, the way of exercising any and all gifts only in love.

13:1–13 The love chapter is divided into three sections: (1) the futility of gifts without the fruit of the Spirit, love; (2) the nature of love; and (3) the permanence of love in contrast to the temporality of the gifts.

13:1 tongues of men and of angels: The miraculous gift of "speaking in tongues" (glossolalia) involved human languages, self-evident by the wording here (tongues of men) and also in other passages (Acts 2:4, 6, 8, 11; 10:46). But were the tongues in the Corinthian church angelic languages or humanly unintelligible languages from God? The tongues-speakers may have thought so, but Paul may be using hyperbole: "even if I were to speak in some heavenly language." Either way, without love such a gift would be worthless. Sounding brass or a clanging cymbal were standard instruments used in pagan worship. The exercise of the grace gifts apart from Christian love would differ little from the activities of various pagan and mystery religions.

13:2 gift of prophecy … all mysteries and all knowledge … all faith: All three are listed in ch. 12. All these gifts, employed without love, amount to nothing.

13:3 Bestow all my goods: People can do works of charity without the proper motivation (4:5). Body to be burned: With this ultimate gift, Paul has extended each gift to the nth degree in hyperbole to show their worthlessness apart from love. They are "wood, hay, and stubble" (3:12–15) at the judgment seat of Christ.

13:4–7 Paul now advances from the superiority of the fruit of the Spirit, love, to the important traits of love. Love suffers long, or puts up with people that it is easy to give up on. Love is kind, namely, treats well people who have treated us poorly. Love doesn't envy (Gk. zeloo) nor parade itself and is not puffed up. Self-promotion plagued Corinth and challenges us today. Behave rudely means to act in an unfair or unseemly manner, as Paul discussed in 7:36. seek (Gk. zeteo) its own: A person who loves is willing to set aside his or her own plans or entitlements for another's good. Not provoked speaks of not being irritated or over-sensitive to others, easily angered. thinks no evil: When we love someone we do not immediately assume evil on their part. Furthermore, if we understand "think" (logizomai), or "consider," as an accounting term, the text would mean that we do not keep a record or account of evils done to us. does not rejoice in iniquity … rejoices in the truth: Love does not delight in evil in any form, including the fall of a brother or sister. Instead, love delights in all that expresses the gospel, both in word and deed. bears … believes … hopes … endures all things: The word for bears literally means to "support." Love is the foundation for all acts that please God. Love believes all things in that love never gives up and never loses hope. Love endures any hardship or rejection, revealing its superior strength. In the face of confrontation, love simply continues. To love is the great commandment (compare John 13:34, 35) and no other force promotes righteousness more.

13:8–10 This third section of ch. 13 moves from the nature of love to its permanence. Love never fails: This uncompromising affirmation contrasts with grace-gifts, which are transitory at best. One day all the gifts will be needed no longer, but love will continue forever. prophecies … tongues … knowledge: Paul focuses on three of the sixteen gifts to demonstrate the temporariness of them all. prophecies … will fail: The word translated "fail" (katageo) is in the passive voice. Literally the translation is "prophecies will be stopped." tongues … will cease … knowledge … will vanish away [be stopped]: Prophecy and knowledge (which are among the twelve body gifts for edification) are in part (Gk. ek merous). They, with all the gifts of ch. 12, serve the body of Christ, but only for now. we know in part, we prophesy in part. These "in part" (ek merous) gifts will continue until that which is perfect (Gk. teleios, complete) has come (v. 10). The perfection in view here has been interpreted quite differently: (1) the end of the apostolic era, by which time the core doctrines of the church had been revealed and taught; (2) the completion of the canon of Scripture, which secured the inspired and authoritative source of all true Christian doctrine; and (3) the second coming of Christ, at which point the role and relationship of all believers and the church will be transformed, and the "partial" will no longer by needed. This time of completion (whichever view is embraced) supercedes and replaces all the "only for now," "in part" gifts. Unlike these, love endures forever.

13:11, 12 Child is used five times in v. 11. Paul uses the growth from childhood to adulthood as an illustration to explain his comments in vv. 8–10 about movement to completion. It is normal and expected for a child to act and think like a child. But when a person becomes an adult, the acts and toys of childhood need to stop. now (used twice) we see in a mirror dimly: The mirror is likely the revelation of God, which, while incomplete, is accompanied by these three gifts. But then (used twice in balance with "now") refers to the "perfect" when we shall know … as … known. Thus there will be no further need for the body gifts.

13:13 greatest is love: Faith, hope, and love are permanent Christian virtues, yet love clearly stands over the other two. Faith is the foundation (Heb. 11:6) and love is the capstone. Doctrine is the foundation (3:10; Jude 3) and experience is the practical expression which attracts (John 13:35).

14:1 Like 12:31, this verse is a hinge which connects the preceding to the following.

14:1, 2 Pursue love: The Greek word for pursue (dioko) carries such meanings as “hasten,” “run,” “run after,” “aspire to.” We can take or leave many things in life, but not love. We should pursue or strive for love as a priceless treasure. The fruit of the Spirit prepares believers for the exercise of the grace-gifts of the Spirit. desire spiritual gifts (pneumatikon; compare 12:1) Most interpreters take this to mean that believers are to seek certain gifts—prophecy, especially—in order to serve Christ’s body. Two matters may speak against such a view. First, the Greek word for desire (zeloo) is the same as in 12:31 and may indicate a negative desire, not positive. 14:1 would then read, “Pursue love, but you are desiring spirituals, when you should rather prophesy.” Secondly, gifts is not in the Greek text and, as in 12:1, should be omitted. The context seems to indicate that spirituals (pneumatika) is an adjective describing specific utterances, perhaps ecstatic tongues. Therefore, in contrast to the “spirituals” (ecstatic tongues?) they desire improperly, they should desire prophesying. Why? Because the main purpose of gifts is to edify one another, but the person who speaks in a tongue is understood only by God. Thus no one understands … in the spirit.

(Gk. glossa) (12:10; 14:2, 4–6, 9, 13, 14, 18, 27; Acts 2:4; 10:46; 19:6) Strong’s #1100: The Greek term glossa means “tongue” or “language.” When the early believers were empowered by the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost, they were given the ability to speak in many different languages, so that those visiting from all around the Roman world could hear the glories of God being uttered in their native tongue (Acts 2:4–11). The household of Cornelius also spoke in different languages when they were baptized in the Holy Spirit (Acts 10:46). And the same happened with the new disciples from Ephesus (Acts 19:6). Other than these instances, priority mention of tongue speaking is at Corinth, where they spoke in different languages as a way of praying to God. When these languages were spoken outside the corporate worship setting, interpretation was not needed; when they were spoken in the meetings, Paul required interpretation so that the others could understand and be edified (14:2–27).

14:3–5 He who prophesies here may incorporate all of the speaking gifts (Rom. 12:6; 1 Pet. 4:11) that edify others, as is demonstrated by the results in vv. 3 and 4. edification … exhortation … comfort: Paul prefers for the Corinthians to exercise this gift in their midst instead of “speaking in a tongue,” by which one merely edifies himself. I wish you all spoke in tongues: Perhaps the apostle is contrasting the Spirit-given gift of tongues (note the plural) with speaking in a tongue (the singular), which may be a reference to ecstatic speech. Or perhaps Paul recognizes value in private, personal prayer uttered in a tongue, even as he aims to correct the abuse of tongues in public worship. Another possibility is that we should not read too much into this comment. Elsewhere the apostle wished that all were celibate like him (7:7) but certainly he did not expect such to be the case. Paul saw benefit in the true gift of tongues but a limited one. prophesies is greater … unless indeed he interprets: When interpreted, the gift of speaking in tongues will benefit the church.

14:6 what shall I profit you: If Paul had first come to the Corinthians speaking in tongues that they did not know, what benefit would it have been to them? Their response would probably have been one of disinterest (v. 11) or derision (v. 23). Rather than this fruitless approach he came with a revelation (compare 2:10), prophecy (12:29), knowledge (compare 2:12) and teaching (12:29; compare 14:26).

14:7–9 Like musical instruments that must be used at the proper time and in the proper way for them to serve their proper function, so tongues being exercised outside these guidelines are like speaking into the air. Even if the languages sound beautiful, are spoken fluently, or contain great ideas or even praise of God, they are irrelevant if no one can understand what is being said.

14:10, 11 Paul again forms an analogy to further drive home his point. many kinds of languages: No one can master all the languages in the world, but they have one point in common: they all convey meaning (significance). Meaning is essential to communication in language and it is no different with the languages from the Spirit. Without meaning they make the speaker a foreigner (literally, barbarian, making meaningless sounds like "barbar") to listeners.

14:12 spiritual gifts: The word for spiritual here is different from Paul's usage to this point (gifts is not in the Greek text). Rather than pneumatikon or pneumatika, he uses the common word pneuma, meaning "spirits." They are desirous for spirits (v. 2). Paul may be speaking with tongue in cheek, describing their fall back to former practices in Greek pagan worship. Or he may use "spirits" to refer to their speaking in tongues. Paul seeks to redirect their zeal toward legitimate manifestations of the Holy Spirit that will benefit fellow worshipers.

14:13 pray that he may interpret: If one "speaks in a tongue" (possibly with ecstacy), no one around can understand (14:2). Consequently, the speaker should beseech God for the ability to interpret so that the entire church may benefit.

14:14 pray in a tongue: But if one prays in a tongue (i.e., without interpreting) and there is no interpretation (which seemed to be the Corinthian practice), then there is no understanding and consequently no benefit to the person or the church.

14:15 Pray with the spirit refers contextually to the spirit of the person, not the Spirit of God (v. 2). Paul desires to pray to God both with his spirit and with understanding. Paul is unwilling to become schizoid in his spiritual life, turning off his mind while giving free sway to his spirit.

14:16, 17 Otherwise: From v. 12 on, Paul shows the absurdity of their promoting their favorite "gift" in an unedifying way rather than building the body into unity as taught in ch. 2. Here, then, he forces them through his logic to channel their zeal (12:31; 13:5; 14:1; 14:12). place of the uninformed: Possibly a new convert is in view. However, anyone who does not have the gift of interpretation could fill this place. Amen at your giving of thanks: It was common in Jewish, and apparently early church, worship for the congregation to indicate its agreement with the prayer by responding with "amen" (Deut. 27:14–26; Rev. 5:14). Such a response would be impossible when no one understands.

14:18, 19 more than you all: Apparently Paul quantitatively spoke numerous languages. Or he spoke in tongues more often than even the zealously tongues-speaking Corinthians. Either way, in the church the speaking of five words that were understandable (presumably prophesying) had more benefit than a countless number of words in a tongue. All speaking in tongues in Acts occurred in public. Paul's teaching here focuses on such public utterance, although v. 18 may have in view Paul's tongues-speech in private, personal prayer. Possibly, in view of vv. 20–22, the apostle prayed publicly in various languages when he visited the different synagogues as he traveled from town to town through the Roman Empire.

14:20–22 Brethren: In this new paragraph (possibly picking up now from 13:11) Paul challenges the Corinthians to reorient their thinking. They are to be mature, while in malice they are to be babes. The Corinthians still had much to learn. At the time of Paul's writing they had poor ethical judgment though they had a high opinion of themselves. In the law: Paul evaluates the purpose of tongues and the mature use of them by the Scriptures rather than by personal experience. The quotation from Is. 28:11 indicates that "law" here refers to the OT rather than simply the Pentateuch.

14:23–25 At this point Paul advances from the theological debate to the application to the congregation. Having demonstrated that their tongue-speaking had limited value for the church and was even harmful to it, Paul displays vividly what their disorderly tongues-speaking was doing to unbelievers. Whenever the church met and the uninformed or unbelievers entered the assembly and the Corinthians were speaking in tongues (presumably without interpretation), these Christians appeared mad. However, when these non-Christians heard the congregation prophesy, the message convicted them, so that they fell down on their faces and worshiped God.

14:26 Paul now sets forth to the Corinthians a sample of the way that a local church meeting should be conducted. If each of you brings to the meeting the special ability that God has given and everything is done for edification, the church as a whole will be benefited. Psalm probably refers to the singing of an OT psalm (compare Col 3:16; Eph. 5:19). Teaching would most likely consist of the presentation of some OT truth or teaching of the apostles. Though the apostle has sought to curtail the excess, he still recognizes that there was a proper place for the gift of tongues (has a tongue) with an interpretation. The one who receives a revelation may be the prophet who speaks the word of God (vv. 29–32).

14:27 The apostle puts forth some guidelines designed to keep the gift of tongues under control and yet allow the Spirit of God to use the gift through the church. He limits the number of manifestations of this gift in one church meeting to three, and in order (in turn), and each one of these manifestations is to be interpreted. Before speaking in tongues, they need to be sure that someone is present to interpret or the tongues-speakers themselves should interpret (compare vv. 5, 13).

14:28 if … no interpreter … keep silent: If no one interprets what is said, then the tongues-speaker is not to speak. The Greek word for "silent" (sigao) means "to say nothing," "stop speaking," "hold one's tongue."

14:29 two or three prophets speak: As beneficial as prophesying is, even here Paul seeks to order the activity. There is only so much time in a meeting of the church and there is much to be done. Let the others judge indicates that no one, not even a person exercising a grace-gift, is exempt from the judgment of the church (6:5; 11:29, 31). This judgment might be by the other prophets present.

14:30 Revealed surely indicates that the prophesying is more than what we view as preaching or speaking from the texts of Scripture. This is akin to OT prophecy in which God gives revelation to a servant for him to give that revelation to God's people. Let the first keep silent is similar to the admonition in v. 28 concerning tongues-speakers. The speakers are not to be interrupting each other. All things are to be done orderly (v. 41).

14:31, 32 One by one is similar to "in turn" of v. 27 regarding the tongues-speakers. Since the purpose of prophesying is that the congregation may learn and be encouraged, only this orderly procedure will assure the result. Subject to the prophets is added lest someone should claim, "I simply can't help myself when God brings a revelation to me from the Spirit." Paul teaches that the Holy Spirit does not overpower the individual he empowers. The will of the Christian is not broken but must cooperate with the work of God.

14:33 God is not the author of confusion: Confusion is exactly what the Corinthians had been experiencing. This comes not from God but from the sinful flesh. As in all the churches of the saints may go with the first part of v. 33 or as the beginning of v. 34. The clause seems to fit better with v. 34 regarding behavior in the church meetings.

14:34 Paul commands that women are to be silent in the church meetings. This is a stronger and more inclusive statement than is given in 1 Tim. 2:12. In 1 Timothy the reference is to teaching men; here all talking appears prohibited. This seems to disagree, however, with the previous allowance of women prophesying in ch. 11. Some have argued that the speaking refers to speaking in tongues, while others believe disruptive talk is prohibited. Still others believe Paul is attempting to inhibit a feminist group at Corinth. The solution is likely otherwise. The immediate context concerns self-control and judging the prophets. The prohibition relates to women not being involved in judging the prophets. Such judging would be an expression of authority over men, which was forbidden.

14:35 Ask their own husbands at home seems to indicate the women are older women who are already married. The idea of younger unmarried women seeking to address the church probably never entered the apostle's mind. Shameful indicates the strong feeling of the apostle and the early church in general of having women instruct men in the church or exercise authority over them. However, when women were covered and prophesied, this was acceptable and not viewed as exercising authority over the men (compare 11:3–10).

14:36 Come originally from you is another argument for the Corinthians to accept Paul's teaching. The Corinthians did not invent the truth Paul teaches. It began at Jerusalem and has now traveled throughout most of the Roman world.

14:37 To further establish his arguments and the authority of his teaching, Paul now asserts that as an apostle what he teaches are the commandments of the Lord. They are not opinions and are not optional. Thinks himself to be a prophet or spiritual further demonstrates that two primary classes of gifted persons are in view in ch. 14, namely, the prophet and the tongues-speaker.

14:38–40 To the person who refuses to heed the apostle's admonition, Paul simply says if that person wants to be ignorant, let him be ignorant.

Facts About the Resurrection

The resurrection of Christ was proclaimed eagerly by the early church. This miracle was considered an essential part of the gospel message. Surely Christ had died, but more importantly, He had been raised. More than just a suffering Savior, Jesus is our living Lord.
Christ's resurrection was prophesied in the OT Scriptures (Ps. 16:10).	15:4
The risen Christ appeared to more than five hundred witnesses, including Paul.	15:5–8
If Jesus did not rise from the dead, the gospel message is pointless, empty, and dishonest. Jesus Christ would not be alive, interceding for us, and we would not be able to place our hope in a glorious future with Him. The Resurrection is central to the gospel.	15:14, 15
According to Paul, "if Christ is not risen, your faith is futile; you are still in your sins" (15:17; Rom. 4:25). Christ's resurrection, not merely His death on the Cross, secured our justification. His resurrection was a sign of God's approval of Christ's sacrifice for our sins. In short, no Resurrection equals no forgiveness of sin.	15:17–19
The resurrection of Christ was designed to reveal what lies ahead for those who put their trust in Jesus (15:20–57). Paul called Christ "the firstfruits of those who have fallen asleep" (15:20). This OT image (Ex. 23:16–19) means that Christ serves as both an example and a guarantee of what we can expect. Because He has conquered death (15:26, 27, 54–57), we need not fear death. Because He now enjoys a glorified body, we also can expect to inherit a "spiritual body" (15:44–46) after this mortal one wears out.	15:20–26
Our dead, physical body will one day be resurrected.	15:42
We will once again be both material and immaterial beings, our soul being reunited with our resurrected body.	15:43, 44
The power behind this marvelous, yet mysterious, event is Jesus, the self-declared "resurrection and the life" (John 11:25).	15:45
Our physical body will be altered and changed to prepare us for the life to come. If Jesus is the prototype, we will still be recognizable, but our new body will be capable of supernatural activities (Luke 24:31, 36, 51).	15:51–54
Our resurrection will take place when Jesus returns (1 Thess. 4:13–18).	15:53

15:1, 2 Paul's gospel to the Corinthians centered on the physical death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, the eternal Son of God who became human yet never sinned (Gal. 1:6–10). Paul had started the Corinthian church; the gospel that the Corinthians had originally received came from him (2:2).

15:3 Paul did not originate the proclamation of Jesus that he delivered to the Corinthians; he simply gave the Corinthians what he himself had received. He viewed himself as a link in a long chain of witnesses to the truth of the death and resurrection of Christ. Christ died for our sins: Christ's death dealt decisively with our sins. He suffered in our place to endure the just wrath of God against us. according to the Scriptures: Christ lived and died in accordance with the prophecies about Him in the OT (Ps. 16:10; Is. 53:8–10).

15:4 The Resurrection verifies the fact that Christ's death paid the full price for sin. The Greek term translated rose here is in the perfect tense, emphasizing the ongoing effects of this historical event. Christ is a risen Savior today.

15:5–8 At the time of Paul's writing, a person could have verified the truthfulness of the apostle's statements. The majority of the five hundred people who saw the risen Christ, as well as all the apostles and James (the half brother of Jesus), were still living. Born out of due time is probably Paul's comment on the unique way he became an apostle. Unlike the other apostles, who had the benefit of an initial training period with Christ, Paul became an apostle abruptly, with no opportunity for earthly contact with Christ or His teaching.

15:9 Paul considered himself the least of the apostles because at one time he had persecuted the church (Acts 22:4; Eph. 3:8; 1 Tim. 1:15, 16).

15:10 I labored more abundantly: Even though Paul got a late start and did not have the discipleship training that the other apostles did, he traveled further, established more churches, and wrote more Scripture than all of them (2 Cor. 11:23–27). But Paul attributed his success to the grace of God.

15:11 whether … I or they: Paul did not care who got credit for the Corinthians' faith. He cared only that the Corinthians believed.

(Gk. anastasis) (15:12, 13, 21, 42; Acts 17:32; Rom. 1:4; 1 Pet. 1:3) Strong’s #386: The Scriptures often speak of Christ’s resurrection with the phrase that is literally “resurrection out from among dead ones.” This is the wording in the first half of 15:12 and in other verses (Acts 17:31; 1 Pet. 1:3). When Scripture speaks of the resurrection in general, commonly the phrase is “a resurrection of dead ones.” This is the wording in the second half of 15:12 (15:13, 42). In Rom. 1:4, Christ’s resurrection is spoken of as “a resurrection of dead ones.” The same terminology is used in 15:21, where the Greek text literally reads: “For since through a man death came, so also through a Man came a resurrection of dead persons.” This shows that Christ’s resurrection included the resurrection of believers to eternal life. When He arose, many arose with Him, for they were united with Him in His resurrection (Rom. 6:4, 5; Eph. 2:6; Col. 3:1).

15:12, 13 Some of the Corinthians were teaching that there is no resurrection. These opponents of Paul may have been denying the reality of Christ’s resurrection. They may also have been teaching that resurrection is only spiritual rather than physical. Or they may have been teaching that the Resurrection had already happened (2 Tim. 2:18). Whatever the case, they contradicted the essential teaching that Christ had been physically raised from the dead and that believers in Him will some day also be resurrected.

15:14 preaching is empty … faith is also empty: It is not enough that a person believes something. It is absolutely essential that what one believes is true. The object of our faith is important. A dead Savior cannot take away sins, rescue us from God’s wrath, or develop a relationship with us.

15:15 false witnesses: In vv. 5–8, Paul listed several people, including himself, who had witnessed the resurrected Christ. To deny the Resurrection was to deny the truth of their testimony.

15:16, 17 you are still in your sins: Christ’s death without His resurrection would not succeed in saving us from our sins.

15:18 Without the resurrection of Christ, those who are asleep in Christ —the dead—have perished or been destroyed. The Greek word translated futile in this passage speaks of something that has no results. Without the resurrection of Christ, the Christian faith brings no forgiveness and no future life in God's presence.

15:19 we are of all men the most pitiable: If Christians have no hope for the future, the pagans could justifiably consider Christians fools since believers would have suffered for nothing.

15:20–28 Paul changes mood and tone in these verses. He declares the truthfulness of Christ's and the believer's resurrection.

15:20 Jesus is the firstfruits of all others who believe in Him. This is an OT image of the first installment of a crop which anticipates and guarantees the ultimate offering of the whole crop (16:15; Rom. 8:23). Because Christ rose from the dead, those who are asleep in Christ (v. 18; 1 Thess. 4:15, 16) have a guarantee of their own resurrection.

15:21, 22 by man came death: The first man, Adam, transgressed God's law and brought sin and death into the world (Gen. 2:17; 3:19; Rom. 5:12–21); the second Man, Jesus Christ, was the perfect sacrifice to take away sin and to bring life and resurrection to those who believe in Him (Rom. 5:15–21). in Christ all shall be made alive: The principle here is similar to that in Rom. 5:18, 19, where Paul explains that by one man's (Adam's) sin many were made unrighteous, whereas by one Man's (Christ's) obedience many will be made righteous.

15:23 Each one in his own order indicates that God has a certain design for the resurrection. The word order is a Greek military term that might also be translated "rank." The Commander is raised first; His troops afterward. In 1 Thess. 4:13–18, His coming is described as Christ's coming with those who have "fallen asleep" (the dead), who are then united with their physical bodies. Following this is the removal of all living Christians from the earth.

Using Authority Wisely

Some day all authority, rule, and power will end—a sobering thought (1 Cor. 15:24). Peter mentioned a similar idea when he asked, In light of the end of the present time, what sort of people should we be (1 Pet. 3:10–13)? How should we live? No matter how hard we've worked to acquire and accrue power and position, it will eventually come to an end. That thought should challenge us to hold on lightly to the trappings of authority, and use it wisely and responsibly for God's purposes.

15:24 The end here refers to all remaining prophetic events that will occur after the rapture of the church and during the climax of history, when Christ puts an end to all rule (vv. 25–28). delivers the kingdom to God the Father: When Christ and the church are joined at His coming, God will establish His kingdom on this earth, culminating in a new heavens and a new earth. puts an end to all rule and all authority: Until the time of the end, the Father subjugates everything to the Son (Ps. 110:1; Dan. 2:44; 7:14, 27). Christ is Lord over the universe (Col. 1:15–17).

15:25, 26 all enemies: God has allowed His enemy Satan to rule as the "prince of the power of the air" (Eph. 2:2) and the "god of this age" (2 Cor. 4:4), but his final judgment before God is certain. The last enemy … death: The conquering of death is final proof of God's victory and the inauguration of the new day of the Lord (Rev. 20:14).

15:27, 28 it is evident: Paul clarified the verses that he had been quoting from the OT. The texts say that everything is put under the Son, but God the Father is excepted, or excluded from this subjugation, because the Son must be subject to the Father. God may be all in all indicates that there will be no challenge to the sovereign rule of God over all the universe. There will be universal peace and prosperity.

15:29 There are scores of interpretations as to what is meant in this verse by baptized for the dead. The most natural interpretation is that some of the Corinthians, in conformity to their prior pagan practices which allowed such rites, were baptized for some in the Corinthian church who had died without baptism. Certainly whether they were baptized or not relates in no way to whether they were justified or not but may have served some ritualistic function within the church. The apostle does not approve or disapprove of the unusual practice in so many words though it is informative that he says they rather than we when speaking of the ceremony. No other evidence is found among the church in the first century of such a practice except for a heretical sect (i.e., the Marconites). He desires, rather, to get to the heart of the problem: If the dead do not rise … Why then: To deny the Resurrection and yet be involved in such activities surely makes that look foolish.

15:30–32 why do we stand in jeopardy: Paul risked his life daily. To do so would have been of no advantage without the hope of a resurrection. Why else should Paul have endured difficulties like fighting beasts at Ephesus? It would have been better for him to take the position of the Epicureans, who sought pleasure and avoided pain. The reference to beasts might be a figurative reference to Paul's human enemies at Ephesus. Acts 19 does not record any confrontation with animals.

15:33, 34 Paul had already warned the Corinthians to avoid fellow believers who lived immoral lives (5:9–13). Quoting a proverb from the poet Menander, evil company corrupts good habits, Paul warned the Corinthians to stay away from those who teach false doctrine (2 Cor. 6:14—7:1).

15:35–37 Some people objected to the Resurrection on the grounds that it was too hard to understand. Paul called these people foolish. Difficulty understanding the nature of the Resurrection should not cause a person to doubt its reality, any more than not understanding how a seed becomes a plant should cause disbelief in the coming harvest.

15:38–41 The variety found in nature among living beings such as men, animals, fish, and birds, and among objects such as celestial bodies and terrestrial bodies reflects the Creator's power and will. The varying brightness of the sun, moon, and stars serves as a good illustration of the differences between the earthly human body and the heavenly human body. All these different celestial and terrestrial objects are evidence that God the Creator can certainly create new resurrected human bodies out of our old bodies.

15:42–44 The earthly body has various weaknesses, while the heavenly body is devoid of these weaknesses. The body from the earth is corruptible, has dishonor, is weak, and is governed by natural instincts. The body from heaven is incorruptible, glorious, powerful, and is governed by the spirit energized by God.

“life-giving spirit”

(Gk. pneuma zoopoioun) (15:45; 2 Cor. 3:6; 1 Pet. 3:18) Strong’s #4151; 2227: The Greek expression denotes “the spirit that gives life” or “the spirit that makes alive.” The Lord Jesus entered into a new kind of existence when He was raised from the dead because He was glorified and simultaneously became life-giving spirit. The verse does not say Jesus became “the Spirit,” since the Second Person of the Trinity did not become the Third Person. Rather, Jesus became spirit in the sense that His mortal existence and form were changed into that which is spiritual. As One now united with the Spirit in a glorified body, Jesus is no longer bound by His mortal body. He is alive in the Spirit (1 Pet. 3:18), to give life to all who believe. This is why Paul speaks of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus (Rom. 8:2).

15:44–49 natural … spiritual: The contrast is not between a material body and an immaterial body, but between a body subject to death and a body that is immortal. The Greek term translated spiritual here refers to a body directed by the Spirit, as opposed to one dominated by the flesh (2:15; 10:4). First man … second Man contrasts the sinful nature that every person inherits with the new righteous nature that comes through Christ.

Just as God raised Jesus from the dead, Paul declared, believers will also be victorious over death through the grace and power of Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 15:50–57).

15:50 Mere flesh and blood cannot enter into the glorious existence of an immortal body (vv. 35–49). Something must happen to this flesh so that it becomes incorruptible (v. 42).

15:51, 52 we shall all be changed: The teaching here is similar to the teaching given to the Thessalonians (1 Thess. 4:13–18). Whereas the dead in Christ will be raised first, the living believers will be instantly transformed into their immortal bodies when Jesus returns.

15:53–57 The living will receive a body that is not subject to death (v. 50). Satan's apparent victories in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 3:13) and at the Cross (Mark 15:22–24) were reversed by Jesus' death (Col. 2:15) and resurrection. From the vantage point of Jesus'victorious return, Death and Hades (the grave) have no power over Christians, because Jesus has already conquered both. We participate in His victory.

15:58 The Corinthians were to continue steadfast in the work of Christ, specifically because of the Resurrection. your labor is not in vain: All the work that we do for Christ will be rewarded (2 Cor. 5:10; Rev. 22:12).

Help for Needy Believers

Money is powerful. It can bring out the best or the worst in a person. In our drive to gain lots of it or use it for personal comfort and convenience, we can become very cold and manipulative (1 Tim. 6:10). But that ought not to be the way for God's followers.

In 1 Cor. 16, we see that Paul was coordinating a fund-raising drive to help some needy believers. He could have focused on the plight of the recipients. They were Christians in Jerusalem, perhaps suffering from persecution or famine. But instead he concentrated on how the Corinthians should initiate a regular pattern of giving to meet the need (1 Cor. 16:2). Their participation would be an act of loving worship as they met together on the first day of the week.

Paul also pointed out that the transfer of the funds would be carried out by responsible people chosen by the Corinthians themselves (16:3). That guaranteed accountability and integrity. Apparently Paul was quite realistic about the human tendency toward manipulation and greed.

16:1–4 Now concerning: Paul once again addressed a question asked by the Corinthians (7:1, 25; 8:1; 12:1) about giving (Acts 11:29, 30; 24:17; Rom. 15:25–28; 2 Cor. 8; 9). The first day of the week was the regular weekly meeting day of the early church. Lay something aside expresses the concept of Christian giving in the NT. The OT tithe (altogether coming to about 23 percent) was not adopted by the NT church, though certainly Christ practiced it. NT believers were encouraged to give liberally, but never a specified amount or percentage (Rom. 12:8). Paul wanted to make sure that the Corinthians' offering would be collected before he arrived so that he would not need to pressure the people when he saw them (2 Cor. 9:5). Whomever you approve refers to the person who would accompany Paul (v. 4) to Jerusalem to deliver the gift on behalf of the Corinthian church.

16:5–7 Now I will come to you: Paul had hoped to leave Ephesus soon to visit Corinth, perhaps even spending the winter with the Corinthians. Travel by sea during the winter was hazardous (Acts 27:9–44). Paul eventually did make it to Corinth, but not according to the schedule he planned here. This failure to come caused him trouble later with the Corinthians (2 Cor. 1:15—2:1).

16:8, 9 The opportunities for Paul's ministry in Ephesus, a major city of Asia Minor, were great, as was the persecution he endured there.

16:10–12 Though Paul could not leave immediately for Corinth, he wanted to be represented among the Corinthians by his fellow workers. He planned to send Timothy, a young man at this time. Paul encouraged the Corinthians to go easy on Timothy, for although he was trustworthy, he was more timid than Paul.

16:13, 14 Watch is often used in the NT to indicate anticipation of some future event (Mark 13:37; Rev. 3:3). Paul's exhortation to stand fast in the faith is especially important in view of the susceptibility of the Corinthians to false teaching (2 Cor. 11:3). Be brave may also be translated "play the man," emphasizing not only bravery but maturity. Paul's command to do everything with love serves as a balance to these strong exhortations.

16:15–18 The household of Stephanas was among the first in Achaia to respond to Paul's preaching. Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus probably were the ones who confirmed the bad news brought by Chloe's household in 1:11. They were also probably the bearers of the letter that the Corinthians sent to Paul (7:1).

Friends in the Faith

Paul had once been a dangerous enemy to the followers of Christ. But his dramatic encounter with the Savior and subsequent change of heart brought him into the family of God (Acts 9:1–30). Courageous Christians such as Ananias (Acts 9:10) and Barnabas (Acts 4:36, 37) began to nurture and aid the new believer. He had become a brother.

In the same way, Christ makes believers today into a new family. Having experienced the same gift from God—forgiveness and hope—we are now brothers and sisters in Christ.

Paul acknowledged several of his family of faith as he closed 1 Corinthians: • Young Timothy (1 Cor. 16:10, 11), who needed acceptance and affirmation.

• Gifted Apollos (16:12), one of the Corinthians' former leaders (1:12), who was unable to go to them at that time (Acts 18:24–28).

• Stephanas (16:15, 16), baptized by Paul in the early days of the Corinthian church; the Corinthians needed to respect him.

• Fortunatus and Achaicus (16:17, 18), encouragers of Paul who may have delivered to him the letter from the Corinthians that he was answering with 1 Cor.; like Stephanas, they too needed recognition.

• Priscilla and Aquila (16:19), cofounders of the Corinthian work and business partners with Paul (Acts 18:1–4); they now were leading a similar work at Ephesus and sent warm greetings to their brothers and sisters across the Aegean Sea.

Once an enemy, Paul became a true friend, partner, and advocate of other believers. Just as others had once cared for him and his needs, he wrote to the Corinthians of the needs and concerns of his brothers and sisters in Christ.

16:19, 20 The churches of Asia may be those mentioned in Rev. 2 and 3. Aquila and Priscilla were tentmakers who had met Paul in Corinth. They followed him to Ephesus and made their house available for the meetings of the church (Rom. 16:3–5). They would have been known to many in the Corinthian church. a holy kiss: This custom, adopted by the early Christians, symbolized love, forgiveness, and unity.

16:21–24 my own hand: From this point on, Paul stopped dictating (Rom. 16:22; Gal. 6:11) and completed the letter in his own handwriting. let him be accursed: It may seem harsh that Paul would wish God's damnation on those who do not love Jesus. But the acceptance or rejection of Christ is serious business. Those who reject the Lord Jesus are enemies of God (Gal. 1:8, 9). In the next breath Paul desires the coming of our Lord with an Aramaic expression, marana tha, meaning "Lord, come."

The Second Epistle to the Corinthians

———— SECOND CORINTHIANS IS THE MOST AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL of Paul's letters and probably the most difficult letter that Paul had to write. In previous letters, Paul had exhorted the Corinthian church to correct some abuses that were occurring in the congregation. However, some false teachers in the congregation were antagonized by Paul's rebuke and rejected his warnings. As a result, in this letter Paul was forced to defend his character, and more importantly his apostolic authority, in the face of slanderous accusations. His defense reveals the trials and tribulations, the problems and the pressures of his itinerant ministry more than any other book in the Bible. Yet like the rest of Paul's letters, Second Corinthians points past Paul's sweat and tears to the power that lay behind his actions and words: the Lord Jesus Christ.

In First Corinthians, Paul had instructed the believers in Corinth to discipline an incestuous member (1 Cor. 5), and to take a collection for the poor saints in Jerusalem (1 Cor. 16:1–4). Titus gave Paul a report that was on the whole encouraging (2:14; 7:5–7). The Corinthians had responded properly to First Corinthians. They had faithfully carried out the discipline necessary (2:5–11). But Titus also informed Paul about the presence of "false apostles" (11:13) who accused Paul of walking according to the flesh (1:12, 17; 10:2), being deceitful (2:17; 4:2; 12:16), intimidating the church with his letters (10:9, 10), unjustly mistreating someone to the point of ruining that person (7:2), and defrauding people (7:2). These false teachers probably pointed out that Paul had not returned as he promised, and used this as evidence for his duplicity (1:15–17, 23, 24). They even attempted to discredit Paul by charging that he was raising money to enrich himself (7:2; 8:16–23). Inevitably these accusations raised doubts in the minds of the Corinthians about the integrity of the apostle Paul.

Paul wrote Second Corinthians out of his concern for the Corinthian church (7:12). He wanted to offer the church some further instructions concerning the repentant offender (2:5–11) as well as about the collection for the poor saints in Jerusalem (9:1–5). However, Paul's main purpose for writing Second Corinthians was to defend his ministry. Paul's opponents in Corinth had severely attacked him. He wrote this letter to prove that his ministry was sincere and genuine, and to reassert his authority as an apostle of Christ.

Second Corinthians is primarily a personal letter, defending Paul's ministry among the Corinthians and appealing to the factions in the church to reconcile themselves to each other. Yet Paul still uses doctrine to address this church's problems. He speaks of the foundational doctrines of the Christian faith: the Trinity (1:21, 22; 13:14), as well as the deity (1:12, 19; 4:5), humanity (8:9), death (5:19, 21), and resurrection of Christ (5:15). Paul reaffirms that all believers have been sealed by the Holy Spirit (1:22) and have been given the Spirit as a deposit (1:22; 5:5). The believing Corinthians are in Christ (5:7) and Christ is in them (13:3, 4). They will be resurrected (4:14; 5:1–8) and evaluated at the judgment seat of Christ (5:10), where they will either be ashamed (5:3) or rewarded (5:9, 10). Paul points out that part of the reason for the Corinthians' difficulties and divisions was Satan's opposition to the church. He blinds unbelievers to truth (4:4) and uses every opportunity to divide the believers (2:11). That is why Paul exhorts the Corinthians to lead holy lives, to repent of the sins of the past, and to be reconciled to each other. Thus, in this personal letter defending his ministry and authority, Paul still weaves doctrine into the fabric of his discussion. For Paul, the essence of Christian faith touched on every facet of life, not only divisions and controversies like those that disturbed the Corinthian church.

Second Corinthians begins by identifying the author as Paul (1:1; 2:1). The style of the letter confirms Paul's authorship, as does the testimony of the early church. Some critics theorize that chs. 10—13 were not part of the original letter because the tone is different from chs. 1—9. The spirit of the first nine chapters is joyful and jubilant, while the spirit of the last four is one of sorrow and severity. Many of these critics claim that chs. 10—13 are part of a lost letter referred to in 2:4. However, the final chapters of Second Corinthians are firm, not "sorrowful." Moreover, no early manuscript or author can be cited to support such a theory. The difference in tone can be accounted for by the change of subject in those chapters.

Paul wrote First Corinthians during the last year of his ministry at Ephesus, on his third missionary journey, probably in the early spring of A.D. 56. Second Corinthians was written shortly after First Corinthians. Thus, the date of Second Corinthians is probably the fall of A.D. 56.

In order to understand the purpose of Second Corinthians, one must know about the background to the letter, that is, what had occurred between the writing of First Corinthians and this letter. Reconstructing that background, however, is complicated.

The issues are: (1) How many visits did Paul make to Corinth before he wrote Second Corinthians (2:1; 12:14)? (2) How many letters had he written (2:3, 4, 9; 7:18)? (3) Who was "the offender" (2:5; 7:12)? There are two basic ways of reconstructing the life and letters of Paul to explain these references. The traditional view takes the references in Second Corinthians to a previous letter to refer to First Corinthians. In this case, the "offender" is the incestuous person of 1 Cor. 5. A more recent interpretation contends that the data in Second Corinthians does not fit First Corinthians; therefore, there must have been another letter written by Paul to Corinth between First and Second Corinthians. Either that letter was lost, or else it is chs. 10—13 of Second Corinthians. Those holding this theory usually maintain that Paul must have visited Corinth briefly between the writing of First and Second Corinthians, based on the word "again" in 2:1. This is sometimes called the "painful visit." According to this view, the "offender" was not the incestuous person of 1 Cor. 5, but the leader of a party opposed to Paul.

The traditional view contends that the data of Second Corinthians does fit the facts of First Corinthians. Therefore the "previous letter" is First Corinthians and "the offender" is the incestuous member. According to this view, there was "no painful visit," for the word "again" in 2:1 does not necessarily mean that Paul made a visit between writing First and Second Corinthians. It simply means he did not want to return "in sorrow." The reference in 12:14 and 13:1, 2 to a "third time" does not mean Paul was coming for his third time; it simply means that he was "ready" to come for a third time. He had planned to come (1 Cor. 16:5–9), evidently was ready to come (12:14), and then did not actually make the trip (1:15–17, 23).

Thus, the background of Second Corinthians may be pieced together as follows: Paul founded the Corinthian church (Acts 18:1–17; 1 Cor. 3:6, 10). After eighteen months he departed from Corinth and wrote a letter which is now lost (1 Cor. 5:9). Paul then talked to some members of Chloe's household about quarrels in the Corinthian church (1 Cor. 1:11). Perhaps at this point, Paul sent Timothy on a trip that included Corinth (1 Cor. 4:17; 16:10). Then a committee arrived from Corinth with questions for Paul (1 Cor. 7:1; 16:7). Then Paul wrote the book now called First Corinthians to correct disorders and answer questions from the Corinthian church. Paul probably sent Titus to Corinth with First Corinthians. After sending him, Paul became deeply concerned about how the Corinthians would respond to what he had written. He had called them carnal (1 Cor. 3:1) and proud (1 Cor. 4:18). In the meantime, serious difficulties arose at Ephesus, so he left ahead of schedule (Acts 20:1). He stopped at Troas to preach the gospel (2:12). But because he did not find Titus there and was still eager to hear about the Corinthians, he hastened to Macedonia (2:13). There Paul found Titus. According to an early tradition, Paul wrote Second Corinthians from Philippi.

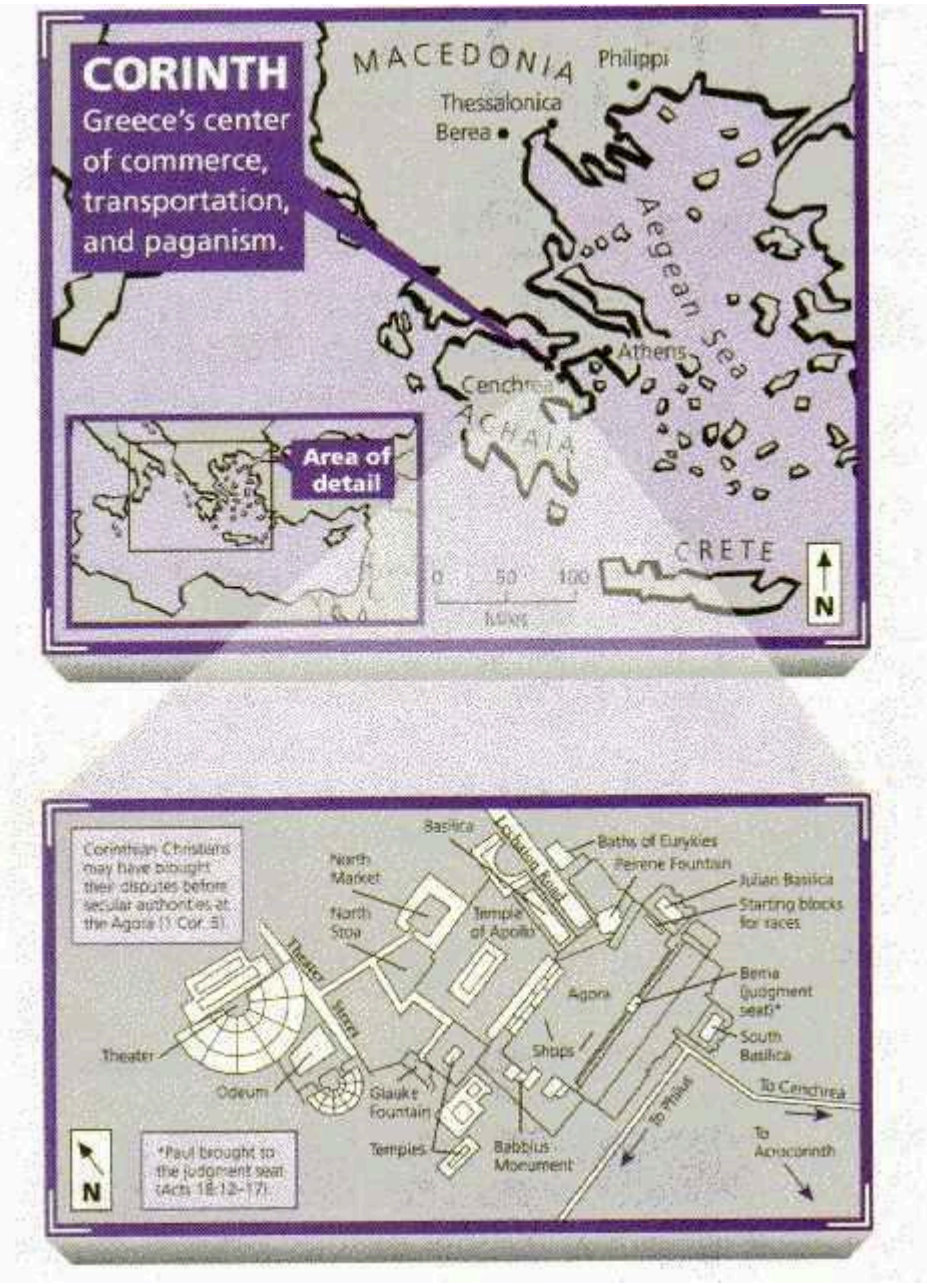
Commentary

1:1, 2 Second Corinthians opens the way most ancient letters did: salutation, author, recipients, and greeting. The author was Paul, an apostle. His identification with Jesus Christ is especially important in this letter because false apostles (11:12–15; 1 Cor. 4:14–16) had opposed him in Corinth and caused confusion in the church. Timothy is listed as coauthor. This companion of Paul is not mentioned in the introduction to 1 Cor., presumably because Timothy had already been sent to Corinth (1 Cor. 4:17; 16:10). That he appears here indicates that he has since rejoined the apostle, given his report concerning the affairs at Corinth, and traveled with him to Macedonia. Paul and Timothy wrote this letter to the church at Corinth and all believers in Achaia, what is today southern Greece. Grace to you and peace was Paul's standard greeting. With it, Paul was expressing his prayer that the Corinthians would experience God's favor and the joy that results from being in a proper relationship with the Lord.

1:3 A word of thanks often followed a letter's salutation (vv. 1, 2). Blessed expresses adoration and praise. Paul called God the God and Father of Christ. Even though Jesus is God, as the incarnate Son He was dependent on God the Father. Thus, God the Father was His God. Comfort here means "exhortation," "encouragement," "cheer." Paul used this word, sometimes translated "consolation," ten times in the following five verses (vv. 3–7). This is the purpose of our gathering in the church (Heb. 10:24, 25), and it is Paul's subject in ch. 7 (7:12, 13). When they meet, believers should encourage each other in the faith.



The City of Corinth

Corinth was a major city of Greece situated on the Isthmus of Corinth between the Ionian Sea and the Aegean Sea. A transportation hub for both land and sea travel, it was also a major center for pagan religions. More than twelve temples have been excavated at Corinth, including the magnificent temple of Apollo, with its 38 Doric columns 24 feet high. The temple of Aphrodite, goddess of love, employed at least 1,000 temple prostitutes. The city had a widespread reputation for gross immorality.

1:4 Tribulation means distress or of affliction. God comforts us not only to make us comfortable but also to make us comforters. The comfort that God gives to us becomes a gift we can give to others (7:6; Acts 9:10–19). Our willingness to share it reflects the sincerity of our faith (John 13:35).

1:5 Tribulation (v. 4) is called the sufferings of Christ. Christ suffered as a bearer of our sins (1 Pet. 3:18) and as a servant to His disciples (John 13:1–17). Those who follow Christ also will experience the same suffering while they serve (John 15:20), for which they will receive a reward, "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (4:17).

1:6 Paul's example when afflicted encouraged the Corinthians to endure.

1:7 our hope for you: All who take part in sufferings for Christ are certain to be rewarded. Consolation here means the grace, strength, and deliverance that Christ gives to His servants (Luke 9:23, 24).

1:8 Paul's commitment to Christ and His service did not by any means exempt him from trouble. By Asia Paul meant the Roman province in western Asia Minor, present-day Turkey. It is not known exactly where Paul was experiencing this trouble, but it was probably at Ephesus. Most likely it was the uproar stirred up against Paul by Demetrius the silversmith (Acts 19:23–41; 1 Cor. 15:31, 32).

1:9, 10 the sentence of death: Paul returns to the theme of death and resurrection several times in this letter (2:16; 4:7–14; 5:1–10; 13:4). Here Paul is probably referring to the life-threatening persecution he faced when he preached the gospel (Acts 14:19, 20).

1:11 As Paul trusted the Lord and as the Corinthians prayed, God delivered him (v. 10). We should pray for one another so that thanks may be given. If many people intercede, many will thank God when He answers. Whenever we face difficulties, we should let others know so they can pray and God can be praised. Answers to prayer should always receive public praise, for our Deliverer deserves our adoration.

1:12 Paul's critics accused him of living for his own selfish interest (10:2). They used his failure to return to Corinth as evidence of his lack of sincerity. Paul began the body of this letter by defending his integrity (1:12—2:4). Fleshly wisdom refers to selfish interest (contrast with Paul's admonition and Christ's example of humility in Phil. 2:3–8). Paul's godly sincerity was more abundantly clear to the Corinthians than to others; he spent 18 months with them (Acts 18:11).

1:13, 14 Paul's critics had accused him of being insincere in his letters, of writing one thing and doing the opposite (10:10). Paul denied these charges. He meant what he wrote; there were no hidden agendas in his letters.

1:15, 16 Paul had intended to visit the Corinthians (1 Cor. 16:5–7), but he had failed to come. This prompted some of the members of the Corinthian church to accuse him of living according to "fleshly wisdom" (vv. 12, 17). The second benefit was the benefit of two visits, one on his way to Macedonia and the other after leaving (v. 16).

1:17 when I was planning this: Paul rhetorically asked: When he made plans to visit the Corinthians, was he joking, guided by self-interest, or inconsistent? The Greek text indicates that these questions expected a negative answer. Paul explained later why he changed his plans (1:22—2:4).

1:18 Before finishing the defense of his personal integrity (1:23—2:4), Paul defended his preaching: it was both true and trustworthy (vv. 18–22). Our word is a reference to teaching of Paul (v. 19).

1:19 Paul's preaching was not Yes and No at the same time—not inconsistent or contradictory. Instead, his preaching reflected the truthfulness and faithfulness of God, because his teaching was based on the Scriptures and the teachings of Christ.

1:20 All of God's promises concerning Christ are true and trustworthy: a Yes.

1:21, 22 In the Greek text, anointed is connected to establishes. God confirmed Paul and his fellow workers by anointing them. This anointing probably refers to special empowerment by the Holy Spirit, similar to the anointing John described in 1 John 2:20, 27. sealed: Sealing indicates ownership and security. The sealing and the giving of the Holy Spirit are also linked. The Holy Spirit is a guarantee, the down payment that there is more spiritual blessing to come and that the believer will receive eternal life.

(Gk. sphragizo) (1:22; Eph. 1:13; 4:30) Strong’s #4972; guarantee (Gk. arrabon) (1:22; 5:5; Eph. 1:14) Strong’s #4972; 728: The Greek word translated sealed here was a technical term denoting a seller’s guarantee of the validity of a purchase. As such, God’s gift of the Holy Spirit is our guarantee. In the ancient world people commonly branded or marked personal possessions as they sealed letters, with a seal identifying the owner or sender. In this passage, Paul was describing believers as being marked as God’s possession with the seal of the Holy Spirit. This seal will remain until we, as God’s possession, are completely redeemed (Eph. 1:13, 14; 4:30). Paul often used another term with sealed, namely arrabon, translated guarantee. This Greek term was commonly used for the promissory first installment that guaranteed a full, final payment. The word was also used by the ancients to refer to an engagement ring. As Christians, we have received the Spirit as a first installment, guarantee, and foretaste of the full inheritance yet to be given (Eph. 1:13, 14).

1:23 Paul had promised to come and use his authority, if necessary, to straighten out the problems at Corinth (1 Cor. 4:21). To spare them the pain of correction and give them an opportunity to correct themselves, he did not come. God is patient with us too. But Paul had warned them previously that their weakness, sickness, and even death was due to their failure to correct themselves (1 Cor. 11:30).

1:24 As an apostle, Paul had authority to discipline (10:2), but it was not his place to order the Corinthians around.

2:1 Paul changed his travel plans partly because he did not want to come to Corinth again in sorrow. Some have interpreted this verse to mean that Paul had made a painful visit to Corinth and wanted to avoid another one. Although the narrative in Acts does not indicate such a visit, some have proposed that Paul visited Corinth between the writing of the two letters, 1 and 2 Corinthians. However, the text does not necessarily say that he had made a previous painful visit, only that he did not want his next visit to Corinth to be in sorrow.

2:2 If there are those in the assembly who think Paul derived any degree of satisfaction from his previous visit, Paul assures them that it inflicted no small amount of hurt to his own heart. if I make you sorrowful, then who is he who makes me glad? The greatest joy the minister of the gospel can experience is to see that his spiritual children are walking in the truth (compare 2 John 4). Conversely, nothing is more painful than to have to employ the rod of correction. Paul derived no joy from that last encounter and the anxiety is still with him, as reflected in these verses.

2:3, 4 I wrote: Traditionally commentators have identified the previous letter to which Paul refers in these verses as 1 Corinthians. Many recent commentators believe that Paul is speaking about a letter written between 1 and 2 Corinthians that has been lost. Some have identified chs. 10—13 as this "lost letter" because the tone of those chapters seems to match the description of these verses, a letter of much affliction and anguish of heart.

2:5–11 Paul wrote of someone who had caused grief. The traditional interpretation has been that this offender was the incestuous man of 1 Cor. 5. Lately some commentators have suggested that the offender may be another person who had wronged Paul during the "painful visit" that he made between the writing of 1 and 2 Corinthians (vv. 3, 4).

Accountability in the Body of Christ

The discipline of a Corinthian believer (2 Cor. 2:6) points to one of the important functions of the body of Christ—to hold its members accountable for how they conduct their lives. In the case mentioned here, the censure of the church caused the offender to repent and change his ways, restoring his spiritual life and bringing joy to the church.

Accountability is easy to talk about but difficult to practice. No one likes to be judged by others. In modern society it's especially easy to feel that one's personal life is no one else's business. But a study of Scripture reveals a number of important principles about accountability: (1) As believers, we are accountable not only for our actions, but also for our attitudes. In the performance-oriented work world, evaluations tend to measure results alone—higher sales, greater cost control, more clients served. Everything is quantitative. But God is interested in our innermost heart. He looks at the quality of our character. As God told Samuel, "The LORD does not see as man sees; for man looks at the outward appearance, but the LORD looks at the heart" (1 Sam. 16:7).

(2) Accountability depends on trust. To hold ourselves accountable to others is to trust their judgment and to believe that they are committed to the same truths and values that we are. It also helps if we can sense that they have our best interests at heart. That's why Paul pleaded with the Corinthians to forsake their divisions and "be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment" (1 Cor. 1:10). Without that unity, they would never submit to each other.

(3) Accountability is directly related to the principle of submission. Every person must struggle with the natural tendency toward rebellion against God. Accountability involves allowing others to enter into that struggle with us. But that means that sometimes we must defer to the judgment or counsel of another, especially when they challenge us with clear-cut Scriptural truth or the wisdom of personal experience. Paul told the Ephesians that part of living in the will of the Lord involves "submitting to one another in the fear of God" (Eph. 5:21).

It's not surprising that participation in the body of Christ would involve accountability, because all of us experience accountability in many other areas of life. For example, the government holds us accountable for obeying the law and paying taxes. Likewise, government officials are accountable to the public for their decisions. Employees are accountable to the boss for their work. Likewise, corporate officers are accountable to stockholders for quarterly financial results. In short, accountability touches us at home, at work, at church, and even at play.

But our attitudes toward accountability in general ultimately reflect our attitude toward accountability to God. If we are rebellious toward the One who created us and loves us most, how will we be able to submit to others?

2:6 Punishment means "warning," "censure," or "rebuke." This is a reference to the church discipline Paul had instructed the Corinthians to use on the person mentioned in v. 5. It was tough love, but it worked. The man repented.

2:7, 8 forgive and comfort him: The purpose of church discipline is repentance and restoration. Forgiveness should always follow the correction, just as Christ instructed (Matt. 18:15–35). There is no place for vindictiveness; instead the love of Christ is to be expressed through us. Serious consequences are promised to those who fail to forgive. Continuing failure to forgive will bring loss at the judgment seat of Christ.

2:9, 10 in all things: Following Paul's instructions to discipline the offender had proved their obedience. For Paul, obedience was always to Christ and only to Paul as he followed Christ (10:5; 1 Cor. 11:1).

2:11 One of Satan's devices, or designs, is to cheat the believer out of true forgiveness. The devil will try to divide the church any way he can.

2:12, 13 Troas was a city on the Aegean coast, where Paul had received his call to preach the gospel in Macedonia (Acts 16:8). Paul had no rest because he was deeply concerned about the Corinthians and was looking for Titus, who was on his way back from Corinth. Paul then crossed the Aegean Sea and arrived in Macedonia, probably at the city of Philippi.

2:14 When Titus gave Paul good news about the Corinthians (7:5–7), Paul burst forth with a hymn of praise. This interruption became an extended digression. Paul did not resume the story of his trip to Macedonia and his meeting with Titus until 7:5 (verses 2:14—7:4 give a long account of his ministry). God … leads us in triumph: Paul used the metaphor of the Roman triumphal procession to praise God. When a Roman general was victorious in a war, he led his army and the captives in a parade down the main street. God is the general who has conquered. Paul is one of His officers following in His train. In the Roman procession, priests carrying censers filled with incense followed the conqueror. Paul the priest set forth the fragrance of Christ by preaching the gospel.

2:15 In v. 14 the fragrance was the knowledge of Christ; here it was Paul, who was a sweet smell to God for his faithfulness in preaching the gospel. Fragrance is sweet on the basis of faithfulness to the preaching of the gospel, not on success in response. Too often a person's ministry is judged by whether he or she draws large crowds or has spectacular buildings or church productions. God's standards are different. He asks for faithfulness to the truth and to our calling. God alone gives the increase according to His sovereign purpose.

2:16 The leader in a Roman procession was followed by priests (dispensing incense), officers, soldiers, and captives. The aroma of the event represented victorious life to the soldiers and slavery or death to the captives. In the same way, the gospel message gives life to those who accept it, but it represents death and judgment to those who reject it. The answer to Paul's question who is sufficient for these things is given in 3:5. It is God who makes us sufficient.

2:17 Peddling means "to make merchandise of," "to sell." Some people use religion for personal gain. To them the gospel is merchandise to be peddled for profit. Thus, they corrupt or compromise it. This is the first reference in this epistle to false teachers. It may be a subtle reference to Paul's opponents. Paul, unlike some others, was sufficient for the gospel ministry because he was sincere; his motives were pure.

3:1–18 Paul contrasts the life-changing work of the Spirit in the lives of his readers with the letters of commendation carried by other religious teachers (vv. 1–6) and with the Law of Moses engraved on stones (vv. 7–18).

3:1 Having again declared his sincerity (2:17), Paul asked if he needed a letter of commendation to back him up, as some others did. The language implies that the false apostles mentioned later in this letter (11:13) had tried to gain acceptance by using such references.

3:2 You are … written in our hearts: The Corinthians were Paul's letter of recommendation. These verses do not mean that letters of recommendation should not be used. Paul himself used such letters before his conversion (Acts 9:1, 2) and after (8:22; Rom. 16:1; 1 Cor. 16:10; Col. 4:10). In this case Paul did not need one because he already had one: the believing Corinthians and his ministry among them. Paul's love for the Corinthians was known to all who were acquainted with his ministry. One of the qualifications for ministry is love for people, both God's people and the lost.

3:3 an epistle of Christ: Paul appealed to the Corinthians themselves for proof of his ministry's authenticity. God had changed them—an obvious matter of public record.

3:4 trust: The Greek word means "confidence" (2:14—3:3; Phil. 4:19). Paul was convinced that Christ would make his ministry effective.

3:5, 6 Sufficient means "adequate," or "competent." Paul placed his confidence not in himself or his own abilities but in the Lord. This is the answer to the question asked in 2:16, Who is sufficient? The letter is a reference to the old covenant—that is, the Ten Commandments written on stone. The letter kills because all break the law, and the penalty is death.

The Importance of Image

As Paul traveled through the cities of the Roman Empire, he always gave thought to how he would be perceived, but his biggest concern was whether observers would see Jesus in him. To illustrate this principle, Paul recalled a phenomenon that occurred during the period in which Moses received the law (2 Cor. 3:7, 13). As Israel wandered through the wilderness, God revealed Himself to the people through what looked like a consuming fire (Ex. 24:17). But to Moses He spoke face to face (33:11). This encounter with the living God had such an effect on Moses that his face would shine with an afterglow whenever he returned to the people. To dispel their fear, he put a veil over his face to hide the glory that resulted from his proximity to God.

Paul argues that we as believers have an even closer proximity to God than Moses did, for God Himself lives inside us (2 Cor. 3:8). Thus, when we meet others, they ought to see the glory of God shining out of us (3:9–11, 18). In other words, they ought to see Jesus.

3:7–11 Paul now lists three contrasts between the OT ministry and the NT ministry. Each contrast begins with “if” (vv. 7, 9, 11). In each case, the NT ministry is said to be more glorious than the OT ministry (vv. 8, 9, 11).

3:7, 8 Paul lists the first of three contrasts between the OT ministry and the NT ministry (vv. 7, 9, 11). First, the OT ministry engraved on stones (a reference to the Ten Commandments) was glorious, but the ministry of the Spirit is more glorious, because the glory of the ministry of the law given through Moses was passing away. Besides, though the law itself is holy (Rom. 7:12), the ministry of the law is the ministry of death, whereas the ministry of the Spirit is the ministry of life (v. 6). The Holy Spirit produces eternal life.

3:9, 10 The second contrast (vv. 7, 11) is that the OT ministry was a ministry of condemnation, but the NT ministry is more glorious because it is a ministry of righteousness. God declares righteous those who believe in His Son, and then the Holy Spirit empowers the believer to live righteously. This first work of God is called justification, and the second is called sanctification.

3:11 The third contrast (vv. 7, 9) is that one ministry is passing while the other ministry remains. The new covenant would supersede the old covenant established at Mount Sinai between God and the nation of Israel.

3:12 Paul used boldness of speech, a phrase that means "freedom of speech" or "frankness." Instead of being fearful or reluctant, Paul was frank and courageous.

3:13 unlike Moses: What follows is an allegorization of the account given in Ex. 34:29–35. put a veil over his face: The veil was not to hide the glory but to obscure it. The people saw his brightness but not directly. Not only did this veil actually conceal the brightness of the glory but it also concealed the end of what was passing away. The transience of the glory which accompanied the old covenant was not manifestly evident to the children of Israel. And for Paul this has typical significance.

3:14, 15 The veil on the face of Moses reminded Paul of another veil. As Moses' veil concealed the fading glory of his ministry, so there is a veil on the hearts of people concealing the fading away of the old covenant.

3:16 taken away: Whenever Moses turned to the Lord, he took off the veil (Ex. 34:34). Likewise, we find freedom in Christ by looking to Him.

3:17 the Lord is Spirit: The Holy Spirit is God Himself, like the Father and like the Son. liberty: The Spirit gives us freedom from sin, death, and the condemnation of the law (vv. 7–12).

3:18 All believers behold the glory of the Lord in the Scripture and are transformed into the image of God. Christ is the image of God (4:4). glory to glory: An ever-growing glory. As believers behold the glory of God in the Word of God, the Spirit of God transforms them into the likeness of Jesus Christ. This is a description of the gradual process of sanctification. If we want to become like Christ, we must spend quality time focusing on Him in the Word of God. This reflection then becomes the raw material that the Spirit of God uses to form Christ in us.

4:1–3 Paul now draws a conclusion from what he said about his ministry in 3:4–18. This ministry is the NT ministry (3:6), a ministry of the Spirit (3:6), of life (3:7), and of righteousness (3:9). It is a glorious ministry (3:7–12) of liberty (3:17). Paul did not achieve this ministry by his own human ability but by God's mercy (3:5, 6). Lose heart means "to become weary," "to become tired," or "to despair." No matter how difficult the task or how great the opposition, Paul did not retreat in silence but spoke boldly because he was motivated by the grace of God (3:12; 1 Thess. 2:1–12). Hidden means "secret." Paul rejected craftiness—that is, being unscrupulous or handling the Word of God deceitfully (2:17). Apparently, Paul had been accused of being crafty (12:16) and of being deceitful in the way he preached. Paul defended his ministry because it was based on the truthfulness of the Word of God.

4:4, 5 Unbelievers have a barrier to overcome: the god of this age has blinded their minds. Because of Satan's deception, sometimes what the world thinks is obviously true is painfully wrong (Prov. 14:12). image of God: Jesus Christ is God's Son, and He perfectly reveals God the Father to us. Although human beings have been created in the image of God, through sin they have fallen from a perfect relationship with God. Jesus Christ is restoring believers to what they were originally created to be (3:18; Gen. 1:26). Christ Jesus the Lord: Paul's message is that Jesus is divine. bondservants: Paul describes himself and those who minister with him as slaves to people. They served the Corinthians for Jesus' sake.

4:6 As God commanded the light to shine in the darkness at creation (Gen. 1:3), so he "turns on" the light in peoples' hearts so they can see who Jesus Christ is. People who do not believe are blinded by Satan (v. 4). But believers see the light.

“earthen vessels”

(Gk. ostrakinos skeuos) (4:7; 2 Tim. 2:20) Strong’s #3749; 4632: This Greek phrase means “clay pots.” In ancient times it was a common practice to bury treasures inside clay jars. Two recent discoveries of biblical manuscripts—the Chester Beatty Papyrus and some of the Dead Sea Scrolls—reveal that these manuscripts were hidden away in jars for nearly two thousand years. As these treasures were enclosed in earthen vessels, so the indwelling Christ lives within our earthly bodies.

4:7 The treasure, or the divine revelation of Jesus Christ, is in a common clay pot! The reason why God places such a valuable treasure in a lowly vessel is that it might be apparent that the power of the gospel is of God and not the vessel.

4:8 Hard pressed is translated afflicted in 1:6. In the Greek text, an identical expression occurs in 7:5, where it is rendered “troubled on every side.” But in 7:5 Paul adds, “Outside were afflictions, inside were fears.” Thus, every side means “inside and outside.” Yet Paul was not crushed, a compound Greek word from the words for narrow and space. Perplexed is derived from two Greek words: the word for no plus the word for way. Thus, perplexed means “to be at a loss.” One is perplexed when one sees no way out. Yet Paul was not in despair, which means “utterly at a loss.” As believers, we will face trials. But we must remember that God controls trials and uses them to strengthen His people. God’s glory is manifested through broken vessels, through people who endure troubles by relying on His power.

4:9 The picture behind the word persecuted is pursuit by someone determined to harm someone else. Paul was not forsaken by the Lord, but he was struck down. This literally happened (Acts 14:19). In Lystra a crowd stoned Paul, leaving him for dead. But he was not destroyed, that is, killed (11:23–33). The Lord spared his life so he could continue to preach the Good News and testify to God’s deliverance.

4:10, 11 The expression carrying about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus is explained as being delivered to death for Jesus’ sake. In his service for Christ, Paul constantly faced death so that the life of Jesus may also be manifested. God’s deliverance of Paul was evidence that Jesus is alive (1:8–10). For Paul, the death and resurrection of Jesus was a model for his ministry. In his suffering, he participated in Jesus' suffering and death. But Paul's endurance of all types of hardships produced eternal life in those to whom he preached the gospel. In the same way, Jesus' death was merely a precursor to His resurrection to eternal life.

4:12 life in you: Had Paul not been willing to risk death to bring the gospel to Corinth, the Corinthians would not have received eternal life.

4:13 therefore I spoke: Quoting Ps. 116:10, Paul explained why he was willing to risk his life for the gospel. His belief in the gospel compelled him to tell others.

4:14 He who raised up: Paul's belief was focused upon the God of resurrection power, which motivated him to face difficulties, danger, and death for Christ's sake. knowing: Paul rested in what he knew about God, not how he felt.

4:15 your sakes: All the suffering that Paul endured (vv. 8–11) brought good to others and glory to God.

4:16 Paul concluded that the Corinthians should not lose heart, because God would raise them up with Jesus (v. 14). Here is a great principle. A proper focus on our glorious future with Christ will empower us to endure any kind of trouble. The outward man is the physical body, called in this section "the earthen vessel" (v. 7), "the body" (v. 10), "mortal flesh" (v. 11), "earthly house" (5:1), and "tent" (5:1). The afflictions (4:17) Paul encountered (4:8–10) contributed to the perishing process. Those pressures afflicted his physical frame. The inward man is "renewed" on a daily basis. Although the external is degenerating and dying, the internal does not lose heart but is renewed, reenergized, and revitalized.

4:17 Working means "producing," or "accomplishing." Afflictions produce glory. But the glory is out of proportion to the affliction: trials are light and temporary compared to the eternal glory we will receive (Mark 10:30). Paul's focus on the future enabled him to assess problems properly and see how small they were compared to their eternal results.

4:18 Look means "to keep one's eye on," "to consider," or "to contemplate." The noun form of this verb means "goal" (Phil. 3:14). In order not to lose heart, the believer needs to shift his or her focus from that which is seen to that which is not seen, from temporary problems to the glorious eternal rewards he or she will receive (v. 17).

5:1 Paul explains in more detail what he has just said (4:16–18). The human body, like a demolished house or a dismantled tent, will be destroyed unless death is preceded by the Rapture. The believer's future house, his resurrected body, is a God-made building, which is eternal.

5:2 Suffering makes believers groan with longing for their glorious future in heaven (Rom. 8:22, 23).

5:3 not be found naked: Paul looks forward not only to his resurrected body but also to the reward he would receive in the future. What the believer does with the salvation he has been given will determine what will be worn in the kingdom reign with Christ.

5:4 The believer's future experience is called life, meaning the full experience of eternal life in Christ. The life experience of the future is being determined by how we invest this life today (4:17).

5:5 guarantee: The Holy Spirit's work in believers' lives can be compared to a deposit or down payment (1:22). The presence of the Holy Spirit assures believers that God has purchased them. They are no longer slaves to sin, but His children. They will receive all the rights and privileges of children of God when their Savior returns.

5:6 Because the believer has God's guarantee (v. 5), he or she can be confident, a word that means "to be of good cheer" or "to be of courage."

5:7 Sight means "appearance." Christ is not physically present, so believers live by faith (John 20:29).

IN COMPARISON

The Judgment Seat of Christ

What does it involve?	Only believers will appear before the judgment seat of Christ. The "great white throne" judgment described in Rev. 20:11–15 is for unbelievers.
What is it?	At his judgment seat, Jesus will determine a believer's faithfulness to Him and reward each person appropriately (1 Cor. 3:11–15). This will not be a determination of one's eternal destiny; that issue is decided the moment a person believes in Christ.
Who will preside?	The risen Christ.
Where will it occur?	Heaven (5:8).
When will it occur?	The Scriptures do not specify when this will occur. It is obviously at a time when all Christians are gathered in heaven.
What is the nature of these eternal rewards?	Some commentators consider the various "crowns" mentioned in the NT as the rewards (1 Cor. 9:25; 2 Tim. 4:8; James 1:12; 1 Pet. 5:4; Rev. 2:10). These will eventually be placed before the throne of God (Rev. 4:10). Others point to the parable of the minas in Luke 19:11–27 and see the prospects of serving and ruling in eternity as being directly tied to our faithfulness on earth. We do not know the exact nature of the "new heavens and new earth" or "the kingdom of God." But the Scriptures do seem to imply that eternity will involve serving and reigning (Matt. 25:21, 23; Rev. 22:3, 5).
Why is this doctrine significant?	Knowing that in the future we will stand before Jesus Christ and face a review of our lives should motivate us to live righteously and faithfully in the present.
How can we prepare for our eternal "audit"?	Walk by faith, not by sight (5:7). Develop a longing for heaven (5:8). Make it our chief aim in life to please the Lord (5:9). Keep the judgment seat of Christ in view (5:10).

5:8 After the parenthetical thought of v. 7, Paul resumes where he left off in v. 6. He was not only confident (v. 6) that he was going to be with the Lord; he was pleased that he would be with the Lord after his death. This is one of the passages in the NT that indicates where believers will go immediately after their death; they will be with Jesus in heaven (Phil. 1:23). Jesus' promise to the repentant criminal on the cross next to Him indicates this: "Today you will be with Me in Paradise" (Luke 23:43).

5:9, 10 Wanting to be with Christ (v. 8) produces the ambition to please Him (Luke 19:17). We strive to please the Lord not only because we know we will be with Him (v. 8) but also because He will evaluate our work—whether good or bad—and reward us accordingly. The person unconcerned about doing good deeds shows a grave lack of vision. Appear means "to make visible" or "to make known." Here it may refer to nothing more than an appearance, such as appearing in court before a judge. Or it may mean believers will stand before the Lord with their true character revealed. Receive means "to receive back," "to get an equivalent," or "to get one's due." The believer will be either approved or ashamed (5:3; Luke 19:11–26; 1 Cor. 3:14, 15; 9:27; 1 John 2:28; 2 John 7, 8). This truth should dramatically change the way we live, for our actions will be evaluated by our Master.

5:11–21 Both the certainty of judgment (v. 11) and the love of Christ for us (vv. 12–15) motivated Paul to proclaim the transforming (vv. 16, 17, 21) and reconciling (vv. 18–20) work of Christ.

5:11 Therefore indicates that this verse is a conclusion drawn from the previous one. The terror of the Lord is the fear of standing before the Lord and having one's life exposed and evaluated. The reality of giving an account to the Lord motivated Paul to persuade people, in this context meaning to convince the Corinthians of his sincerity and integrity.

5:12 Paul was defending the integrity of his ministry, not to win the approval of the Corinthians again (3:1), but so the Corinthians could answer those who bragged about their outward appearance, such as the false apostles present among them (11:18). Opportunity literally means "a base of operation." This letter would be a foundation or base for those who wanted to defend Paul's authority and ministry in the Corinthian church.

5:13 If Paul was beside himself in exposing himself to danger, it was for God. If he was of a sound mind, it was for the sake of the Corinthians. The point is that Paul's motive for ministry was for the glory of God and the good of others, not his own glory. Thus, the Corinthians could justly defend him.

5:14 The phrase the love of Christ can mean either (1) Christ's love for us or (2) our love for Christ. The last part of the verse indicates that Paul had in mind Christ's love for us. Died for all refers to Christ's death for all believers. all died: In Christ believers die to sin (Rom. 6:1–14).

5:15 That in the phrase "that those" indicates the purpose of Christ's death for believers was that they should no longer live for themselves, but for Him.

5:16 Believers should not evaluate Christ or anyone else according to the flesh, that is, the way people typically evaluate each other (v. 12).

5:17 in Christ: Paul is presenting the results of Christ's death for the believer and the believer's death with Him (v. 14). Because believers are united with Jesus both in His death and resurrection, they participate in the new creation. That is, they receive the benefits of being restored by Christ to what God had originally created them to be (Gen. 1:26; 1 Cor. 15:45–49). All things have become new: A believer's life should change, because he or she is being transformed into the likeness of Christ (3:18). Instead of living for oneself, a believer lives for Christ (v. 15). Instead of evaluating others with the values of the world, a believer looks at this world through the eyes of faith (v. 16).

5:18 reconciled us to Himself: Because of Christ's propitiation, His satisfaction of God's righteous demands, God is now able to turn toward us. God has made us new creatures in Christ and has given us the ministry of reconciliation, a word meaning "a change of relation from enmity to peace." We who have been reconciled to God have the privilege of telling others that they can be reconciled to Him as well.

5:19 God could change His relationship toward us because our sins have been imputed (reckoned) to Christ, instead of to us. In other words, God placed our sins on Christ, who knew no sin. His death was in our place and for our sins. If we believe in Jesus, God counts Jesus' righteousness as our righteousness (v. 21). The word of reconciliation that has been entrusted to us is to tell all people that God wants to restore them to a relationship with Himself (Rom. 5:8). This is the Good News that everyone needs to hear.

5:20 Ambassadors are more than messengers. They are representatives of the sovereign who sent them. In the Roman Empire, there were two kinds of provinces, the senatorial and the imperial. The senatorial provinces were generally peaceful and friendly to Rome. They had submitted to Roman rule and were under the control of the Senate. The imperial provinces, however, had been acquired later, and were not as peaceful. These provinces were under the authority of the emperor himself. Syria, including Judea, was such an imperial province. To these provinces, the emperor sent ambassadors to govern and maintain peace. Christians have been called by their King to serve as ambassadors in a world that is in rebellion against Him. However, God has given His representatives a message of peace and reconciliation. In this way, believers are God's ambassadors, whose mission is to implore people to be reconciled to God, to listen to the forgiving voice of their Creator.

“righteousness of God”

(Gk. dikaiosune theou) (5:21; Rom. 1:17; 3:21, 22; 10:3) Strong’s #1343; 2316: The righteousness of God is a righteousness that comes from God; it is God’s way of making a sinner right, or just, before Him. Luther defined the righteousness of God as a “righteousness valid before God, which a man may possess through faith.” Luther said that this righteousness is the first and last need of any sinful individual. The word righteousness in Paul’s letter to the Romans carries a double sense, and may be labeled both legal and moral. In other words, the word refers to the legal action God takes in declaring believers righteous, but it also refers to perfect righteousness, a characteristic that can only be attributed to God Himself in Scripture and is the lofty standard for human behavior. This lofty standard cannot be achieved by anyone’s effort, so God has to act to bring His people into a right relationship with Himself.

5:21 no sin: Jesus never did anything wrong. Yet He died for our sins, so that we could be declared righteous, that is to say, justified (v. 19).

6:1 plead: In 5:20, Paul describes God as pleading for people to be reconciled to Him. Here Paul pleads (the same Greek word occurs in 5:20) with the Corinthians also. in vain: If believers live for themselves (5:15), they will have received the grace of God, but they will miss out on a heavenly reward for their service to Him (5:10; 1 Cor. 3:15). In Phil. 2:12 Paul encourages those who have been saved to work out or develop their salvation. The Corinthians were failing at this very point. They were saved and stuck, so to speak. They were not continually working out their salvation. Paul was encouraging them to consider their lives and realign them more closely to Christ.

6:2 Paul quoted Is. 49:8 to remind the Corinthians that God was ready to listen to them and to help them. Salvation (Gk. soterias) begins with justification, continues through sanctification, and ends with glorification. He would deliver them, if only they turned to Him in faith.

6:3 Offense means "an occasion of stumbling." Paul did not do anything that would cause others to stumble in their faith. be blamed: The word means "to find fault with" and implies ridicule. In other words, no one could find fault with Paul's work among the Corinthians.

6:4–10 In many different types of situations (11:23–28), Paul and his coworkers conducted themselves as righteous ministers of God. These verses list the different types of experiences in which Paul and his fellow workers found themselves: (1) vv. 4, 5 describe the suffering they endured; (2) vv. 6, 7 describe how they conducted themselves; and (3) vv. 8–10 describe their paradoxical experiences.

6:4-10 In much patience is followed by three triplets that indicate specific situations in which their endurance was demonstrated. Sleeplessness is not insomnia but going without sleep voluntarily in order to spend more time in ministry (11:27).

6:11—7:4 This section is the high point of emotion for the whole epistle. It begins and ends with Paul asking the Corinthians to open their hearts to God, Paul's intense desire to be reconciled with the Corinthians. The accusations against him and their own sinful entanglements resulted in the Corinthians withdrawing from him, at least emotionally. He had been totally open to them, but they had not responded to him in the same spirit.

6:11 O Corinthians: Paul addressed his readers by name on only two other occasions (Gal. 3:1; Phil. 4:15). When he did this he was expressing strong emotion.

6:12, 13 The suspicions planted by Paul's enemies had restricted their affections for Paul (2 Tim. 4:10). Paul had been open with the Corinthians (v. 11) and asked that they be open with him.

6:14 unequally yoked: Paul's use of "yoke" comes from Deut. 22:10, where the Israelites were directed not to yoke an ox and donkey together. The ox was a clean animal but the donkey was not (Deut. 14:1–8). Moreover, from a practical standpoint, the two animals had different work styles and different natures. As this relates to Corinth, history reveals that the Corinthians were notorious for their associationalism. They had guilds, societies, or associations for practically everything. Every society had its own idol or protective deity. To fail to do obeisance to this idol would be to anger the god and bring its wrath down on the guild. Thus, the Corinthians tried to go along with this idol even though they did not believe in it. Evidently, the Corinthians were shutting Paul out of their hearts (vv. 11–13) and developing a dangerous affection for the false apostles (11:4, 13; Prov. 4:23).

6:15 The term Belial for Satan occurs only here in the NT. It refers to one who is vile and wicked and causes destruction.

6:16 you are the temple: A reference to Lev. 26:11, 12 as well as perhaps other passages such as Jer. 32:38 and Ezek. 37:27, to remind the Corinthians of their relationship with God. Since the Holy Spirit was living in them, they were God's new dwelling place (1 Cor. 6:19).

6:17, 18 Verse 17 is derived from Is. 52:11 with words from Ezek. 20:34 added. Verse 18 is taken from 2 Sam. 7:14 with words added from Is. 43:6. come out … be separate: Paul was not encouraging isolation from unbelievers (1 Cor. 9:5–13) but discouraging compromise with their sinful values and practices. He was urging them (and us) to maintain integrity in the world just as Christ did (John 15:14–16; Phil. 2:14–16).

6:18 father: This passage is not teaching that God will be a Father and an individual will be His child if that person withdraws from unbelievers. It is saying that since you are a believer and therefore God dwells in you, act like His child and you will enter fully into the experience of God being your Father. He will take care of you.

7:1 Based on the promises that God would receive them with favor (6:17) and provide for and protect them as a father does his children (6:18), Paul exhorted the Corinthians to cleanse themselves from all filthiness. In other words, they were to wash away all dirt from both flesh and spirit, meaning those actions and attitudes that came from having the false teachers in their midst (6:14). The point of cleansing is perfecting holiness. This means dedicating ourselves to Christ and living righteously (Heb. 6:1).

7:2 With the admonition open your hearts Paul resumed the discussion of 6:11–13. cheated: Perhaps the false teachers were charging that Paul had collected money for the poor saints at Jerusalem (1 Cor. 16:1–4) but had spent it on himself.

7:3 I do not say this to condemn: Paul was not blaming anyone; he was defending himself.

7:4 Paul was filled with comfort and joy because of the report he received from Titus about the Corinthians (v. 7).

7:5 Paul cared very much for the Corinthians. our bodies had no rest: Earlier he wrote, "I had no rest in my spirit" in Troas (2:12, 13). troubled on every side: The same expression, though translated differently, is used in 4:8 to express Paul's suffering in his ministry.

7:6 The Lord comforted, that is, encouraged Paul by allowing him to see Titus again.

7:7 but also by: Paul was encouraged to learn how Titus had been received by the Corinthians and had seen that they were accepting Paul's exhortations.

7:8, 9 Paul regretted that he had to write a "severe letter" to the Corinthians. But since it did cause the Corinthians to repent and turn to God, his sorrow was transformed into joy. Traditionally this letter has been identified as 1 Corinthians, but some recent commentators have suggested that it was another letter that Paul wrote after 1 Corinthians, but that has not been preserved (2:3, 4).

7:10 Godly sorrow produces repentance: True sorrow for sins leads to a change of mind and a turning to God. Since repentance means turning to God, who is the Savior, repentance results in spiritual deliverance, or salvation (6:2). But the kind of sorrow the world experiences produces death.

7:11 sorrowed in a godly manner: Although Paul had been harsh in his previous letter (v. 8), he generously praised the Corinthians for how they responded to his admonition.

7:12 care: Paul wrote the “severe letter” (v. 8) not only to correct the one who had sinned but also to tell the Corinthians that he cared for them (1 Cor. 4:14).

7:13 Therefore we have been comforted in your comfort: The comfort Paul could not find (v. 5), is supplied by the report of the spiritual progress at Corinth.

7:14 I have boasted: Paul bragged to Titus that they would be obedient to his instructions in 1 Cor. 5. His prophecy came true.

7:15, 16 fear and trembling: We should always receive God’s messengers and God’s word with reverence and respect. Such attitudes bring blessings from God (Luke 18:13, 14) and increase the confidence of Christian leaders in their converts.

8:1—9:15 On his third missionary journey Paul raised an offering to relieve the poverty of the Christians in Jerusalem and to demonstrate the unity of the Jewish and Gentile churches (1 Cor. 16:1–4; Rom. 15:25–28 and notes. He here encourages the Corinthians to participate in this offering and explains how it will be administered.

8:1 Macedonia corresponds to the northern part of present-day Greece. Paul had established churches in the Macedonian cities of Philippi, Thessalonica, and Berea.

(Gk. haplotes) (8:2; 9:11, 13; 11:3; Rom. 12:8) Strong’s #572: The Greek term haplotes is derived from haplous, meaning “single” or “simple.” Thus, haplotes expresses “simplicity” and “generosity.” Combining these two notions together, the word connotes “glad and gracious giving.” Paul is the only NT author to use this word. Normally he uses it to describe the way certain believers happily gave generous contributions to other believers who were suffering hardship.

8:2–5 The Macedonians were a great example of giving because they gave (1) during affliction, (2) in spite of great poverty, (3) with great joy, (4) beyond their means, and (5) freely. In fact, (6) they pleaded for the privilege of sharing their wealth with other believers, and (7) they gave themselves to the Lord and to others.

8:6 Titus had begun the collection when he was in Corinth (2:13; 7:6, 7, 13–15). Paul wanted him to complete it.

8:7 The Corinthians had an abundance of spiritual gifts and graces (1 Cor. 1:4–7). They had the gift of faith (1 Cor. 12:9; 13:2), gifts of speech, such as prophecy (1 Cor. 1:5; 12:10), and the gift of knowledge (1 Cor. 1:5; 12:8). They were also blessed with diligence (7:11) and love for Paul (7:7).

8:8–15 Some of the guidelines for grace giving are (1) giving should be motivated by love (8:8, 9), (2) giving should be regulated by willingness and ability to give (8:10–12), and (3) giving should be generated by equality (8:13–16).

8:8 testing: Generosity is the natural result of sincere love.

8:9 The Corinthians did not need a command (v. 8), because the example of Christ taught them about sacrificial giving. He was rich: See John 17:5; Col. 1:16. He became poor: See Phil. 2:7, 8 for an eloquent description of all that Jesus gave up to come to this earth. You … might become rich refers to the spiritual riches that Jesus gives to all who place their trust in Him: He offers forgiveness, justification, regeneration, eternal life, and glorification. Jesus purchases us from slavery to sin and makes us children of God. He gives us the right and privilege to approach God with requests and praise.

2:5–12	An unpleasant church discipline situation	Urged forgiveness and comfort for the repentant sinner
2:17; 4:2, 5	Motives suspected	Clarified his sincere motives
4:7—5:11	Trials, persecution, and pressure	Persevered, clinging to the truth that Jesus was being manifested and God was being glorified
6:3–10	Apostolic credentials questioned	Recited his record of faithfulness in a wide variety of difficult circumstances
7:2	Allegations of misconduct	Maintained innocence; stated his affection; pleaded for a more loving response
7:5–7	Conflict, fear, and discouragement	Found comfort in the arrival of Titus and in the news that the Corinthians cared about his situation
8:1—9:15	Having to write about the uncomfortable subject of giving	Cited the sterling example of the Macedonian Christians; courageously challenged the Corinthians to give
10:9–11	Criticism from the false apostles	Refused to compare; sought the Lord's commendation
11:5–33	Comparisons to the false apostles	Set forth his long history of sacrificial service
12:1–10	A "thorn in the flesh"	Prayed for the removal of this ongoing, unpleasant affliction; then realized it was God's grace to him, forcing him to rely on God's strength and not his own

8:10-15 Advantage means "profit." Giving now would profit the Corinthians at the judgment seat of Christ (Phil. 4:17). Such giving is an investment (Matt. 6:19–21; Rev. 22:12).

8:16–23 is a letter of recommendation for three men who were coming to Corinth to handle the collection. The first was Titus, who cared about the Corinthians (8:16, 17). The second was a brother with an excellent reputation, who was chosen by the church to accompany Titus (8:18–21). The third was another brother who, like the others, could be trusted (8:22, 23).

8:16, 17 thanks be to God: Paul asked Titus to go, but Titus went of his own accord, probably at his own cost. Paul attributed this desire in the heart of Titus to God (Phil. 2:12, 13).

8:18 The brother has been variously identified as Luke, Barnabas, Silas, Timothy, John Mark, and others. The churches of the first century knew who he was, but no one today knows.

8:19 Like Titus, he was chosen by the churches to travel with us with this gift: He was selected by the churches to assist the apostles in overseeing the collection for Jerusalem. Most likely, he was one of the men cited in Acts 20:4.

8:20-24 These honest men were sent to handle the collection in order to do what was honorable before the Lord and men, and to prevent anyone from blaming Paul for mishandling the funds. Verse 21 is a quotation from Prov. 3:4.

9:1 In this verse, the collection for the Jerusalem believers is called the ministering to the saints.

9:2 Their willingness stirred up the majority of the Macedonians to give.

9:3, 4 Paul was in Macedonia when he wrote this letter (2:13; 7:5). When he left Macedonia to come to Corinth, some of the Macedonians would no doubt come with him. He did not want them to find that the Corinthians had not completed the collection (8:11) and thus be ashamed.

9:5 The brethren mentioned here are the delegation of 8:16–20.

9:6 reap sparingly: The law of the harvest is referred to repeatedly in Scripture (Prov. 11:24, 25; 19:17; Luke 6:38; Gal. 6:7). Paul applied it to giving. Giving is like sowing seed. The amount of the harvest is determined by the amount of the seed sown.

9:7 Knowing the law of the harvest (v. 6), each believer should give as he purposes in his heart. The believer is to give freely and cheerfully, not out of compulsion, and without regret.

9:8 If we give, God is able to give us more so that we can perform other good works. In other words, God sees to it that the generous giver will not suffer want. Instead, God generously provides for those who give so that they can continue to do so.

9:9 His righteousness: The good person's acts of generosity. endures forever: These acts will bring eternal blessing to those who receive and to those who give (Matt. 25:31–40).

9:10 This verse is Paul's prayer for God's blessing to be poured out on the Corinthians. The words supply seed to the sower and bread for food are adapted from Is. 55:10. The latter part of the verse is a reflection of Hos. 10:12.

New Testament Giving

The most detailed passage on giving in the NT is found in Second Corinthians (chs. 8; 9). The primary reason that Paul addressed this topic here was that false teachers in Corinth were questioning Paul's motives for ministry. Evidently they were suggesting that Paul was pocketing contributions earmarked for the poor believers in Jerusalem. Consequently the Corinthians, despite their announced willingness to help, had not donated to the cause.

Taking pen in hand, Paul defended his integrity (1:12). Using the churches in Macedonia as his example, Paul gave the Corinthians a wonderful summary of why and how believers ought to give. Here are the highlights of Paul's sermon: First, who should give? All believers can and should contribute to the cause of Christ. The church at Macedonia was notoriously poor, yet they asked for the privilege of being allowed to give (8:4) out of "their deep poverty"(8:2).

In what spirit should we give? We ought to give willingly (8:12; 9:2) and cheerfully, "not grudgingly or of necessity" (9:7). It is a privilege to share in the work of God. Moreover, it is the appropriate response to God's "indescribable gift," His own Son (9:15).

How much should we give? Nowhere does the NT give us a specified percentage or amount. In this passage, Paul simply exhorts each of the members of the Corinthian church to give "as he purposes in his heart" (9:7). Ideally, our gifts would be "generous" (9:5) and given with "liberality" (9:11). The overall tenor of this passage suggests sacrificial giving. Again, by way of example, the Macedonians, like the poor widow praised by Christ in Luke 21:1–4, gave not merely their "leftovers," but more than they could afford (8:3).

How should monetary gifts be handled? Paul took special care to explain that the Corinthians' contributions would be handled with integrity by Titus (8:16–20, 23) and another unnamed brother (8:22). These were men of the highest character. They were trustworthy and above reproach in the handling of money. We should entrust our church finances to men of this caliber.

Why is giving so important? In Paul's words, it tests the sincerity of our love for God and others (8:7, 8). To paraphrase the words of Christ (Matt. 6:19–21), how we handle material wealth is a barometer of our spiritual health.

What will be the results of our giving? We should not give primarily to get, but Paul makes it clear that giving does lead to abundance. Cheerful givers experience God's love in a special way (9:7). They enjoy the spiritual blessing of participating in a rich harvest of righteousness (9:10).

9:11 enriched in everything: The Christian who is generous in God's work will be blessed for it. God knows our needs and supplies them. causes thanksgiving: Those who experience the generous spirit of God's people often, as a result, offer thanks to God Himself (vv. 12–14).

(Gk. leitourgia) (9:12; Phil. 2:17, 30; Heb. 8:6) Strong’s #3009: This term indicates “public ministry” or “official duty.” The related word leitourgos is used frequently in Greek literature to designate a man who performed some public service (Rom. 13:6). In general, it means a public servant or administrator. Paul used leitourgia in connection with the service of those who labored to benefit the church.

9:12, 13 Giving consummates in a twofold grace. It supplies the needs of the saints, and it is abounding (“overflowing”) by means of many thanksgivings to God. The final result is that God is glorified. It will be noted that this process is cyclical. Out of the riches of God’s grace He supplies the needs of the believer. The believer, in an expression of gratitude and liberality, shares of his abundance with others. They, in turn, direct their expressions of thanksgiving (“grace”) to God from whom the supply originated. Thus, the cycle is complete. And so Paul says, they glorify God for the obedience of your confession to the gospel of Christ, and for your liberal sharing with them. The act of giving is evidence of obedience to the gospel.

9:14 their prayer for you: Paul anticipated that God’s grace would lead the Jerusalem Christians to pray for the Corinthian believers and to be deeply concerned about them.

IN CONTEXT

Paul's Collection for Jerusalem

Paul's collection for the Jerusalem church seems to have originated at the so-called "Jerusalem Council" (Acts 15; Gal. 2:1–10). While the apostles and elders of the council agreed that Paul could pursue his mission to the Gentiles, they asked that he "remember the poor" (Gal. 2:10), indirectly referring to an offering for the Jerusalem church. The collection, therefore, stood at the very foundation of Paul's missionary work.

The offering remained a cornerstone in Paul's ministry. He mentioned the collection in writing to churches at Corinth (1 Cor. 16:1–4) and at Rome (Rom. 15:25–27). He praised churches in Macedonia and Achaia for their generosity in giving (Rom. 15:26; 2 Cor. 8:1–4).

Why would Jerusalem ask for such an offering, and why would Paul keep the offering central to his mission among the Gentiles, the non-Jews? Possibly because he saw his ministry as fulfilling the promises of the Jewish Scriptures, the OT. In the resurrection of Jesus Christ, as Paul believed, the end time had already begun, and through Jesus, God had begun to fulfill the end time promises found in the Scriptures. Among these eschatological promises, especially those in the Book of Isaiah, Jerusalem bore special prominence. Isaiah looks toward a new age centered in Jerusalem, where God unites both Jew and Gentile in worship to Him (Is. 66:16–21).

No wonder the collection was central to Paul's mission. The offering brought the wealth of the Gentiles to Jerusalem, signaling the fulfillment of God's plan for Israel through Jesus. Paul finally returned to Jerusalem with the offering and delivered it to the church there around A.D. 57 (Acts 21:15–17; 24:17).

9:15 God's indescribable gift is His Son, Jesus Christ. Our gifts can never compare to God's sacrifice for us.

10:1 I, Paul … myself: Timothy and Paul together wrote the first nine chapters of this letter (1:1). In this section, Paul alone addresses the Corinthians. in presence … lowly … absent … bold: This is a quotation from Paul's critics in the Corinthian church. They accused him of being weak when present, and bold only in his letters (vv. 9, 10).

10:2 By saying I beg, Paul was gently asking the Corinthians to deal with his critics before he came so that he would not have to be stern with them. Paul's critics said that he walked according to the flesh and that he was thinking only of himself when he did not come as promised (1:17).

Aid for the Poor

By comparison to the many modern Christians who live in affluence, the Corinthian believers would appear poor. Yet Paul described the Christians of Macedonia as living in "deep poverty" (2 Cor. 8:2), so they were much poorer even than the Corinthians. What does Scripture mean, then, when it says that God "has given to the poor" (9:9, emphasis added)? And what does that mean for believers today who are relatively affluent?

The word for poor (8:9) described someone who toiled for a living, what we would call a day laborer. Such persons were distinct from the truly destitute. The former may have had a difficult life, but at least they were in no danger of losing it. By contrast, the truly poor were in immediate danger of perishing if they didn't receive charitable aid.

Paul described God as dispersing to the poor, the day laborers, not food for survival but seed that they could sow to raise a crop (8:9, 10). He indicated that God would aid the Corinthians so that they, in turn, could aid the completely destitute believers in Jerusalem.

So what does that mean for us as Christians today if we work at relatively stable, well-paid jobs, own our own homes, and manage to salt away at least some money for retirement? Paul would doubtless identify us as rich. We may work hard, but we have disposable income that most first-century Christians could have only imagined.

10:3 Walk: Paul concedes that he lived in the flesh (Gk. sarx) but insists that he did not war according to the flesh (Gk. sarx). He meant he did not conduct his ministry in a self-serving way that was opposite of what God is like.

10:4, 5 strongholds … high thing: Overlooking ancient Corinth was a hill 1,857 feet high. On top of it was a fortress. Paul used that imagery as an illustration of the spiritual warfare he waged. He destroyed strongholds, cast down towers, and took captives. The fortress, towers, and captives represent the arguments, thoughts, and plans that Paul was opposing. Paul cast down all rationalizations. He took captive to the obedience of Christ every perception and intention of the heart that was against God. Our actions reveal our thoughts. We should not cling to thoughts that do not conform to the life and teachings of Christ. Paul did not walk according to the flesh or his worldly desires; instead he conquered the flesh. He explains his strategy in 1 Cor. 9:24–27: “I discipline my body and bring it into subjection.”

10:6 After Paul destroyed strongholds, cast down towers, and took prisoners, he was ready to punish or “do justice” to the disobedience of the “some” (10:2).

10:7 In this context, being Christ’s means more than merely belonging to Him. It means being His servant or His disciple (v. 8).

10:8, 9 Paul had authority as an apostle for edification, a word that means “building up.” His exhortation in his letter was aimed at correcting abuses, not the destruction of the church. The word destruction means “tearing down.” Paul repeated his authorization at the end of his letter (13:10).

10:10 they say: Paul spoke simply so that the power of God would remain evident. He did not use complicated rhetorical techniques to sway his audience. His critics at the Corinthian church had turned his simple, unpretentious style against him (11:6; 1 Cor. 1:17; 2:1–5).

10:11 On the contrary, he intends to demonstrate that his actions will correspond to his words. Such we will also be in deed when we are present. He does not give empty threats.

10:12 They, Paul’s critics, commended themselves (3:1), measured themselves by their own personal opinions, and compared themselves with others. Contrast Paul’s advice to esteem others above oneself (Phil. 2:3, 4).

10:13–15 Paul boasted only within the sphere of ministry God had given him, but that sphere included the Corinthians. By implication, Paul’s critics were boasting of what they had not worked at or cultivated, perhaps the results of Paul’s ministry in Corinth.

10:16 regions beyond you: In the Book of Romans, which Paul wrote around this time, he said his ambition was to preach the gospel in Spain (Rom. 15:24).

10:17 The Christian leader does not glory in his own achievements, but in the LORD and what He has done.

10:18 Paul began this section by saying he was not going to place himself among the group that commended themselves (v. 12). The reason he would not was that the Lord would commend Him as a faithful worker (1 Cor. 4:5). Throughout this passage, Paul has been very careful to boast only in the Lord and His work in order to establish his credentials as an apostle to the Corinthians.

11:1–15 Paul boasts about his financial policy. He gives three reasons for this boast: (1) He is deeply concerned about them (11:2, 3). (2) They seem willing to endure those who preached another gospel (11:4). (3) He is not inferior to the most eminent apostles (11:5, 6).

11:1 Paul must cite some of his own virtues in order to counter the criticisms against him. To him this boasting of self was folly, even though in this case a necessary self-defense.

11:2 Paul loved the Corinthians and was legitimately jealous because, as their spiritual father (1 Cor. 4:15), he had betrothed them to Christ and wanted to present them to Him as a chaste virgin. He did not want them corrupted by false teachers (vv. 3, 4).

11:3 Paul was afraid that Satan would deceive them, causing their minds to be corrupted or turned away from the simplicity that is in Christ. The Greek word translated simplicity is used in 2 Corinthians of sincerity (1:12) and generosity (8:2, 9). The Corinthians had a sincere singleness of heart toward Christ, which expressed itself in generosity. If Satan could get them to believe something not true, he would destroy their genuine attitude toward the Lord. One practical effect would be to kill their commitment to completing the collection. We should never underestimate the strategies of the great deceiver. The best antidote to his influence is to focus on Christ, the light that exposes the darkness.

11:4 Another Jesus would be one who was a man but not God, or crucified but not risen. A different spirit would be one of fear, not faith (4:13)—of bondage, not freedom (3:17; Gal. 5:1). A different gospel would be one of law and not grace, one of works and not faith.

11:5 Some take the eminent apostles as a sarcastic reference to the false apostles in Corinth (v. 13). Others believe that Paul was comparing himself here to the genuine apostles of Christ, as he did later in the book (12:11, 12).

11:6 By untrained in speech, Paul meant he was not schooled in professional rhetoric. This does not mean that he was a poor speaker, only that he was not trained in Greek oratory. He did not lack knowledge. He had received direct revelation from the Lord (Gal. 1:11, 12).

11:7, 8 free of charge: In Paul’s day, professional philosophers and teachers in Greek society charged for teaching. Paul did not. He labored (1 Thess. 2:9) and received support from other churches. Those who preach the gospel should make a living from the gospel (1 Cor. 9:14). Although

Paul had the right to take money from the Corinthians, he chose not to do so in order to demonstrate his integrity (1 Cor. 9:12).

11:9 The brethren who came from Macedonia were probably from Philippi (Phil. 4:14–18).

11:10 Paul's boasting was that he preached without charge (vv. 7, 8).

11:11 Paul poses the question as to why he did not take money from them. He rejects the suggestion that it was because he did not love them.

11:12 Paul did not accept money from the Corinthians because he did not want to give his critics the opportunity to put themselves on the same level as himself.

11:13 Paul's critics apparently called themselves apostles of Christ, but Paul said they were transforming themselves. The word means "to change in appearance," "to disguise," or "to masquerade." They were false teachers.

11:14, 15 And no wonder: If Satan, the prince of darkness, can disguise himself as an angel of light, then his servants, the ministers of evil, can disguise themselves as ministers of righteousness. Satan's main tool is deception.

11:16 Also indicates that his opponents were boasting.

11:17 Not according to the Lord means "not according to the Lord's standard." This kind of boasting was not characteristic of the Lord. Jesus Christ was an example of humility, not boasting (Phil. 2:5–11).

11:18, 19 The false apostles were boasting according to the flesh, that is, they measured themselves by their own standards rather than by God's. Unfortunately, the Corinthians were listening to them (vv. 19, 20).

11:20 The Corinthians were doing more than just listening. They were willing to put up with being enslaved, being consumed, being taken advantage of, being lorded over, and being insulted.

11:21 Paul's critics had accused him of being weak (10:10). He sarcastically said that he was too weak to rule the Corinthians harshly as the false apostles had done.

11:22—12:10 This section is sometimes known as the "Fool's Speech'' (11:23; 12:6, 11). Paul boasts of his heritage (11:22), of his suffering as a minister of Christ (11:23–33), and of his spiritual experiences (12:1–10). Yet all of these things point out how God's strength was manifested through Paul's weakness (12:10).

11:22 So am I: Paul's adversaries were Jewish and apparently felt that this made them superior not only to Gentiles but also to Greek-speaking Jews. Paul boasted that he was just as Jewish as they were.

Paul's Defense

I speak as a fool" (11:23). These words jump out of the pages of 2 Corinthians; they seem out of place in the Bible. Why would an apostle speak foolishly? A closer look reveals the reason behind Paul's words. The church at Corinth had been infiltrated by insidious false teachers. Although no one knows what philosophical or theological group these false teachers belonged to, we can ascertain some of their beliefs from Paul's two letters to the Corinthians. Evidently they were a group who prided themselves on their Jewish heritage (11:22). This group may also have held to what some have called an "incipient Gnosticism." They placed value on spiritual knowledge and experiences (1 Cor. 8:1) that were only accessible to gifted teachers, perhaps those who were especially skilled in Greek rhetoric (11:6). These "false teachers" were not only slandering Paul; they were denying his authority (12:11) and the truthfulness of what he preached. Some have postulated that there were several different groups that opposed Paul. That may have been the case, for Paul speaks of several different factions in the church (1 Cor. 1:12, 13).

To counter the accusations of his opponents, Paul took great pains to present his apostolic credentials. He opened his life and ministry for all to review. But he was doing more than defending himself; the great apostle wrote with an additional goal in mind. This was to warn the Corinthians of the dangers the false teachings posed. Thus, Paul reluctantly painted a stark contrast between his own ministry and that of his rivals. According to Paul, these false teachers preached "another Jesus" and a "different gospel" (11:4). He regarded them as "deceitful workers" (11:13). Unlike Paul, these impostors collected fees for their services (11:7–9). And unlike Paul, they enjoyed comfortable, easygoing ministries. To defend himself, Paul was forced to "boast" in his ministry. But his boast was unusual, for it was in his weaknesses and suffering. He did not boast of his own accomplishments, but in the troubles and difficulties that clearly showed the power of Christ in his life (12:9).

Many centuries later, the cast of characters has changed, but the story remains the same. The church continues to be infiltrated by those who advocate unbiblical ideas. Many of these present-day "false teachers" appear to be very sincere. They speak with great passion and eloquence. Their ideas seem to make perfect sense. But we must exercise extreme caution. The lucrative potential of modern mass communications has attracted hucksters who tickle the "itching ears" (2 Tim. 4:3) of their audiences in an attempt to profit personally. Every message must be weighed against the Word of God.

And what is a church body to do if it detects false teachers in its midst? On this issue, the NT is clear: Those who foster division within the church by persistently advocating unbiblical beliefs are to be removed from fellowship (6:14; Rom. 16:17, 18; 1 Tim. 6:3–5; Titus 3:9–11; 2 John 9–11). There is to be no toleration. When unaddressed, false doctrine is like a cancer that permeates a body, weakening it, and ultimately bringing about its demise.

11:23–33 Paul's long list of problems includes physical suffering, long and difficult travel, toil, and weaknesses. He suffered profoundly for following Christ. Anyone who ever imagined that the Christian faith always leads to health, wealth, and comfortable circumstances has forgotten Paul. This apostle was under no such delusions. He knew very well that faithfulness to God brings difficulty, not ease (12:9, 10). Yet temporal difficulties for the cause of the gospel bring their own eternal reward.

11:23-26 Paul's opponents were not ministers of Christ. They were "false apostles" (v. 13), "ministers of Satan" (v. 15). But for the sake of argument, he responded to their claim as if it were true. I speak as a fool: Paul was hesitant to brag about his spiritual "accomplishments," because he knew that only God had made his preaching and service effective. He was merely God's instrument, and God was the One who deserved the glory. Paul's boast was in the Lord (10:17).

11:27 Hunger and thirst means involuntarily going without food and drink; fastings means voluntarily going without food for the sake of the ministry (6:5).

11:28, 29 Paul's pastoral anxiety for all the churches, especially for the weak, climaxes his list of trials. He cared for the weak so deeply that he identified with their weakness. He was indignant with those who caused others to stumble into sin.

11:30, 31 Infirmity means "weakness." Paul explains his weakness further in 12:7–10.

11:32 Aretas the king: Aretas IV (9 B.C.–A.D. 40), the father-in-law of Herod Antipas, was king of Nabatea, a kingdom whose capital was Petra. Nabatea included the city of Damascus before the city was incorporated into the Roman province of Syria. Aretas was able to appoint a governor over Damascus because the Emperor Caligula (A.D. 37–41) gave Aretas control over the city.

11:33 Escaping from Damascus in a basket was Paul's example of boasting in his weakness (v. 30).

12:1 Paul prepared to boast about visions and revelations he received from God, possibly to counter similar claims by the false teachers; but he set them in contrast to the trials he had suffered in his ministry (vv. 7–10).

12:2 It becomes apparent later in the passage (vv. 5–7) that Paul was writing here about himself, but he modestly presented this experience about a man in Christ as if it had happened to someone else. Paul wrote 2 Corinthians in A.D. 56; fourteen years before would have been A.D. 42, probably when he was in Antioch (Acts 11:26). the third heaven: It was common to speak of three "heavens": The first is the atmosphere where the birds fly; the second is the place of the sun, moon, and stars; the third is where God dwells.

12:3, 4 Heaven (v. 2) is here called Paradise. This experience should be compared to others in the Bible. God came down and met Moses on Sinai. Moses and Elijah came down from heaven to meet Christ. Peter, James, and John saw Christ glorified on the Mount of Transfiguration. John saw visions of the heavenly throne. And Paul is said to have been transported to heaven and returned. The experience probably helped Paul to endure suffering for the cause of Christ. Yet Paul never placed the focus of his message on this experience; instead he always preached Christ crucified (4:1–5).

12:5 Of such a one (Gk. hyper tou toioutou, "regarding such a one"). Again, the direction of Paul's boast is not toward himself but in regard to the experience the Lord afforded him. I will boast: Such a divine favor and privilege justifies his response. Yet of myself I will not boast, except in my infirmities: Paul is careful to keep the attention of his readers upon the true object of his boast.

12:6 sees me to be: It is easy to claim a spiritual experience but others can verify our faith only by observing our lives. Paul wanted to be evaluated by his words and deeds.

Strength Through Weakness

Our world prizes strength—the physical strength of athletes, the financial strength of companies, the political strength of office-holders, and the military strength of armies. But Paul put a new twist on the notion of strength: weakness can make a person strong (2 Cor. 12:7–10).

Most of us would have no problem with God using our natural areas of strength, such as speaking, organizing, managing, or selling. But suppose He chose instead to use us in areas where we are weak? Moses claimed to be a poor speaker (Ex. 4:10), yet God used him as His spokesman on Israel's behalf. Peter tended to be impulsive and even hot-headed, yet God used him as one of the chief architects of the early church.

Weakness has a way of making us rely on God far more than our strengths do.

12:7 Thorn means "splinter," "stake," or "something pointed." Flesh can refer to the body or to the sinful nature. Three basic suggested interpretations of the thorn are as follows: (1) If flesh is a reference to the body, then it is a physical ailment like an earache, headache, eye trouble, epilepsy, or recurrent fever. (2) If flesh is a reference to the fallen nature, then the thorn could be a temptation. (3) If the expression is figurative, it could refer to persecution or opposition. Most commentators interpret it as a physical ailment. Many suggest that it was eye trouble, on the basis of Gal. 4:15. messenger of Satan: God permitted Satan to afflict Paul as He did Job (Job 1; 2). Buffet means "to strike with the fist" (Matt. 26:67). Paul's thorn was a painful, humiliating experience given to prevent pride.

12:8 pleaded: I argued my case, entreated the Lord.

12:9 infirmities … power: When believers are without strength and look to the Lord (v. 8), He provides power by His grace.

12:10 Paul not only boasted about his weaknesses (v. 9), he said I take pleasure, a word meaning "to think good," "to be well-pleased" in them. In Paul's weaknesses, Christ's power was made more apparent to others. It would bring praise to the only One who deserved it.

12:11 The Corinthians compelled Paul to boast because they listened to the false apostles (11:4) and were taken in by them (11:12).

(Gk. apostolos) (1:1; 12:12; Matt. 10:2; Acts 2:37; Rom. 1:1; Heb. 3:1) Strong's #652: The Greek word simply means "sent ones." Out of Jesus' many disciples, He selected twelve to be His apostles. These were the men who were sent by Jesus to take His message to the world and then raise up churches. Paul also became an apostle by the appointment of the risen Christ, who encountered Paul on the road to Damascus (Acts 9). Paul's apostleship was accompanied by a great deal of suffering; and then to add to it, some false teachers in the Corinthian church doubted his authority. Thus, in 2 Corinthians, Paul repeatedly defended the genuineness of His apostleship.

12:12 When Paul established the church in Corinth, he performed the signs of an apostle, miracles, or supernatural evidences that proved his authority as an apostle (Acts 14:3).

12:13 For what is it in which you were inferior to other churches: In what respect do you find your church handicapped, for not having been founded by one of the other apostles (1 Cor. 1:6, 7)? Except that I myself was not burdensome to you: The only fault of his ministry was that he showed them preferential treatment. Against such ingratitude Paul's irony deals a mortal blow. Then, as though the blade did not penetrate enough, he gives it an additional twist with the words, Forgive me this wrong.

12:14 for the third time I am ready to come: Paul's first visit to Corinth was on his second missionary journey (Acts 18:1–18). Because of Paul's mention of a "painful visit" in 2:1, some consider Paul's second visit as occurring some time when he was staying in Ephesus and before he wrote this letter (Acts 19:1–14). Others discount a second visit before this time. They insist that ready in this verse indicates that Paul had prepared to come to Corinth, but did not make the trip (1:15, 16, 23; 2:1–4). He promised not to be burdensome, that is, to take financial support from them.

12:15 for your souls: For your total well-being. It sometimes seems that the more we pour out ourselves in Christian love for some people, the less we are loved by them. But Paul did not stop loving the Corinthians even though some did not return his love.

12:16, 17 Earlier Paul said he was “not walking in craftiness” (4:2). He also pointed out that Satan was deceitful (11:3) and that the false apostles were like Satan (11:13, 14). Now he sarcastically echoes his critics’ charge that he was being crafty. But how did he trick them? He tricked them into not supporting him. Through sarcasm, Paul was vindicating himself against the charge of both trickery and fraud.

12:18 Apparently Titus was being implicated through the false apostles’ accusations because Paul had recommended Titus for the collection task (8:16, 17). However they did not have any evidence against Titus. He was above reproach.

12:19 excuse ourselves to you: Paul was not trying to justify himself before the Corinthians; God was his Judge. He only wanted to do everything for their spiritual upbuilding.

12:20—13:10 Paul explains in detail exactly why he wrote. What he has to say can be outlined by the verbs that he uses of himself: (1) He feared (12:20), (2) he mourned (12:21), (3) he would not spare (13:2), (4) he prayed (13:7), and (5) he wrote (13:10).

12:20 as I wish … as you do not wish: If Paul did not find the Corinthians living Christlike lives, he would have to discipline them; then they would not be happy with him. Contentions and other unchristian actions listed arise from self-seeking and pride. backbitings: Criticizing people behind their backs; slandering their characters.

12:21 humble me: Paul would be humbled if his converts were not living as they should. Their conduct will cause him to mourn for them, not boast about them. Instead of coming in joy (3:2) he would be coming in sorrow (2:1–3). Uncleanness describes the types of sexual immorality in which the Corinthians had indulged before their conversion. Paul perhaps feared that some had again become involved in these sins and had not repented of them.

13:1 The third time has been interpreted two different ways. Those who hold that Paul had visited Corinth twice before writing this letter take this statement at face value, that Paul had been there twice and was now ready to come a third time. Those who say that Paul had been to Corinth only once point to 12:14 and say that he was prepared to come again but did not actually do so.

13:2 told you before: In 1 Corinthians, Paul warned against sexual immorality (1 Cor. 6:12–20). By writing this letter, he was warning them a second time (12:21). Not spare means he would confront them if necessary.

13:3 Paul would confront those who were sinning (v. 2) since the Corinthians were seeking a proof of Christ speaking in him. Apparently Paul's critics claimed that an apostle should be a strong individual. Paul was saying that when he came again he would be strong.

13:4 For indicates that Paul was going to explain how Christ, who is strong, could be speaking through Paul, who was weak. As Christ appeared to be weak when he was crucified, but was raised by the power of God, so Paul was weak, but by the power of God he would live with Christ in strength toward them. Paul was not speaking of the future resurrection but of his next visit.

13:5 The Corinthians had been seeking proof of Christ's speaking in Paul; he told them to examine themselves to see if they were in the faith (1 Cor. 16:13; Titus 1:13). Paul did not doubt that they were true believers (1:1, 24; 7:1; 8:1; 12:14). He wanted them to ask themselves whether they were walking according to the gospel that they professed. He wanted them to apply the same standard to themselves that they were applying to him.

13:6 But I trust that you will know that we are not disqualified: Regardless of how the Corinthians came out in the test, they are to be assured that the apostle was genuine.

13:7–9 Paul prayed they would do no evil, which is probably a reference to the sins listed in 12:20, 21, and that they would be made complete. The Greek word for complete was used to describe the setting of bones and the reconciling of alienated friends. Paul was praying that there would be reconciliation of the divisions (12:20), and restoration. If his prayer was answered, he would seem disqualified, for he would not have to exercise his apostolic authority to discipline them.

IN CONTEXT

How to Use Authority

If you exercise leadership among other believers, you'll want to study carefully Paul's comment about his authority (2 Cor. 13:10). Like many of us, Paul liked to be in charge, and he felt frustrated when people failed to follow his lead, as the Corinthians had. As an apostle, he had spiritual authority over them, which at times led him to deal severely with them (1 Cor. 4:21; 5:5; compare Titus 1:13).

But it's important to notice how Paul exercised his authority, especially as he grew older in the faith. He didn't lord it over others or try to use his authority to personal advantage. Nor did he abuse his power by using it to work out his own anger. Instead, he recognized that spiritual authority is given "for edification and not for destruction" (2 Cor. 10:8; 13:10), for building others up, not for tearing them down.

13:10 I write: Paul confronted the Corinthians on paper so that he would not have to do it in person (v. 2; 10:11; 12:20).

13:11 Here, as in other passages, farewell no doubt means "rejoice" (Phil. 3:1; 1 Thess. 5:16).

13:12 fellowship: This is what Paul desired for everyone in the church. They should love and enjoy one another, not fight and do battle with one another (12:20). They needed grace, not self-seeking; love, not anger; communion, not contention.

13:13 All the saints: The other Christians in the place from which Paul was writing.

13:14 Paul's concluding benediction invokes the blessing of the triune God: grace from the Lord Jesus Christ (8:9), the love of God (v. 11), and the communion of the Holy Spirit. At the end of his letter, Paul identifies the solution to many of the Corinthians' problems. The Holy Spirit, who dwelled in each of them, could empower them to live righteously. Furthermore, the Spirit could reconcile them to each other. They could love and encourage each other instead of fighting each other (12:20). They needed God's grace, not selfishness; God's love, not anger; and communion, not conflict.

The Epistle to the Galatians

———— IN THE WHOLE BIBLE, THERE IS NO MORE passionate, comprehensive, yet concise statement of the truth of the gospel than Galatians. Salvation is through faith in Jesus Christ alone (2:16; 3:11, 12). No work can earn salvation. Paul's succinct refutation of the Judaizers in this letter has transformed the lives of many—from Martin Luther to John Wesley. In general, people want to earn their salvation by works that can easily be identified. In this letter, Paul reveals the arrogance of such thinking. It amounts to a desertion of the truth of the gospel and a turning away from God (1:6). We can stand justified before God only through faith in Jesus Christ; nothing else will save us.

Apparently Paul became aware of a perversion of the gospel of grace that was actively infecting the Galatian churches. The false teachers who had come to Galatia since Paul's ministry there were advocating salvation by "the works of the law"—that is, by keeping the law. Specific emphasis was placed on the Jewish rite of circumcision.

Paul's letter to the Galatians was a swift and decisive attempt to counter this message, which was a different gospel. Paul had to convince his "little children" in the faith, whom he had evangelized personally, that the new teaching was in fact a distortion of the gospel of Christ. In his argument Paul reasserted his authority as an apostle, which apparently had been minimized by the Judaizing teachers. Paul wrote not out of anger, but out of love. He saw the Galatians leaving the correct path by their additions to the gospel message, and he loved his fellow believers too much to allow them to go astray.

Galatians contains the three standard elements of a typical first-century letter: introduction (1:1–5), body (1:6—6:10), and conclusion (6:11–18). However, Galatians differs from many of Paul's other letters. For example, most of Paul's other letters contain an introductory thanksgiving section that serves as a prologue (Phil. 1:3–11). The startling absence of such a thanksgiving at the beginning of Galatians probably indicates the severity of the situation in Paul's eyes. There is virtually nothing for which Paul can be thankful, since some of the Galatians were abandoning the gospel they had once embraced. Likewise, the letter contains no concluding greetings, whether long, like Rom. 16:3–23, or short, like 2 Cor. 13:12, 13. There is only a terse benediction and concluding salutation (6:16, 18).

If there is one repeated phrase that summarizes the subject of Galatians, it is "the truth of the gospel." Unlike Romans, which presents the gospel as the answer to universal human sinfulness (Rom. 3:23; 6:23), Galatians clarifies the gospel message against the subtle but deadly danger of works salvation. No sinful person has ever been granted eternal life based on works. What is more, everyone who lives by such a confidence in works is "cursed," because no one can perfectly obey the law (3:10). Thus, to add works, rituals, or the law to the message of what it takes to become a Christian is to overturn the Good News. The proper place of the law is to convict us of our sin, demonstrating the urgent need for the redemption provided by Jesus Christ.

What then is the basic gospel that Paul goes to such lengths to clarify and safeguard? The only way a person can be justified before God is by faith in Jesus Christ (2:16). Paul emphasizes this point over and over. Faith in Christ, nothing more and nothing less, is the proper response to the gospel. This emphasis on faith is not about the historical dimension of the gospel that is open to reasonable inquiry: Jesus perfectly kept the Law of Moses (4:4), died on the Cross (2:20), and rose from the dead (1:1). Rather, Paul underscores faith in Christ because the controversies in Galatia raged around the reception of the gospel in the lives of new believers.

Paul also addresses themes dealing with the Christian life, or living out the new freedom the believer possesses in Christ. Between the extremes of legalistic sanctification and hedonistic license, Paul charts a middle course of "faith working through love" and the power of the Holy Spirit (5:5, 6). Thus, not only is justification by faith alone, but so is sanctification.

Paul variously describes this life of faith as walking in the Spirit (5:16, 25), being "led by the Spirit" (5:18), producing "the fruit of the Spirit" (5:22, 23), and sowing "to the Spirit" (6:8). Concretely, "faith working through love" (5:6) expresses itself in love for neighbors, especially other believers, and in bearing one another's burdens (5:14; 6:2, 6). The ever-present danger is that rather than relying upon the power of the Spirit, the believer will start displaying the corrupt "works of the flesh." Works can be truly good only when they are accomplished in the power of the Holy Spirit given to those who place their faith in Christ (6:7–10).

The writer of Galatians identifies himself as Paul (1:1). He claims to be an apostle, and then goes on to argue at length for the apostolic authority behind his gospel message. Much of the personal information he gives in the course of his defense corresponds to the narratives about Paul in the Book of Acts, as well as to the autobiographical material in Phil. 3:4–6. The use of the Old Testament in chs. 3 and 4 fits Paul's rigorous training in Judaism. Finally, the theology presented in this letter corresponds perfectly with the theology Paul expresses in his other writings, notably the Epistle to the Romans.

Paul addresses his letter "to the churches of Galatia" (1:2) and to readers he expressly calls "Galatians" (3:1), but it is not easy to determine what this means precisely. At the time Paul was writing, the word Galatians could be used with an ethnic or with a political meaning.

To a great extent, assigning a date for Galatians depends on making a decision about the destination of the letter If the churches of Galatia were founded on Paul's second missionary journey in the northern part of Galatia (Acts 16:6), the earliest the epistle could have been written was around A.D. 52. The similarity in content between Galatians and Romans, among other things, has led some to date the letter in the mid-50s. On the other hand, if Galatia is understood to be southern Galatia, including Lystra, Iconium, and Pisidian Antioch (Acts 14:21), congregations planted on Paul's first missionary journey, the letter could have been written as early as A.D. 48.

To determine the date, the possible role of the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15) in the controversies addressed in Galatians must also be considered. If Galatians was written after the Jerusalem Council had made its authoritative decisions, Paul most likely would have centered his argument on those decisions, or at least made an unmistakable reference to them. Since he did not, Galatians probably dates from A.D. 48. This means it is one of the earliest New Testament books.

Commentary

1:1–5 The introduction of the letter includes the three standard elements found in epistolary salutation sections: (1) the writer Paul (1:1); (2) the addressees—to the churches of Galatia (1:2); and (3) the greeting—grace to you and peace (1:3).

1:1 Paul calls himself an apostle to assert his divinely given authority to speak to the problem confronting the Galatian churches. Through Jesus Christ and God the Father refers to Paul's unique call to be an apostle (vv. 15, 16), which came to him at the same time as his salvation on the road to Damascus (Acts 26:12–18). Raised Him from the dead is a reference to the resurrection of Jesus Christ, a central belief of the Christian faith (1 Cor. 15).

1:2 and all the brethren who are with me: Paul implies that there were with him a goodly number of Christian believers, members of the household of faith. Paul associates these unnamed fellow workers with him in sending greetings. churches of Galatia: Galatians is a circular letter, intended for several churches.

1:3 Grace is a variation from the standard greeting of ancient letters in Paul's time. Peace is the Greek translation of the traditional Hebrew greeting. Paul commonly combines the two ideas of grace and peace in the introductions of his letters (1 Cor. 1:3; 2 Cor. 1:2). The true message of salvation is based solely on God's grace (1:6; 2:21) received by faith (Eph. 2:8), and it provides peace with God (Rom. 5:1).

1:4 gave Himself for our sins: This phrase looks ahead to Paul's discussion of redemption in 3:13, 14. It is a quick summary of the Good News: Christ's death is for you (1 Cor. 15:3). Deliver us from this present evil age is similar to Col. 1:13, which states that Christ "has delivered us from the power of darkness" into His kingdom. Both passages develop this truth based on Christ's redemptive work (Col. 1:14), implying that the word deliver refers to sanctification in the face of the temptations of this present age.

1:5 This doxology shows that God (1:4) deserves the glory at every juncture of life (forever), something which Paul's gospel and ministry clearly did (1:23, 24).

The Churches of Galatia

Two possible locations are suggested for the "churches of Galatia." The "North Galatia" theory points to the region in the heart of Asia Minor whose boundaries included Bithynia and Pontus on the north, Phrygia on the southwest, and Cappadocia on the east. The "South Galatia" theory understands Galatia to refer to the Roman province of that name, which included Pisidia, Lycaonia, and parts of Phrygia and Cappadocia.

1:6, 7 The use of the word marvel reveals Paul's ongoing shock at the Galatians' defection from the gospel of God's undeserved grace. The Galatians had unwittingly fallen for a different message, one which was not another true message of salvation at all. Those causing the trouble were guilty of seeking to pervert the gospel of Christ, not to present a better alternative.

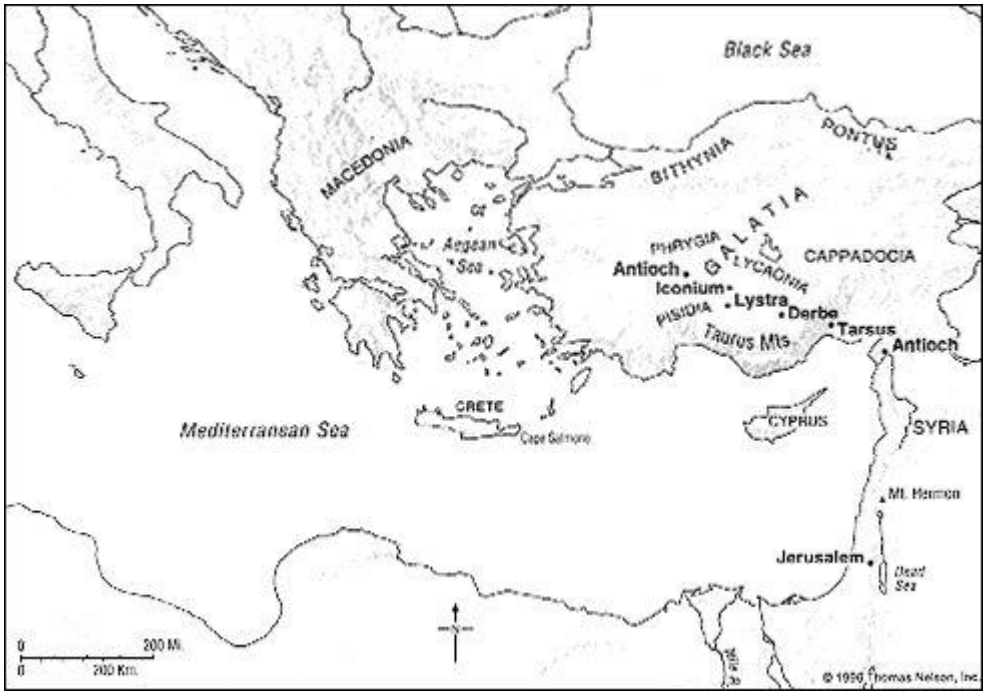
1:8, 9 Paul moves from the hypothetical (vv. 6, 7) to the actual in denouncing the Galatians' perversion of the gospel. If even the apostles or an angel from heaven were to preach a false gospel, they would be accursed. That being the case, anyone who proclaimed a perversion of the message that the Galatians had received from Paul fully deserved eternal destruction. Paul's concern for the purity of the gospel message is revealed by his assertion that he would condemn to destruction anyone who taught a false gospel.



Galatia

1:10 To please men was neither Paul's motivation nor the source of his authority (v. 1). Paul continually sought the approval of God. He did not base his decisions on the opinions of other people. Instead he single-mindedly aimed at pleasing God (Phil. 3:14). As an apostle Paul was a leader, but he was always a bondservant of Christ.

1:11—2:14 This extended passage is one of the longest autobiographical sections in Paul's epistles (2 Cor. 11:22—12:10).

1:11, 12 There was no human creativity flavoring the gospel Paul preached. Paul knew it only because he received it by special revelation from Jesus Christ at his conversion (Acts 26:12–18).

1:13, 14 Judaism means the Jewish way of life, which was based partly on the OT and partly on additional traditions of the fathers, or leaders of the people (Matt. 15:2). Paul's conduct before his conversion had greatly distinguished him in Judaism in two ways: (1) He painstakingly kept the law and traditions, certainly more so than the Judaizers in Galatia (6:13). (2) He persecuted the church of God in order to destroy it (Phil. 3:6), doing so under the authority of Jewish religious leaders (Acts 8:3; 9:1, 2).

IN FOCUS

“revelation of Jesus Christ”

(Gk. apokalupsis lesou Christou) (1:12; 1 Pet. 1:13; Rev. 1:1) Strong’s #602; 2424; 5547: In the Greek this could be an objective genitive—a revelation concerning Jesus Christ, or a subjective genitive—a revelation from Jesus Christ. Both thoughts are consistent with the context. Paul’s “revelation of Jesus Christ” enabled him to see that Christ was God’s Son (1:16), the sole object of our faith (2:16), and the unique source of oneness of all believers —whether Jew or Gentile, bond or free, male or female (3:27, 28; Eph. 3:1–11). Paul received his knowledge by special revelation (1 Cor. 11:23; 15:3; Eph. 3:3; 1 Thess. 4:15). Paul was thus an independent witness to the gospel; and although he had received no instructions directly from the apostles but only from the Holy Spirit, his teachings agreed with theirs.

1:15–17 In words echoing the calling of the messianic Servant (Is. 49:1) and Jeremiah the prophet (Jer. 1:5), Paul relates that God had chosen him to be an apostle (v. 1) before his birth. Paul, like the Judaizers in Galatia, had previously tried to earn his salvation by works (v. 14). However, his apostolic call and conversion both came through God’s grace, His undeserved favor. If Paul’s gospel message was made by men, he would have had to confer with other people to receive or validate it. To do this, Paul would have had to travel to Jerusalem, where the other apostles were, for such a conference. Instead, when he left Damascus, where he had stayed immediately after his conversion to Christianity (Acts 9:1–22), he went to Arabia (2 Cor. 11:32, 33). This was the kingdom of the Nabatean Arabs, extending from Damascus to the Red Sea, including parts of modern Syria, Jordan, Israel, and Saudi Arabia.

1:18 after three years: This could be thirty-six months, or else a shorter period measured from the end of one year, through a complete year, and ending early in the third year. The three years could begin at the time of Paul’s conversion (vv. 15, 16) or of his departure to Arabia (v. 17). Undoubtedly Paul and Peter talked at length about Christ and the gospel during the fifteen days Paul was in Jerusalem.

1:19, 20 The apparent reference to James, the Lord’s brother, as being one of the other apostles indicates that the word apostles was not always restricted to “the Twelve” (Matt. 10:1–4; 1 Cor. 15:5). The sequence of 1

Cor. 15:7–9, where James, Paul, and "all the apostles" are listed as having seen the resurrected Christ, implies that Paul may have accepted James as possessing at least partly parallel apostolic qualifications to his own (Acts 1:21–26).

1:21 Following his brief trip to Jerusalem (vv. 18, 19), Paul went to Syria and Cilicia, likely the same journey mentioned in Acts 9:30, in which Paul traveled from Jerusalem to his childhood home, Tarsus in Cilicia (Acts 22:3).

1:22, 23 Apparently, news of Paul's ongoing ministry in and around Tarsus reached the churches of Judea (Jerusalem) consistently, since Barnabas had the confidence to seek Paul to aid the work in Syrian Antioch (Acts 11:25, 26).

1:24 Paul's gospel ministry caused God to be glorified, in keeping with the constant and eternal "glory" God has and deserves from humankind (1:5).

IN DEPTH

Who Were the Galatians?

It is difficult to decide who Paul was writing to in the Book of Galatians. In Paul's time the word Galatians had both an ethnic and a political meaning. The ethnic Galatians were Celts who migrated from central Europe to Asia Minor in the third century B.C. They settled in the area around Ankara, the capital of present-day Turkey. In Paul's day the native Galatian dialect was still spoken there, although Greek had been accepted as the language of business and diplomacy.

By NT times there was a Roman province called Galatia that was larger than the original ethnic area. Territory to the south which was not ethnically Galatian was included in the province. Pisidia as well as sections of Phrygia and Lycaonia were formally part of political Galatia.

Whether Galatia refers to the people or to the province would indicate who the original readers of the letter to Galatians were. The usual view until the last two centuries was that Paul addressed "North Galatia," or congregations of ethnic Galatians located in the northern part of the province. Personal contact of the apostle with these churches may be alluded to in Acts 16:6 and 18:23. However, a "South Galatian" theory is more widely held today. According to this view Paul wrote to churches in the southern part of the province, that is, to the churches he founded on his first missionary journey (Acts 13:14—14:24) and later revisited (Acts 16:1–5).

An obvious strength of the North Galatian view is that the northern part of the province was Galatia in both senses: ethnic and political. Also, it has been asserted that Paul's description of the fickleness of his readers was a well-known characteristic of the ethnic Galatians in the north.

On the other hand, a strong case can be made for the South Galatian view. Paul normally used Roman provincial names, as did Luke in the Book of Acts. Also, the most natural understanding of Acts 16:6 and 18:23 is that Paul retraced his steps from the first missionary journey (Acts 13; 14) at the beginning of his second and third journeys.

With the biblical and historical evidence divided as it is, there have been notable scholars on both sides of the Galatian question. Neither theory is clearly superior, though it seems that the South Galatian view fits better with Acts. The question is important for assigning a date to the letter.

In either case, it is obvious that the book was addressed to a church which was struggling with the Judaizers, a group that insisted that the Gentile converts keep the requirements of the law. Paul's letter was a stern rebuke of this faction in the church. By adding the law to the gospel message, this group was in effect rejecting Jesus' free offer of salvation.

2:1–10 This section of the narrative may correspond to Acts 11:30; 12:25, if the letter was written earlier, or Acts 15, if it was written later. The setting seems to favor the Acts 11 and 12 visit, although the subject is the same as that in Acts 15.

2:1 After fourteen years may refer to twelve full years plus fractions of the first and last years (1:18). This time span could date from Paul's previous visit to Jerusalem (1:18, 19), but more likely from his conversion (1:15, 16). This was the point at which Paul received the gospel message, the focus of discussion throughout this extended section (1:11—2:14). I went up again to Jerusalem: If Galatians was written before the Jerusalem Council, this journey is the one recorded in Acts 11:30. Otherwise, it is a reference to the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15). Barnabas is a Hebrew nickname meaning "Son of Encouragement" (Acts 4:36). Barnabas met Paul briefly in Jerusalem during Paul's first postconversion visit (Acts 9:26, 27). Later they served together in the events narrated in Acts 11:25–30; 12:25—15:39. Titus is not mentioned in Acts, but he was a convert of Paul's (Titus 1:4) and an effective ministry associate over a number of years (2 Cor. 2:13).

2:2 Revelation here may refer to the prophecy of Agabus in Acts 11:27–30. Or it may refer to a private revelation of the Lord to Paul, perhaps similar to the one he received in Jerusalem earlier (Acts 22:17–21). Later Jesus appeared to Paul in another vision (Acts 23:11). Them may refer to the Jerusalem church at large, or it may be only those who were of reputation, presumably the inner core made up of James, Cephas (Peter), and John (v. 9). For Paul to have communicated with these leaders privately does not mean he considered altering his gospel, as the following section clearly shows (vv. 3–10). In vain does not reflect on the effectiveness of Paul's gospel, but rather on his efforts to maintain a unity in the church without sacrificing "the truth of the gospel" (v. 5).

2:3 Titus (v. 1) was a "test-case" Gentile. The term circumcised introduces a central topic of the Jewish false teachers, one which Paul addresses repeatedly in Galatians (5:2, 3, 6). Unlike Timothy, whom Paul had circumcised because Timothy's mother was Jewish, Titus was not circumcised. Circumcising him would have been a sign to all other Gentiles that following Jewish law was required for a person to become a Christian. As Paul explains in this letter, that would be a rejection of the Good News that salvation is God's gift to those who believe in His Son.

2:4 false brethren: This phrase apparently indicates that although these people passed themselves off convincingly as Christians, there was reason to view their profession as a sham. These pseudo-Christians did not announce their purpose, which was to curtail Christian liberty (5:1, 13) and to bring Paul and his converts into the bondage of Jewish legalism (6:12–15). These false brethren maintained that one had to keep the Jewish law in order to be saved. They refused to confess that salvation was God's gift through faith alone. For this reason, Paul would not recognize them as genuine Christians.

2:5 Paul's message about the truth of the gospel had never given way to the message of the false teachers, whether in Jerusalem (vv. 1–10), Syrian Antioch (vv. 11–14), or Galatia. you: The Galatian Christians could trust Paul's consistent advocacy of his gospel, which was revealed by God (1:11, 12).

2:6 While Paul recognized the leadership roles of James, Cephas (Peter), and John (v. 9) as "pillars" of the Jerusalem church, he pointed out that they were in no way superior to him in their understanding of the gospel. added nothing to me: The other apostles were satisfied with Paul's understanding of the gospel.

2:7–10 There were not two different gospels, one for the uncircumcised Gentiles and another for the circumcised Jews. Rather, the primary scope of Paul's apostolic ministry was to the Gentiles (Rom. 11:13), while Peter's apostleship was, first and foremost, targeted toward the Jews. The fact that God worked effectively through Peter in reaching Jews and just as effectively through Paul in reaching the Gentiles was strong evidence to the leaders in Jerusalem of Paul's apostolic commission (Rom. 1:5). The right hand of fellowship was a common sign of acceptance and friendship. It indicated full recognition of Paul by the representatives of the Jerusalem church. The request to remember the poor, almost certainly the poor among the church in Judea (Acts 11:29, 30), reflects an ongoing concern of Paul's (Rom. 15:26).

2:11, 12 Antioch was the largest city of the Roman province of Syria. It became a center for missionary outreach to other Gentile cities in Asia Minor and Macedonia (Acts 13:1–3). After the earlier meeting in Jerusalem (vv. 1–10), the behavior of Peter in Antioch was contradictory and hypocritical (vv. 12, 13). Given Peter's immense influence, Paul had little choice but to point out the hypocrisy directly (vv. 11, 14). Paul confronted Peter because refusing to eat with the Gentiles contradicted what Peter had long since recognized, that the gospel was for the Gentiles too. Certain men came from James indicates that they came with the authority of James, one of the leaders of the Jerusalem church (v. 9). However, it is unlikely that they accurately represented the views of James (vv. 7–10). Whatever they said to Peter caused a strong reaction in which he withdrew and separated himself from table fellowship with Gentiles. Apparently Peter was fearing damage to his reputation as apostle to the circumcision (2:7, 8).

IN CONTEXT

The Circumcision

The fact that a certain group in the early church was referred to as "the circumcision" (Gal. 2:12) reflects how deeply controversial the ancient practice of circumcision had become by the first century A.D. Originally mandated by God as a sign of His covenant relationship with Israel (Gen. 17:9–14), circumcision became a mark of exclusivity, not only among the Jews, but among the early Jewish Christians.

Circumcision involved the surgical removal of a male child's foreskin. The Hebrew people came to take great pride in this rite. In fact, it became a badge of their spiritual and national superiority. This attitude eventually fostered a spirit of exclusivism instead of compassion to reach out to other nations as God intended. They came to regard Gentiles as the "uncircumcision," a term of disrespect implying that non-Jewish peoples were outside the circle of God's love. Thus, the terms "circumcised" and "uncircumcised" became charged with emotion, as is plain from the discord the issue brought about in the early church.

A crisis erupted at Antioch when believers from Judea, known as Judaizers, taught the believers, "Unless you are circumcised according to the custom of Moses, you cannot be saved" (Acts 15:1). In effect, the Judaizers insisted that a person from a non-Jewish background must first become a Jew ceremonially by being circumcised before he could be admitted to the Christian faith.

A council of apostles and elders was convened at Jerusalem to resolve the issue (Acts 15:6–29). Among those attending were Paul, Barnabas, Simon Peter, and James, leader of the Jerusalem church. To insist on circumcision for the Gentiles, Peter argued, would amount to a burdensome yoke (15:10). This was the decision handed down by the council.

Years later, reinforcing that decision, the apostle Paul wrote the believers at Rome that Abraham, the "father of circumcision" (Rom. 4:12), was saved by faith rather than by circumcision (4:9–12). He declared circumcision to be of no value unless accompainied by an obedient spirit (2:25–26).

Paul also spoke of the "circumcision of Christ" (Col. 2:11), a reference to His atoning death which "condemned sin in the flesh" (Rom. 8:3) and nailed "the handwriting of requirements" to the cross (Col. 2:14). In essence, Paul declared that the new covenant of Christ's shed blood has made forgiveness available to both Jew and Gentile and has made circumcision unnecessary. All that ultimately matters for both Jew and Gentile is a changed nature—a new creation that makes them one in Jesus Christ (Eph. 2:14–18).

2:13 Peter's example was so decisive that the rest of the Jews in the church at Syrian Antioch, including Barnabas, followed suit. However, Peter's actions did not represent conviction, but hypocrisy.

2:14 Peter's hypocritical example implied that Gentiles had to behave like Jews in order to receive God's grace. Thus, Peter was not being straightforward about the truth of the gospel of God's grace. It had already been decided (vv. 1–5) that it was not proper to compel Gentiles to live as Jews because salvation was through faith alone.

2:15–21 This section may represent the continuation of Paul's confrontation with Peter, or it may represent a statement of the central point of his letter: that Christians are justified by faith in Jesus Christ alone.

2:15–17 Paul is not denying that those who are Jews by birth are sinners, as are all Gentiles (Rom. 3:23). Rather, he is implying that Jews enjoy spiritual privileges (Rom. 9:4, 5) that should make them more knowledgeable about how to be justified before God (3:6; Gen. 15:6). The Jews should have been aware that no person can be declared righteous or justified by obedience to the Law of Moses (3:10–21).

2:16 By the grace of God (v. 21), the only way to be justified (declared righteous or pardoned) is through faith in Jesus Christ. Any other way allows works, whether keeping the law of Moses or performing good deeds in general, to play a role in justification. This is the main point of Paul's letter to the Galatians: salvation or righteousness cannot be obtained by obeying the law. Salvation is only through faith in Jesus Christ (Rom. 3:20).

2:17–19 Paul strongly rejects the erroneous conclusion that being justified by faith in Christ actually made Jews sinners, thus painting Christ as a promoter of sin. Those who attempt to be justified through "the works of the law" are "cursed" (3:10). If anyone attempts to reassert the "works of the law" as having any part in justification before God, the law itself convicts that person of being a transgressor (3:19–25). The law itself is not sinful; its purpose is to convince individuals of their personal spiritual deadness in sin outside of faith in Christ (Rom. 7:7–13).

2:20 Paul and every believer were crucified with Christ in order to die to sin, the law, and "this present evil age" (1:4). While believers live on physically, Christ also lives within them spiritually. Christ's resurrection power through the Spirit is worked out through the Christian (Rom. 6:4–11) who chooses to live by faith in the Son of God.

2:21 If righteousness is attainable through keeping the law of Moses, then God's gracious act of sending Christ to die on the Cross to pay for sin was unnecessary and useless (Rom. 3:4–26).

3:1 Foolish does not indicate lack of intelligence but lack of wisdom. Paul wonders whether something like an evil spell had prevented the Galatians from recalling the gospel of the crucified Christ, which had been clearly portrayed or preached to them. He uses a play on words—before whose eyes—to highlight their duplicity as contrasted with the truth he had carefully explained to them.

3:2 In this verse, Paul contrasts obedience to the law with faith. The hearing of faith is probably what Paul had in mind in Rom. 10:17 when he said, "So then faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." It may also be closely related to Paul's concept of obedience to the faith, since the Greek word for "hear" can also be translated "listen" or "obey" (Rom. 1:5; 16:26).

3:3 Paul reminds the Galatians that their Christian life was begun in the Spirit by faith alone (v. 2; 2:16). Being made perfect by the flesh indicates that the Galatians were mistakenly trying to achieve perfection through their own efforts, especially through circumcision.

3:4 This statement implies that the Galatian Christians had previously suffered for their faith, before they were tricked by the false gospel.

3:5 What Paul meant here by the working of miracles is uncertain. Perhaps his resuscitation from near death after being stoned (Acts 14:19, 20) is part of what he had in mind.

3:6 There are several reasons for Paul's reference to Abraham's faith as an example. (1) Abraham was the father of the Jewish nation (Gen. 12:1–3). (2) Abraham is the clearest example of justification in the OT. (3) The Judaizers almost certainly were pointing back to Abraham, probably in connection with circumcision (2:3; 5:2, 3). The example of Abraham's faith is also developed in Rom. 4; Heb. 11; James 2. Paul quotes Gen. 15:6 from the Greek translation of the OT to show that Abraham was justified by faith alone. This verse communicates precisely what Paul called "the truth of the gospel" (2:5, 14).

3:7 Those who are of faith are spiritual sons of Abraham, even if they are not Jews. They are part of God's people.

3:8, 9 Scripture is personified as a preacher who foretells that Abraham and his example of faith (Gen. 15:6) would become a life-changing blessing to all nations (Gen. 12:3; Matt. 28:19) as the gospel spread. All who have faith, as Abraham did, join in his blessed status.

Believing (Gk. pistos) could also be translated "faithful," but the context favors believing or "believer." This is the only use of the word in Galatians.

3:10 Being under the curse through trying to be justified by the works of the law is contrasted with being blessed as a believer (v. 9). The quotation from Deut. 27:26 says that those who do not keep the whole law are cursed, proving that all are cursed who follow the law, because all fall short of the law's standards (Rom. 1:17; 3:10–18, 23).

3:11, 12 Paul quotes Hab. 2:4 to demonstrate that a person can only be justified through faith. He cites Lev. 18:5 to prove that keeping the law to gain salvation is utterly incompatible with faith.

3:13, 14 Paul knew that many of his readers would perceive that they were actually under the curse of the law (v. 10; Deut. 27:26). For them as for us, it is incredibly comforting to know that Christ became that curse for us on the Cross (Deut. 21:23). The picture is that of the wrath of God hanging over us—as Damocles' sword—but Christ took that wrath. Thus, the curse is lifted through faith in Christ's redemption and the blessing of Abraham and the promise of the Spirit to all believers. It is likely that the Jewish false teachers were stating that blessing came through keeping the Mosaic law, and that people were cursed if they did not.

3:15 Covenant here probably means a "last will and testament," which is unchangeable after it is confirmed. Most of the uses of the word in the NT refer to a solemn agreement or contract God made with His people.

3:16 Jesus Christ is the fulfillment of the covenant (v. 15) God made with Abraham. Although in one sense all Jews are the physical seed of Abraham, Christ is the final focus of God's promises, the ultimate Seed. Christians are the spiritual seed of Abraham (v. 29).

3:17 Four hundred and thirty years was the period of time Israel was in Egypt before the Exodus (Ex. 12:40, 41). The law, which was put into force at the end of those centuries, could not override or annul the standing covenant with Abraham (Gen. 15:18).

3:18 The law of Moses and the promise God made to Abraham were at odds with each other. Paul demonstrated that the false teachers' view that the law was the fulfillment of the Abrahamic covenant had no scriptural basis.

3:19, 20 The purpose of the law of Moses was not to justify humankind in God's eyes (2:16). Rather, the law was added after God's promise to Abraham (vv. 16, 17) to clarify the issue of sin until Christ the Seed (v. 16) came. According to Stephen's sermon in Acts 7, the law was given through angels to Moses as the human mediator (Acts 7:38). This view was in line with Jewish teaching of the NT era. No mediator, or go-between, was needed with the Abrahamic covenant since it was a one-party, or unilateral, promise. God put Abraham into a "deep sleep" and consummated the ceremonial enactment of the covenant alone (Gen. 15:12–17).

3:21, 22 The relationship of the law and the promises of God is not competition, but need and fulfillment. The law was not designed by God to give eternal life and righteousness. Rather, the law showed humanity's need for the promise of life through faith in Jesus Christ (v. 9; 2:16), having confined all people under their sin (Rom. 3:23; 6:23).

3:23–25 Paul gives two different illustrations concerning the function of the law until Christ came (4:4, 5). The law acted as a jail guard to hold humankind in custody until faith in Christ was revealed. But the law also served as a tutor. A tutor in ancient Greek culture would accompany the children in his care, instructing and disciplining them when necessary. The law was like a tutor because it both corrected and instructed the Israelites in God's ways until Christ was revealed, and such a tutor was no longer needed (4:1, 2).

“tutor”

(Gk. paidagogos) (3:24, 25; 1 Cor. 4:15) Strong’s #3807: The Greek term means “custodian” or a person who attends a child. In Greek households a faithful servant was given the responsibility of taking care of a boy from childhood to puberty. The servant kept him from both physical and moral evil, and went with him to his amusements and to school. Paul used the word to say that the law functioned as a child-custodian. The law acted as an outward check on desires, thus making the consciousness of sin more acute. And since none of us is able to deal with sin by ourselves, the law guides us to Christ, our only Rescuer and Savior.

3:26, 27 Through faith in Christ Jesus believers are not only blessed as sons of Abraham (vv. 7, 9) but also as sons of God (John 1:12) and God’s heirs (4:7). Believers have been adopted by God Himself. Although we were His enemies, we have been made His sons. Although we deserve judgment, we will receive an eternal inheritance from our Father.

3:28 The context of this verse is justification by faith in Christ Jesus, the fact that Jesus has redeemed all those who believe on Him, whether Jew or Gentile (3:26—4:27). Racial, social, and gender distinctions that so easily divide in no way hinder a person from coming to Christ in order to receive His mercy. All people equally can become God’s heirs and recipients of His eternal promises (4:5–7).

3:29 To be Christ’s through faith (3:26, 27) also means to be Abraham’s sons (seed) (3:7) and blessed (heirs) with him (3:9), according to God’s promise (Gen. 12:3).

We live in a time when it seems that everyone is concerned about exercising their "rights." Indeed, society has become somewhat polarized as various groups form around their perceptions of rights that they feel they are being denied. The more intense the struggle to achieve those rights, the more social conflict seems to escalate.

Paul indicated to the Galatians that before God, no one has any rights; whatever rights humanity once had have been forfeited as a result of sin. To bring this situation home to his readers, Paul used the metaphor of a slave (Gal. 4:1–3), an image that the Galatians probably knew well, as the Roman Empire depended heavily on slave labor (Rom. 6:16).

The Galatians had become children of God, but before that they were in bondage to sin, to the "elements of the world" (Gal. 4:3; compare Col. 2:8, 20). As slaves to sin, they had no rights before God. He owed them nothing. They belonged to sin, which they were forced to serve. Emancipation from that position had to come from a source other than their own power, ingenuity, or morality.

Such is the plight of all sinners before God—helpless and hopeless (Rom. 3:23, John 3:19, 20). But just as God gave life, resources, and responsibility to humanity in the beginning (Gen. 1:26—2:4), so now He has given Christ His Son to rescue or "redeem" people from sin and grant them all the privileges of adoption into the family of God (Gal. 4:4–7). No one deserves that, which is why receiving Christ's new life and the rights therein is truly a gift.

If as believers we have received these treasures from God, then we ought to let others know that the same opportunity is available to them.

4:1, 2 Drawing upon the illustration of the “tutor” and “heirs” in 3:24–29, Paul develops the idea of what it means to be an adopted son of God. In ancient society a child had to wait until the proper time before he could inherit what was his. Paul uses this to explain why God delayed Jesus Christ’s coming, leaving people with His law as a guide (3:23–25).

(Gk. stoicheion) (4:3, 9; Col. 2:8, 20; Heb. 5:12; 2 Pet. 3:10) Strong’s #4747: This Greek word can mean (1) “elementary or rudimentary principles” or (2) “elemental spirits.” The word itself means things placed in line or in a row, like an alphabet. It was used to speak of rudimentary principles (Heb. 5:12) or basic elements of the universe, whether physical (2 Pet. 3:10) or spiritual. If Paul was thinking of elementary principles, he meant that people are in bondage to the basic elements of religion (Col. 2:20); if he meant spirits, he was saying that people are in bondage to the spirits,” meaning certain gods or demons. Principles suits the overall context of Galatians, whereas spirits accords with 4:8–10. In either case, Paul was saying that people were in bondage until Christ came.

4:3 We were children in bondage parallels “child” and “slave” in v. 1. Some believe that the elements Paul refers to in this verse are “elemental spiritual forces.” As in astrology today, the ancients associated spiritual forces with “the elements,” such as earth, air, fire, and water. But the context, and Paul’s use of the word elsewhere (Col. 2:8, 20), favors an understanding of elements as “elementary principles or regulations,” perhaps the Jewish law or aspects of it (compare Heb. 5:12—6:3). This is confirmed in the context, for elements of the world parallels “guardians and stewards” in v. 2, as well as the role of the law in 3:23–25. These elements are described as “weak and beggarly” in v. 9 and are linked to what appears to be Jewish calendar observances in v. 10.

4:4, 5 The fullness of the time is “the perfect time” in history, the “time appointed” by God the Father (v. 2) for His Son to be born, and later to die for the sins of the world. Born of a woman speaks of Christ’s humanity and perhaps alludes to His role as the ultimate “Seed” of the woman (3:16; Gen. 3:15). Born under the law means Christ was subject to the Jewish law (Matt. 5:17–19), further establishing His identification with all people who are subject to the law. Redeem, meaning “to buy from the slave market,” is a term used only by Paul in the NT (3:13; Eph. 5:16; Col. 4:5). The verb describes Christ’s supreme and final payment for the sins of humanity (Rom. 3:23–25). This payment, His death on the Cross, frees those who believe on Him from the curse of the law and slavery to sin. This decisive payment and resulting freedom clears the way for Christians to become God's sons. Although there is only one natural Son in God's family, Jesus Christ (vv. 4, 6), God has graciously adopted all believers as His sons. We are no longer slaves to sin, nor children under the guardianship of the law.

4:6 Just as "God sent forth His Son" in "the fullness of the time" in world history (v. 4), so God has sent forth the Spirit of Christ at just the right time for every person who believes in Christ. into your hearts: Christians can know intimacy with the Father because of the indwelling Spirit (Rom. 8:1–17).

4:7 Paul summarizes the illustrations and teaching of the preceding section (vv. 1–6) by speaking of the transformation of the believer from being a spiritual slave to being a son with full rights. To be an heir of God is true of all "sons" unconditionally. This should be distinguished, however, from being an heir of the kingdom. The Scripture speaks of two inheritances (Rom. 8:17). All children of God by faith (John 1:12) have an inheritance in heaven which can never fade (1 Pet. 1:3–5), but the inheritance in the earthly reign of Christ is earned as a result of our sufferings for Him (2 Tim. 2:12).

4:8, 9 The words in bondage and elements refer back to v. 3. Paul was in effect asking the Galatians, "Is it spiritual progress again to be enslaved to weak and beggarly rituals and observances (v. 10)? How could you have known God and turned away to 'childish' (v. 3) things?" The Galatians had come to know God through faith in Jesus Christ (John 17:2, 3). He had adopted them as His own sons, but they were turning back to the law that had once enslaved them. They were in the process of leaving the light and liberty of Christianity for the shadow and slavery of legalism. Ritualistic observances are heathenish in principle. They are a system of bondage opposed to God's grace. How can anyone want to exchange the robe of Christ's righteousness for the filthy rags of heathenism, Judaism, or any other "ism"?

4:10 The word days likely refers to Sabbaths or special feasts. Months and seasons pertain to longer observances, such as the celebrations between the Passover and the Day of Pentecost. Years probably indicates the Year of Jubilee, the fiftieth year in which slaves were to be freed, family lands returned to their original owners, and the land left fallow (Lev. 23—25). The Jews commemorated all these feasts in order to please God.

4:11 In this section (4:8–20) Paul uses two variations on the idea of labor: (1) He initially speaks of having labored for you in "preaching the gospel to you" (4:13); (2) Then he uses the analogy of labor pains related to a baby's birth to describe the difficulty of furthering the Christian growth of the Galatians "until Christ is formed in you" (Eph. 4:13).

4:12 I urge you: To get beyond the present dilemma, Paul appeals to the Galatians to follow his example (1 Cor. 11:1). He had abandoned the ceremonial rules and regulations connected with Judaism so that he could freely preach the gospel of Christ to Jew and Gentile alike in the cities of Galatia. They too should not hinder the gospel of Christ with laws and regulations.

4:13–15 Paul describes the closeness and understanding that had existed between him and the Galatians when he had preached the gospel to them initially. He recalls how the Galatians had cared for him in his illness, treating him as they would an angel, or even Christ Himself. Paul's physical infirmity could have been an illness contracted en route to Galatia, a consequence of having been blinded on the road to Damascus (Acts 9:3, 8) or a consequence of being stoned (Acts 14:19). Some have suggested that Paul was practically blind. This would explain the reference to your own eyes, as well as the size of Paul's handwriting, referred to in 6:11. This might have been the infirmity about which Paul wrote in his letter to the Corinthians. Paul had repeatedly asked God for healing, but God refused to heal him because his weakness demonstrated God's strength (2 Cor. 12:7–10).

4:16 A person with pure motives and real friendship does not always say things that are pleasant to hear. Paul was telling the Galatians the truth, and as a result was being labeled as their enemy. Sometimes the truth hurts; but a faithful friend would courageously confront another.

4:17, 18 Paul's own career of persecuting Christians proved that zealous behavior can be tragically misguided (1:13, 14). Paul was strongly implying that the false teachers in Galatia were making the same mistake he had made prior to his conversion. Their zeal for the law was blinding them to the freedom and truth to be found in Jesus Christ.

4:19 In a most tender way, Paul calls the Galatian Christians his little children because of their lack of spiritual growth and depth. The apostle also portrays himself as the Galatians' "spiritual mother." He was feeling the labor pains of their birth all over again because they had fallen into serious error.

4:20 Paul concludes his highly personal appeal to the Galatians (4:8–20) by stating his desire to be present with them, and for things to be different. But in light of the erroneous teaching in their midst, he has good reason to have doubts about their spiritual status.

4:21–31 In this section Paul develops an allegory to complement his argument that justification has always been by faith and that was not changed by the emergence of the law (3:6–25). Although there are other biblical examples of allegory, the giving of figurative meaning to the details of a story (Is. 5:1–7), Paul is not recommending, or even condoning, the use of allegorical interpretation. An allegory is a legitimate figure of speech for conveying a literal truth, whereas allegorization is an illegitimate distortion of historical facts in order to create a deeper, hidden spiritual meaning. Paul is drawing upon a common Jewish approach of the day, likely used by the false teachers in Galatia to attempt to support their views. Paul may be "turning the tables" by using their method to discredit their position.

4:21, 22 Once again Paul speaks of the law and the experience of Abraham, addressing the false teachers' foundational respect for Abraham (3:6–9) and the Galatians' infatuation with living under the law. To clinch his lengthy argument about the bondage of the law and the freedom found in Christ, Paul uses as examples the two sons of Abraham. These are Ishmael, who was born of the bondwoman Hagar (v. 24); and Isaac, who was born of Sarah, the rightful wife of Abraham and a freewoman. Appropriately, Paul counters the Jewish false teachers' zeal for the law with an argument based on the Law, the Pentateuch (Gen. 16:15; 21:2). He uses allegory to prove his point because it was a rhetorical technique the false teachers used. In other words, Paul was demonstrating that he could argue from the Law just as well as they could, but to prove that the Law of Moses pointed to the Messiah, Jesus Christ.

4:23 In Gen. 16, Abraham and Sarah attempted to fulfill God's promise through their own strength, using Hagar, a bondwoman. In spite of the complications caused by that "fleshly" alternative, Sarah, a freewoman, eventually saw the miraculous outworking of God's promise in the birth of Isaac (Gen. 12:2; 15:4).

4:24 symbolic: Paul was using the common Jewish allegorical method of the day to make his point. He used this approach to draw a stark contrast between two biblical covenants at odds with each other in the churches in Galatia: the Abrahamic promise (Gen. 12:1–3) and the Law of Moses that God gave Israel at Mount Sinai.

4:25 Paul compared Jerusalem, the center of Jewish life, to Mount Sinai, the birthplace of the Law of Moses.

4:26 The Jerusalem above represents the Jewish hope of heaven finally coming to earth (Rev. 21; 22). Since us all obviously refers to those who are free through faith in Christ (v. 7), Paul was strongly implying that the question at hand was not allegiance to Jerusalem, but allegiance to which Jerusalem—the new or the old? Would the Galatians follow the shortsighted present Jerusalem and its legalism or the liberty of the heavenly Jerusalem?

4:27 Paul quotes Is. 54:1, using the prophesied restoration of Israel from judgment and exile to illustrate how the later-born children of promise would eventually far outnumber the earlier offspring.

4:28–30 This portion of Paul's allegory is based on Gen. 21:9, 10. Isaac was continually persecuted by his older half brother Ishmael. Eventually, Ishmael and his mother Hagar were expelled because Ishmael had no standing in God's eyes as heir of Abraham. In creating a parallel between the story from Genesis and the Galatians' situation, Paul points out that (1) the persecution by the Jewish legalists of his day was not unexpected, and (2) it would not go on indefinitely because the legalists would soon be cast out.

4:31—5:1 So then represents the conclusion of the previous section, while therefore signals that Paul is going to apply this spiritual truth to the lives of the Galatian believers. To be children of the bondwoman is to be enslaved to the covenant from Mount Sinai (4:24, 25), the Law of Moses. To be of the free is to follow Abraham's example of faith (3:6–9), to be "born according to the Spirit" (3:2; 4:29), and to be destined for the "Jerusalem above" (4:26). Understanding such realities, the believer in Christ must continually stand fast in the liberty of not having to keep the Law of Moses in order to be saved. The Galatians were on the verge of becoming enslaved to the law again.

5:2–4 The legalistic Jewish teachers in Galatia were urging believers to be circumcised (6:12, 13). Paul points out that being circumcised changes the entire orientation of salvation away from God's grace to one's own actions. One who is circumcised in an attempt to gain God's acceptance is obligated to keep the whole law, which history has abundantly demonstrated no one can do (Rom. 3:10–18). It is a double loss: No one can be justified by law (2:16), and the person who attempts to do so is completely estranged from Christ, deriving no profit from Christ's redemptive death on the cross. What the Jewish legalistic teachers did with respect to circumcision is not different in principle from legalistic teachers in every age.

IN COMPARISON

Grace vs the Law

The Galatian believers, under pressure from Jewish legalists, were considering rejecting the gospel of grace and reverting back to dependence on the Mosaic law for salvation. Paul wrote this letter to outline the dramatic differences between the two approaches to God.

Grace . . .	Law . . .
• is based on faith (2:16).	• is based on works (2:16).
• justifies sinful men (2:16, 17).	• is incapable of resulting in justification (2:16; 3:11).
• begins and ends with Christ (2:20).	• makes Christ nothing (5:3).
• is the way of the Spirit (3:2, 3, 14).	• is the way of the flesh (3:3).
• is a "blessing" (3:14).	• is a "curse" (3:13).
• is God's desired end for His people (3:23–25).	• was intended to be only a means to an end (3:23–25).
• results in intimacy with Christ (3:27).	• results in estrangement from Christ (5:4).
• makes one a son of God and an heir of Christ (4:6, 7).	• keeps one a slave (4:7).
• brings liberty (5:1).	• results in bondage (5:1).
• depends on the power of the Holy Spirit (5:16–18, 22, 23).	• depends on human effort (5:19–21).
• is motivated by love (5:13, 14).	• is motivated by pride (6:3, 13, 14).
• centers on the cross of Christ (6:12–14).	• centers on circumcision (5:11; 6:12–15).

5:4 Fallen from grace is understood by some to refer to the loss of salvation. However, fallen from may refer to their attitude and to the message that it communicates, rather than to their eternal salvation.

5:5 Faith in Christ brings about not only justification before God, but also growth in the Christian life until we are completely glorified by God and freed from the presence of sin. This is the hope of righteousness. We can be assured that we will be declared righteous before the Lord on that last day, because we have a foretaste of that righteousness from the Spirit who lives within us (2 Cor. 5:5).

5:6 By faith it is possible to fulfill Christ's command to love one's neighbor (vv. 13, 14; John 13:34, 35).

5:7, 8 You ran well: The Galatians' splendid start in the race of the Christian life had not continued. Their detour into legalism was certainly not God's will.

5:9, 10 Leaven symbolizes the intruders, with their false doctrine and sinister influence. They were taking the gospel of free forgiveness away from the Galatians. The one who causes such harm will experience God's judgment (2 Cor. 5:10).

5:11 The cross gives offense because it proclaims God's unmerited grace (2:21), leaving no place for people's good works.

5:12 cut themselves off: The spiritual damage caused by legalistic teaching regarding circumcision and the law was so serious that Paul used strong, sarcastic words to emphasize his point. The false teachers should go beyond circumcision and castrate themselves. This statement reveals Paul's frustration with those who muddied the clear gospel message of God's grace.

5:13, 14 Liberty presents an opposite temptation from legalism. A person can be tempted to view freedom in Christ as a selfish opportunity for the flesh, to do whatever one wants. But Paul points out that true Christian liberty is the freedom to serve one another in love (vv. 5, 6).

5:15 When Christians follow their sinful desires (v. 13), they begin to criticize and contend with one another. Such behavior is self-defeating. These people usually end up being consumed in worthless struggles.

5:16–18 These verses introduce the contrast between the work of the Spirit and the work of the flesh in the believer's life.

5:16 The only consistent way to overcome the sinful desires of our human nature (the flesh) is to live step-by-step in the power of the Holy Spirit as He works through our spirit (v. 25). Shall not is a striking promise. Walking each moment by faith in God's word under the Spirit's control assures absolute victory.

5:17 The potential of the flesh energized by Satan in the life of the Christian should not be underestimated. Given free rein, the flesh will direct our choices, making us do what we know we should not do. This inner conflict between the flesh and the Spirit is very real, but there is considerable disagreement as to its precise meaning. Some believe that flesh here refers to a "sinful nature" continuing after salvation, while others view it as simply the physical flesh and its natural tendencies. Still others focus on the "fleshly" or "worldly" habits and patterns that continue after justification. Although the precise meaning of flesh in unclear, Paul's intent is plain. The desires of our flesh are at odds with what the Holy Spirit desires for us: to be free from sin.

5:18 Those who are led by the Holy Spirit exhibit a quality of behavior (5:22, 23) which exceeds the requirements of the Mosaic code.

(Gk. sarx) (5:19, 24; 6:8, 12, 13; Rom. 7:18; 8:3, 13) Strong’s #4561: In Greek literature, the word sarx usually meant nothing more than the human body. It was also used this way in the NT (John 1:14; Rev. 17:16; 19:18, 21). However, Paul often used the word to denote the entire fallen human being—not just the sinful body but the entire being, including the soul and mind, as affected by sin. Thus, Paul often pitted the “flesh” against the “Spirit” as being two diametrically opposed forces. The unbeliever can live only in the flesh, but the believers can live in the flesh or in the Spirit.

5:19–21 The works of the flesh include, but go well beyond, the destructive contentions and jealousies portrayed in v. 15. Where there is such behavior, it is positive proof that the person is not living in the power of the Holy Spirit (vv. 16, 18, 22, 23) but is being energized by Satan and his hosts (Matt. 16:23; Acts 5:3).

5:22, 23 Spirit: There is a question here whether Paul means specifically the works done by a person’s regenerated human spirit, or works done by the Holy Spirit Himself in the believer’s life. The fruit analogy is reminiscent of Jesus’ teaching on the vine, branches, and fruitful harvest (John 15:1–5). It is well for the Christian to remember that, without Christ and His Spirit (Gal. 4:6), “you can do nothing” (John 15:5). Since fruit is singular, it apparently sees the following characteristics (love … self-control) as a harmonious unity.

5:24 Christians are spiritually “crucified with Christ” (2:20). They no longer have to follow the values or desires of the world (6:14). However, it remains difficult for Christians to apply this spiritual reality to the passions (affections) and desires (lusts) of the flesh (v. 16). Those who have mastered these sinful desires are those who have kept their focus on God (Jer. 9:23, 24; Dan. 11:32; John 17:3; Heb. 12:1–3).

5:25, 26 In these verses, Paul exhorts the Galatians to walk in the Spirit because they are already living in the Spirit. Such an action should be natural, but unfortunately we are at war with the flesh. Walk in the Spirit means to obey the prompting of the Holy Spirit. A believer following the Spirit’s lead (v. 16) will not become conceited, provoke others, or envy others.

6:1 Any trespass probably recalls the sinful "works of the flesh" in 5:19–21. Overtaken means to be caught off guard, perhaps at a vulnerable point. A believer devastated by sin needs to be approached with gentleness (5:23) by fellow believers. Those not controlled by the Holy Spirit would tend to boast by comparing themselves to the fallen believer (vv. 3, 4). Even as a doctor can catch a disease from treating a patient, so one restoring a fallen sinner can be tempted to fall into sin.

6:2 The law of Christ referred to here is probably the summation of the law: "Love your neighbor" (5:14; Matt. 22:39; John 13:34, 35). The term fulfill suggests that choosing to bear another Christian's burdens (or restore another Christian from burdensome sin, v. 1) is precisely what Christ expects of all believers. The Greek word for burdens refers to something beyond the normal capacity to carry, as opposed to a "load" (v. 5) a person could be expected to carry.

6:3, 4 Anyone who concludes that he is something special, through shortsighted self-comparison with those who seem to have fallen, truly deceives himself. Instead of judging others, a Christian should always examine his own work to see if he is closely following Christ's example (1 Cor. 11:31; 2 Cor. 13:5).

6:5 Each Christian must bear (6:2) his own load so as not to overload, or unduly "burden" (6:2), other believers. While it is a priority to "do good," particularly to other Christians (6:10), there are limits of time and other resources that must be considered.

6:6 One way to bear other believers' burdens (v. 2) is to share in all good things, including financial support, with one who teaches God's word. After all, teachers and preachers work hard in their ministry (1 Tim. 5:17).

6:7, 8 The principle of sowing and reaping was known to everyone in a largely agricultural society. It is a vain attempt to "mock" God for a Christian to think that if he sows to his flesh he can escape the harvest of destruction and judgment that comes upon those who participate in sin (5:19–21; Hos. 8:7). Corruption is a term used for a field in which the produce is too rotten to harvest (Heb. 6:8). Some interpret corruption to imply eternal destruction, either through losing salvation or through never having been truly saved at all. Others understand a tragic loss of rewards for the carnal believer (1 Cor. 3:12–15; 2 Cor. 5:10; Rev. 22:12). He who sows to the Spirit will reap everlasting life does not mean that eternal life is earned by works. Rather, Paul is saying that everlasting life is the glorious end of those who follow the Spirit's leading (Rom. 6:22).

6:9 In this verse, Paul speaks of doing good. The apostle has argued at length that such works cannot justify (2:16) or sanctify (3:3) anyone. However, good works are, in fact, an important fruit of the life of faith (5:5) that God has planned for each believer (Eph. 2:8–10). In 5:19–23, the apostle describes the attitudes and actions of those controlled by the "flesh" versus those controlled by the Spirit. In vv. 7–9, Paul shows the impact of those two contradictory ways over the length of a Christian's life (2 Cor. 5:10; Rev. 22:12).

6:10 Therefore indicates that this verse speaks of an important application of the spiritual sowing and reaping process (vv. 7–9). Christians are not only to serve one another in love (v. 2; 5:13), they also should do good to non-Christians.

6:11 Probably here Paul began to write with his own hand, after having up to now dictated the letter to a secretary. His reference to large letters in light of the wording of 4:13–15 implies that Paul had problems with his eyesight or was even partly blind. Paul commonly ended his letters with personal greetings (2 Thess. 3:17).

6:12 a good showing: The Judaizers were trying to appear spiritual by becoming circumcised and demanding that others become circumcised (5:2–12). persecution: The Judaizers were trying to make Christianity into a sect of Judaism. This would counter the persecution that they suffered from zealous Jews and align them with an officially sanctioned religion of the Roman Empire.

6:13 Even the Judaizers who advocated the Galatians' circumcision did not really keep the entire law. They were ultimately unable to fulfill all of the requirements (Rom. 3:23). Still, they attempted to persuade the Galatians to be circumcised so that they could boast about having them as their followers.

6:14 As a representative believer, Paul spoke of himself as crucified with Christ (2:20). In that act "the flesh with its passions and desires" (5:24) was also crucified, as was the world and its attractions (1 John 2:15–17).

6:15 To a Christian under the new covenant, following the Abrahamic sign of circumcision (Gen. 17:9–14) does not mean anything in terms of spirituality. What matters is being a new creation in Christ (2 Cor. 5:17).

6:16 As many as recalls the wording of v. 12. Those who live according to the example of Christ and the new creation (vv. 14, 15) are in stark contrast with those desiring to make a good impression through circumcision and keeping the law (vv. 12, 13). The Israel of God probably refers to Abraham's spiritual descendants (3:6–9), who believe in God and rely on His grace.

6:17 Paul's physical body carried the hard evidence of his allegiance to the Lord Jesus, the marks of harsh persecution (2 Cor. 11:23–26) suffered for preaching the gospel. Such marks far outweighed the "mark" of circumcision so valued by the false teachers in Galatia (vv. 12–15).

6:18 Paul ends his letter to the Galatians as he began it (1:3), underlining that it is only by God's grace that we are saved.

The Epistle to the Ephesians

IN ROME, PAUL WAS IN OFFICIAL CUSTODY. Although his movements were restricted, he continued to guide the early church and preach the gospel. The Romans could imprison Paul, but they could not imprison the spread of the Good News. Numerous local assemblies had sprouted up along the routes of Paul's three missionary journeys. The members of these churches were still proclaiming the gospel, not only by what they said, but also with their lives. Paul wrote the letter to the Ephesians to strengthen these congregations. He wanted them to understand the spiritual reality behind the numerous groups that gathered in houses all over the Mediterranean world, and he wanted them to encourage each other in the faith. They were the body of Christ.

Ephesians, like so much of Paul's writing, underscores the truth that salvation is by faith alone and not through works or human striving. The first half of the epistle (chs. 1—3) addresses the central doctrines of the Christian faith, while the second half of the letter (chs. 4—6) describes how those spiritual truths should be reflected in a Christian's behavior. Some would divide the second half of the letter into two sections—first the Christian's conduct and then spiritual conflict with the forces of evil. Such a division highlights the familiar passage describing the spiritual armor of a Christian.

The whole letter emphasizes the truth that all believers are united in Christ because the church is the one body of Christ. In the early chapters, Paul describes how God formed this new body from Jews and Gentiles with His Son as the Head. Through Jesus' death, God reconciled sinful people to Himself. This reconciliation with God has its effects on earth. People who were normally divided, like the Jews and the Gentiles in the first century, were reconciled to each other through Christ. In Ephesians, Paul exhorted his readers to live out the spiritual truth of being joined together with Christ. Whether Jew or Gentile, they had to work together to make the unity of the church a reality. In the rest of his letter, Paul gives a number of practical ways for church members to unite against the forces of evil. Each individual has to do his or her part in order for the whole body to function properly. Each person has to display Christ's love, patience, humility, and gentleness as they use their gifts to build up the church. From parent to child, employer to employee, each person has a unique task in the body of Christ (5:22–33).

Paul identifies himself as the author of Ephesians at the beginning and in the middle of the letter (1:1; 3:1). Internal evidence supports Pauline authorship. The fact that the author describes himself as being imprisoned points to Paul, for Luke describes Paul as being under house arrest in Rome in Acts 28. The letter is similar in content to Colossians, suggesting that both letters were written during the same imprisonment in Rome, around A.D. 60. The vocabulary and thought of the letter are typical of Paul, with his characteristic emphasis on justification by faith (2:8). New uses of old words are merely examples of the apostle's genius and versatility. Finally, the early church fathers were unanimous in ascribing the letter of Ephesians to Paul.

Modern scholars have recognized the clear Pauline themes in the letter, but some have used this characteristic of the letter to prove an alternative theory about the authorship of Ephesians. These scholars contend that when the body of Pauline epistles was collected, someone else constructed Ephesians as an introduction to Paul's writings. However, this elaborate theory still has to surmount the convincing evidence for Paul's authorship of the letter.

Ephesus was the capital of the Roman province of Asia (today part of Turkey). Located at the intersection of several major trade routes, Ephesus was a vital commercial center of the Roman Empire. It was the site of a famous temple for the fertility goddess Diana that was one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. Most importantly, however, Ephesus figured prominently and dramatically in early church history, for Paul used the city as a center for his missionary work in that region.

Paul visited Ephesus briefly at the end of his second missionary journey. When he departed, he left behind Priscilla and Aquila to continue the ministry in that city (Acts 18:18–21). On Paul's third missionary journey, he spent about three years in Ephesus. When the apostle's gospel message was rebuffed by the Jews in the Ephesian synagogue, Paul taught Scripture to both Jews and Greeks in the school of Tyrannus. Paul's ministry at Ephesus was marked by several Spirit-empowered miracles. As a result, the city became a center for evangelistic outreach to the rest of the province of Asia (Acts 19:18–20). In fact, so many people in Ephesus turned to Christ and renounced their pagan ways that some craftsmen in the city started a riot because the gospel threatened their trade of making and selling idols.

In Acts 20:17–38 Paul warned the elders of the Ephesian church about "savage wolves" who would not spare the congregation. About four decades later, the Lord Jesus Himself dictated to the apostle John a letter to the same congregation (Rev. 2:1–7). He commended the Ephesians for hearing Paul and not tolerating false teachers, but He exhorted them to recapture their first love for God.

There is much evidence that the Epistle to the Ephesians was originally a circular letter sent to several congregations in the province of Asia, where Ephesus was the capital. Some manuscripts lack "in Ephesus" in 1:1. Another clue that Ephesians is a circular letter is its lack of personal references. The phrases in 1:15 and 3:2 imply that Paul had only heard of the recipients of the letter but had never met them. This is especially noteworthy since Paul had spent three years ministering at Ephesus. It seems likely that the apostle would have mentioned at least some of the Ephesians by name in his letter. In addition to the lack of personal references, the content and teaching of the letter is itself very general. Paul refers to the church as the body of Christ as a whole, and not to a specific local church. If the letters to the Corinthians bristle with local congregational problems, Ephesians lacks such allusions entirely.

The idea that Ephesians is a circular letter is not unparalleled. In a way, all the New Testament epistles are circular in the sense that they eventually were circulated among many churches. While the question of destination is interesting, it does not strongly affect the meaning or the relevance of the letter. To a greater or lesser extent, all the letters in the New Testament are for the general edification of the church.

Commentary

1:1—3:21 The first half of Ephesians, like that of a number of Paul's epistles, stresses the doctrines or beliefs upon which the duties and behavior of the second half are built.

1:1, 2 The salutations in NT epistles follow the form of the typical first-century letter: the writer is mentioned first and the recipient next, followed by a blessing or best wishes for good health. The difference lies in the content of the blessing: pagan letters mentioned non-existent gods and goddesses such as Diana or Apollo; the apostles call upon the one true God and His Son Jesus Christ to bless their readers. In Ephesians, Paul refers to himself as an apostle because he was personally commissioned by Jesus Christ with special authority to preach the gospel. Saints in the NT refers to all believers set apart by God in Christ. Ephesus: This letter may have been a circular letter for the churches around Ephesus.

1:2 The free gift of salvation which is God's grace leads to peace and the wholeness of life. The deity of the Lord Jesus Christ is made clear by associating Him parallel with the Father.

1:3–12 Right at the beginning of the letter, Paul bursts out in praise for the God who chose Him before the foundation of the world. It was in Christ that He elected them to be both blessed and a blessing to others. The emphasis is not merely on escaping punishment, but on acting like real saints and bringing praise to God's glory.

1:3 The blessings of Christianity are largely spiritual. God does not guarantee health, wealth, and prosperity to the NT believer. The phrase in the heavenly places suggests that a Christian living anywhere in the world is even now in a spiritual sense seated with Christ on high.

1:4, 5 Love here is agape in Greek, the love that is by choice or one's will, not just a sentimental feeling. having predestined us: Predestination is not a cold-hearted determinism or set fate, but rather a loving choice on God's part. According to (Gk. kata) is a significant term in Ephesians, but not apt to be noticed since it is a common preposition. Paul uses it eleven times in this epistle. In ch. 1 we read "according to the good pleasure of His will" (v. 5), "according to the riches of His grace" (v. 7), "according to His good pleasure" (v. 9), and "according to the purpose of Him who works all things according to the counsel of His will" (v. 11). In ch. 3 we read

“according to the riches of His glory” (v. 16) and “according to the power that works in us” (v. 20). The point of all this is that God does not merely lavish His grace on us “out of” (ek) His abundance, but in accordance with (kata) His abundance. This has been well illustrated by the millionaire giving out dimes on the street. If he gave like God gives, “according to his riches,” he would be giving out one hundred dollar bills.

1:6 The Beloved may also be translated “the One He Loves,” namely, Jesus Christ. In Col. 1:13 Paul uses the similar title “the Son of His love.” The Beloved is a messianic title, referring to God’s Son. Jesus is not simply one among others who are loved by God. He is the Beloved Son.

What's In It for Me?

Peter and the other disciples wondered what they were going to get out of following Christ. "We have left all and followed You," Peter told Jesus. "Therefore what shall we have?" (Matt. 19:27). In other words, "What's the payoff? What's in this for me?"

Paul describes some of the "payoff" for believers here in Eph. 1:3–14. Because so much of it lies in the future, in another mode of existence, the language is strange and hard to understand. But in 1:11 he mentions an inheritance that is coming to us. What is it that we are going to receive "in Christ"?

Simply this: all that God has prepared for Christ in "the fullness of the times" is going to be ours as well (Rom. 8:15–17). This includes salvation from sin (Heb. 1:14), everlasting life (Matt. 19:29), and the kingdom of God (25:34). In fact, we will inherit God Himself.

Is this just wishful thinking? No, God is already giving us glimpses of that inconceivable future. The Holy Spirit lives inside us as a guarantee of things to come (Eph. 1:14). He "seals" us, assuring that we remain in God's family and do not lose our inheritance. And while we move toward that day, He works within our lives to make us like Christ. Paul describes what that looks like in chs. 4—6.

1:7, 8 redemption: The word means "buy back" or "ransom." In ancient times, one could buy back a person who was sold into slavery. In the same way, Christ through His death bought us from our slavery to sin. His blood: The blood of Christ is the means by which our redemption comes. The OT and the NT both clearly teach that there is no forgiveness without the shedding of blood. Blood here is a vivid symbolic equivalent of death. It recalls the sacrificial system of the old covenant, which looked forward to the self-sacrifice of Jesus Christ that took away the sin of the world..

"purpose"

(Gk. prothesis) (1:9, 11; 3:11; Rom. 8:28) Strong's #4286; counsel (Gk. boule) (1:11; 1 Cor. 4:5; Heb. 6:17) Strong's #4286; 1012; will (Gk. thelema) (1:1, 9, 11; 2:3; 5:17; Rom. 1:10; 1 Cor. 1:1) Strong's #4286; 1012; 2307: Three key words, all related conceptually, appear in this verse. One of these words (thelema) has been used by Paul twice before in this chapter (1:1, 9). The word conveys the idea of desire, even a heart's desire, for the word primarily expresses emotion instead of volition. Thus, God's will is not so much God's intention, as it is His heart's desire. The word prothesis denotes an intention or a plan; it literally means "a laying out beforehand" like a blueprint. This plan was created in God's counsel, a translation of the Greek word boule, which means the result of deliberate determination. But behind the plan and the counsel was not just a mastermind but a heart of love.

1:9 The mystery is not a puzzle to solve, or knowledge only for the few and the initiated, as in the mystery religions of Paul's day. In Paul's usage, the word mystery refers to an aspect of God's will that was once hidden or obscure, but now was being revealed by God (Rom. 11:25).

1:10 The word translated dispensation means "house rule." The English word economy is derived from this Greek word. The word refers to God's administration or arrangement of all history to fulfill His plan of salvation. While God never changes, His plan for the salvation of humanity has distinct phases. In this context, dispensation probably refers to the time when God will establish His eternal kingdom.

1:11, 12 We Jews have obtained an inheritance in Christ, far better than the inheritance promised under the old covenant. This was not something new, but was predestined (planned) according to the purpose of God from the beginning.

1:13–23 In this paragraph Paul switches from those who, like him, were born into Jewish homes ("we") to those with Gentile ethnic roots ("you"). The emphasis is on the work of the Holy Spirit. He seals every believer, thus making him or her God's special possession through faith. The Holy Spirit Himself is the seal and guarantee of our acceptance by God through faith in Christ. The goal of the Holy Spirit is to produce a fully perfect "Christ," namely, Jesus Christ the head and Christians the body! What an amazing thought, that we who were once alienated from God now help fill out what Paul calls the "Christ."

1:14 The guarantee of our inheritance is the Holy Spirit Himself. Interestingly, the Greek word for guarantee can also be used to indicate an engagement ring. As Christ is the Bridegroom and the church is the bride, so the Holy Spirit is the down payment, the earnest money, in the long-awaited marriage of the two (Rev. 19:7, 8). purchased possession: The OT described the nation of Israel as God's special treasure, one He had purchased by His mighty acts of deliverance during the Exodus (Ex. 19:5; Deut. 7:6). Here Paul describes Christians as the Lord's own possession, one bought with the blood of His own Son.

1:15–23 Here is Paul's earnest prayer of intercession for these Christians. After giving thanks for them (vv. 15, 16), he prays that they will have spiritual insight (v. 17) into the hope of His calling (v. 18), into the glory of His inheritance (v. 18), and into the exceeding greatness of His power (vv. 19–23).

1:15 after I heard (Col. 1:5, 9): Paul doesn't mention praying for them before he heard of their faith. How different from most of our prayers. We tend to plead for the salvation of lost persons and then drop them once they come to faith in Christ. Paul did just the opposite. Perhaps he learned from the Lord's pattern of prayer (John 1:7, 9, 20).

1:16, 17 my prayers: It is instructive to study Paul's prayers and learn about the nature of intercession. Much of our praying falls short of effective intercession.

1:18, 19 The eyes of your understanding refers to spiritual understanding. To describe this, Paul uses words that picture the heart looking out with eyes that have been brightened with divine illumination. what is the hope: A Christian may hope many things, but there is one hope that all Christians have in common (4:4), the Lord Jesus Christ (Col. 1:5, 27). In Him we find true hope and true riches.

1:20 worked in Christ: The resurrection of Christ from the dead was the expression of God's power. The Resurrection is also proof of what God can do in us and for us. seated Him: Christ Jesus was not only raised from the dead; He was given a position at the right hand of God. Jesus received this position as the Son of David in fulfillment of the messianic prophecies of Pss. 2; 110. Jesus Christ will remain at the Father's right hand until the enemies of God have been subjugated and it is time for Christ to return.

1:21 The Jews of Christ's time understood the end times to be divided into two time periods, the age in which they were living and the coming age. The Messiah, called "the Coming One," would rule in the age which is to come.

1:22, 23 In Ephesians Paul emphasizes Christ as head, just as his letter to the Colossians, written during the same imprisonment, emphasizes the body of Christ. The church here does not refer to any one local assembly but to all believers.

2:1–10 This is probably the clearest exposition of the gospel in all of Paul's epistles: We are saved by grace through faith totally apart from human merit or works. It is not that Christians do not do good works (we were created for this purpose), but that they are not a requirement or proof of acceptance with God. Luther summarized it succinctly: "It is not against works that we contend, but against trust in works."

2:1 Dead in trespasses and sins means spiritually dead and lost.

2:2 you once walked: Walking is a biblical expression that pictures a believer's steady, normal progress with God (Ps. 1:1). Paul here refers to a believer's old walk. Whether it was a path of moral carelessness or the dark alley of evil, believers should no longer walk according to their past evil ways (4:17). Believers are saved so that they can have a lifestyle characterized by good works (v. 10). They are to walk worthy of their calling (4:1), which means to walk in love (5:2), in light (5:8), and in wisdom (5:15). Paul points out to the Ephesians that they formerly walked according to the world's ways and after the prince of the power of the air—namely, the adversarial spirit Satan. Sons of is a Hebrew way of saying "those characterized by." Thus, the sons of disobedience are people who disobey, whether Christians or non-Christians (Matt. 16:23; Luke 22:31, 32; Acts 5:3).

2:3 Lusts means "strong desires." Even with the modifier of our flesh, this word pertains to more than merely sensual cravings. The natural human desires for fame, power, and riches are meant as well (Gal. 5:19–21).

2:4–7 we were dead: Because of Adam's sin, the entire human race is spiritually dead. Only God can grant new life and save us from this predicament. Out of His mercy, God gave His Son for us while we were yet His enemies. He loved us long before we loved Him (1 John 4:9, 10). In addition to making us spiritually alive, He determined that we would sit in heavenly places with our Savior, Jesus Christ. in the ages to come: God desires to demonstrate His kindness throughout eternity through Christ Jesus His Son. This has nothing to do with our own merit. It is only because He is merciful and kind that He reaches out to save us.

2:8–10 Christians have been saved by grace. The grace of God is the source of salvation; faith is the channel, not the cause. God alone saves. Salvation never originates in the efforts of people; it always arises out of the lovingkindness of God. Truly, "salvation is of the LORD" (Jon. 2:9). The past tense of the verb saved in this passage indicates that the believer's salvation has already occurred in the past, at the Cross. the gift of God: We cannot do anything to earn our salvation. Some suggest that the gift of God modifies the word faith in this verse. Thus, Paul is saying that even our belief in God does not originate in ourselves. This too is a gift, so no one can take pride in his or her position as a Christian. Everything is received from our merciful and gracious Father.

“workmanship”

(Gk. poiema) (2:10; Rom. 1:20) Strong’s #4161: The word literally means “a thing made”; it comes into English as poem. The word indicates a handiwork, a masterpiece. God’s church is His “poem,” His masterpiece, His workmanship, just as all creation is (Ps. 19:1; Rom. 1:20). As He is the Author of His handiwork, He should get all the credit (Ps. 19:1–6).

2:11–22 In vv. 1–10, Paul taught the salvation of individual Jews and Gentiles by grace through faith. In the second half of ch. 2, he teaches the formation of one new and holy temple of God composed of former Jews and Gentiles now united upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the cornerstone.

2:11 Because the sign of the Abrahamic covenant was circumcision, the Jews proudly referred to themselves as the Circumcision. Somewhat less kindly, they called Gentiles the Uncircumcision.

2:12, 13 Paul painted vividly the bleak condition of pagans. They had no hope, for God had not reached out to them to establish a covenant relationship. However, the shed blood of Christ could bring the Gentiles back to their Creator.

2:14 The middle wall of separation between Jews and Gentiles was vividly portrayed by an actual partition in the temple area, with a sign warning that any Gentile going beyond the Court of the Gentiles would receive swift and sudden death.

2:15, 16 having abolished … the law: Paul was not saying that God had rejected the righteous standards of the law. Rather, in Christ the righteous standards that people could never reach have been accomplished. He is our righteousness; in Him, believers fulfill the law (Matt. 5:17, 20; Rom. 3:21, 22, 31). The Christian church, composed of both Jews and Gentiles, is described as one new man. In the earliest days of Christianity, the church was largely made up of Jews. But under the direction of God’s Spirit, the believers witnessed to Gentiles (Acts 10), who then outnumbered the Jewish members.

2:17, 18 access … to the Father: The blessed privilege of every Christian. All members of the Trinity—Christ, the Spirit, and the Father— are involved in our salvation.

2:19 When Gentiles become one with the people of God, they are not simply patched on. They, along with Jewish believers, are made fellow citizens of the kingdom of God and equal members of God's family.

2:20 The apostles and prophets were the foundation of the church because they pointed to and witnessed to Jesus. The early church was established on their teaching and preaching (Acts 2). Yet Christ Himself is the rock foundation on which the whole church rests (1 Cor. 3:11). The cornerstone was the first large stone placed at the corner of a building. The builders would line up the rest of the structure to the chief cornerstone (1 Pet. 2:1–9).

2:21, 22 Being fitted together pictures the process in Roman construction whereby laborers (usually slaves) would turn huge rocks around until they fit each other perfectly. For example, columns appeared to be one piece, but were actually separate cylinders of stone resting on each other. In similar fashion, God fits believers together into the holy temple He is building for Himself.

“stewardship”

(Gk. oikonomia) (1:10; 3:2; 1 Cor. 9:17; 1 Tim. 1:4) Strong’s #3622: The word means “household management.” In ancient times, the word was often used to describe the work of a person who took care of all the financial affairs of a large household or business (Luke 16:1, 2). Paul was entrusted with the stewardship of God’s economy, to dispense the riches of Christ to God’s household and to preach the Good News (3:2–11). Paul uses this same word to describe God’s own administration or government of time (1:10).

3:1–21 If we compare 3:1 with 3:14, we see that everything between the two times Paul uses the expression “for this reason” is a digression. This is a common feature of the apostle’s writing style. These are real letters, not books of systematic theology (although next to Romans, Ephesians probably constitutes the most closely reasoned theology in the NT). The parenthetical material details God’s revelation to Paul of the “mystery,” that is, the sacred secret that in the dispensation (or stewardship) of God’s grace, Jews and Gentiles would be on an equal level and in one body.

3:1–4 The dispensation (stewardship) that God gave Paul for the benefit of the Ephesians had previously been a mystery. Now God was revealing this mystery more fully in Paul’s ministry to the Gentiles. The mystery was that Jews and Gentiles were to have an equal status in the church, the body of Christ.

3:5, 6 People who lived in the other ages, before Pentecost, had a great deal of knowledge about God and His grace, as the OT demonstrates. However, that knowledge was not as all-embracing as the revelation that we receive in Christ Jesus. The OT predicted that God’s grace would come to the Gentiles (Gen. 12:3), but equality with the Jews in one body was a secret never before revealed.

3:7 The word translated minister here means “servant.” the gift of … grace: It took divine grace to transform Paul from a blasphemer into a saint, from a Pharisee into an apostle, and from a persecutor of Christians into a preacher of Christ. Then it took divine power and authority to enable Paul to function as a minister of God.

IN CONTEXT

The Power of Prayer

Our troubles can easily cause us to lose the larger picture about life. Daily routines and pressures can create doubts about our significance. And because we are bound in a world of time, it's easy to assume that difficulties such as sickness, conflict, loneliness, insecurity, or fear will become a permanent state of affairs.

The Ephesian believers lived with a lot of pressure. Their faith was born in a crucible of riots, courtroom conflict, and economic change (Acts 19:23–40). Later, when Paul wrote this letter to the Ephesians, he encouraged them to develop and maintain Godperspective on their lives and faith: • Looking back, he rehearsed what God had done for them before they were even born (Eph. 1:3–8).

• Looking forward, he listed the future benefits that their faith would bring (1:9–14).

• In the meantime, he prayed that they would be aware of and comprehend these realities, and experience God's power (1:15–23). He also prayed that their identity would be rooted in eternal truths and in God's present power in them (3:14–21).

3:8 Paul was not expressing false humility when he called himself less than the least of all the saints. He was truly humble because he previously had persecuted Christ's church. In another place Paul refers to himself as the chief of sinners (1 Tim. 1:15). He is ever conscious of his demerit and never thinks of himself more highly than he ought to think (Rom. 12:3). the unsearchable riches of Christ: The contents of the message, the wealth beyond description which God provides for all men in the person and work of Christ. It is a vast and measureless resource, this love and grace of God. If Christ were not too big for our mental comprehension, He would be too little for our spiritual need.

3:9 Paul's mission as an apostle was to enlighten all people about the mystery of God's grace in Christ, which was not understood in previous times but which had become clear with the coming of Jesus Christ.

3:10–13 God's manifold wisdom is to be displayed to the angelic beings by the members of the church. God's ways are not only “mysterious,” but also varied. Angels are also learning about God’s wisdom as they watch His grace working in us (1 Cor. 11:10).

3:14–21 These verses express the essence of Paul’s prayer for these Ephesian believers. He recognizes the fatherhood of God as well as His position as the great Creator and sustainer. He asks not for material possessions for these Christians but strengthening in the inner person. He desires that they come to understand the love of Christ. The apostle closes with a beautiful statement of his grand vision of God’s work in believers. This is an excellent model prayer that all believers might use in their praying for others.

3:14, 15 Father and family are related words in the original text. All families of people and angels derive from God the Father, their Creator.

3:16, 17 Paul seems to be speaking of that second experience of the Christian in which the Holy Spirit cleanses and empowers the heart. To be thus strengthened by the Spirit, to have the indwelling Christ, and to be established in love are basic to Christian growth. Dwell is from the Greek word used for permanent residence. We are to be rooted like a tree and grounded in the love that God has for us and gives to us.

3:18, 19 The love of Christ is so great that it is beyond our understanding. The fullness of God is the abundance of gifts that flows from God.

3:20, 21 These two verses form a doxology, or praise, to God in which Paul points out that God can do exceedingly abundantly above anything we may ask. Neither God’s love nor His power is limited by human imagination.

4:1 The second half of Ephesians, like that of a number of Paul's epistles, emphasizes the behavior that should result from the doctrines or beliefs taught in the first half. Note that the Christian life is not compared here to running or standing still, but to a walk. walk worthy: A believer's life should match the excellency of Christ's calling.

4:2 lowliness and gentleness, with longsuffering: These are the attitudes that Jesus demonstrated when He was on earth (Phil. 2:5–8). These attitudes do not come naturally, but must be cultivated by the determination to place others above ourselves. Only the Spirit can empower us to treat people this way consistently. Bearing is close to our expression "putting up with"; however, Paul's use of the term has positive connotations. It describes being patient with the shortcomings of others. Often we ask God to be patient with our own failings, and yet do not exercise the same type of patience ourselves.

4:3 unity of the Spirit: All Christians are one in the Spirit. It is our duty to keep or observe that unity, recognize it as real, and act upon it without a sectarian spirit (John 17:20–26) Endeavoring means to make every effort, to work hard at maintaining the unity of the Spirit.

4:4 There is one body: The church is a living organism composed only of living members (i.e., blood-bought, born-again, Bible-believing saints). This one body has one Head and many members (1 Cor. 12:12, 13). one Spirit: The Holy Spirit who is the life and breath of that body, who was instrumental in the regeneration of each member, and who now maintains a vital connection of each member with the other members and with the head. one hope of your calling: The same ultimate, glorious reality for both Jews and Gentiles.

4:5 One baptism may refer to the baptism in the Spirit that places all believers into the body of Christ, the church (1 Cor. 12:13). It may also refer to water baptism, the sign or seal that a person is a member of the body of Christ. At the time of the early church, public baptism clearly identified a person as a Christian.

4:6 one God and Father of all: For all; not a separate God for each nation. who is above all: This speaks of His transcendence and His unshared sovereign power. and through all: This speaks of His immanence, His pervading action. and in you all: This speaks of His indwelling presence of believers, His personal relationship. The one God rules over all, works through all, and dwells in all.

4:7 Like Peter (1 Pet. 4:10), Paul taught that all Christians have a spiritual gift or gifts. The gifts are given sovereignly by the ascended Christ in order to build up the church (1 Cor. 12:11). Thus, the body of Christ is to function like a machine in which every part is essential for getting a job done. But unlike a machine, the body of Christ should maintain itself and build every one of its members up so that they can do good works (1 Cor. 12:7).

4:8 Paul quotes Ps. 68:18 to picture the ascended Messiah, triumphant over Satan and his hosts, distributing spiritual gifts to His people. The faithful stewardship of our gifts on earth will determine our position of service in Christ's messianic reign.

4:9 Many people take this descent to refer to Christ's entering Hades (specifically the saved portion of that unseen world) after His crucifixion to take saints to heaven when He rose from the dead. On the other hand, lower parts of the earth may also be translated "lower parts, the earth," so as to refer to Christ's coming to our humble planet as a man. This is the more likely meaning here (Phil. 2:5–8).

4:10 The One who humbled Himself as a lowly Servant is the same One who ascended far above all the heavens in universal supremacy (Phil. 2:9–11; Col. 1:18).

4:11 Apostles, meaning "envoys," or "ambassadors," in its strict sense refers to those who saw Christ in resurrected form, performed miracles, and were specially chosen by Christ to tell others about Him from their eyewitness accounts. As such, there are no apostles today. Prophets delivered direct revelations from God before the NT was written (1 Cor. 14). They foretold God's actions in the future, and they proclaimed what God had already said in the Scriptures. Evangelists are gospel preachers who help bring people into the body of Christ. They do so by presenting Christ's offer of free salvation by grace through faith (2:8, 9). Since each of these categories is responsible for equipping believers, evangelists may also train other believers to share their faith effectively. Pastors do all for the church that a literal shepherd does for sheep: feeds, nurtures, cares for, and protects them from enemies. A shepherd's task is not to acquire sheep. However, if a shepherd does what he is supposed to do, he will have healthy sheep and his flock will grow. teachers: While the Greek ties the two titles teachers and pastors closely together here, elsewhere they are listed separately (Rom. 12:7; 1 Pet. 5:2).

4:12, 13 Three stages of growth are presented here: Gifted leaders are responsible for the equipping of the saints; the well-equipped saints do the work of ministry; and the result is that the body of Christ is built up. The final goal is maturity, truth, and love.

4:14 Children are gullible, vulnerable, and easily victimized. The church needs to work diligently at moving babes in Christ on to maturity (1 Pet. 2:2).

4:15 Speaking the truth in love suggests that all that believers say or do should be honest and true, and said or done in a loving manner.

4:16 Note the use of the body metaphor here to present the same truth as the building metaphor in 2:21. Every joint … every part is essential to full growth. There are no insignificant parts in the body (1 Cor. 12:14–27). Anything that builds up believers and the church can be said to be edifying.

4:17–19 Those who are so insensitive to moral darkness as to be past feeling have been hardened by years of sin and debauchery.

4:20, 21 The if indeed is assumed to be true. Paul is not casting doubt on their Christian experience.

4:22–24 Paul compared the Christian life to stripping off the dirty clothes of a sinful past and putting on the snowy white robes of Christ's righteousness.

“new man”

(Gk. kainos anthropos) (4:24; Col. 3:10) Strong’s #2537; 444: This Greek word for new does not mean something more recent in time, but something having a different quality or nature. Thus, the new man is the new humanity created in Christ, of which all believers partake, both individually and corporately. Since Paul has already spoken of the new man created in Christ in terms of a new unified corporate humanity (2:14, 15), the new man in this verse must also be thought of corporately (Col. 3:9–11). In the immediate context, Paul is exhorting each believer to put on his or her new human nature.

4:25 Quoting Zech. 8:16, Paul calls for believers to speak the truth to each other, because all believers are united in Christ. The Proverbs identify a lying tongue as one of the six things God abhors (Prov. 6:17).

4:26 Paul uses Ps. 4:4 to illustrate that not all wrath is sinful. However, anger should not be allowed to fester or continue for long (Mark 11:25). Christians may respond in controlled anger to injustice and sin, but they should never be consumed by this anger. Instead they should seek opportunities to express Christ’s love to everyone.

4:27 nor give place to the devil: Satan waits for opportunity to get his foot in the door. The Greek present imperative means: Do not have the habit of giving place to Satan. Uncontrolled anger is an open door and an invitation for Satan to enter in to disrupt and corrupt the body. He can only hurt and harm as he finds a place in some life to do his evil work.

From Deadbeat to Donor

Does Christ affect people's work life? Yes, and Paul gives a concrete illustration of what "putting on the new man" means (Eph. 4:24, 28). After Christ comes into his life, a person who has been a no-account thief stops stealing and takes an honest job. He becomes a contributing, productive member of society, doing good work. As a result, he is able to provide for his own needs and those of his family.

But the transformation doesn't stop there. As God prospers him through his labor, he is able to give money away to help meet the needs of others. Christ changes a deadbeat into a donor!

4:28 something to give him who has need: Instead of taking what belongs to someone else, a Christian should earn enough to share some of his or her own earnings with the needy. This is not merely a call to stop stealing or being greedy. Rather, this is a call to be generous, to have a true change of attitude.

4:29 Standards of speech for Christians are extremely high: no corrupt word is permitted.

4:30 The Holy Spirit of God should never be pushed away, ignored, or rejected. If we would remember that the One who lives in us is God's own Spirit, we would be much more selective about what we think, read, watch, say, and do. Note that Paul acknowledges that evil thoughts and actions are temptations even for those who are sealed by the Holy Spirit.

4:31, 32 The old life comes from a hostile heart of bitterness, seeks its own way, speaks evil and wishes evil on others. How do we put away all bitterness? By letting God fill our hearts with His perfect love. The new life is tenderhearted, shows itself in acts of kindness, and is ready to forgive wrongs suffered from others.

5:1, 2 Believers are to follow the example of God's actions. He loved us when we were still His enemies. As imitators, believers should demonstrate that type of self-sacrificial love.

5:3 Ephesus, with its pagan temple dedicated to the Roman goddess Diana (Acts 19:23–31), was similar to our society in that sexual immorality and greed ran rampant. Paul warned the believers in Ephesus to avoid these pitfalls.

5:4 The Christian's life must not be degraded by filthiness, foolish talking, coarse jesting. These do not honor God nor give Him thanks for redeeming us.

5:5 The modern laxity of morals in many religious circles is contrary to God's word. Unclean and greedy people will have no inheritance in the kingdom.

5:6 See note at 2:2 for the phrase sons of disobedience. God's wrath is aimed at those who practice the vices mentioned in v. 5.

5:7–10 The believer's position has changed from darkness (sin) to light (righteousness). Believers are to change their walk to correspond to their position in Christ (Rom 12:2).

5:11, 12 Have no fellowship with evil persons in their evil deeds, nor participate in their wickedness. We expose (reprove) evil deeds when we avoid them and let others know how God feels about them.

5:12, 13 in secret: This verse effectively bans Christians from indulging in the modern preoccupation with examining the lurid details of evils such as the occult and other perverted practices.

5:14 Awake, you who sleep: This may be a fragment of a first-century Christian hymn, or an original thought by Paul alluding to Is. 26:19, a promise of God's coming salvation.

5:15 To walk circumspectly is to step gingerly. We should watch our path to avoid contact with undesirable influences.

5:16 Redeeming the time means taking advantage of opportunities for service. We each have a limited amount of time on this earth. Paul exhorts us to use as much of that time as possible for advancing Christ's purposes in this world.

5:17 do not be unwise, but understand: Discerning the will of the Lord is not a matter of feeling or emotion, but of mental understanding, applying our minds to Scripture.

5:18 Just as a person who is drunk with wine is under the control of alcohol, so a Spirit-filled believer is controlled by the Spirit. filled: Filling is a step beyond the sealing of the Holy Spirit (1:13). Sealing is an action God took at the point of our new birth. The tense of the Greek word translated filled indicates that filling is a moment-by-moment, repeatable action. It is something Paul commands the believers at Ephesus to do. In other words, not all Christians are Spirit-filled, but all have been sealed (4:30).

5:19 One of the natural outcomes of being filled with the Spirit is singing and making melody to God. Some take the three types of music that Paul mentions in this verse to refer to different parts of the Book of Psalms. Most believe that these words refer to three larger categories: (1) the 150 psalms in the Psalter, plus other psalmlike poems throughout the Scripture; (2) hymns, compositions addressed directly to God, like the modern song “How Great Thou Art”; (3) spiritual songs, hymns about the Christian experience, like “Amazing Grace.”

5:20 giving thanks … all things: When we truly believe 1:11, we will have much less trouble with 5:20.

IN DEPTH

The Concept of Submission

What kind of submission is Paul advocating in Ephesians? Some hold that Paul is speaking of mutual submission in this passage (5:21—6:4). They point to the phrase "submitting to one another in the fear of God" (5:21), as the overall theme of the verses following it (5:21—6:4). According to this view, husbands and wives, parents and children, masters and slaves all submit to each other in different ways.

This passage certainly teaches a proper Christian response to each other at different levels, as the mutual submission view holds. It is clear that Paul develops two ideas side by side—submission and the appropriate response of the one to whom submission is given. But the mutual submission view does not adequately reflect the meaning of submission in Greek. The Greek term for submission has military origins, emphasizing being under the authority of another. The word does not connote a forced submission; instead it is a voluntary submission to a proper authority. Thus, Paul seems to be saying that wives should voluntarily place themselves under the authority of their husbands. The same word is used to describe Christians voluntarily submitting to governmental authorities (1 Pet. 2:13) and younger people submitting to the wisdom of their elders (1 Pet. 5:5). In this passage, Paul gives the illustration of the church's submission to Christ. After encouraging wives to submit to their husbands, Paul goes on to describe how children should obey their parents, and slaves their masters. Their subordination is described in terms of obedience, instead of in terms of voluntary submission.

But Paul's major emphasis in this passage is not on the submission of wives, but on the duty of those who are in authority. Husbands should imitate the love of Christ. Parents should not provoke children. Masters are not to threaten their slaves. The apostle argues that serving is more important than being in authority over others; Christ should be our model. Although He, as God's Son, could demand obedience from all, He did not shrink from performing duties that were customarily the task of a servant. Jesus washed the feet of His disciples (John 13:12–16). A husband is to be a godly leader; he is to be a servant-leader. His role is to lead his wife, but to do so by taking everything about her into consideration and by using his position to give her the greatest opportunity to succeed.

5:21, 22 Verse 21 completes the thought of the previous verses (vv. 18–20), which address how being filled with the Spirit manifests itself in the believer's life. It also introduces the next section (5:22—6:4), about how members of a Christian family should relate to each other. submitting: The Greek word for submitting does not refer to being under the absolute control of another but, in this context, to voluntarily placing oneself under the authority of another.

5:22–24 Just as Christ is not inferior to the Father, but is the second person in the Trinity, so wives are equal to their own husbands. Yet in a marriage relationship, a husband and wife have different roles. to the Lord: A wife's voluntary submission arises out of her own submission to Christ.

5:25 Husbands, love: Paul does not emphasize the husband's authority; instead, he calls on husbands to love self-sacrificially. Husbands are to emulate Christ's love, the kind of love that is willing to lay down one's life for another person and serve that person even if it means suffering.

5:26, 27 In these verses, Paul briefly outlines what Jesus has done for the church. First of all, He loved the church so much that He was willing to suffer and die for it. His actions not only saved the church; they also sanctified it. In other words, Jesus wanted to develop the church into what it should be, the holy temple of God.

5:28 as their own bodies: As they love themselves. This depth of love for the wife was never expected in the pagan world of Rome and Greece.

5:29 A husband who realizes that his wife is truly his own flesh will treat her with love and care.

5:30 We Christians are members of Christ's body.

5:31 the two shall become one flesh: Paul quotes Gen. 2:24, which teaches that the special union between husband and wife supersedes the original family ties.

5:32 The mystery, a sacred secret revealed, is that Christian marriage parallels the union that exists spiritually between Christ and His bride, the church.

5:33 Men need respect; women who put down their husbands, especially in public, are destroying their marriage. It works both ways. Men who treat their wives in an unloving or ungracious way are also endangering their marital happiness.

6:1–4 This paragraph has the beautiful balance we expect to find in God's Word: children are to obey their parents, and parents are to treat their children in such a way that the children will want to obey. Children must obey their parents for Christ's sake, even if their parents are not believers. This is supported by the only one of the Ten Commandments followed by a promise (Deut. 5:16). Of course, Christian children should not do anything sinful even if their parents should command them to. In such a case, children must obey God rather than men (Acts 5:29). do not provoke: Parents should not be unreasonably severe with children or ridicule them.

6:5 A very large percentage of the population of the Roman Empire was made up of bondservants or slaves. These people were considered mere property and could be abused and even killed by their masters with no resulting investigation by the state. In the church, wealthy slave owners and their slaves broke bread together at the Lord's Table as equals. No doubt some slaves were gifted spiritual leaders and ministered the word to people far above them on the social ladder.

6:6 not with eyeservice: Servants and employees should serve faithfully even when no one is looking. After all, God sees all that we do.

6:7 If every job were done as to the Lord, what a difference it would make in the quality of our work!

6:8 Receive the same refers to future rewards (Col. 3:23–25).

6:9 Christian masters should not use threatening language to their servants but should remember that they too are servants of a much higher Master … in heaven, who is completely fair.

A Roman soldier in combat gear, demonstrating some of the pieces of "spiritual armor" needed in the believer's battle against Satan (Eph. 6:10–18).

6:10–20 This practical passage is one of the most famous and richly rewarding in all of the NT. Paul probably had plenty of time to contemplate the parts of a Roman soldier's armor. After all, he was constantly guarded during his house arrest in Rome.

6:10 Be strong may also be translated "be made strong." The passive voice would suggest that we cannot do it ourselves.

6:11 The whole armor of God is the believer's protection against evil and the Evil One. Paul presented the extended metaphor of the battle dress roughly according to the order in which the various pieces were put on. Wiles of the devil are Satan's subtle tricks to defeat Christians in spiritual warfare (2 Cor. 11:3).

6:12 Our real battle is not with human cultists, false religionists, atheists, agnostics, and pseudo-Christians, but with the demonic beings working through them, of which even the flesh and blood opponents themselves are sometimes unaware.

6:13 The evil day is taken by some to refer to the end times when the Evil One will launch a ferocious campaign against Christ and His army. A more common view is that any great spiritual contest in a believer's life could be in view here.

6:14 Verses 14–17 present the six pieces of spiritual armor. Four are mentioned specifically and the belt and shoes are implied. Soldiers girded themselves with a belt, from which hung strips of leather to protect the lower body. Truth is considered crucial by Paul (4:15, 25), because a dishonest Christian cannot hope to withstand the father of lies himself. The truth referred to here is integrity, a life of practical truthfulness and honesty. The breastplate of Roman times went completely around the body, so that the back of a warrior was also protected. The breastplate was made of hard leather or metal. The righteousness that the breastplate represents is not the righteousness of Christ, which all believers possess, but the practical, righteous character and deeds of believers.

6:15 A Roman soldier's feet were shod with hard, studded shoes. Paul used this image to represent the preparation of the gospel of peace. This may mean either that the gospel is the firm foundation on which Christians are to stand or that the Christian soldier should be ready to go out to defend and spread the gospel.

6:16 Above all may mean that the shield is to be used against everything. It may also mean that the shield is to cover the whole armor. A Roman soldier's shield typically measured two and a half feet by four feet. The Christian's shield offers protection against all the fiery darts of the wicked one. Flaming arrows could not penetrate the fireproof shield of the ancient Roman soldier, nor can the assaults of Satan penetrate to the believer who places his or her faith in God.

6:17 the helmet of salvation: The intricately designed Roman helmet protected the soldier's head and also made him look taller and more impressive. The sword of the Spirit is the only offensive weapon in the believer's armor. This weapon is not necessarily the Bible as a whole, but the specific word that needs to be spoken in a specific situation. To have the precise word ready, a person must know the Bible intimately.

6:18–23 Paul, the man of prayer (1:15–23; 3:14–21), ends this great section of his letter to the believers at Ephesus with an exhortation to prayer.

6:18 Without prayer, all the armor in the world would be of no use. praying always: General prayers and specific petitions in the Spirit are to be made for all believers and at all occasions. Perseverance and patience in prayer are essential.

6:19 The apostle Paul was not ashamed to ask other believers to pray that he would have the courage to proclaim the gospel. Even as a prisoner, Paul still wanted to be a faithful witness for the Lord.

6:20 Paul was an ambassador in chains in Rome for the gospel of Christ. His prayer was that he might speak boldly, as an ambassador for the King of kings ought to speak.

6:21–24 The last verses of Ephesians reveal Paul's appreciation of the ministry of others, especially the ministry of Tychicus (Col. 4:7). The fact that this letter does not conclude with personal greetings as Paul's other letters do (Rom. 16) may indicate that this was a circular letter, one intended for a number of churches around Ephesus. Sincerity may also be translated "without corruption."

The Epistle to the Philippians

———— FROM BEATINGS TO IMPRISONMENT, PAUL had endured much suffering for the cause of Christ. These trials had taught Paul to be content in all circumstances, an ability that Paul encouraged the Philippians to cultivate (4:11). In fact, his letter to the Philippians is a testimony to this attitude. Even though he was in prison, facing an uncertain future, Paul wrote this thank you letter to the Philippians, a letter that expresses Paul's abundant joy in what God was accomplishing through them.

The most prominent theme of the Epistle to the Philippians is joy, specifically the joy of serving Jesus. The general tone of the letter reflects Paul's gratitude toward the Philippians and his joy in God. This may seem strange because Paul wrote this letter while he was in prison. Paul, however, had the ability to recognize opportunities for sharing the gospel even in apparent setbacks. This was the origin of Paul's joy: he saw God working through the difficult situations he faced.

Another theme of Paul's letter is "partnership in the gospel." Paul uses the Greek word koinonia in this letter in various ways: "fellowship" (1:5; 2:1; 3:10), "partakers" (1:7), and "shared" (4:15). All of these passages highlight the Philippians' active involvement in Paul's own ministry. By supporting Paul, the Philippians had become partners with him to further the Good News of Jesus Christ. Paul illustrates this concept of "partnering" or "fellowship" with the lives of Jesus Christ (2:5–11), Timothy (2:19–23), Epaphroditus (2:25–30), and Euodia and Syntyche (4:2, 3).

Since the Philippian Christians already possessed great joy and had demonstrated their partnership in sharing the gospel, Paul took the opportunity to identify a few weak areas that could be improved (4:2). For example, fellowship has two components: love and discernment. The Philippians had expressed the former but were lacking the latter (1:9; 4:10–16). Thus, Paul exhorted the Philippians to grow in knowledge and discernment, words that in the Greek refer to a relational understanding (1:9). In other words, the Greek word for knowledge focuses on a person-to-God relationship, whereas the Greek word for discernment points to a person-to-person relationship. Paul wanted the Philippians not only to abound in love but also to experience more of God so that they could grow into a mature understanding of His ways.

All this shows that Paul had more than one purpose for his letter to the Philippians. Today's readers will continue to find wonderful passages of encouragement in this short, joyful letter. Situations such as bickering among church members, living in this evil world, giving to missionaries, and finding contentment are still current issues for today's Christians. In this letter, Paul provides God's wisdom and encouragement. But most importantly, he holds up Jesus' life as the model for believers.

Church tradition unanimously agrees with the statement in Philippians (1:1) that Paul wrote this letter. The events described in this letter parallel the life of Paul.

To determine when Paul wrote his letter to the Philippians requires identifying the location from which he wrote. He says that he was in prison (1:13). But to which imprisonment was Paul referring? The answer must be guided by three factors: evidence of Paul's imprisonment in a given city, whether the Praetorian Guard was in that city, and the distance of that city from Philippi, which has to allow for several trips between the two cities.

Some speculate that Paul was writing from Corinth, and therefore date the letter around A.D. 50. Proponents of this view typically refer to Acts 18:10, a passage in which the Lord indicates to Paul that He would protect him from harm in Corinth. However, that passage does not explicitly speak about imprisonment.

Others point to the city of Ephesus (and hence a date of A.D. 53–55) on the basis of its proximity to Philippi and the definite possibility that the Praetorian Guard was stationed there. Once again, although several passages reveal that Paul experienced difficulties in Ephesus (Rom. 16:4, 7; 1 Cor. 15:32; 2 Cor. 1:8–23), there is no clear record that he was ever imprisoned there.

Still others advocate Caesarea as the location from which Paul wrote the letter (about A.D. 58–59). The Praetorian Guard may have been garrisoned at Caesarea, and the guard was at times considered to be part of Caesar's household (4:22). However, Paul's expectation that he would soon be set free (1:19, 26; 2:24) does not fit the circumstances of this imprisonment. In Caesarea, release from prison was only a remote possibility. In fact, Paul had to appeal to Caesar in order to escape Jewish influence over the judicial process (Acts 25:6–11). Furthermore, Caesarea was far from Philippi. It is an improbable origin for Paul's short letter to the Philippians.

Most students have favored Rome (about A.D. 60–62) as the city from which Paul wrote this epistle. Although the distance between Rome and Philippi is great, Paul was in Rome long enough for messages to travel back and forth to that city. Furthermore, Paul's imprisonment in Rome is well established in Scripture (Acts 28:16–31). Because his situation allowed him freedom to preach the gospel (1:12, 13; Acts 28:23–31), he undoubtedly felt confident that his release from prison was imminent.

While on his second missionary journey, and in response to a vision from God, Paul left Troas in the province of Asia (part of present-day Turkey) and traveled to Macedonia (in present-day Greece) to establish the first church in Europe, the church in the city of Philippi (Acts 16:6–12).

Named for Philip II of Macedon, the father of Alexander the Great, Philippi was strategically located on a major road, the Egnatian Way, that connected the eastern provinces of the Roman Empire to Rome. Thus, Philippi became the leading city of Macedonia. In 42 B.C. the Romans granted Philippi the highest status possible for a provincial city, the status of a Roman colony. This meant that the citizens of Philippi could purchase, own, or transfer property. They also had the privilege of filing civil lawsuits in Roman courts and were exempted from paying both poll and land taxes. Their elevated status and wealth gave them not only confidence but a pride that bordered on arrogance.

Philippians closely follows the normal form of Paul's letters: (1) an identification of author and readers; (2) a pronouncement of God's grace and peace; (3) thanks offered to God because of the readers; (4) the body of the letter; (5) a personal desire to see the readers or to send someone to them; (6) greetings to the readers from those with Paul; and (7) a statement of blessing which serves as the conclusion of the letter. The only variation from this basic pattern is that Paul places the desire-to-send section (2:19–30) in the body of the letter. Paul does this in order to illustrate his point concerning humble service with the lives of Timothy and Epaphroditus.

Although the letter follows Paul's normal pattern, some have suggested that the letter is actually three letters combined into one. They do so on the basis of Paul's use of the Greek words for finally in 3:1 and 4:8. They argue that those words signal actual conclusions at those two points, thus indicating that Philippians is actually three different letters.

Yet the Greek words for finally can function as a transitional phrase (1 Thess. 4:1), in essence meaning “besides” or “furthermore.” The strongest evidence for the unity of Philippians is a Greek manuscript from around A.D. 200 that includes all three sections of the letter (1:1—2:30; 3:1—4:7; 4:8–23). But whether Philippians is a unity or a compilation of several letters, it contains timeless truths from the pen of the apostle Paul.

Commentary

1:1–11 In the first few verses, Paul reveals his great love for the Philippians. He thinks of them often (vv. 3–6), he is concerned about them (vv. 7, 8), and he regularly prays for them (vv. 9–11). These verses not only reveal Paul's relation to the Philippians but also his view of God. The Lord does not merely start a wonderful work in us; He finishes what He starts. This is a comfort for those Christians who are in times of distress or suffering. God will continue His work in us.

1:1 bondservants: In his other prison epistles (Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon), Paul calls himself an apostle. In this letter he begins by giving the title of servant to Timothy and himself. It establishes Timothy (2:19–23), Epaphroditus (2:25–30), and Paul (3:7–9) as individuals who demonstrate the same servant-like attitude that Christ had (2:5–8). Saints means "holy ones" (those who are separated to God) and refers to all the believers in Philippi. Bishops refers to those who watched over the spiritual welfare of the local church (synonymous with "elders" in other passages; Acts 20:17; Titus 1:5, 7). They were the main administrators of the church. Deacons refer to those who served the congregation in special service capacities. They were charged with handling the physical and material concerns of the church (Acts 6:1–7). The mention of these two groups suggests that the church at Philippi had grown considerably since Paul's first visit there (Acts 16:12–34).

1:2 Paul combines the word grace with a Greek translation of the Hebrew greeting shalom, or peace (2 Cor. 1:2; Gal. 1:3). Paul's association of the Lord Jesus Christ with God our Father underscores the equality and unity of these two persons of the Godhead.

1:3 I thank: The tense of the Greek verb indicates that Paul was continually thankful to God for the Philippian Christians. upon every remembrance of you: Every time God brought them to his mind, Paul gave thanks.

1:4 Joy, a prominent theme in Philippians, filled Paul's prayers for the Philippians even when he interceded for their needs. This is the first of five uses of the Greek word for joy in the letter (v. 25; 2:2, 29; 4:1). Paul also uses the Greek word for rejoice nine times in this letter (v. 18; 2:17 {twice}, 18 {twice}, 28; 3:1; 4:4 {twice}).

The Believers at Philippi

Racial, ethnic, and social segregation are as old as society itself. Wherever people live, they form groups along these lines, then put up walls around them to keep others out. In Philippi, as elsewhere, Paul offered the gospel first to the Jews. There must have been very few Jews in Philippi because the city did not have a synagogue, and in first-century Judaism it took only ten Jewish men to justify building a synagogue for worship. The Jews who did live in Philippi went outside the city gate to the banks of the Gangites River for worship and prayer. Yet the Christian church to which Paul wrote must have flourished, because in his letter he referred to levels of leadership in the church, such as overseers and deacons.

Philippi was a culturally diverse Roman city on the main highway (the Egnatian Way) from the eastern provinces to Rome, and the church at Philippi had a diverse group of believers. The NT specifically mentions an Asian, a Greek, and a Roman. On the surface, these people had little in common. One was a businesswoman who sold purple cloth to the rich; one was a slave girl who had been possessed with a spirit of divination; the third was a jailer. Three different races, three different social ranks, and probably three different religious loyalties before encountering Christ. But Paul taught them that all were equal in the body of Christ; all were sinners saved by God's grace. They were to humble themselves as Jesus had done, and be unified in the love of Christ. In a world segregated along class and ethnic lines, the church at Philippi broke the rules: "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, … for you are all one in Christ Jesus" (Gal. 3:28). This church was one of the most integrated places in the Mediterranean world.

1:5 Fellowship is a commercial term for a joint-partnership in a business venture in which all parties actively participate to ensure the success of the business. In the Christian community, the word expresses intimacy with Christ (1 Cor. 1:9) and other believers (2 Cor. 8:4, 1 John 1:7). In this case, Paul may be using the word fellowship to refer to the financial contributions the Philippians had given Paul from the first day until now (4:14, 15). Immediately upon becoming Christians and continually thereafter, the Philippians had dedicated themselves to living and proclaiming the truth about Jesus Christ, and specifically to helping Paul in his ministry.

1:6 being confident: Paul had become convinced some time in the past that God would complete His good work among the Philippians, and his confidence remained unshaken. in you: Since you is a plural pronoun, the good work that God was doing was taking place "among" the believers rather than "in" any isolated believer. Until can also be translated "as far as." It expresses progress toward a goal and indicates that a time is coming when God will completely finish His work among the Philippian Christians. the day of Jesus Christ: The ministry in which the Philippians participated continues (like a relay race) up to the present, and it will continue until Christ returns. Paul calls Christ's return "the day of Christ" (2:16). On that day, Christ will judge nonbelievers and evaluate the lives of believers (2 Tim. 2:11–13).

1:7 The word right conveys a sense of moral uprightness (in keeping with God's law) and is often translated throughout the NT as "righteous." In this context, the word indicates that Paul's thoughts regarding the Philippians were in perfect accord with God's will. because I have you in my heart: Heart refers to the innermost part of a person, the place where one thinks and reflects. Since defense implies speech, we can be certain that Paul was not silent while in prison, but boldly spoke about Jesus Christ. Paul may have also been indicating that he would testify about Christ at his judicial proceedings. confirmation: Used only here and in Heb. 6:16 in the NT, this word is a legal and commercial term meaning "a validating guarantee." Defense and confirmation are the negative and positive aspects of Paul's ministry. He defended the gospel against its opponents' attacks, and he confirmed the gospel through powerful signs. Since these are both legal terms, Paul's usage may indicate that he was looking ahead to his forthcoming trial.

1:8 God is my witness: Much as if he had taken an oath in a court of law, Paul conveyed the seriousness and the truth of what he was about to say. I long for you: Paul had a strong desire that is directed toward the Philippians; he is anxious for their spiritual well-being. all: Paul emphasizes that every one of the Christians at Philippi (not merely the leadership) is the focus of his attention. affection of Jesus Christ: The word translated affection literally means the internal organs, regarded by the first-century reader as the center of the deepest feelings. Whereas the heart is the seat of reflection, Paul now speaks of his affection, his deep feelings for the believers. In modern terminology, Paul revealed that he had the "heart" of Jesus Christ. His feelings for the Philippians were like those of Jesus Christ, who loved them and died for them.

1:9 I pray: Verses 9–11 give the content of his prayer for them. He is desirous that this fervent love will continue to burn hotly but within the splendor of full knowledge and spiritual discernment. Love without knowledge is like water without a channel. Water uncontrolled is disastrous but is productive when controlled. The love that Paul sought for the believers is the highest form of Christian love, based on a lasting, unconditional commitment, not on an unstable emotion. knowledge: The first of two terms on which a directed love is built, knowledge suggests an intimate understanding based on a relationship with the person. Here the focus of this knowledge is God. discernment: Found only here in the NT, the Greek word means moral or ethical understanding based on both the intellect and the senses. The word implies perception or insight into social situations.

1:10 that you may approve: This verb is used in ancient literature for the testing of gold to determine its purity, and for trying oxen to assess their usefulness for the task at hand. The purpose of increasing in love, controlled by knowledge, is to be able to evaluate people and situations correctly. sincere: This term, literally meaning "judged by sunlight," does not mean "honestly trying hard," but rather pure, unmixed, and free from falsehood. Any spot in a garment or imperfection in merchandise could be seen by holding the object up to the sunlight. Christ died to free the church from every blemish (Eph. 5:27). without offense: Using still another graphic term to describe the Christian, Paul conveys the sense of not striking out at someone. Here the phrase means not leading others into sin by one's own behavior. day of Christ: The goal ahead for the believer is the day of Christ in which the believer will stand for evaluation before the Savior, who is the faithful and true witness (v. 6; 1 Cor. 1:8; 5:5). This joyous yet sobering prospect should motivate us to purify our own lives (1 John 2:28; 3:2, 3).

1:11 fruits of righteousness: This phrase is best understood either as "fruit that results from being justified" or "fruit characterized by morally correct conduct." Righteousness describes the source or the nature of the fruit, the behavior. glory and praise of God: The final result of growing in love and of living a wise and pure life that overflows with righteousness is that God will be honored and pleased. Each day we are expanding our capacity to enjoy Him and bring glory to Him forever.

Paul's Broad Perspective

Paul was deeply committed to the truth and integrity of the gospel. But in Phil. 1:12–18 he generously credits others who were doing ministry, even though they had impure motives.

This sets an important example for Christians today who feel strong loyalty to their particular tradition or institution. Like Paul, we need to accept and celebrate the fact that other believers with different perspectives and approaches may be helping people and accomplishing tasks that we never could.

1:12–26 Paul reveals the external and internal pressures that he is facing. He rejoices because, despite physical persecution and social ostracism, the Word of God is being proclaimed with much success. Furthermore, although he desires to be in heaven with Jesus, he realizes that God is keeping him on earth in order to help the Philippians to continue their successful proclamation of that same Word.

1:12 I want you to know: Paul uses this or similar statements to introduce an important declaration regarding a misunderstood matter. Because of this love for Paul and their confidence in his ministry, they had given repeatedly and generously, even out of their poverty for the support of this missionary outreach. They saw this as a great investment in the kingdom. actually turned out: Paul wanted the Philippians to know that his imprisonment was advancing, not hindering, the gospel. Such words would comfort the Philippians, who were concerned about Paul's welfare and who needed assurance that their prayers for Paul and their gifts to him had not been in vain. furtherance: This word could suggest a pioneer beating or cutting a path through a densely forested area. Paul's imprisonment was a strategic advance in the kingdom of God because it was clearing the way for the gospel to penetrate the ranks of the Roman military (v. 13) and even the royal house (4:22). These were two areas that under normal circumstances would have been closed to the gospel.

1:13 Paul's imprisonment furthered the gospel in two ways. First, the palace guard heard it as Paul preached in prison. Second, all the rest—Paul's visitors—heard the gospel. Some of his visitors were leaders of the Jews in Rome (Acts 28:17). The palace guard (Praetorian Guard) consisted of several thousand highly trained, elite soldiers of the Roman Empire who were headquartered at Rome. For the one to two years that Paul had been under house arrest in Rome, different soldiers had taken turns guarding him. Because they were chained to Paul, they had no other choice but to listen to him proclaim the gospel; they could not beat him into silence because he was a Roman citizen (Acts 16:37, 38). Although Paul could not go to the world to preach, in this way God brought the world to Paul. In an ironic twist, they were the captives and Paul was free to preach. in Christ: Paul considered his imprisonment to be the result of God's sovereign will.

1:14 most … bold: Many Christians who saw Paul in chains in Rome became encouraged to preach the gospel with boldness, emphasizing the outward aggressive demonstration of an inward character and feeling of courage. without fear: Although they too could be imprisoned as Paul was, the Roman Christians were emboldened by Paul's courage and were able to proclaim the message about Jesus Christ fearlessly.

1:15 Those preaching from envy and strife were not heretics, since they were preaching Christ. But apparently they were jealous of the attention Paul received, and they determined to sow seeds of dissension in order to cause him trouble. some … from goodwill: Other Christians preached Christ with good motives. They thought well of Paul and of the gospel message and were dedicated to serving God faithfully.

1:16, 17 Some manuscripts reverse the order of vv. 16 and 17. selfish ambition: The motives of these believers were anything but good. The term for selfish ambition implies that they did not preach to honor God or to help Paul but rather to gain applause and followers for themselves (2:3). not sincerely: Paul reemphasized the fact that these Christians were not acting with pure motives. to add: The word Paul uses here literally means "to raise up" or "to cause." In other words, Paul believes that these preachers actually desired to cause him additional problems while he was in prison.

1:18 What then: In essence Paul is saying, "Their motives are between them and God." in pretense or in truth: Whether the preaching was done for false motives or pure, whether for appearance's sake or for the sake of what was right, Paul was pleased that the gospel was being spread. Notice that Paul is not condoning error. He called a curse down on those who corrupt the gospel (Gal. 1:6–9). The issue was motive and attitude, not doctrine. I rejoice: This means simply "to be glad." What a contrast is his noble and magnanimous spirit. How did he rejoice rather than grow angry and vengeful? It came from focusing on Jesus Christ (Heb. 12:2, 3).

“supply”

(Gk. epichoregia) (1:19; Eph. 4:16) Strong’s #2024: The Philippians’ prayer would generate the Spirit’s supply. The Greek word was used to describe what a choir manager would provide for all the members of a Greek choir who performed in Greek drama. In short, he took care of all their living expenses. The word came to mean a full supply of any kind. Paul was looking forward to getting a full supply of Jesus Christ’s Spirit as a result of the Philippians’ prayers.

1:19–26 Paul’s own life provides a model of bringing glory to Christ whether by life or by death (v. 20).

1:19 will turn out: Paul expresses his positive attitude and confidence about how the sovereign God would work out this difficult situation. deliverance: The Greek word translated deliverance is usually translated “salvation.” In the NT this word is used for physical healing, rescue from danger or death, justification, sanctification, and glorification. Here Paul refers to his daily empowering to endure the troubling situation before him. He may also be indicating his confidence that he would be delivered from prison (v. 25). your prayer: Here is the channel for his deliverance. The prayer of believers on behalf of other believers is vitally important because by it, and together with the work of the Holy Spirit, God produces positive results. supply: Originally this word was used to refer to a wealthy benefactor defraying the expenses of a chorus or dance troupe. Later and more generally, it meant to supply the abundant resources that would meet someone’s need.

1:20 earnest expectation: This phrase translates a Greek word which pictures the outstretched hand of someone straining to focus attention on an object. hope: This is not just wishful thinking but confident expectation. in nothing … ashamed: Paul was determined not to be dishonored in anything or by anyone. He vividly demonstrated that right actions are not determined by environment but by right thinking. will be magnified: Paul was committed to ensuring that Christ would be made even more conspicuous in his own life than ever. He was not relying on himself to exalt Christ but looked to the Holy Spirit (v. 19) to magnify Christ in him (John 16:14; 2 Cor. 3:18). by life or by death: There was no difference between life and death as far as Paul was concerned, as long as that life or death magnified, glorified, and exalted Christ before others.

1:21 For to me is similar to the common expression: "As far as I'm concerned." Christ … gain: Paul would experience gain in his own death because he would be with Christ (v. 23). In fact, Paul may have been expressing his confidence that since his imprisonment had furthered the gospel, God would also use his death to further His kingdom.

1:22 fruit from my labor: If Paul continued to live, he would have the opportunity to preach the gospel to others and see spiritual victory in the lives of the Philippians. what I shall choose: Paul was in a dilemma because he clearly saw the advantages of both life and death for the Christian. Life meant an opportunity to minister to people like the Philippians (v. 24), while death meant being with Christ his Savior.

1:23 Paul felt pressed in on every side, much like a besieged city with no hope of relief from its affliction. He was torn between the prospect of seeing the Lord and his passion for ministering to the Philippians. A desire here means more than a wish; it indicates an intense longing. to depart: In relation to Paul's profession as a tentmaker, the term depart means to strike, or take down, the tent to be ready to travel elsewhere. Paul saw death not as the end of life but as a time of moving from one home to another. far better: In Paul's mind, there was no real comparison between life and death because death was far better (literally, "much more better"). Jesus said He was going to prepare a place for us (John 14). The place is already there in the Father's house.

1:24 remain: The idea contained in remain is to "abide fully" or "persevere." It is an intensive form of the Greek word for "remain" in v. 25. more needful: The Greek word used here counterbalances the far better of v. 23. The fact that God wanted him to continue living was, according to Paul, totally necessary for the spiritual growth of the Philippians (v. 25).

1:25 your progress: Paul was not satisfied that the Philippian Christians should simply be saved, but that they should advance to maturity in Christ. He felt a responsibility to continue to teach them.

1:26 rejoicing for me: Paul knew that, because the Philippians loved him greatly, they would be overjoyed that God had preserved his life in prison and that Paul was confident that their joint ministry would continue. "Rejoicing" literally means "boasting" or "glorying." more abundant: Their rejoicing was to grow dramatically because of the work of the Lord.

“striving together”

(Gk. sunathleo) (1:27; 4:3) Strong’s #4866: The image in Greek is drawn from athletic contests. Usually, athletes competed one against another; in 1:27 Paul asks the church at Philippi to compete together as a team of athletes to help advance the faith that comes through the preaching of the gospel. In the same epistle, he also mentions Euodia and Syntyche as those who were contending for the gospel side by side with himself (4:2, 3).

1:27—4:9 Paul devotes the main section of his letter to instructing the Philippians on the importance of conducting their lives as servants who have dedicated themselves to their Lord. He illustrates this teaching by referring to the manner in which Jesus Christ, Timothy, Epaphroditus, and he himself lived.

1:27 let your conduct: The word used could refer to discharging the obligations of a citizen. Because Philippi held the privileged status of a Roman colony, its citizens understood the responsibilities associated with citizenship. Paul here commanded them (the first command in the letter) to shift their perspective from the earthly realm to the heavenly one. They should live in this world as citizens of another world, the heavenly kingdom. Their conduct should reveal their heavenly citizenship. stand fast: They were not to stand alone in isolation but together in oneness of spirit and mind, united for a common goal. striving together: Teamwork is the key concept expressed by this Greek word, which literally means “to engage together in an athletic contest.” for the faith: God never intended believers to be alone. His plan is that we should gather together in a church in order to strengthen and encourage each other (2:2). Paul was urging them to strive together, not just for the sake of their individual faith, but also on behalf of the truth of Christianity, their common faith.

1:28 The word translated terrified is a strong term that is used of the terror of a panicked horse. The Philippians are not to be terror-stricken in the face of their enemies. Their courage would be proof of their salvation and of the ultimate failure of their foes. proof of perdition: By striving together in love and confidence, the Philippians would be living proof (a legal term denoting proof obtained by an analysis of the facts) to their opponents that the message of Jesus Christ is true. This would confirm the lost state of their adversaries. Because Paul contrasted salvation to perdition, his focus here undoubtedly was on eternal matters. Contrast this with Paul's focus on his own present salvation, or "deliverance," in v. 19.

1:29 to suffer: Suffering is actually a gift from God, for in the midst of suffering He comforts us (2 Cor. 1:5) and enables us to rejoice (1 Pet. 4:12, 13). Suffering is a blessing because it brings eternal reward (Matt. 5:1–12; 2 Cor. 4:17; 2 Tim. 2:12; Rev. 22:12). God sees suffering as a tool to accomplish His purposes both in His Son (Heb. 2:10) and in His children (1 Pet. 1:6, 7). Suffering, moreover, matures us as Christians in the present (James 1:2–4) and enables us to be glorified with Christ in the future (Rom. 8:17).

1:30 the same conflict: The same struggles Paul was experiencing, the Philippians would also experience. They needed to learn how to be victorious in the midst of their trials by following Paul's example in the face of his persecution.

2:1 The Philippians' biggest battle was not with their external circumstances but with those internal attitudes that destroy unity. Paul had demonstrated his own refusal to let external circumstances control his attitudes (1:12–18). The therefore ties together his conflict and their conflict. if … if … if … if: The conditional clauses in this verse indicate certainties, not "maybes." Each if here expresses the idea of "since," and each following clause may be considered to be true. fellowship: Scripture teaches that our fellowship is not only with God the Holy Spirit as seen here, but also with God the Father (1 John 1:3) and God the Son (1 Cor. 1:9; 1 John 1:3), as well as with other Christians (1 John 1:7). affection: See 1:8. mercy: The Greek term means compassionate desires that develop in response to a situation and that stimulate a person to meet recognized needs in that situation.

2:2 In this verse the apostle sets forth a fourfold appeal, an appeal that expresses one major idea—namely the unity of the church. like-minded: This expresses Paul's concern for humility (4:2). Paul illustrates this attitude in 2:3, 4 and then describes the greatest example of humility, Jesus Christ Himself, in 2:5–8. same love: See 1:9. one accord: Paul here is stressing a unity of spirit between Christians (Ps. 133), literally "a togetherness of soul." one mind: The words Paul uses to indicate one mind are virtually identical to the words translated like-minded earlier in this verse. Paul was strongly emphasizing the unity that should exist between believers and how they must single-mindedly strive together to advance the gospel of Jesus Christ.

2:3 Here Paul attempts to correct any misunderstanding that may arise from what he said earlier in the letter about some preaching out of selfish motives (1:15, 16). He was concerned that someone might think he was condoning selfish ambition, so long as the gospel was being preached. conceit: Paul uses a Greek term meaning "empty pride," or "groundless self-esteem." Pride should not be a Christian's motivation; instead, everything should be done in the power of the Holy Spirit. lowliness of mind: The Greek word suggests a deep sense of humility. Although the pagan writers used the word negatively, in effect to mean abjectness or groveling, Paul did not. What Paul was calling for was an honest evaluation of one's own nature. Such an evaluation should always lead to a glorification of Christ. For without Him, we can do nothing (John 15:5). let each esteem: This verb indicates a thorough analysis of the facts in order to reach a correct conclusion about the matter. In other words, each Philippian Christian was to properly assess himself or herself. Such an assessment would lead to valuing others. others better than himself: The honest self-examination that Paul was calling for leads to true humility. This enables a person to hold others above himself or herself, to value people over material possessions or personal plans.

2:4 look out: This verb means to direct one's attention at something. Since the word implies the exertion of much mental concentration, Paul wanted his readers to do everything in their power to be involved in meeting the needs of others, as well as their own.

2:5 These verses (vv. 5–8) present one of the most significant statements in all of Scripture on the nature of the Incarnation, the fact that God became man. Also, through this wonderful description of Christ, Paul vividly illustrates the principle of humility (vv. 3, 4). Let this mind be: All godly action begins with the "renewing of the mind." Right thinking produces right actions. Our actions are the fruit of our deepest thoughts. in you: Thinking and being like Christ are requirements not only for an individual but also for the corporate body of believers. Together we need to think and act like one being, like the person of Jesus Christ.

“form of God”

(Gk. morphe theou) (2:6) Strong’s #3444; 2316: The Greek word for form was generally used to express the way in which a thing exists and appears according to what it is in itself. Thus, the expression form of God may be correctly understood as the essential nature and character of God. To say, therefore, that Christ existed in the form of God is to say that apart from His human nature Christ possesses all the characteristics and qualities belonging to God because He is, in fact, God.

2:6 form: Paul carefully uses the Greek word morphe with the present participle to indicate that the nature that Christ continually possesses is “the specific character or essential substance” of God. This word always expresses the nature of the being with which it is associated. That which God was, Jesus is. That status which God possesses, Jesus possessed. Hence, because Jesus’ nature is God’s nature, Jesus is God. robbery: Because Christ was God, He did not look on sharing God’s nature as robbery, that is, as “a thing to be seized,” as though He did not already possess it, or as “a thing to be retained,” as though He might lose it. equal: As used in this verse, this word speaks of equality of existence. Christ was fully God, but He limited Himself in such a way that He could also be completely human. In Christ, God became man.

2:7 made Himself of no reputation: This phrase can be translated “He emptied Himself.” Christ did this by taking on the form of a servant, a mere man. In doing this, He did not empty Himself of any part of His essence as God. Instead, He took upon Himself existence as a man. While remaining completely God, He became completely human. form: Jesus added to His divine essence (v. 6) a servant’s essence, that is, the essential characteristics of a human being seeking to fulfill the will of another. Paul does not say that Christ exchanged the form of God for the form of a servant, involving a loss of deity or the attributes of deity. Rather, in the Incarnation, Christ continued in the very nature of God but added to Himself the nature of a servant. bondservant: In this context, the term refers to the lowest status on the social ladder (Heb. 10:5), the exact opposite of the term Lord, a title by which all will one day recognize the risen and exalted Christ (v. 11). It is truly amazing, therefore, that the God who created the universe (John 1:3; Col. 1:16) and who rules over all creation (Col. 1:17) would choose to add to His person the nature of a servant. likeness: This word does not mean that Christ only appeared to be a man. Rather, the term emphasizes identity. In reality He was a man, possessing all the essential aspects of a human being, although unlike all others He was sinless.

2:8 appearance: This is the third word Paul uses to show the Philippians that Jesus Christ who is fully God from all eternity is also fully man. In the previous verses, Paul describes Jesus as possessing the nature of God and taking on the nature of a servant. Jesus came to the earth with the identity of a man. Here the word appearance points to the external characteristics of Jesus: He had the bearing, actions, and manners of a man. He humbled Himself: Jesus willingly took the role of a servant; no one forced Him to do it. obedient: Although He never sinned and did not deserve to die, He chose to die so that the sins of the world could be charged to His account. Subsequently He could credit His righteousness to the account of all who believe in Him (2 Cor. 5:21; Gal. 1:4). even the death of the cross: Paul describes the depths of Christ's humiliation by reminding his readers that Christ died by the cruelest form of capital punishment, crucifixion. The Romans reserved the agonizing death of crucifixion for slaves and foreigners, and the Jews viewed death on a cross as a curse from God (Deut. 21:23; Gal. 3:13).

Downward Mobility

In contrast to the many people today who seek upward mobility, Jesus was, in a sense, downwardly mobile (Phil. 2:5–8), moving from a position of ultimate power to utter powerlessness. In making this transition, He set the best possible example of servant-leadership (Matt. 20:25–28; John 13:2–17). However, Paul paints a different portrait of the Lord in Colossians.

2:9 Note the contrast between Jesus' placing Himself in a debased status (v. 8) with God the Father's elevation of Jesus to a highly exalted status. On earth Christ was God, but appeared as man; back in heaven. He retained His humanity, but He manifests His prerogatives of deity. God graciously granted to Him the name. On earth Christ was crowned with thorns (Matt. 27:29); back in heaven He is crowned with glory and honor (Rev. 5:12–14). and given Him the name which is above every name: Paul is referring to the OT passage speaking of the divine name Yahweh (LORD).

2:10 every knee: Although all will one day worship Christ, only those who put their faith in Him in this life will have an everlasting relationship with Him after death (Rev. 20:13–15). those under the earth: Paul refers here to those who will already have died at the time of Christ's return, in contrast to the angels in heaven and those who will still be living on earth.

2:11 confess: The term Paul uses is a strong, intensive verb, which means "agree with" or "say the same thing." Essentially Paul is saying that everyone will unanimously affirm what God the Father has already stated (Is. 45:23): that Jesus Christ is Lord.

2:12 Therefore: Paul desires the Philippians to respond positively to his admonition to have the mind of Christ (vv. 5–8). The command is to the entire group since the word you is plural. The subject is their mutual, corporate salvation (1:19, 28; Luke 22:24–30). work out: The Greek term speaks of the present deliverance of the Philippians. The word translated work out is used by the first century author Strabo to speak of digging silver out of silver mines. Thus, salvation can be compared to a huge gift that needs to be unwrapped for one's thorough enjoyment. Note that Paul is encouraging the Philippians to develop and work out their salvation, but not to work for their salvation. with fear and trembling: Demonstrating God's grace and power to the world by our unity and love (compare John 13:34, 35) is a very serious responsibility. This is not fear that is cowardice but respect for great value. They were to take great pains and care to discharge their duties correctly. They were not to fear the responsibility but to handle it as a commission of the highest order. The results would determine their position of privilege and glory in Christ's kingdom.

2:13 God Himself is at work in our lives and all that He does in our lives is done for His good pleasure (Rom. 8:28). It pleases God to do good for us. But He can only bless obedience to His will (John 15:10). Our ultimate goal should be to please Him in all we do. God supplies both the desire and the enablement to accomplish His will. We only need to appropriate what He supplies.

2:14–16 These verses give specific instructions on how the Philippians were to work out all things. The apostle had shown them in 1:27—2:13 the kind of attitude and actions they were to follow. They were to demonstrate in their corporate and individual life the kind of conduct that would prove worthy of the great calling that God has given them. He uses all things to emphasize the inclusiveness of this command.

2:14 The Philippians have been secretly discontented and have been complaining (2:1–4). But the word used suggests that loud dissension had not yet broken out.

2:15 This verse focuses on the testimony of the church. The purpose of the command in v. 14 is that the Philippians might be blameless light bearers in their world. They should deserve no censure because they are free from fault or defect in relation to the outside world (3:6). If the Philippian believers were going to have a testimony in their community, they had to be blameless in their actions and attitudes, both inside and outside the church (1 Tim. 3:2). without fault: This term is a technical word used to denote anything that is fit to be offered as a sacrifice to God, without spot or blemish, untainted by sin. crooked and perverse generation: Paul describes the world as being the opposite of Christian. On the one hand the world is turned away from the truth, while on the other hand it exerts a corrupting influence that is opposed to the truth. shine as lights: Paul depicts believers as stars whose light penetrates the spiritual darkness of a perverted world. Jesus said, "I am the light of the world." He also said, “You are the light of the world” (Matt. 5:14). Christ is inherently light. We are the light of the world as long as we reflect Christ.

2:16 The Greek verb translated holding fast contains two thoughts: holding fast and holding forth. The former concept suggests a steadfastness in which our lights (v. 15) blaze continually for God. The latter concept implies projecting our lights into the darkness of this world. Run suggests energetic activity, while labored indicates the toil of Paul’s ministry.

2:17 being poured out: Both Jews and Greeks sometimes poured wine out on an altar in connection with religious sacrifices (Num. 15:1–10). Some have interpreted this figure of speech as depicting Paul’s own martyrdom for the cause of Christ. However the content of the letter reveals by contrast that Paul assumes he will live (1:25) and expects to be released from prison shortly (v. 24). Thus, Paul probably was saying that he was presently being poured out as a living offering on behalf of the faith of the Philippians. sacrifice: This means primarily the act of offering something to God. service: Paul chooses a Greek term that depicts a person who fulfills the duties of a public office at his or her own expense. In the Christian context, this word speaks of worship humbly offered to God.

2:18 for the same reason: Because Paul is joyful in the midst of his sufferings on behalf of the Philippians (v. 17), he expects the Philippians to look on his suffering not as a matter of sadness but as a source of joy. He had caught the spirit of true blessing from Jesus (Matt. 5:10–12).

2:19–30 Paul sent two of his ministry companions, Timothy and Epaphroditus, to minister to the Philippians. Both of them exemplified the humility, unity, and sacrificial service which Paul had been teaching (2:1–18). These men could serve as object lessons of Paul’s teaching, living epistles to be read by the Philippians. Our lives can speak much more forcefully than the greatest preacher.

2:19 Paul balanced the previous somber passage (vv. 12–18) with the optimistic hope of sending his coworker Timothy, whose name means “One Who Honors God” and was from a believing family. Both his mother Eunice and his grandmother Lois had become Christians (2 Tim. 1:5). He had accompanied Paul on the second missionary journey, during which time they had established the church at Philippi. Timothy apparently was well-loved by the Philippians, and he in turn exhibited a great concern for them (vv. 20–22).

2:20 like-minded: Timothy and Paul had the same quality of concern for the Philippians (read Paul's command in v. 2 for the Philippians to be like-minded).

2:21 all: An overstatement for emphasis. Most people tend to be selfish, but Paul knows that Timothy is different. He exhorts the Philippians (v. 3) that they too can break free from this way of life if they have the mind of Christ (2:5–8). That is still Christ's way for us.

2:22 Timothy had shown his faithful character both to the Philippians, who knew of his ten years of ministry with the apostle Paul. as a son: In NT times, a son who served his father did so to learn the family trade. Serving in this way meant learning all about the business and being willing to obey the teacher in order to become as skillful as possible in the work.

2:23 I see: Before sending Timothy to the Philippians, Paul needed to assess carefully his own situation. He explained this need through the use of a Greek term which means "to turn one's eyes from all else and to concentrate them on one thing."

2:24 Paul waited to send Timothy until Paul saw the outcome of his case. Apparently, Paul expected a legal ruling soon on his present imprisonment. in the Lord: All the thoughts, attitudes and actions of Christians should spring from the fact that they are "in the Lord" (2:19). shortly: Paul anticipates being released from prison in the near future.

2:25 Epaphroditus was a Philippian Christian sent by the church in Philippi to take a gift to Paul (4:18) and to assist Paul in his ministry. He is described with a series of complimentary terms: a "brother," a "fellow worker," a "fellow soldier," a "messenger" to the Philippians, and a "minister" to Paul. He is mentioned in the Bible only in this letter. fellow worker: Paul considers Epaphroditus to be an equal in the work of the gospel. The title of fellow soldier was given only to those who had fought honorably alongside another. Paul thus offered high praise to Epaphroditus for his faithful service in the cause of Christ. your messenger: Here Paul uses the Greek term usually translated "apostle" in its nontechnical sense. Both Paul and Epaphroditus are messengers, but Paul's authority is greater than Epaphroditus's. Paul had a direct commission from Jesus Christ, while Epaphroditus was sent by the Philippians.

2:26 longing: Paul declares that Epaphroditus demonstrates the same concern for the Philippians as he himself does (1:8). Thus, they are one in their work for the Lord (v. 25), and they are one in their love for the Lord's people.

2:27 sick almost unto death: Paul was making certain that the Philippians understood the effort that Epaphroditus had made for the cause of Jesus Christ. Epaphroditus's condition had been far worse than perhaps they had imagined. Paul viewed Epaphroditus's healing as God's direct intervention. Though Paul exercised apostolic powers (2 Cor. 12:12), those powers were useless outside of the will and timing of God.

2:28 more eagerly: Paul returns Epaphroditus to the Philippians sooner than they expected him to do so. He does so for two reasons: (1) to encourage the Philippians to rejoice by letting them know that Epaphroditus is physically well and has fulfilled their spiritual service to him, and (2) to lessen a burden that he, Paul, is bearing (i.e., to be less sorrowful) because of his concern that the Philippians might be thinking less highly of Epaphroditus than they should.

2:29 Receive him: This term contains the idea of a favorable reception, an embrace of the one who comes. esteem: The Philippians are to hold Epaphroditus in high honor; they are to consider him a "precious," "prized," or "highly valued" servant.

2:30 not regarding his life: Paul informs the Philippians of the commitment that Epaphroditus had for the work that they had given him to do. to supply what was lacking: Paul acknowledges the work that the Philippians had already done for him. Epaphroditus was able to do what the Philippians could not do: be physically present to minister to him.

3:1 To sum up all that he has said about living worthy of Christ, Paul adds, rejoice in the Lord. This rejoicing is in the Lord, not in circumstances. God is always in charge, so even in prison Paul can rejoice. Consequently, it is not tedious (troublesome) for Paul to encourage the Philippians to rejoice. It will be a safeguard for their conduct because they will have the right attitude. safe: Paul is concerned that the Philippians do not fall into the trap set forth by those within the church who support heresy.

3:2 In NT times, dogs were hated scavengers. The term came to be used for all who had morally impure minds. evil workers: Since the term workers was occasionally used to identify those who propagated a religion, the words evil workers probably refers to teachers who are spreading destructive doctrines. mutilation: Paul here points sarcastically and specifically to those who desire to reinstate Jewish religious practices as necessary for salvation. He chooses a term that literally means “to cut.” By doing so, he suggests that these people do not even understand the truth about the OT practice of circumcision but understand it merely as a cutting of the flesh.

3:3 Paul defines true circumcision as a matter of the heart and not of the flesh. He reveals three aspects of true circumcision: (1) worshiping God in the Spirit; (2) rejoicing in Christ; and (3) placing no confidence in any human honor or accomplishment as a means to reach God. The OT also taught that circumcision was more than a ritual of the flesh (Lev. 26:41; Deut. 10:16, 30:6; Jer. 4:4; Ezek. 44:7).

Paul's Drivenness

As we read Paul's description of his younger days (Phil. 3:4–6), we discover a profound drivenness, as if he were out to prove something. Several clues suggest that he probably was. He was born outside of Palestine, in Tarsus, rather than in Judea. He devoted his life to intensive study of the Law. He attacked Christians with unusual vengeance. Perhaps it all added up to an intense desire to be accepted by the Jewish society in Jerusalem.

There are two major ways that minorities and other outsiders cope with rejection or discrimination by the larger society. One is to turn inward and refuse to participate in the dominant culture. The other is to remove or diminish differences and blend in with the majority. Perhaps one might be accepted, even if never treated as an equal. Paul seems possibly to have chosen the latter course.

3:4–9 Paul speaks as though he had confidence in the flesh to show that the reason he did not rely on Jewish credentials was not that he did not possess them, but that they could not achieve the righteousness only God could provide.

3:5 eighth day: Paul's parents obeyed God's law and had Paul circumcised on the appropriate day after his birth (Lev. 12:2, 3). The people of Israel are called the people of God. That Paul states he is of the stock of Israel implies that he is able to trace his origins to the true line of Israel, to Jacob and not Esau. tribe of Benjamin: The tribe of Benjamin was highly regarded by Israelites because that line had produced the first king of Israel and had remained loyal to David. Furthermore, that tribe had joined Judah after the Exile to form the foundation for the restored nation (1 Sam. 9:15–21; 1 Kin. 12:21–24). Hebrew of the Hebrews: This description of Paul may indicate that (1) both his parents were Jews, (2) he was a model Jew, or (3) he was educated completely as a Jew. Pharisee: Pharisees were highly educated Jewish leaders who spearheaded the opposition against Jesus while He was on earth, and later against the Christian church. They rigorously followed and defended the letter of the Jewish law. Paul himself came from a line of Pharisees (Acts 23:6) and had studied under Gamaliel, a highly respected Pharisee of that day (Acts 22:3).

3:6 persecuting the church: Prior to becoming a Christian, Paul vigorously attacked those who believed in Christ, even to the point of having them put to death (Acts 7:58—8:3; 9:1, 2).

3:7 gain: See 1:21. loss: This word indicates that which is damaged or of no further use (v. 8; Acts 27:10, 21). Those things that Paul thought to be important became unimportant after confronting the resurrected Messiah.

3:8 excellence: The value of knowing Christ surpasses all else (2:3; 4:7). rubbish: This word means anything that is detestable or worthless. All the things of this world are rubbish compared to Christ. Even "our righteousnesses are like filthy rags" (Is. 64:6). I may gain: The former gain (v. 7) is here substituted for the latter gain: Christ Jesus (1:21).

3:9 from the law: In vv. 6 and 7, Paul reveals the uselessness of righteousness that is in the law. Here he divulges that his own righteousness that had been in that law was also in vain. through faith in Christ: Paul recognizes that true righteousness is a matter of faith, not of works. It is God's righteousness that comes through Christ, not our own righteousness.

3:10 Paul indicates that he rejected his own righteousness in order to secure not merely an intellectual knowledge of Christ but also a relational knowledge, in fact, an intimate knowledge of Him. power of His resurrection: Paul does not say the power "in" His resurrection, which would specify the power of the one-time event of His resurrection. Rather, Paul seeks the ongoing power that is the day-to-day experience of being in Christ. Paul may also be alluding to his desire to be clothed with his own resurrection body. fellowship of His sufferings: Paul sees the value of participating in the persecutions or struggles that naturally accompany one who is in partnership (that is, fellowship, 1:5) with Christ and His sufferings (James 1:2–4; 1 Pet. 2:21–24). being conformed to His death: Paul desires to imitate Christ—even in His death. In other words, Paul wants to be completely obedient to God the Father, just as Jesus was obedient to His Father's will (Luke 22:42).

3:11 Attain to means "to arrive at" as well as to "become a partaker of." Paul was not doubting his participation in the resurrection but was instead viewing it in expectation (1 Cor. 15:1–34). Paul desired to be with those Christians who, through their victory in Christ, would receive special reward in the resurrection (Heb. 11:35).

3:12 not … attained: Paul chooses a different Greek word from that translated in v. 11 as attain. Here he indicates he has not yet "gained possession of" or "laid hold of" all that he seeks to be. perfected: The Greek term means mature or complete, finished. It does not specifically mean a moral or sinless perfection. Paul is not speaking of moral perfection or righteousness but of reaching the state of completion as a Christian. press on: Paul "pursues with all deliberate speed" the goal that is before him. The verb form indicates that he is doing this continually. lay hold of: This phrase adds the idea of overtaking by surprise to the sense of seizing some object. Paul urgently wants to "grab hold of" God as God had laid hold of him (Acts 9:1–22). Christ had dramatically and suddenly seized Paul on the road to Damascus, and his life was never the same after that.

3:13 Paul could not obliterate the past from his memory, but he refused to let his past obstruct his progress toward his goal. He wanted to forget his self-righteous past (vv. 4–7). By using the present tense for forgetting, Paul was indicating that it is an ongoing process. He might even be implying that he wanted to forget everything so that he would not rest on his past successes in Christ, but continue to labor for the Lord. reaching forward: This verb means "fully extended." It is used of a horse stretching and straining to gain the victory in a race.

3:14 goal: This word specifically refers to the marker at the end of a race on which runners intently fix their eyes. The prize is the reward for victory. Paul evidently takes to heart what he teaches in 1 Cor. 9:24. upward call: In the NT this speaks of the divine call to complete salvation. It may refer to the judgment seat of Christ, the place of reward. Paul does not say that he is pressing on for the call of God but rather for the prize of that call. He is not working for his salvation but rather for a reward.

3:15 mature: Paul uses the adjectival form (Gk. teleios) of the verb form (Gk. teleioo) he records in 3:12 ("perfected"). One way to understand how these words are related is to recognize that in verse 15 Paul is speaking about one's standing or position in Christ whereas in v. 12 he is discussing the level of one's spiritual growth in Christ. Another way to connect these two words is to assume that Paul is using a touch of sarcasm or irony in v. 15. Thus, when he speaks of those who are "mature," he may be mocking the heresy spreaders among the Philippians who believed that they had already attained perfection.

3:16 let us walk: Paul commands the Philippians to conduct themselves as soldiers who "march in line" together, organized, each in his proper position.

3:17 The word pattern indicates an exact representation of the original. The example of Paul's life is so evident that one can readily see it and use it as a pattern for living.

3:18–21 Unlike Paul, Timothy, and Epaphroditus (2:17—3:17), many people have set their mind on earthly things (v. 19). As believers we are to concentrate our attention and efforts on reaching heaven because that is where we hold our citizenship (v. 20).

3:18 The term weeping reveals Paul's compassion and concern for those who most tragically are the enemies of the cross. In v. 2, he offers a stern warning against them, but here he weeps for them.

3:19 In this verse destruction indicates the opposite of eternal salvation (1:19, 28). belly: The physical appetites of the "many" (v. 18) control and consume them. glory is in their shame: The things in which they take pride actually are the things that will bring "disgrace" or "humiliation" to them, things of which they should have been ashamed.

3:20 Christians need to remember that though we are in this world we are not of this world; our ultimate citizenship is in heaven. eagerly wait: Here Paul presents a direct contrast to the earthly focus of the enemies of the Cross in v. 19. The eager desire of Christians is not earthly things, but a heavenly Person, the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. 8:19–25).

3:21 Paul guarantees that Christ will transform, or "change in appearance," the believer. lowly body: What God will transform is the physical body. conformed to His glorious body: In v. 10, Christians are conformed to Christ's death; here they are conformed to His life. Our body now is weak and susceptible to sin, disease, and death. But God will change our bodies to resemble Christ's glorious resurrection body.

4:1 Paul's transition ("therefore") closes the previous section (3:17–21) and introduces the following exhortations. joy and crown: Paul considers the lives of these beloved Philippians to be the crowning reward for the work he has done. stand fast: With this command that requires continuous action on the part of the Philippians, Paul begins a series of ten commands that extends through v. 9.

4:2, 3 I urge: This word implies a certain level of familiarity; it introduces a request, not a demand. true companion: The identity of this person is unknown. It may be a specific person named Syzygos (the Greek word for companion), someone else particularly close to Paul, or any of the faithful Christians in the church who could help resolve the dispute. help: This verb means literally "to assist by holding together" and suggests that the women's dispute is not minor but potentially divisive. The Book of Life refers to a book in heaven where the names of believers are recorded (Dan. 12:1; Rev. 21:27).

Euodia and Syntyche

Paul's letters provide insight into the social makeup of the small early Christian communities in the Greco-Roman world. In his letter to the Philippian church, the first two persons he mentions by name are women: Euodia and Syntyche (Phil. 4:2). When Paul describes them as "these women who labored with me in the gospel" and includes them in the category of "fellow workers" (4:3), he indicates that they joined with him as equal partners in his missionary and teaching activity.

The exact nature of their leadership roles in the church at Philippi is not certain. The authority of both women in the church was sufficient, however, for Paul to encourage them to seek harmony with one another (4:2). He even called on someone addressed as "true companion" to "help these women" (4:3). Perhaps he was concerned that competition between them for the Philippians' loyalty and affection might fracture the young Philippian church. Perhaps the church met in the houses of these two women; competition between them, then, would have been a temptation.

Paul was concerned that Euodia and Syntyche "be of the same mind in the Lord" (4:2). His concern could not have run too deep, though. Along with Clement, he believed that both Euodia's and Syntyche's names were "in the Book of Life" (4:3). Nevertheless, both women needed to seek the mind of Christ, not their own.

Women played important leadership roles in Paul's churches, two examples being Phoebe in the church at Cenchrea (Rom. 16:1) and Priscilla in Ephesus (1 Cor. 16:19). Particularly in Macedonia, where women often assumed prominent roles in religious cults, it would be natural to find female leaders in a church. Paul supported women's roles in the Christian communities and instructed believers: "There is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus" (Gal. 3:28).

4:4–8 Paul exhorts the Philippians to strive after four basic Christian virtues: (1) "rejoice in the Lord always" (v. 4), (2) be gentle to all people (v. 5), (3) be prayerful, not anxious (v. 6), and (4) meditate on excellent things (v. 8).

4:4 In the midst of difficulties, in the midst of all situations, Christians are to rejoice. The joy of Christians is not based on agreeable circumstances, instead it is based on their relationship to God. Christians will face trouble in this world, but they should rejoice in the trials they face because they know God is using those situations to improve their character (James 1:2–4).

4:5 gentleness: This noun identifies a person who manifests a calmness and fairness of spirit. A person who is gentle is willing to sacrifice his or her own personal rights to show consideration to others. at hand: The Lord's return could occur at any moment. Paul uses that fact to motivate the Philippians to honor God with their lives.

4:6 Paul exhorts the Philippians to pray about their circumstances instead of worrying over them. be anxious for nothing: Although the same word in 2:20 describes Timothy's concern for the Philippians, here Paul uses the word to refer to worry. He prohibits the Philippians from worrying about their own problems. Instead they are to commit their problems to God in prayer, trusting that He will provide deliverance.

4:7 will guard: Paul's choice of a military term implies that the mind is in a battle zone and needs to be "protected by a military guard." Since the purpose of such a guard in a wartime situation is either to prevent a hostile invasion or to keep the inhabitants of a besieged city from escaping, the peace of God operates in the same way: to protect the mind from external corrupting influences and to keep the mind focused on God's truth.

(Gk. arete) (4:8; 1 Pet. 2:9; 2 Pet. 1:3) Strong’s #703: A rare word in the NT but generously used in Greek writings, this word denotes moral excellence. Peter in his first letter uses the word to describe the excellent nature or “excellencies” of God (in 1 Pet. 2:9 the word is translated praises). Such excellence is said to have been possessed by various people, but it is a quality that comes from God. Only those who are given divine power can be morally excellent on this earth (2 Pet. 1:3).

4:8 noble: This term describes that which is of honorable character. pure: This word is closely associated with the Greek word for holy and thus means “sacred” or “immaculate.” meditate on: Paul commands the Philippians “to deliberate,” “to evaluate,” “to compute over and over” what is good and pure. In this way, Christians can renew their minds so that they will not conform to the evil habits of this world (Rom. 12:2).

4:9 learned: This verb conveys not only the concept of “increasing in intellectual knowledge” but also the idea of “learning by habitual practice.” In some areas of their Christian development the Philippians had been excellent disciples of Paul, practicing what he had taught. received: This verb (Gk. paralambano) literally means “to take alongside oneself.” It indicates a reception without rejection or disobedience. do: The Philippians are to “put into practice” or “undertake to do” all they had gained from Paul. God of peace: As the Philippians do all that Paul commands, they will realize the presence of God, who is characterized by peace and who is the only source of true peace.

4:10–20 What Paul discusses in this section may be the reason why he wrote this letter. The Philippians had given him a gift and he desired to thank them for it. In this section, Paul indicates that the Philippians would be rewarded for their gift and that God would meet all their needs.

4:10 flourished again: Paul uses an agricultural word found only here in the NT to picture a plant that “shoots up” or “sprouts again,” describing a condition of prosperity or abundance. lacked opportunity: Paul politely lets the Philippians know that he is aware of their continual concern for him.

IN COMPARISON

The Christian Quest

SEEK	Christ above all (1:21; 3:7, 8) and FIND righteousness in Christ and the power of His resurrection (3:9–11).
	Christlike humility (2:5–7) and FIND God's will in the believer (2:12, 13).
	A divinely appointed goal (3:14) and FIND the prize of eternal salvation (3:14).
	All things that are true, noble, just, pure, lovely, virtuous, and praiseworthy (4:8) and FIND the presence of the God of peace (4:9).

4:11 content: The word literally means "self-sufficient." In Stoic philosophy this Greek word described a person who dispassionately accepted whatever circumstances brought. For the Greeks, this contentment came from personal sufficiency. But for Paul true sufficiency is found in the strength of Christ (v. 13).

4:12 to be abased: This term in its passive form means "to be demoted to a lower rank" or "to be humiliated by frugal circumstances." to abound: Paul also knows how to "live in affluence" and to "be richly supplied to the point of abundance." According to this verse, Paul knows what Job had learned centuries before: "The LORD gave, and the LORD has taken away; blessed be the name of the LORD" (Job 1:21). I have learned: This Greek verb indicates that Paul "was initiated into the secrets" of dealing with a satisfied or hungry stomach. He was, as this verb suggests, "intimately acquainted with" both conditions since he had become "accustomed" to both. to suffer need: Paul indicates that there are times when he is "devoid," "falling short of," or "suffering the lack" of what others would call essentials.

4:13 I can do: The basic meaning of this verb is "to have power," especially to possess the physical strength that allows one to accomplish difficult tasks.

4:14 you shared: Though Paul relied on Christ to sustain him, he wanted the Philippians to know that their gift was appreciated.

4:15 giving and receiving: Paul considers the relationship between himself and the Philippians to be a two-way street, with both parties actively involved in the sharing of both material and spiritual gifts.

4:16 my necessities: Even the apostle had needs, and God used others to meet them.

4:17 Paul has in mind in this verse the material gift that the Philippians sent to him. account: Paul uses business terminology. The Philippians' gift was producing spiritual profit just as money deposited in a bank account accrues interest. But Paul was not as concerned with their gift as with the development in the Philippians of the spiritual ability to give.

4:18 sweet-smelling aroma: Paul cherishes the gift that the Philippians sent him because he sees it as more of an offering to God than as a gift to him. an acceptable sacrifice: By giving to Paul, the Philippians had offered themselves as a gift to God (Rom. 12:1, 2).

4:19 In v. 18 Paul says that he is full because they gave. In this verse he writes that God will supply all their needs. The Philippians, in turn, will be full because of the gifts God will give them. according to His riches: Out of His abundant wealth, God will more than amply take care of the Philippians.

4:20 The Jewish practice of closing prayers with the word amen carried over to the Christian church as well. When found at the end of a sentence as it is here, the word can be translated "so be it," or "may it be fulfilled." At the beginning of a sentence, it means "surely," "truly," or "most assuredly."

4:21 brethren: Paul reminds them that they are part of the family of the Lord Jesus Christ.

4:22 those … of Caesar's household: These believers may have been officials in the Roman government (such as members of the Praetorian Guard; 1:13) or servants who lived and served in the emperor's palace.

4:23 As the letter opened with a blessing of grace, so also it closes. It is a fitting picture of the Christian life.

The Epistle to the Colossians

———— JUST AS A CHILD NEEDS PROPER INSTRUCTION early in life, so the early believers needed to be set on the proper path with correct teaching. Paul wrote this letter to deal with a doctrinal heresy that was creeping into the Colossian church. Although we are not told specifically what this heresy was, we can pick up clues from Paul's response. The error was probably a mixture of Judaism and an early form of Gnosticism. The Colossian church was experiencing the same problems other early churches had encountered. Certain members were teaching that the observance of Jewish rules about food, the Sabbath, and special festivals would help believers to earn their salvation (Gal. 3:23–25; 4:10, 11). At Colosse, however, some of the Gentile members were apparently also promoting a form of mysticism that claimed that Jesus was a higher being, but not God. Paul refutes these false doctrines by pointing to Christ. Jesus had been the focus of Paul's preaching from the beginning. In Colossians, Paul reiterates the supremacy of Christ. It was because Jesus is divine that His death reconciles believers to their Creator.

As in all of his epistles, Paul seems to write as though he had our own society in mind. Even today, new cults claim to be Christian yet deny the deity of Christ and the basic beliefs of Christianity. Many today view Jesus as no more than "a great teacher." Paul's patient correction of the Colossian believers should remind us that we need to keep the worship of Jesus Christ central in our churches.

The city of Colosse was about a hundred miles east of Ephesus, in the valley of the Lycus River. During the Persian wars of the fifth century B.C., Colosse was a large and strategic city. By the time of the apostle Paul, however, it had declined into the shadows of its two sister cities, Laodicea and Hierapolis, and had become a small merchant town on the trade route from Rome to the east.

Evangelization of Colosse probably took place during Paul's three-year stay in Ephesus. Luke records in Acts 19:10 that people throughout the Asian region heard the gospel. Apparently Epaphras was converted in Ephesus, and after being instructed by Paul returned home to Colosse to proclaim the gospel. Evidently the church that emerged was largely composed of Gentiles, for Paul refers to their “uncircumcision,” a word employed by Paul to designate Gentiles (2:13; Rom. 2:24–27; Eph. 2:11).

Pauline authorship of this letter has been universally recognized throughout church history. Paul identifies himself as the author of the letter three different times, describing himself as “an apostle of Jesus Christ” and as a servant of the gospel. Furthermore Paul closes the epistle with a handwritten greeting, a characteristic of several of his letters (1 Cor. 16:21; 2 Thess. 3:17). The Muratorian fragment (a document written around A.D. 180 that lists books considered by the early church to be divinely inspired) includes Colossians as a Pauline epistle. Many church fathers also upheld Paul as the author of Colossians. These include Justin Martyr, Irenaeus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Origen.

Paul probably wrote Colossians while imprisoned in Rome around A.D. 60. Some have argued for other places of origin, such as Ephesus and Caesarea, but there is not enough evidence to displace the traditional theory that Paul wrote from his prison in Rome. Colossians is one of the four prison epistles of Paul, along with Ephesians, Philippians, and Philemon. Because Colossians, Ephesians, and Philemon have several similarities, many believe that the three were written at about the same time.

The many parallels between Colossians and Ephesians indicate that the two letters were written about the same time. Both letters reveal the centrality of Christ and His relationship to the church. Ephesians shows Christ as head of the church, while Colossians extends that imagery of His authority over all creation (1:16–18; 2:10). In Ephesians, Paul highlights how Christians are the members of the body of Christ, who is the head. In Colossians, he places emphasis on Christ the head, of whose body Christians are members.

The differences in the epistles are significant as well. Colossians stresses the completeness of the believer in Christ; Ephesians points to Christian unity that is found in Christ. The mystery in Colossians is that Christ is in believers (1:26, 27), while the mystery in Ephesians is the unity of Jew and Gentile in Christ. Colossians speaks of Jesus as Lord over all creation, while Ephesians concerns itself with Christ’s authority over the church. Finally, Colossians has a stronger tone because it confronts a specific false teaching in Colosse. Ephesians has a softer tone; it does not address a specific heresy.

But with all their similarities and differences, Ephesians and Colossians together present a mature understanding of who Christ is and what His life and death mean for the believer. From prison, Paul was teaching the churches in Asia Minor how central the person of Jesus Christ is to the Christian faith. He is the image of God, the source of all wisdom, and the head of the church. He is the One who reconciles us to God and to our fellow believers. As our Savior and Deliverer, He deserves our sincere adoration and praise.

Commentary

"Jesus Christ"

(Gk. Iesous Christos) (1:1; Matt. 1:1, 18; Mark 1:1; John 1:17; 17:3; 1 Cor. 1:2–10) Strong's #2424; 5547: "Jesus Christ" is not the first and last names of Jesus, as people are commonly named today. Jesus is His human name, whose meaning relates to His mission to "save" us (Matt. 1:18). Christ is a description of His office: He is "the Anointed One," anointed by God to be our King, Prophet, and High Priest. The combination of name and title is rare in the Gospels (occurring only five times) because Jesus was still in the process of revealing Himself as the Christ. Once this was recognized by His followers, the combination was used prolifically throughout the Book of Acts and the Epistles to express the belief that Jesus is the Christ, the promised Messiah. Paul uses the combined form at the start of Colossians to indicate the theme of his letter, the supremacy of Jesus Christ.

1:1 Paul calls himself an apostle, a word whose root means "to send." This Greek word was first used of a cargo ship or fleet, but later denoted a commander of a fleet. The NT employs the word to signify an approved spokesman sent as a personal representative. Although not every Christian is called by God to minister like Paul or the twelve apostles, every Christian is sent by God to represent Him before the people with whom he or she comes in contact. by the will of God: This speaks of Paul's divine appointment. His appointment was not by the Twelve, by religious leaders, by his family, nor by himself. This is an assertion of his divine authority, a declaration of his independence of all human authority, and he disclaims any individual merit or personal power. and Timothy our brother: Timothy was not an apostle; he was a brother. This trusted companion was with Paul in Rome. As an act of courtesy, Paul includes Timothy in the salutation. Timothy was Paul's spiritual son (1 Tim. 1:2, 18; 2 Tim. 1:2; 1 Cor. 4:17).

1:2 The Greek term translated saints means "holy people." The essence of "holiness" is being set apart to God. All believers are saints, not because they are perfect, but because they belong to God. in Christ: This is a favorite expression of the apostle Paul, used some 80 times in his letters. Paul saw all of Christian experience growing out of the believer's position in Christ. Grace … peace: Paul combines the Greek word for grace with the standard Hebrew greeting, peace. He broadens and deepens his meaning by reminding his readers that the ultimate source of "favor" and "wholeness" is in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. 1:7).

The City of Colosse

• A Roman city of Asia Minor located at the base of 8,000-foot-high Mount Cadmus in the Lycus River valley east of Ephesus.

• Watered by a cascade descending through a gorge from Mount Cadmus.

• A prosperous industrial center especially famous for its textiles, but clearly in decline at the time of Christ, squeezed by its increasingly competitive neighbor, Laodicea.

• Survived a devastating earthquake in A.D. 61, but later its population moved three miles south to Chonai (modern Honaz).

• Judaism, Platonism, and mystery cults from the surrounding mountain peoples blended into strange, often contradictory religious practices. Cultic worship of angels persisted, with Michael as the favorite. He was credited with sparing the town in a time of disaster.

• Home of Archippus and Epaphras, associates of Paul who helped spread the gospel throughout Asia, up and down the Lycus Valley. The region was also home to Onesimus, a runaway slave who became a believer.

1:3 The apostle indicates the tender concern that he has for these Christians; he is praying always for them. This common phrase of Paul's (Eph. 1:16; Phil. 1:4; 1 Thess. 1:2), which combines intercessory prayer and thanksgiving, means that each time Paul prayed, he interceded for the Colossians and offered praise for God's work among them.

1:4–8 faith … love … hope: Paul often uses these three terms together (Rom. 5:2–5; 1 Cor. 13:13; 1 Thess. 1:3; 5:8). Faith is in Christ. This is the thrust of the passage. The Colossians' faith was grounded in the nature and work of Jesus Christ. Love flows from faith and proves the genuineness of one's faith (James 2:14–26). The Colossians' sacrificial love for all the saints proved their true belief in Christ. Hope refers to the result of faith, the treasure laid up … in heaven where our faith will find its fulfillment in the presence of Christ. Epaphras is also mentioned in 4:12, 13 and Philem. 23. Epaphras probably was Paul's convert and fellow prisoner. He most likely started the church in his hometown of Colosse.

1:9–12 Paul's prayer for the Colossian Christians is a model for us. As soon as he heard of the new faith of the Colossians, he began interceding with God for them, asking Him to give them knowledge, wisdom, strength, and joy. He prayed that the new believers at Colosse would grow into Christian maturity so that they might walk before God, pleasing Him and producing good works.

1:9 Paul's chief concern is that the Colossians might have full knowledge of God's will. The desire to serve God will be in vain without a proper understanding of the One we want to serve. Thus, Paul prays that the Colossians might be filled with full knowledge that encompasses all wisdom and spiritual understanding. Wisdom is the practical outworking of knowledge (James 3:17), and that knowledge cannot be separated from the spiritual understanding that comes through the discernment given by the Holy Spirit.

1:10 In addition to the full knowledge of the Lord's will mentioned in v. 9, Paul desires that the Colossians may walk worthy of the Lord. Paul wanted the Colossians to live in a manner that adequately reflected what God had done for them and was doing in them. Being "worthy of God" is a phrase that occurs in ancient pagan inscriptions throughout Asia. It pictures someone's life being weighed on scales to determine its worth. If these devotees to false gods knew they had to walk in a worthy manner, certainly Christians should dedicate their lives to the living God in order to please Him.

1:11 according to His glorious power: This phrase means that believers are empowered not in proportion to their need but according to God's strength. So then, Paul desires to see nothing less than the very power of God Himself at work in the Colossian believers. Like Samson's (Judg. 14:19), a believer's strength comes from God alone. patience: Literally, "remaining under." This is the opposite of cowardice and despondency. It is forbearance, steadfast endurance, fortitude, and the capacity to see things through. It means remaining under difficulties without succumbing to them. longsuffering: This is the opposite of wrath and revenge. It is self-restraint, even-temperedness, holding out long. Longsuffering does not retaliate in spite of injury or insult (compare James 5:7–11). with joy: Not with a long face, not with a sickly smile, but with psalms in the night. "The joy of the LORD is your strength" (Neh. 8:10).

1:12 qualified: The word means to be able or authorized for a task. Believers can never be qualified on their own; instead God must make them sufficient through Jesus Christ. The tense of the verb points to "qualifying" as an act in the past rather than a process. Ordinarily to qualify for an event or a position, we have to prove ourselves. However the inheritance (v. 5) that believers receive is not one that they have earned but is based on being qualified by God. The Father "qualifies" us for eternal life with Him, whereas the Son will reward us at the end of the race (Rev. 22:12). The term saints probably does not refer to the angels of God as in 1 Thess. 3:13. Instead Paul uses the word for the believers at Colosse.

1:13 Delivered … conveyed: God has liberated believers from the dominion of darkness. The apostle uses the common symbolism of light and darkness for good and evil, for God's kingdom and Satan's kingdom, that is found throughout the NT. The kingdom from which believers have been rescued is the kingdom of darkness (see this imagery in John 1:4–9; Eph. 5:8; 1 Thess. 5:5; 1 Pet. 2:9; 1 John 1:5). This realm of darkness had a brief apparent triumph against our Lord (Luke 22:53), but His ultimate victory on the Cross brings victory over the kingdom of darkness to His saints. That deliverance transferred them into a new kingdom. Conveyed was used of resettling colonists as citizens of a new country. The final consummation is not yet; but in some sense, believers are already ushered into Christ's kingdom. There is a tension in Paul's theology here that he delicately balances. The future earthly manifestation of the kingdom is coming, but there is already a foretaste of the gloriousness of that future time.

1:14 The Greek word redemption points naturally to the payment of a price or ransom for the release of a slave. The slavery from which believers are released is not physical but spiritual. They are freed from bondage to sin by forgiveness of sins through the blood of Jesus Christ (Eph. 1:7). People today tend to avoid speaking of sin. Often when a person has committed wrongs or even crimes, these are dismissed as disease or dysfunction. The Bible speaks forthrightly of sins for which persons must be forgiven. The wages of sin is death. The only release comes from the forgiveness of God based on the death of His Son (Rom. 3:24, 25).

(Gk. prototokos) (1:15; Rom. 8:29; Heb. 1:6) Strong’s #4416: The first part of this word (proto) can indicate “first in time” (temporal priority) or “first in place” (preeminence). In this context, preeminence is in the forefront. Moreover, the phrase carries either an active or passive sense, bearer of one born, here the former. Thus, the Son of Man is the “chiefbearer” of all God’s creatures. In Ex. 4:22; Deut. 21:16, 17; Ps. 89:23, the Greek OT prototokos is used to express the idea of preeminence and first cause. This designation in no way indicates that Christ Himself was created by God; the verse moreover asserts that all things were created in, through, and for Christ. As a participant in the creation of all things, Christ cannot be a created being. Instead, He is the Son of God, the second person of the Godhead, who has existed from eternity.

1:15–20 Paul interrupts his description of his prayers for the Colossians with a song of praise. These verses are generally recognized as an early Christian hymn celebrating the supremacy of Jesus Christ.

1:15 firstborn over all creation: Firstborn could devote a priority in time or in rank. The word does not describe Christ as the first being created in time because the hymn proclaims that all things were “created by Him” and that “He is before all things.” Jesus is the eternal One who was before all creation. The idea of firstborn in the Hebrew culture did not require that one be the first son born. This was not the case with either Isaac or Jacob. But they were the firstborn in the sense that they were rightful heirs to the line of their fathers. Being firstborn referred more to rank and privilege than to order of birth. Since Christ is God, He is supreme in rank over all creation. Yet He is not only the transcendent deity who created us; He is the One who died on our behalf (Phil. 2:6–18) and was subsequently raised from dead. Thus, He is also the firstborn from the dead (v. 18), the first One who experienced the true resurrection (1 Cor. 15:20).

1:16 This early Christian hymn emphasizes the superiority of Christ over all creation. Christ is the One who created all things, whether they be material or immaterial, seen or unseen. This idea is in direct contradiction to the false teaching, later known as Gnosticism, that was developing in the Colossian church. In general, Gnostics believed that various angelic beings were the creators of the earth and that Christ was one among many of these angels. all things were created through Him and for Him: Not only did Jesus create all things; everything was created for His purposes (Heb. 1:2, where Christ is said to be the "heir of all things"). But the glory of the earth, the heavens, or the sun, moon, and stars cannot be compared with the glory of His new creation (2 Cor. 5:17).

1:17 before all things: Both in time and in supremacy. Because of Christ's supreme authority and oversight, all things consist (hold together).

1:18 Following the celebration of Christ's authority over all creation, this early Christian hymn proceeds to proclaim His authority over the church. He is the head of His own body, which is the church. No one should underestimate the significance of the church, for it is in fact Christ's body. The sovereign Creator of the universe, as head of the church, provides leadership and oversight over it. No wonder He is so jealous for it (1 Cor. 3:16, 17). firstborn from the dead: Christ was the first to be raised from the dead. His own resurrection guarantees that the church will one day be resurrected (1 Cor. 15:12–28).

Christ, the Lord of the World

In Col. 1:15–18, Paul presents Jesus as the cosmic Christ, Creator of the universe, Sustainer of earth and all of its ecological systems, and Ruler over the competing power networks of the world. This is quite a contrast from Jesus the Servant, as presented in Phil. 2:5–8. There He is Lord of the personal and the private, the One who speaks to someone's heart. Here in Colossians, Paul offers the Lord of the public who transcends individual needs to deal with global concerns.

These are not two different Christs, but the same Christ, Lord of all. And His rule over both domains—the public and the private—suggests the kinds of activities in which His followers need to engage. On the one hand, Christ lives in us to transform us personally. He wants to affect our individual jobs, our families, our local communities, and our personal relationships. On the other hand, Christ is at work globally, using people to transform societies and their systems, confront principalities and powers, and work for public justice and human rights.

1:19 fullness: The opponents of Paul, and later the Greek Gnostics, seem to have used this word as a technical term for the sphere between heaven and earth where a hierarchy of angels lived. The Gnostics viewed Christ as one of many spirits existing in this hierarchy between God and all people. However, Paul used the term fullness to refer to the complete embodiment of God. Christ is the only Intercessor for human beings and fully embodies all of God's nature (l Tim. 2:5). No other intermediary, whether person or group, is able to stand in our place before the Father. Only Jesus can do this.

1:20, 21 reconcile all things … now He has reconciled: This phrase shows the significance of Christ's work on the Cross. It does not mean that all people will be saved, since many passages clearly say that unbelievers will suffer eternal separation from God (Matt. 25:46). The work of Christ will overthrow the damage effected by the Fall and change all of creation from a position of enmity to a relationship of peace and friendship (Rom. 8:20–23; 2 Cor. 5:18–20).

1:22 body of His flesh: The false teachers at Colosse were telling the believers that redemption could only be accomplished through a spiritual being. They rejected Christ's incarnation. According to them, Jesus could not have had a physical body. Thus, Paul uses two terms, body and flesh, to clearly state that Christ became man and experienced a physical death. holy … blameless … above reproach in His sight: We who were once enemies of God and alienated by our own wicked works will one day be presented as above reproach on account of Christ's death for us.

1:23 if indeed you continue in the faith: The perseverance of the Colossians was proof of the reconciling work of Christ on their behalf (vv. 21, 22). every creature under heaven: Paul uses this exaggeration to illustrate the rapid spread of the gospel. Compare Acts 17:6, where the apostles are said to have turned the world upside down, even though their ministry up to that point had been limited to a small portion of the eastern Mediterranean region.

1:24–29 Paul received a stewardship from God (v. 25) to preach this divine Christ (vv. 9–18) who had reconciled the world (vv. 19–23). It was Paul's ministry, but we, too, are responsible to God to preach Christ.

1:24 In this verse, Paul is not saying that Christ's death was insufficient (2:11–15) or that somehow he was a coredeemer with Christ. Paul is making the point that a Christian will endure the sufferings that Christ would be enduring if He were still in the world (2 Cor. 1:5; 4:11). Christ had told His disciples that if the world hated Him it would hate His followers. If people persecuted Him they would persecute His followers (John 15:19, 20). Paul believed he was suffering the afflictions God wanted him to endure. Instead of facing his difficulties with dread, Paul saw his troubles as a time of joy (Rom. 8:17; Phil. 1:29; 1 Thess 1:6; 2:2; 3:3–5; 2 Tim. 3:12), because they were producing an eternal reward (2 Cor. 4:17).

1:25 I became a minister: Become a servant. Paul's appointment made him a minister of the gospel (Eph. 3:7; Col. 1:23) a minister of God (2 Cor. 6:4); a minister of Christ (1 Cor. 4:1); and a minister of the New Covenant (2 Cor. 3:6). stewardship: Divine ordering (Gk. oikonomia), administration, trusteeship. This was Paul's high privilege and sacred trust. Paul was a steward in God's economy; a trustee in God's household; and an administrator of God's business. Paul was on business for the King. given: Not usurped. for you: For your benefit and for your blessing. to fulfill the word of God: God's purpose was Paul's purpose, and God's Word was Paul's message. Therefore, Paul's message was pure and uncorrupted by false teaching (Rom. 15:19; 2 Tim. 4:2–5).

1:26, 27 The mystery referred to in these verses is similar to the mystery spoken of in Eph. 3:8–10. In Greek pagan religions, a mystery was a secret teaching reserved for a few spiritual teachers who had been initiated into an inner circle. Paul uses the word to refer to knowledge that had been "hidden from the ages and generations" (2:2, 4:3; 1 Cor. 2:7; 4:1; Eph. 3:4, 9; 5:32; 6:19; 1 Tim. 3:9, 16), but was now being revealed by God. The Lord had revealed this mystery to Paul and called him to be a steward of it (Eph. 3:5). The mystery is that Christ now lives within Gentile believers: Christ in you, the hope of glory. This is in harmony with Ephesians. In that letter, Paul states that the mystery is the union of Jews and Gentiles in one body, Christ's church (Eph. 3:6).

1:28 Here is a great discipling verse. Paul was not content to see people born again. He took the responsibility of leading them on to maturity. He moved them from infancy to infantry. Spiritual babies have great potential, but they became a serious drain on the church and a source of untold problems if they remain in the nursery forever. perfect: The concept of perfection in the NT means completeness or maturity. Here the reference is probably to the coming of Christ, when every believer will experience the completion of Christ's work in him or her (1 Cor. 13:10).

1:29 Paul toiled and agonized for the perfection of his fellow believers (v. 28), not in his own strength but by the power of God working in him.

2:1–5 Paul's ministry included Christians like the Colossians whom he had never seen. He had a great conflict for them in care, desire, and prayer (vv. 1–3). He was concerned lest someone deceive them (v. 4), and he was rejoicing at their steadfastness (v. 5). Paul is a model of pastoral concern.

2:1 Laodicea was a sister city of Colosse about eleven miles away. The two churches were to share their letters from Paul (4:16).

2:2, 3 Though the false teachers at Colosse spoke of initiating people into a superior knowledge, Paul tells his readers that they can understand the mystery (1:26, 27) of God without this false philosophy. The Gnostics sought knowledge as an end in itself, but Paul reminds the Colossians that true knowledge will demonstrate itself by bringing people together in Christian love in the church. Note how Paul joins the Father and Christ together, emphasizing their common deity and unity. The Gnostics would view Jesus only as an emanation from the Father, sharing a portion of the attributes of deity. Paul not only emphasizes Jesus' deity, but also explains that He possesses all wisdom and knowledge. The Gnostics thought only certain "knowledgeable" people could join their elite group; Paul teaches that every believer has access to complete wisdom found in Christ.

2:4 Do not let the persuasive but deceptive words of false teachers lead you from the true "wisdom" (v. 3) in Christ.

2:5 absent … with you: Although Paul did not know the Colossians and Laodiceans personally (2:1), his strong feelings for them and the vivid report from Epaphras (1:7) made him feel present with them in spirit (1 Cor. 5:3–5).

2:6, 7 Just as the Colossian believers had begun with Christ, so Paul encourages them to continue in their walk with Him. Paul uses four words to describe the Colossians' walk with Christ. The tense of the word translated rooted denotes a complete action; the believers have been rooted in Christ. The next three words, built up, established, and abounding, are in the present tense, showing the continual growth that should characterize every Christian's walk with Christ.

2:8 This verse has been used at times to teach that Christians should not study or read philosophy. This is not Paul's meaning. Paul himself was adept at philosophy, evidenced by his interaction with the Stoic and Epicurean philosophers in Athens (Acts 17:1–34). Paul was warning the believers not to be taken in by any philosophy that does not conform to a proper knowledge of Christ. The false teachers at Colosse had combined worldly philosophies with the gospel. These philosophies are spoken of by Paul as the basic principles of the world, which some have interpreted as "spirits" or "angels" who supposedly control a person's life (Gal. 4:3, 9). It seems more likely that the term principles refers to the elementary rules and regulations that certain teachers were seeking to impose on believers according to the dictates of human philosophies. Paul's strongest indictment against the heretics was that their teaching was not according to Christ, and thus they were not walking with Christ (vv. 6, 7).

IN FOCUS

"fullness of the Godhead"

(Gk. pleroma tes theotetos) (2:9) Strong's #4138; 2320: The Greek word pleroma indicates "plenitude" and "totality." The Gnostics used the word to describe the totality of all deities. Both Paul and John used the word to describe Christ, who is the fullness, the plenitude of God, for all the fullness of the Godhead dwells in Him bodily (1:19; 2:9). Since all of God's fullness resides in Christ, every spiritual reality is found in Christ. In Him, we lack nothing. The Greek word theotetos for Godhead is used only here in the NT and designates the totality of God's nature and person. All the fullness of the Godhead "dwells" or "permanently resides" in the body of Jesus, the God-man.

2:9 In this verse Paul clearly proclaims the Incarnation, the fact that God became a man bodily. This contradicts the Gnostic idea of the inherent evil of physical bodies and the claim that Jesus is merely a spirit. The Gnostics thought the fullness of God had been divided among a number of angelic beings, the last creating the material world. In contrast, Paul says that the fullness of God exists in Christ.

2:10 Paul illustrates the adequacy of Christ by demonstrating how the Colossian believers are complete. In Christ, the Colossians have put off the power of sin and the flesh (v. 11), have received new life (vv. 12, 13), have been forgiven, have been delivered from requirements laid down by human traditions (v. 14), and have been freed from the powers of spirit beings (v. 15). There is nothing that the Christian needs to add to what was received in Christ at the time of conversion. Paul emphasizes the sufficiency of Christ in order to refute the Gnostics and the Judaizers who respectively believed that special knowledge or works were necessary to make a Christian complete.

2:11 Whereas all Jewish males were required to receive physical circumcision, the circumcision that is from Christ is without hands (Deut. 10:16). Rather than the mere removal of flesh, Christian circumcision is the spiritual removal of sin from the heart, taking part in the New Covenant of Jesus Christ.

2:12, 13 buried … in baptism: Baptism is the symbol of the believer's association with Christ's death on the Cross. Water baptism itself does not bring forgiveness of sins, but Paul uses the rite to help explain the work of the Spirit. The early church would never have understood the idea of an unbaptized Christian. Baptism and faith were considered to be the outward and inward realities of being a Christian (Acts 2:38; 10:47, 48; 16:33; Rom. 6:3–5). Some have highlighted Paul's close association of baptism and circumcision in this passage as an indication that water baptism is a sign of the New Covenant, just as circumcision was a sign of the Abrahamic covenant.

2:14 nailed … to the cross: Not only were our personal sins forgiven at the Cross, but those rules that condemned us have also been removed by the death of Christ.

2:15 Principalities and powers allude to Satan and the fallen angels. Paul is describing Christ's victory on the Cross over the powers that opposed Him and that were against God's faithful people. To describe this victory, Paul uses the spectacle of the military triumph, when prisoners of war were stripped and paraded before the populace behind the conquering general. Satan and his forces thought the Cross would be their victory and Christ's defeat. In reality, at the Cross the Lord vanquished His foes, took away their weapons, and made a public spectacle of them. This is a dramatic contrast to the victory that Satan had over our first parents in the garden. Satan was the victor in that instance, but at the Cross he was the clear loser. In view of this victory by Christ, we should be wary of those who emphasize demonism or play up the power of demons over Christians. By giving Satan recognition, we give him power. This is not to deny demonic forces, only to keep in proper perspective their limited power over Christ's kingdom now and their final destiny at the end of the world.

2:16–19 In view of Christ's victory over His enemies, we should not be controlled by those powers and practices over which Christ has already triumphed. The false teachers in Colosse were tempting the Colossians to bind themselves with the outward observances of Judaism, such as the Jewish dietary restrictions. These were merely a shadow of Christ. Judaism and its rites pointed to Christ. Paul warns the believers in Colosse not to let others bind them to regulations from which Christ has already freed them. false humility: People who do not champion salvation in Christ alone often appear to be humble. But their search for a new spiritual experience or advocacy of some work as necessary for salvation is actually human pride. They do not want to submit to God's plan of salvation revealed in the Bible.

2:20–23 regulations: Since believers have been released from ritualistic observances, why should they let others bind them down again (Rom. 6:3–14)? No human work can be added to the merit of Christ's death. His work on the Cross is the only acceptable work in God's eyes. The legalistic commands of others are a self-imposed religion and are of no value for salvation.

3:1–4 Paul's exhortations in ch. 3 are practical applications of the doctrine he has presented in ch. 2. if … you were raised with Christ: Paul ties his ethical teaching (v. 5) to the doctrine of the Resurrection (2:12, 13). set your mind on things above: The false teachers were instructing the Colossians to concentrate on temporal observances; in contrast, Paul instructs them to concentrate on the eternal realities of heaven. The Greek verb for set emphasizes an ongoing decision. Christians must continually discipline themselves to focus on eternal realities, instead of the temporal realities of this earth. A Christian's life is no longer dictated by this world but is hidden with Christ. The Greek word for hidden indicates that God has accomplished this in the past so that it is a present reality.

3:5–8 While obedience to rules cannot bring salvation, those who are saved ought to live worthy of that salvation. Thus, Paul gives the Colossians instructions concerning proper conduct. He states in negative and positive terms the kind of life that God wants Christians to live. Although the believers at Colosse were once captivated by the evil practices listed in vv. 5, 8, 9, they were to abandon such practices.

False Teaching at Colosse

Good truths are often corrupted. The apostle Paul spent much of his time battling false teachers who came behind him and added their own "spin" to the gospel. He wrote to the Christians at Colosse partly to correct a heresy about God and spirituality that had begun to take root there.

Even at this early stage in the church's life, before any heresies had developed far enough to be labeled with names, Jewish mysticism, Jewish legalism, and Greek philosophy had mixed in with true Christian doctrine. The kind of doctrine that was infecting Colosse would eventually be called Gnosticism. This was a prominent Christian heresy in the second and third centuries. Gnosticism taught that special knowledge was needed for a soul to break from the physical realm into the spiritual realm. As this false doctrine developed, it claimed that salvation could only be obtained through such special knowledge. In this way the Gnostics replaced faith with intellect.

Gnosticism followed the Greek philosophy that matter was inherently evil. Only nonphysical, "spiritual" realities were good. Hence, Gnostics did not believe that God created the world or that Christ came in a physical body. According to the Gnostics, an angel or secondary god created the material universe. Paul corrected this error in Colosse by stating clearly that Christ is the Creator and Sustainer of all, the supreme Head over the church and over all other authorities.

Gnosticism affected a person's morality in one of two ways. One tendency was indulgence. This sort of Gnostic reasoned that since the body was evil and the spirit was good, nothing done by the body could harm the spirit. These Gnostics tended to give in to every sensual desire, denying themselves nothing. They believed that because they had God's grace and because the physical body was of no account, they could do whatever they wanted with their bodies. The apostle John dealt with this type of Gnosticism in 1 John, as did Paul in 1 Corinthians.

The second moral outcome of Gnosticism was asceticism. Ascetics reasoned that because the body is bad, it should be denied every pleasure. They hoped that denial of the body would elevate the spirit. Paul's opponents at Colosse were ascetics. They found legalism alluring, and the strict Jewish laws (2:16) meshed easily with their harsh, self-denying rituals. Paul warned his readers that such rituals are useless and have no spiritual value (2:20–23).

The main problem with the heresy at Colosse was its denial of who Christ is. These false teachers denied that Jesus is the Creator who came in the flesh, that He is God who became man. Their rejection of the deity of Christ led them to seek salvation through their intellect or through the abuse of one's body. Such efforts served only to hide the truth, that salvation is found only in Christ.

3:9 The analogies between the old man and our old sinful ways and the new man and our new lives in Jesus Christ parallel Paul's discussion in Rom. 6 about dying to sin and living for Christ. The two words old man and new man do not refer to the Christian's fleshly and spiritual natures. Instead, Paul describes our former unredeemed life as the old man, and our life as God's child as the new man. The new man has the image of the new creation in Christ, just as the old man bears the image of our fallen nature. The old man is under an old master, Satan, while the new man has a new master, the Spirit of God living within.

3:10 and have put on the new man: Have clothed yourselves with the new man. The new man is the person you are after having been saved. The new man is received from Christ at the time of the second birth, and is the regenerated man, the new nature. renewed: This present passive participle (Gr anakaineo) indicates constantly being renewed. This is a continuous process; the new man has not yet matured and is ever in the state of development.

3:11 barbarian: In the Roman Empire a person who did not speak Greek was despised. Scythian: An uncultured person who came from the area around the Black Sea. Greek … Jew … slave … free: This list is similar to the list in Gal. 3:28. In both places the point is not the functions of the persons in the body of Christ, but equal acceptance of all the groups into God's family.

3:12 elect of God: God calls all people to salvation; those who accept are the elect from the foundation of the world (compare Eph. 1:3–14). They become God's own special people. As God is holy, we who are beloved by God must be holy and put on His characteristics. Exploitation of others was the old way of life; the new must be characterized by concern.

3:13 A forgiving spirit is an essential characteristic for one who has been forgiven by Christ.

3:14 But above all these things: On top of all these things, like an outer garment. put on love: Love is the basis and cloak of all the graces (1 Cor. 13:13). bond: The bond that binds the others together. perfection: This means completeness, full grown, mature.

“peace”

(Gk. eirene) (1:2; 3:15; Eph. 2:17; Phil. 1:2; 4:7) Strong’s #1515; rule (Gk. brabeuo) (3:15) Strong’s #1515; 1018: The Greek term eirene has a variety of meanings, including “unity,” “tranquility,” and “concord,” and corresponds to the Hebrew word shalom, which primarily means “wholeness.” In the NT, the Greek word is used for a harmonious relationship between people (Rom. 14:19), the order produced by a ruling government (Acts 24:2), and the reconciliation between God and a person through the saving work of Christ (Eph. 2:17). In 3:15, Paul encourages the believers to let “the peace of God rule” in their hearts. The Greek word for rule means “to act as umpire” or “to arbitrate.” The peace of God should act as our umpire when anger, envy, and other such passions arise in our hearts.

3:15 The peace of God rules in our hearts when we are completely surrendered to God’s will, and thus our whole being is unified in obedience to Him. Christ’s reconciling work makes this surrender possible.

3:16 Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly is apparently a parallel thought to Paul’s statement in Eph. 5:18 where he says to be “filled with the Spirit.” Both here and in Ephesians, the result of being “filled” with the Spirit or the word of Christ is singing (Eph. 5:19–21). The psalms are the psalms found in the OT, the “songbook” of the early church as well as of Israel. The hymns would be the songs of the church that reflected the new truth in Christ. Examples of such hymns are found in 1:15–20; Phil. 2:5–11; l Tim. 3:16. Spiritual songs may have been other kinds of songs praising God.

3:17 In this verse, Paul sums up how Christians should live. We should commit everything we do or say to Jesus and continually thank God for all His good gifts (Eccl. 12:13, 14).

3:18—4:1 These verses show Christians how to do everything in the home “in the name of the Lord Jesus” (v. 17). All members of the household are responsible to Christ. There are three balanced pairs of exhortations: to wives and husbands (3:18, 19); to children and fathers (3:20, 21); and to servants and masters (3:22—4:1).

3:18, 19 Based on the kind of Christian life to which believers are called, Paul gives some practical guidance. General applications like “be good" or "love everybody" are very difficult to follow, so Paul seeks to apply moral truths to the daily lives of the Colossians (Eph. 5:21—6:9). The Colossian home would usually consist of father, mother, children, and servants. Paul gives instructions to each group. The first is for wives to submit. The word submit is a military term meaning to "arrange oneself under another" and indicates a voluntary submission, not an unthinking obedience. It is clear that submission does not denigrate the one who submits. The husband is commanded to love his wife (Eph. 5:25 says as Christ loved the church). In his headship, he is to seek her highest good, not his own welfare. He is to honor her and be considerate of her, and not to be bitter or harsh.

3:20, 21 Children and fathers also have admonitions from the apostle. Children are to obey. Yet the all things should not be taken as an absolute. When God's truth and anyone's demands come into conflict, a child should obey God. Furthermore, a father should be careful not to frustrate his children or discourage them. Regulations should be reasonable, not arbitrary. The father should train his children the same way God disciplines and teaches him.

3:22–25 Bondservants, obey … your masters: The question of slaves and masters may appear to be out-of-date and inapplicable to modern society, but on second glance there are important principles in this passage. Even though slavery might not be officially condoned or practiced today, the admonition to work hard as though one was working for God, and not people, applies to employees. the reward of the inheritance: The strong motivation to serve someone well is found in the future reward that Christ gives to those who are faithful in this service. We normally think we receive eternal rewards for spiritual practices like reading the Bible, prayer, or evangelism. Here Paul asserts that all work done to the honor of Christ will bring an eternal reward (1:22, 23; 2:18).

4:1 Masters: Paul does not concern himself only with servants or employees. Employers also have a duty not to take advantage of employees. Instead they should offer a just wage, proper benefits, and adequate rest. In contemporary societies, many of these benefits are required by government regulations. But how much better when Christian employers treat their employees well for the Lord's sake, knowing that they too have a Master in heaven.

4:2 Paul encourages the Colossians to be diligent in thanksgiving and prayer, especially praying for himself and his coworkers as they worked at spreading the gospel. Even the apostle Paul requested and needed the prayers of others to support him.

4:3 Even while in prison, Paul felt his need of prayer for God to open … a door—an opportunity to spread the gospel. the mystery of Christ: The Good News of salvation for all which can be known and experienced only through Christ.

4:4 that I may make it manifest: Paul's chief concern is to make the message clear and plain. as I ought to speak: As it is my duty; as it is necessary for me to speak (1 Cor. 2:4; 2 Cor. 2:14, 17).

4:5 Walk in wisdom toward those who are outside: Early Christians were often viewed with suspicion, distrust, and disdain. They were considered atheists because they would not worship the gods of Rome and Greece. Many labeled them as unpatriotic because they would not burn incense before the image of the emperor. Some accused the early Christians of participating in orgies because of their talk of "love feasts" (Jude 12). Others harbored suspicions that Christians were really cannibals, who ate and drank the blood and the body of the Lord. With such misrepresentations of Christian belief and practice running rampant, it was very important for misunderstandings to be dispelled by the virtuous and impeccable lives of Christian believers.

4:6 Let your speech always be with grace: Christ was full of grace and truth (John 1:14). Christians are to be gracious, pleasant, attractive, winsome, and courteous. seasoned with salt: Not insipid, not flat, not dull, not tasteless. Christians are to have an edge of liveliness, and to be marked by purity, wholesomeness, and hallowed pungency. that you may know … answer each one: In order that we can adapt the message to the situation and speak appropriately to each and every person.

4:7, 8 Tychicus was an intimate friend of Paul's who came from the province of Asia. He had accompanied Paul on part of the third missionary journey. He probably delivered this letter and answered questions about Paul's condition in prison.

4:9 The slave Onesimus probably accompanied Tychicus to Colosse. Paul's letter to Philemon would have been carried along with the letter to the Colossians. It dealt with a personal situation between Philemon and his slave Onesimus, so Paul wrote a separate letter to him.

4:10–15 Paul greets a number of friends and introduces and commends several who work with him. The apostle's great warmth and true appreciation for his beloved coworkers comes through in these few verses. This should remind us that no one is an island. We all need the support of each other in the work of God. Aristarchus, a Jew from Thessalonica, had been traveling with Paul since the riot that occurred in Ephesus on his third missionary journey (Acts 19:29; 20:4). Evidently he remained with Paul even when he was imprisoned in Rome (27:2). Mark is the author of the Gospel of Mark. At the beginning of his second missionary journey, Paul had refused to take Mark with him (Acts 15:37–40). Evidently the two had been reconciled, for Paul commends him here and in 2 Tim. 4:11. Luke is the author of the Gospel of Luke and the Book of Acts. He accompanied Paul on many of his missionary journeys. Demas would later abandon Paul (2 Tim. 4:10).

(Gk. teleios) (1:28; 4:12; Rom. 12:2; Phil. 3:15; James 1:4) Strong's #5046: This Greek word is an adjective derived from the word telos, meaning "end," "limit," or "fulfillment." Paul uses telos to speak of Jesus Christ as the complete fulfillment of God's law (Rom. 10:4). In his letter to the Colossians, Paul uses teleios to speak of the completion or perfection of Christians (1:28; 4:12). The "perfect Christian" is a mature Christian, who has endured trials (James 1:4) and has learned to express God's love to others (3:14). By loving others, we not only are made complete in and through Christ but we also see God's love "perfected" in us (1 John 4:12). Just as Paul pressed on toward the goal of perfection (Phil. 3:12–14) to which Christ had called him, so we too should make perfection in Christ our goal, a goal that will be completely achieved when "that which is perfect" comes (1 Cor. 13:10).

4:16 There are numerous theories as to the identity of the Laodicean letter mentioned in this verse. Whether it is one of the other NT letters, like 1 or 2 Thessalonians or Ephesians, or whether it is a lost epistle probably cannot be determined.

4:17 And say to Archippus: He is mentioned in Philem. 2 in such a way as to suggest that he was a member of Philemon's household, probably his son. Take heed: Keep an eye on. you have received in the Lord: Archippus was called of the Lord, and most probably had some ministerial responsibility in the church at Colosse. that you may fulfill it: That you keep on filling to the full, discharge fully. This is a lifetime job. God does not discharge His servants.

4:18 This salutation by my own hand: The apostle dictated his letters to a secretary, but it was his custom to give a greeting in his own handwriting at the end (2 Thess. 2:1, 2; 3:17). This served to personalize and authenticate the letter.

The First Epistle to the Thessalonians

—————— NEARLY ALL NEW BELIEVERS HAVE QUESTIONS about their faith. As a seasoned missionary, Paul knew this. For this reason, he sent Timothy back to Thessalonica shortly after establishing the church there. Timothy's job was to find out how the young church was doing. When he returned, he was loaded down with their questions. First Thessalonians is Paul's patient reply. He reinforces the basic gospel message, instructs them further in the faith, and provides practical applications for spiritual truths.

First Thessalonians gives us an intimate introduction to how Paul mentored young believers. As this epistle demonstrates, his teaching for young converts was rich in doctrine and application, accurately describing salvation in its full dimensions.

In 1 Thessalonians, Paul reviewed some of the basics of the faith and applied these truths to the believers' lives. He challenged them to persevere in godly living despite persecution. He extended the comfort of the Resurrection to those who were in mourning, and he spoke about details of the Second Coming. In addition, Paul responded to the angry attacks of his Jewish opponents, who were jealous because Christians were drawing God-fearing Gentiles away from the local synagogue. Paul's opponents may have charged that his failure to return to Thessalonica proved that he was insincere. Paul devoted the first three chapters of his letter to correcting this false impression.

In a brief space Paul covered a wide spectrum of the essential doctrines of Christianity. These include such beliefs as the Trinity (1:5, 6), the deity of Christ (3:11, 12), the power of the Holy Spirit (1:5, 6), the nature of Scripture (2:13), the timing and the events of the Second Coming (1:10; 2:19; 3:13; 4:13–17; 5:23), the day of the Lord (5:1–3), assurance of salvation (1:5), conversion (1:9), sanctification (4:3; 5:23), the Resurrection (4:14–18), the relation of faith to works (1:3), the relation of love to service (1:3), and the relation of patience to hope (1:3).

Because 1 Thessalonians is one of Paul's earliest letters, it reveals much of what Paul preached during his second missionary journey. Evidently the return of Christ was central to his message, for Paul answers many questions about the Second Coming. In fact, perhaps the most significant doctrinal contribution of this small letter is its detailed explanation of Christ's return.

Paul's authorship of 1 Thessalonians has not been seriously questioned except by a few modern liberal scholars. Paul refers to himself as the author in the letter (1:1; 2:18), and the early church recognized him as such. The canon of Marcion lists 1 Thessalonians as being a work of Paul. Early church fathers such as Irenaeus, Tertullian, and Clement of Alexandria also acknowledged it as being by Paul.

The letter was probably written from Corinth around A.D. 51 and is considered to be one of Paul's earliest epistles. In fact, Galatians may be the only one written before it.

Thessalonica was one of the first cities to be evangelized by Paul and Silas when they landed on the continent of Europe. A divine vision of a man from Macedonia inviting Paul to preach the gospel had drawn the two missionaries to that region (Acts 16:9, 10). After preaching in Philippi, Paul traveled another one hundred miles to Thessalonica. This was a port city and commercial center located in the northwest corner of the Aegean Sea. The Egnatian Way linking Rome to Byzantium passed through it. This important highway and the thriving port made Thessalonica one of the wealthiest trade centers of the Roman Empire. It was the capital and the largest city of the province of Macedonia, with a population of about two hundred thousand.

Because of its strategic location, Thessalonica became a base for the spread of the gospel in Macedonia and Greece. This was Paul's plan. A church planted in a geographic center would become the evangelistic hub for the surrounding region. Evidently this was especially true of Thessalonica, for Paul commends them for their evangelistic work (1:8).

Paul started the Thessalonian church by preaching for three Sabbath days in the Jewish synagogue. He had great success, not only among the Jews but also among God-fearing Greeks. But some Jews who rejected Paul's message and were envious of his success hired thugs to attack him. When Paul could not be found, the Jews brought the owner of the house where Paul was staying, Jason, before the magistrates. They charged him with treason because he was harboring someone who was teaching that there was another king, Jesus. The magistrates took a bond from Jason and let him go. Consequently, Paul and Silas considered it best to leave immediately, and went to the next important town, Berea. Here they also had a good reception. But when the Jews in Thessalonica heard of it, they went there to stir up more opposition to Paul and Silas. Paul moved on to Athens. After a brief stay there, he went to Corinth, where he was joined by Silas and Timothy (Acts 18:5). Concerned about the welfare of the Thessalonian converts, Paul sent Timothy back to Thessalonica to see how the believers were doing.

After a brief, encouraging ministry in Thessalonica, Timothy rejoined Paul in Corinth and brought a good report of the faithfulness of the Thessalonians even under persecution. They did have some questions about the faith, and Paul undertook to answer these.

Commentary

1:1 Paul follows the customary form of ancient letters, giving the writer first, the destination second, and a brief greeting third. Paul mentions Silvanus, Silas's Roman name, and Timothy, but he is the writer of the epistle (4:9). When Paul uses the pronoun we (v. 2), he may be referring to Silas and Timothy as editors with him of the letter. After Paul separated from Barnabas (Acts 15:36–40), Silas became Paul's traveling companion on the second missionary journey, and he may have served as Paul's secretary. He was a leader of the Jerusalem church (Acts 15:22, 23), and he accompanied Paul and Barnabas to Antioch to deliver the decree of the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15:22, 23). He and Paul suffered a beating at Philippi (Acts 16:22–24), and he had helped found the church at Thessalonica (Acts 17:1–4). Timothy was also with Paul on the second missionary journey. Paul considered him like a son and loved him dearly (Acts 16:3; 1 Tim. 1:2). This letter is a response to Timothy's report from the church in Thessalonica. To the church: The Greek word ekklesia was a familiar term meaning any gathering or assembly. In its NT usage this common Greek word calls to mind the relationship of believers to one another and to Christ. Note that Paul addresses the believers at Thessalonica as a body, and not as individual believers. In the early church, belief in Christ always led to joining a fellowship of believers, the body of Christ (Acts 2:42–47; 1 Cor. 12:27). The expression grace to you and peace, though similar to common salutations, eloquently expresses the main concepts of the Christian faith. The word grace means "unmerited favor and blessing," and the word peace describes the relation Christians have with God and should cultivate with other people. The order of the two terms in the greeting is always maintained in the NT, since God's grace is the only basis for His people's peace.

1:2 prayers: Continuing the pattern of the Jerusalem church, these early church planters gave themselves to prayer as well as to preaching the gospel (Acts 6:4). As in other cities, they had suffered labor pains in giving birth to the church at Thessalonica, and the infant church at Thessalonica was deeply ingrained in their hearts (2:13, 17; 3:5, 6).

Work, Labor, and Patience

It's easy to see Paul's emphasis on faith, hope, and love, the trinity of Christian virtues (1 Thess. 1:3). But notice the words that precede these qualities: work of faith, labor of love, and patience of hope. These are marketplace terms. Christians in the workplace understand that useful results come only from hard work, diligent labor, and patience. The same is true in spiritual growth. (Heb. 6:9–12 mentions these same values.) 1:3 remembering: Paul's vivid memory of the spiritual excellence of the Thessalonians brings forth the apostle's first use of the triad of faith, love, and hope, which gives the immediate cause and substance of their ceaseless prayers. Notice that it is not the virtues alone that gain his attention, but how they are directed toward Christ. The faith of the believers at Thessalonica had produced true repentance. When they turned to God, they turned away from idols (v. 9). Note that Paul views the Thessalonians' repentance as a result of their faith, not vice versa. labor of love: The Thessalonians' love for Christ resulted in serving (v. 9) in the midst of persecution (v. 6). Note the contrast between work and labor. Whereas work may be pleasant and stimulating, labor often involves strenuous effort to the point of fatigue and even exhaustion. patience of hope: The believers at Thessalonica fixed their hope solidly on the return of Jesus Christ (v. 10). Notice that each of the virtues has Christ as its object. Jesus is constantly the focus. This is a good standard for evaluating any Christian service: Does it glorify Christ?

1:4 knowing … your election: The missionaries gave thanks not only for the good works arising from the Thessalonians' faith (v. 3), but more importantly for what God had done for them. God had chosen them to be His holy people. In vv. 5–10, Paul lists the indisputable proof of their election by God: their joyful response to the gospel, their strong faith, and their progress in holiness. God had graciously chosen them, a clear reason to rejoice (v. 2; Eph. 1:3–14).

1:5 Paul does not define his gospel at this point, but he had preached it clearly when he was with them: for three weeks he had "reasoned with them from the Scriptures, explaining and demonstrating that the Christ had to suffer and rise again from the dead" (Acts 17:2, 3). This message of a crucified Christ was far different from the messianic expectations that Paul knew from his own training as a Pharisee. The Jews of that day were not looking for a suffering savior but a conquering champion. Thus, Paul had to demonstrate from the OT Scripture that the prophets had foretold the suffering, death, and resurrection of the Messiah. not … in word only, but also in power: Paul did not neglect a careful, precise, and persuasive use of the Scriptures in his preaching. But he realized that apart from the convicting work of the Holy Spirit, no one could or would turn to Christ (John 16:8). But with God's blessing, Paul's preaching persuaded some of the Jews in the synagogue, together with "a great multitude of the devout Greeks, and not a few of the leading women" (Acts 17:4).

1:6 followers of us and the Lord: Everyone needs teachers, especially new converts. At times, Paul encouraged new believers to imitate him (1 Cor. 11:1) as he was imitating Christ. All the writers of the NT lead their readers back to the footprints of Christ as shown in the Gospels (Phil. 2:5; Heb. 12:2; 1 Pet. 2:21; 1 John 2:6). This should be our goal also, to lead others to Christ by our own virtuous example. As we focus on Jesus, we will reflect His image to others (2 Cor. 3:18). Having received is not the usual word for reception, but a word expressing a warm welcome. The Thessalonians seized the gospel with joy, even if it meant facing persecution.

(Gk. tupos) (1:7; 1 Cor. 10:6; 2 Thess. 3:9; 1 Pet. 5:3) Strong’s #5179: The Greek word tupos is derived from a root meaning “strike” or “hit.” It means an impression left by a blow, and by extension a “type,” “example” or “model.” The members of the church at Thessalonica made it a model for the other churches in the region. Thessalonica was not only the largest city in Macedonia and the capital of the province but also the center of evangelistic activity in the region. The extraordinary perseverance of the members of that church was held up as exemplary or typical of what a church should be.

1:7 The effect of the gospel was so powerful that the Thessalonians became examples to the whole province of Macedonia, of which their town was the capital. The word examples (Gk. tupos) is singular in the original and refers not to a number of individual examples of Christian living, but rather to the single pattern of response to the Word. It was this willingness to obey the Good News and believe in Christ as the Messiah promised in the OT that Paul praised.

1:8 Your faith … has gone out: Testimony of the Thessalonians’ remarkable faith rang out throughout Greece and Macedonia. Since Thessalonica was a port city and was on the much-traveled Egnatian Way, those who saw the virtuous life and persistent faith of the Thessalonian Christians would spread the word throughout the entire region. The same had occurred at the Jerusalem church (Acts 6:7); that is, vital Christian living was making an impact on the people who lived in and traveled through the city.

1:9 they themselves declare concerning us: These reports were not from missionaries but from ordinary travelers who were giving their impressions of the Thessalonian believers. turned to God from idols: The truth of the gospel exposed the falsehood of idolatry. Since Jews avoided idolatry, Paul was primarily speaking to a Greek audience (Acts 17:4).

1:10 to wait for His Son: Paul hoped for the Lord’s return to occur at any moment. The phrase to wait for pictures an eager and expectant looking forward to the return of our Lord Jesus who delivers us from the wrath to come. This is a future deliverance, but this verse does not make clear whether Paul is referring to a specific time or to the outpouring of God’s wrath on unbelievers in a more general sense. The general teaching of 1 Thessalonians would favor the former. Because Christ endured God's wrath at Calvary, all who are in Christ will escape all aspects of God's wrath (5:9). Thus, they have nothing to fear.

2:1–12 A person's ministry will not be in vain (v. 1) if he has pure motives (v. 3), if he seeks God's approval (vv. 4–6), and if he loves his people with a mother's self-giving love (vv. 7–9) and a father's encouraging and correcting love (vv. 10–12).

2:1, 2 Paul's motives for coming to Thessalonica had apparently been attacked after he left by pagan Gentiles and by Jews clinging to their traditional faith. Paul pointed out what the Thessalonians knew, that he had not preached to them in vain (1:9) but had declared his message in the face of opposition, including the painful experience of being beaten and put in the stocks in Philippi (Acts 16:22–24). Only the unbelievers questioned Paul's motives in an attempt to undermine the faith of the Thessalonian Christians. Paul's response is to let the record speak for itself. Paul's response is so different than ours. Even a simple criticism or a disgusting look can pour cold water on our witnessing. May God help us to tell the good news of God in Christ in spite of the persecution we encounter.

2:3, 4 Answering criticism of his motives for preaching, Paul asserted that he used the truth, not error; his motives were pure, not from uncleanness; his presentation was in sincerity, not in deceit (a word used also of a fishing lure to catch fish, suggesting trickery). In contrast to these criticisms, Paul asserted that he and his coworkers were approved messengers, missionaries shown by testing to be genuine. Their ministry was not their personal choice, but God's appointment.

2:5–8 Paul denied that in his visit to the Thessalonians he had used flattery. Instead, he preached boldly that everyone was a sinner who needed to be saved by the grace of God. His preaching did not serve as a cloak for covetousness, that is, as a mask to hide greed. Here he appeals to God as his witness because no person could examine his motives. Moreover, he and his companions were not seeking praise or desiring positions of authority. Paul did not even exercise his right for financial support (1 Cor. 9:3–14; 2 Cor. 11:7–11). Instead, here as in Corinth he paid his own way. In contrast to the enemies' accusations, Paul and his companions had demonstrated their loving care for the Thessalonians. While a professional nurse would know how to provide for the physical needs of an infant, a mother cherishes her own children with maternal love. Paul emphasizes the extent of his love: he would have sacrificed his own life for them if necessary.

2:9 Paul's affection for the Thessalonians was demonstrated by his labor. As in 1:3, this word indicates strenuous work that produces weariness and fatigue. Paul made tents to provide for his financial needs, working early and late, in order that he might not be a burden to his converts. Paul's actions showed that his ministry was motivated by an unselfish desire to promote the well-being of others rather than to advance his own needs.

2:10–12 In addition to their avoiding any need for financial support (v. 9), the morality and devotion to God demonstrated by Paul and his companions backed up their message. They both comforted and challenged the Thessalonians like a loving father (v. 7). Paul's ultimate goal for them was that they would walk worthy of God, or live in a way measuring up to the God they served. It seems an impossible standard. But Paul reminds the Thessalonians that God had called them for this purpose, and He would surely empower them, for "He who has begun a good work in you will complete it" (Phil. 1:6). Christians should have the same goals Paul had, of divine approval and the reward at the judgment seat of Christ (2 Cor. 5:9, 10).

2:13 Paul and his companions were thankful for the way the Thessalonians had welcomed the Word of God. effectively works: Gentile Christians in Thessalonica could contrast the pure Word of God, with its transforming effect, to the immoral pagan religions, which only perverted people even more. Likewise, Jewish believers could contrast the love and grace of God in the gospel to the legalism and pride often produced by the Jewish religion. What was true of the spoken Word of God in Thessalonica is also true of the written Word of God, which is "living and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword" (Heb. 4:12). Believe is present tense; they continued to believe. Those who keep on believing keep on receiving —a strong reminder of Jesus' word to Peter in John 14:1.

2:14 As the church in Judea had been persecuted by unbelieving Jews, so the Thessalonians were being persecuted by both Jews and Gentiles, and they became imitators of those in Judea (1:6). Sometimes suffering comes because of our own failures (1 Pet. 4:15), but these believers were suffering because they stood for God's truth (1 Pet. 4:16).

2:15 and have persecuted us: Paul tells the Thessalonians that they should not be surprised at suffering for Christ's sake, since fellow believers in Judea, including himself, had already suffered for the cause of the gospel.

Such hostility toward the church actually represents hostility toward Christ (read Christ's words to Paul in Acts 9:4, 5).

2:16 to fill up … their sins: The implication is that God will allow a nation, group, or individual to accumulate only a certain amount of sin before His judgment falls on them (Gen. 15:16). In this case, Paul says that the judgment is near. Just as walking in Christ will lead to complete salvation and a reward, the sins of the wicked will lead to ultimate punishment.

2:17, 18 Contrary to what Paul's accusers were asserting, Paul eagerly desired to return. But he may have been hindered (Dan. 10:13), among other things, by the bond that Jason had deposited for him (Acts 17:9). If Paul returned and a riot ensued, Jason's bond would have been forfeited (Acts 17:1–9). Having been taken away literally means "orphaned," as a parent is separated from a child 2:7, 2:11. Paul was heartbroken about being taken from them, especially in their infancy in Christ. The many expressions of endearment in this letter indicate the genuine concern Paul had for these new converts.

2:19, 20 In spite of persecution and satanic opposition, Paul looked beyond the present trials (2 Cor. 4:16–18) to the joy of being in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ and being with the Thessalonian Christians who had found the Lord through him. The Thessalonians would be Paul's crown (the wreath presented to the winner of Greek athletic contests) because they would prove the genuineness of his work for Christ.

3:1 When forced to leave Thessalonica, Paul and Silas went to Berea, the next city west of Thessalonica. The Jews in Thessalonica who opposed Paul, upon learning that he was at Berea, went there also and stirred up opposition. Paul's friends then escorted him south to Athens (Acts 17:13–15). There Paul left word for Silas and Timothy to join him. But before they arrived, Paul left for Corinth, a short distance west of Athens.

IN CONTEXT

Painful Experiences

Thessalonica proved to be a hostile environment for the gospel. Not only did Paul and Silas have to leave the city prematurely, but their opponents followed them to Berea and created problems for them there (Acts 16:35—17:15).

Paul reminded his Thessalonian friends that they had become believers "under fire" (2:14). He had tried to strengthen their young faith with warnings about the suffering they would experience (3:4). But he was concerned about the survival of the church because he had had so little time to lay a solid foundation there.

Paul decided to take action. He traveled alone to Athens while Timothy traveled to Thessalonica to "establish" and "encourage" (3:2) the Christians there, and then undoubtedly to bring fresh news to Paul from that church. Paul based his first letter to the Thessalonians on the encouraging report he received from Timothy.

The Thessalonian experience illustrates a key aspect of the spread of the gospel. The truth takes root in resistant soil. When the "tempter" (3:5) cannot prevent the Good News from bringing life to someone, his tactic changes in order to make the young Christian ineffective. Pressure and persecution are inevitable. They may come camouflaged as vague cultural disapproval, or they may be open hostility, but in one way or another spiritual growth will always meet resistance.

Persecution is demoralizing, but it can also be a cause for taking heart. Without resistance, how can growth be recognized? Trials and tribulations test character (James 1:2–4). Absence of pressure may indicate a lack of growth. Paul's encouraging words still ring true today. The fellowship that comes from suffering together promotes Christian maturity (2:14–16; 3:3, 7).

3:2 Because Paul himself could not go to Thessalonica, he sent Timothy in his place. Apparently Silas went back to Philippi, their first stop in Macedonia. Paul sent Timothy to strengthen the church at Thessalonica and to encourage them concerning their faith. The Thessalonians, now that they were saved, needed to be built up in the faith and fortified against the ever-present opposition. Because Timothy was young and lacked the maturity of Paul, a special word of commendation was expressed for him as a brother in Christ, and more importantly as a minister of God, and a fellow laborer in the gospel. Paul showed his strong confidence in Timothy by sending him, not only to the Thessalonians, but later to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 16:10, 11) and to the Philippians (Phil. 2:19–23).

3:3, 4 Difficulties are to be expected in the Christian life, and Paul had warned the congregation of their coming afflictions. The Scripture teaches that those who live godly lives should expect persecution (2 Tim. 3:12). In fact, Christ warned His disciples that they would experience the same type of rejection He had experienced (John 15:18–21). Suffering from persecution should not cause Christians to be downcast. Instead they should rejoice that they have been considered worthy of sharing in Christ's sufferings (Matt. 5:10–12).

3:5–8 our labor might be in vain: Paul was concerned that the Thessalonians might succumb to the temptations of Satan and forsake their Christian faith. if you stand fast: Paul's joy was based on the Thessalonians' faithfulness to Christ.

3:6 But now that Timothy has come to us from you: The sense of the original here is that Timothy has just now arrived with the news when Paul sat down to write. This clearly shows the occasion and purpose of the letter. When Timothy arrived, his news was good; so good in fact, that brought us good news is the same word often translated "preach the gospel." Paul was glad to hear of their faith and love, and the fact that they had wanted to see him just as much as he had wanted to see them.

3:7, 8 therefore, brethren … we were comforted (Gk. parakaleo). This is again the word that means "help" or "encourage." Another translation has, "we have been encouraged about you." The encouragement was badly needed. Paul was himself in affliction and distress. Both of these words are strong. The first (Gk. ananke) is related to the word from which we get "anxiety," while the second (Gk. thlipsis) means "rubbing" or "pressure," and is the word often translated in the NT as "tribulation." The thing that gave Paul the needed encouragement was the faith of these converts.

3:9 Paul made prayer a priority. In his prayers, he did not forget to thank God for what He was doing. Christians should follow Paul's example by offering praise and thanksgiving along with their petitions.

3:10 Paul’s desire to see the Thessalonians was not primarily to satisfy his own love and emotion but to perfect, or complete, their own faith. There is always room for improvement. The Thessalonians’ endurance under persecution demonstrated the growth of their faith, but Paul wanted them to mature in it.

“coming”

(Gk. parousia) (3:13; 4:15; 5:23; 2 Thess. 2:1, 8; 2 Pet. 1:16) Strong’s #3952: The Greek word parousia literally means “presence.” The word was commonly used in NT times to describe the visitation of royalty or of some other important person. Thus, the word signals no ordinary “coming.” The NT writers also use the word to describe Christ’s second coming, when He will return to earth in His ultimate, glorious visitation as the King over all.

3:11–13 Christ had told His disciples that His followers would be identified by their love for one another (John 13:35). Here Paul prays that the Thessalonians would love each other more and more. Finally, Paul expresses his desire that their hearts would be blameless in holiness, not simply before people but before God. The word saints can refer both to saved people and to holy angels. Angels will participate in the Second Coming (4:16; Jude 14; Rev. 19:14).

4:1, 2 Finally does not mean that Paul was coming to a conclusion but serves as a transition to the main section of the letter, addressing doctrine and its application to life. In the first three chapters Paul dealt with the readers as a "nursing mother" gently cares for her children (2:7). Now in these last two chapters he urges and charges them with the authority of a father (4:1, 2). Paul commonly uses the word walk as a description of a Christian life (Rom. 6:4; 2 Cor. 5:7; Gal. 5:16; Col. 1:10; 2:6; 4:5). The Christian life not only begins with faith, but it continues as a daily walk of faith. Just as people are dependent on their limbs to support them in every step, so Christians walk in dependence on God. As walking has a direction, so does the Christian life. Christians are not to walk like unsaved Gentiles (Eph. 4:17); instead, they are to walk worthy of their calling from God (Eph. 4:1). John exhorts Christians to walk in the light, that is, in the revealed will of God (1 John 1:7).

“sanctification”

(Gk. hagiasmos) (4:3, 4, 7; Rom. 6:19, 22; 1 Cor. 1:30; 2 Thess. 2:13; Heb. 12:14) Strong’s #38: The Greek term for sanctify means to “set apart” for God’s special use, to make distinct from what is common—hence, to be made like God who is distinct from all else and therefore holy. The Greek word for sanctify refers to a process that is perfect in principle though not yet attained. Though we are not yet completely holy, we stand in relation to God as though we were. This is indicated in Heb. 10:10, where the verb sanctified is in a tense that indicates the present result of a past action. Thus, Christ sanctified by His one sacrifice, and that sanctification has the lasting result that it continues to work in us, making us holy. Sanctification has been done once for all, but its effect still continues as stated in Heb. 10:14, in “those who are being sanctified.”

4:3–8 A major problem for the early church was maintaining sexual purity (1 Cor. 5:1, 9–11). Pagan religions often condoned sexual immorality as part of their rites, and ancient Roman culture had few sexual boundaries. In contrast, Paul strongly urged the Thessalonians not to participate in any sexual activity outside of marriage. He reminded them that the human body is God’s temple and should be kept holy (1 Cor. 6:18–20). The body should be honored as created by God and should be sanctified in keeping with its holy purpose. Believers should have a personal passion for sexual purity that surpasses the passion that the world has for sexual experiences. Sexual involvement outside of marriage dishonors God, one’s marriage partner or future spouse, and even one’s own body. There is always a price to pay, for God often allows Christians to reap what they sow.

4:6–8 that no one should take advantage of and defraud his brother in this matter: Several words need explanation here. First, take advantage of means quite literally “to overstep” or “break laws.” In this context it obviously means to break this moral law. Secondly, if he does break this moral law, a man will, by that very fact, defraud (Gk. pleonekteo) his brother. This word denotes “robbing,” or “cheating someone” through greed. A comment is also needed on the phrase in this matter. The construction in the original language of the NT (an article of previous reference) allows only one meaning here. It is not just any matter that is in view, but specifically this matter which has just been mentioned—unethical sexual activity. The sense of the passage is that when a man does not live with his own wife as he should, but instead commits adultery with someone else's, he must know that he has violated, or "robbed" his brother by so doing, and that he deserves the vengeance of God. To show the seriousness of his sin, Paul alludes to Ps. 94:1 where God is called the God of vengeance. Note that according to v. 7, this kind of conduct is the opposite of holiness and is called uncleanness. To be sanctified according to God's will must mean to be pure or clean in this matter. Rejecting holiness is rejecting God and the ministry of the Holy Spirit within us.

Sexual Immorality

Even though the Thessalonians were living in a sexually charged culture, the apostle Paul urged them to "abstain from sexual immorality" (4:3). According to the Bible, what exactly is sexual immorality? The following is a quick summary.

What is sexual immorality?

The Greek word used by Paul is the term from which we get the English word pornography (4:3). It is a broad term, encompassing any illicit sexual activity.

What specific sexual activities does Scripture prohibit?

• Lust may be a strong desire for anything. But in sexual contexts, lust is defined as "the sinful desire for illicit sex." Lust is forbidden by Scripture because it gives birth to sin, which leads to death (4:5; Matt. 5:28; Rom. 13:13; James 1:14, 15; 1 Pet. 4:3).

• Adultery is extramarital sex. It is strictly condemned in the Scriptures. The seriousness of this sin is demonstrated by its inclusion in the Ten Commandments (Ex. 20:14) and by its warranting the death penalty under OT law (Lev. 20:10). Proverbs states that it "destroys" the guilty party's soul (Prov. 6:32).

• Incest, sex with a close relative other than one's spouse, is prohibited and said to be worthy of the sentence of death (Lev. 18:6–18; 20:11, 12, 17; Deut. 27:20, 22, 23).

• Homosexuality, sex with a person of one's own gender, is condemned in no uncertain terms in several OT and NT passages (Lev. 18:22; 20:13; Rom. 1:26, 27; 1 Cor. 6:9; 1 Tim. 1:10).

• Bestiality is sex with an animal. This sexually deviant behavior is outlawed in the Bible. It was punished with death in ancient Israel (Ex. 22:19; Lev. 18:23; 20:15, 16; Deut. 27:21).

Does the Bible take a prudish view of sex?

No. Sex within marriage is viewed as a good gift from God to be enjoyed and celebrated by both husband and wife (Prov. 5:15–20; Heb. 13:4).

How can believers stay pure in an impure world?

• By living carefully according to God's Word (Ps. 119:9), and hiding it in our hearts (Ps. 119:11).

• By making the conscious choice not to lust (Job 31:1).

• By walking under the control of the Holy Spirit (Gal. 5:16–25).

• By fleeing sexual temptations and pursuing righteousness (2 Tim. 2:22).

4:9, 10 The Thessalonian believers already had a good record of loving one another, but Paul desired that love to increase more and more. This was the commandment of Jesus (John 13:34, 35; 15:12, 17) and is an important basis of evangelism. In a world that is filled with self-serving individuals, the genuine love of Christians should attract others to the faith.

4:11, 12 Summarizing his preceding instructions, Paul exhorted the Thessalonians believers to lead a quiet life, not referring to a lack of activity but rather to an inner quietness and peace befitting the Christian faith (2 Thess. 3:12; 1 Tim. 2:11). They should not be busybodies but should mind their own business. Usually people who are busy running other people's affairs do not run their own affairs well. A Christian's house should be in order as a testimony to others. Paul also exhorted the Thessalonians to work with their own hands as he had done among them (2:9). Possibly because of their enthusiasm for the coming of the Lord, some Thessalonians had become idle. They might also have been influenced by the general Greek abhorrence for physical labor. But Paul admonished the Christians to be dedicated and productive workers so that they might bring honor to Christ's name. Christians are to be dedicated, productive workers. Failure to work hard is a negative witness to the world. It also produces an unhealthy dependence on other believers. Paul had set a good example as a worker in his making of tents.

4:13 fallen asleep: This is a metaphor for dying. Though Paul had taught the Thessalonians about Christ's return when he was there, apparently Timothy had encountered further questions on the subject, possibly arising from the death of some of the new converts. In answer to these questions, Paul stated that he wanted them to be informed, and also to be comforted by the hope of seeing their loved ones again. This was a hope their pagan neighbors did not have.

4:14 This hope (v. 13) for the dead Christians was as certain as the fact of the death and resurrection of Christ. Paul says that God will bring with Him those who sleep in Jesus. Some have inferred from this statement that departed Christians are unconscious until the Second Coming. But the Bible indicates that to be absent from our present body is to be present with the Lord Jesus (5:10; 2 Cor. 5:8; Phil. 1:23). Accordingly, when a Christian dies, it is the body that sleeps; the soul goes to heaven. Thus when Christ returns, He will need to bring with Him from heaven to earth the souls of Christians who have died, confirming their previous residence in the presence of God. This return of Christ is also a physical and bodily return, though Christ is everywhere present in His deity (Matt. 28:20) and resides in the believer (John 14:23). This will be a crowning event as Christ comes physically from heaven to earth to receive the believers.

4:15 Paul believed that Christ could come in his lifetime, and so did the Thessalonians (1:10). precede those who are asleep: Evidently the Thessalonians were concerned that believers who had died would miss the glory associated with the return of Christ for the church. Paul answers their question by affirming that actually those who were dead would go before (v. 16) those living on earth.

4:16 Accompanying the descent of Christ from heaven will be the voice of an archangel, perhaps Michael, who is portrayed as the leader of the army of God (Dan. 10:13, 21; Jude 9; Rev. 12:7–9). The only other angel named in Scripture is Gabriel, who is given a prominent role as a messenger of God (Dan. 8:16; 9:21; Luke 1:19, 26). The archangel's voice will be one of triumph because of the great victory at the coming of Christ, culminating thousands of years of spiritual conflict with Satan. The final signal will be the trumpet of God. The three elements consisting of the shout of the Lord Himself, the voice of an archangel, and the trumpet of God will perhaps be separate events occurring in rapid succession. The doctrine of the Resurrection is a central doctrine of the Christian faith, including as it does the resurrection of Christ and, ultimately, the resurrection of all people. The answer to the question as to how the dead can be raised when the remains of their bodies are in some cases totally scattered is not a problem for a supernatural God who created the world. Clearly the Resurrection will be a physical resurrection in which bodily existence will be restored, as confirmed in 1 Cor. 15:51–53. The resurrected bodies of Christians will be like that of Christ (1 John 3:2), incorruptible and immortal, and yet they will be bodies of flesh and bone (Luke 24:39, 40; John 20:20, 25, 27). They all will be recognizable, as was the resurrected body of Christ.

IN DEPTH

Pictures of the End Time

The "voice of an archangel" and the "trumpet of God" (1 Thess. 4:16) emphasize the divine authority behind Paul's description of Jesus' return. The images and pictures Paul uses for the end time overlap with those of other Jews of his time, though he omits most elements found in contemporary Jewish descriptions. What Paul does describe especially matches Jesus' picture of the end time (trumpet, clouds, angels, times and seasons, sudden destruction).

Jewish readers familiar with the OT recognized the importance of trumpets for gathering the assembly, sometimes to battle. Gentile readers probably knew the Roman use of trumpets to gather troops or to send signals in battle. Most relevant, Jewish tradition, as emphasized in a daily synagogue prayer, portrayed the gathering of Israel in the end time as accompanied by the sounding of a trumpet.

The highest archangel, according to Jewish tradition, was Michael (Dan. 10:13), who was also the special patron for Israel. Each nation had a guardian angel, but Michael was especially powerful, as the guardian of God's chosen people. Jewish traditions sometimes gave Michael special prominence in the final battle, though, for Paul, Jesus fulfilled this function Himself (1 Thess. 4:16).

The "shout," conjoined with the trumpet, may picture the battle cry offered by a commander. The OT sometimes portrays God as a divine warrior, occasionally mentioning His battle cry (Is. 42:13).

Jesus' teaching about the end time (Matt. 24) is probably the background for Paul's own teaching, which he claimed was by "the word of the Lord" (1 Thess. 4:15). As Jesus described the coming Son of Man, He applied to Himself a variety of end-time descriptions that the OT and Judaism normally reserved only for God (Matt. 24:30, 31). Similarly, Paul applies these same descriptions to the coming Christ.

4:17 Living Christians will be caught up together with the other believers in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. (The English word rapture comes from the Latin verb meaning "caught up.") In the clouds probably refers to atmospheric clouds that also will attend the Second

Coming (Rev. 1:7), or it may be the resurrected multitudes who are referred to as a cloud (Heb. 12:1). In the Bible the Lord is often accompanied by clouds, signifying His glory (Pss. 68:4; 97:2). The important result is that we shall always be with the Lord.

4:18 The wonderful truth described (vv. 13–17) is to be a comfort to the Thessalonians and to all Christians. They had mistakenly thought that only those who were alive at the time of the coming of Christ would witness and share in the glory of it. The fact is that Christians who have died will be raised first and so go before the living to the gathering in the sky. Observe that Paul expects a practical, immediate response to this great doctrinal teaching of the Second Coming. The Thessalonians should remind one another of this truth as a source of comfort in the face of death. The sentence is in the present tense, indicating that it should be a constant comfort to us to think each day that the Lord may come.

5:1 But concerning: This expression characteristically introduces a different topic. From the discussion of the Rapture the apostle turns to the day of the Lord. the times and the seasons: This reminds us of the same expression used by our Lord in Acts 1:7. Times probably emphasizes quantity, duration, or measurement, whereas seasons draws attention to the quality, character, or critical nature of the times. no need that I should write: In the previous verses (4:13–18) Paul addressed a matter of ignorance; now he addresses a matter of knowledge. He is not informing as much as he is exhorting them to live in the light of what they already know.

5:2–11 In these verses Paul develops the topic of the day of the Lord. This expression was familiar to those who knew the Hebrew Scriptures. The day of the Lord in the OT was characterized by two phases: God's judgment against sinful people and God's eternal reign over His people. God's judgment will be a time of darkness and an expression of God's wrath (Joel 2:1, 2; Amos 5:18–20; Zeph. 1:14, 15). His reign will be a time of God's blessing (Is. 2:1–3; 11:1–9; 30:23–26; Zech. 14:1, 7–11, 20, 21; Matt. 19:28; Acts 3:19–21).

5:2 In contrast to the certainty in the previous paragraph of Christ's coming, Paul now deals with the uncertainty of the timing of the coming day of the Lord. This period is the subject of considerable prophecy in the OT (Is. 13:9–11; Joel 2:28–32; Zeph. 1:14–18; 3:14, 15). The Book of Joel as a whole is an exposition of the day of the Lord, describing it as a terrible time of judgment. In the OT, the phrase the day of the Lord is used for any period where God intervenes in judgment on the earth. There were "days of the Lord" predicted in the OT that have already been fulfilled (Amos 5:18). Here Paul uses the expression to refer to Christ's return and the coming judgment. thief in the night: The day of the Lord will come when no one expects it. The day of the Lord as a time period begins before the events of the day of the Lord come, as illustrated in an ordinary day beginning at midnight with few events signaling the beginning of the new day. But when daylight come and events begin to happen, it is clear that the day of the Lord comes. So it will be at the end time. When the Rapture occurs, there probably will not be immediate earth-shaking events, but in due time major events will take place which make clear that the day of the Lord has begun. These are mentioned in 2 Thess. 2 as the emergence of the man of sin (v. 3) and the removal of the restrainer of sin (v. 7). These two major events will make evident that the day of the Lord is underway, even though all the events will not happen at the same time.

5:3 when they say: Paul does not include himself and his readers among the they. Evidently he is speaking about unbelievers. The world will be absorbed in the cares of this life and will be lulled into a false sense of safety and security. Peace gives the idea of no feeling of alarm, and safety conveys an idea of security from external threats from God or people. The world will have turned a deaf ear to the repeated warnings of coming judgment. Paul uses the image of labor pains to stress the suddenness of the day of the Lord. A woman's first contraction comes suddenly and unexpectedly.

5:4, 5 But you, brethren: Though the day of the Lord will overtake the unsaved world unexpectedly, it will not overtake Christians, because they will be looking forward to and expecting it. In his characteristic style, Paul first addresses the readers' beliefs (vv. 1–5) and then their behavior (vv. 6–11). The fact that Christ could come at any moment should motivate unbelievers to accept His forgiveness and believers to live daily for Him.

5:6, 7 Because Christians are informed concerning future events, they should not be spiritually asleep but should watch and be sober. While every Christian is prepared to go to heaven in the sense of having been saved, not every Christian is prepared at every moment to present the quality of his or her spiritual life to God. Accordingly, this is a call to face the fact that our lives will be judged by Christ (Rom. 14:10, 11; 1 Cor. 3:11–15; 9:24–27; 2 Cor. 5:10).

5:8 In contrast to what unbelievers do, the Christian should be sober, living a disciplined life, not only free from drunkenness but alert to spiritual realities. The believer should put on the breastplate of faith. Here again is the familiar triad of faith, hope, and love, the basic essentials of a Christian life. In contrast to the unbelief of the world, with its love of self and of material wealth (1:3), Christians should place their faith in God and give their love to God and to other people. In addition to demonstrating faith and love, Christians should adopt the hope of salvation and live in the light of the Lord's return.

5:9, 10 Paul states that God did not appoint us (believers) to wrath (1:10). There will be wrath at the day of the Lord, but it will be God's wrath on the unbelieving world that has spurned and mocked Christ (Rev. 6:12–17). When we think about divine judgment, we should offer thanks to Christ for saving us from that horrible fate by dying for us. Whether we are still living at the coming of Christ, or whether we have died and our bodies are in the tomb, it is assured that we will live together with Him forever.

5:11 While the Rapture is an encouraging hope (4:18), so is the prospect of the Lord's return. Freedom from the judgments of the day of the Lord should be a constant encouragement. It is also a doctrine that will edify, or build one another up. Teaching on future events is designed by God to produce present results in the form of godly living (2 Pet. 3:11). Doctrinal truth is not intended just to satisfy our curiousity, but to change our lives.

5:12–19 Paul moves from his presentation of prophetic teaching to practical admonition. It is important that he has two different audiences in mind in giving his instruction. The "brethren" of v. 12 are the entire community of Christians at Thessalonica. They are to honor their leaders and to live with one another peacefully. The second "brethren" are the leaders of the congregation. They have several duties to the people to ensure the spiritual growth of the believers and to maintain order in the church. The leadership of the church can either cause God's people to glorify Christ and to grow spiritually or it can destroy the effectiveness of God's people. Not all division and difficulties facing the church today are caused by false teachers entering the church or contentious church members. Sometimes the leadership is not following the Spirit or heeding the admonition of the apostles concerning the manner for leading God's people (1 Pet. 5:2, 3).

5:12, 13 Significantly, Paul combines prophecy with practical teachings for the Christian life. God never intended prophecy as a field for academic debate but as a truth that would provide believers hope and direction in their lives. In vv. 12–22, Paul describes the characteristics of a person who is living in the light of Christ's imminent return. recognize those: Because everyone in the Thessalonian church was a recent convert, it may have been difficult for some to recognize the leadership of others. Paul teaches the Thessalonians submission rather than individualism and rejection of authority (Eph. 5:21). He emphasizes that the leaders' authority was from the Lord. Paul admonishes the believers to appreciate and submit to those congregational leaders. They should be held in high esteem because of the important work they were doing. At the same time, the believers were to work together in maintaining the peace among themselves. Notice the plural pronouns; the Thessalonians followed the pattern of the Jerusalem church and all NT churches by having more than one person in leadership (Acts 6:1–7).

IN CONTEXT

Helping the Needy

Paul begins the concluding words of his letter with four sharp exhortations (1 Thess. 5:14). The "unruly"—the lazy, the undisciplined, those looking for a free ride—need a bit of a jolt. (Paul later gave them one in 2 Thess. 3:6–12.) Those who are losing heart need encouragement. And everyone needs patience.

But Paul's third directive, "uphold the weak," has to do with one's responsibilities toward the poor. Wherever Scripture raises this issue, it challenges us to share at least some of our material wealth with people in desperate need. It is the only Christlike response there is.

Indeed, Christ serves as the ultimate model of compassion. He even staked His credibility on His work among the downtrodden and destitute when John the Baptist inquired as to whether He was the Christ.

Paul hardly needed to challenge the Thessalonian believers to be generous. He knew by experience that even though they lived in deep poverty, they were willing to give "beyond their ability" (2 Cor. 8:3) to help others in need.

5:14 The Thessalonians had to face the fact that some of them were not living as Christians should, but were unruly. They needed to be warned about their behavior. Some were fainthearted and needed comfort. The congregation should also uphold the weak and be patient toward all, recognizing that all Christians have faults. To be most effective in promoting positive change in people's lives, believers should respond to individuals according to each one's particular needs.

5:15 renders evil for evil: For a Christian to try to get revenge is a denial of basic Christian love (Rom. 12:17; 1 Pet. 3:9), and it goes against Jesus' teaching (Matt. 5:38–42; 18:21–35).

5:16 Regardless of difficult circumstances (3:2, 3), a Christian always has grounds for rejoicing. The Lord is a sovereign ruler and will accomplish His purpose. Christian joy is not based on circumstances but on a growing awareness of God and the certain future of eternal life with Christ (Rev. 21:1–7).

5:17 Paul exhorts the Thessalonians to maintain a faithful prayer life like his own (1:2, 3; 2:13; Rom. 1:9, 10; Eph. 6:18; Col. 1:3; 2 Tim. 1:3). Praying without ceasing does not mean praying constantly, but being persistent and consistent in prayer.

5:18 Thankfulness should characterize the Christian life in every circumstance, not thanks for everything but thanks in everything. Paul emphatically states this is the will of God. An OT example of this was when Job lost his money, his children, and his health. He blessed the name of God in spite of his personal tragedies, not because of them. Nothing speaks more powerfully of a walk with God than continuous thankfulness.

5:19, 20 To quench the Spirit means to resist His influence, like trying to smother a fire. One of the fundamental rules of walking with God is that we should not say no to the Spirit of God.

5:21, 22 It is difficult to determine the eternal value of much in our modern world. Christians are told to test all things. This takes time and a system of values. That which survives the test should be held fast. Verses 12–22 provide numerous characteristics of a person who is living in the light of Christ's imminent return.

(Gk. pneuma) (5:23; Luke 8:55; 1 Cor. 5:5) Strong’s #4151; soul (Gk. psuche) (5:23; Eph. 6:6; Phil. 1:27) Strong’s #4151; 5590; body (Gk. soma) (5:23; Matt. 6:22; Heb. 4:12) Strong’s #4151; 5590; 4983: This is the only place in the NT where the tripartite being of a person is implied. Yet in this passage, all three constitute a person in his or her entirety. The spirit enables a person to contact the divine Spirit and is that part of a person that the Spirit quickens at the time of regeneration (John 3:6; Rom. 8:16). The Greek word psuche translated soul, means “life.” The NT writers use this word to speak of a person’s personality or inward, animating essence. Finally, the NT writers identify the body, a person’s physical being, as separate from one’s soul or spirit. As this verse indicates, God works from the inside out, sanctifying our entire being so that we can live with Him forever.

5:23 Paul’s prayer for the Thessalonians is that they may be sanctified in all aspects of their life, spirit, soul, and body. Every part of a Christian’s life should bear evidence that he or she is set apart as holy to God. This will result in being blameless at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Christians are already saints in the sense that they have been set apart to God. Paul exhorts the Thessalonians to express holiness in this life so that the Lord would approve of their conduct upon His return. Blameless does not mean sinless, but free from causes for reproach and regret.

5:24 As a believer pursues the Christian life, he can be assured that God is faithful and that he cannot do it himself but that God will do it.

5:25 pray for us: Paul was faithful in prayer for the Thessalonians, but he also recognized the need and importance of their prayers for him.

5:26 Greeting one another with a holy kiss on the cheek was customary, something like our modern handshake. It could have had more significance than just a handshake, signifying spiritual reconciliation.

“epistle”

(Gk. epistole) (5:27; 2 Cor. 3:1–3; 2 Thess. 2:2, 15; 2 Pet. 3:1, 16) Strong’s #1992: This Greek word has come into English as epistle. It signifies a written letter, whether personal correspondence (such as 2 and 3 John; 2 John 12; 3 John 13), or official correspondence (such as Acts 15:23–29; 23:26–30), or a formal treatise (such as Romans; Rom. 16:22). Sometimes letters of recommendation were sent along with emissaries in order to establish their credentials among those they were visiting. In 2 Cor., Paul called the believers in Corinth his epistles, or his living letters of recommendation from God (2 Cor. 3:1–3). Here Paul exhorts the Thessalonians to read his letter to the entire church so that everyone could profit from its teaching.

5:27 This epistle was not a private letter. It was meant for all the Christians at Thessalonica—and for us.

5:28 The greatest benediction Paul could express is that the grace of Jesus Christ would be with them. Christians are saved by grace and live by grace, enjoying undeserved blessing from their loving God.

The Second Epistle to the Thessalonians

A SIMPLE PHONE CALL COULD HAVE CLEARED UP some of the problems encountered by believers in the early church. But of course there were no telephones in the ancient world. Paul had to be personally tracked down wherever he was and given a letter with questions. The apostle then had to dictate his response and have someone hand-deliver a letter in return. Because of the distances and slow modes of transportation, this process took weeks or even months. The intervening time span often allowed false beliefs to spread or become ingrained in new churches. Second Thessalonians is an example of just such a situation. Paul had to write this letter to correct false ideas about the Second Coming that had arisen in that church.

Paul had encountered stiff opposition when he first preached the gospel in Thessalonica (Acts 17:1–9), forcing him to flee at night to Berea. His travels soon brought him to Corinth. From that city, he sent Timothy back to Thessalonica to ascertain the condition of the church there. Timothy returned with an encouraging report: the Thessalonian Christians were enduring despite persecution. Not only that, but the testimony of the Thessalonians' steadfast faith was spreading throughout Macedonia (1 Thess. 1:8). Paul wrote a letter to encourage the young church and to answer a few questions that they had sent with Timothy. He wrote 2 Thessalonians soon after to correct some misunderstandings about the end times and to counter false teachings that had crept into the church.

Since the writing of 1 Thessalonians, reports had come to Paul of continued progress in the Thessalonian church, indicating their faithfulness to the gospel. However, doctrinal problems had also arisen. False teachers had begun to tell the believers in Thessalonica that the day of the Lord was already at hand. These teachers were misapplying and possibly even twisting Paul's teaching that the day of the Lord would come suddenly (1 Thess. 5:2). Most likely because of this, some of the believers had stopped working and were simply waiting for the Lord. Mounting persecution may have also fueled these extreme beliefs about the Second Coming.

In 2 Thessalonians, Paul stated emphatically that he had never taught that the day of the Lord had already come. To counter false doctrine, Paul gave the Thessalonians a good dose of the truth, explaining to them the emergence of the man of lawlessness and the prevalence of sin during the end times. Furthermore, he reminded them they had been called by God and saved through Christ's work. In view of this fact, he exhorted them to stand firm in Christ (2:13) and to work hard (3:12), always patiently waiting for Jesus' return.

Paul identifies himself as the author of 2 Thessalonians, and even calls attention to his own handwriting at the end of the letter (1:1; 3:17). Although many of the early church fathers, including Irenaeus, Tertullian, and Clement of Alexandria, confirm that this letter came from Paul, some modern scholars have questioned the letter's authenticity. Some have asserted that 1 and 2 Thessalonians teach contradictory doctrines about the Second Coming. The first letter is said to teach an imminent return of Christ, but the second to include an intervening period of "lawlessness" before Christ's return. A closer examination of the question reveals that the instructions of the two letters concerning the end times are complementary, not contradictory. First Thessalonians emphasizes the suddenness of the Lord's coming to those who are unprepared, while 2 Thessalonians highlights some of the events that will occur before Jesus returns. Since Paul wrote 2 Thessalonians to correct a misunderstanding that had arisen from his first letter, the difference between the two letters is understandable.

Second Thessalonians was written from Corinth shortly after 1 Thessalonians, or around A.D. 51 or 52.

Commentary

1:1 Paul, Silvanus, and Timothy were also the authors and editors of 1 Thessalonians. Silvanus (Latin for Silas) had been Paul's traveling companion ever since the start of the second missionary journey. He had participated in the founding of the church at Thessalonica (Acts 17:1–4). Timothy also was accompanying Paul on his second missionary journey. His report from the Thessalonian church had been the occasion for the writing of 1 Thessalonians (1 Thess. 3:6–8). To the church: The Greek word ekklesia means "gathering" or "assembly." Even though the Thessalonians were experiencing persecution and were being infiltrated by false teachers, Paul still addresses them as an assembly in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Their troubled circumstances did not change their position before God.

1:2 Paul's salutation is similar to those in other ancient letters (Gal. 1:3; Col. 1:2; 1 Thess. 1:2), but his expression is filled with spiritual meaning. Grace is the unmerited favor God gives to believers through Jesus Christ. Peace refers to the end of enmity between God and people. The Thessalonians could experience peace with God even during severe persecution.

1:3–12 Paul thanks God for the progress of the Thessalonian Christians, especially for their endurance of persecution (vv. 3, 4). He encourages them by imparting how those who are persecuted now will be glorified at Christ's return (vv. 5–10). He prays that they will continue in holiness and thereby be ready when the Lord comes (vv. 11, 12).

1:3 The faithfulness of the Thessalonian church in persecution gave Paul reason to praise God. Satan persecutes Christians in order to discourage and defeat them. These Christians had experienced persecution but continued to grow in Christ, in agreement with the apostle's earlier prayer in his first letter to them (1 Thess. 3:10; 4:9, 10). Here the apostle praises God because the Thessalonians' faith is growing exceedingly. They were growing beyond all natural expectation. Abounds pictures an expansive growth similar to the sudden surge of flood waters. The Thessalonians' steadfast faith not only strengthened them to withstand difficult circumstances; it also motivated them to express genuine love for others. A Christian’s faith in Christ should always culminate in true love for others (read Christ’s command in John 13:34, 35).

Finishing Well

When Paul wrote to the believers in Thessalonica, they were in the midst of intense suffering (2 Thess. 1:4, 5). But Paul encouraged them to look beyond their immediate troubles to the return of Christ and the affirmation they would receive from Him at that time (1:6, 7). Their enemies, who were really enemies of the Lord, would be judged and dealt with (1:8, 9). By contrast, they would join with their Savior in joy and praise (1:10). Paul went on in the next chapter to expand on this theme and its impact on the Thessalonians' current difficulties (2:1–12).

God calls us as His people to finish our lives well by holding on to the truths that last (2:15). He challenges us to maintain lifelong faithfulness and not to be entirely caught up in the here and now, whether good or bad.

1:4 Persecution not only tests faith but reveals it and causes it to grow. Continued faith and endurance through persecutions provide a testimony for Christ, of which Paul was boasting to the other churches.

1:5–10 Paul encourages them to endurance in view of the coming judgment at Christ's return. The definite article together with the use of the singular leaves no doubt that he is referring to an event in the future when the righteous Judge shall set right the tremendous disparities that now exist.

1:5, 6 Although the Thessalonians were enduring persecution (Acts 17:5–9; 1 Thess. 2:14), Paul explains that their persecutors would be repaid by God. The judgment of God requires that the unrighteous be punished for their persecution of the righteous (Pss. 9; 10; 17; 137; Rev. 6:9, 10). Also if the believers handle their persecutions properly, they will be counted worthy of great reward in the coming kingdom of God (Matt. 5:12; 1 Pet. 2:19, 20). Christians are called to endure suffering in this world, for they will receive a far greater reward in the next (2 Tim. 2:12).

1:7–9 Rest is the relief from affliction that will come at Christ's return (Rev. 6:11). The Christian's race or warfare on this earth necessarily includes tension. At the coming of Christ we will experience release from that tension forever, even as we remain active in His service. This promise of future eternal rest helps the suffering Christian to endure present trials (v. 4). when the Lord Jesus is revealed: Presently the Lord Jesus is enthroned in glory at the right hand of the Father (John 17:5). Stephen saw this glory before he was martyred (Acts 7:55, 56), but one day, and it may be soon, “every eye will see Him” (Rev. 1:7). Notice the threefold description of His appearance: from heaven, with His mighty angels, in flaming fire. Although other passages picture His coming in the clouds, this one describes Him as encircled with leaping flames of fire, taking vengeance on those who have rejected Him. John the Baptist prophesied of this baptism by fire (Matt. 3:11, 12; Luke 3:16, 17). Right now, Christ baptizes those who come to Him with the Holy Spirit; but when He comes in judgment He will baptize with fire. Today is the day of salvation, but that day will be the day of vengeance on those who do not know God (unbelieving Gentiles; Eph. 2:11, 12) and those who do not obey the gospel (unbelieving Jews who knew about God but who rejected His Son; Rom. 10:1, 16). There were both Jewish and Gentile converts in the Thessalonian church (Acts 17:1–5). Therefore, the persecuted Thessalonian believers could be encouraged by the fact that when Jesus is revealed from heaven with His angels, He will bring flaming fire and everlasting destruction on the enemies of God, the ones who were persecuting them (Rev. 19:12, 17–19; 20:10–15). The word destruction does not mean annihilation; it refers to the awful fate of those who reject Jesus, eternal separation from God (Matt. 25:42–46).

(Gk. olethros) (1:9; 1 Cor. 5:5; 1 Thess. 5:3; 1 Tim. 6:9) Strong’s #3639: The Greek word for destruction does not mean annihilation, which as nonexistence could not be eternal, but rather the loss of everything worthwhile. In 1 Corinthians, Paul uses the word to speak of the devastating temporal consequences of sin (1 Cor. 5:5). Here and in 1 Tim. 6:9, Paul uses the same word to refer to the eternal consequences of sin. The penalty for sin is not annihilation, but eternal ruin, eternal separation from the love of Christ. Just as endless life belongs to Christians, endless ruin belongs to those who are opposed to Christ.

1:10–12 In contrast to the destruction of the wicked, Christ will be glorified in His saints. Christ will be glorified not only among but also in the saints, for believers reflect His glory. Paul continued to pray that the Thessalonian believers would live in a manner worthy of God, in a way that would glorify Christ (1 Thess. 2:12). Believers are determining today, by what they do with the grace that has been given to them, the extent to which they will be worthy to glorify Christ in the reign to come (2 Tim. 2:12).

Thinking About the Future

Like many people today, the believers in Thessalonica were vulnerable to urgent warnings and announcements related to the future (2 Thess. 2:1, 2). In fact, certain false teachers of the day pandered to people's interest in such things, playing to their greatest hopes and worst fears about the return of Christ (2:3; 1 Thess. 5:2–5). In response, Paul appealed for reason and critical thinking based on the clear instructions he had given (2 Thess. 2:3–12, 15).

As we read 2 Thessalonians today, we, like the letter's original readers, need to "stand fast and hold the traditions which { we} were taught," the truths of God's Word. We should avoid fanciful, fearful guesswork about events related to the Lord's return and instead be busy about our responsibilities at hand (3:6–13).

2:1–12 This paragraph is the heart of the letter. Not only is it very strategic prophetically, but no other portion of the prophetic Scriptures covers the specific points of revelation found here.

2:1, 2 After writing 1 Thessalonians, Paul had received word that the believers in Thessalonica were being misled by false teachers, who were confusing the believers with erroneous ideas about the Second Coming. Paul's second letter was his attempt to correct these misunderstandings. The Greek word translated gathering together is found in the NT only here and in Heb. 10:25. There it refers to the local congregation, while here it is the congregation of the whole church. This will be the first time the whole church, including every believer, will be gathered before the Lord to worship Him. The phrase seems to refer to the event described in 1 Thess. 4:17, where Paul speaks of meeting the Lord in the air. The false teaching was that the day of the Lord (called the day of here, but compare 1 Thess. 5:2–4) had already come, bringing with it the tribulations they were experiencing. Thus, some Thessalonian believers thought Christ's coming had passed them by. Paul states that they were not to believe such teaching, whether by spirit or by word or by letter, as though it had come from him. Paul had taught them that the day of the Lord begins after the Rapture (1 Thess. 5:1–11). But if the day of the Lord had already come, either they had missed the Rapture or the Rapture had not been properly taught by Paul earlier. Paul sensed the need to give further instruction to calm their hearts.

2:3 When Paul wrote 1 Thessalonians, the believers were in danger of losing hope in the Second Coming. In this letter Paul was correcting the opposite extreme—that Jesus had already come. Paul restores balance to the church by describing some of the major events that would precede the day of the Lord (1 Thess. 5:1–11), in particular the falling away, and the revealing of the man of sin. The falling away, Paul declared, must come first. The Greek term translated falling away commonly means a military rebellion. But in the Scriptures, the word is used of rebellion against God. Thus, some have interpreted this verse to refer to a general defection from the truth during this time. This rebellious apostasy would prepare the way for the Antichrist. Others translate the term as departure and understand it to be a reference to the Rapture. That is to say, the man of sin cannot be revealed until Christ comes to take His church to be with Him. As far as the word itself is concerned, it could refer to a spiritual departure (falling away), or it could refer to a physical departure (the Rapture). Whichever way one understands it, it is an event that occurs before the man of sin is revealed. Paul does not use the title Antichrist for this man, but his description of him parallels John's description of the Antichrist (1 John 2:18; Rev. 13). The man of sin will lead the world into rebellion against God (v. 10), perform wonders through Satan's power (v. 9), and finally will present himself as a god to be worshiped (v. 4).

2:4 The man of sin will proclaim himself to be divine and will sit in the temple of God, acting as if he is a god. Many leaders in history have called themselves gods, and the Antichrist is the final declaration of that blasphemy. He will tolerate no one else being worshiped but himself (Rev. 13:6–8). Note the contrasts between the true God and the Antichrist. Though many people have wanted to be gods, the true God became a man, humbled Himself, and redeemed us through the shedding of His own blood (Acts 20:28; Phil. 2:6–8). The One who deserves all worship and praise does not command worship but instead came to this world as a servant. In contrast, the one who deserves only contempt presents himself as a god. The man of sin will probably stand in a physical temple in Jerusalem to declare himself to be god, the ultimate fulfillment of the "abomination of desolation" spoken of by Daniel (Dan. 7:23; 9:26, 27; 11:31, 36, 37; 12:11) and Jesus (Matt. 24:15; Mark 13:14). These prophecies may have been partially fulfilled when Antiochus Epiphanes erected a pagan altar to Zeus in the temple in Jerusalem in 167 B.C. (175–164 B.C.), or when Titus destroyed the temple in A.D. 70. Others have interpreted Paul's reference to the temple of God as a reference to the church. In other words, the man of sin will attempt to divert the church's true worship of God to himself.

2:5 Do you not remember: Paul reminds the Thessalonians of his previous teaching about the Second Coming, confirmed in his first letter to them (1 Thess. 4:13—5:11). He had taught them that they would not experience the night of judgment overtaking the world in the day of the Lord or be the recipients of the wrath of God (1 Thess. 5:9).

2:6 This restraining power is not identified. Perhaps it is the civil order established by God to curb the power of evil (Rom. 13:1–7). Since in v. 7 the restraining power is spoken of as a person, perhaps it is the Roman emperor, the embodiment of Roman law. Others believe that Paul has in view the sum total of moral power that resides in the church through the person of the Holy Spirit. Whatever the case, God is in charge. The man of sin cannot appear until God permits it.

2:7 already at work: The evil and deception that the man of sin embodies already exist in this world. John states that there are many antichrists presently at work (1 John 2:18). Anyone who opposes Christ and His church and seeks to deceive others into worshiping false gods is against Christ, and in that case is an antichrist. He who now restrains: There was a good reason why the man of sin had not been revealed. The present restrainer, probably the Spirit of God, had to be taken out of the world. God has restrained sin in the world through the power of the Holy Spirit. The Spirit works directly through the Bible, godly people, and His holy angels to advance God's kingdom and restrain evil. Some have interpreted taken out of the way in this verse as a reference to the Rapture, for the church cannot exist without the Spirit's presence. Thus, the removal of the church through the Rapture will be in effect the removal of all restraint on the power of sin in this world. There are a variety of other interpretations for this verse and the identity of the restrainer. The Roman state, the emperor of Rome, Paul's missionary work, the Jewish state, or the principle of law and government embodied in the state have all been proposed as the restrainer of lawlessness.

(Gk. ho anomos) (2:8; 1 Tim. 1:9; 2 Pet. 2:8) Strong’s #459: The Greek word anomos literally means “without law.” Thus, this word is depicting the “man of rebellion.” Just as Christ embodies righteousness, so the “man of lawlessness” will embody rebellion against God’s righteous law. This figure is probably the same person described by John as “the Antichrist” (1 John 4:2, 3) and “the beast” (Rev. 13:1). With his open defiance of the sovereign Ruler of the universe, this man is the embodiment of evil and the great opponent of Christ and His kingdom.

2:8, 9 Although the man of sin will be revealed as extremely powerful (Rev. 13:7), he will be destroyed by Christ and cast into the lake of fire when the Lord comes (Rev. 19:19, 20). The power, signs, and lying wonders of the lawless one will be overshadowed by the glory and brightness of Christ in His second coming. It is significant that Satan, in order to promote his lie at the end of the age and pass himself off as a god, will use the same kind of power, signs, and wonders that the Spirit of Christ used at the beginning of the age to authenticate the truth about Himself as God (2 Cor. 12:12; Heb. 2:4).

2:10, 11 The condemnation of the man of sin extends to those who follow him who did not receive the love of the truth, in order that they might be saved. Although many will come to Christ after the Rapture, those who reject Christ before the Rapture will not receive Him after the Rapture. No doubt many who have superficially heard the gospel and turned away can still be saved after the Rapture, but those who were under conviction of the Spirit and deliberately turned away will not.

2:11, 12 God will send them strong delusion: God is not the author of deception, but He allows those who reject the truth to be misled by falsehood. Following such falsehood, they are eternally condemned. We are lost when we choose unrighteousness and it becomes our source of pleasure. Paul’s teaching on the Second Coming as found in both Thessalonian letters may be integrated. Christians who have died will certainly share in the return of Christ (1 Thess. 4:13–18). Christians who are alive should be prepared so that His return will not take them by surprise, as it will unbelievers (1 Thess. 5:1–11). On the other hand, Christians must not think that the Second Coming has occurred and they have been left out. Although Christ may come very soon, first a “lawless one” will arise to lead a great rebellion against God (2 Thess. 2:1–12).

2:12 Unbelievers will share the condemnation of those who rejected the truth and took pleasure in their own unrighteousness. Rejection of the truth of the gospel always results in condemnation. Even those who never hear the gospel can reject the revelation of God in nature (Rom. 1:18–21).

2:13 Paul in these verses emphasizes the importance of believing the truth. Again he begins with thanksgiving (1:3; 1 Thess. 1:2; 2:13; 3:9). Paul was continually giving thanks to the Lord for the believers. He was thankful for their salvation, which was based on God’s choice of them, His work in them through the Spirit and the Word, and their ultimate glorification. chose: The Greek tense of this word indicates that in the past God had chosen the Thessalonians to be His people, set apart as holy to Him. Their salvation was accomplished by the Spirit when they placed their faith in Christ. Yet note the balance of the Spirit and the truth (the Word). The Spirit without the Word is mute; He has nothing to say. The Word without the Spirit is lifeless; it has no power to act. The work of the Spirit is always united with the work of the Word to convict the believer of the truth.

2:14 our gospel: In 1 Thess. 1:5, Paul uses this expression to speak of the Good News that Jesus died for us. In other passages he calls it the gospel of Christ (1 Thess. 3:2) and the gospel of God the Father (1 Thess. 2:8). This is the message that Paul had confidently proclaimed among the Thessalonians with the power of the Holy Spirit (1 Thess. 1:5). obtaining of the glory: Paul makes it clear that the Thessalonians have already been saved (v. 13) and called by God alone. But now he indicates the Thessalonians’ responsibility to respond to God’s work in them. Through the power of the Spirit (v. 13), the Thessalonians were to prepare on this earth for a glorious future with Christ by living in a holy manner (1:10; 1 Thess. 4:1, 2).

2:15 Traditions refers to instructions passed on from one person to another. Sometimes the word refers to human traditions, people’s opinions, and speculations. But in this case Paul is referring to the revealed truth of God that contains no error. This is what Paul had passed on to them. He had communicated some of God’s truth when he was preaching among them, further truth by his first epistle, and now he was communicating more truth through a second letter. The NT had not yet been written, and the essential beliefs of the Christian faith were being communicated through the apostles' preaching and letters. Having believed the truth, the Thessalonian believers were now to maintain it and stand fast in their faith. A sure way to retain truth is to use it. If you do not use it, you lose it. If the Thessalonians had been steadfast in the truth, it would have prevented the confusion over Christ's coming that Paul was now having to correct.

2:16, 17 In preparation for the instructions that follow in ch. 3, Paul prays that God would encourage the Thessalonians and establish them in the truth (a similar prayer is found in 1 Thess. 3:11–13). It was only because God had graciously chosen them as His own people, loved them, and given them everlasting salvation that they could have hope. Paul uses the singular verbs comfort and establish with the plural subject, Jesus Christ and the Father, to indicate the unity and equality of these two persons of the Godhead (1 Thess. 3:11).

3:1, 2 Paul not only prayed for the Thessalonians, but he also sensed his own need for their prayers. He asked them to pray for the advance of the gospel and for his own deliverance from human opposition. Run swiftly refers to the rapid spread of the gospel, while glorified expresses the idea of being triumphant. The verbs suggest not a single victory but a continuing series of victories marking the progression of the gospel throughout the world. Unreasonable means the men are capable of harmful deeds, while wicked indicates that they are evil in themselves and desire to corrupt others. These men may have been unbelieving Jews in Corinth who were persecuting Paul at the time he wrote this letter (Acts 18:12, 13). Justice in this world may never come for Christians, but they can certainly pray for deliverance from the wicked.

3:3 Although Paul was aware that the Thessalonians might be tempted and prove unfaithful, he was confident that God would establish or strengthen them (2:17; l Thess. 3:2, 13). He knew that God would guard or protect them (Phil. 1:6; 1 Thess. 5:24). In the previous verse, he had warned them concerning evil men (v. 2). Here Paul assures them that God will faithfully stand watch over them so that not even the evil one, Satan himself, could get hold of them. This passage must have been especially comforting to the Thessalonians, for they were still experiencing severe persecution on account of their faith (1:4).

3:4 Paul had confidence that the Thessalonians would obey his commands, but his confidence was in the Lord and based on what the Lord would do to help the Thessalonians stand true. Paul had a similar confidence regarding the church in Philippi (Phil. 1:6).

3:5 With the prayer may the Lord direct your hearts, Paul was indicating that the heart, the seat of a person's will, is the place were spiritual renewal begins. There God plants His love and patience, traits that will produce a harvest of good works. Paul uses the word direct to indicate that God will clear away the obstacles that may stand in the way of their progress toward love and patience. Paul prays that the Thessalonians, when faced with persecution, will be able to show the same type of patience Jesus expressed when people rejected Him.

3:6 Paul uses here the strong word command (v. 4; 1 Thess. 4:2, 11). This is not simply a suggestion but a binding order with the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ. The same word, found also in vv. 10, 12, is used of a military command that one must obey or else face the penalty of treason.

Paul instructs the Thessalonians to withdraw, or withhold fellowship, from a disobedient person. Among other things this would include not allowing the person to participate in love feasts and the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 5:9–13). Read Jesus' instructions in Matt. 18:15–17.

3:7, 8 Some Thessalonians, perhaps using the impending return of the Lord as an excuse, had refused to work and were expecting others in the church to feed them. In his previous letter Paul had already exhorted them to work (1 Thess. 4:11, 12). Evidently they had not heeded Paul's instruction, for in this letter Paul tells the church to discipline them (v. 6). As an example to all, Paul had worked … night and day when he preached among them. His goal was to avoid being a burden to anyone. Both the Greeks and the Romans despised manual labor; typically they used slaves for all such tasks. By contrast, the Jews regarded work as an evidence of good character and trained their children to work in a trade. Paul made tents in order to provide for his needs whenever this became necessary on his missionary journeys (Acts 18:1–3).

3:9 Christian workers can expect financial support, and the church is obligated to pay those who serve them (Luke 10:7; 1 Cor. 9:6–14; Gal. 6:6; 1 Tim. 5:17, 18). Yet Paul did not want to use his authority to demand payment. Rather, he wanted to be an example for others to follow. The fact that he worked would also cut off any opportunity to accuse him of greed. He wanted nothing to hinder the spread of the gospel (1 Cor. 9:12).

IN CONTEXT

Busy Waiting

Every generation of Christians must face the dilemma of how to live in the tension between the possibility of Christ's immediate return and the impossibility of predicting the moment. Many Christians unfortunately settle the problem by living as if Christ will not return. Meanwhile, others dabble in various fruitless but persistent schemes to "figure out" the time of Christ's return.

The young Thessalonian church struggled with persecution from the outset. Facing such difficulties, many of them found hope in the promise of Christ's return. Others misapplied the lesson by becoming lazy. After all, they reasoned, if Christ is already on His way, why participate in the details and responsibilities of life? Why sow if we will not be here to reap?

For those who had chosen to "coast" until Christ's return, Paul had blunt words: "If anyone will not work, neither shall he eat" (3:10). Paul understood the strong temptation to hide irresponsibility under a cover of spirituality. The integrity of the gospel was at stake.

In his final words of encouragement in 2 Thessalonians, Paul touched on the daily challenge for every person seeking to live for Christ: "But as for you, brethren, do not grow weary in doing good" (3:13). Herein lies the secret of being ready for Christ's return. If the hope of His arrival stirs up a wholehearted commitment to do good for His sake, we will be ready for Him. We must be busy waiting.

3:10 Again using the expression we commanded you this, Paul laid down the rule that if anyone does not work, neither should he eat. This applies to those unwilling to work, not to those unable to work.

3:11 Idleness breeds sin. Those who are disorderly, not working at all, become busybodies, causing trouble and division in the church.

3:12 Again Paul says we command and exhort (vv. 6, 10). He urges the Thessalonians to eat their own bread and to do so in a quiet manner, not causing division and disruption. Paul's cure for gossip is hard work.

3:13 The Thessalonian believers were exhorted not to be discouraged in work by those who did not work, but rather to continue in doing good.

3:14 do not keep company with him: Again (v. 6) the believers were to withdraw fellowship and not associate with anyone who disregarded the words of this authoritative letter from the apostle Paul. Otherwise their pagan neighbors might think the Thessalonian Christians approved of that person's actions.

3:15 admonish him as a brother: The disobedient one is not an enemy, but one who needs correction. Even though rebellion was to be dealt with, Paul demonstrates his tremendous compassion for fellow believers. He hated the sin but not the sinner.

IN COMPARISON

Church Discipline

In 2 Thess. 3:14, Paul instructs the Thessalonians to discipline one of their church members. What does church discipline involve? When should it be employed? What does the Scripture say about it? The following chart attempts to sort out a frequently misunderstood process.
The Definition	Church discipline is ultimately the denying of fellowship to a believer in Christ who is involved in open sin.
The Occasion	Church discipline involves Christians engaged in overt sin (Matt. 18:15–17; 1 Cor. 5:9–13), especially sexual immorality; those creating division within the body of Christ (Rom. 16:17; Titus 3:10); and those in open defiance of God's appointed leadership in the church (3:6, 7, 14; Heb. 13:17).
The Reason	A church must exercise discipline because the church must remain pure (1 Cor. 5:8).
The Goal	The goal of church discipline is to cause the sinning person to repent (James 5:19, 20); to "gain back" or restore an erring brother (Matt. 18:15; Gal. 6:1); to make the sinful person feel ashamed enough to change (3:14).
The Steps	There are several distinct steps to church discipline. First, meet one-on-one with the person. Second, if necessary meet with the person and another church member. Third, if there is no change in behavior, announce the matter to the congregation so that the whole church can corporately encourage the person to repent. Finally, if all else fails, put the sinning person out of the assembly (Matt. 18:15–17).
The Attitude	The tone of church discipline should be firm gentleness (Gal. 6:1). The people exercising church discipline should put away any spite, hatred, or malice so that they can facilitate true restoration.
The Commands	Matt. 18:15–17; Rom. 16:17; 1 Cor. 5:1–13; Gal. 6:1; 2 Thess. 3:6, 7, 14, 15; Titus 3:10, 11; Heb. 13:17; James 5:19, 20

3:16 In view of the possibility of disharmony in the church, Paul prayed that the Lord of peace would guide their actions, granting peace and unity to the church.

3:17 with my own hand: Paul dictated many of his epistles to a secretary. He adds a personal word in his own handwriting as evidence of the authenticity of this letter (Col. 4:18). This proof was necessary in this case because Paul suspected that the Thessalonians might have received a letter falsely attributed to him (2:2). To guard against this, Paul explicitly tells the Thessalonians that his handwriting at the end of a letter is the official sign that a letter was from him.

3:18 To all the difficulties that faced the Thessalonians and Paul as well, the solution was the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Not only was Jesus the Thessalonians' ultimate hope, but it was He who lovingly strengthened them to endure trials. It was Paul's prayer that this would be evident in their midst.

The First Epistle to Timothy

———— SOMETIMES THE MOST DIFFICULT PART OF A TEACHER'S job is to let the students go, to let them graduate and make their way in the world. One can sense this kind of anxiety in Paul's first letter to Timothy. He affectionately calls Timothy "a true son" (1:2), charging him again and again to remain faithful to what he had taught him (1:18; 5:12–16, 21; 6:11–13). The letter concludes with Paul's heartfelt cry: "O Timothy! Guard what was committed to your trust" (6:20). Timothy had accompanied Paul for years (Acts 16:1–3; 17:10; 20:4), assisting him and acting as his liaison to a number of churches. Paul had not only taught Timothy the essentials of the Christian faith; he had modeled Christian leadership to him. Now Paul was leaving Timothy in charge of the church at Ephesus. From Macedonia, Paul wrote to encourage his "son" in the faith. In effect, this letter is Timothy's commission, his orders from his concerned teacher, the apostle Paul.

The central purpose of 1 Timothy is found in 3:15: "I write so that you may know how you ought to conduct yourself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." The church is God's primary vehicle for accomplishing His work on earth (Matt. 16:18–20). The Lord has ordained that men and women who have trusted Him as Savior should be involved in working out His will in local assemblies around the world (1 Thess. 1:1; Heb. 10:24, 25).

Paul wrote 1 Timothy in order to instruct his young protégé on how the church should function and on how mature men and women of God should interact in it (6:11–16). Specifics are given on developing and recognizing godly leadership and avoiding false doctrine in the church (3:1–13; 4:1–6). Paul insists that Christian maturity should be expected in leadership, while it is developed in the lives of all believers (4:6–10). Paul offers Timothy a whole list of extremely practical advice for leading a church. As he faced the problems and hardships of ministry in a local church, Timothy must have repeatedly read Paul's letter for the valuable insights it offers (4:15).

Timothy was a native of Lystra in Phrygia (Acts 16:1–3). His father was Greek, and his mother, Eunice, and grandmother, Lois, were godly Jewish women (2 Tim. 1:5; 3:14, 15). It was through the influence of these women that Timothy learned the Hebrew Scriptures as a child. Paul calls Timothy a "true son in the faith" (1:2), suggesting that he was converted during Paul's first missionary visit to Lystra (Acts 14:6, 19).

At the beginning of Paul's second missionary journey, Timothy was chosen by Paul to accompany him and Silas (Acts 16:3). Since they would be preaching to Jews, Paul had Timothy circumcised (Acts 16:3), and evidently the leadership of the church laid hands on Timothy (4:14; 2 Tim. 1:6). He traveled with Paul and Silas helping them in their evangelization of Philippi and Thessalonica. Apparently he remained in Thessalonica (Acts 17:10) and then joined Paul and Silas in Berea. In Corinth, Paul employed Timothy as a liaison between himself and the church in Thessalonica. Later he used Timothy as a liaison again, this time to the church in Corinth, to teach the believers there (1 Cor. 4:17; 16:10). Acts does not record Timothy's travels during this period. He reappears in Ephesus (Acts 19:22), where Paul commissioned Timothy and Erastus to prepare the churches in Macedonia for his arrival. Timothy remained in Macedonia and accompanied Paul to Corinth, where presumably Paul wrote his letter to the Romans (Rom. 16:21).

Then Timothy, along with six others, spearheaded Paul's journey to Troas (Acts 20:4, 5). Later he comforted Paul in Rome during the apostle's first imprisonment (A.D. 60–62), sending greetings to the Colossians (Col. 1:1), Philemon (Philem. 1), and the Philippians (Phil. 1:1). During Paul's imprisonment, Timothy traveled to Philippi to encourage the believers there and then report back to Paul in Rome (Phil. 2:19). After Paul's release, Timothy traveled with him to Ephesus. Timothy stayed there to confront the false teachers who were infiltrating the church, and Paul went on to Macedonia, where he wrote his first letter to Timothy (1:3). He wrote his second letter to him from prison (2 Tim. 1:8), imploring Timothy to come quickly. This was probably Paul's last letter, for he was soon to die. If Timothy did come quickly, he would have been with him as his "true son" in the final days before his execution (2 Tim. 4:11, 21).

The letter names Paul as its author, and the author's statements about his life in 1:12, 13 are consistent with what is known of him. The early church fathers Clement of Rome and Polycarp accepted the letter as one of Paul's, as did Irenaeus, Tertullian, and Clement of Alexandria.

Early in the nineteenth century, some scholars began to question Paul's authorship of the Pastoral Epistles (1 and 2 Timothy and Titus). Critics claimed that these letters were “pious forgeries” written in the second century. They leveled four different attacks on the integrity and authenticity of these letters. First is a historical problem. Since the chronological references in these letters do not correspond with the Book of Acts, critics assume that the letters were written at a much later time by an impostor. However, the letters could have been written soon after the events described in the Book of Acts. Many scholars hold that Paul was acquitted and released from the imprisonment described in Acts 28, and then traveled for several years in Asia Minor and Macedonia. During this time he wrote the disputed letters. Eventually he was imprisoned in Rome again, and then died in Nero’s persecution.

Second, critics argue that the Pastoral Epistles do not fit Paul’s writing style. These letters contain a number of words that occur only here in the New Testament but are common in the writings of the second century. This is taken as evidence that the letters are from the second century. The weakness of this argument is that there is a limited body of literature from the second century from which to draw such a dogmatic conclusion.

The third point relates to the form of church leadership described in the Pastoral Epistles. The structure of authority, including elders and deacons, seems to represent a more developed, second-century church. However, it is clear from Phil. 1:1 that the offices of elder and deacon were already functioning during Paul’s ministry.

The fourth argument involves theology. Critics claim that the heresy combated in the Pastoral Epistles is the full-grown Gnosticism of the second century. While it is true that Gnosticism was not fully developed until the second century, it is also certain that the heresy began slowly and evolved before it became a complete theological system. Paul dealt with similar false teachings in Colosse (Col. 1:9–15). The heresy in 1 Timothy appears to be an early form of gnostic teaching that combined elements of Judaism (1:7), Persian thought, and Christianity.

There is no reason, therefore, to conclude that 1 and 2 Timothy are not authentic Pauline Epistles. First Timothy was probably composed shortly after Paul’s release from his first Roman imprisonment. This means the book was composed in Macedonia around A.D. 62.

Commentary

1:1 Paul begins his first letter to Timothy by asserting his authority as an apostle of Jesus Christ. The Greek word for apostle means "sent one." Thus, Paul was declaring that he was an ambassador sent by Christ. The commandment of God refers to God's sovereign commissioning of Paul's ministry (Acts 9). The authority of Paul's ministry came from two sources: from God our Savior and from the Lord Jesus Christ. The title Savior identifies God as the source of our salvation, both our justification and sanctification. Paul speaks of Christ as our hope because He is the reason we can expectantly look forward to eternal life in glory.

1:2 Timothy was a young believer from Lystra who traveled with Paul during his second and third missionary journeys (Acts 16:2, 3). True son refers to a legitimate child who possessed all the rights and privileges of membership in a family. Paul was indicating total acceptance of Timothy as a believer. The salutation is Grace (Gk. charis), the Greeks' "hello." It means to get what you don't deserve. Salvation is by grace (Eph. 2:8, 9). Mercy (Gk. eleos) means you don't get what you do deserve. It is only in the Pastoral Epistles that Paul breaks from his usual pattern of saying "grace and peace" and includes "mercy." Preachers need mercy. Peace (Gk. eirene) means "to bind together that which has been separated." Christ is our peace (Eph. 2:14) and binds us to God.

1:3–11 Paul exhorts Timothy to correct false teaching because it leads to a corrupt way of life.

1:3 It is not certain when Paul traveled to Macedonia. His request for Timothy to remain in Ephesus, ministering to believers there, demonstrates Paul's confidence in the young man.

1:4 The word fables is used in Titus 1:14 in connection with Jewish fables. Genealogies is used in Titus 3:9 within the context of the Law. The errors that Paul left Timothy to correct in Ephesus appear to have been primarily Jewish in nature, involving unrestrained speculation about genealogies and allegorical interpretations of the Law like those found in rabbinical literature. In Ephesus this could have been combined with Gnostic speculation concerning a number of spiritual beings. The Greek word for edification means "stewardship" and expresses the concept of orderly management of a household. Paul understands the church as the “house of God” (3:14, 15). Disputes do not promote “house order” in the church. The focus of a believer’s life should be the clear and sound doctrine found in the Word of God, not human speculation.

1:5 The purpose of Paul’s command to Timothy is the promotion of God’s love in the church (John 13:34, 35).

1:6 Idle talk means “empty chatter.” Gossip, speculation, and criticism should not come from the lips of believers.

1:7 teachers of the law: This phrase is derived from Judaism and is used in Luke 5:17; Acts 5:34 in connection with the Pharisees. These were the individuals whom Timothy was to instruct and correct. Their errors came from their relation to the law. These men were loveless, legalistic teachers with impure hearts and motives. Instruction without love promotes legalism.

IN COMPARISON

Practical Advice for the Ministry

Timothy was a young minister, appointed to lead the apparently contentious church at Ephesus. He had already learned the essentials of the gospel; now he had to learn how to lead. In this letter, Paul was passing on all the wisdom he had accumulated in his years of ministry. His insights are extremely practical, and valuable even today.
Exhortations: what to do	Warnings: what to avoid
• Command others to teach no other doctrine than the true doctrine of Christ (1:3).	• Do not listen to fables or endless genealogies, which cause disputes (1:4).
• Teach the Good News that Christ saves sinners (1:15–18).	• Reject fables (4:7).
• Pray and intercede for everyone (2:1).	• Do not neglect your gift (4:14).
• Choose church leaders who are worthy of the office (3:1–15).	• Do not rebuke older men, but exhort them (5:1).
• Instruct others in sound doctrine (4:6).	• Do not receive an accusation against an elder unless there are two witnesses (5:19).
• Train oneself in godliness (4:7, 8).	• Do not govern the church with prejudice; be impartial (5:21).
• Be an example to the believers in word, in conduct, in love, in spirit, in faith, and in purity (4:12).	• Do not hastily lay hands on anyone (5:22).
• Honor widows (5:3).	• Withdraw from those who reject Paul's teaching and are constantly arguing over words (6:4, 5).
• Stay pure (5:22).	• Flee from those who are greedy and want to become wealthy from the ministry (6:5–11).
• Pursue righteousness, faith, love, patience, and gentleness (6:11).	• Avoid profane and idle talk, which is falsely called knowledge (6:20).

1:8–11 Even something good like the law can be used improperly. Its purpose is to teach us about right and wrong and to curb sinners. It is not given to bring those who are righteous through Christ into legalistic bondage (Rom. 7:12, 13). The sins listed in vv. 9, 10 are flagrant violations of the Ten Commandments.

1:8 The proper function of the law is to make sinners aware of their sinfulness (Rom. 3:20).

1:9 Paul's list of those who have violated the law appears to parallel the order of the Ten Commandments (Ex. 20:3–17). The first three pairs of violations recall the first four commands, which address a person's relationship with God: the lawless and insubordinate, the ungodly and … sinners, and the unholy and profane. Following these are eight violations that parallel five of the last six commands of the Ten Commandments. Covetousness is not mentioned.

1:10 Fornicators are persons involved in sexual immorality in general. Sodomites are specifically male homosexuals (1 Cor. 6:9). But heterosexual and homosexual immorality are violations of the seventh commandment. kidnappers … liars … perjurers: These are violations of commandments eight and nine. Sound doctrine may also be translated "healthy teaching." Sound is derived from the Greek for "in good health." Doctrine is a key theme in 1 Timothy (4:1, 6, 13, 16; 5:17; 6:1).

1:11 according to the glorious gospel: This phrase should be interpreted in its immediate context, a discussion about the purpose of the law. The proper use of the law is to demonstrate human sinfulness and our need for the Good News that Christ has saved us from bondage to the law and our own sins.

1:12 I thank Christ Jesus our Lord: There was no arrogance in Paul. The world is "unthankful." He did not take his privilege for granted. enabled me (literally, "put strength"): Paul knew well his "strength is made perfect in weakness" (2 Cor. 12:9). faithful: This is required of stewards with a trust (1 Cor. 4:1, 2). ministry: No man takes this honor to himself (Heb. 4:5) and Paul did not "handle the Word of God deceitfully" (2 Cor. 4:2), as did the legalizers.

1:13 Before Paul trusted in Christ as Savior, he was a blasphemer, speaking against God; a persecutor, pursuing Christians like a hunter pursuing his prey (Acts 8:3; 9:1–5); and an insolent man, a violent person acting out of personal pride. but I obtained mercy: If the apostle Paul could find mercy after the terrible things he did against Christ, then God surely offers salvation with "open arms" to all people (2:4).

1:14 Grace is God's undeserved, unearned, freely given favor. The grace given to Paul was exceedingly abundant, overflowing beyond all expectations.

1:15 Paul summarized the heart of the gospel (v.11): Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. World refers to all humanity. Save means to deliver or rescue. Christ came to die for the sins of humanity. of whom I am chief: Paul saw the degradation of sin and understood the sinfulness of human beings. Because of this, he placed himself first among sinners.

1:16 believe on Him: Over 185 times in the NT the sole condition given for salvation is belief, having faith or trust in Jesus Christ. The gospel is that Christ died for our sins, was buried, and rose on the third day. All those who place their trust in Jesus for salvation will be saved from the coming judgment. To add any other condition to faith for salvation is to make justification a matter of works (Rom. 11:6; Gal. 2:16).

1:17 In the middle of his explanation of the gospel Paul cannot contain himself. He must give praise to such a merciful God.

1:18 Apparently earlier in his ministry prophecies had been made about Timothy and his future role in the church. Paul urges Timothy to wage the good warfare. According to this powerful imagery, Christian ministry is spiritual warfare directed against God's enemies.

1:19 having the faith: The definite article is here speaking of "the faith" once delivered (Jude 3). "Stay true to the Word" is the meaning today. good conscience: Six times in the Pastoral Epistles Paul speaks concerning the conscience. Some people need an amplifier for that still small voice. It can only be kept clear by judging oneself and confessing sin (1 Cor. 11:30–32; 1 John 1:9). Once the conscience is seared (4:2), even a preacher is capable of committing gross sin. David's conscience wasn't cleared; his sin was ever before him (Ps. 51:3), until he confessed it. shipwreck: Many a shipwreck began with unconfessed small sins.

1:20 Hymenaeus and Alexander: Paul offered examples of two men (2 Tim. 2:17, 18; 4:14) who were failing to fight the good fight (vv. 18, 19). The phrase delivered to Satan is similar to 1 Cor. 5:5. The authority to "deliver over" was apostolic in nature. Paul did not deliver the two men because they were unbelievers, but so that they would learn not to blaspheme. In the NT the word translated learn is used only of God's discipline of believers (1 Cor. 11:32; Heb. 12:6, 7, 10). Paul was indicating that these men should be excluded from the church so that they might abandon their evil ways (1 Cor. 5:1–5).

2:1, 2 Therefore: Here Paul elaborates on what will build up the church (1:4). In these verses, Paul uses four of the seven NT terms for prayer. Supplications emphasizes personal need. The verb from which the noun is derived has the idea of "petition." Prayers is the general word for prayer. The term is always directed toward God with reverence or worship. Intercessions means "approaching with confidence," suggesting free access to God. Giving of thanks is an attitude of gratitude, the act of praising God for what He has done for us. Each of these aspects of prayer should be included in the prayer life of a church. For all men is the first object of prayer. This generic expression for male and female alike cannot be restricted to believers; it also includes nonbelievers, such as kings and all who are in authority. Peaceable refers to internal composure or an amiable attitude. The idea of praying for kings has a twofold emphasis. First, it is a specific way to pray for all men, because the actions of a king affect society as a whole. Second, it reminds believers that God is the ultimate Sovereign. He is in control, and our prayers affect decisions at the highest level.

2:3 Good (Gk. kalos) means "useful," "excellent," or "suitable" (compare 1:8). The prayer is good because it is in accordance with the will of God. In the sight of God our Savior indicates the saving power of God (1:15).

2:4 Who desires all men to be saved does not mean that God has willed that everyone should come to salvation, for elsewhere Paul clearly teaches that only those who believe in Christ will receive salvation (Rom. 1:16, 17; 3:21–26; 5:17). This is also the clear teaching of Jesus (John 3:15–18). Thus, universal salvation is not the determinative will of God, by which He sovereignly rules the world. Instead what Paul might be saying here is that the Savior God extends the offer of salvation to all. Christ died for the sins of all, but only those who believe receive the benefits of that sacrifice (John 3:16; 2 Cor. 5:14, 15). The knowledge of the truth refers to Christian growth after being saved. God's desire is not only our salvation (justification) but also our growth in the truth (sanctification), so that we will not be led astray by false teachers (1:3, 4).

2:5 One God is a central truth of the Hebrew Scriptures. The only living God desires all to be saved. He is the only One to whom our prayers should be addressed. Mediator is a concept derived from the ceremonial worship prescribed in the OT. In the tabernacle and later in the temple, the priests mediated between God and the Israelites by offering animal sacrifices to atone for the sins of the people and by interceding to God for the nation. In their position as mediators, the priests were the only ones eligible to enter the Holy Place, the place where God had made His presence known. The one Mediator is the Man Christ Jesus (Heb. 9:11–15). There is one God from whom salvation is available. There is only one way to Him, through the Mediator, Christ Jesus, who has the full nature of God and the full nature of man. Christ has identified with us; He understands us perfectly and represents us at the right hand of God the Father (Rom. 8:34).

(Gk. antilutron) (2:6) Strong’s #487: The word ransom in Greek is antilutron, made up of anti (signifying substitution) and lutron (the word used for the ransom of a slave or prisoner). The antilutron is a payment given instead of a slave or prisoner—that is, in substitution for him or her. The person holding the slave accepts the payment as a substitute. According to Gal. 3:13, Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law. The law held us captive in its condemnation, and no one but Christ could pay the price to release us from this bondage.

2:6 The work of the Mediator (v. 5) is described as giving Himself a ransom for all. The Greek word translated ransom is found only here in the NT. It specifically refers to a ransom paid for a slave. In Greek it is formed with a prefix that reinforces the idea of substitution (Matt. 20:28; Mark 10:45). In other words Christ substituted His life for ours. Our sins had separated us from God. Christ paid the penalty for our sins so that we could be reconciled to our Father.

2:7 Teacher of the Gentiles describes the ministry to which Paul had been commissioned (Acts 9:15; Rom. 11:13). Faith refers to one’s initial salvation (justification); truth relates to the believer’s growth in salvation (sanctification). Paul was called not only to preach the gospel to the Gentiles but also to guide their growth in the truth. This is why he left Timothy at Ephesus. Timothy was to charge the Ephesians not to teach other doctrines, fables, or endless genealogies (1:4).

A New Way to Worship

What is the proper way to worship God? For those who had grown up in the religious climate of Ephesus before the gospel, Christian worship called for altogether different behavior than they were used to practicing. So Paul offered guidelines for worship to the men and women in the Ephesian church (1 Tim. 2:8–15).

Ephesus was world-renowned for its magnificent temple of Artemis. Pagan cults flourished there, along with occult practices. In fact, books with magic recipes came to be known as "Ephesian books."

Nevertheless, the gospel bore great fruit there and the community of believers grew rapidly. Yet some of the new converts brought their old way of life into the church and began teaching other doctrines (1 Tim. 1:3–7). When it came to worship, many were used to wild rites and festivals. Ephesian women were particularly unacquainted with public behavior, having been excluded for the most part from public gatherings, except pagan rituals.

So Paul described the correct way of worship. Men, who were apparently given to anger and doubts, needed to stop wrangling and start praying (1 Tim. 2:8). Likewise, women needed to focus on godliness and good works rather than clothing, jewelry, and hairstyles (2:9–10). And because some were apparently disruptive, they needed to practice restraint (2:11)—not necessarily complete silence, but "quiet" (as the word is translated in 2 Thess. 3:12), since they likely participated in the prayers and other expressive parts of the worship gatherings (compare 1 Cor. 11:5; Eph. 5:19).

Today the message of Christ continues to attract people from a variety of backgrounds. Some, like the Ephesians, need to learn for the first time about worshiping God. Others bring cultural norms and expectations that are worth using in the worship experience, so long as they preserve biblical guidelines such as those that Paul gave to the Ephesians.

2:8–10 These instructions concern how people should conduct themselves in public worship, but the principles taught have a wider application to the behavior of believers. Holiness of life (v. 8) and modesty of dress (vv. 9, 10) are especially appropriate for the Christian.

2:8 The men refers to those involved in leading public worship. Leadership in public worship is not restricted to elders or those with specific gifts. Prayer is one of the central features of Christian worship. The Greek word translated men in this verse refers to males distinguished from females. Some have insisted that this means that males are to be the only leaders in public worship. On the other hand, Paul describes women as praying in public in some of his other letters (v. 9; 1 Cor. 11:5). Lifting up holy hands is a Hebrew way of praying (1 Kin. 8:22; Ps. 141:2). Holy means "morally and spiritually clean." Biblical prayer must be done with a clean heart and life (Heb. 10:22). without wrath and doubting: Wrath is a slow, boiling type of anger. Doubting literally means "to think backward and forward." It carries the idea of disputing. Prayer is to be offered without resentment or disputing among those in the church. If believers do not have good relations with others in the church, they should not lead in public worship.

2:9 in like manner also: This expression probably continues the discussion of prayer begun in v. 8. In other words, when men pray they are to possess sincere and holy attitudes; when women pray, they should be modest. modest apparel: The emphasis is that women should dress appropriately when at worship, and not put on extravagant clothes that draw attention to themselves. Propriety means reverence and respect, shrinking away from what is inappropriate. Moderation may also be translated "sound judgment" or "self-control."

2:10 Paul exhorts the women at Ephesus to be concerned about clothing themselves with godly character instead of wearing inappropriate and lavish clothes. with good works: A Christian woman's beauty is found in her godly character and her love for the Lord as demonstrated in all types of good works.

2:11–15 These restrictions may have been based on the inappropriate behavior of some women recently converted from paganism. Paul himself did not disapprove of women praying and prophesying in public provided they were properly attired (1 Cor. 11:4, 5). Also Paul freely acknowledged his debt to a considerable group of women who helped in the NT church (Rom. 16:1–15).

2:11–12 Paul uses a literary device called an inclusio in these verses to frame his argument on women not teaching or exercising authority over men in the church. Moreover, he uses two pairs of words to convey his meaning. We may understand it as follows: v. 11 women in silence (hesuchia) let them learn (manthaneto) full submission (en pase hupotage) v. 12 teaching (didaskein) exercise authority (authentein) [women] be in silence (hesuchia) 2:11 Let a woman learn is a command. Women are encouraged to learn in the local assembly but with a proper attitude. Here Paul rises above the Greek culture, since the first-century woman in Greece was not considered able to learn. Paul disavows that myth and exhorts Timothy to provide opportunity for women to learn. The apostle who made such full use of women in ministry (Rom. 16:3–15) set a great example for Timothy. In silence (Gk. hesuchia) is to be her attitude or disposition ("peaceable" in 2:2 and "gentle and quiet" in 1 Pet. 3:4) while learning, as should be true of all believers. Paul is not saying that a woman may not speak in the local assembly (compare 1 Cor. 11:2–16). A different Greek term (sigas) means to say nothing or not to speak. Though Paul grants this new privilege and freedom, he cautions that women are to learn with an attitude of all submission, not in a debating, unruly manner. The new freedom for those who have been kept in ignorance and consequent immaturity may easily be abused as was the case in Ephesus (5:11–15).

2:12 I do not permit is a present tense and indicates an abiding attitude. The apostle expresses his abiding personal authority as an apostle in regard to the matter of women teaching men in the local church (compare Rom. 12:1). to teach (Gk. didaskein): The apostle uses the Greek word to express the type of teaching found in the Jewish communities from which Paul had come. It was more than the impartation of information to students. It included the call by a rabbi, or teacher, to have his disciples to listen, believe, and practice the words of the teacher. Such teaching was built upon the revelation of God and assumed the functions exercised in the early church by the elders (doctrine, correction, discipline, and reproof; compare 2 Tim. 3:17; 1 Tim. 4:11; 4:16—5:2; 2 Tim. 4:1–4; Titus 2:15; 3:8–11). Generally, those who exercised this responsibility in the early church had the spiritual gift of teaching (compare Rom. 12:7; 1 Cor. 12:28) but not every exercise of this spiritual gift (by men or women) would be, necessarily, over the congregation. Have authority (Gk. authentein) is not the normal word for authority (which is exousia, "to have the right"). The word is found only this one time in the NT and because of this has been the subject of misunderstanding. The generally accepted understanding of authenteo in recognized scholarly dictionaries and recent scholarly studies shows with little question that the idea is that women are not to exercise authority over men. The connective or (Gk. oude) seems to indicate that teach is being defined by the term "have authority." Some have wrongly thought that the two terms should be joined and translated "to teach in a domineering manner." Thus, if women teach with a proper attitude, they may (it is said) teach men in the congregation. This introduces a grammatical idea simply not found in this text and one not characteristic of the apostle's writing style. Certainly Paul would not want anyone—men or women—to teach improperly. Moreover, the text nowhere indicates that the apostle is prohibiting the teaching of false doctrine (which would be prohibited for men and women alike). Rather the apostle is prohibiting any teaching of men by women (congregational teaching is obvious in the context, vv. 8–12) or of women being in congregational authority over men. When one examines the 144 NT examples of the same construction found here in v. 12, one discovers that or is used for reinforcement or intensification of a concept to which both elements relate (the first specific and the latter general: here teach and exercise authority) not to indicate a single idea (namely, teaching in a domineering way). Paul, then, does not disallow the teaching by women because of cultural reasons or the aptitude or education of women. The exhortation relates to theology alone, to the creation order and the fall, where one aspect of the judgment of the woman was for her exercising authority in an area apparently reserved for the husband—a reversal of the creation order (compare Gen. 3:16; 4:7). It seems best to understand this passage as teaching that women may exercise any of the spiritual gifts they have received and developed in a variety of ministries in a local assembly (2 Tim. 3:14, Titus 2:3, 4), other than teaching men, when done under appropriate male (elder) leadership. Women may serve the body of Christ in many types of ministries, but men function as God's official leadership in the local assembly.

IN CONTEXT

Eve's Legacy

When Paul wrote that Eve "fell into transgression" (1 Tim. 2:14), he was pointing out how easily a person can be led into temptation and sin with disastrous results. In Eve's case, Paul explicitly stated that "Adam was not deceived," but Eve was (compare 2 Cor. 11:3). Was the apostle making a statement about women in general? Opinions differ, but either way it seems clear that he was using Eve to illustrate an important point related to the women in the congregation at Ephesus.

Most women in the first century were not formally educated. In Greece they led relatively isolated lives at home and did not often engage in public discourse. Most of what they knew they learned either from their husbands or from other women. But that made them susceptible to deception. It's no wonder, then, that Paul urged that the Ephesian women not be permitted to teach. In addition to recognizing Adam's priority in creation as a basis for women not teaching men, Paul also wanted them to avoid the error of Eve, who helped to bring sin into the world because she accepted the lies of the serpent.

2:13, 14 For: Paul offers reasons for the directives of vv. 9–12. Adam was formed first refers to Gen. 2:7–25. In God's order of creation (1 Cor. 11:9), Adam was made before Eve. This is an implied reference to the privileges that a firstborn received in ancient society. These privileges were not given on the basis of inherent superiority but instead on being born first, something controlled by God Himself. The second reason for the prohibitions in vv. 9–12 is related to the Fall. Adam was not deceived points to the fact that Adam sinned with his eyes open; he knew what he was doing (Rom. 5:12). woman being deceived: The verb indicates that Eve was "completely deceived." Paul's argument from creation and the Fall in these verses seem to indicate that the prohibitions in vv. 9–12 are permanent. (Some have argued that Paul was drawing an analogy between creation and the Fall and the present situation in the Ephesian church, where men were teaching and some women were being misled by false teachers, but no passage in 1 Timothy supports this view.) 2:15 saved in childbearing: Some believe this verse refers to the birth of Christ and that the woman is Mary. However, it may refer to the woman's special task of bearing children (Titus 2:3–5). The salvation referred to here is not justification, but daily sanctification. Most likely, Paul is referring to being delivered from the desire to dominate by recognizing one's appropriate place in God's creation order. If they continue suggests that this salvation (sanctification) is conditioned upon women's continued walk in the faith, in love, in holiness, and in self-control.

3:1–16 In discussing how to behave in the house of God, Paul now turns to the leader. There are two scriptural officers of the church: the bishop (Gk. episkopos), the pastor or overseer today, and the deacon (Gk. diakonos). The overseer, the pastor or preacher of the gospel, is to live by the gospel (1 Cor. 9:14). This is his calling. The deacon serves in the church but does not live by this service. He is nowhere told he is called to this as a living. There are no double standards of Christian living. What ought to be true of every believer must be true of leaders in the house of God. It is very proper to have standards of conduct for leaders in a local church. Here is a good list to go by.

3:1 bishop: This Greek word refers to a person who oversees a congregation. In many NT passages, the Greek words for bishop and elder are used interchangeably for the same office (Titus 1:5–7).

(Gk. episkopos) (3:2; Acts 20:28; Phil. 1:1; Titus 1:7) Strong’s #1985: The Greek term episkopos means “one who oversees.” In the NT, elders are described as overseeing a congregation. In Acts 20:17; 20:28 the elders of the church at Ephesus are called overseers. Elders were responsible for the internal affairs of the church; and there seem to have been several elders in positions of responsibility in any given congregation (Acts 14:23; Titus 1:5–7). After NT times, it became the custom to appoint one elder as the presiding elder and to give him the title of bishop.

3:2 Blameless means “not laid hold of.” The idea is not that a bishop is sinless but that he displays mature, consistent Christian conduct that gives no reason for anyone to accuse him of anything. Husband of one wife literally means “a one-woman kind of man.” This expression has been interpreted as a general exclusion from office of all who are sexually immoral or of polygamists, or as referring specifically to those who have remarried after divorce. This is also a qualification of deacons (v. 12). Temperate means “without wine,” sober or clear-headed. Sober-minded means that an overseer must have control of his body and mind. It is a balanced state of mind arising out of self-restraint. Of good behavior means “orderly.” Hospitable means “loving strangers.” An overseer’s home should be open for purposes of ministry. Able to teach could also be translated “qualified to teach,” or “teachable.” Since the passage is about character, it seems best to understand this qualification as being teachable, a necessity for a man of God (see 5:17; 2 Tim. 2:24; Titus 1:9 for the requirement that an elder should be able to teach).

The Character Factor

In 1 Tim. 3:3, Paul outlines the criteria that qualify people for leadership in the church community. All of the items mentioned have to do with character. God seems far more concerned with the personal integrity of leaders than with their education, eloquence, or charisma.

Without question, the standards are high, but that doesn't imply a higher standard for church leaders than "ordinary" Christians. All believers are called to these same high standards of Christlikeness. Paul is not creating a class of the spiritually elite here. He is simply indicating that the church should select its leadership from among people who are generally living up to the ideals of the gospel.

3:3 Not given to wine means "not addicted to wine." Not violent means "not a striker." An elder should not be prone to violence or to striking others. not greedy for money: An overseer is not to have a materialistic attitude toward money or possessions. Part of this qualification is a warning to those in church leadership concerning proper management of God's finances. Not quarrelsome means "without fighting." This is the quality of being peaceable. A bishop or overseer should contend for the faith without being contentious. Not covetous means "not a lover of silver" (6:9). Note that this is a second warning about money. Certain Ephesian elders were receiving financial support from the ministry (5:17, 18). Paul exhorted them not to allow their desire for money to become a priority.

3:4 Rules means "stands before" or "manages." his own house: An elder must manage his own family well. His children must submit to his leadership with reverence or respect.

3:5 If a man is unable to lead in his family, he will not be able to take care of the church. A shift from rule to care emphasizes the tenderness of the shepherding function of an elder in the church.

3:6 Novice means "newly planted." An elder is not to be a new believer. Being a new convert could put him in danger of being puffed up with pride. Such pride is described as the condemnation of the devil (Ezek. 28:11–19).

3:7 good testimony: An elder must have a good reputation in the community (Acts 6:3). A non-Christian should not be able to reproach or insult an elder. The elder's good testimony avoids the snare of the devil, the traps or pitfalls of Satan (2 Tim. 2:26).

3:8–13 Likewise: Similar qualifications apply to deacons, who were also ministers in the church. They had special responsibility for visiting and ministering to those in need. The seven chosen in Acts 8:3–6 to relieve the twelve apostles of distributing food to the poor may have been the first deacons (Acts 6:2–).

3:8 Deacons fill a second leadership position in the local assembly. The Greek word for deacon means "servant." Although the word itself is not used in Acts 6, the seven godly men selected there to distribute food to widows appear to be the forerunners of this office and ministry. This verse and Phil. 1:1 indicate that the office of deacon was an established office in the early church. not double-tongued: This phrase speaks of the dangers of gossip, specifically saying one thing to one person and another to someone else.

3:9 The mystery of the faith is the doctrine clarified in v. 16 as the incarnation of God in the flesh. The Son of God becoming flesh to serve humanity (Mark 10:43–45) is the embodiment of service.

3:10 tested: Deacons are to be evaluated, observed, and approved before being appointed to office. Their character in this approval process is to be blameless or "without accusation."

3:11 Likewise, their wives: The similar phrasing of v. 8 seems to indicate that Paul was speaking of another office in the local body, the deaconess. These women, like deacons (vv. 8–10, 12, 13), served under the leadership of the elders. However some interpret this verse as referring to the wives of deacons and not to an office.

3:12, 13 A twofold encouragement is given to deacons who serve well. First, they will receive a good standing, or respect. This relates primarily to their standing in the congregation, but also to their greater rewards for service at the judgment seat of Christ (Rom. 14:10; 1 Cor. 3:10–15, 2 Cor. 5:10). Second, they develop boldness in the faith. Faithful servants develop confidence and assurance in their Christian walk.

3:14 Paul desires to join Timothy at Ephesus (1:3).

3:15 Paul's purpose in writing his first letter to Timothy was to give him instructions on how a local assembly and its leadership should function.

church of the living God: The church universal is manifested in local assemblies around the world. the pillar and ground of the truth: Misconduct and disorder in the local church weaken the support of God's truth in the world. Godly men and women gathering together in local assemblies to worship the Lord produce an orderly church, a church that testifies to others of the truth of God.

3:16 This verse contains an early hymn of the church. The hymn is three couplets. Manifested in the flesh refers to Christ's incarnation, the fact that Jesus became man (John 1:14). Justified in the Spirit refers to the Holy Spirit's work in Jesus' ministry and resurrection (Matt. 3:15–17; John 16:7, 10; Rom. 1:4). Seen by angels refers to the angelic witness of Christ's ministry and resurrection. Preached among the Gentiles refers to the proclamation of Christ to the nations (Col. 1:23). Believed on in the world refers to the response of individuals to God's plan of salvation (1 Cor. 1:18–25). Received up in glory refers to the Ascension; Christ is seated in God's presence in heaven (Acts 1:9; Heb. 1:3, 4).

Good Advice for a Novice

Timothy was young in age and relatively untested as a trainee under Paul, his mentor. His pastorate in Ephesus was his first solo assignment. So Paul offered him some seasoned wisdom and perspective: • Tough times are to be expected in a broken world (1 Tim. 4:1–3).

• We need to accept God's gifts with thanksgiving (4:4, 5).

• Affirm the truth with others who share your faith (4:6).

• Avoid getting caught up in the folklore that occurs in every environment (4:7). It's not that stories are bad, but always search out the truth and make it your trademark (4:8–11).

• Overcome the skepticism of others with the basics like love, edifying conversation, and purity (4:12).

• Work on your own skills and abilities with diligence (4:13, 14).

Over the long haul, perspectives like these will hold one in good stead.

4:1 Paul begins a series of instructions specifically for Timothy. the Spirit expressly says: Paul may be referring to various prophecies inspired by the Holy Spirit concerning defection from God's truth (Dan. 7:25; 8:23; Matt. 24:4–12), or he might be speaking of a revelation the Spirit had given to him. Depart here means literally "to stand away from." There will be various seasons in which some people will depart from their faith (1:19, 20). The reference here is not to a loss of salvation but to a failure to walk obediently (John 19:25–27; 1 Cor. 3:1–3; 11:29, 30). The impact of satanic attack and influence is described in vv. 1–3. Doctrines of demons refers to following occult practices.

4:2 conscience seared: How can they believe such things? As your finger is numb when it has been burned with a hot iron, so too their consciences are numbed by the searing of sin.

4:3, 4 The false teachers at Ephesus evidently disparaged the material world as evil, which became a central doctrine of the full-grown Gnosticism of the second century. In Gen. 1:31, God's creation is called "very good." Believers are to enjoy the good things God creates and gives them to manage.

4:5 Sanctified means "set apart." Marriage, eating, and possessions are, in reality, spiritual issues. They are to be enjoyed as the believer recognizes their proper purposes before God.

4:6—6:21 Paul has been instructing Timothy how he should conduct himself "in the house of God" (3:15). Here he deals with Timothy's personal life (4:12–16; 5:23–25; 6:11–16, 20, 21) and discusses how he should treat various people (5:1, 2), especially widows (5:3–16), elders (5:17–22), bondservants (6:1, 2), the contentious (6:3–5), and the rich (6:6–10, 17–19).

4:6 Continued growth in the church occurs through words of faith and instruction in good doctrine. Sound doctrine is the basis of a healthy ministry and correct practice.

4:7 Exercise is the normal term for the physical training of Greek athletes. True spirituality requires one to train at godliness in one's walk with the Lord.

4:8 Profits a little contrasts the short-term value of physical exercise with the long-term benefits of godliness for all things. Discipline in godliness affects both the present and future life of the believer. The present aspect includes obedience and a life of purpose (John 10:10). The future aspect involves greater rewards in the coming reign of Christ (1 Cor. 3:10–15; 2 Cor. 5:9, 10).

4:9 This is … worthy of all acceptance and that no one can deny. The wise become doers of the Word.

4:10, 11 Savior of all men describes God as the One who gives life, breath, and existence to all. Especially of those who believe draws a contrast between God's common grace to all and His special saving grace to those who trust Him as their Savior.

4:12 Youth was a term applied to men until they were forty. Timothy might have been between thirty-five and forty years old at this time. The antidote for his youth was his life. He was to set an example in six areas: (1) in word, meaning conversation; (2) in conduct, or behavior; (3) in love, which is the love of God; (4) in spirit, the attitude or power of the Holy Spirit; (5) in faith, meaning trust in God; and (6) in purity, both in sexual matters and in thoughts (5:2). These godly elements are not only for the young, but should be desired and practiced by all. These qualities should be developed early in a Christian's life.

4:13 Give attention (Gk. proseche) is a present command for personal preparation and diligence. Three specific areas of responsibility in the house of God are defined. Reading is a command for public reading of the Scriptures (Acts 13:15). Exhortation is an encouragement to obey the Scriptures. Doctrine is formal teaching and instruction in the Word of God (2:12).

4:14 Paul encourages Timothy to be diligent. The gift is the spiritual gift Timothy received from Christ (Eph. 4:7, 8). by prophecy: Timothy's gift was given through a prophetic message (1:18) and with the laying on of … hands, probably at Lystra (Acts 16:1). The laying on of hands signified the elders' commission and recognition of God's work in Timothy's life. Paul himself was part of the group that laid their hands on Timothy (2 Tim. 1:6).

4:15 Meditate (Gk. meleta) is a present command for Timothy continually to practice Paul's instruction. Give yourself (Gk. isthi) is another present command. Paul's care for Timothy, his "son in the faith" (1:2), is evident. He was instructing Timothy so that his progress would be evident to everyone in the church.

4:16 Take heed (Gk. epeche) is another present command alerting Timothy to himself, his character, and actions along with the doctrine (Gk. tei didaskalia), teaching. Continue (Gk. epimene) is a present command to stay or remain in the things Paul has written. Save … yourself is not a reference to justification by works but to sanctification, the Christian's daily walk of faith (Mark 8:34–38; John 12:25, 26). Those who hear you refers to the members in the church to whom Timothy was reading, exhorting, and teaching.

Widows in the Household

The fundamental social institution of the Greco-Roman world was the household. The ancient household included far more people than the modern nuclear family of a husband, wife, and two and one-third children. Everyone involved in the "family business" under the rule of a male administrator, called the "father," was part of the household. Thus, the Greco-Roman household consisted of relatives plus various dependents: the father's wife, his slaves, children, as well as clients—those who gave the father honor and influence in exchange for material favors.

Households, particularly the fathers, ranked themselves socially in terms of honor, prestige, and influence. The more honor a father received, the more prestige and influence he gathered. Wealth, therefore, was not important to accumulate in order to gain more wealth. Wealth was important so that a father might parade his honor. Wealth enabled a father to lavish gifts on his dependents, thereby making more people honor their father as their benefactor.

One household member who especially needed protection was the widow. In NT times, widows had virtually no means of supporting themselves. The early church felt responsible to care for Christian widows, but problems arose in ministering to their needs. As new structures and guidelines had to be developed, the church eventually distinguished between widows who really needed support and those who should be commended to the care of their household (1 Tim. 5:3–5, 8). A Christian father who did not provide for a widow of his household was deemed "worse than an unbeliever" (5:8). Even in non-Christian households of the Greco-Roman world, the head of the household supported poor widows.

5:1–25 Paul encourages Timothy in various relationships in the church: older and younger men, older and younger women, widows, and elders.

5:1 Rebuke (Gk. epiplesso) means to strike sharply. Younger men should avoid sharply reprimanding older men.

5:2 All purity is a word of caution to young men. They must respect the purity of the younger women as the purity of a sister.

5:3 Honor is a command to show respect, a respect demonstrated by one's attitude and through financial support (vv. 4, 8). Widows are those who have family to help support them (vv. 4, 16); the one who is really a widow is one without family support. If this type of personal concern toward family were exercised by Christians today, especially toward parents whom they are to honor, there would be little need for government welfare.

5:4 Family members are instructed to care for widows. Piety is respect, reverence, or obligation. repay: Honoring our parents includes caring for them physically and financially as they grow older. In effect, we are returning the time and energy they gave to us while we were young.

5:5 Trusts means to have hope or confidence in God.

5:6 This verse identifies widows living ungodly lives, who are not to be supported by the church. Lives in pleasure refers to a life of comfort focused on one's own desires. Dead means separated from fellowship (James 2:26). Widows in the church who choose to live for themselves are separating themselves from fellowship with God and the church.

5:7 blameless: Maintain a good reputation for themselves and for the church.

5:8 A believer is to provide for his own (his near relatives) and his household (his immediate family). Failure to provide for one's family is equal to denial of the faith (Ex. 20:12; Mark 7:9–12; Eph. 6:2). If a Christian cannot even care for his or her own family, how can that person sincerely love and care for others? worse than an unbeliever: Some unbelievers take better care of their families than believers do.

5:9 Taken into the number means to write down on a list. The list referred to here was most likely a list of widows whom the church was to assist. Widows who were enrolled on the list were to be at least sixty years old and the wife of one man. Some have maintained that this list was an official order of widows. These widows were to pray for the church (v. 5) and practice works of charity (v. 10).

5:10 Children refers either to the widow's own children or possibly to orphans. Lodged strangers indicates an attitude of hospitality. Washed the saints' feet demonstrates a servant's heart. Relieved the afflicted suggests giving aid to those facing adversity. Followed every good work indicates a commitment to serving.

5:11, 12 Refuse is a command to not put younger widows, those less than sixty years old, on the list of widows to be supported by the church. The reason for this refusal is that younger widows may grow wanton, which means to experience sexual desire, and thus desire to marry, presumably an unbeliever, since the marriage is said to be outside their first faith.

5:13, 14 It is best for those younger widows to remarry (1 Cor. 7:39, 40). Otherwise, they might become idle, without work. gossips and busybodies: Paul was concerned that younger widows would not have enough to do, and thus would bother everyone else with worthless talk or even harmful and divisive words.

5:15 Some of these younger widows had ignored the biblical pattern for remarriage and had turned aside after Satan.

5:16 Responsibility for support rests first upon the family (vv. 4, 8). When Christian families meet their own responsibilities, the church is able to care for those who have no family resources.

5:17–20 Paul now addresses the topic of elders.

5:17 The primary function of elders is to rule well. The word honor was used in ancient writings outside the Bible to refer to financial remuneration. Double refers to two types of honor: (1) respect for ruling well and (2) adequate pay for their diligent care of the church (1 Cor. 9:1–14). Those who labor in the word and doctrine are those elders who preach and teach the Scriptures.

5:18 For the Scripture says: With two quotations, one from Deut. 25:4 and the other from the words of Christ in Luke 10:7, Paul provides proof for the principle of providing adequate financial care for elders. The Luke passage is especially noteworthy because it shows that Paul considered that Gospel to be Scripture along with the Book of Deuteronomy.

5:19 An elder is protected against malicious attacks by the command not to receive an accusation, a charge or legal accusation, except when it comes from two or three witnesses (Deut. 19:15; Matt. 18:16). Charges against elders are to be factual, not based on a single opinion or rumor.

5:20 Those who are sinning refers to elders who fail in their leadership, whether in the local church, in their social life, or in their home life. Rebuke is a command to bring a sin to light, to expose it before all, including other elders and the church body. the rest also may fear: The public rebuke of a sinning elder is to serve as a warning to other believers. God's discipline is consistent from leadership to laity. Sin is a serious matter in the lives of believers, especially those in leadership (1 Pet. 4:17). When leaders sin with impunity, church members might erroneously start justifying their own sins.

5:21 I charge you: Discipline must be exercised in the church. But it should be done without prejudice (personal bias) or partiality (preferential treatment).

5:22 This verse warns against too hastily restoring a leader who has fallen. Correction in love and restoration to fellowship should occur as soon as possible, but restoration to leadership should not be made without time and biblical evaluation. Another interpretation of this verse suggests that it is a command to evaluate carefully anyone being considered for leadership, not just former leaders who want to be restored (3:1–14). Keep yourself pure is a caution for Timothy not to share responsibility for another person's sins by restoring or appointing someone who is not qualified.

5:23 Paul recalls Timothy's inclination toward a stomach disorder. This could certainly be the case if he were involved in the discipline of an elder, especially in light of his apparent timidity! The apostle encouraged Timothy to use wine as a medical help for his stomach's sake and frequent infirmities. Our physical condition often affects clear judgment. The wisdom of avoiding major decisions until feeling well is well-advised.

5:24, 25 cannot be hidden: Unnoticed good works will become evident, if not in this life then at the judgment seat of Christ (1 Cor. 3:10–15).

6:1 Bondservants … under the yoke refers to believers who are slaves. Believing slaves were to give their unbelieving masters all honor or respect. The life and actions of a Christian slave were to represent the Christian faith and Christ Himself. In same way we should watch how we act at work. It is extremely important, for our actions testify to the reality of Christ's power in our lives.

6:2 Teach: Paul moves to the conclusion with a final warning for Timothy to instruct his congregation in order to combat the false teachings that were infiltrating that church (vv. 4, 5). The Greek word for teach means the formal presentation of doctrine (2:12), while the Greek word for exhort implies less formal instruction, a "coming alongside" to guide. These things is probably best understood as the contents of this letter.

6:3, 4 If anyone teaches otherwise: Here Paul refers to false teachers. He contrasts their "sick" teaching with the wholesome words ("sound doctrine" in 1:10) of the Lord Jesus Christ. These false teachers were more interested in theory and debate than putting the truth into practice. They had a morbid desire to argue over words.

6:5 Destitute of the truth describes the uselessness of speculative religious arguments. These false teachers were using religion for their own financial gain. Probably they were hoping that their debates on religion would gain them a following and financial support. Sound doctrine and exhortation are the basis of a healthy church—not glitz, glamour, and greediness of false teachers.

The Challenge of Contentment

Paul's young disciple Timothy had his hands full in Ephesus. The apostle had left Timothy in that city to oversee the organization of the church. Timothy was to provide consistent teaching, help the church choose leaders, and model personal integrity as a leader.

Paul's first letter to Timothy contains both direction and encouragement for Timothy. Among his memorable objectives Paul included the following: "Now godliness with contentment is great gain" (6:6). Obviously, the absence of both godliness and contentment would indicate great loss, especially in the Christian life. Godliness without contentment would be a joyless and legalistic righteousness. Contentment without godliness describes a person sadly disconnected from God's truth.

What kind of life was Paul describing when he speaks of godly contentment? Paul describes such a person as having a firm understanding of the passing nature of life. The things of this world are here when we arrive and are left behind when we leave. Neither godliness nor contentment can be found in accumulating them. Things beyond God's provision of our basic needs ("food and clothing," 6:8) can be enjoyed without becoming a necessity. Paul understood that if godliness (our desire to see God's character reproduced in us) and contentment (our acceptance of God's will in our lives) depend on our environment or circumstances, both will always be unstable.

Elsewhere, Paul indicates that godly contentment must be a learned response (Phil. 4:11–13). Developing godly contentment lies well beyond our abilities. That is why along with Paul we must appeal to the right source for such a character trait: "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me" (Phil. 4:13).

6:6 True gain is in godliness with contentment (Gk. autarkeia), or "sufficiency of life needs."

6:7 This is the reason we should be content—we will all die eventually!

6:8 The two physical needs of believers are food, or nourishment, and clothing and shelter. These two areas with godliness provide the basis of being truly content (Phil. 4:12).

6:9 Two types of people are described in relation to wealth (v. 17). The first type are those who desire to be rich. An inner lack of godliness and contentment leaves a vacuum filled with greed. This greed drives people into temptation, snares, and foolish and harmful lusts. Drown literally means to drag to the bottom. Paul was painting a graphic word picture of a greedy person drowning under the tremendous weight of material desires. Destruction and perdition are synonymous with ruin and irretrievable loss. This loss may be experienced in this life, as through a wrong purpose for living, or it may be experienced in the afterlife if material desires lead a person away from Christ (1:16; 2:4; Luke 16:1–14).

6:10 Money in and of itself is not a problem, but the love of money is. Love of money is a root, though not the root, of evil. The love of money can drive a person into all types of evil. Greediness may cause a believer even to stray from the faith. Christians may be blinded by greed and materialism to such a degree that they break away from their faith. many sorrows: A life focused on material things produces only pain.

6:11 Paul issues a powerful warning against materialism. Flee is a strong command. Pursue is a command to hunt or chase after some object. Righteousness, godliness, and faith are character qualities. Love, patience, and gentleness are fruit of the Spirit-controlled life (Gal. 5:22). Men and women of God should pursue godliness, not materialism, with all of their being.

6:12 lay hold on eternal life: Eternal life is viewed as a free gift (John 3:16; Eph. 2:8–10), a present experience (John 10:10), and a reward (Mark 10:29, 30; Luke 18:29, 30). Here Paul is not speaking of Timothy's salvation, but instead of his fruitfulness in this life and his rewards in the next. The good confession is Timothy's call and ministry. Paul was urging Timothy to continue his ministry of preaching the Word of God.

6:13 urge: Charge, or command. Once again Paul presents the seriousness of what he had said. Timothy is to keep this charge, not for Paul's sake, but before God who gives or "preserves life" and Christ Jesus, who gave a good witness before Pontius Pilate. Pilate said, "I find no fault in Him at all" (John 18:38).

6:14 commandment: In the immediate context, Paul was exhorting Timothy to avoid empty religious argumentation (6:3–5) and the greed of materialism (6:6–10). Timothy was to remain faithful to Christ until He appeared again. Thus, Paul was encouraging Timothy to focus on the return of Christ, not on temporal gain. The imminent return of Christ should be a motive for godly living (2 Pet. 3:10–16; 1 John 2:28).

6:15, 16 God will manifest the return of Christ in His own time. This will happen at a specific point in time that Jesus declared was known only to the Father (Acts 1:6, 7). The last half of v. 15 and all of v. 16 form a doxology of praise to the Lord Jesus. Immortality may also be translated "without death." Jesus is God and therefore can never die.

6:17 those who are rich: Paul has already condemned those who are attempting to become rich through the ministry (vv. 6–10). The second group of people Paul addresses in regard to wealth (v. 9) are those who are already wealthy. Paul encourages Timothy to tell the rich not to be high-minded or proud and not to trust in uncertain riches. Only the living God can provide for all of our needs.

6:18 Those with wealth are commanded to recognize God as the true source of their wealth and to be generous with their riches. The material blessings of God are to be enjoyed and used for the advancement of His kingdom, not for self-centered living.

6:19 Storing up may also be translated "treasuring up," a phrase similar to Jesus' challenge in Matt. 6:19–21 to lay up treasure in heaven. A believer's daily obedience to God builds a good foundation for the time to come. The Scriptures teach that a believer's works will be evaluated to see what his or her life in Christ has produced (1 Cor. 3:10–15).

(Gk. kenophonia) (6:20; 2 Tim. 2:16) Strong’s #2757: This Greek word literally means “empty words.” In Paul’s writings, the Greek word kenos expresses the ultimate emptiness of all that is not filled with spiritual meaning. In other words, human achievement amounts to nothing if it does not come from the will of God. Nothing comes from this nothingness; it is futility. Paul uses a derivative of this word to describe the hollow words (6:20; 2 Tim. 2:16) spoken by Judaizers trying to entice the believers with their foolish philosophies (Eph. 5:6; Col. 2:8). But the teaching committed to Paul and the apostles was not futile; it would last throughout eternity because it originated in God’s unchanging will (Matt. 5:18; 1 Cor. 15:12–15).

6:20 The Greek term for committed is found only here and in 2 Tim. 1:12, 14. The deposit that Timothy had to guard was the truth revealed in this letter. Knowledge is the Greek word gnosis, from which the word Gnosticism is derived. Evidently an early form of Gnosticism had infiltrated the Ephesian church. This heresy taught that salvation came through the “knowledge” of spiritual mysteries. In unequivocal terms, Paul warns Timothy not to be caught up in this false teaching (1:3, 4; 6:3–5).

6:21 First Timothy closes as it begins (1:2), with an emphasis on God’s grace. The Greek word for you is plural, perhaps indicating that this letter was to be read to the church in Ephesus.

The Second Epistle to Timothy

———— WHEN DEATH NEARS, PRIORITIES CHANGE. IN LIGHT of mortality, what used to seem significant may dim in comparison to one's ultimate fate. That is why we listen to a person's "last words." When all is said and done, everyone wants to know what gave that person hope in the face of death. Second Timothy is Paul's "last words." From a cold, lonely Roman prison, the aged apostle Paul wrote his final instructions to his protégé Timothy. Paul knew that this letter might well be his final contact with Timothy; his execution was most likely imminent. He implored Timothy to come quickly to his side. But in case he did not make it, Paul imparted his last words of encouragement to his "son" in the faith.

Paul's primary purpose for writing this letter was to offer final instructions to Timothy regarding the Christian life. Second Timothy has an intensely personal nature and tone. One senses Paul's strong love and concern for Timothy. Paul encourages his close friend to use his spiritual gifts. He writes to strengthen Timothy's loyalty to Christ in the face of the suffering and persecution that would come. The apostle challenges Timothy to handle the Word of God accurately, faithfully instructing others in the truths of the faith. Warnings and instructions are given concerning how a believer should relate to the world in times of apostasy. In the closing chapter, Paul offers Timothy his final word of advice: "Preach the word! Be ready in season and out of season." This was Paul's own mission, to preach the gospel to the Gentiles; now he was passing it on to his beloved son in the faith, Timothy.

Paul's second purpose for writing this letter was to urge Timothy to join him in Rome. Paul knew that he was soon to die. He longed to see and have fellowship with his child in the faith one last time.

Paul was well aware that hardships and conflict are a part of Christian ministry. One of the essential characteristics of a faithful servant of Christ is endurance in the midst of difficulties. To encourage Timothy in this virtue, the apostle reminds him that Jesus Christ is "of the seed of David" and "was raised from the dead" (2:8). Mention of the seed of David links Christ with the Davidic covenant (2 Sam. 7:11–16), which states that a Son of David will rule on his throne forever. Furthermore, Christ has been resurrected; He is alive. The promise of ruling and reigning with Him (2:11–13) is set before Timothy as a motive for faithful endurance in ministry. A special crown will be given to those who faithfully serve the Lord and wait for His return (4:8).

Chapter 3 develops the theme of apostasy in the latter days. Paul warns Timothy that difficulties are coming for believers, and he instructs him about how Christians are to respond and behave. Jesus had predicted that such times would come (John 15:18–25; 16:33; 17:15–18), and Paul himself had referred previously to these times (1 Thess. 3:1–8). Although he would not live to see these dreadful days, Paul still cared enough to urge Timothy to be bold in the work of the Lord, even in the midst of troubling times.

The Book of Acts ends with Paul under house arrest in Rome (Acts 28). But many scholars believe that Paul was acquitted, as he had expected (Phil. 1:19). From sporadic evidence in the Pastoral Epistles, we can trace Paul's travels after his imprisonment. He probably visited Crete (Titus 1:5), Ephesus (1 Tim. 1:3), Macedonia, and perhaps Colosse (Philem. 22) and Spain (Rom. 15:24). Timothy traveled with Paul to Ephesus and was left there to confront the false teachers that were infiltrating the church in that city (1 Tim. 1:3).

Many believe that Paul was put in prison when Nero began his campaign of persecution, shortly after Rome burned in A.D. 64. Nero blamed the Christians for starting the fire, and executed many of them with extreme cruelty. Soon afterward, the apostle Peter died for his faith by being crucified upside down, according to the church father Origen. As Paul penned his second letter to Timothy, he was aware of his coming death (4:6–8). A number of believers had deserted him (4:16), and only Luke was with him at the writing of this letter (4:11). At the end of the letter, one can sense Paul's concern. He implores Timothy: "Be diligent to come to me quickly" (4:9). Paul did not want to leave this earth without seeing Timothy and Mark to give them some final words of wisdom (4:9–13).

Paul's concern for Timothy arose out of their long relationship with each other. Ever since the beginning of the second missionary journey, Timothy had been close to Paul, assisting him in his ministry, acting as his liaison, and learning from his godly example. Timothy's devout mother, Eunice, and grandmother, Lois, had provided him with a grounding in the Hebrew Scriptures on which Paul could build (2 Tim. 1:5; 3:14, 15).

Although evidently Timothy was slightly timid because of his young age (1:7; 1 Tim. 4:12), Paul developed his son in the faith by placing more and more responsibility on his shoulders. Timothy had functioned as Paul's representative to Thessalonica (1 Thess. 3:2) and Corinth (1 Cor. 4:17). But leaving Timothy at Ephesus was a major step for Paul; as a concerned mentor, he wrote a letter to Timothy repeatedly charging him to remain faithful to the essentials of the Christian faith (1 Tim. 1:18; 5:12–16, 21; 6:11–13). Paul had served as Timothy's spiritual mentor throughout his life. Now as he neared his death Paul wanted to see him one last time. And if that could not be, he wanted at least to give Timothy some final words of encouragement.

The author of 2 Timothy identifies himself as Paul (1:1). Other remarks in the book are characteristic of Paul's ministry (3:10, 11; 4:10, 11, 19, 20). Many of the early church fathers such as Polycarp, Justin Martyr, and Irenaeus support Pauline authorship. For an explanation of the challenges to Pauline authorship of 2 Timothy, see the Introduction to 1 Timothy. Most of these challenges are based on the erroneous assumption that the theology and Greek style of this letter can only fit the context of the second century.

Many scholars believe that 2 Timothy was written during a second imprisonment of Paul in Rome (1:8, 16, 17; 4:6–13). According to the fourth-century church historian Eusebius, Paul was martyred during Nero's regime, some time before A.D. 68. Since this letter was written immediately before Paul's death, it was probably written around A.D. 67.

Commentary

1:1 Paul speaks of himself in 1 Timothy as an apostle "by the commandment of God" (1 Tim. 1:1). In 2 Timothy he calls himself an apostle by the will of God (2 Cor. 1:1; Eph. 1:1; Col. 1:1). according to the promise of life: Paul considers himself a bearer of a life-giving message. This message of life stands in ironic contrast to the fact that Paul was writing from a Roman prison, facing his execution. The characteristic phrase in Christ, found in other Pauline letters, also appears in this letter, further indicating that it came from Paul.

1:2 beloved son: In his first letter to Timothy, Paul referred to him as a "true son in the faith" (1 Tim. 1:2). Paul's deep love and concern for this younger man of God is shown throughout this letter.

1:3 I serve is a priestly phrase often associated with worship. Forefathers were the patriarchs of the faith: Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Paul had a great love for Israel (Rom. 9:1–5). The reason he connects himself with Israel's forefathers may be to demonstrate that he is not advocating a new religion but one of which the godly of the past are also a part. remember you in my prayers: Although he was most likely held in a cold and damp prison (4:13), the aged apostle was still worshiping God and offering prayers on behalf of Timothy. Christian service and worship go hand in hand in ministry. No matter what their circumstances, believers should pray to their heavenly Father, committing everything to His loving hands.

1:4 desiring to see you: Paul longed to see Timothy, possibly because the apostle realized his life would end soon (4:6–17).

A Mother's Legacy

Eunice (2 Tim. 1:5) was Jewish, but apparently her father was not very orthodox: he violated one of the clear commands of the Law in arranging a match for his daughter with a Gentile (Acts 16:1). Later, when Timothy was born, he wasn't circumcised (16:3). So it seems that neither Eunice's father nor husband were observant of Judaism.

But Eunice was. Paul praised her for her "genuine faith," which she shared in common with Lois, her mother (2 Tim. 1:5). Eunice imparted that faith to her son, Timothy, and more than anyone else equipped him for a lifetime of usefulness for God.

Eunice is an encouragement for every woman faced with the daunting task of nurturing the spiritual life of her children, especially if she can't count on the help of a strong male. Eunice may have had no formal religious education and little encouragement from her family, except for Lois. But she had two crucial things going for her that offer hope for mothers today—the inherent power of being a mother and the dynamic power of a loving God.

1:5 The word translated genuine faith means "unhypocritical." Paul rejoices when he recalls Timothy's faithful grandmother Lois and mother Eunice, whose name means "Good Victory." The prayers, witness, and faith of his godly mother and grandmother were central factors in the spiritual development of Timothy (1 Tim. 2:15).

1:6 stir up the gift: Timothy is urged to rekindle his spiritual gift (this idea is expressed in the negative in 1 Tim. 4:14). The desire to discover, develop, and deploy our specific spiritual gifts should be like a fire blazing within us. The constant struggle of Christians is to be diligent about our work for God and not to slacken our pace in this spiritual race. We need to make a conscious effort to exercise our gift for the common good of the body of Christ.

The Spirit of Power

Second Timothy 1:6, 7 offers both encouragement and exhortation. Paul links power—the ability to make things happen—with love and a sound mind. Conversely, power exercised without love and wisdom is inevitably destructive.

1:7 The Holy Spirit is the One who gives us spiritual gifts and empowers us to use them. God's Spirit does not impart fear or cowardice, but power, love, and a sound mind, or "self-control." The Spirit imparts power for the various circumstances of ministry. The love the Spirit gives to us should be directed toward other individuals. Furthermore, as we use our spiritual gifts to build up the church, we should exercise self-control, using our abilities only at the appropriate times.

1:8 Timothy is encouraged not to be ashamed or shrink back from the testimony of our Lord. Testimony is the witness of the Lord; the Greek term is the source of the English word martyr. Church tradition says that most of the apostles died as martyrs. Paul is concerned that in the face of vehement opposition Timothy might be afraid to witness. Share with me in the sufferings indicates that at times a faithful witness for the Lord will involve adversity. Paul's call for boldness in vv. 7–9 may indicate that Timothy was timid. Every once in a while, he needed a gentle push to be bold.

1:9 God's saving and calling of believers is not according to … works. It is impossible for people to earn their way into heaven. Salvation is according to God's own purpose or sovereign plan (Rom. 8:28–30; Eph. 1:11). Grace is God's unearned favor. The Lord called us and saved us in Christ Jesus before time began.

1:10 The manifestation of God's plan and grace has been revealed, or brought to light, in the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ. abolished death: Fear of dying might have caused believers to shrink from testifying about their faith. The Greek term translated life is typically used of eternal life in the NT. God's life, unlike the life of humans, is immortal; He cannot die. Through their faith in Christ, believers have inherited eternal life. We have nothing to fear, not even death. Therefore, we can proclaim with boldness our trust in Christ.

1:11 Paul's mission for the gospel was threefold: preacher, apostle, and teacher (1 Tim. 2:7).

1:12 Paul's confidence in the gospel and his Savior enabled him to suffer without any shame. The phrase whom I have believed expresses Paul's unshakable trust in his Savior. What I have committed does not refer to something Paul had done for Christ, but to something he had entrusted to Him, like a deposit in a bank. This speaks not of Paul's confidence in himself but of Christ's trustworthiness. Paul was certain that God would keep his deposit, his life and the eternal rewards of his ministry. The apostle was preparing for imminent death, but in spite of this he was hopeful. He had spent his time, resources, and even his life on proclaiming the gospel, and this investment in Christkingdom would bring him an abundant reward in eternity (Luke 19:15; 1 Cor. 3:10–15; Rev. 11:15, 18). God will protect us in life and in death. He will not forget a life of faithful service to Him when He returns. Sometimes people are unappreciative or forgetful of the good that we do for them; however, all that we do in faithful service for our Savior will be remembered and rewarded (Matt. 10:42).

1:13 Hold fast is a command to Timothy to persist in the sound words of healthy teaching (1 Tim. 1:3–10). Many who say they speak for Christ proclaim false doctrine. Like Timothy, we need to pursue sound teaching and avoid all teaching that does not conform to the Scriptures, no matter how good certain teachers might sound or how large their following might be.

1:14 That good thing may be rephrased as "the good deposit." Here the phrase refers to Paul's teachings to Timothy (1 Tim. 6:20). Keep means "to guard" or "to protect." Who dwells in us describes the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in believers.

The Handbook for a Life's Work

In his final and intimate letter to his "son in the faith," Paul reminded Timothy of the essentials of the faith, the basis of Christian ministry. Paul did not want Timothy to drift away from the truth, as Phygellus and Hermogenes had done (1:15). Therefore, he passionately exhorted Timothy to hold on tightly to the faith and to the sound teaching that Paul had entrusted to him (1:13).

Paul knew that consistency and personal integrity (2:22–26) would be significant factors in the young pastor's effectiveness. So Paul warned Timothy about associations with others (3:1–5), encouraging him to reflect on their years together as an example of ethical consistency in the midst of difficulty (3:10–15). In fact, Paul wrote, "all who desire to live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution" (3:12). Timothy certainly had vivid memories of trials in ministry to illustrate Paul's point (Acts 19:21—20:6).

But Paul also made sure that whatever other counsel he gave his pupil, Timothy would find beneath it all a rock-solid dependence on God's Word. Timothy's authority would not come from his own wisdom, Paul's endorsement, or the acceptance of others. His teaching would stand only to the degree that it was based on Scripture.

Paul's ringing tribute to the authority and practicality of God's Word (3:16, 17) completes a section that begins in 2:2 with his charge to Timothy to "commit" what he had learned to "faithful men who will be able to teach others also." In 3:17, Paul offered the central test for measuring whether the gospel torch had been successfully passed from one generation to the next. The application of God's Word in four distinct ways would ensure that the next generation would become "complete, thoroughly equipped for every good work" (3:17). Effective teaching would include (1) doctrine, the basic truths of the faith; (2) reproof, or challenging and confronting each other with the Word of God; (3) correction, by providing guidance from the truths in Scripture; and (4) instruction in righteousness, the personal and practical application of biblical truths.

Paul was encouraging Timothy not only to pass the truths of Scripture on to the next generation, but also to pass on the basis of those truths, the Word of God itself. As we follow in Paul's footsteps, we too must make it clear that the authority of our teaching comes from the Bible. If we teach the truth but do not teach the source of truth, we will not succeed in passing on our faith. Our affirmations and actions have to be founded on God's Word or they will be little more than wishful thinking.

1:15–17 These verses describe those who had abandoned Paul. Yet even here, Paul recalls Onesiphorus (a name meaning "Help Bringer"). This man from Ephesus had refreshed Paul as if by a cup of cold water. We too should be a refreshment to other believers.

1:18 how many ways he ministered to me: Without complaining Paul seems to cover a multitude of problems and the help Onesiphorus gave. Few people ever realize the enormous pressures and problems a pastor faces as included in the daily "care of all the churches" (2 Cor. 11:28). What reward there will be in that Day for those who minister to the ministers!

2:1–13 Paul continues to encourage Timothy to endure and to pass on the gospel faithfully (vv. 1, 2). He cites three examples from everyday life (vv. 3–7) and refers to his own sufferings and to Christ's victory (vv. 8–13).

2:1 In light of the defections of others (1:15), Paul exhorts Timothy to be faithful. But Paul's call is for Timothy to be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. The emphasis is on the strength of Christ, not on Timothy's own power. If we trust in ourselves, we are doomed to fail.

2:2 Timothy is commanded to commit Paul's teaching to faithful men. Faithful believers then have the responsibility of teaching others. This would be the basis for an endless chain of Christian discipleship, the teaching of Christian teachers (Matt. 28:18–20). among many witnesses: Discipleship may occur in large groups, small groups, or one-on-one encounters. Here Paul emphasizes a group setting.

IN COMPARISON

Descriptions of the Christian Life

In describing how Christians should live, Paul often resorts to analogies or metaphors. This chart lists some of the metaphors of the Christian life found in the NT.

Christians are called to be like . . .	Text	Meaning
Soldiers	2 Tim. 2:3, 4	Like a single-minded soldier, we should respond to the orders of our commanding officer, the Lord Jesus, with unquestioning obedience.
Farmers	2 Tim. 2:6	Farmers labor strenuously and consistently in order to reap a fruitful harvest. We also must work hard in serving the Lord.
Athletes	2 Tim. 2:5	Athletes follow strict training rules so as to avoid being disqualified from their race; we must display a similar measure of self-control.
Workers	2 Tim. 2:15	Our work is to "rightly divide" or correctly handle God's Word so as to avoid shame.
Vessels	2 Tim. 2:20, 21	We must take care to keep ourselves pure, like a clean dish, so that we will be "useful for the Master."
Fishers of men	Matt. 4:19	As fishermen, we are called to "catch" men with the Good News of Christ.
Salt	Matt. 5:13	As salt, we act as a godly preservative in an evil society; moreover, we make people thirsty to know their Creator.
Light	Matt. 5:14–16	As light, we point the way to reconciliation with God, and we reflect God's character, for He is the Light (John 1:7)
Branches	John 15:5	As branches, we bear godly fruit as long as we are attached to the Vine, Christ.
Stewards	1 Cor. 4:1, 2	Like administrators, we have responsibilities to manage. God will evaluate how we handled the resources He has given us.
Ambassadors	2 Cor. 5:20	We are representatives of God's kingdom to the lost citizens of this world.
Living stones	1 Pet. 2:5	In former days, God dwelt in a physical temple; now He dwells in His people, the church.
Priests	1 Pet. 2:5, 9, 10	Like priests, we have the privilege of approaching near to God, and the responsibility of helping others in reconciling themselves to Him.
Sojourners	1 Pet. 2:11	As children of God, we do not belong to the world. This world is not our home; we are only "passing through."

2:3–6 Three illustrations are given for faithfulness. The first is a soldier. The Christian walk is often presented as spiritual warfare. Effective service calls for singleness of purpose. The second illustration comes from athletics. The Greek games were important and demanded strenuous training (1 Cor. 9:25). No competitor could be crowned unless he competed in accordance with the rules. Here the reference is to a victor's wreath given in an athletic contest. Faithful believers will receive a victor's crown, not the royal crown that belongs to Jesus. Paul is saying that spiritual activity must be conducted within the directives of biblical faith and doctrine. To defect from true doctrine is to lose our reward (2 John 7, 8). The third illustration is that of a hardworking farmer. Conscientious, hard labor is necessary before a farmer can enjoy a bountiful harvest. Laziness cannot be a character trait of faithful Christians.

2:7 Consider means to contemplate or reflect on Paul's teachings.

2:8 Timothy is commanded to remember Christ's resurrection. The seed of David emphasizes Jesus' humanity and the fact that He would fulfill all the promises God had given to David (2 Sam. 7:11–16). Raised from the dead emphasizes that our Savior lives today seated at the right hand of God the Father.

2:9 Human circumstances cannot confine the word of God. Whether through a tract, a book, a Bible, or a simple statement, God uses His word to accomplish His purposes. There are numerous examples of people who were antagonistic to God's truth but who surrendered their lives to God when He kept after them (see Paul's conversion in Acts 9:1–25). We must not hide the gospel, but instead let it go forth unchained in spite of our own limitations.

2:10 Paul is able to endure his present difficult circumstances—his own imprisonment—because he knows that God's work is still progressing among the elect, God's chosen ones. The final outcome of their salvation will be the eternal glory of God's coming kingdom.

2:11–13 This section is possibly a hymn or confession of the early church. The form resembles the parallelism of Hebrew poetry. The hymn reflects the themes of Christ's death and resurrection introduced by Paul in v. 8.

2:11 if we died … We shall also live: Believers are united with Christ in His death and resurrection (Rom. 6:8), which become our death and resurrection the moment we believe (Rom. 6:1–4).

2:12 If we endure: Persevering in the faith even in the face of hardship or persecution will result in a reward when Christ returns (Luke 19:11–27; Rom. 8:17; Rev. 3:21).

2:13 Faithless describes the life of an immature believer who lives for himself and not for the Savior (1 Cor. 3:1–3, 15). He remains faithful: Even when believers fail the Savior, He remains loyal. For Christ to abandon us would be contrary to His faithful nature (John 10:27–30; Heb. 10:23; 13:5). Christ's relationship with Peter is a great example of God's faithfulness (Luke 22:31–34).

2:14–26 The Christian leader's moral and spiritual life is important in dealing with false teachers and those deceived by them.

2:14 these things: The momentous facts of vv. 11–13 are of such importance that it is foolish to get involved and strive about insignificant words to no profit. A faithful pastor will keep off the side issues. Paul told Timothy to keep reminding those he teaches to do the same.

IN FOCUS

“rightly dividing”

(Gk. orthotomeo) (2:15) Strong’s #3718: This word, which occurs only here in the NT, means “to cut straight,” as to cut a straight road or to keep a straight course. The idea could also be that of plowing a straight furrow or of squaring and cutting a stone to fit it in its proper place. In the Greek OT, the word is used in Prov. 3:6; 11:5 to depict God’s provision of a straight path for the righteous. Paul encouraged Timothy to handle the word of truth in a straight way, like a road that goes straight to its goal, without being turned aside by useless debates.

2:15 What is approved is what remains after testing, like metals that have been refined by fire. Rightly dividing literally means “cutting straight.” word of truth: Truth defines the nature of Scripture. It is a beacon of truth in the darkness of all kinds of falsehoods. Teachers of the Bible should make every effort to handle His truth accurately. Failure to do so will lead to divine judgment (James 3:1).

2:16–18 Paul warns Timothy about two men, Hymenaeus and Philetus, who taught that the resurrection of believers had already occurred (1 Tim. 1:20). This was probably an early form of Gnosticism that emphasized a spiritual resurrection over against the Christian belief in a future bodily resurrection.

2:19 In spite of the unfaithful actions of some, the solid foundation of God stands. The tense of the verb indicates that Paul saw God’s truth as standing not only in the past but also in the present. Isaiah 40:8 reveals that God’s Word will also stand firmly in the future, since it is eternal. The Lord knows those who are His: This is an intimate, experiential knowledge that can only be obtained in a relationship. depart from iniquity: Our sure relationship with our Father in heaven should motivate us to a life of purity.

2:20, 21 The imagery of the house is used to describe two categories of believers. Gold and silver represent believers who are faithful and useful in serving Christ. Wood and clay represent believers who fail to honor the Lord (1 Cor. 3:12–15). Master is a strong term for God’s authority over the lives of believers regardless of their level of spiritual maturity. We choose to serve the Lord in the power of the Holy Spirit in order to be useful to our Master.

2:22, 23 Flee … pursue … avoid: In these verses Paul describes in practical terms how Timothy can be a useful vessel for God's work.

2:24 Quarrel translates a military term for hand-to-hand combat. The Lord's servant must not battle with words, but instead must be gentle and kind to all.

2:25, 26 Correcting means "training" or "bringing to maturity." Those who are in opposition are those who place themselves in conflict with the preaching of God's truth, such as Hymenaeus and Philetus (v. 17). The aim of correction is repentance, or a "change of thinking." Paul exhorts Timothy to persevere in correcting his opponents because it is imperative that they should know the truth, even though they might oppose the truth at present with their false teachings about the Resurrection (v. 18). It was Paul's hope that they would finally come to their senses, or become sober again. False teaching has an intoxicating effect that dulls the mind to God's truth. Timothy's persistence in correcting them might enable them to escape the snare of the devil. The devil takes captive believers who teach false doctrine, leading others astray. One of Satan's tactics is to cause divisions in the church.

3:1–9 The rise of false teachers and the increase in moral decay that comes with them is a fact of the Christian era. The Christian leader should expect these things and deal decisively with them.

3:1 The exhortations of ch. 2 to endure hardship, be diligent, rightly divide the Word, and be a vessel fit for the Master's use are given in the context of difficult, even perilous times. Last days includes the whole time from the writing of this letter until the return of Christ.

3:2–5 A long list of traits characteristic of those who do not serve Christ.

3:2 lovers of themselves … money: See 1 Tim. 6:10. Self-centeredness heads this list of evil attitudes. blasphemers: Abusive and irreverent, without respect for either God or people. disobedient: In violation of God's command. unthankful, unholy: God desires the exact opposites.

3:3 Unloving connotes a lack of natural affection, as for parents and children (Rom. 1:31). unforgiving: Unwilling to come to terms with other persons, implacable. Without self-control contrasts with "the fruit of the Spirit" (Gal. 5:22, 23).

3:4 haughty: Puffed up (1 Tim. 6:4). lovers of pleasure: The indulgent pursuit of self-satisfaction becomes their god.

3:5 This verse is the climax of three verses containing dark descriptions of fallen humanity. A form of godliness is an outward appearance of reverence for God. Denying its power describes religious activity that is not connected to a living relationship with Jesus Christ. As time progresses, people would begin to participate in religious activities that are empty. Their activities have nothing to do with a true relationship with God or with individual faith in Jesus Christ. This kind of religion provokes God's anger (Is. 1:10–18; Matt. 23:25–28). Turn away is a command for Timothy to avoid the evil persons described in vv. 2–5. We are not to link up in common cause with them (1 Cor. 15:33).

3:6 creep into households: The empty religious individuals of vv. 2–5 use deception to gain a hearing. Make captives is a military term for taking prisoners in war. The imagery of spiritual combat is clear in these verses. Gullible women are the target of attacks by false teachers. Evidently the false teachers at Ephesus had made significant inroads among a group of women in that church (1 Tim. 5:13–15). Here is the danger of ignorance. Hence, Paul instructs Timothy to "let a woman learn"(1 Tim. 2:11).

3:7 This verse describes the women who have a desire to learn yet fail to comprehend the real truth. Knowledge (Gk. epignosin) includes both intellectual and experiential knowledge.

Counterfeit Christianity

Wherever people accept the truth of God and begin practicing it, counterfeits soon surface. That's what Paul found at Ephesus, and what he warns Timothy about (2 Tim. 3:8, 9). He mentions two characters, Jannes and Jambres, whose names mean "he who seduces" and "he who is rebellious." Neither name is in the OT, but Jewish legend held that these were the names of two Egyptian magicians who opposed Moses' demand of Pharaoh to free the Israelites. They tried to duplicate the miracles of Moses in an attempt to discredit him. But God showed that Moses' authority was more powerful (Ex. 7:11, 12, 22).

Paul faced a similar experience at Ephesus. For two years he taught the message of Christ there, in a culture heavily steeped in pagan idolatry and occultism. God confirmed his teaching through powerful miracles and the release of many from evil spirits. But local exorcists attempted to duplicate the miracles. Their scheme backfired, however, to the benefit of the gospel (Acts 19:8–20).

Counterfeits to the truth of Christ abound today, as Paul predicted they would. If we effectively communicate the gospel to friends and coworkers, we can virtually count on the fact that competing systems and worldviews will soon appear. That's why we must "continue in the things which you have learned and been assured of," basing our lives and our witness on the firm foundation of Scripture (2 Tim. 3:14–17).

3:8 Paul gives a specific example of two men who resisted truth in Moses' time. Jannes and Jambres are not named in the OT, but according to Jewish tradition, they were two of the Egyptian magicians who opposed Moses (Ex. 7:11). People of corrupt minds resist the truth because it unveils their shameful thinking and behavior.

3:9 their folly will be manifest: The character and empty religion of false teachers will ultimately be exposed because our actions are the blossom of our deepest thoughts (Prov. 23:1–8).

3:10–17 Timothy's life must contrast with that of the false teachers. He has carefully followed Paul's example of enduring hardship for Christ (vv. 10–13). Now he must continue in the teachings that he has received. Their truth is assured by the character of those who taught them (v. 14) and, above all, by their scriptural basis (vv. 15–17).

3:10, 11 you have carefully followed: Paul draws a sharp contrast between a Christian testimony and the way of the false teachers (vv. 2–9). He notes ten different qualities of his own teaching and life that Timothy had had opportunity to observe.

3:12 Those who want to live godly lives must be prepared for persecution, literally "to be hunted." God does not promise us deliverance from persecution but deliverance through it. Persecution is one of the means God uses to develop our capacity to reign with Him in His kingdom (2:12; Matt. 5:10–12; Rev. 2:10).

3:13 The Greek word translated impostors can also mean sorcerers or swindlers. deceiving and being deceived: False teachers deceive themselves as well as others (Matt. 15:18–20). Deception and self-deception are intrinsic elements of sin.

3:14 Timothy is exhorted to continue or abide in things he has learned (2:2). Remaining in God's truth is essential for godly living.

3:15 from childhood: Paul emphasizes Timothy's godly heritage (1:5). His mother, Eunice, and his grandmother, Lois, had faithfully taught him the Holy Scriptures. The truths of God's Word directed Timothy to Christ. God's Word and the Spirit of God are both essential for our salvation. The Word of God without the Spirit of God is lifeless; it has no power to act. But the Word of God empowered by the Spirit of God becomes a living force in our lives.

“inspiration of God”

(Gk. theopneustos) (3:16) Strong’s #2315: The Greek word means “God-breathed,” from theos (God) and pneo (to breathe). Although it is difficult to fully recreate the thought of this Greek expression in English, we are fairly sure that Paul meant to say that all Scripture was breathed out from God. This is the primary meaning. God not only inspired the authors who wrote the words of the Bible, but He also illuminates those who read it with a heart of faith.

3:16 Paul emphasizes the preeminence of all Scripture. Given by inspiration is literally “God-breathed.” In this verse, Paul teaches that God was actively involved in the revelation of His truth to the apostles and prophets, who wrote it down. The Author of the Bible is God Himself. Thus, Scripture is true in all that it affirms and is completely authoritative (1 Pet. 1:20, 21). The study of the Bible is profitable in at least four different ways. Doctrine is teaching. Paul highlights correct teaching first; Luke also emphasizes the Jerusalem church’s commitment to doctrine first (Acts 2:42). Reproof is conviction. This is not simply a rebuke; it is demonstrating some truth beyond dispute. Correction refers to setting something straight (2:15). Instruction refers to the process of training a child. In this list, only one of these terms is oriented to knowledge and information—that is, doctrine (1 Pet. 2:2). The other three in the list involve a change of life. Knowledge that does not change one’s life is useless. On the other hand, living without any understanding of who God is and what He expects of us is dangerous.

3:17 The study of Scripture will make a believer complete, meaning “capable” or “proficient.” Thoroughly equipped means “fully prepared.” The person who masters the Word of God will never lose his or her way. every good work: Paul emphasizes the essential link between knowing God’s Word and applying it to one’s daily life. Right doctrine should produce right practice.

(Gk. epiphaneia) (1:10; 4:1, 8; 2 Thess. 2:8; 1 Tim. 6:14; Titus 2:13) Strong’s #2015: This word literally means “a shining forth” and was used in Greek literature to denote a divine appearance. The English word epiphany is a close equivalent. The NT writers use the word to refer to Jesus’ first coming, the time when He entered this world as a man (1:10). They also use the word to speak of Jesus’ second coming, specifically to His appearance to all the world (Matt. 24:27).

4:1–8 These verses are the climax of the letter. Paul gives Timothy a final charge to fulfill his ministry (vv. 1–5) and backs up this charge with his own testimony of faithfulness in face of imminent martyrdom (vv. 6–8).

4:1, 2 I charge: Paul underscores the importance of his command to Timothy by calling on God and Jesus to be witnesses to it. He reminds Timothy that Jesus will return in judgment. Paul's charge to Timothy is to preach the word. The foundation of any ministry is God's Word. Preaching God's truth is a sacred and demanding task, requiring perseverance and courage. Be ready means to take a stand. Timothy was to be alert at all times to his responsibilities, even when it was inconvenient. This type of ministry is not for a novice (James 3:1). longsuffering … teaching. Patience and instruction are two necessary components of an effective ministry. True spiritual growth occurs over a period of time, through consistent teaching and application of God's Word.

4:3 Timothy needs to be alert and ready to preach God's Word. Sound teaching is essential for spiritual maturity, but will not always be tolerated. There will come a time when people will seek out teachers to tell them what they want to hear and what makes them feel good.

4:4 People turn their ears to avoid truth. This is the sixth time that Paul uses the word truth in this short letter (2:15, 18, 25; 3:7, 8). He had used the word five times in the first letter to Timothy (1 Tim. 2:4, 7; 3:15; 4:3; 6:5). As Paul faced execution, he was evidently concerned that his son in the faith would be tempted to depart from truth, lured by deceptive false teachers.

4:5 Watchful means "sober." Endure afflictions refers to the hard toil of ministry, which will have its own reward (2:12). work of an evangelist: Evangelist is one of five offices mentioned by Paul in Eph. 4:11. An evangelist equips and encourages believers to share the Good News.

4:6 Paul is aware that the time of his death is near. A drink offering was an offering performed by pouring wine out on the ground or altar (Num. 28:11–31). Paul's life was already being poured out in service to Jesus Christ, the Lamb (Rev. 5:4–6). my departure is at hand: Paul was confident that no one could touch him until the heavenly Father ushered him into his eternal home with a victory celebration.

Starting blocks for runners at a stadium in the Greek city of Delphi. Paul spoke of his service to Christ as a race in which he persevered until the very end (2 Tim. 4:7).

4:7 Paul had been vigilant in his service to God. Note that Paul did not make these comments until the end of his race, until he was about to die. He did not presume or rely on his past service. Instead he persevered, struggled, and served God until the end (1 Cor. 9:24–27).

4:8 Paul understood the eternal potential of a lifetime of faithful service to Christ. Jesus would return with rewards for those who stick it out over the long haul. The crown of righteousness is a special reward given to those who serve God faithfully on this earth (Matt. 5:10–12). There will be as many crowns as there are runners who finish the race well. All who have loved His appearing are those believers in Christ who have lived faithfully in the hope of His return (Titus 2:11–15; 1 John 2:28).

4:9 Paul is in prison and sends a heartfelt plea to Timothy, asking his young friend to come … quickly. Paul desired Christian fellowship and some words of encouragement from Timothy, the one he had trained in the faith.

4:10 Demas, Paul's trusted coworker (Col. 4:14, Philem. 24), had fled because he loved this present world. He could not endure the hardships of ministry and instead followed worldly pleasures and comfort.

4:11, 12 Only Luke is with me: The value of a trusted friend in the midst of hard times cannot be overstated. Paul's reference to Mark as useful is a note of tender restoration. Mark's desertion of Paul in Pamphylia on his first missionary journey had led to the separation of Paul and Barnabas at the beginning of Paul's second missionary journey (Acts 15:36–40). But later Paul and Mark were reconciled, and Mark served Paul in the ministry (Col. 4:10). Now at the end of his life, Paul expresses his appreciation of Mark's service. to Ephesus: Paul was sending a faithful coworker Tychicus (Acts 20:4; Eph. 6:21; Col. 4:7) to replace Timothy at Ephesus.

“books”

(Gk. biblion) (4:13; Luke 4:17; John 20:30; 21:25; Rev. 1:11) Strong’s #975; parchments (Gk. membrana) (4:13) Strong’s #975; 3200: The word biblion is common in the NT but not the word membrana, which occurs only here. It is a word derived from Latin that means an animal skin used for writing. The two words in this passage have been interpreted in three different ways: (1) “The scrolls” were copies of OT books, and “the parchments” were copies of various NT books; (2) “the books” were copies of OT and NT books, and “the parchments” were blank writing material or notebooks containing rough drafts; or (3) the two words signified the same thing: “the books—that is, the parchment notebooks.” If the third interpretation is correct, it suggests that Paul was anxious to recover some rough drafts he had left behind when he was arrested.

4:13 the cloak: Paul was probably in an unheated prison. Carpus appears only here in Scripture. books … parchments: Perhaps (1) Paul’s legal papers, (2) the OT Scriptures, (3) written accounts of Jesus’ words and works, or (4) other NT materials, including copies of Paul’s epistles.

Alexander, the Enemy

Wherever the gospel enjoys unusual success, believers will soon find someone determined to oppose it. In fact, it seems that the greater the impact that the message of Christ has, the more strident and determined will be the opposition.

The man Alexander (1 Tim. 4:14) became a confirmed enemy of Paul and the church at Ephesus. Some identify him as a Jew who lived in the city during the riots instigated by Demetrius and the silversmiths to oppose Paul's preaching (Acts 19:21–41). The Jews tried to use Alexander to convince the Gentile Ephesians that they (the Jews) had nothing to do with Paul and the burgeoning Christian movement (19:33).

Others, however, believe that Alexander was one of two heretical teachers at Ephesus mentioned by Paul (1 Tim. 1:19, 20). With his associate Hymenaeus, Alexander was said to have "suffered shipwreck" concerning the faith, indicating that at one point he may have been counted among the believers. But Paul, apparently using his apostolic authority, "delivered { him} to Satan," which may have been some form of excommunication from the church.

Whoever Alexander was, Paul counted him as a confirmed enemy and warned Timothy to watch out for him (2 Tim. 4:15). However, rather than attack him, Paul left his fate in the Lord's hands, to repay him "according to his works."

Who are the confirmed enemies of the gospel where you live and work? Are you on guard against their attempts to discredit the cause of Christ?

4:14, 15 Timothy is warned about Alexander. This is possibly the person named in 1 Tim. 1:20 or Acts 19:33 who caused harm to Paul's ministry in Ephesus. Jesus warned the apostles that they could expect opposition (John 15:18–21). We don't need to look for opposition, but if we don't have any it is possible that we are not on the cutting edge of ministry.

4:16 Paul echoes the forgiving attitude of Christ. Although many had abandoned him, he asked God not to hold them accountable for their actions.

4:17 In spite of the failure of his friends, Paul was supported by the Lord, who always strengthens and empowers. Often people will fail us in troublesome times. The Lord, however, never fails His children, no matter how difficult the circumstances are (Luke 22:32; Heb. 7:25). God had consistently empowered Paul during his life so that he could continue to preach the truth to the Gentiles. Lion is probably a reference to execution by lions. It is also possible that Paul is using the word as a metaphor for the spiritual conflict from which he was delivered.

4:18 Paul's expression of confidence in God builds to a crescendo of praise, ending with Amen.

4:19–21 Paul closes the epistle with a number of instructions regarding various individuals in his ministry. Greet Prisca and Aquila: Prisca is another name for Priscilla. Paul had met both Priscilla and Aquila in Corinth on his second missionary journey (Acts 18:1–3), and they had assisted in God's work in Ephesus (Acts 18:18, 19). Onesiphorus: This greeting indicates that Timothy was probably still at Ephesus, for Onesiphorus was from there (1:16–18; 1 Tim. 1:3). Trophimus, a member of the church of Ephesus (Acts 21:29), had traveled with Paul to Jerusalem (Acts 20:4).

4:22 The final note of this book and of Paul's ministry is grace, a fitting conclusion for this man of God and his faithful service to the Lord Jesus Christ. The fact that the pronoun you is plural may indicate that Paul intended this letter to be read before the congregation.

The Epistle to Titus

———— POINT MAN," "PINCH HITTER," "CLUTCH PLAYER," "go-getter." These terms describe a person who can be counted on, someone who knows what to do and how to do it and who works tirelessly to get it done. Titus was that kind of person.

Titus had to be. Much of his work, like the apostle Paul's, was dangerous, unpopular, difficult, and tiring. It involved traveling, introducing strangers to new ideas, constantly making new friends, consistently battling new enemies, and even deflecting threats on one's life. The number of people who could share such a load was small, but the early church desperately needed them. Not just anyone could start and maintain a new church in a hostile world. Yet Titus rose to the challenge.

The believers in Crete lacked leadership and were suffering as a result. False teachers were taking advantage of the absence of sound doctrine. Judging from Paul's exhortations, the harmony and morals of the young congregation were disrupted. Paul relied on Titus to help them establish their leadership and make up their other deficits. Their struggles are repeated in every age, and this letter is as relevant today as it was to Titus.

Although Titus contains only forty-six verses, it covers a wide range of topics. It is a key New Testament book for church organization, with its guidelines for elders, pastors, and other believers. Furthermore, it contains one of the clearest statements about God's grace in all of the New Testament (2:11–14; 3:3–7). It explicates the significance of Christ's first (2:11) and second coming (2:13). The book contributes to our understanding of the work of the Holy Spirit in salvation and the Christian life (3:5). But it is known most for its practical instruction about the roles of men, women, and servants (2:2–10) and its instruction for dealing with false teaching (1:9–16; 2:1, 7, 8, 12, 15; 3:2, 8–11, 14). A church needs organization, sound doctrine, and good teaching to survive. In this letter, Paul gives Titus a succinct overview on how to lead a church.

Whereas the letters to Timothy emphasize sound doctrine, the letter to Titus emphasizes good works (1:16; 2:7, 14; 3:1, 5, 8, 14). There were influential people in the church who were motivated by personal interest and selfish gain (1:11). In his letter, Paul exposes the ways this was affecting the doctrine (1:11) and practice (1:16) of the church and urges Titus to champion purity, service, and kindness toward others (2:11–15; 3:3–7). Paul reminds Titus that salvation is not based on our own "works of righteousness" (3:5) but rather is the result of God's work of kindness and love toward us (3:4). We are unable to do good works in our disobedient and selfish state (3:3). Salvation in Christ frees us to do good works, and the "washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit" (3:5) enables us.

God wants His people to devote themselves to doing good works (2:11, 12; 3:1, 8, 14). Older men (2:2), older women (2:3), young women (2:4, 5), young men (2:6–8), and servants (2:9, 10) should "adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things" (2:10). In his letter, Paul exhorts the believers at Crete to display the testimony of good works to outsiders (2:11, 12; 3:1, 8, 14). While good works are a Christian duty, they are also a gift from God. Through justification in Christ (3:7), God declares us righteous. We must have this legal standing in order to qualify before God to do good works. Redemption (2:14) removes us from the jurisdiction of Satan by paying the debt incurred by our sins. At the same time, it places us in the family of God so that we might be "His own special people, zealous for good works" (2:14).

This letter says it was written by the apostle Paul (1:1), and there is little reason to doubt that he wrote it. Although some scholars have raised objections in the last two hundred years, these objections rest mainly on the assumption that Paul died at the end of the imprisonment described in Acts 28 and did not make the journey implied in the letter to Timothy and Titus. The historical details within Titus itself give us no reason to abandon the traditional view that Paul wrote this letter. Because the arguments against Pauline authorship are the same ones suggested against the Pastoral Epistles in general, see the Introduction to 1 Timothy for more information.

It seems that Paul wrote Titus some time between his two Roman imprisonments, between A.D. 62 and 65. Tradition holds that Titus was written shortly after 1 Timothy, around A.D. 63.

Crete is a large island, approximately 160 miles long and 35 miles wide, in the Mediterranean Sea. The island is located one hundred miles southeast of Greece. The Cretans developed a relatively prosperous agriculture and trading economy, creating one of the best-known business centers of the ancient world. Such prosperity also fostered a great deal of excess. In 1:12,

Paul quotes the Greek poet Epimenides, who wrote, “Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, lazy gluttons.”

Paul may have planted a church on the island of Crete during a missionary trip after his first imprisonment in Rome, which ended about A.D. 62. When Paul departed from Crete, he left Titus behind to “set in order the things that { were} lacking” in the church (1:5).

Titus is mentioned numerous times in the New Testament as one of Paul’s most trusted assistants. He was a Greek and was converted by Paul (Gal. 2:3). He assisted the apostle on some of his missionary journeys (2 Cor. 7:6, 7; 8:6, 16) and went with him to the Jerusalem council (Acts 15:2; Gal. 2:1–3). Paul mentioned Titus several times in Second Corinthians (2 Cor. 2:13; 7:6, 13, 14; 8:6, 16, 23; 12:18). Titus carried the letter to Corinth. While at Corinth, Titus was entrusted with collecting funds from the Corinthian church. Later Titus went to Dalmatia at Paul’s request (2 Tim. 4:10). Early church tradition says that Titus returned to Crete and spent the remainder of his life there.

Commentary

IN FOCUS

(Gk. doulos) (1:1; John 13:16; 1 Cor. 7:21; Philem. 16; Rev. 6:15; 13:16) Strong’s #1401: This Greek word means “a bondslave,” one who is subject to the will of his master. The Roman Empire depended on slavery, and many Christians were slaves. The NT does not endorse slavery, nor does it promote a political crusade against it. Instead, Paul encouraged slaves to get their freedom if they could do so within the confines of the law (1 Cor. 7:21), and it seems that Paul was asking Philemon to set Onesimus free (Philem. 15, 16). To express his complete submission to God’s will, Paul described himself as slave to God (Rom. 1:1; Gal. 1:10).

1:1–4 The standard opening format for Greek letters (1) identifies Paul as sender, (2) names Titus as recipient, and (3) extends a brief greeting. In identifying himself, Paul emphasizes the purpose of his apostleship in a way that makes this introduction more detailed and solemn than those in the epistles to Timothy.

1:1 Paul introduces the theme of the book, good works, in the first verse with the term godliness. Good works or works appears eight times in this epistle (twice in v. 16; 2:7, 14; 3:1, 5, 8, 14). At least two other phrases parallel the good works theme: “reverent in behavior” (2:3) and “adorn the doctrine of God” (2:10). Neither truth nor faith is in isolation from the practical outworking of the Christian life.

1:2 cannot lie: This phrase translates a single Greek word meaning “truthful,” or “free from all deceit.” The salvation that God has promised to each of us who know His Son will be fulfilled; God is faithful to His promises. The first recorded disciplinary action that God took in the church was for lying (Acts 5:3). One of the evidences of the “latter times” is “speaking lies in hypocrisy” (1 Tim. 4:2). We often don’t take lying as seriously as sexual sins; but God knows that if a person’s word can’t be trusted, then nothing else matters.

1:3 The Greek word translated preaching was the word for the message proclaimed by a public herald. Paul places emphasis on the message, not the messenger. Christians should always focus on Christ, for He is the center of our faith, not any one preacher (1 Cor. 9:16; 2 Cor. 4:5). The power is in the truth of what is preached, the good news that Christ has saved us from our sins (Rom. 1:15, 16; 1 Cor. 2:4). committed to me: A king's commission is a definite, official act, giving a person a task and authority to carry it out. Paul's commission was as God's "imperial secretary," carrying the royal message of salvation.

1:4 true son: Legitimately born. Titus was another of Paul's converts. What a blessed event. common faith: Faith held in common. Grace, mercy, and peace: Paul's usual greeting in the Pastoral Epistles.

The central plain of the island of Crete in the Mediterranean Sea. Paul left Titus in charge of the church on this island (Titus 1:5).

1:5–9 Paul instructs Titus to appoint leaders for the churches in Crete. Those appointed must have their family life in order (v. 6), avoid the vices of v. 7, and cultivate the virtues of v. 8. Their ministry must be one of faithfully teaching the truth of the gospel (v. 9).

1:5 Lacking indicates an unfinished organization of the churches in Crete due to the brevity of Paul's visit. Paul identifies three specific areas of shortcoming: (1) a lack of organization in the churches (vv. 5–9); (2) unchallenged false teachers (vv. 10, 11; 3:10, 11); (3) a need for teaching in doctrine and practical living (2:1–10; 3:1, 2). Titus was left behind to set in order these deficiencies. Titus's first step toward completing his task was to appoint elders in every city (Acts 14:23). Apparently the early church had several leaders in a particular church instead of one principal leader. The Greek words for elder and bishop (literally, overseer) seem to have been used interchangeably by Paul (v. 7). Elder perhaps speaks more of the office and its authority, while bishop may speak more of the person's function and the ministry of oversight (Acts 20:17).

1:6 Blameless means to have nothing in one's conduct on which someone could base an accusation (1 Tim. 3:2). Such is to be the overall characteristic of an elder. Yet Paul further defines this blamelessness with sixteen qualities. These qualities are in three areas: family life (v. 6), personal life (vv. 7, 8), and doctrinal beliefs (v. 9). The contrast between the blameless behavior of church elders and the base behavior of the false teachers should have been evident to all (vv. 10–16). husband of one wife: This phrase is found only in the Pastoral Epistles (1 Tim. 3:2, 12; 5:9). Its exact meaning is debated. The apostle might be barring a polygamist, a divorced or remarried man, or a man known to be unfaithful to his wife. Whatever the exact meaning of this phrase, it is clear that Paul was emphasizing, as Jesus did (Matt. 19:5), the importance of marital faithfulness. Marriage is the uniting of a man and a woman into "one flesh." faithful children: Not only should the man have a good relationship with his wife; he should also have children who demonstrate faithfulness to God. If a man has children who reject the ways of God, this reflects on the father's ability to lead others outside his home. This rule would apply to children who are not yet fully grown, but possibly not to adult children.

1:7–9 Elders were not to be self-willed, but self-controlled. If they were self-seeking, like the false teachers on Crete (vv. 10–16), they would not possess the character required to promote good works and sound doctrine among the believers. Convict means to rebuke in such a way as to produce repentance and confession of sin (John 16:8). A rebuke can have the positive results of producing change in a person's life.

1:10–16 Leaders must be appointed (vv. 5–9) in order to stop false teachers from spreading a doctrine that leads to immoral living.

1:10, 11 many insubordinate: In these verses, Paul describes the characteristics of the false teachers whose teaching was contrary to the truth and was undermining the authority of church leaders. those of the circumcision: Apparently there were Jewish Christians in the churches of Crete who were limiting the Christian freedom of Gentile Christians by requiring an adherence to Jewish laws (Gal. 3).

1:12 Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, lazy gluttons: Paul is quoting the Cretan poet Epimenides, who wrote these words around 600 B.C. The Cretans were so much regarded as liars in the Mediterranean world that the expression "to Cretanize" meant to lie. Paul was contrasting the Cretans' reputation with God's. The Lord was incapable of lying (v. 2).

1:13 This testimony is true: Paul confirms these as facts and says rebuke them sharply. There was no place for timidity here. Sharply (Gk. apotomos) meant "to cut off abruptly." That meant the purpose of the rebuke was that they may be sound or "healthy" in the faith. Rebuke was not vindictive but curative, as it should be always.

1:14 The word fable is always used in contrast to Christian doctrine (1 Tim. 4:6, 7). These Jewish fables were probably legends about OT figures, like some that survive to this day in nonbiblical writings. This speculation was not only opposed to the truth, but it also undermined the faith (v. 13). commandments of men: The rules that come from false doctrine are contrasted with the good works (v. 16) that should proceed from sound doctrine (see Mark 7:1–16 for examples of fables and commandments of men).

1:15 In this verse Paul highlights the mistaken asceticism of the Cretan false teachers. They had identified certain foods and practices as defiled when in reality it was their minds that were defiled and unbelieving. On the other hand, to the pure all things are pure. Because the Cretan believers had placed their trust in Christ focusing their minds on Him, they would be empowered by God's Spirit to lead pure lives. Jesus taught the same principle in Matt. 15:11. Physical objects or external practices do not defile a person, but a mind focused on evil thoroughly corrupts. Although present-day believers are typically not concerned with Jewish ritual observances, the principle is still applicable. We should be more concerned about renewing our mind and focusing it on Jesus than observing a list of rules that have no biblical support.

1:16 They profess … but: Profession and performance should not contradict. Faith and works go together. True faith produces true works. Disqualified has the idea of being tested but disapproved.

Personal Training

In a world where education seems to be offered everywhere, the biblical description of the church as God's training center for holy living is often overlooked (2:1–15). This error becomes obvious when a church lacks leaders. Effective leadership in a church is the result of proper training. When young believers have not been trained, the church begins to flounder.

Paul was one of the most effective leaders of the early church. He preached the gospel tirelessly, founded a succession of churches throughout Asia Minor and Greece, and grounded these churches in God's Word and the essentials of the Christian faith. But to be truly effective, Paul had to nurture others to follow in his footsteps and faithfully lead the church into the next century. Titus was one of the young men Paul was training for leadership. He had accompanied Paul early in his ministry (Gal. 2:1–3), had served as Paul's representative (2 Cor. 7:5–16), and was considered a "fellow worker" (2 Cor. 8:23). When Paul wrote this letter, he had begun to pass the reins of leadership to this capable young man who was overseeing the churches on the island of Crete.

In his instructions to Titus, Paul reminds him of the traits of a spiritual leader (1:5–16). Paul had chosen Titus as a helper because he had evidenced these qualities. Now he had to model such traits to others, searching for those who could become leaders in the newly planted churches.

Paul instructed Titus to place the responsibility of moral leadership on the elders. Older men and women (2:1–5) had to lead the way in personal holiness. If their lives demonstrated the transforming power of the gospel, they would leave a lasting impact on following generations. Young men who saw older men diligently maintaining their faith in Christ would do likewise (2:2). Young women who heard older women encourage them to "love their husbands, to love their children" (2:4) would be more likely to take the counsel to heart if they saw their mentors doing that themselves. Titus himself was to exhort "young men" (2:6), while making sure that he was consistently following the pattern of life he was teaching (2:7).

The degree to which sound training exists in a local church practically determines the health of that church. The pastor may be the designated teacher, but the Bible makes everyone both a trainer and a trainee. Church members should rely on each other for spiritual guidance. The older generation should pass on to the next generation their vital Christian faith by word and example. The character that results from this process of spiritual training truly is an eye-catching advertisement for the gospel.

2:1–10 Paul gives Titus instructions for various members of the Christian household—older people, younger people, and bondservants.

2:1 Paul normally follows a rebuke of false doctrine with an admonition of how the believer should act (2 Tim. 3:10, 14). Sound means “healthy.” Paul makes frequent use of the term in the Pastoral Epistles. He uses it five times in Titus (1:9, 13; 2:2, 8). Paul views sound doctrine as the root that produces the fruit of sound practice (good works), such as faith, love, and patience (v. 2), as well as sound speech (v. 8). Right thinking is the raw material for right actions (Ps. 119:11; Prov. 23:7; Rom. 12:2; James 1:13–15). Our actions will naturally reveal the direction of our thoughts.

2:2 Older men refers to men older than about fifty. The same is true of older women (v. 3). The character of those who are mature should serve as a spiritual example to all. Maturity is not determined simply by age or even by how much a person knows; it is determined by how skilled a person is in applying the truth to life and in distinguishing good from evil (Heb. 5:13, 14).

The Case for Women Teaching and Counseling Women

Paul in Titus 2:3 makes a case for a special ministry in the church—older women teaching and counseling other women. Women know and understand other women better than men. Every woman needs another woman to confide in—and what better place for this to happen than in the church.

The phrase "older women" speaks of the maturity required for the woman who conducts such a ministry to others. She should be a maturing, praying, trusting, godly Christian.

2:3 In keeping with the theme of good works (vv. 1, 2), older women are not to engage in evil practices like slander, gossip, or drunkenness; instead, they are to teach younger women (v. 4). Paul outlines a tremendous curriculum here that can be implemented with great profit in any local church. If greater emphasis were given to women teaching women, especially when it comes to intimate and domestic relations, there would likely be much less temptation for men to abuse marital fidelity.

2:4 In this verse the word admonish means "to give encouragement through advice." Older women are to pass on their insights to their younger counterparts. love their husbands: Paul speaks here not of romantic love, but of the commitment of a woman to her husband's welfare. Husbands and wives must be challenged to learn and practice this love by an act of their will.

2:5 homemakers: The importance that Paul places on the role of women in the home may also be seen in 1 Tim. 5:2–16 and Prov. 31. obedient to their own husbands: Women are not under the authority of men in general, but rather the authority of their own husbands. The Greek word translated obedient is a military term that indicates voluntary submission to the one in authority (Eph. 5:21). that the word of God may not be blasphemed: Paul wanted the older women to teach the younger women so that their actions would glorify God, build His kingdom, and strengthen the family. Failure to follow Paul's instructions would result in the Word of God being maligned in the pagan community. When children of God do not follow the instructions of their Father in His Word, unbelievers are led to reject the sincerity of their religious profession and the truth of the Word of God.

2:6 Young men are to pursue the character qualities that older men should possess already.

2:7, 8 a pattern of good works: Paul concludes his instructions to various age groups by reminding Titus that his personal life is an essential aspect of his teaching. More people will learn from our daily actions than from what we say. Therefore, we must pay careful attention that our lives are in line with our beliefs.

2:9, 10 bondservants: About half of those who lived in the Roman Empire in the early church were slaves. Good works from a Christian slave would make the doctrine of God very attractive to a non-Christian master. Believing the teachings of Scripture is proper and good, but living those truths will influence the nonbelievers with whom we rub shoulders every day.

IN FOCUS

“God our Savior”

(Gk. soter hemon theos) (1:3; 2:10; 3:4; 1 Tim. 1:1; 2:3) Strong’s #4990; 2257; 2316: In the Pastoral Epistles, this expression or similar ones appear often. In each of these verses, the appellation seems to describe God the Father. The OT writers speak of God as Savior (Ps. 24:5; Is. 12:2; 45:15, 21) and so do a few other NT writers (Luke 1:47; Jude 25). The Son is called Savior in the Pastoral Epistles (1:4; 2:13; 3:6; 2 Tim. 1:10), and in 2:13 the Son is called “our God and Savior,” thus clearly identifying Jesus as God.

2:11 appeared: Twice in this context Paul speaks of Christ’s appearance in history. The first time Christ came in grace to save people from their sins; the second time He will come in glory (v. 13) to reign.

2:12, 13 The appearance of the grace of God is to produce two results in the lives of believers: First, we are to resist the evil temptations of this world, living godly lives in this present age. Second, we are to look for Christ’s return. Paul reminded Timothy that there is a special crown awaiting “all who have loved his appearing.” (2 Tim. 4:8). great God and Savior Jesus Christ: This is one of the strongest statements of the deity of Christ in the NT.

2:14 Redeem means “to purchase.” With His death on the Cross, Christ paid the price to release us from the bondage of sin (Eph. 1:7) to which every unbeliever is a slave (Rom. 6:6, 7, 17, 20). God’s purpose in redeeming us is not only to save us from hell; He also wants to free us from sin so that we can produce good works that glorify Him (Eph. 2:8–10).

2:15 rebuke: For the third time in this letter (1:11, 13), Paul strongly commands Titus to confront false teachers.

3:1–11 God’s grace in us should be evident by the respect we give to rulers (v. 1) and by the way we treat others (v. 2). We once were just like our ungodly neighbors (v. 3), but God has totally changed us (vv. 4–7). Therefore, we should maintain good works (v. 8), avoid foolish disputes (v. 9), and admonish divisive people (vv. 10, 11).

3:1, 2 Remind: Paul had already instructed the Cretans regarding submission and obedience to the authorities in their communities. Titus was to remind them of their duty to be good citizens, a virtue that the Cretans notoriously lacked (1:12). rulers and authorities: This phrase often refers to the angelic realm, including both good (Eph. 3:10) and evil angels (Eph. 6:12). Here it refers to civil leaders and institutions. Disobedience permeated the Cretans’ lifestyle, both in the church (v. 10) and in government. Titus must advise them to get along with civil authorities and to live peacefully with their neighbors. This type of life would reflect positively on the Christian faith and thus glorify God.

3:3 Paul provides another motive for good works by explaining the rationale for the Christian life. The believers were supposed to treat others the way God in His grace had treated them when they were involved in the ungodly activities noted in this verse (Rom. 5:8).

3:4 But when: Amazing grace! God our Savior describes the Father (1:3). God’s love for us appeared in Jesus Christ, who is thus called our Savior (v. 6).

"washing of regeneration"

(Gk. loutron palingenesias) (3:5) Strong's #3067; 3824: The Greek word for washing can signify the receptacle of washing (the basin) or the act of washing itself. In Eph. 5:26, the only other NT occurrence of this word, the natural meaning is "washing". Here also the action of washing is presented. Quite simply, the text says that regeneration is characterized by or accompanied by the action of washing. The regenerative activity of the Holy Spirit is characterized elsewhere in Scripture as cleansing and purifying (Ezek. 36:25–27; John 3:5). The Greek term for regeneration literally means "being born again"—indicating a new birth effected by the Holy Spirit (John 3:6; Rom. 8:16; Gal. 4:6). Thus, God saved us through one process with two aspects: the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Spirit.

3:5 not by works of righteousness: Since Paul has been exhorting Titus to emphasize good works in his ministry with the Cretans, he wants to make it clear that such works have no value in saving a person. Rather, it is solely on the basis of God's mercy that we are delivered from the penalty of our sin. washing of regeneration: This phrase refers to the work of the Holy Spirit, who in a moment makes a person new by the cleansing of regeneration (the new birth). This new nature is the ground for living the Christian life and performing good deeds. renewing of the Holy Spirit: The continual process of Christian living is enabled by the Holy Spirit, resulting in growth in character and good works.

3:6 poured out … abundantly: Richly, lavishly (Acts 2:33). The Father sent the promised Holy Spirit through the work of Jesus (Luke 24:49; Acts 1:4, 5).

3:7 we should become heirs: God justifies believers so that they might become coheirs with Jesus Christ in His coming reign (Rom. 8:17; 2 Tim. 2:12).

3:8 This is a faithful saying: Paul is emphasizing that what he has written (vv. 4–8) is a trustworthy statement, one that is central to the Christian faith. There are four other places in the Pastoral Epistles where Paul labels his teaching as a faithful saying (1 Tim. 1:15; 3:1; 4:9; 2 Tim. 2:11–13). It is significant that the faithful saying in Titus includes an admonition to maintain good works, the theme of the letter. These things are good and profitable: This emphasizes the practical benefit of good works.

3:9–11 Paul was admonishing Titus to avoid anything that would promote wickedness among the believers. Reject a divisive man: Titus was to cut off the church's relationship with any person who would not submit to correction after two warnings (2 Thess. 3:14, 15). The Greek word for warped here suggests that Satan is perverting this person. Sinning indicates that the man will not change his ways and thus continues to rebel against God.

United for the Work

Working without phones, faxes, cars, or planes, a dedicated, diverse team of first-century believers spread the good news about Jesus throughout the Roman world. Paul mentioned several of these coworkers to Titus—Artemas, Tychicus, Zenas the lawyer, and Apollos (Titus 3:12, 13)—but there were many others; for example, Barnabas (Acts 4:36, 37), Priscilla and Aquila (Rom. 16:3–5), Silas (Acts 15:34), and Junia (Rom. 16:7).

The task of proclaiming the gospel in the face of sometimes fierce opposition knit these early believers together. They planned their travel not only around the tasks of ministry, but also around their relationships with each other. For example, Paul encouraged Titus to come to him at Nicopolis during a seasonal break (Titus 3:12). They also took care to provide necessities for each other (3:13).

The principle emerges from this pattern that the cause of Christ goes forward even in the face of opposition when the workers are united for the work.

3:12, 13 Tychicus, one of Paul's assistants, is also mentioned in Acts 20:4; Eph. 6:21; Col. 4:7; 2 Tim. 4:12. The city of Nicopolis was on the Adriatic coast of Greece. Apollos was a fellow worker of Paul's (Acts 18:24; 19:1; 1 Cor. 1:12; 3:4–6, 22; 4:6; 16:12), an Alexandrian who had been taught by Priscilla and Aquila and had eloquently preached the gospel at Ephesus and Corinth (Acts 18:24—19:1).

3:14 Paul ends his letter to Titus with an emphasis on good works, the theme of this letter (1:1). to meet urgent needs: Paul gives the Cretans a practical way they can start demonstrating their faith in good works: they can begin meeting the needs of other people. that they may not be unfruitful: A recurring theme throughout the NT is that believers should live up to their holy calling. They should continue being sanctified (Heb. 10:14, 23–26). Justification is a gift solely from God, but we will be rewarded according to what we do on this earth (Rev. 22:12). What a tragedy it will be for some to stand ashamed at Christ's return (1 John 2:28). How much better it will be to abound in good works that the Holy Spirit empowered us to do (Phil. 4:17).

3:15 those who love us: Paul’s Christian friends in Crete.

The Epistle to Philemon

———— UNDER ROMAN LAW, A SLAVE WHO RAN AWAY from his master could face the death penalty. In spite of this possibility, the apostle Paul sent Onesimus, a runaway slave and a recent convert to Christianity, back to his owner Philemon to make restitution. The Epistle to Philemon is Paul's plea that Onesimus no longer be viewed as a runaway slave, but rather as a "beloved brother" (vv. 16, 17; Col. 4:9). Obedience to these requests would require forgiveness and restoration, actions that no other slave owner would have to contemplate in the ancient world. But Christians were called to a higher calling, one that contradicted the expectations of the culture at large. While the world pursued power and glory, Christians were to pursue the way of the Cross—the way of forgiveness, servanthood, suffering, and love.

The greeting and the content of the letter indicate that Philemon is the intended recipient. Philemon was a slave owner whose home served as the meeting place for a local church. Philemon probably lived in Colosse, a city in the Roman province of Asia Minor. He was a convert to Christianity as a result of Paul's ministry, possibly during the apostle's stay in Ephesus (Acts 19:26). Apphia was probably his wife, and Archippus may have been his son, possibly serving at this time as the pastor of the church that met in Philemon's house (Col. 4:17).

Philemon owned a slave named Onesimus, a common name for slaves in that period. Onesimus ran away and had apparently stolen something from his master. Having fled to Rome, the escaped slave providentially came into contact with Paul, became a Christian, and remained with the apostle for some time, serving him in prison. However, restoration and restitution needed to be made. It was agreed that Onesimus would return to Philemon, even though this could result in the former's death. Paul wrote a letter to his friend Philemon, pleading the cause of Onesimus. At the same time he wrote a letter to the church at Colosse and sent it with Tychicus (Col. 4:7–9). The New Testament does not reveal what finally happened to Onesimus. Some have taken him to be the Onesimus who eventually became the bishop of Ephesus, mentioned by Ignatius in the early second century.

The Epistle to Philemon was not written to refute theological error or to teach doctrine. However, into this short letter Paul skillfully weaves the concepts of salvation (vv. 19). Although here these ideas speak of Paul's relationship with Onesimus, they remind us of Christ's relationship with us (Gal. 4:1–7). We were once slaves to sin, but Christ redeemed us from our awful fate, death.

This letter is basically an earnest plea for a Christian love that would confront the cruelty and hatred embodied in the cultural institutions of that day. Paul commends Philemon for already expressing that type of love (vv. 19). Paul's love for Onesimus went beyond mere words; he was willing to give out of his own poverty to guarantee this slave's well-being.

Three times in this book (vv. 4 with Phil. 1:3, 4). Also, many of those who sent their greetings with this letter are the same ones who did so in the letter to the Colossians. This fact indicates the close relationship between the two letters (Col. 4:12–15).

Paul was a prisoner when he wrote this epistle, but his location is uncertain. Three possibilities have been suggested: Ephesus, Caesarea (Acts 24—26), and Rome (Acts 28). But most hold that Paul wrote this letter during the first Roman imprisonment around A.D. 60, along with the other Prison Epistles—Ephesians, Philippians, and Colossians.

Commentary

1 Paul identifies himself not as an apostle, but as a prisoner, because of his surrender to the cause of Christ and the fact that he was writing from prison in Rome (vv. 23). Timothy was with Paul in Rome (Col. 1:1) and in Ephesus. To Philemon: All we know about Philemon is contained in this short letter. Residing at Colosse, Philemon was apparently a model Christian. He was an active worker for Christ and also the owner of the slave Onesimus, who had run away. Philemon is called beloved. Paul's plea (vv. 10) will be built on the concept of love. Fellow laborer indicates someone who is united with Paul in the work of Christ.

2 Apphia may have been the wife of Philemon. Archippus may have been the son of Philemon or perhaps an elder of the Colossian church (Col. 4:17). fellow soldier: This term implies more than fellow laborer (v. 1). It is used only one other time in the NT, when Paul speaks of Epaphroditus (Phil. 2:25). in your house: The church was meeting in Philemon's house. Philemon may have been an active leader in the church.

3 Grace to you, and peace: Grace (Gk. charis) was the common Greek greeting, just as peace (Heb. shalom) was the ordinary Hebrew salutation. Paul combines both of these terms, heightened with the full Christian meaning of all the blessings of salvation that freely come to us through Christ, and the peace of God that we have because Christ has made peace with God on our behalf. The fact that God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ together send this grace and peace illustrates their equality in the Godhead.

4–7 In vv. 4–7 Paul lays the basis for the plea in a commendation of Philemon.

4, 5 in my prayers: Philemon's Christian life was a continual cause for thanksgiving whenever Paul prayed. hearing: Paul continually heard of Philemon's love and faith from others around him. Philemon was a model believer, both before the Lord, and with regard to other believers. This naturally has a bearing on the request Paul makes of Philemon. love and faith … toward the Lord Jesus and toward all the saints: This may be an example of the literary device called a chiasmus, where parallel phrases are connected in reverse order. Thus, the word faith refers to Christ, and the word love refers to the saints. Saints speaks of all believers. True love is expressed in action and not just in words (1 Cor. 13:1–7).

6 Paul prays that Philemon's faith will be effective—a term that speaks of being in good working order (Heb. 4:12, where powerful translates the same word). Working faith is a sharing faith; it is the acknowledgment of what Christ has done in the believer's life (Eph. 3:17–19). That kind of faith will also result in the sharing of possessions with other believers (vv. 18).

7 Rather than merely being happy because of Philemon's love, the apostle remarkably stated that he had joy, even when he was in chains (v. 20). Paul had heard that the hearts of the saints were also being refreshed by Philemon's love (Matt. 11:28; 1 Cor. 16:18). Paul is not desiring to argue theologically to Philemon, but from the heart. If Philemon expresses this kind of love toward Onesimus, he will be restored and Paul will rejoice and be encouraged. Expressed Christianity is an encouragement to others. Accepting a slave back without any punishment whatsoever was striking at the very heart of the Roman social and economic order.

8 Therefore: In light of the foundation that has been laid (vv. 4–7), Paul is ready to make his plea. very bold: This phrase speaks of "free and open speaking" (2 Cor. 3:12; Eph. 6:19). Paul's apostolic authority and Philemon's spiritual condition made Paul confident that he could command Philemon to do what is proper (Col. 3:18).

9 Rather than commanding Philemon (v. 7. Paul, the aged: The apostle is speaking either of the office of elder or of his old age.

10 appeal: Notice the carefulness of the apostle Paul in never asserting his authority in winning Philemon to his position. Each of us could learn a lesson in diplomacy from Paul's manner in this epistle. Force often begats force; love can break down the barriers that divide. My son is the Greek word for "child." The imagery of a father and child is used at other times by Paul when speaking of his converts (1 Tim. 1:2; Titus 1:4). begotten: The apostle was personally responsible for bringing Onesimus to Christ (1 Cor. 4:15; Gal. 4:19).

Bishop Onesimus?

About fifty years after Paul, a church leader named Ignatius wrote a letter to Bishop Onesimus, leader of the church in Ephesus. It's uncertain if this bishop is the same slave who once lived in nearby Colosse. But it is possible. If Paul wrote the letters of Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon all during his imprisonment in Rome—as many believe—the Ephesian people may have met Onesimus while he was on his way back to his master. This is quite possible because Onesimus traveled with Tychicus, who delivered the letters of Ephesians and Colossians (Eph. 6:21; Col. 4:7–9).

Many scholars who doubt that Paul wrote Philemon from Rome suspect he wrote from jail in Ephesus. If so, the Ephesians would have become acquainted with Onesimus during his conversion and perhaps after his return to Paul, if Philemon took the hints and freed him.

11 Paul uses an interesting play on words here. Having just mentioned Onesimus, whose name means "Useful" (v. 10), the apostle describes him as someone who was formerly unprofitable (not useful) but is now profitable. Paul is saying that Onesimus had become good and useful, even more so than Philemon could have imagined. That is what God's grace can do.

12 I am sending him back: Paul is referring the case back to Philemon for a decision. He encourages Philemon not to view Onesimus as a runaway slave. In fact, Onesimus had become a part of Paul's own heart (vv. 20).

13 wished: Paul wanted to keep Onesimus in Rome, helping in the ministry, confident that Philemon would approve. Onesimus had been serving Paul in place of Philemon, giving Paul the aid Philemon could not.

14 Paul expressed his desire to have Philemon involved in the decision of whether Onesimus could remain with him. Therefore, he would act only with Philemon's consent. Philemon's good deed had to be voluntary. Service for Christ is never forced. Paul had given Philemon several good reasons to forgive Onesimus, but here he returns to the foundation of his argument: Philemon's actions had to proceed from his own love (v. 9).

15 perhaps: After appealing to the emotions of Philemon for Paul, the apostle turns to Philemon's mind and view of God. "Philemon, did you ever wonder why Onesimus left?" might be a good way to paraphrase Paul's meaning. departed for a while: It was God's plan that Onesimus would run away. receive him forever: Paul contrasts the temporary separation because of Onesimus's running away to the eternal benefit of his salvation, from a temporary slave to an eternal son, from a demeaning condition to an eternal relation with Christ and fellow believers. Thus is the transforming power of God's grace.

16 no longer as a slave but … a beloved brother: Paul contrasts the lowly position of a slave to the high privilege of a Christian brother. Though the pagan mysteries of the time recognized an initiated slave to be a free man to his former owner, the Christian perspective is higher. The slave becomes a brother, truly part of the family of the former Christian master. in the flesh and in the Lord: Not only will Onesimus be useful on the human level; he will be useful for the work of the Lord.

17, 18 partner … owes: Onesimus had probably stolen something from Philemon when he left. Furthermore, he owed Philemon for the time he was gone. Paul uses business imagery in offering to pay for any loss Philemon suffered because of Onesimus's actions. Partner is a form of the Greek word for fellowship. Philemon was to receive Onesimus as he would his partner in Christ, Paul. put that on my account: This accounting imagery reminds us of the theological truth that our sins were charged over to Christ even though He had not earned them. Forgiveness is costly (Is. 53:6).

Big Lessons from a Little Letter

The Onesimus-Philemon story holds a number of significant lessons: • It shows that in Christ there is always room for reconciliation and a second chance for people.

• It illustrates how God works behind the scenes to bring people to faith and restore relationships.

• It shows the power of the gospel to work at a distance and effect change from city to city, coast to coast, and continent to continent.

• It shows the value of mentoring relationships, the way that older, seasoned believers can help younger followers of Christ work out problems and conflicts.

• It shows a measure of irony behind God's patience and providence: He had to send Onesimus thousands of miles away from his Christian master in order to bring him to faith!

• It shows that in Christ, people can change. Consider the many stages that Onesimus went through: from slave, to thief and runaway, to refugee, to convert, to penitent, to brother, and possibly to bishop.

19 my own hand: Paul wrote this note himself because it was a personal note, but also because the letter could be considered a legal document obligating him to pay the damages Onesimus had caused. I will repay: Paul promises to pay Onesimus's debt to assure the runaway slave's gracious reception by his owner. you owe me: The mention of Philemon's spiritual debt to Paul is not an attempt to cancel his own promise to pay; Paul chooses not to appeal to Philemon on the basis of this obligation.

20 The word translated joy in this verse is different from the one used in v. 7. The term here may also mean "benefit." Philemon's restoration of Onesimus would benefit Paul. refresh: What Philemon had done for other believers (v. 7), he could do for Paul by his kind treatment of Onesimus.

21 obedience: Paul is expecting Philemon to be compassionate to his former slave Onesimus (vv. 9). more than I say: Paul is intimating his expectation of the release of Onesimus. Obedience is costly. Love goes the second mile.

22 prepare a guest room: Hospitality is a Christian virtue (Rom. 12:13; 1 Tim. 3:2). Paul's mention of a possible visit adds weight to his request of Philemon. The term translated granted here is related to the Greek word for grace. Paul expects to be released from prison (Phil. 2:24).

23 Epaphras, my fellow prisoner: Epaphras was well known to the Colossians (Col. 1:7; 4:12, 13). To call him a fellow prisoner (as he did Aristarchus, Col. 4:10) must mean that these men were so constantly with Paul that it seemed they were prisoners too.

24 Marcus: John Mark had recovered from his failure on the first missionary journey (Acts 13:13; 15:36–41) and was now with Paul again (compare 2 Tim. 4:11). Aristarchus was one of Paul's converts from Thessalonica who accompanied Paul on much of the third missionary journey (Acts 20:4) and on the trip to Rome (Acts 27:2; Col. 4:10). Demas, sad to say, later turned back from following Christ (2 Tim. 4:10). Luke, the beloved physician, the author of Luke and Acts, was faithful to the very end (2 Tim. 4:11). These all sent their greetings to Philemon. Of the eleven persons mentioned in this short letter, Onesimus is precisely in the middle, and is the central character.

25 Paul ends this letter as he began it, with the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ directed toward Philemon's entire household. All grace resides in Him who freely gave all He had for us. "Thanks be to God for His indescribable gift" (2 Cor. 9:15). Philemon's response to grace would be to treat Onesimus as a brother.

The Epistle to the Hebrews

———— AT FIRST CHRISTIANITY WAS JEWISH. JESUS WAS a Jew, His disciples were Jews, and the first converts were Jews. Their first meetings took place in synagogues, and their first controversies concerned adherence to Jewish laws. Christianity's first critics knew it as a Jewish sect. But for the first Jewish believers, believing in Christ raised many questions. What about the temple and animal sacrifices? What about the Law of Moses? Did believing in Christ negate so much that they had grown up believing? Was it really enough to trust in Christ? The Old Testament did not answer these questions.

Answers were needed right away for those who lived in the time of this book's writing. Tolerance would soon give way to torture and executions. Nero would not leave this odd group alone forever. Believing in Christ would be a life-or-death proposition, and the temptation for Jewish believers to go back to their old ways would be irresistible—unless they could know for sure they had made the right choice.

The Book of Hebrews was written to address the doubts of those who were second-guessing their conversion to Christianity. "You began with God's plan of salvation," it says in effect. "You believed in His word and followed His plan of salvation through the temple sacrifices. And then when His once-for-all final sacrifice was made in Jesus Christ, you believed. That was as it should be. That was God's plan. Do not go back on the steps you have taken!"

The author of Hebrews set out to show that Christianity is the true successor to Judaism. He centers his attention on three topics: (1) priesthood, or divine mediation (7:1–28; 10:19–22); (2) sacrifice, or divine redemption (9:11—10:18); and (3) covenant, or divine promises (8:8–13; 9:15–22). He uses three Old Testament passages to prove his point: (1) Ps. 110:4, which announces a new priesthood providing the necessary divine mediation; (2) Ps. 40:6–8, which speaks of the new and final sacrifice providing divine redemption; and (3) Jer. 31:31–34, which announces a New Covenant that provides full and final forgiveness.

According to the author of Hebrews, all of this points to the supremacy and sufficiency of Christ. True spirituality comes through access to God

(7:19; 10:19–22); and this spirituality can be found only through the Son of God, Jesus Christ. The Book of Hebrews establishes the supremacy and sufficiency of Christ over all (1:1–4; 9:11–14). His sacrifice was enough to take away our sin; He is all we need to come to God today.

The original audience of Hebrews is not named. Some scholars have said that the book was written to Gentile Christians, arguing from the author's use of the Septuagint and from the absence of any mention of Gentile-Jewish controversy. Others have suggested that the letter was addressed to a mixed group of Jews and Gentiles.

But most scholars suppose that the addressees were Jewish Christians because of the book's heavy emphasis on Jewish topics and themes, especially the detailed discussion of the superiority of Jesus Christ over angels, Moses, Joshua, and Old Testament believers. Quotes of Old Testament passages appear throughout the book. Many of the author's themes assume an in-depth knowledge of Old Testament priesthood and sacrifice. Jews living outside of Jerusalem would almost certainly have been Greek-speaking, explaining the use of the Septuagint. The recipients are addressed as "brethren" throughout, and in the early church this would have included a large number of Jews. The title "To the Hebrews" is not from the author's hands, but it is dated as early as the second century.

Where did the readers live? The expression "they who are from Italy" (13:24) may refer to those in Italy or originally from Italy but presently away from there. It seems most reasonable to think of the readers as Jewish believers at Rome. The letter was first known at Rome, and the concluding salutation easily fits this view (13:24; Acts 18:2). The reference to false teaching about food in 13:9 matches a similar problem in the Roman church (Rom. 14:1—15:3).

The structure of Hebrews is unique among the epistles of the New Testament. Was it a letter or a sermon? It has the ending of a letter but not the salutation of one. It does not name its author or its intended audience, yet it contains personal greetings, assumes that the readers knew who was writing to them, and mentions some well-known mutual acquaintances, such as Timothy (13:23). This mix of elements has caused much debate over what the Book of Hebrews really is, with no solid conclusion. The author himself calls it "the word of exhortation" (13:22).

No one knows for sure who wrote Hebrews. No one in the early church could say with certainty that they knew, though the church at Alexandria (Egypt) strongly believed it to be the apostle Paul's work. Yet Hebrews has been accorded one of the most respected places in the Bible. This book won its place in the New Testament by its merit, not by the esteem of its author.

Did Paul write Hebrews? The letter's vocabulary, style, and theology differ greatly from Paul's letters. Unlike the author of Hebrews, Paul always identified himself in his writings; in fact, in one of them he offered his name as proof of the letter's authenticity (2 Thess. 3:17, 18). The language of Hebrews is polished, deliberate, and without the outbursts of emotion so characteristic of Paul. Typically Paul used Greek, Hebrew, and other sources in his Old Testament quotations, while the author of Hebrews used only the Greek Septuagint. Hebrews 2:3 seems to say that the author did not hear the word of salvation directly from the Lord, whereas Paul did. If Paul wrote Hebrews, he left none of the usual clues.

Tertullian suggested that Barnabas wrote it. Barnabas was from Cyprus, where the Greek was of good quality, and Hebrews represents the Greek of the educated and cultural classes more than any other New Testament book. Barnabas was also a Levite (Acts 4:36), a person who would be very familiar with Judaism's sacrificial system, central to the book's theme. Barnabas's name is translated in Acts 4:36 as "Son of Consolation" or "Son of Exhortation," a parallel to the description in Heb. 13:22.

Martin Luther and many contemporary scholars have speculated that Apollos wrote Hebrews. Apollos was a Jew, an Alexandrian, and a knowledgeable, eloquent man (Acts 18:24). But none of the church fathers named him. And if Apollos did write Hebrews, the Alexandrian church would probably have known it because Apollos was an Alexandrian.

Could the author have been Priscilla, as the scholar Adolf Harnack suggested (Acts 18:26)? The masculine participle in 11:32 probably rules that out. The original recipients knew who wrote it (13:18, 22–24), but they left no clue for us.

No one knows exactly when Hebrews was written either, although guessing a date is easier than guessing the author. If it was written to the Jewish believers at Rome, as is commonly assumed, then the fact that the community had not yet been called upon to suffer death for their faith suggests that the epistle should be dated before Nero's persecution of Christians in A.D. 64.

Commentary

1:1 Various times refers to the periods of OT history. Various ways refers to the different methods God used to communicate, including visitations, dreams, signs, parables, and events (Is. 28:10).

1:2 By His Son may be rephrased as “in such a person as a Son.” The emphasis rests on the character of the revelation. It is a revelation of the Son, a revelation not so much in what He has said as in who He is and what He has done. heir of all things: Jesus will inherit everything because He is the eternal Son of God Himself (Is. 9:6, 7; Mic. 5:2). His inheritance is universal dominion. He will rule over everyone and everything (Rom. 4:13; Rev. 11:15). made the worlds: The Greek word for worlds can also mean “ages.” Thus, worlds indicates the entire created universe, all space throughout all time. The Son is the Lord of all history. He has managed the universe throughout its history as Mediator under the Father.

“brightness”

(Gk. apaugasma) (1:3) Strong’s #541; express image (Gk. charakter) (1:3) Strong’s #541; 5481: These two expressions occur only here in the NT. The Greek word for brightness expresses the brilliance emanating from a glorious source of light, such as the beams of the sun. Christ, as the effulgence of God’s glory, is the radiance of God, revealing God’s glory to humanity. The Greek word translated express image can mean the instrument used in engraving or stamping, but usually it means the image engraved or stamped. In this context, the word means that Christ is the exact representation of God’s nature. Since God’s essence, nature, and being are invisible, the Son reveals God to us, for He is an exact visible likeness of God.

1:3 The Son is the brightness of God’s glory, meaning the radiance that comes from God’s essential glory (John 1:14; 2 Cor. 4:4, 6). The author of Hebrews is emphasizing that this is not a reflected brightness like the light of the moon. Instead this is an inherent brightness like a ray from the sun. Jesus’ glorious brightness comes from being essentially divine. The phrase express image occurs only here in the NT and means “exact representation” or “exact character.” In Greek literature the word was used of stamping a coin from the die. The Son is the exact representation of God’s being because He is God Himself (Col. 1:15). In fact, the Greek word translated person here means “nature” or “being.” As Jesus said, “He who has seen me has seen the Father” (John 14:9). Upholding means “bearing” or “carrying,” referring to movement and progress toward a final end. The Son not only created the universe by His powerful word but also maintains and directs its course. He is the Governor of the universe. The laws of nature are His laws, and they operate at His command. Purged means “cleansed” or “purified.” The glory of redemption is far greater than the glory of creation. The Son of God came down not to dazzle us with His splendor but to purge our sins. Sat down suggests the formal act of assuming the office of High Priest and implies a contrast to the Levitical priest, who never finished his work and sat down (10:11–13). In the OT we meet a seatless sanctuary. In the NT we find a seated Savior.

1:4 The Son is better than the angels, or higher in rank, because He sits at the right hand of God (v. 3) and because of His eternal inheritance.

The Son has obtained a greater name than the angels. This majestic picture builds up to the dramatic invitation in 4:16 for us to come boldly into the Son's presence.

1:5–14 The author of Hebrews uses seven OT citations to explain why the Son is superior to angels.

1:5 Angels are "sons" collectively, in that they were created by God (Job 1:6). In contrast, Christ is uniquely and eternally the Son. He is superior to the angels. Today I have begotten You probably refers to the day Christ sat down at the Father's right hand after He accomplished His work as the Messiah. On that day the eternal Son entered into the full experience of His Sonship. I will be to Him a Father: This passage quotes 2 Sam. 7:14 and is a prophecy of Christ as the eternal Person in whom the Davidic line and kingdom culminates.

1:6 When He again brings is a reference to the Second Coming. Firstborn here refers to rank, meaning one who ranks above all others (Ps. 89:27). The Son does not worship but is worshiped by angels. The quotation in this verse is either from the Septuagint version of Deut. 32:43 or from Ps. 97:7, where the Septuagint correctly renders the Hebrew text angels. The angels will worship the Son when He is enthroned as the King over the entire earth (2:5–9), after taking revenge on His enemies and restoring His people.

1:7 The Son is superior to angels because He is the Sovereign who is worshiped, while the angels are ministers, that is, servants of God. The author of Hebrews quotes Ps. 104 because that psalm places angels in a long list of created objects that God sovereignly controls.

1:8 O God: Jesus Christ is accorded the rank of full deity. The Son has an eternal throne, which means He possesses an eternal kingdom.

1:9 Companions comes from a word that means "close associates" or "partners." The concept of believers being companions with Christ is key in Hebrews (3:1, 14; 6:4; 12:8). The term refers to those who will be participants with Christ in His reign. As the Son obtained the right to rule and joy through a righteous life, so will His partners—believers who live godly lives and who will rule with the Son in His kingdom.

1:10–12 The context of Ps. 102, from which these verses are taken, clearly indicates that the "LORD" is the One who would appear in the future to Israel and the nations (Ps. 102:12–16). Thus, the psalm can only refer to Jesus, the Second Person of the Trinity, the only One who would become incarnate. Jesus is God become man. The universe will perish (2 Pet. 3:10–13; Rev. 21:1), but the Son will remain forever. The universe will be changed, but the Son will remain the same (13:8).

1:13 Christ sits at the right hand of God until the final victory over all His enemies (1 Cor. 15:25–28).

1:14 Angels are mere servants (v. 7) who serve those who will inherit salvation. Salvation here is not justification because it is in the future, not in the past. The reference is to believers who inherit the Kingdom or rule in God's kingdom as a reward for their service to the Son (9:28; Col. 3:24). The author is speaking about "the world to come" (2:5). References to salvation in 2:3, 10; 5:9; 6:9 probably also concern the future.

2:1 The author issues the first of five exhortations (vv. 1–4; 3:1—4:16; 5:11—6:20; 10:19–39; 12:1–29). Believers have heard from the Lord God because we have heard the gospel message. His very majesty demands that we listen attentively to what He says. drift away: The author's audience was marked by immaturity and spiritual sluggishness (5:11, 12). The author warned them not to be carried away by the popular opinions that surrounded them. Instead they were to hold fast to Christ's words because they were the words of God. How easy it is to drift with the currents. Think of how far "righteous Lot" drifted from Abraham when he turned his eyes toward Sodom. All of us are continually exposed to the currents of opinion that seem so reasonable and comfortable as contrasted to the task of fighting the rapids with our eyes focused upon our Captain (Rom. 12:2).

2:2 the word spoken through angels: The Law was delivered from God to Moses by angels (Deut. 33:2; Acts 7:38, 53; Gal. 3:19). Disobedience or obedience to the law was punished or rewarded. This discipline is discussed at length in 12:5–11 (Deut. 28—30). When a person broke the law, the punishment he received was not loss of justification or regeneration. Instead, he lost temporal blessing and was disciplined (compare Heb. 12:5–11).

2:3 how shall we escape: If the people who heard the message delivered through angels were justly punished when they disobeyed the Law, how can believers expect to escape punishment when they neglect the even greater message delivered through the greater Messenger, the Son? We is found five times in vv. 1, 3. The author warns these believers, including himself, about neglecting salvation and losing out on the opportunity to reign with Christ. The great salvation (Phil. 2:12, 13) cannot be a reference merely to justification because this salvation was first … spoken by the Lord. Justification was spoken of in the OT (Gen. 15:6); but it was the Lord who first spoke of His followers inheriting His kingdom and reigning with Him (v. 10; Luke 12:31, 32; 22:29, 30). those who heard Him: The author includes himself among those who had not heard the Lord Himself. The fact that the third generation had the message confirmed to them by the second generation who apparently worked the miracles implies that the confirming miracles had ceased by the third generation. The past tense of confirmed supports this conclusion. The original readers may have seen the miracles, but they did not perform them.

2:4 Signs and wonders refers to the miracles performed by the Holy Spirit through the Lord and His apostles in fulfillment of the ancient promises regarding the coming of the Messiah (Acts 2:22, 43; 4:30; 5:12; 6:8; 14:3; 15:12; 2 Cor. 12:12).

2:5 The author returns to the theme of ch. 1 that the Son is superior to the angels. For connects this passage with 1:4–14, as the mention of angels in this verse and the allusion to Ps. 110 (v. 8) indicate. The world to come is the future rule of the Son and His companions (1:9) on the earth.

2:6–8 Since the Son's humanity might appear to be an obstacle to the claim of His superiority, the author of Hebrews cites Ps. 8, a lyrical reflection on Gen. 1, to prove that God has placed humanity over all created things, which includes the angelic world.

2:8 But now: The rule of human beings over God's creation has been delayed because of sin (v. 15). Humanity's collusion with Satan has brought all people into collision with God. Not yet indicates that the delay is only temporary.

2:9 Human beings will rule over creation, but it will be through Jesus Christ. But we see Jesus: The author uses Christ's human name Jesus for the first time in this letter. Citing phrases from Ps. 8, the author points out that Christ, by His humiliation and exaltation, has regained what Adam lost, the original calling for human beings to rule over God's creation (Phil. 2:6–11; Rev. 5:1–14).

“captain”

(Gk. archegos) (2:10, 12:2; Acts 3:15; 5:31) Strong’s #747: The Greek word for captain means “pioneer” or “leader.” It literally means “the first one to lead the way” from arche (“the first”) and ago (“to lead”). To express this idea of leadership, the word is translated in Acts 3:15; 5:31 as the “Prince” and in Heb. 12:2 as “the author.” Thus, the writer of Hebrews is emphasizing that Jesus endured suffering and temptation on this earth in order to become a perfect leader. He is not only sinless but also can sympathize with our difficulties in following His perfect way, the Way that leads to glory.

2:10 Bringing many sons to glory is not a reference to taking believers to heaven. It is bringing fellow sufferers to future glory (2 Cor. 4:17). When believers suffer, they become sons in the sense that they are like their Father. Jesus used the word sons in this way (Matt. 5:44, 45). The Greek word for captain means “leader” or “originator.” The word describes a pioneer or pathfinder. Jesus’ endurance of sufferings on this earth makes Him our leader. He has already experienced the sufferings we must go through on this earth. He not only endured them but triumphed over sin, death, and Satan through them. His sinless life has blazed a path to God, a path we must follow. Jesus is our model, our leader, and our Captain. He understands our pain because He Himself went through suffering. Salvation refers to our future salvation, our glorification in Christ’s coming kingdom (1:14).

2:11–13 By a statement followed by three supporting quotations from the OT, the writer demonstrates the unity between the Son and the many sons.

2:11 all of one: This phrase refers either to the common humanity that Jesus shares with all believers, or to the fact that Jesus and believers all belong to God. Because the children of God and the Son Himself are from the same Father (John 20:17), Jesus can call all believers His brethren.

2:12 Psalm 22, which is quoted here, describes the agony of a righteous sufferer. Ultimately the psalm is messianic. It depicts the sufferings of Christ. Jesus quoted Ps. 22:1 on the Cross (Matt. 27:46). In this psalm, the Messiah refers to My brethren, identifying Himself with all those who place their faith in God.

2:13 The citations are from Is. 8:17, 18 and refer to a prophet, who, like the Lord Jesus, was persecuted and rejected but became a rallying point for the faithful.

2:14–16 Having established the unity between the Son and believers, the author concludes that there are two purposes of this close identification. The Son became human so that He could destroy the devil (v. 14) and release those who were in bondage to sin (v. 15).

2:14 shared the same: Jesus Christ shared in our humanity by humbling himself to become a man (Phil. 2:5–11). power of death: The devil tempts people to sin and then accuses them of rebelling against God (Gen. 3; Job 1). By inducing them to sin, Satan delivers people over to death, the due penalty for their sin (Rom. 5:12). The devil is still active today (1 Pet. 5:8), but his power over death has been taken away from him. Christ's death fulfilled the penalty for sin. Thus, by placing our trust in Christ, we can be free from Satan's evil grasp (Luke 10:18; 2 Tim. 1:10; Rev. 1:18). The judgment of Satan was rendered by the Cross, but the execution lies in the future (1 Cor. 15:54–57; Rev. 20:10).

2:15 The devil uses the fear of death to enslave us. Through His death (v. 14), the Son eliminated such fear and broke the bondage of sin and death.

2:16 The seed of Abraham refers either to the physical descendants of Abraham or the spiritual children of Abraham—that is, the ones who, like Abraham, have placed their faith in God (Gal. 3:7, 29). The author may have used this expression because the recipients of this letter were primarily Jewish believers. The author is pointing out that Christ came to the aid of Abraham's sons, not of the angelic hosts.

2:17 In all things includes Jesus' humanity (v. 14) and His suffering (v. 18). Jesus participated in our nature and in our sufferings on earth so that He could be a sympathetic Mediator between God and humanity. He understands our weaknesses and intercedes for us in the presence of God the Father. He is a merciful (sympathetic) and faithful (trustworthy) High Priest. This is the first time the title High Priest occurs in Hebrews, and the first time the title is applied to Jesus Christ in the Bible. Make propitiation refers to the satisfaction of the claims of a holy and righteous God against sinners who have broken His law. Christ appeased God's righteous wrath by dying on the Cross in our place (Rom. 3:21–26). Although completely perfect and sinless, Christ voluntarily submitted to the penalty of sin, this agonizing death on the Cross. This voluntary sacrifice of Himself for our welfare satisfied the justice and holiness of God. The benefits of His sacrifice are applied to all who place their faith in Him.

2:18 being tempted: Christ's suffering included temptation. He experienced the lure of sin, but He never surrendered Himself to it. He knows what it is like to be tempted, so He knows how to assist those who are being tempted.

3:1—4:16 The second exhortation (2:1-4). Holy brethren links them with the concept of sanctification in 2:11.

3:1, 2 Partakers is the same Greek word that is translated companions in 1:9. The heavenly calling of these companions is to inherit salvation (1:14) and their future glory in Christ (2:10). The author of Hebrews invites Jewish believers to consider the faithfulness of Christ Jesus. Apostle means "one who is sent." This is the only passage in the NT that labels Jesus as the Apostle. The title indicates that Jesus was "sent" by God to reveal the Father (John 4:34; 6:38; 7:28, 29; 8:16). The phrase in all His house is taken from Num. 12:7. House refers to the tabernacle, the center of Israelite worship. Moses had faithfully obeyed God's instructions concerning the tabernacle. In the same way, Jesus had been obedient to the mission the Father had given Him. Through His obedience, God established a new house of God, the church.

3:3, 4 He who built all things is God: The author of Hebrews equates Jesus with God. Thus, Jesus is certainly worthy of more glory than Moses (1:2, 8, 10). The implication is that the covenant established through Jesus' death is more glorious than the covenant established at Mount Sinai.

3:5 The author of Hebrews continues the comparison between Moses and Jesus. While Moses was faithful as a servant, Christ's faithfulness was greater because it was performed by a Son. Things … spoken afterward indicates that Moses' work pointed forward to Christ (9:10; 10:1–3). The regulations of the Law of Moses pointed out both the sin of humanity and the need for a perfect sacrifice to reconcile people to their holy Creator.

3:6 a Son over His own house: The Son is the One who will sit on the throne in the coming kingdom (1:8). He presently rules over the church and will rule over all creation when His opponents are completely defeated. His house consists of all those who believe in Him. hold fast the confidence … to the end: Those who endure to the end, steadfastly placing their hope in the Son, will reign with Him in eternity.

3:7–11 The author of Hebrews quotes Ps. 95:7–11 to warn the Jewish Christians about hardening their hearts to God and the salvation He offers. Moses' generation had refused to trust in God to provide for their needs in the wilderness (Ex. 17:1–7), and the readers of this letter were in danger of not trusting in the salvation offered through God's Son. If they were to hold fast to the end (v. 6), they could not harden their hearts to God now (vv. 8, 13, 15). Instead they had to renew their belief in God's Word (vv. 12, 19), place their trust in Christ, and obey Him (v. 18). Rest is a key concept in Hebrews. In the OT, the conquest of the Promised Land and the cessation of fighting in the land was viewed as a form of rest (Deut. 3:20; 12:9; 25:19; Josh. 11:23; 21:44; 22:4; 23:1). In the NT, rest speaks of the believer's eternal home and the joy that he or she will experience in Jesus' presence (4:1).

3:12 The author is definitely speaking to genuine believers. He addresses them as brethren (Gk. . adelphoi; compare "holy brethren" in v. 1) as is the uniform treatment throughout the book. Nowhere is there the slightest suggestion that they were mere professors as over against genuine Christians as is widely believed. an evil heart of unbelief: This refers to serious spiritual heart trouble. An unbelieving heart is evil because unbelief is evil. departing (Gk. aphistemi): This word has the idea of "standing off." from the living God: Serious losses accrue to unbelieving believers, those who refuse to listen and turn a cold shoulder to God. Evidently this describes a relapse from Christianity into Judaism. Jesus is God. To depart from Him is to depart from the living God. This is contrasted with the "hold fast" of v. 6.

IN COMPARISON

The Majesty of Christ

Hebrews is perhaps the greatest Christological book in the Bible, giving us a detailed description of the attributes and accomplishments of Jesus Christ. The following chart is a summary.

Christ is . . .	This means . . .
heir of all things (1:2)	As God's "firstborn" Son, Christ will inherit infinite glory and honor.
the One through whom God made the worlds (1:2)	Christ was the Agent who created the universe.
the brightness of God's glory (1:3)	Christ reflects the majesty of God.
the express image of His person (1:3)	Christ is God made visible, in the flesh.
upholding all things by the word of His power (1:3)	Christ holds the universe together (Col. 1:17).
seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high (1:3)	Christ is reigning and ruling with God the Father as Lord over all.
better than the angels (1:4)	Christ is to be exalted more than the angels, no matter how glorious and awe-inspiring they are.
captain of our salvation (2:10)	Christ is the founder of the effort to "bring many sons to glory" (5:9).
the destroyer . . . of . . . the devil (2:14)	In dying for our sins, Christ overcame our greatest enemies—death and the devil.
a merciful and faithful High Priest (2:17)	Christ brought the ultimate sacrifice before God—His own blood—so that we might have fellowship with God.
worthy of more glory than Moses (3:3)	Unlike Moses, who was merely a servant in the house of God, Christ is the "Son over His own house" (3:6).
a High Priest who can sympathize with our weaknesses (4:15)	While on this earth, Jesus experienced the temptations and trials of living in a fallen world. He understands the struggles we face and has compassion for us.
always alive to make intercession (7:25)	Christ's priesthood is eternal. We will always have a perfect representative for us before the throne of God.
Mediator of a better covenant (8:6)	The old covenant with its earthly tabernacle and imperfect priests has been superseded by the sinless Christ. He is our High Priest who is interceding for us before God in heaven.
our model for enduring hostility from sinners (12:2, 3)	When we are discouraged, we can find strength and inspiration in Christ's willingness to persevere.
that great Shepherd of the sheep (13:20)	Christ will care for us and lead us to our eternal home.

3:13, 14 Exhorting each other to continue in the faith is important. Believers must hold their faith firmly to the end of their lives if they are to be partakers of Christ (vv. 15–19). Partakers is the same word translated companions in 1:9. Faithful believers will be partners with Christ in His future kingdom (Rev. 2:26, 27).

3:15–19 The author of Hebrews speaks of the Israelites' unbelief as sin (v. 17) and disobedience (v. 18). The Israelites did not enter God's rest, the Promised Land (v. 11), because they did not believe in God's promises to them (Num. 1:1–34). They failed to possess their inheritance because they did not trust in God (Deut. 12:9; Josh. 13:7). The Jewish Christians to whom this letter was addressed were in danger of following in their ancestors' footsteps. They were tempted to doubt the words of Jesus. With the rhetorical questions in these verses, the author of Hebrews was encouraging them to place their faith firmly in Christ (10:26; 12:1, 2).

4:1–11 In 3:12–19 Israel's failure to enter the rest God had provided is a warning to Christians. The author now explains what this rest is and shows why it is available for us today.

4:1 The tragic unbelief of the desert generation of Israelites (3:7–19) serves as a warning for believers today to enter into God's rest, which is still offered to the faithful (vv. 6–11).

4:2 The gospel was preached is the translation of a single Greek word meaning "the good news was announced." The good news of God's rest (v. 1) had been proclaimed to the Israelites. The generation led by Moses had failed to enter their rest, which was the Promised Land (Deut. 12:9), because of their lack of faith. In the same way, the gospel of Christ that had been proclaimed to the author's audience was calling them into God's rest, but their unbelief would hinder them from entering into it.

“made like”

(Gk. aphomoioo) (7:3) Strong’s #871: This Greek word literally means “to make a facsimile,” or “to produce a model or copy.” Thus, the author of Hebrews was highlighting the similarities between the Son of God and the way Scripture presents Melchizedek. In other words, the ancient priest-king of Salem was a copy of Jesus.

4:3 from the foundation of the world: The creation rest of God is the archetype and type of all later experiences of rest.

4:4 God rested: The theme of rest has its beginning in God’s own rest after creation. The fact that Genesis makes no mention of the evening of the seventh day of creation provides a basis for some Jewish commentators to conclude that the rest of God lasts throughout all of history.

4:5, 6 They: There was a rest later for God’s people, and the Exodus generation failed to enter into it.

4:7, 8 By merely entering the Promised Land, the Israelites had not entered God’s rest, for David (years after Joshua had led the Israelites into the land) had warned his generation to not harden their hearts, so that they could enter God’s rest (3:7–11). Like David, the author of Hebrews called the present generation to respond to God today (3:13), which is the day of repentance.

4:9 The Greek word for rest in this verse is different from the word used in vv. 1, 3, 5, 10, 11; 3:11, 18. This word means “Sabbath rest” and is found only here in the NT. Jews commonly taught that the Sabbath foreshadowed the world to come, and they spoke of “a day which shall be all Sabbath.”

4:10 rest from his own work: This may refer to the rest believers will enter in when they finish their work for God’s kingdom on this earth (Rev. 14:13).

4:11 us: Including himself as well as his readers, the author exhorts believers to be diligent, a phrase meaning “make every effort.” to enter that rest: The rest is not automatic. Determined diligence is required. The danger is that believers today, like the Israelites of the past, will not stand, but fall in disobedience.

4:12 The word of God is the measuring stick Christ will use at the judgment (2 Cor. 5:10). God's message is alive and active, penetrating the innermost parts of a person. It distinguishes what is natural and what is spiritual, as well as the thoughts (reflections) and intents (insights) of a person. The word of God exposes the natural and spiritual motivations of a believer's heart (v. 7; 3:8, 10, 12, 15; 8:10; 10:16, 22; 13:9).

4:13 Naked and open suggests complete exposure and defenselessness before God. All believers must give account to the all-seeing, all-knowing God (Rom. 14:10–12; 2 Cor. 5:10).

4:14—10:18 This section on the high priesthood of Christ is the heart of Hebrews. The subject was mentioned in 2:17. It is reintroduced here in 4:14–16, discussed briefly in 5:1–10, and considered at length in 7:1—10:18. Our High Priest is just the kind we need: He can cleanse the sinful human heart.

4:14 Then refers back to the subject of the high priesthood of Christ (2:17—3:6). We have indicates possession. In the OT the high priest of Israel passed through the courts and veils into the Most Holy Place. Our High Priest has passed through the heavens to the very presence of God, where He sits at God's right hand (1:3). The title Jesus … the Son of God underlines His two natures—His humanity and deity.

4:15 Sympathize means "to suffer with" and expresses the feeling of one who has entered into suffering. In all points tempted means Jesus experienced every degree of temptation (2:18). without sin (7:26; 2 Cor. 5:21): Only those who do not yield to sin can know the full intensity of temptation. Only Jesus did not yield to temptation.

“mercy”

(Gk. eleos) (4:16; Rom. 15:9; Eph. 2:4; Titus 3:5; Jude 21) Strong’s #1656: The Greek word for mercy denotes an outward demonstration of pity, a sympathy that expresses itself in helping a person in need instead of remaining completely passive. The word eleos is often used in conjunction with the Greek word charis, translated grace (Eph. 2:4, 5; 1 Tim. 1:2; 1 Pet. 1:2, 3). A similar idea is expressed by the Hebrew word chesed, often translated lovingkindness or goodness. It is the “loyal love” that God freely showed the Israelites because of His covenant with them. The ultimate expression of God’s mercy is His voluntary offering of His only Son for our sins, even when we were still His enemies (Eph. 2:4, 5). Since Jesus, our Intercessor at the right hand of God (7:25), has experienced every kind of temptation we endure (4:15), we can approach Him with boldness, knowing that we will find sympathy and mercy. We who have experienced God’s mercy and forgiveness should, in turn, show mercy to others (James 2:13).

4:16 Come is the same Greek word translated draw near in 10:22. What a contrast to the “stay away in order that you die not” of the OT which these people and all their forebears grew up under. How beautiful was the difference summed up by John the Baptist in his introduction of Jesus. “Behold, the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world.” No longer would there be the death of animals as sacrifices. No longer would only the high priest have access to the holiest. Boldly is the same word that is rendered confidence in 3:6 (10:19) and means “plainness of speech,” “fearlessness,” or “courage.” Believers should courageously approach God in prayer because His is a throne of grace, and our High Priest sits at His right hand interceding for us.

5:1–4 These verses explain what it means to be a high priest. A high priest must be a person (vv. 1–3) called by God (v. 4). A priest represents the people and thus must identify with their human nature. But he also represents God to the people and thus must be called by God to his office.

5:1 gifts and sacrifices: The primary reference here is to the work of the high priest on the Day of Atonement, the one day of the year when a priest entered into the Most Holy Place (9:7–10) to atone for the sins of the people and intercede for them.

5:2 Ignorant and going astray describes those who unintentionally sinned among the people (Num. 15:30–36).

5:3 The high priest was required to offer a sacrifice for himself on the Day of Atonement (9:7; Lev. 16:6).

Lessons in Leadership

Leadership is often understood in terms of power, manipulation, assertiveness, and ambition. The literature of the work world is cluttered with "how to" books that profile the famous and successful who have fought and won by these cruel values. In the first century, the Roman Empire was dominated by very powerful and manipulative family dynasties riddled with competition, violence, greed, and dirty tricks.

But Jesus modeled a different way of leadership. Throughout the NT we are shown glimpses of His life and character. In them we discover a stark contrast to our world's soap opera of abuse and distortion.

• Hebrews 5 is one such picture. It describes a true leader as a priest who is: • focused on people and how they connect with God (Heb. 5:1).

• compassionate with the weak and ignorant (5:2).

• required to face sin head-on (5:3).

• not self-appointed, but rather called by God into his role (5:4).

Jesus was the perfect priest (5:5–10). The writer admits that this portrait is hard to grasp (5:11–14). However, those who seek to grow into Christlike maturity need to consider it carefully. Jesus provides for those who seek His help. All we need to do is ask (4:14–16).

5:4 called by God: Aaron was appointed to the position of priest by God Himself (Ex. 28:1), as were his successors (Num. 20:23–28; 25:10–13). Those who challenged Aaron's call or appointed themselves as priests were put to death by God (Num. 16).

5:5, 6 Christ did not call Himself to the office of High Priest; the Father called Him to the honor. Both Pss. 2:7 and 110:4 are cited to prove this fact. Psalm 2:7 is also quoted in 1:5 to prove Christ's superiority to the angels, and now the writer uses the quote to prove Jesus' special relationship with God the Father. The quote from Ps. 110:4 highlights the eternal nature of Jesus' priesthood. He will be Mediator between God and us forever.

5:7 Christ did not offer sacrifice for Himself. Rather, He offered up for us the prayers, supplications, cries and tears of an obedient life and death. He was heard and His sacrifice accepted because of His godly fear (reverent obedience). He was saved from death through the Resurrection.

5:8 He learned obedience: Jesus did not need to learn to obey as if disobedient previously, but He did have to go through the experience of obeying His Father's will. He learned the nature of obedience.

5:9 having been perfected: This phrase does not suggest that Jesus had not been perfect before. It means that He successfully carried out God's plan for Him. He endured suffering and temptation so that He could truly function as our High Priest, understanding our weaknesses and interceding before God for us. Author means "cause" or "source." Jesus' obedience to the Father led to Calvary, His own death on the Cross. The sacrifice of this sinless One in our place makes Him the source of our salvation.

5:10 Called here means "designated" and introduces Christ's formal title, High Priest.

5:11 Though the author of Hebrews has much more to say about Jesus' priesthood, it will be hard to explain to the readers of this letter because they are dull of hearing. Dull means "sluggish." When these people heard the word of God they were not quick to accept it (6:11, 12). They had grown even more lazy in the faith, so explaining the truth to them would be difficult.

“oracles”

(Gk. logion) (5:12; Acts 7:38; Rom. 3:2; 1 Pet. 4:11) Strong’s #3051: The Greek term logion is a diminutive of the word logos (in 5:13). Here it is not “the Word of God,” but “words from God” or “divine communications.” Peter uses the word for the teaching of Christian preachers (1 Pet. 4:11), while Paul employs the word to refer to the writings of the OT prophets (Rom. 3:2). Stephen uses the word to speak of God’s utterances on Mount Sinai and His promises concerning the coming of the Messiah. The author of Hebrews uses this word for the basics of Christian doctrine, perhaps consciously contrasting this word to the logos, “the word of righteousness,” which is for the mature Christian (5:13).

5:12—6:20 The author prepares his readers to receive the teaching on the high priesthood of Christ. He first chides them for their spiritual immaturity (5:12—6:3) and the fact that they have fallen away from progress unto maturity (6:4–8; all five participles in vv. 4–6 are past action). He then recalls their spiritual achievements (6:9–12) and reminds them of God’s promise (6:13–20).

5:12 By this time you ought to be teachers suggests all believers ought to be teachers not in the formal sense (compare 1 Cor. 12:29; James 3:1), but in the sense that those who have been taught ought to impart to others what they have learned through the gifts God has given them. First principles are basic truths (6:1, 2). The phrase refers to the letters of the alphabet in writing or to addition and subtraction tables in arithmetic. First principles are the elements out of which everything else develops. have come to need: They have retrogressed because of disuse. If you don’t practice what you see and hear, you lose it and have to be told it again and again. To not use it is to lose it. milk … solid food: The author illustrates the ingredients of growth. Milk equals input. Solid food equals output. We start with the input of truth (1 Pet. 2:2), exercising the principle of readiness for learning. We gradually implement the principle of practice for retention of truth. Consistent and persistent practice of truth results in growth to maturity (this same formula is applied to the Corinthians by Paul in 1 Cor. 3:1–4).

5:13 unskilled in the word of righteousness: The readers of this letter did not necessarily lack information concerning righteousness; they lacked experience in practicing the information they had. Maturity comes from practice. As we practice righteousness, we will have less difficulty in determining good from evil. Babe is a description of the spiritually immature. Babies have little discernment or self-discipline. They must be constantly told "no." Mature believers are able to know right from wrong and to control their sinful appetites.

5:14 Full age describes the spiritually mature. Reason of use means "practice" or "habit." Those who make a habit of obeying the message of righteousness mature in the faith and are able to distinguish good and evil.

6:1, 2 The author urges the readers of his letter to leave the basics (5:12) and go on to perfection, meaning "maturity." He lists six items in three couplets that he calls the elementary principles of Christ ("the first principles" in 5:12). (1) Repentance from dead works refers to a change of mind about the demands of the Law of Moses (9:14). Even though the Law was good (1 Tim. 1:8), it was weak because of the weakness of our sinful nature (Rom. 8:3). (2) What is needed for salvation is not lifeless works that cannot save, but faith directed toward God. (3) Baptisms refers either to the various baptisms in the NT (the baptism of Christ, of John, of believers, and the spiritual baptism of believers), or to the various ritual washings practiced by the Jewish people. (4) In the Book of Acts, the laying on of hands was used to impart the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:17, 18; 19:6). It was also used for ordination for ministry (Acts 6:6; 13:3). This practice is also found in the OT in commissioning someone to a public office (Num. 27:18, 23; Deut. 34:9) or in the context of presenting a sacrificial offering to the Lord (Lev. 1:4; 3:2; 4:4; 8:14; 16:21). (5) Resurrection from the dead refers to the resurrection of all people at the end time (Rev. 20:11–15). The resurrection is an OT teaching (Is. 26:19; Dan. 12:2) which was widely taught in first-century Judaism, especially by the Pharisees. To Christians, belief in the bodily resurrection of Jesus was essential, for without His resurrection there is no forgiveness of sin (1 Cor. 15:12–17). (6) Eternal judgment refers to the belief that everyone will be judged by the great Judge. The Scriptures indicate that there are two judgments: one for believers, in which Jesus determines every believer's reward (1 Cor. 3:12–15), and the other a judgment of condemnation on unbelievers (Rev. 20:11–15).

6:3 Using we, the author includes himself. if God permits—that is, Lord willing (James 4:15)—indicates the imperative of God's empowering if it is to happen.

6:4–6 This difficult passage concerning "falling away" has been interpreted in various ways. Some insist that the author of Hebrews is speaking of nominal Christians who heard the truth and appeared to believe in Christ, but eventually demonstrated their shallow adherence to Christ by publicly renouncing Him. Others view these verses as a hypothetical argument. In other words, the author of Hebrews is using this hypothetical case to warn the spiritually immature (vv. 1–3) not to reject God's offer of salvation (v. 6; 3:12). Typically those who postulate these two positions cite the numerous passages that speak of a true believer's eternal security (John 6:39, 40; 10:27–29; Rom. 8:28–30). Once God has saved us, nothing can separate us from His love (Rom. 8:35–39). Still others insist that the author is speaking of genuine Christians who renounce Christ and cease to be Christians. They claim that this is a clear reading of this text and cite the numerous warnings in the NT to resist the deceptions of false teachers as additional evidence for their interpretation (2 Cor. 11:1–4, 13–15; 2 Tim. 2:17, 18; 1 John 2:21–25). Most likely, the passage concerns true believers in Jesus, who are Jewish, and under persecution are tempted to mesh in with the Jewish religion and its rituals from which they had been freed in Christ. Rather than speaking of a loss of justification, it refers to failure to grow further into maturity. The believer who is tempted in "falling to the side," as the Greek better translates, after making much progress in the Christian walk as evidenced by the characteristics of Christian growth found in verses 4 and 5 and have subsequently fallen (not from Christ but in the Christian race) place themselves in danger of being stagnated in Christian growth.

6:6 The phrase if they fall away may better be rendered "having fallen to the side" and depicts a runner who has fallen to the side of the track during a race. The Greek does not possess a conditional conjunction. Rather, one should understand this participle as the last of those describing a person for whom it is impossible to have a "change of mind" or repentance while being involved in those activities that mitigate against His profession of Christ. To renew (Gk. anakainizo) means to restore. It is impossible for continuous effort on the part of anyone in the Christian community to restore a person back to fellowship with God. This is the reason for the strong warning of Heb. 3:13 to exhort one another to avoid a hardened heart. Continuing immaturity is dangerous. Think of those you have known who were radiant witnesses for Christ who were sidetracked and are now cold as stone. The reason the author gives is that they crucify again … put Him to an open shame. By departing from Christian growth, apostates put themselves in the position of those who actually had Christ crucified and exposed to public shame. If the original readers were Christian Jews contemplating returning to Judaism, then they were joining the ranks of those who crucified Christ. It amounts, in essence, to a fresh public rejection, a crucifixion (symbolically) of Christ all over again.

6:7, 8 An illustration from nature is used to convey two truths: (1) A piece of land that receives rain (a "heavenly gift," v. 4) and is productive, that is, useful to others and blessed by God (v. 7). (2) The same piece of land (v. 8) receives rain (a "heavenly gift," v. 4) but is unproductive, that is, rejected (Gk. adokimos), a word which means "disqualified" and is used of believers being disqualified from receiving rewards (1 Cor. 9:27; 2 Cor. 13:5, 7). The ground is not cursed; it is near to being cursed (1 Cor. 11:29–31). The ultimate end is burning, which is not hell but the temporal judgment of God. In the OT God's judgment on His people is likened to the burning of a field (Is. 9:18, 19; 10:17) which was physical death, not eternal death. Perhaps there is also an allusion here to the fire of the judgment seat of Christ (1 Cor. 3:11–15). There was an ancient practice of burning the ground to destroy the weeds and make the field useful again. If such an allusion is intended, then this passage is teaching that while all human attempts to restore apostates are futile (v. 6), there is hope for production again. It is possible for a person to shipwreck his faith and learn from the experience (1 Tim. 1:18–20).

6:9 With the warmth and affection of the title beloved, the author assures the Hebrews that he is confident of better things for them. Their good works were signs to the author that they had genuinely received Christ (v. 10).

6:10 They will be rewarded or punished because God is not unjust. He will reward them for what they have done.

6:11 Christians are always in danger of not continuing to trust fully in the hope they have in Christ. We must keep this commitment firm to the end.

6:12 Sluggish is the same word that is translated dull in 5:11 and initiates this exhortation to the Hebrews to grow in their faith (5:11—6:12).

6:13–15 Abraham is an example of faith and patience in God's promise (v. 12). He waited twenty-five years from the time the promise was first made until Isaac, the promised son, was born (Gen. 12:4; 21:5).

6:16, 17 Confirmation means "guarantee." An oath is used to guarantee an agreement.

6:18 The Lord confirmed His oath to Abraham by swearing by Himself (v. 13) because He alone is beyond deceit. The two immutable things are God's Word and God's oath. Since God does not lie and since He is all-powerful, He will fulfill all His promises. This unchanging nature of God is the believer's consolation and encouragement.

6:19 The believer's hope in Christ is secure, like an anchor. Furthermore, this anchor is not in sand, but in the very presence of the Almighty. Behind the veil refers to the Most Holy Place, the place where God dwells.

6:20 The Greek word for forerunner was used in the second century A.D. of the smaller boats sent into the harbor by larger ships unable to enter due to the buffeting of the weather. These smaller boats carried the anchor through the breakers inside the harbor and dropped it there, securing the larger ship. Forerunner presupposes that others will follow. Thus, Jesus is not only the believer's anchor but He is like a runner boat that has taken our anchor into port and secured it there. There is thus no doubt as to whether this vessel is going into port. The only question, is whether it will go in with the sleekness of a well-trimmed sailing vessel or like a water-laden barge. Believers who have such a hope in the presence of God should come boldly before the throne of grace (4:14–16). Moreover, since the hope of believers is sure and cannot be shaken loose, they should use it persistently.

7:1–25 Chapter 7 is the beginning of the advanced teaching for the mature (5:14). Verses 1–10 describe the superiority of Melchizedek's priesthood. According to Gen. 14:18–20, he was greater than Abraham and Levi. Verses 11–25 describe the superiority of Christ, the priest like Melchizedek. According to Ps. 110:4 He is "a priest forever." Therefore, He is greater than the Levitical priests who descended from Aaron (vv. 11–25).

7:1 The mention of Melchizedek recalls the author's reference to this ancient priest in 5:10, 11. Melchizedek was both a king and a priest, a common combination in ancient times. Salem was later renamed Jerusalem.

7:2 The name Melchizedek means king of righteousness. Salem means peace. The ideal king rules in righteousness, which assures peace (Is. 32:17).

7:3 without father … mother … genealogy: Genesis, a book with many genealogies, has none for Melchizedek. The author is not saying that Melchizedek was born without a father and mother, only that there is no record of his birth in the genealogies of Genesis. This description of Melchizedek prefigures the eternal priesthood of Jesus. Like Melchizedek, Jesus is both a Priest and a King, belonging to a righteous priesthood that is independent of Aaron's. Some commentators have cited this passage as evidence that Melchizedek is a preincarnate manifestation of Jesus. This is unlikely for the author states that Melchizedek is like the Son of God, not the same as Him.

7:4–7 Melchizedek was great because Abraham gave him a tithe. In the Greek text the word patriarch is emphatic. The greatness of Abraham, the one who possessed the promises of God (v. 6), underscores the even greater rank of Melchizedek, the priest of righteousness.

7:8–10 Melchizedek was not only superior to Abraham; he was superior to the Levitical priesthood in two ways. First, the Levitical priests were mortal—that is, they died; and thus different priests represented the people at different times. In contrast, Melchizedek lives, meaning the OT does not record his death (v. 3). Second, in a sense, Levi paid tithes to Melchizedek through Abraham's gift. So to speak indicates that Levi, who was not yet born, did not literally pay tithes. However, because he descended from Abraham, he is counted as having paid tithes to Melchizedek too.

7:11–25 Why does Christ, the priest after Melchizedek's order, replace the Levitical priesthood? Interpreting Ps. 110:4 phrase by phrase, the author of Hebrews gives the answer: Christ's priesthood was prophesied

(vv. 11–14); His priesthood was based on the power of an endless life (vv. 15–19); the oath of God established our Lord's priesthood (vv. 20–22); Christ has no successor but continues forever (vv. 23–25). Under this new plan, the law (v. 12) has been replaced by a better hope (v. 19) and a better covenant (v. 22).

7:11 If the Levitical priesthood had been able to bring people to perfection, then a superior priest from the order of Melchizedek would not have been needed (Ps. 110:4). If the priests under the Law of Moses could offer permanent reconciliation between God and His people, there would be no need for a coming Messiah, One who would restore the Israelites to their relationship with God.

7:12 Change means "removal" (12:27). If the Melchizedek priesthood removed the Levitical priesthood, then the Mosaic Law is also removed. In short, the believer is not under the Law but instead relies on the righteousness of Christ (Rom. 6:14; Gal. 3:24, 25). Any system of religion that tries to be under the law cannot have Christ because Christ does not minister the law. It's either Christ or the law but not both.

7:13–19 The author gives two more arguments to demonstrate that the law has been superseded. The first is in vv. 13, 14 and the second is in vv. 15–19.

7:13, 14 He of whom these things are spoken is the Lord, who arose from another tribe, namely Judah. According to the Law, the tribe of Judah had nothing to do with the priesthood. The argument hinges on Ps. 110:4 (5:6). If the OT said that another priest was coming from another tribe, then clearly the Law was going to be superseded.

7:15–19 The law, which regulated the priesthood, was fleshly in the sense that it regulated a person's external actions. The Lord, however, is a Priest according to the power of an endless life. This is proved by Ps. 110:4, quoted in v. 17. Jesus is a different kind of Priest, another indication that the Law has been changed. There has been an annulling, a putting away, of the Law.

7:20–28 Having proven that the Law has been superseded, the author argues that it has been replaced by something better.

7:20–22 Christ's priesthood is superior to the Levitical priesthood because it was established by an oath ("the LORD has sworn" in Ps. 110:4).

7:23, 24 Because Christ lives forever, His priesthood is unchangeable. In the Levitical system, the high priest's office was always changing hands. When one high priest died, another assumed the office. Josephus estimated that there were eighty-three different high priests between Aaron and the fall of the temple in A.D. 70.

7:25 Christ is … able to save because He is fully God and fully human (2:18; 4:15). Since this verse speaks of Jesus' present intercession for us, the word save in this verse speaks of our sanctification, the continuing process by which we are freed from the power of sin. This continuing process of salvation will eventually be completed in our glorification, when we our saved from the presence of sin. The word uttermost may speak of this glorification, this "complete" or "whole" salvation. come: The Greek verb for come is in the present tense. Therefore, the word indicates that Jesus continues to save those who keep coming to Him. Our justification is a once-for-all event accomplished on the Cross, but our sanctification is a continuing process. Since Christ has a permanent priesthood, He can save to the uttermost (Gk. panteles), a word which means "completely," or "wholly." To be saved completely (1 Thess. 5:23), believers must come to God through Christ and Christ must intercede for them. This is the last and greatest of the three great "ables" in the book (2:18; 4:15).

7:26–28 The author concludes this chapter with a summary of why Jesus' priesthood is superior to any other. Higher than the heavens means Christ is exalted above all and sits in glory at the right hand of the Father (1:3; 2:9; 4:14). daily, as those high priests: The high priest offered an annual sacrifice on the Day of Atonement for the atonement of the people's sins (9:7; 10:1), but the priests also offered sacrifices every day before the Lord (Ex. 29:36). In contrast, Jesus offered Himself once, a perfect, sinless sacrifice for the sins of all. Since Jesus is perfect, He did not have to offer sacrifices for His own sins. The permanent, eternal nature of Jesus' priesthood established by an oath of God is in sharp contrast to the temporal, weak nature of the Levitical priesthood.

8:1–6 Christ's priestly ministry belongs to the heavenly realm. He ministers in heaven, not in the Mosaic tabernacle (vv. 1, 2, 5). His sacrifice was appropriate for heaven; it was not gifts according to the law (vv. 3, 4). Therefore, He mediates a better covenant (v. 6). These themes are further developed in 8:7—10:18.

8:1 The main point of this section of Hebrews (vv. 1–6) is the High Priesthood of Christ, mentioned in 2:17—3:1 and developed in 4:14—7:28.

8:2, 3 The sanctuary refers to the heavenly reality represented by the Most Holy Place (9:2, 8, 24; 10:19; 13:11). This reality is the presence of God. Our High Priest serves there and desires to bring us there (10:19).

8:4 according to the law: Only men from the tribe of Levi could serve as priests. Christ was not from that tribe (7:13, 14).

8:5 The Levitical priesthood served as a copy of the heavenly Priest. The same goes for the tabernacle. Moses was shown a pattern, a type or model, of the true tabernacle (Ex. 25:40).

The Superiority of Jesus

When it comes to spiritual matters, people are peculiar. They become obsessed with angels, but somehow ignore or forget the God who created and directs these heavenly messengers. They devote themselves to seeking and understanding "truth," but they never encounter the Holy One who encompasses all truth. They engage in all sorts of rituals and practices to try to find and reach out to their Creator; but they somehow miss the fact that He has already reached down to them.

This is the case today, just as it was in the first century. In fact, this spiritual "peculiarity" is one of the reasons the Spirit of God inspired the letter to the Hebrews. To Jewish Christians who were dealing with persecution and hardship, who were doubting the truth of the gospel and the New Covenant, and who were considering the idea of turning away, the writer of Hebrews sent this clear message: Christ is the Ultimate.

More than a mere prophet, Christ is God in the flesh (1:2, 3, 8). He is Creator (1:10–12) and Sustainer of all (1:3). As the "holy, harmless, undefiled" High Priest who is "separate from sinners" and "who does not need to offer up sacrifices … for His own sins" (7:26, 27), Jesus Christ alone is capable of providing salvation and sanctification (2:10, 11).

Given these facts, it is easy to see why the author of Hebrews states that Christ is better than the angels (1:4). It is clear why even Moses pales in comparison. No wonder Hebrews states that Christ is the Author and Mediator of a better covenant (7:22; 8:6), that He offered a better sacrifice for sin (9:23), that He possesses a more excellent name (1:4), and that He carries out a more excellent ministry (8:6).

We must resist the temptation to settle for a superficial spirituality. Angels, rituals, and human role models all have their place. But none of these things compares to Christ. And therein lies the staggering promise of the gospel: Jesus Christ comes to us and offers Himself. Because of His perfect payment for sins, we can find the forgiveness we so desperately need. More than that, we can experience eternal life, which Jesus Himself described as an intimate, never-ending relationship with God the Father and God the Son. Given that mind-boggling opportunity, why would we look anywhere else or settle for anything less?

8:6 Christ not only serves in a better sanctuary (vv. 1–5); He has a more excellent ministry and is mediator of a better covenant based on better promises (vv. 10–12).

8:7 That first covenant is the Mosaic covenant (v. 9; Ex. 19:5).

8:8–12 A quotation from Jer. 31:31–34 demonstrates that even the OT recognized there was another or "second" (v. 7) covenant.

8:8, 9 The new covenant is the "better covenant" of v. 6. This covenant was made with Israel and Judah, yet the church enjoys the spiritual blessings of this covenant now. The Abrahamic covenant was made with Abraham and his physical descendants (Gen. 17:7), who would inherit the land (Gen. 12:7; 13:14, 15). Yet the Abrahamic covenant also contained spiritual promises (Gen. 12:3) in which the church participates (Rom. 11:11–27; Gal. 3:13, 14). The New Covenant in fact is a fulfillment of the spiritual redemption promised in the Abrahamic and Davidic covenants (Matt. 26:26–29; Luke 22:20).

A New Covenant

Thousands of years of Jewish history were built on God's covenant with Israel. But Christ came to rewrite the script of history. He offers a superior covenant rooted in better promises and without fault (Heb. 8:6, 7). As the prophet Jeremiah had foreseen, under the new arrangement wickedness will be forgiven, sins will be forgotten, and the old covenant will fade into the shadows before vanishing altogether (8:12, 13; Jer. 31:31–34).

What an amazing message! We can have a fresh start. Bondage to old, seemingly unbreakable patterns can be broken and replaced. But first we must confess our condition and accept God's provision, which includes His agenda for change (1 John 1:8–10). Therein lies a fresh start for our lives.

8:10–12 There are four provisions of the New Covenant: (1) God's law will be written on believers' minds and hearts. This is in contrast to the Mosaic Law, which was written on tablets of stone. (2) Believers will have a relationship with God fulfilling the promise of Lev. 26:12 (2 Cor. 6:16). (3) All will know God. No longer will Pharisees and scribes have to teach the intricacies of the Law to the people. (4) God will forgive the sins of believers and remember them no more. The continual sacrifice of animals for the atonement of sin will cease.

8:13 The presence of a new, better covenant not only demonstrates that the first covenant is not sufficient (v. 7); it also shows that the first covenant is obsolete and ready to vanish away. At the time the author of Hebrews wrote these words, the ceremonies of the Mosaic covenant were still being conducted in the temple in Jerusalem. In A.D. 70 the Roman general Titus destroyed the temple, fulfilling these words.

“know”

(Gk. ginosko) (8:11; John 21:17; Gal. 4:9) Strong’s #1097; (Gk. oida) (8:11; John 21:15–17; 2 Cor. 5:16; Gal. 4:8, 9) Strong’s #1097; 1492: In the statement “know the Lord, for all shall know me,” there are two different Greek words for know. The first word (ginosko) means “to come to know” or “to know personally.” It can designate ongoing, personal knowledge, which implies a relationship between the knower and the person who is known. The second word (oida) is derived from the Greek verb meaning “to see.” Thus, oida means “to perceive” or “to know absolutely.” It suggests complete knowledge, while ginosko means a growing knowledge.

9:1—10:10 Verses 1–10 of ch. 9 describe the Day of Atonement sacrifices in the earthly tabernacle (Lev. 16). These sacrifices could not cleanse the conscience. By contrast, Christ's offering of Himself gained Him entrance into the heavenly sanctuary (9:11–14), established a New Covenant (9:15–22), and thus provided for our salvation once and for all (9:23–28). His obedience made His sacrifice effective (10:1–10).

9:1 The first (Mosaic) covenant included an earthly sanctuary, the tabernacle (v. 2), in which divine service was offered.

9:2–5 These verses simply describe the furniture of the tabernacle. The tabernacle courtyard contained an altar for animal sacrifice, a laver for ceremonial washings, and the tent itself (the word tabernacle literally means "tent"). The tabernacle was divided into two rooms by a veil. The first part was the sanctuary or holy place, housing the lampstand, the table for the showbread, and the altar of incense. The second room was the Most Holy Place (v. 3) containing the ark of the covenant, in which were stored symbols of the Mosaic covenant. The pot of manna reminded the people of God's miraculous provision for them in the wilderness. Aaron's rod was a sign of the authority of the priesthood. God had ordained Aaron and his sons to be representatives of the people before Him. The tablets were the Ten Commandments given to the nation at Mount Sinai. On top of the ark was the mercy seat, the place where God made His presence known. golden censer: In this passage, it sounds as if the censer was placed in the Most Holy Place, when in fact it was just outside the veil that separated the Most Holy Place from the holy place. Because of its function, the censer was commonly associated with the Most Holy Place (Ex. 30:6; 40:6).

9:6 Every morning and every evening the priests entered the holy place to burn incense on the golden altar and trim the lamps (Ex. 30:7, 8). Every week on the Sabbath, the showbread was changed (Lev. 24:5–8).

9:7 Only the high priest could enter the Most Holy Place. Once a year, on the Day of Atonement, the high priest offered a blood sacrifice for himself and for the sins of ignorance committed by everyone in the nation of Israel (Lev. 16). In the provisions of the Mosaic covenant, access to God was limited (compare the promises of the "new covenant" in Heb. 8:10, 11).

9:8 The fact that the high priest could enter the Holiest of All only once a year indicates the striking failure of the Mosaic covenant to bring believers into the presence of God.

9:9 The tabernacle was symbolic, an illustration of spiritual truths. The present time refers to the OT period. cannot make … perfect: The Mosaic covenant covered sins of ignorance (v. 7), but not premeditated sins or the sinful nature of all people (Ps. 51). In other words, the old system was lacking. It did not completely reconcile the people to God.

9:10 fleshly ordinances: This indicates they were external and temporary. Reformation (Gk. diorthosis) means "new order." The temporary nature of the Mosaic law appears again.

9:11–14 The "first covenant" (v. 1) had a sanctuary (vv. 2–5) and a service of sacrificial worship (vv. 6–10). Christ, too, had a sanctuary (v. 11) and offered a sacrifice (vv. 12–14).

9:11 Christ's tabernacle is better than the OT tabernacle (vv. 1–5). The good things to come include access to God (8:10–12). The preposition with in this context means "in connection with." Therefore, the greater and more perfect tabernacle is not a reference to Christ's body but to the "true tabernacle" (8:2).

9:12 The service of the Levitical priest obtained a limited, recurring, symbolic type of redemption. Christ, with His own blood, obtained eternal redemption. His sacrifice never has to be repeated because it is perfect. Millions and millions of animal sacrifices were fulfilled in the one climactic sacrifice of Jesus our Savior. The "with" is more accurately rendered "through." It is not as though He took a bowl of blood. Rather, His shed blood was the channel of access.

9:13 According to Mosaic Law, the blood of bulls and goats from the sacrifices made on the Day of Atonement would atone for the people's sins (v. 12). The ashes of a heifer were mixed with water and were used to cleanse a person who had become ceremonially defiled by touching a corpse (Num. 19). The author of Hebrews points out that these ceremonies could purify only a person's exterior, not a person's heart.

9:14 The eternal Spirit is the Holy Spirit; all three persons of the Trinity are involved in cleansing. cleanse your conscience: The defilement is internal, not external (v. 13). Christ's death has the power to purify a person's mind and soul. Dead works are the rituals of the Mosaic Law that could not give life (6:1). Placing faith and confidence in what has already served its purpose and has now passed away is useless. It is disobedience. The author of Hebrews commands his audience to free their conscience from regulations of Mosaic Law and instead cling to Christ for cleansing. In doing so, they could truly serve the living God and not dead works.

(Gk. apolutrosis) (9:15; Rom. 3:24; Eph. 1:14; Col. 1:14) Strong’s #629: Two related words, lutrosis and apolutrosis, are both translated redemption and are frequently used by the NT writers. The first word indicates the act of freeing or releasing by paying a ransom price; the second, the act of buying back by paying a ransom price. Christ paid the ransom price with His own blood (1 Pet. 1:18, 19) and thus freed us from the demands of the law and its curse on sin to become children of God (Gal. 3:13; 4:5).

9:15 The New Covenant provides two gifts to a believer: redemption and inheritance. Believers receive redemption from the sins committed under the Law. In other words, Christ paid the price to free us from our own sin. His death substitutes for our death, the penalty of our sins. Like the Israelites, believers receive an inheritance, but our inheritance is eternal (v. 14). By imitating the faith and patience of Abraham, believers are assured that they will inherit the marvelous promises God has made (6:12; 8:6–12).

9:16, 17 Testament is the same word translated covenant in v. 15. It means a legal will. Before the provisions of a will take effect, the one who made it must die.

9:18–21 The Mosaic covenant was ratified by blood, that is to say, death. It was not the death of the one making the covenant, but the death of the animals offered as a sacrifice to God (Ex. 24:1–8). To support the proposition that death is necessary for ratification of a covenant, the author illustrates the point by appealing to the ratification of the Mosaic covenant (Ex. 24:3–8).

IN FOCUS

“covenant”

(Gk. diatheke) (9:15, 16, 17, 18, 20; 13:20; Matt. 26:28; Gal. 3:17) Strong’s #1242: The word diatheke can refer either to an agreement or a will (or testament). In 9:15–20, the author of Hebrews explains why the second covenant (8:7) has succeeded the first one made at Mount Sinai. The explanation employs an analogy to a “will.” Thus, the author uses the word diatheke throughout the section, employing the two different meanings of the word and tying them together. Just as the stipulations of a will go into effect when a person dies, so Christ died to initiate the New Covenant, the covenant that frees us from bondage to the first covenant.

9:22 Almost indicates that there were exceptions to blood purification (Lev. 5:11–13), but that they were few in comparison with the central importance of sacrifices made for the remission of sins (Lev. 17:11).

9:23 If the copies had to be cleansed by blood, then an even better sacrifice was necessary for the realm of the true sanctuary.

9:24 Christ’s sacrifice was better than sacrifices made under the Mosaic covenant because Christ did not enter a man-made sanctuary, which was a copy; instead, He entered the true sanctuary, which is in heaven—the very presence of God.

9:25, 26 Christ’s sacrifice was better than sacrifices made under the Mosaic covenant because He did not offer an annual sacrifice of animals, but offered Himself once. at the end of the ages: The coming of Christ is the climax of the OT period.

9:27, 28 As people die once, so Christ died once—not like the repeated sacrifices of the Levitical system. Unlike people, Christ did not die and face judgment. He died once to appear a second time for salvation (1:14). Those who eagerly wait for Him are not necessarily all believers, but those who look for His return, those who are steadfast to the end.

10:1–4 Not the very image means “not the exact representation.” Perfect refers to the removal of the consciousness of sins (v. 2; 8:12; 9:9). The sacrifices of the Mosaic covenant prefigured Christ’s ultimate sacrifice of Himself. Therefore, these imperfect sacrifices of mere animals could not completely purify the person who offered them. If they had been able to, these sacrifices would have ceased. Instead of thoroughly atoning for the sins of the people, the annual sacrifice on the Day of the Atonement was a visible reminder of the people’s sins.

10:5–7 Therefore: Based on the inadequacy of animal sacrifices, a conclusion is drawn. it is written of Me: The author presents Ps. 40 as a messianic psalm, for only Christ, and not David, could have fulfilled the prophecies of the book, the OT. To do Your will: The OT prophets had warned the Israelites that sacrifices alone would not please God. He desired obedience as well (Ps. 51:16, 17; Is. 1:13–17; Mark 12:33). This messianic psalm indicates that Jesus’ obedience to God the Father was one of the reasons His sacrifice was better than the OT sacrifices.

10:8, 9 The author explains Ps. 40, concluding that God takes away the first, meaning the Levitical sacrificial system, to establish the second, namely, the Son’s obedient sacrifice. The verb translated takes away means “abolishes.” The imperfect sacrifices were abolished so that the perfect Sacrifice could impart true life.

10:10 Sanctified means “set apart.” Believers have been separated from their sins and set apart to God by the once-for-all sacrifice of Christ.

Christ's once-for-all sacrifice of Himself for human sin is superior to the animal sacrifices offered "daily" and "repeatedly" by the Levitical priesthood (Heb. 10:11, 12).

10:11, 12 The author of Hebrews contrasts the Levitical priests with Jesus, our High Priest. The Levitical priests always stood before God. There were no seats in the sanctuary, for the priests' job was never done. There were always more sins for which to atone. In contrast, Christ sat down (1:3; 8:1) after offering Himself as a sacrifice. Sitting indicates that His work of atonement is finished. His final words on the Cross, "It is finished," declare this spiritual reality (John 19:30).

10:13 Christ's work of redemption is so finished that all He has to do is wait until His enemies are made His footstool.

10:14 The finished work of Christ in dying for sin once for all (v. 10) has perfected (v. 1) forever those who are being sanctified, that is, those who have been set apart to God (v. 10). Notice that the sanctification spoken of in v. 10 is positional; it refers to our justification, the fact that we have been declared righteous. However, in this verse sanctification refers to the gradual process by which believers are being made more and more perfect.

10:15–18 If full and final forgiveness has been achieved so that God does not remember sin any longer (v. 17), then no further sacrifice for sin is necessary. To remember sins no more does not mean to forget, but not to hold sin against us any longer.

10:19–25 In these verses, the author of Hebrews demonstrates the relationship between faith, hope, and love. Faith in God leads believers to place their hope in His promises. Restoring a right relationship with God then prompts believers to restore their relationships with others. Love for God demonstrates itself in love for others. The author exhorts his readers to faith, hope, and love through three commands: “let us draw near” (v. 22); “let us hold fast” (v. 23); and “let us consider” (v. 24).

10:19 Therefore recalls the therefore of 4:16. The author has spent five chapters explaining the superiority of Christ’s priesthood to the Levitical priesthood and the superiority of the New Covenant to the Mosaic covenant. Unlike the Israelites, who approached God at Mount Sinai with fear and trembling (Ex. 20:18–21), believers can approach God with boldness (3:6; 4:16; 10:35) because we possess Christ’s righteousness and not our own. The Holiest refers to the very presence of God. On this earth, most of us do not have immediate access to a president or monarch. But through Christ’s blood, we have perpetual access to God Himself.

“new and living way”

(Gk. hodos prosphatos kai zosa) (10:20) Strong’s #3598; 4372; 2532; 2198: The Greek word for new is prosphatos, meaning “recently killed” or “freshly slain.” Because Christ shed His blood to prepare the way for us to enter the Most Holy Place, this way is “a freshly slain way,” a way ever fresh because of the eternal efficacy of Jesus’ blood. At the same time, this is the living way, for this way leads to our source of spiritual life, namely God Himself. Therefore, this way, prepared by Jesus’ death, leads to eternal life.

10:20 The OT high priest passed through a veil to get to the Most Holy Place. Now believers enter God’s presence through Christ’s flesh, meaning His sacrificial death.

10:21 Believers have a High Priest who, having been tempted Himself, can sympathize with their weaknesses and perfectly represent them before God (4:14, 15).

10:22 Draw near is the same word rendered come in 4:16. Full assurance means “certainty” (6:11). our hearts sprinkled … our bodies washed: Our consciences can be cleansed through the blood of Christ (9:14). Just as the high priest washed before entering the Most Holy Place (Lev. 16:3, 4), so believers are cleansed before they come before the Holy One.

10:23 Confession of our hope is the believer’s confident expectation of the future. Promised here may refer to the promise of rest (4:1). If the believer does his or her part, there is no question that God will fulfill His part of the agreement (2 Tim. 2:11, 12).

10:24, 25 Consider means “to observe,” “to contemplate,” or “to have an intelligent insight into.” Note that love and good works need to be stirred up; they do not just occur. The Greek word translated stir up has come into English as paroxysm, which means a “convulsion.” In this context the Greek word speaks forcefully of the tremendous impact believers can have on each other. That is why the author exhorts the Hebrews to gather together. Evidently some believers had stopped attending the worship services of the church, perhaps because they feared persecution. The author does not use the usual Greek word for church, perhaps because the term had come to mean the spiritual, invisible body of believers. Instead he uses a compound form of the word synagogue, which specifically means the local, physical gathering of believers (Ps. 40:9, 10; 42:4). Exhorting means coming alongside and inspiring another with the truth. The local assembly is where the gospel message is preached, but also where the Word of God is applied to the circumstances of our lives. Approaching may also be translated "at hand" (Rom. 13:12; Phil. 4:5; James 5:8; 1 Pet. 4:7; Rev. 1:3). Knowing that Christ's return is imminent, the believers were to encourage each other even more to remain faithful to Him (3:13).

10:26–39 The warnings found in these verses are similar to the warnings in Heb. 6. The additional element in Heb. 10 is the statement regarding intentional sin and the harsher language used of the judgment on the offender. Many have concluded that vv. 26–39 are directed toward the unregenerate, but these verses are clearly addressed to believers. The word for indicates that this passage explains the preceding paragraph, which is an exhortation to believers (vv. 19–25). We demonstrates the author included himself with those who received the warning. It could also be argued that they "received the knowledge of the truth" and that the Greek word for knowledge means "personal experimental knowledge." Furthermore, they were sanctified by the blood of Christ (v. 29), were called God's people (v. 30) and had suffered for Christ (vv. 32–34). What they needed was endurance (v. 36).

10:26 sin willfully: The reference here is not to an occasional act of sin (which can be confessed and forgiven, 1 John 1:8, 9), but to a conscious rejection of God. The OT speaks in Num. 15:30, 31 of committing willful sin. A person who sinned presumptuously was to be cut off from the people. In this verse, willful sin after receiving the knowledge of the truth about the centrality of the assembly for the upbuilding and maturing of the saints is to reject it and go one's own individualistic, privatistic, and selfish way. God's plan is not building in isolation but building in relation to each other. If a Christian rebels against God's provision there no longer remains a sacrifice for sins. There was no sacrifice for the presumptuous sin (Num. 15:29–31). Such action is to despise the word of the Lord.

10:27 With no hope of forgiveness (v. 26), all that one can expect is judgment, described here as a fiery indignation. Many have assumed this is a reference to hell. But fire is used in Scripture of other things. The fire here is either temporal judgment or the judgment seat of Christ, similar to the OT in which Yahweh's anger toward His people who sinned is described by the metaphor of fire (Is. 9:18, 19; 10:17). Those who choose to disobey God become His adversaries (James 4:4).

10:28, 29 The specific sin in the OT that required two or three witnesses was idolatry (Deut. 17:2–7). The judgment for idolatry was death by stoning. If idolatry was punished with physical death, how much worse punishment should someone receive who treats the word of Christ with disrespect or disdain? Counted the blood … a common thing means the blood of Christ is treated as no different from the blood of an ordinary man or the blood of an animal sacrifice. Insulted the Spirit of grace is a reference to the Holy Spirit, the agent of God's gracious gift of salvation. A believer who commits these offenses will be judged with a punishment worse than physical death. This is not a reference to spiritual death, or hell. There are forms of temporal judgment that are worse than physical death—some that make physical death a welcomed relief (Lam. 4:6, 9; compare 2 Chr. 26:21).

10:30, 31 The author quotes two passages from Deut. 32 to support his claim that judgment belongs to the Lord and that God's people are not excused from God's judgment. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God because there is no other sacrifice for sin than Christ's sacrifice on the Cross (v. 26), only a fearful expectation of judgment (v. 27). All sin not covered by the blood of Christ will result in great loss at the judgment seat (1 Cor. 3:15; 2 Cor. 5:10).

10:32—12:17 Those who live the life of faith in God will suffer. These sufferers include the readers of Hebrews (10:32–39), the OT faithful (11:1–40), and, more than anyone else, Jesus Himself (12:1–4). God uses suffering to strengthen His true children (12:5–11). Therefore, be encouraged (12:12–17).

10:32, 33 To encourage his readers, the author urges them to recall their former endurance, which occurred right after they were illuminated or converted (6:9–12). They had endured even though they were ridiculed because of their faith.

10:34 The people to whom Hebrews was written had shown compassion on the author when he was in prison and had joyfully accepted economic hardship.

10:35, 36 To cast away one's confidence is to lose conviction about the value of one's Christian commitment. For the recipients of Hebrews to return to the safety of Judaism would mean a loss of eternal reward at the judgment seat of Christ.

10:37, 38 These verses focus the attention of a person facing trial on the imminent return of the Lord and the need to endure by faith (3:12, 13).

10:39 Those who draw back are in danger of destruction. The writer is confident that he and his readers believe to the saving of the soul. Those who live by faith (v. 38) invest their physical lives for eternal dividends.

Growing Faith

For some followers of Christ, faith is not merely a private matter but a timid one as well. It's as if faith is such a delicate thing that unless one carefully protects it, the world will surely destroy it. However, Hebrews challenges believers to a different way of living. Faith that is alive and growing need not be treated like a pet bunny rabbit that is periodically brought out of its cage to be adored and fed on special occasions, but then quickly returned to its haven of safety. To be sure, we live in a world of roaring lions (1 Pet. 5:8) and therefore must be on guard. Yet the safest way to live in a world of spiritual dangers is to build up our strength, not to hide our faith in secrecy. Hebrews offers some suggestions: • We can take confidence by freely entering into God's presence through Christ (Heb. 10:19, 22).

• Our faith can rest in full assurance that because of Christ's work on our behalf, our sins have been forgiven (10:21, 22).

• We can keep a firm grip on the basics of our faith, which rest on the integrity of Christ (10:23).

• As believers we can stir each other up to loving, active faith (10:24).

• We can meet with other believers regularly for encouragement, accountability, worship, and prayer (10:25).

• We can leave judgment and repayment up to God, who is the ultimate Judge of people (10:29–31).

• We can keep a loose grip on privilege, comfort, and possessions and instead show compassion toward those in need, such as prisoners (10:32, 33).

• We can condition ourselves for the long haul so as to finish well (10:35–39).

Spiritual strength and health means integrating our faith with every area of life. Faith is not just one more thing on a list of a hundred things, but rather the foundation of who we are. If our walk with Christ is real, it should become evident to others (James 2:14, 26; 3:13). Faith that is alive and growing is faith unleashed!

11:1–39 Having concluded the fourth exhortation with the statement that believers should live by faith (10:38, 39), the author now discusses faith in detail, giving many OT examples of people who trusted God.

11:1 This verse is not a definition of faith, but a description of what faith does. Substance means "essence" or "reality." Faith treats things hoped for as reality. Evidence means "proof" or "conviction." Faith itself proves that what is unseen is real, such as the believer's rewards at the return of Christ (2 Cor. 4:18).

11:2 The elders are the believers of the OT. Good testimony refers to God's approval; He considered them righteous because of their faith (vv. 4, 5, 7).

11:3 worlds: Faith understands that the invisible God created the vast universe.

11:4 Abel's sacrifice was acceptable to God because of his faith, and was therefore declared righteous. Evidently Cain offered his sacrifices without faith (Gen. 4). Abel still speaks to us because his righteous deeds have been recorded in Scripture.

11:5, 6 The word comes is used repeatedly in Hebrews to refer to the privilege of drawing near to God (4:16; 7:25; 10:1, 22). Here the author of Hebrews explains that faith is mandatory for those who approach Him (10:22). rewarder: God rewards not only those who seek Him, but those who do good works in the Holy Spirit's power (Rev. 22:12).

Heroes of Faith

The Jewish Christians to whom the Epistle to the Hebrews is addressed were demoralized and discouraged. Christianity had proven difficult for them. It was radical. It set aside centuries of tradition. It emphasized a new but troubling kind of spiritual freedom. In short, it incurred the wrath of the Jewish religious establishment.

Many converts were ready to turn back and to leave the uneasy, uncharted waters of faith for the comfortable, familiar life of works and moral effort. This was the choice they faced: depending on the Law or following Jesus, trying to appease God or trusting in Him, a complicated religious system or a simple relationship with the living God through Christ.

After reminding these immature believers of the superiority of Jesus Christ, the writer of Hebrews, beginning in 10:19, demonstrates for them the superiority of faith. Faith means we cannot see the outcome, we are not sure what lies ahead (11:1). But we are convinced of the reality of God (11:6). In other words, “We’re not sure what the future holds, but we know Who holds the future.” Faith means clinging to the hope that God will eventually triumph; He will come back to earth in judgment, to reward those who have sought after Him (11:6). And so we obey. We do God’s bidding, even when submission is hard.

It is the response of obedience that qualifies the characters in ch. 11 as people of great faith. Abraham and Sarah believed God; consequently, they obeyed Him, regardless of the consequences. It is this kind of willing trust that pleases God (11:6). Anything less will not do.

Those who do not have faith cannot see past the physical world around them. They are limited by their temporal circumstances and are blind to what God is doing. But those who open their spiritual eyes can see the spiritual realities that transcend this world. Their hope is in God’s strength and in His faithfulness. In that hope they find the strength to endure. When it comes to faith, the world scoffs. Faith, at best, seems like a great waste; at worst, it seems almost suicidal. Do we really want to give up all the pleasures of this world for something elusive and ethereal?

Faith is never easy. But the more convinced we are of the reality of an all-good, all-powerful God, the more our trust will grow, and the less we will be overwhelmed by doubts and temptations.

11:7 Noah had never seen (v. 1) the flood God revealed to him. Yet he believed God in spite of this and heeded His warnings. His faith not only saved him from the deluge but also from God's judgment, for He became an heir of righteousness.

11:8, 9 Abraham did not know where he was going, yet he still placed His trust in God. Faith means obediently stepping into the unknown (v. 1). Abraham did this, and God considered him righteous because of it (Gen. 15:6; Rom. 4:1–12).

11:10 The city here is the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:2, 10). Abraham lived in the land waiting for the future yet unseen New Jerusalem.

11:11, 12 Though the Book of Genesis does not explicitly say so, Sarah evidently believed that nothing was too hard for the Lord (Gen. 18:15). As a result, God blessed her with the promised son, though she was past the age of childbearing. stars … sand: This comparison used to be considered ridiculous. But now astrophysicists recognize the legitimacy of the comparison of the "stars of the sky" and the "sand of the seashore."

11:13, 14 These all refers to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Sarah (vv. 8, 9, 11), who died before taking possession of the land or seeing any of the other provisions of God's covenant. Nevertheless, they endured in the faith, even to the end of their lives. strangers and pilgrims on the earth: These men and women of faith knew that this world was temporary, that their eternal home would be with God.

11:15, 16 The patriarchs and Sarah did not return to Ur, even though they could have if they had wanted to. The recipients of Hebrews were to follow the patriarchs' example and refuse to return to the religion of their ancestors, a religious system that no longer provided atonement for sin (8:7–13). Similarly, present-day believers should refuse to return to the attractions of this world (2 Tim. 2:3, 4; 4:10).

11:17–19 When Abraham was tested, he believed that God could raise Isaac from the dead (Gen. 22:5) if necessary. The incident is figurative of what God has done for us. Isaac was as good as dead, but God provided a ram to sacrifice in his place (Gen. 22:9–14). With God everything is possible. He is the Almighty, and His Son has triumphed over death (John 11:38–44; 1 Cor. 15:54–57; Rev. 1:18).

11:20–22 Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph all believed until the ends of their lives in the unseen future God had promised.

11:23 The parents of Moses had faith in God in the midst of opposition.

11:24–28 Moses believed God by refusing a high position in Pharaoh's court. Instead, he chose suffering, forsook Egypt, and instituted the Passover.

11:25 The sin for Moses would have been to abandon God's people (10:25).

11:26 The reproach of Christ refers to the earthly disgrace Christ received. Like Christ, Moses chose to suffer the indignities associated with God's people, instead of embracing the worldly pleasures of Pharaoh's court. The possibility of reward is the most frequently mentioned motivation for enduring in the faith (Matt. 5:10–12; 16:24–27; 1 Cor. 3:12–15; 2 Cor. 4:16–18; 2 Tim. 2:11–13; 1 John 2:28; Rev. 22:12).

11:27 forsook Egypt: Some commentators interpret this as a reference to Moses' flight to Midian. However, the mention of not fearing the wrath of the king in this verse fits the events of the Exodus better. At that time Moses showed true courage, a resolute faith in the Lord (Ex. 14:13, 14).

11:28 God told Moses to sprinkle blood on the doorposts. Moses believed God's word, heeded His warning, and as a result the firstborn of every Israelite family was saved (Ex. 12:1–13).

11:29 dry … drowned: Some have tried to explain away the miracle of the Red Sea crossing by saying it was a marshy place. If so, it would have been a major miracle that the Egyptian army drowned in a marsh!

11:30–34 It took faith for the warriors of Israel to destroy the walled city of Jericho by such unconventional means. Yet this act of faith brought the results they desired; God gave them victory over their enemies (Josh. 6). God's ways do not always appear the best or most logical to human understanding (Is. 55:8), but they always accomplish God's purposes.

11:35, 36 The reference to women who received their dead is probably a reference to the raising of the son of the widow of Zarephath (1 Kin. 17:17–24) and of the Shunammite woman (2 Kin. 4:32–37). But the author of Hebrews also points out that not all who had faith won victories, at least not in the same hour. tortured: This is usually understood to be an allusion to the heroic martyrs of Maccabean times, who were well known. A better resurrection is a reference to a richer resurrection, an abundant entrance into the Kingdom (2 Pet. 1:11), which is our eternal reward.

11:37, 38 Zechariah was stoned (2 Chr. 24:20, 21). According to Jewish tradition, the prophet Isaiah was sawn in two. Urijah was slain with the sword (Jer. 26:20–23). Wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins is probably a reference to Elijah (2 Kin. 1:8).

11:39, 40 Made perfect means “made complete.” This completion, the realization of all of God’s promises in Christ’s coming kingdom, awaits all believers.

12:1 The cloud of witnesses refers to the people of faith mentioned in ch. 11. They are not actually spectators watching us; they are witnesses testifying to the truth of the faith (11:2, 4–6). Weight is anything that hinders a runner.

IN COMPARISON

The Imperative of Faith

What is faith?	• Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen (11:1).
Why is faith important?	• Without faith it is impossible to please God (11:6).
In what does faith believe?	• Faith believes that God is, and that He is a rewarder of those who diligently seek Him (11:6).
What does faith look like in a person's life?	• Abel offered a costly sacrifice (11:4). • Enoch lived in a way that pleased God (11:5). • Noah obeyed divine warnings and built a giant ark (11:7). • Abraham left Ur at God's calling and went out, not knowing where he was going (11:8). • Sarah bore Isaac in her old age (11:11). • Abraham was willing to offer up Isaac, his only son, trusting that God was able to raise him up (11:17–19). • Isaac blessed his sons and exhorted them to obey the covenant (11:20). • Jacob likewise reminded his sons of God's promises (11:21). • Joseph expressed his confidence that God would bring the Israelites out of Egypt (11:22). • Moses' parents refused to carry out the commands of Pharaoh to kill their child (11:23). • Moses turned his back on the passing pleasures of sin and sided with the downtrodden children of Israel, leading them out of Egypt and obediently carrying out the difficult commands of God (11:24–29). • The Israelites, led by Joshua, trusted God to give them victory over the city of Jericho (11:30). • Rahab believed in the power of God and helped the Israelite spies (11:31). • Many other OT people of faith trusted God for power and victory and refused to compromise their faith in God, even in the midst of life-threatening circumstances (11:32–38).
What happens to the faithful?	• Some died without having received the promises (11:13). • Some have to find consolation in the truth that they will not realize the full blessings of God until they enter heaven (11:14–16). • Some experience miraculous deliverance (11:33–35). • Others, despite their implicit trust in God, experience torture, mockings, scourgings, imprisonment, stonings, destitution, affliction, and torment (11:35–38).
What is God's verdict on those who faithfully endure?	• They are those of whom the world is not worthy (11:38).
How should the lives of faithful believers affect us?	• We should be motivated to lay aside every weight, and the sin which so easily ensnares us, and . . . run with endurance the race that is set before us (12:1).

12:2 Looking here means "fixing one's eyes trustingly." We need to focus consistently on Christ instead of our own circumstances. finisher: Christ has done everything necessary for us to endure in our faith. He is our example and model, for He focused on the joy that was set before Him. His attention was not on the agonies of the Cross, but on the crown, not on the suffering, but the reward. sat down: Jesus is now at the right hand of the Father's throne, waiting for His enthronement on His throne (Rev. 3:21).

12:3 Consider here involves the idea of comparison, as an accountant would compare the various columns of a balance sheet. Believers should compare their sufferings to the torture Christ endured on their behalf (v. 4).

12:4 not yet resisted to bloodshed: Christ died (v. 3); but the community that received the letter to the Hebrews had not yet suffered deadly persecutions.

12:5–11 Christians are the adopted sons of God through the high priestly work of Christ, the eternal Son. Sinners who persecute us mean it for harm (v. 3). But God takes their persecution and changes it into chastening—His own fatherly discipline that trains us to become like Him.

12:5, 6 Proverbs 3:11, 12 teaches that divine discipline demonstrates divine love. Scourges means "whips," and is used figuratively of punishment. In the context of these verses, this discipline includes persecution (vv. 3, 4).

12:7 for what son: Sons are naturally disciplined out of love by their fathers. They should accept and learn from this discipline. In the same way, God disciplines us because He wants to make us better.

12:8 In Roman society an illegitimate son was one who had no inheritance rights. Without enduring discipline (literally, child training), believers are not sons in the sense that they are not like their Father (2:10). Neither do they receive an inheritance or reward (1:14) in the Kingdom.

12:9 Believers should not only endure God's discipline; they should readily be in subjection to their heavenly Father.

12:10, 11 our profit: Although fathers discipline for a while as they see fit, God disciplines us with our good welfare in mind. With every trial, God is fashioning us into a holy people, set apart for His good purposes (v. 14; 10:10). The peaceable fruit of righteousness suggests that the result of God's chastening is peace and righteousness.

12:12, 13 Borrowing the language of Is. 35:3, the author admonishes his readers to renew their strength so that they can endure the race of faith (v. 1).

12:14 See is sometimes taken to mean "to be in the presence of the Lord" and then the conclusion is drawn that without holiness no person can be in God's presence. But Satan comes before God (Job 1) and one day all will bow their knees before Him (Phil. 2:10, 11). The verse means: "Holiness, meaning practical righteousness, determines a person's perception." Such righteousness in this life allows us to see the Lord now (Gen. 32:30; Ex. 24:9–11).

Time for a Checkup

A timeworn adage that makes a lot of sense in the world of business and industry is, “If it ain’t broke, don’t fix it!” However, that definitely does not apply when it comes to people’s health. In fact, health experts report that preventive care can not only lead to better health and reduced risk from disease, but vastly reduce medical costs. People are unwise to neglect their physical condition.

This truth has its parallel in the spiritual realm, as the writer to the Hebrews shows. Twice the book warns its readers to pay attention to their spiritual condition (Heb. 6:1–20; 12:14–29). Notice the strong language used in Heb. 12 to describe what can happen to us if we neglect our walk with Christ: • We can fall short of the grace of God (12:15).

• Bitterness can take root and sprout up, causing trouble (12:15).

• Many people can become defiled (12:15).

• We may make a foolish or even catastrophic mistake like Esau did (12:16, 17; Gen. 25:27–34; 27:1–45).

• We may refuse to listen when God speaks to us (Heb. 12:25).

• God’s judgment may consume us (12:29).

Those are dire consequences! Fortunately, the writer offers some ways to check our spirituality and make corrections where we detect trouble: • Are we pursuing peace with others (12:14)? For example: how do we respond to conflicts at home, work, or school?

• Are we pursuing holiness (12:14)? For example: is our thought life focused on that which purifies (Phil. 2:1–13; 4:8, 9; 1 Thess. 4:1–8)?

• Are we listening carefully to God (Heb. 12:25)? For example: do we regularly wrestle with Scripture, allowing it to challenge us and keep us accountable?

• Do we live in grace, serving God in an acceptable way with reverence and respect (12:28)? For example: are we growing in our appreciation for God and His salvation, and for other believers? Do we express that clearly and regularly? Would others describe us as “thankful” (1 Tim. 4:4; Col. 3:17)?

How is our spiritual condition? Are there any symptoms to be concerned about? Any functions that seem weak or absent? What changes do we need to make to build ourselves up into spiritual health and strength?

12:15–17 Believers pursuing peace and practical righteousness (v. 14) should watch for three dangers: (1) falling short of God's grace—that is, refusing Christ's gracious offer of salvation and His provision for their needs (4:16); (2) allowing a root of bitterness to grow in their assembly—perhaps allowing idol worshipers to remain in the church (Deut. 29:18); and (3) becoming sexually immoral or irreligious. Esau illustrates those who are irreligious. Under the Law, the eldest son would receive a double inheritance (Deut. 21:17). Esau lost his inheritance, which included God's gracious promises, by despising it and valuing the pleasure of food over it (Gen. 25:34).

12:18–24 In these verses, the author of Hebrews contrasts the Mosaic covenant with the New Covenant by contrasting two mountains: Mount Sinai and Mount Zion. At Mount Sinai, the Israelites received the Law from God with fear and trembling, for God displayed at that time His awesome power (Ex. 19:10—20:26). In contrast, Christian believers have come to a heavenly Jerusalem on Mount Zion through Jesus' blood. This mountain is a celebration of the Holy One, attended by angels, believers, and righteous people. The author makes the contrast between the two covenants vivid, and then once again exhorts his readers not to reject Christ's offer of salvation (vv. 25–29).

12:23 In the OT the firstborn received a double inheritance (Deut. 21:17). These then are heirs who are in heaven awaiting the Kingdom (1:14). Just men made perfect refers to all believers who have died. They are just because they have been justified, and perfect because they are now "complete" in heaven.

"Mediator"

(Gk. mesites) (8:6; 9:15; 12:24; Gal. 3:19, 20; 1 Tim. 2:5) Strong's #3316: This Greek word means "a go-between," an intermediary between two parties. Paul describes Moses as a mediator of the first covenant: he acted as a liaison between God and the Israelites, communicating the obligations of the covenant to Israel and pleading the Israelites' case before God (Gal. 3:19, 20). In a similar way, Jesus is the Mediator of the New Covenant. He established it through His own death, commissioning His disciples to preach the Good News. Now He sits at the right hand of God interceding for us (7:25).

12:24 The blood of Abel cried out for revenge (Gen. 4:10); the blood of Christ speaks of redemption.

12:25 Him who speaks from heaven is Christ, who spoke on earth and is now in heaven. much more: Greater revelation means greater responsibility (2:1–4). If the Israelites were judged for not believing in God's promises (Num. 14:20–25), we too will be judged for disbelief.

12:26–28 The earth shook at Mount Sinai. The earth and heaven will shake in the latter days (Matt. 24:29). But the kingdom of God will not be shaken, for it will endure throughout all eternity (Luke 18:29).

12:29 our God is a consuming fire: The author concludes His lengthy warning to those who are tempted to abandon the faith (2:1—12:29) with a vivid description of God's judgment (Deut. 4:24). The Lord will judge His people (10:27, 30).

13:1–19 These concluding practical instructions show us how to “serve God acceptably” (12:28).

13:1 continue: The recipients of this letter had practiced brotherly love (6:10); but the author feared that the idea of returning to some form of Judaism might be hindering them from encouraging each other in the faith (10:24, 25).

13:2 Entertained angels is a reference to men in the OT who encountered heavenly beings. These men included Abraham (Gen. 18), Lot (Gen. 19), Gideon (Judg. 6), and Manoah (Judg. 13). The idea is that when you practice hospitality you may be helping a messenger of God without realizing it.

13:3 Remember the prisoners probably refers to believers who were being persecuted for the faith. The recipients of this letter had remembered those who were suffering (10:32–34). In the body is not a reference to the body of Christ, but to the physical body. The recipients of this letter were vulnerable to similar persecution as long as they were alive.

13:4 Marriage is honorable among all: The author now turns to some problems regarding physical love. To determine the full intent of this verse, one grammatical point must be resolved. In the Greek clause, the verb is omitted and must be supplied by the reader, as is common in both Hebrew and Greek. One may supply an indicative verb, marriage is, and make it a declarative sentence (KJV). Or one may supply a subjunctive verb, “let marriage be,” and make it an exhortation (NASV). The latter seems preferable since the context is hortatorical and the author is bringing up a new subject for exhortation. Also, if the first half is exhortation, the second half of the verse fits better. Thus, this is a command to purity, rather than a declaration against the ascetic teaching that regarded the marriage relation itself as unwholesome. Ascetic teaching was a problem at this time (compare 1 Tim. 4:3). But this does not seem to be the intent of our author. Marriage is honorable and the marriage bed undefiled. It must be kept that way. But (Gk. gar) could better be translated “for.” Keep marriage relationships, for God will judge those who do not. The fornicators are those who indulge in sexual relationships, heterosexual and homosexual, outside of marriage bonds. The adulterers are those who are unfaithful to their marriage vows.

13:5, 6 Covetousness is addressed in the last of the Ten Commandments (Ex. 19:17). This attitude destroys a person’s inheritance in the Kingdom (1 Cor. 6:9, 10). I will never leave you nor forsake you: This quotation is one of the most emphatic statements in the NT. In Greek it contains two double negatives, similar to saying in English, " I will never, ever, ever forsake you." Jesus uses the same technique to express the certainty of eternal life for believers (John 10:28).

13:7 those who rule over you: Also translated "your rulers." The reference is probably to Christian leaders who have died. Perhaps they were those who had first spoken the word of God to the readers of Hebrews. The outcome of the lives of saints whom we have known inspires us to endurance. Verse 17 speaks of respect for present leaders.

13:8 the same: The unchanging nature of the Son was mentioned at the beginning of this book (1:12). yesterday: Christ gave His grace to the former leaders who trusted Him (v. 7). today, and forever: Christ's grace is presently and permanently available to all who believe in Him.

13:9 Strange doctrines implies ideas foreign to the gospel message. Many of the ideas that the author of Hebrews was confronting were Jewish in origin—pertaining to ritual observances, sacrificial feasts, and various laws identifying what was clean and unclean.

13:10, 11 The word altar is used figuratively of the sacrifice of Christ. On the Day of Atonement, the high priest did not have the right to eat the sacrificed animal because it had atoned for the people's sins. Instead, it was burned outside the camp. The believer has a sacrifice, Jesus Christ. He atoned for the sins of humanity with His death on the Cross. But unlike the high priests of the OT, believers receive their sustenance from Christ in a symbolic way, by believing in Him (John 6:41–58).

13:12, 13 To be outside the gate was considered a disgrace to Jews because it meant being separated from the community. The author exhorts his readers to take on Christ's reproach or disgrace (11:26). In essence, the author's command to go forth to Christ was a command to abandon Judaism. Anyone found with Christ—outside of the city gate—would be considered outside the Jewish community.

13:14 Believers do not have a permanent home on earth. They seek the eternal city that is in an eternal kingdom (11:10, 16; 12:22, 28).

13:15, 16 Although the OT sacrifices are now obsolete (8:13), believers are to offer spiritual sacrifices, which include their praise, their possessions, and even their lives (Rom. 12:1, 2).

13:17 The current leaders would give an account of their service at the judgment seat of Christ (Rom. 14:10–12).

13:18, 19 A good conscience is one that is not accusing. that I may be restored to you: Something hindered the author's coming, though it was probably not prison (v. 23).

13:20 The title God of peace is used five other times in the NT (Rom. 15:33; 1 Cor. 14:33; 2 Cor. 13:11; Phil. 4:9; 1 Thess. 5:23). Whenever the title was used, some sort of difficulty existed among the recipients of the letter. This is also the case here: the readers of Hebrews were wondering whether they should reject Christianity and return to Judaism in the face of increasing persecution. Jesus is the great Shepherd of the sheep, having laid down His life for them (John 10:15) and now continuing to make intercession for them (7:25). The New Covenant is an everlasting covenant; it will never become obsolete like the Mosaic covenant (8:13).

13:21 The purpose of this blessing is that God may make you complete. This is not the same perfection that the author earlier stated to be the result of Christ's once-for-all sacrifice (10:14; 11:40). That word (Gk. teleioo) involves the positional sanctification of the redeemed. Our word in 13:21 (Gk. katartizo) has more the idea of to mend or to equip for a task. The equipping needed here is to do every good work.

13:22 The word of exhortation refers to the whole Epistle to the Hebrews. It is an exhortation not to depart from the living God (3:12), but to go on to maturity (6:1) and endure in the faith to the end (3:6, 14). In few words is used as a comparison to what more could have been said (5:11; 9:5).

13:23 Timothy was a well-known associate of Paul. Two NT letters are addressed by name to him. Set free probably means released from prison.

13:24 Those from Italy may refer to people living in Italy, or else to people from there who were now living elsewhere. Because of its ambiguity, this phrase does not reveal the location of the author or of the recipients.

13:25 In light of what has been said about grace in the letter (v. 9; 2:9; 4:16; 10:29; 12:15), this closing is particularly appropriate.

The Epistle of James

———— FROM FIXING A CAR TO WALLPAPERING A bedroom, “how-to” books explain how things are done, with helpful pointers and colorful illustrations. The Epistle of James is the “how-to” book of the Christian life. It is one of the most practical books in the New Testament because it offers instruction and exhortation to Christians who are experiencing problems, as all of us do.

As if the trials themselves were not bad enough, James points out the dangers that come with them. Besides the obvious pitfall of failing to place our trust in the Lord and thus not enduring, James speaks of prejudice, improper speech, judging one another, leaving God out of our plans, and even bitterness. Like the author of a “how-to” book, James explains in a few words the responsibilities of a Christian, while supplying apt illustrations from real-life categories such as shipping and horseback riding.

The Epistle of James is more practical than doctrinal. Nevertheless, James contains theological statements. God is “the Father of lights, with whom there is no variation” (1:17), meaning that He is the Creator and is unchangeable. Jesus is “the Lord of glory” (2:1), a reference to Jesus’ deity. James asserts that Jesus is coming again (5:7, 8), and when He does, He will judge all of humanity (5:9).

But the major theological issue in James is faith and works (2:14–26). Many contend that James is talking about true faith versus false faith. But it seems apparent that James is not questioning whether the recipients were genuine believers; he repeatedly calls them “brethren,” “my brethren,” or “my beloved brethren” (2:1, 14). These are clearly people who were exercising saving faith. Thus, what James is discussing is faith that is alone, meaning without works. He calls faith without works “dead,” indicating that it was faith that was once alive (2:17, 26). For James, works is a natural result of faith. When a person truly believes in something, he or she will act on that belief. With this letter, James was sounding a wake-up call to all Christians: “Get your life in line with what you believe!”

The salutation identifies the readers of James as “the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad.” Some believe this letter was directed to all Jews living outside of Palestine, including both Christian and non-Christian Jews. This seems unlikely, however, since James identifies himself as a follower of Christ and refers to his readers as a community of believers (1:18; 2:1, 7; 5:7). Others hold that the salutation is a figurative reference to all Christian churches, represented symbolically by ancient Israel. This too is improbable since the letter contains recognizable Jewish elements. There is also a third possibility, that the readers were Jewish Christians living outside of Palestine. Since this letter was a circular letter that was passed from church to church, no specific geographical destination is pinpointed.

Most of the recipients seem to have been poor and suffering from oppression imposed by their fellow Jews, among whom they were living. Evidently some of these Jewish Christians had been imprisoned and deprived of their possessions and livelihoods. Under such conditions, they fell into the clutches of worldliness, fought among themselves, favored the rich over the poor, and lost their original love for one another.

The author of this epistle identifies himself with the phrase “James, a bondservant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ.” James is a common name in the New Testament. The accompanying phrase could have described any Christian, suggesting that this particular James must have been a church leader who needed no further introduction.

Four men named “James” are mentioned in the New Testament: (1) James, the son of Zebedee and brother of John (Matt. 4:21), a disciple and apostle of Christ; (2) James, the son of Alphaeus (Matt. 10:3), called “the Less” or “the Younger,” also one of the apostles; (3) James, the father of an apostle named Judas (Luke 6:16); and (4) James, the half brother of Jesus, traditionally called “the Just” (Matt. 13:55). He became the leader of the Jerusalem church (Acts 15:3; Gal. 2:9) and seems to be the most probable author of this epistle. If he was the author, it is noteworthy that he did not mention his relation to Jesus in this letter. Instead his sole claim to authority was his spiritual servanthood to the Lord Jesus Christ (1:1).

Though not universally agreed upon, the evidence is strong that James is one of the oldest books in the New Testament. Since the letter contains no specific references to time or events that would indicate a particular date, one must consider the Jewish tone of the letter and the letter’s accurate reflection of the general situation found in the early apostolic church. Many scholars assign a date somewhere between A.D. 44 and 62. The first date is the time when James became the leader of the Jerusalem church, taking Peter’s place after he was released from prison in the year Herod Agrippa I died (Acts 12:5–23). The second date is the date given by Josephus, the first-century Jewish historian, for the martyrdom of James. In the end, an early date of around A.D. 46 seems reasonable for this letter.

Commentary

1:1 Early church tradition identifies the author James as the half brother of Christ (1 Cor. 15:7). To the twelve tribes: This salutation probably means the letter is for Jewish Christians living outside of Palestine. The letter was not intended for one specific church but was to be passed around among various local assemblies.

God's Three-Stage Plan

God has a three-stage "human resource development" program for believers (James 1:2–5). Stage one involves trials—as many as we need, as hard as they need to be. That leads to stage two, patience—waiting for God with trust and perseverance. The final result is stage three, wisdom, which is God's goal of growth for personnel in His kingdom.

Do we want wisdom? We should be careful when we ask for it; we could get a healthy dose of trials that demand patience. Eventually the process leads to wisdom—if we let it work.

1:2–27 James instructs us on how to face difficulties (vv. 2–4), the need for spiritual insight and faith (vv. 5–8), the proper attitude toward riches (vv. 9–11), and how to overcome temptation (vv. 12–18). He cautions us against a heart filled with anger (vv. 19, 20), and urges us to a life of doing God's word (vv. 21–27).

1:2 Trials are of outward circumstances—conflicts, sufferings, and troubles—encountered by all believers. Trials are not pleasant and may be extremely grievous, but believers are to consider them as opportunities for rejoicing. Troubles and difficulties are a tool that refines and purifies our faith, producing patience and endurance.

1:3 The word translated testing of your faith occurs only here and in 1 Pet. 1:7. The term, which means "tested" or "approved," was used for coins that were genuine and not debased. The aim of testing is not to destroy or afflict, but to purge and refine. It is essential to Christian maturity, for even Abraham's faith had to be tested (Gen. 22:1–8). The meaning of patience transcends the idea of bearing affliction; it includes the idea of standing fast under pressure, with a staying power that turns adversities into opportunities.

1:4 If a believer endures a trial, he or she will be perfect, meaning "having reached the end," and complete, meaning "whole."

1:5 The wisdom God gives is not necessarily information on how to get out of trouble but rather insight on how to learn from one's difficulties (Prov. 29:15). It is not more information about how to avoid times of testing but instead a new perspective on trials. The wisdom of God begins with a genuine reverence for the Almighty ("the fear of the LORD" in Ps. 111:10; Prov. 9:10) and a steadfast confidence that God controls all circumstances, guiding them to His good purposes (Rom. 8:28).

1:6, 7 Doubting means "to be divided in one's mind" or "to debate." The term does not describe a momentary doubt but a divided allegiance, an uncertainty.

1:8 Double-minded is literally "two souls." If one part of a person is set on God and the other is set on this world (Matt. 6:24), there will be constant conflict within.

1:9–11 James offers two examples of trials (vv. 2–8): one is of a lowly brother and the other is about a rich man. Probably lowly means "poor," in contrast to the other man who is rich. The poor believer is to glory ("count it all joy" in v. 2) in the fact that God has exalted him by allowing him to experience difficult circumstances, for these will only perfect his character and faith (v. 4). The rich believer can also glory when a trial brings him low because it teaches him that life is short, and that his pursuits, that is, his business, will fade away. The rich man should always trust the Lord, not himself or his money.

1:12 The believer who endures trials demonstrates that he or she loves Jesus and therefore will receive the crown of life (Rev. 2:10) at the judgment seat of Christ. The Bible describes the believer's reward (2 Cor. 5:10; Rev. 22:12) under various vivid images such as precious metals (1 Cor. 3:8–14), garments (Rev. 3:5, 18; 19:7, 8), and crowns (1 Cor. 9:25; Rev. 2:10; 3:11).

1:13 The focus of the chapter turns from trials (vv. 2–12) to temptation (vv. 13–18). nor does He … tempt anyone: Enticement to sin does not come from God. God will never deliberately lead a person to commit sin because that would not only go against His nature, but it would be opposed to His purpose of molding His creation into His holy image. Yet God does sometimes place His people in adverse circumstances for the purpose of building godly character (Gen. 22:1, 12). These rewards will be our respective capacities or positions of privilege and service to the glory of Christ in His coming reign (Rev. 4:10; 5:10).

1:14, 15 Turning a test into a temptation to do wrong is only possible when one allows strong desire to take control. Drawn away and enticed express the intensity with which desire lures an individual until he or she is tragically entrapped. Sin does not force itself on the unwilling, but is chosen because of its attractions. Conceived suggests the image of a person's will bending toward and finally seizing evil. This same idea is vividly illustrated by the tragic path of an addict: a habit once acquired by an individual in the end completely controls that person. Full-grown suggests bringing a goal to completion. The idea here is that sin has reached its maturity and has possessed the very character of the individual. Death here refers to physical death (Prov. 10:27; 11:19; Rom. 8:13).

1:16–18 James again illustrates (vv. 9–11). God does not tempt with evil (v. 13). He gives good and perfect gifts such as spiritual life (v. 18).

(Gk. dosis agathe) (1:17) Strong's #1394; 18; perfect gift (Gk. dorema teleion) (1:17) Strong's #1434; 5046: In the Greek text there are two separate words to describe God's giving. The first word (dosis) means "the act of giving" and is accompanied by the adjective for good, while the second (dorema) denotes the actual gifts received and is preceded by the adjective for perfect. The first expression emphasizes the goodness of receiving something from God, while the second, the perfect quality of whatever God gives. God's giving is continuously good; and His gifts are always perfect.

1:19 The conclusion of the introduction of James (vv. 2–18) is that enduring trials leads to a crown of life (v. 12) and yielding to temptation can lead to physical death (v. 15). Since that is the case, the believer in the midst of a trial needs to be swift to hear, slow to speak, and slow to wrath. These three exhortations reveal the outline of this letter (1:21—2:26 for "swift to hear"; 3:1–18 for "slow to speak"; 4:1—5:18 for "slow to wrath").

1:20 If a believer gets angry in difficult circumstances, the practical righteousness of God will not be evident in his or her life. When someone wrongs us, the natural reaction is to retaliate, at least verbally (v. 19). But this response does not glorify God. Holding one's tongue, trying to understand the other person's position, and leaving vindication to God demonstrates godly love in tense situations (Rom. 12:17–21).

1:21 The word of God that has been implanted in the believer's heart should be received with meekness—describing a teachable spirit—without resistance, disputing, or questioning. Receiving God's Word in this way will save the believer's soul, a word meaning "life." Sin leads to death (v. 15). Obedience prevents death; it protects a believer from sinful behavior that can lead directly or indirectly to physical death (v. 15; 1 Cor. 11:30).

1:22 be doers of the word, and not hearers only: Believers who hear the Word of God (v. 19) must receive it with a teachable spirit (v. 21), applying it to their daily lives. To hear and not obey is to be deceived.

1:23–24 He who follows this form of irrational thinking sees his natural face in a glass (mirror) and goes away. He observes, becomes entirely cognizant of the flaws, and promptly forgets.

1:25 The perfect law of liberty is the law of love. Loving God and loving one's neighbor sums up the Law (Matt. 26:36–40). But it is Christ's love (Eph. 3:17–19) that frees us from our sins to truly love others (John 8:36–38; Gal. 5:13).

1:26, 27 Pure (Gk. katharos) versus impure is the issue, not true versus false. Some people go through religion (Gk. threskos), or the external aspects of worship, with an unclean heart. James is confirming that the externals of religious activities are not acceptable to God unless accompanied by a holy life and loving service. Rites and rituals have never been an adequate substitute for service and sacrifice. Corporate worship within the church cannot take the place of individual works outside the church. Private profession must be coupled with the public expression of one's faith. To visit comes from the Greek word usually translated bishop, a person who oversees God's people (1 Tim. 3:1). Orphans and widows were among the most unprotected and needy classes in ancient societies (Ezek. 22:7). Pure religion does not merely give material goods for the relief of the distressed, it also oversees their care (Acts 6:1–7; 1 Tim. 5:3–16).

IN COMPARISON

Rich or Poor

In ancient Israel, there were grasses that sprouted out of the ground in the morning and by the afternoon would wither away under the intense heat of the summer sun. James compares the instability of wealth to this type of grass; it is here today and gone tomorrow. The following chart delineates what Scripture says about riches.

The World's View of Riches	The Word's View of Riches
• Money brings freedom.	• The desire for money can be enslaving and lead to destruction; only Christ brings true freedom (1 Tim. 6:7–10).
• Money brings security.	• Worldly wealth is very insecure; it will quickly pass away (1:10). Real security is found in knowing and trusting God (Jer. 9:23, 24; 1 Tim. 6:17–19).
• Money is what matters.	• Christ and the kingdom of God are what matters (Matt. 6:33; Phil. 3:7–10).
• Money is power.	• Power comes from being filled with the Spirit (Acts 1:8; 3:1–10).
• Money establishes not only your net worth, but your worth as a person.	• Your worth is based on what God says, not what your bank statement says (John 3:16; Eph. 1:3–14).
• Money makes you successful.	• Success comes from knowing and doing what God says (Josh. 1:8).
• Money gives you options.	• God is the One who ultimately gives you options (Eph. 3:20).
• Money brings happiness.	• The happiness that money brings is short-lived. And in the long run, money can actually produce "many sorrows" (1 Tim. 6:10). Lasting joy comes from knowing God (5:1–6; John 15:11; 16:24).
• Money is your reward. Save it, and spend it on yourself.	• Give as much as you can (Matt. 6:19–24; Acts 20:35; 2 Cor. 9:6–11; 1 Tim. 6:18).
• Money is your possession. Spend it on whatever you want.	• All that you have is God's to do with as He pleases. You are merely a manager of His possessions (Ps. 24:1; Luke 19:11–27; 2 Cor. 5:10).

2:1–13 James gives an example of partiality to the rich (vv. 1–4), adding four reasons why we should not show such partiality: (1) God has accepted many poor people as His own (v. 5); (2) the rich often persecute Christians (vv. 6, 7); (3) being partial violates Christ's law of love (vv. 8–11); and (4) God will judge those who violate that law (vv. 12, 13).

2:1 The faith of our Lord Jesus Christ includes the fact that God loves the world and that Christ died for it. If God and Christ show grace and mercy without favoritism, so should believers (vv. 8, 13).

2:2–4 A clear illustration dismisses all excuses and exceptions. One might imagine two visitors arriving at a church on a Sunday morning. A chauffeured limousine exhibits a man arrayed in expensive clothing. Another man approaches in an old jalopy, and his cheap suit has almost worn through. When the ushers favor the wealthy man, they show partiality and become judges with evil thoughts. Partiality comes from the same verb as wandering (1:6). By their partiality the offenders have "wavered" in their faith.

2:5 God has chosen to use poor people who are rich in faith to advance His kingdom. Those who love Him and obey Him (John 14:15; 15:9–17) and endure the testing of their faith (1:12) will inherit the kingdom. This inheritance means more than entering the Kingdom; it also involves ruling with Christ (1 Cor. 6:9; Gal. 5:21; 2 Tim. 2:12).

2:6 Dishonored involves not only attitudes but shameful treatment, as when Jesus was "dishonored" by the Jewish leaders (John 8:49). Oppress refers to the arrogant flaunting of governmental authority over Christians, as tyrants over helpless peasants. James has Jewish officials in mind when he says they drag you into the courts. Acts 9:2, where Saul traveled to Damascus with official letters to arrest Christians, testifies to the authority that Rome handed over to the Jews.

2:7 Not only do they despise the poor and oppress Christians, but the rich direct their assaults against the Lord Himself. They … blaspheme (Gk. blasphemeo) or "speak evil against" that noble name by which you are called, i.e., Christians (Acts 11:26).

2:8, 9 The royal law is the law of love (1:25; Lev. 19:18; Matt. 22:39), a law superior to all other laws. if you show partiality, you commit sin: James alludes to Lev. 19:15, which prohibits favoritism to either the poor or the rich.

2:10 he is guilty of all: God does not allow selective obedience. We cannot choose to obey the parts of the Law that are to our own liking and disregard the rest. Some of the Pharisees were guilty of this. They carefully observed some of the requirements of the Law, such as keeping the Sabbath, and ignored others, such as honoring their parents (see Jesus' comments in Matt. 15:1–7). Sin is violation of the perfect righteousness of God, who is the Lawgiver. James is saying that the whole divine law has to be accepted as an expression of God's will for His people. The violation of even one commandment separates an individual from God and His purposes.

2:11 A basketball, whether it misses the hoop by an inch or a yard, still fails to score. Likewise, he who shows partiality becomes a transgressor just as readily as if he had murdered or committed adultery.

IN DEPTH

Faith and Works

The great reformer Martin Luther, champion of the doctrine of salvation through faith alone, never felt good about the Epistle of James. He called it an "epistle full of straw" in the preface to his 1522 edition of the NT, and he put the book in the appendix. He preferred Paul's wording of the faith-works equation: "A man is justified by faith apart from the deeds of the law" (Rom. 3:28).

In a sense, Luther had little choice. He was surrounded by men who said that good works could save you. He knew that God alone could save through faith alone, and his mission was to tell them.

But Luther went too far, when he put James in the appendix to the NT. Neither faith nor works can be cut off and thrown away. James was taking aim at freeloaders, those who claimed to have no need for good deeds since they had faith. The reality is that if you have faith, works will naturally be a product. You cannot get rid of works just because they do not save you. You cannot sever the effect from the cause. Just as an apple tree will bear apples, so faith will produce good works (Luke 6:43, 44).

Paul had the opposite problem in view when he wrote Romans. His letter targeted those who placed their faith in the Law of Moses. Their trust was in their own good works, and not in God. That is why Paul wrote a defense of faith, and that is why Luther preferred it to James's defense of works.

Faith and works are not enemies. True faith and righteous works go hand in hand. They are two parts of God's work in us. Faith brings a person to salvation, and works bring that person to faithfulness. Faith is the cause, works are the effect. James believed it, and so did Paul.

2:12, 13 Believers will be judged by the law of liberty, which is the law of love (1:25). Believers who do not practice partiality, but who practice love (vv. 5, 8) and mercy, will triumph at the judgment seat. Those who have not shown mercy will not receive mercy.

2:14–19 Faith is more than an intellectual belief in God. If that belief does not lead us to a holy life of righteousness and mercy, it is not a saving faith (Matt. 7:21–23). James gives three arguments in support of this truth:

(1) Faith without works is no better than words without deeds (vv. 15–17). (2) Faith can be neither seen nor verified unless it shows itself in works (v. 18). (3) Even the demons have an intellectual belief in God, but it does not lead to their salvation (v. 19).

2:14 Some claim the faith mentioned in this passage is not genuine faith that produces eternal life. But James addresses this section to believers ("my brethren" in v. 14), that is, people who have exercised genuine faith. The issue in this paragraph is not true faith versus false faith; it is faith that is alone, meaning without works (v. 17) versus faith that is accompanied by works. Saved (Gk. sozo) is used five times in James (1:21; 2:14; 4:12, 5:15; 5:20). Each time it refers to the saving of the temporal life, not saving from the penalty of sin (5:15). In this context James is referring to being "saved" from the judgment without mercy at the judgment seat of Christ (v. 13) and possibly the saving of one's life from physical death (1:21). Works are actions that follow the "royal law" of love (vv. 8, 15, 16). James is implying in this verse that faith in Christ will demonstrate itself in love for others (see Jesus' command to His disciples in John 13:34, 35).

2:15–16 When Christians say empty platitudes without actually helping those in physical need, what does it profit? How many words fill a hungry stomach?

2:17 A faith … dead (Gk. pistis) that is now dead must have once been alive. Works keep faith thriving (1 Pet. 1:5–9). The absence of works brings death (James 1:14, 15) to faith (2:26).

2:18 The expression But someone will say introduces an objector (1 Cor. 15:35). Some manuscripts have the word without, while others have a Greek word which is translated "out of" (Gk. ek). If the latter is understood, then there is no apparent difference between the two statements of the objector—in English. In the Greek text, however, the objector changes the word order. In one he begins with faith and in the other he begins with works. He seems to be saying that it doesn't matter which one you start with—there is no relationship between faith and works. This explanation fits James's answer.

2:19 The objector continues by suggesting that you, that is James, believe there is one God and as a result you do well (Gk. kalos), which means you do something good (3 John 6). On the other hand, demons believe there is one God and they do not do good works. Their faith has the wrong object. They do not believe Jesus died for them. They only tremble.

The objector is arguing that there is no relationship between faith and works.

2:20 James now answers the objector (vv. 22, 23): Man (Gk. anthropos) is in the singular and he calls this individual foolish(Gk. kenos), meaning he is empty headed.

2:21 James clearly teaches justification by faith, for he quotes Gen. 15:6 in v. 23, which obviously connects the crediting of righteousness, that is, salvation, to Abraham's belief (see Paul's explanation of Gen. 15:6 in Rom. 4:1–12). The justification by works of which James is speaking is a different type of justification. This type of justification is before other people. In other words, James is using the word justified to mean "proved." We prove to others our genuine faith in Christ through our works. But the justification that comes through faith is before God, and we do not "prove" ourselves to Him; instead, God declares us righteous through our association with Christ, the One who died for our sins (Rom. 3:28).

2:22 The point James is making to the objector is that faith works together with works, that is, there is a relationship between the two and the relationship is works make faith perfect (Gk. teleioo), that is, mature.

2:23 By offering Isaac (Gen. 22:1–12), Abraham endured the test and demonstrated his complete trust in God. His obedience made him a friend of God (John 15:14).

2:24 You is in the plural, indicating that James now turns his attention to the reader. You see (not God) that a person is justified by works.

2:25 Rahab's works were done by faith (Heb. 11:31), but actions were necessary to affirm her inner change. Had she remained in sin while acclaiming faith, she would never have been declared righteous (justified).

2:26 The body (Gk. soma) represents faith (Gk. pistis). Breathing (works) demonstrates the body is alive. Works demonstrate that faith is alive.

3:1–12 Christian teachers (v. 1) and preachers will be held more accountable (Luke 20:47) because their speaking has great influence over others. It is so easy to sin in our speech (v. 2), and a sinful word has such far-reaching consequences (vv. 3–6). By ourselves we cannot control our speaking (vv. 7, 8); it will continue to be a hypocritical mixture of good and evil (vv. 9–12). Only God's grace, the wisdom from above described in v. 17, can give us mastery over evil speaking.

3:1 we shall receive a stricter judgment: James does not give the warning of judgment to others without applying it to himself. Teachers will stand before the judgment seat of Christ and be judged more strictly than others. Their greater influence translates into greater responsibility. Judgment here most likely does not refer to eternal separation from God; rather, it suggests a thorough judgment of teachers before Christ (Matt. 5:19; Rom. 14:10–12). Leadership imposes responsibility. When the honor is great, the responsibility is greater; when the requirements are heavy, the penalty for failure is correspondingly more severe. All the heresies, most of the divisions, and many of the failures of the church throughout history have been due to teachers without godly wisdom and understanding.

3:2 The verb stumble means to trip, and thus, the clause may be rendered, "We all are stumbling in many areas." None of us has reached perfection. Perfect (Gk. teleios) describes the man who has reached his goal, the man who is self-controlled. That being the case in speech, he is able also to bridle the whole body, because the tongue resists control more than any other area of behavior. Bridle pictures restrained guidance.

3:3–4 Two illustrations emphasize that often what holds the greatest influence may appear insignificant, size having nothing to do with importance. In comparison to the total dimensions of a horse, a bit in the mouth appears trivial, yet the animal obeys it. Ships, enormous and driven by awesome winds, may be steered by a very small rudder or helm. Wherever the pilot desires in contemporary language may be translated, "Wherever the pilot wants it to go."

3:5 See how great a forest a little fire kindles: The tongue may be compared to a match in size, but its effect is like a raging forest fire.

3:6 An uncontrolled tongue can defile the whole body, or the whole person. Course of nature may also be translated "wheel of life," meaning the whole course of life. The tongue can damage all of a person and all of his life. Moreover, by hell indicates that Satan can put words in the believer's mouth by putting ideas in his mind (Mark 8:33; Acts 5:3).

3:7, 8 no man can tame the tongue: The instincts of animals can be subdued through conditioning and punishment, but the sinful nature that inspires evil words is beyond our control. Only the work of the Holy Spirit within us can bring this destructive force under control.

IN FOCUS

“similitude of God”

(Gk. homoiosis theou) (3:9) Strong’s #3669; 2316: The Greek expression means “God’s likeness.” Although human beings have lost much of Godlikeness, there is still enough in our make-up to hint at what we once were like and what we can become again through the work of Christ. It is interesting how the ancient Alexandrian Christians understood Gen. 1:26, where man and woman are created in the “image” and “likeness” of God. The “image” was that Godlike part of us that we never lost in the Fall, while the “likeness” was that Godlike part of human being that we have yet to acquire. By “image” they meant a person’s physical and intellectual nature; by “likeness” they meant a person’s moral being.

3:9 Bless our God may refer to the Jewish practice of saying “blessed be He” whenever God’s name was mentioned. James is pointing out the inconsistency of blessing God while cursing people who are created in His image. similitude of God: God created human beings, both man and woman, in His own image (Gen. 1:26). Today, people still reflect God’s image, though badly marred by sin (Gen. 9:6).

3:10–12 Pouring salt water into fresh produces salt water; and mixing bad fruit with good fruit produces a bushel of rotten fruit. Likewise, mixing the contradictory speech of blessing and cursing will only produce negative results.

3:13–18 A contrast between the wisdom that God gives (vv. 13, 17, 18) and the wisdom of fallen humanity (vv. 14–16).

3:13 The solution for the problem of controlling our tongues is to seek divine wisdom (1:5). The person who possesses godly wisdom (v. 17) will meekly show it with works, not just words. That is, believers should be slow to speak (1:19).

3:14 If you have worldly wisdom (vv. 15, 16), which is nothing more than self-interest, don’t boast about it. Don’t just be slow to speak; rather, don’t speak lies at all.

3:15 If wisdom displays itself apart from good conduct and meekness, it is not from above. In fact, it is characterized as earthly, wise by the world’s standards, sensual (Gk. psuchikos), meaning natural as distinguished from spiritual, and demonic.

3:16 Evil produces confusion. On the other hand, God brings harmony and wisdom (1 Cor. 14:33). Anyone who is involved in envy and strife is confused. This confusion corrupts human relationships. It is likely that the Jewish Christians to whom James was writing were going through turmoil because of sinful acts like the ones mentioned here. James wanted his readers to set aside their petty attitudes and seek reconciliation.

3:17 The main characteristic of godly wisdom is that it is pure, meaning "free from defilement." Bitterness, envy, and selfish behavior thoroughly corrupt a person (vv. 14, 16). Godly wisdom is also peaceable, describing a spirit of tranquillity and calmness. It does not suggest compromising truth just for the sake of peace, which would promote falsehood. In addition, godly wisdom is undivided, without favoritism, unwavering, and consistent. without hypocrisy: True wisdom is sincere and unpretentious.

3:18 This section, "slow to speak" (1:19), has focused around the uncontrolled tongue. Inner qualities are what season one's speech, and here peace is emphasized in two ways: (1) righteousness is sown, that is, it has its beginnings in peaceful conditions, not envy and self-seeking (v. 16); and (2) righteousness appears in those who practice peace. The glaring blemish of evangelical churches is inner turmoil and bickering, yet Christian living depends upon peace.

4:1–10 Cleansing for carnal Christians (1 Cor. 3:1–4): (1) evidences of struggle with sin (vv. 1–4); (2) God's yearning to give more grace (vv. 5, 6); (3) the way of blessing (vv. 7–10).

4:1 The conflict within us is between our sinful desires for pleasure and the desire for God's will, an attitude the Holy Spirit has placed within us (v. 5).

4:2 The source of conflict among believers is often material things. James attributes fighting, murder, and war to materialism. John also warns believers of lusting after "the things in the world" (1 John 2:15, 16).

4:3 because you ask amiss: Some might have protested James's admonition (vv. 1, 2) by claiming that they had not received an answer to their prayers (Matt. 7:7). James responds by suggesting that they were praying for the wrong things. Instead of praying for their sinful desires, they should have been praying for God's good will for them. Often the reason God does not supply what a person desires is simply that He knows it would not benefit that person (Phil. 4:19). God is not obliged to answer our prayers in the affirmative. He will not act in ways that are contrary to His will, even if He is besieged by fervent prayers. Anytime we seek to further our personal pleasures through prayer, we are asking amiss (Matt. 6:33). In prayer, God does not bow to our will; instead we submit to His good will for our lives.

4:4 This verse does not speak of God's attitude toward the believer but of the believer's attitude toward God. The difference between the world and God is so vast that as we move toward the world we alienate ourselves from God. In the world, sin is considered acceptable and pleasurable. Ultimately believers lose their awareness of sin, and thus sin has become habitual. James's concern is not for occasional sins but for the attitude of heart that leads a person to turn his back on God and his face to the world. Rather than knowing sin by observation or personal experience, a Christian is supposed to use his God-given mind to discern good from evil without tasting of evil itself.

4:5 Scripture says: James probably does not have any specific OT reference in mind; instead he is speaking of a general concept in Scripture. The jealous yearning in this verse most likely refers to God's jealousy for His people, a concept prevalent in the OT (Ex. 20:5; 34:14; Pss. 78:58; 79:5) and an idea that fits the context. The friendship with the world mentioned in v. 4 would naturally provoke God's jealousy. However, the expression Spirit who dwells in us could also indicate our individual human spirit. Then the jealous yearning would be the covetous desire of people, recalling the theme of v. 2.

4:6 God resists the proud: James quotes from Prov. 3:34 to prove his point. Those who submit to divine wisdom will receive the necessary grace from God to put into practice the kind of life James describes (3:13–18). On the other hand, those who elevate themselves will face a formidable foe (v. 4). God Himself will fight against their plans because they are not on His side.

4:7 submit to God: We must follow in order the two commands in this verse. First we must submit to God by abandoning our selfish pride (vv. 1–6). Submitting to the Lord also involves putting on the whole armor of God, an image that includes everything from placing our faith in Him to immersing ourselves in the truth of God's Word (Eph. 6:11–18). Second, we must resist any temptation that the devil throws our way. Then the Evil One will have no choice but to flee, for we will belong to the army of the living God.

4:8 He will draw near: God is always ready to accept those who truly come to Him. Cleanse your hands … purify your hearts: The double-minded are those Christians divided in their heart's love between God and the world.

4:9 Lament and mourn and weep: When a believer who has fallen into sin responds to God's call for repentance, he or she should place laughter and joy aside to reflect on the sin with genuine sorrow (2 Cor. 7:9, 10). In this verse, laughter seems to refer to the loud revelry of pleasure-loving people. They immerse themselves in a celebration of their sins in an effort to forget God's judgment. A Christian should never laugh at sin. However, Christian sorrow leads to repentance; repentance leads to forgiveness; and forgiveness leads to true joy over one's reconciliation with God (Pss. 32:1; 126:2; Prov. 15:13).

4:10 Humble yourselves: The man who submits himself to the Lord will be exalted in ways that he himself could never accomplish. This primarily refers to one's spiritual relationship with God.

4:11, 12 There is one Lawgiver: The NT teaches us not to judge (Matt. 7:1) for God is the ultimate Judge and the One who will take vengeance on those who practice evil (Rom. 12:9; Heb. 10:30). Yet the Scriptures also exhort the church to exercise judgment over its members (1 Cor. 6:2–5).

This type of judgment is corporate discipline exercised in accordance with biblical truths and the pattern in Matt. 18:15–20.

4:13–16 The sin of these people was not that they made plans, but rather that they ignored the brevity of human life (v. 14) and did not consult the Lord in making their plans (v. 15). That kind of pride is evil.

4:13 we will go … make a profit: The problem here is not the plan or the concept of planning; it is leaving God out of the plan (v. 15).

4:14 you do not know: In spite of human frailty and ignorance of tomorrow, man arrogantly predicts his life's course. For what is your life: This question hopes to shake someone out of apathy and cause him to reassess his priorities. Vapor (Gk. atmis) is used of smoke (Acts 2:19), incense (Ezek. 8:11), and of steam. It makes no difference which one is chosen, for all are transient and gone in a moment. Compared to eternity, the span of our lives appears insignificant.

4:15 The command does not mean to keep adding the phrase, If the Lord wills, to everything a person says. To do such could become another form of pride. At the same time a person's behavior and plans should consistently demonstrate dependence upon the Lord. He may determine that at the present time patience through tribulation (Rom. 5:3) is a greater need than attaining our goals.

4:16 Boast could be translated "rejoice." The noun, boastings (Gk. alazoneia), connotes vain pretensions. A man who brags about future plans while ignoring God's sovereignty is foolish, but more than that his attitude is evil. The extent of this marks the depravity of contemporary society.

4:17 Therefore: The reference is not to people in general but to a particular merchant who made his plans without God. Apparently, he succeeded in making money, which he assumed came as a result of his own ingenuity and not as a gift from God. The idea is that the merchant determined to make money and then to spend it on himself. James summarizes what has already been said for every reader of his epistle: It is sin to doubt whether an action is right and yet go ahead and do it; it is also a sin to know what is right and yet not do it (Rom. 14:23). This is a stern warning against sins of omission (Luke 16:19–31 for an example of neglecting to do what is right).

Unjust Wealth

When James blasts the rich (James 5:1–6), is he condemning the possession of wealth? Is wealth inherently evil? No, but he is clearly warning those who get their wealth unjustly (5:4) and live lavishly while ignoring their neighbors (5:5, 6). Wealthy people of that kind are storing up judgment for themselves (5:1). God will call us to account for how we earn and spend our money.

5:1–6 In the spirit of the OT prophets, James pronounces judgment on employers who treat their employees unjustly (Is. 3:14, 15; 10:2). God will judge those who oppress the poor (Ezek. 18:12, 13).

5:1–3 In the ancient world food, costly garments, and precious metals were conspicuous signs of wealth. James pronounces judgment and destruction on all three.

"Lord of Sabaoth"

(Gk. kurios Sabaoth) (5:4; Rom. 9:29) Strong's #2962; 4519: The name means "the Lord of hosts," "the Lord of armies," or "the Master of creation." It was suitable for James to use this familiar OT title (Ps. 24:10) in a letter to Jewish Christians, for they would have understood that the choice of this particular name of God was especially appropriate in this context. The rich oppress the poor because they think no one will stand up for them. But the Lord of all the hosts of heaven and earth is their Defender, and He is coming back to make all things right (5:7).

5:4 Uncontrolled appetites for worldly accumulations have carried them to the worst extremes. Not only did they strive for the greatest profits, but they cheated employees in order to do so. By fraud they tricked the laborers out of their wages. The resulting desperate cries seemed to be in vain, but eternity reveals them to have reached the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. That title, often translated "Lord of Hosts," emphasizes His omnipotence; in spite of how things may appear, He is sovereign!

5:5 In a day of slaughter may be taken in two ways. Some explain the slaughter as the excess killing of animals to prepare for a great feast. Thus, preparations for further indulgence seem to be in order. Others find eschatological significance to the phrase (Jer. 12:3), making it refer to their self-fattening process for their own slaughter. Perhaps the author had both ideas in mind. They anxiously make ready for another "day of slaughter" and feasting, while being ignorant of their own ensuing judgment.

5:6 The just does not refer to Christ. It is a common OT expression that emphasizes a believer's faithful life. Resist has nothing to do with the good man's opposition to the oppressor's wickedness. It deals with the victim's mute response toward the tyrant's abuse.

5:7–11 Christ's imminent return encourages us to bear sufferings patiently (v. 8). Nor should we let hard times cause us to grumble or be bitter toward our Christian brethren (v. 9). The farmer (v. 7), the prophets (v. 10), and Job (v. 11) are models for us of this patient endurance.

5:7 be patient: James urges believers to maintain an attitude of patience while suffering injustices. Though every effort should be made to improve conditions and achieve justice, believers must keep a spirit of patient endurance, even in the midst of cruel treatment. The early church lived in the expectation of the imminent coming of the Lord. Their hope was that at that time justice would be handed both to the oppressor and the oppressed. At Christ's coming, wrongs will be righted and believers will be rewarded for their faithfulness to Christ (Prov. 14:14; Matt. 5:12).

5:8, 9 Expressions like at hand and the Judge is standing at the door indicate that the Lord could return at any moment.

5:10 A man undergoing trying circumstances may be comforted to learn that others have endured worse situations. The word example (Gk. hupodeigma) is positioned first in Greek to receive emphasis. A man's outspoken testimony for the Lord not only attributes a positive stand for the gospel; it frequently occasions harsh opposition from its enemies. Of suffering and patience both have definite articles in the original, which signifies "an example of the suffering affliction and the patience" that James has been discussing. The prophets stood loyal to their Lord, suffered for it, and now their experience encourages us.

5:11 We count them blessed holds somewhat of a paradox, although it may not have been intended. Objectively as we observe suffering in others, we urge them to endure, because victory will eventually arrive. Yet when we ourselves fall into various trials (1:2), our immediate human response often is negative. Job, who endured loss of property, family and health, stands out as a specimen of enduring faith. His case not only asserts his patience but demonstrates the purpose and character of his Lord. The end … of the Lord (Gk. telos) may be better rendered "the Lord's goal." Our Lord permits suffering, because it leads to His excellent purposes (Rom. 8:28; Phil. 1:6). Moreover, while critics blaspheme God because of human suffering, Job's record shows the Lord to be compassionate and merciful. Suffering, then, must be attributed either to the means for God's ultimate purposes or (more often) man's own doing through corrupt leaders or personal sin.

5:12, 13 James is not forbidding a believer from taking an oath in court or invoking God as witness to some significant statement (1 Thess. 2:5). Instead he is prohibiting the ancient practice of appealing to a variety of different objects to confirm the veracity of one's statement. This practice was extremely close to idolatry, for it implied that such objects contained spirits. The warning in these verses can serve as a reminder to us to watch what we say. We should not use God’s name in a reckless manner; and we should be careful to speak the truth.

(Gk. aleipho) (5:14; Matt. 6:17; Mark 6:13; Luke 7:38; John 11:2; 12:3) Strong’s #218: The Greek word aleipho was commonly used in Greek literature to describe a medicinal anointing. Another Greek word, chrio, was used to describe a sacramental anointing. The distinction is still observed in modern Greek, with aleipho meaning “to daub,” or “to smear,” and chrio meaning “to anoint.” Furthermore, oil was one of the most common medicines of biblical times. Thus, James was prescribing both prayer and medicine in this verse.

5:14 Literally the Greek term translated elders meant those advanced in years (1 Tim. 5:1). However, the word also referred to those holding positions of authority in the community or in a local congregation. As church officers, elders were responsible for pastoral supervision and spiritual leadership. The term is used interchangeably with bishop in the NT (1 Tim. 3:1; 5:17; Titus 1:5–9). Anointing him with oil may refer to medicinal treatment (Luke 10:34). Yet in this passage it most likely refers to the healing power of the Holy Spirit, for v. 15 speaks of prayer saving the person. In either case, there is no indication that calling the elders excludes the use of a physician or medicine. Anointing him with oil could be a medicinal act (Luke 10:34), but in this passage it is no doubt symbolic of the Holy Spirit because it is not the oil but prayer which heals (v. 15).

5:15 James certainly does not see the prayer and the oil, or the oil alone, as a sacrament, but he assigns the healing itself to the prayer of faith. The language seems to apply to any case of sickness, but the connection implies that the one mentioned, in addition to his bodily ailment, was also suffering spiritually. The Bible teaches that sickness can be a consequence of sin (Matt. 9:2). In such cases, confession of one’s sin is a prerequisite to terminating a sickness as prescribed even here by James in v. 16. Praying for people to be made well ought not to be that they may be restored to their old manner of life but that their sins may be forgiven and their lives devoted to the service of God. the prayer of faith: Whether a believer is healed through medicine or through miraculous means, all healing is ultimately from the Lord. That is why prayers should be consistently offered for the sick (see 4:3 for an improper attitude towards prayer). if he has committed sins: The NT teaches that sickness may be the consequence of sin (Matt. 9:2), but not invariably (John 9:1–3). Yet when sin is involved, confession is a prerequisite to healing (v. 16).

Elijah: A Prayer Model

What sort of person does it take to pray effectively? James offers Elijah as a model (James 5:17, 18). In a way, Elijah seems an unlikely choice to be a model for ordinary people. After all, he was one of Israel's greatest prophets. He took on the evil Ahab and Jezebel, brought a punishment of drought on the land, called down fire from heaven, and was translated to heaven in a whirlwind accompanied by fiery chariots (1 Kin. 17—22, 2 Kin. 1 and 2). How much do we have in common with such a man? How could our prayers possibly emulate his?

Yet James insists that "Elijah was a man with a nature like ours." So apparently he did not pray because he was a great man; perhaps he became a great man because he prayed.

James shows some reasons why Elijah's prayer life was so effective: • He prayed; one cannot be effective in prayer unless one prays in the first place.

• He prayed fervently; he was aware of what he was praying, and kept praying with diligence and discipline.

• He prayed an "effective" prayer (James 5:16); that is, he expected results.

• He was a righteous man (5:16); he did not allow sin to cloud his conversation with God.

• He prayed specifically, first for a drought, then for rain, in accordance with God's word (for example, Deut. 28:12, 24); he prayed according to Scripture.

Elijah was a great prophet granted extraordinary results by God. Nevertheless, there is no reason why any believer today cannot pray using the same principles as he did. Imagine what God might do in our world if Christians began praying like Elijah!

5:16-18 Confess: This confession is not necessarily between the sick person and the elders, though this is not ruled out altogether. Instead, this exhortation is intended for the sick person and any person with whom the sick one needs to be reconciled. Effective, fervent prayer … much: This can mean either that (1) prayer is effective when it is used or (2) fervent prayer accomplishes great results. The illustration of Elijah may favor the latter meaning, for he prayed earnestly.

5:19, 20 The death (Gk. thanatos) spoken of here is physical death (1:14, 15; 1 Cor. 11:30; Acts 5:1–11). The covering of sins is an OT image for forgiveness (Ps. 32:1).

The First Epistle of Peter

———— RETURNING GOOD FOR EVIL SOUNDS NOBLE, and Christians agree that it is the right thing to do; however, in the midst of trials and persecutions, showing kindness to our persecutors can be extremely difficult. The Christians of Asia Minor who received this letter from Peter had discovered this. They had found that a life lived for God is often a life of many difficulties. Some of their troubles came from their neighbors, while some came from government authorities. Peter wrote to these Christians to encourage them, to explain to them why suffering occurs, and to remind them of their eternal reward at the end of this earthly life.

Peter blended five different themes in this letter. (1) He emphasized that Christians can expect suffering as a natural part of a life dedicated to Christ. Suffering was God's tool to shape godly character within them (1:6, 7; 3:14; 4:12–14). (2) He went on to exhort Christians to live righteous and holy lives in the face of the evils they were experiencing (1:13–16, 22; 2:1–5, 11, 12; 3:15; 4:1, 2, 7–11; 5:8–10). No matter how tempting it was, Christians were not to return evil for evil. That is a worldly and not a Christian response to persecution. (3) No matter how much suffering they experienced, Peter assured the Christians in Asia Minor they did not deserve it. Their suffering was a part of their service to God and His kingdom (2:20; 3:16, 17; 4:15–19). Although Christians would suffer injustice on this earth, there would come a time when God would right every wrong and reward those who have endured persecution for His name. (4) In light of this, Peter encouraged Christians to submit themselves to others for the sake of the gospel and for the sake of harmonious interpersonal relationships (2:13–19; 3:1–9; 5:1–7). Christ would eventually judge their actions, and the difficulties they were experiencing would not be an excuse for rebellion and dissension. (5) Finally, Peter used this letter as an opportunity to drive home the central truth of the gospel, that Jesus endured the agony of the Cross to save us from our bondage to sin (1:2–5, 7–11, 17–21; 2:21–24; 3:18–22). Christ's example—His sinless life, His quiet endurance of suffering, and His commitment to the truth—should be our model in all the difficulties of this life.

To reach the centers of the provinces of ancient Asia Minor (present-day Turkey) to which Peter was writing, his letter had to travel many hundreds of miles over rugged terrain and treacherous seas. The bearer of the letter would have encountered Jews and Gentiles, Christians and pagans, free citizens and slaves. Some of the places in which the letter was read were cosmopolitan trade centers that were links between the Middle East and Europe. Other places were isolated villages. Yet throughout Asia Minor, small groups of Christians of a wide variety of social, ethnic, and cultural backgrounds would gather to hear God's word, to praise God, and to encourage one another in the faith.

Although cultural progress may not have touched many of the cities in which Christians lived, hostility to the gospel and to Christians themselves was there. Christians were targets of attack because they no longer participated in pagan religious practices. Since they were the ones who abandoned the so-called gods of the people, Christians were blamed for everything from natural disasters to economic downturns. They were even more vulnerable because they were often strangers in a city, having been driven out of other cities by persecution or having come from a Jewish background. These early Christians often had little security, low social status (many were slaves), and little recourse to government protection. Peter wrote to encourage them. They were pilgrims in this world heading to their glorious home in heaven.

Early church tradition affirms that the apostle Peter was the author of the letter known as 1 Peter. Those in the modern era who challenge his authorship argue that the vocabulary and literary style of the letter is more advanced than the vocabulary of an "uneducated and untrained" fisherman (Acts 4:13). Many of these critics also assert that the theology of the letter is too much like Paul's. It reflects Paul's thought rather than the experiences of the earthly life of Jesus Christ, as one might expect from Peter, one of Jesus' closest friends. Finally, these critics claim that the persecutions described in this letter could not have taken place during Peter's lifetime. But none of these arguments is conclusive. Peter was from Galilee, a region that was bilingual. People who grew up there had to know two languages, Greek and Aramaic. As a fisherman, functioning in the business world of his day, Peter must have been reasonably fluent in Greek. Moreover, Peter, having "been with Jesus" (Acts 4:13), must have learned how to express himself from the Master Communicator Himself. As one of the first teachers and preachers of the gospel, Peter would have been able to express himself eloquently in Greek (Acts 2). If his own Greek style was not sufficiently polished, Peter could certainly have dictated this letter, perhaps to Silvanus (5:12), who would have polished his presentation (Acts 15:22–29).That Peter's letter reflects ideas similar to those found in the writings of the apostle Paul is understandable because the two men knew each other (Gal. 2:7–9). Peter had read Paul's letters (2 Pet. 3:15, 16), and both men were under the guidance of the Holy Spirit when they wrote. Thus, finding Pauline concepts in this letter is not a strong argument that Peter cannot be the author.

The issue about the author's seeming unfamiliarity with the earthly life of Jesus is best handled by looking at the letter itself, which reveals that the author is thoroughly acquainted with Christ's earthly sufferings and claims to be an eyewitness to them (2:21–23; 3:18; 4:1; 5:1). Moreover, the purpose of the letter was not to provide a record of the life of Christ. Instead, Peter was encouraging Christians with the comforting spiritual realities behind the persecution they faced.

Finally, the sporadic and local persecution before Nero's reign (before A.D. 68) is the persecution that Peter is probably addressing in this letter. Although severe official persecution did not begin until the reigns of Domitian (A.D. 95) or Trajan (A.D. 112), early Christians experienced oppressive local persecution from the beginning (Acts 14:19). In conclusion, there is no substantial evidence that contradicts the plain assertion of the letter that it is from the apostle Peter (1:1).

Church tradition tells us that Peter died in Rome during the anti-Christian persecution that took place during the reign of Nero (A.D. 54–68), so A.D. 67 is probably the latest this letter could have been written.

There are several indications that Peter wrote the letter around A.D. 62–64. First, Paul makes no reference to Peter being in Rome when Paul was writing his letters from there (Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon), some time between A.D. 60–62. Moreover, in his letter Peter makes no reference to Paul as being in Rome, identifying only Silvanus and Mark as his companions (5:12, 13). These facts suggest that Peter was writing after A.D. 62. But the fact that Peter admonishes his readers to submit to governmental authorities in 2:13–15 may indicate a date before the more severe persecution which occurred after the burning of Rome in A.D. 64.

Of course, this dating assumes that Peter wrote this letter from Rome and not from some other location. Peter concludes the letter by sending greetings from “she who is in Babylon” (5:13). Three locations are generally suggested for this reference: Babylon on the Euphrates River in Mesopotamia, a lesser-known city in the ancient world also called Babylon, and Rome.

The argument in favor of the Mesopotamian Babylon is its identity in the OT as a city of great power, a city feared and hated by the Israelites (2 Kin. 24; 25; Is. 39; Jer. 25). Yet by the first century A.D., Babylon was an insignificant town with no real power. More importantly, there is no record of Peter ever having been there. Other cities named Babylon (such as the Roman military outpost located in Egypt near where Cairo stands today) are excluded as well, because none of these towns played a significant role in early Christian history.

However, Rome was a widely-recognized center of opposition to Christianity and also the seat of power in the Roman Empire. In the NT, Babylon is used as a veiled reference to the city of Rome, the center of the kingdom of darkness (Rev. 14:8; 16:19; 17:5; 18:2, 10, 21). Moreover, many of Peter’s readers would understand Babylon as a place of exile, something with which they themselves could identify, since Peter addresses them as pilgrims scattered throughout Asia Minor. In this way Peter was concluding his letter where it began, with a sense that he and his fellow Christians had not yet arrived “home.” Peter was using Babylon as a code word readily understood by early Christians to mean Rome, yet at the same time symbolizing more than just that earthly city.

Commentary

IN DEPTH

Persecution in Bithynia

Bithynia, combined with the nearby territory of Pontus, formed a Roman province in northwest Anatolia. It had been an important kingdom during the Hellenistic period, and a center of Greek language and culture. Although Paul did not evangelize in the region (Acts 16:7), the salutation in 1 Pet. 1:1, addressing Christians in Pontus and Bithynia, shows that Christianity had reached there by other means.

One of the earliest evidences of the Roman awareness of Christianity comes from Bithynia. The letters to the emperor Trajan from Pliny the Younger describe various reasons for the persecution of Christians (Epistulae 10.95–96). Pliny was the provincial governor of Bithynia and Pontus in A.D. 111–113. In his official correspondence he expresses to Trajan his alarm regarding the spread of Christianity.

The correspondence between this governor and his emperor offers one look at how the Romans dealt with the Christian religion in Bithynia and Pontus. According to Pliny, it appears that persecution had trimmed the ranks of Christians in the area. Trajan responds to Pliny that Christians should not actively be sought out. However, he allows that those who refused to perform certain Roman orders were to be punished. The letter of 1 Peter to Christians in Bithynia, Pontus, and other regions offers encouragement during similar persecutions (1 Pet. 1:6, 7).

1:1 Peter, the author of this letter, writes to Christians living in Asia Minor (present-day Turkey). By way of encouragement, he identifies them as people who live in the light of their relationship to God the Father, God the Holy Spirit, and God the Son (v. 2). apostle: Peter received a special commission from the Lord to act with official authority as God’s representative among believers, in order to carry God’s message to them. pilgrims: These believers do not belong to the world around them but to a heavenly world. Dispersion: This term conveys the idea of being scattered among strangers, much like the Jewish exiles of the OT who were not living in their homeland but in Babylon. Pontus … Bithynia: Peter addresses his letter to the believers in the provinces of Asia Minor. This region had been thoroughly evangelized by Paul during his missionary journeys (Acts 2:9–11; 16:6, 7; 18:23; 19:26).

1:2 Believers are chosen to be included in God's family, not on the basis of what they have done or who they are, but on the basis of God's eternal wisdom. Sanctification is the ongoing process whereby the Holy Spirit works in believers, making their lives holy, separated from their old ways and to God in order to be more like Him. obedience: One reason that God chooses us is so that we might serve Him. sprinkling of the blood: This concept, the second reason why God chooses us, draws our attention to three situations in the OT when the Israelites were sprinkled with the blood of animals: (1) Moses' sprinkling of blood on the Israelites at Mount Sinai, to symbolize their initiation into the covenant (Ex. 24:5–8); (2) the sprinkling of Aaron and his sons to be the priests of Israel (Ex. 29:19–21); and (3) the sprinkling of blood performed by priests over healed lepers to symbolize their cleansing (Lev. 14:1–9). Any of these three cases could be the one that Peter has in mind here.

1:3–11 God provides all our needs for this life and the future life. As a result, we are able to face our daily pressures with joy, knowing that God is in control of our present existence and our destiny. What He has given us is special—so special that the OT saints desired to understand it and the angels of heaven look in amazement at it.

1:3 according to His abundant mercy: Our salvation is grounded in God's mercy, His act of compassion toward us despite our condition of sinfulness. has begotten us again: God has given believers a new, spiritual life that enables us to live in an entirely different dimension than the one our physical birth allowed. to a living hope: Hope here does not imply a wishfulness but rather a dynamic confidence that does not end with this life but continues throughout eternity. "Hope is one of the Theological virtures," C. S. Lewis said. "This means that a continual looking forward to the eternal world is not (as some modern people think) a form of escapism or wishful thinking, but one of the things a Christian is meant to do. It does not mean that we are to leave the present world as it is. If you read history you will find that the Christians who did most for the present world were just those who thought most of the next. The Apostles themselves, who set on foot the conversion of the Roman Empire, the great men who built up the Middle Ages, the English Evangelicals who abolished the Slave Trade, all left their mark on Earth, precisely because their minds were occupied with Heaven. It is since Christians have largely ceased to think of the other world that they have become so ineffective in this. Aim at Heaven and you will get earth "thrown in": aim at earth and you will get neither." through the resurrection: Although this phrase may modify the phrase "to a living hope," the context suggests that it is to be understood as the means of our salvation rather than the means of our hope (1 Cor. 15:12–19).

1:4 The Greek word translated inheritance here suggests both a present and a future reality. God has already determined what we will one day experience in its totality. Note that Peter says that one of two reasons why God has given us new life in Jesus Christ (v. 3) is to receive this never-to-end, never-to-be-spoiled, and never-to-lose-its-special-attraction inheritance. reserved: At this point, Peter must have thought back to our Lord's expression of unconditional commitment to Him as expressed in John 14:1–4 after revealing the prophecy of Peter's denials.

1:5 who are kept: God keeps His people safe from external attack and safe within the protective boundaries of His kingdom. Peter uses a twofold military concept to indicate that God keeps His people both safe from external attack and safely within the protective boundaries of His kingdom. revealed: We do not now see or understand fully the salvation that God has prepared for us, but one day we will (1 Cor. 4:5; 1 John 3:2) 1:6 grieved: While there is much rejoicing because of the salvation God has prepared for us, there will also be agony because of the pressures and difficulties of life. by various trials: In this context (v. 7), trials refers to ordeals that we encounter in life rather than those things that would induce us to sin. Note that no one particular problem is in view here, but rather all the testings of life.

1:7 genuineness: As the purity of gold is brought forth by intense heat, so the reality and purity of our faith are revealed as a result of the fiery trials we face. Ultimately the testing of our faith not only demonstrates our final salvation but also develops our capacity to bring glory to the Lord Jesus Christ when He comes into His kingdom and we reign with Him (Rom. 8:17; 2 Tim. 2:12; Rev. 5:9–12).

1:8 having not seen: Only a few believers had the privilege of walking and talking with Jesus when He was on earth (John 20:29). Most of us have shared the experience of Peter's addressees, who never had a personal physical relationship with Jesus but loved and believed in Christ anyway. joy inexpressible: This combination of words is used in the NT only here.

It depicts an all-consuming joy that overwhelms us so that we are unable to express our feelings of gratitude to our glorious God.

1:9, 10 receiving the end: There is a final, positive outcome for trusting God through all the difficulties of life—our salvation, which here has an eschatological sense. salvation of your souls: This phrase refers to our glorification in heaven and perhaps the rewards we will receive for following Christ (Matt. 16:24–27; James 1:21). the prophets: Peter indicates that the OT prophets knew of the gracious salvation we would one day receive and, as a result, studied it carefully and intensively.

1:11 The focus of the OT prophets' study (v. 10) was not the what of our salvation but the when. They wanted to know when the Messiah would suffer and when the glories of the end times would be revealed. Note that the Spirit of Christ, rather than the prophets themselves, was prophesying (2 Pet. 1:20, 21). The prophets were mouthpieces for God, not inventors of their own new ideas.

1:12 was revealed: God made known to the prophets that they would not experience all that we experience in Christ, that they were serving God for our benefit. by the Holy Spirit: Although humans may preach God's message of salvation, ultimately the Holy Spirit is the One who proclaims these great truths. Even the angels are amazed at what a wonderful salvation God has enacted on our behalf (Eph. 3:10).

1:13–25 Believers are challenged to live holy lives and to serve God faithfully because of the amazing work that He has done for us on the Cross and because our time on earth is so short.

1:13 gird up the loins of your mind: Just as people in biblical times would gather up their long robes and tie them around their waists so that they could move quickly and freely, we need to do whatever it takes to focus our thoughts on those things that allow us to serve God successfully, all the while eliminating any thoughts that would trip us up (Heb. 12:1). be sober: Peter's concern here is primarily using mentally or spiritually sound judgment. rest your hope: We need to exhibit confidence that God will accomplish all that He promised He would do (v. 3; Rom. 8:24, 25). grace … at the revelation: From beginning to the end, we are recipients of God's abounding grace (Rom. 8:28–30).

1:14 as obedient children: This idiom suggests that we should be people who actively obey because we, by our new nature, are children of obedience. not conforming yourselves: Believers should not pattern their lives after the desires that controlled them when they were not Christians, when they did not know God's ways (Rom. 12:2).

1:15–19 Three reasons why we should be holy: God is holy (vv. 15, 16); God who sees our inner attitudes judges justly (v. 17); and we are redeemed by the blood of Christ (vv. 18, 19).

1:15 but: Peter uses this term to indicate that the way we are to be (i.e., holy) is completely different than the way we used to be (1:14). Holy refers to being set apart or separate. We are to live so as to be dedicated totally to God and separated totally from the sin of this world.

1:16 because it is written: The coming of Christ did not lower or change God's expectations of His people. During OT times, they were to be holy; during NT times, they were to be holy; and today, we also are to be holy (Lev. 11:44).

1:17 who without partiality judges: Our heavenly Father is also our earthly Judge. Moreover, our relationship to Him as His children does not imply that we will escape judgment. God does not show favoritism in judgment but invokes His judgment on all people according to their works. in fear: For Christians, this phrase should be understood as something between terror and reverential awe. We need to remember that God is both our merciful Savior (vv. 3, 18–21) and our holy Judge (vv. 15–17). Thus, we should not see Him solely as an object of horror from whom we should run away nor should we think of Him merely as an object of respect.

1:18 Redeemed suggests the idea of offering something, usually money, in exchange for the freedom of a slave or a prisoner of war. God bought our freedom, paying for us with His Son's life (v. 19). your aimless conduct: Peter's focus is not on any specific action, but on the way of life that his readers inherited from their ancestors. Those old ways were futile, empty of power and incapable of securing salvation. Peter's readers needed to be snatched from their hopeless condition.

1:19 precious blood: God's way of salvation is contrasted to human attempts at gaining salvation through the use of earthly means (v. 18). a lamb: Peter describes Christ as the ultimate sacrificial Lamb, who is offered in our place to pay the price for our sins. The analogy here may be a reference either to the Passover lamb (Ex. 12:3–6) or to the many lambs without blemish that were offered as part of the OT sacrificial system (Lev. 23:12; Num. 6:14; 28:3). First-century believers recognized Jesus as the spotless Lamb of God who pays the price for the sin of the world (John 1:29).

1:20 foreordained: God has known (v. 2) the One who would bring salvation, even as He has known those to whom that salvation is offered and secured (Rom. 11:2). but was manifest: This phrase contrasts with the first half of the verse. What was known only to God before the creation of the world is now made known to us.

1:21 so that: Christ's coming results in our being able to place our trust and confidence in God.

1:22 Peter does not say that we purify our own souls but that we accomplish the purification of our souls by obedience to God's truth. It is unclear whether this obedience is a reference to the conversion process or to the sanctifying process after one's conversion. The former seems more likely in the context of vv. 20, 21; the latter seems more likely in light of Peter's general theme of holiness in this letter. sincere love: An unfeigned love is one that is genuine, pure, and without hypocrisy. love one another fervently: We are to love our fellow Christians intensely, out of a true commitment of love.

IN FOCUS

“word”

(Gk. logos) (1:23; 2:8; 3:1, 15; 4:5; Rom. 9:6; Eph. 1:13) Strong’s #3056; (Gk. rhema) (1:25; Rom. 10:17; Eph. 5:26) Strong’s #3056; 4487: In 1:23 the Greek expression for word is logos, referring primarily to the idea. In 1:25 the Greek term is rhema, referring primarily to the spoken word. The spoken word is the gospel preached and proclaimed (the use of rhema in Rom. 10:17, 18). “The word of the Lord” is the gospel message about the Lord Jesus Christ. This word can regenerate men and women. Peter adapted the OT text (which says “the word of our God” in Is. 40:6–8) to its NT context.

1:23 born again: Though this phrase is commonly used by Christians today, it is rarely found in the NT (see John 3:3–8 for Jesus’ use of the phrase). Christians are dead in sin before their life is renewed by the Spirit (Eph. 2:1). The same idea is expressed by “the washing of regeneration” (Titus 3:5) and the concept of “children of God” in John’s first letter (1 John 3:1, 2).

1:24 withers … falls away: Peter reminds his readers of our transitory nature with an OT quote, comparing us to the temporary things of this world—a direct contrast to God’s permanent work and His eternal word (vv. 23, 25; Is. 40:6–8).

1:25 the word which by the gospel was preached: A better understanding of this phrase is “the word, the gospel which was preached.” Thus, the Good News of Jesus Christ, the gospel, is that which will last forever.

2:1–10 God desires that Christians turn from the things of the world and seek His ways fully. By doing this, they acknowledge that they have accepted what the world has rejected and that they are rejecting what the world accepts. They recognize this reality in their lives because they have been chosen out of this world by God so they might act not as people of this world but as the people of God.

2:1 malice: This is a general term that conveys the idea of evil or wickedness, and encompasses both thoughts (i.e., desiring someone else's harm) and actions (i.e., the actual harming of another). Deceit is a general term for sin (2:22; 3:10) and suggests the deliberate use of guile or treachery in order to mislead someone. hypocrisy: Peter uses a plural noun to indicate that every act of hiding of one's evil intentions toward another behind a mask of piety is wrong and thus should be avoided. envy: Also a plural noun, this term presents those feelings of ill will or jealousy that an individual harbors against someone else because of a real or perceived advantage that that person has acquired. evil speaking: Words which are designed to ruin an individual's reputation or position (i.e., slander).

2:2 Desire does not mean merely to want something, but rather to long for something with all of one's being. that you may grow: The purpose of studying God's truth is not only to learn more, but to become mature in the faith.

2:3 if indeed you have tasted: The Greek grammatical construction here assumes this to be true: Peter's readers have experienced in personal terms the fact that Christ is gracious.

2:4 living stone: This phrase anticipates the OT quotations in vv. 6–8. Jesus, as a living stone, is superior to the OT temple. These words also may be a subtle attack on the dead stone idols that the Gentiles worshiped prior to becoming Christians. Thus, Jesus is greater than the traditions received from the fathers (1:18), He is greater than the temple in Jerusalem, and He is greater than the traditions of the Gentiles with their lifeless stone idols. The new building of God, of which Jesus is the Cornerstone, is living: it is the assembly of all believers, the church (v. 5). rejected: Not to receive Christ is to reject Him (John 3:18; Rom. 1:18–23).

2:5 Christians are part of God's great spiritual building project. Stones here refers to stones that are shaped and ready for use in construction, as opposed to natural rock. a holy priesthood: Unlike the OT priesthood, in which only those who were born into a certain tribe could be priests, all who are reborn into God's family, that is, all believers, are priests who have the privilege and responsibility of offering spiritual sacrifices to God (Rom. 12:1, 2; Heb. 13:15, 16).

2:6 chief cornerstone: Jesus is the foundation stone from which the placement of all other living stones in the spiritual house (v. 5) is determined (Is. 28:16). In ancient buildings, the cornerstone was first situated on the foundation and then all of the other stones were aligned to it. Thus, as part of the house of God, we need to keep our focus on our Cornerstone (Heb. 12:2). put to shame: Those who trust in Jesus will never be embarrassed by making Him the focus of their lives.

2:7 to you who believe, He is precious: The Greek more precisely reads, "the honor is to you who believe." The honor or privilege that we experience is that we will never be ashamed of our relationship to Jesus Christ (v. 6) nor will we stumble because of Him (v. 8). those who are disobedient: This phrase (one word in Gk. apistousin) presents those who are the opposite of "you who believe," and is rendered literally, "those who are disbelieving." Rejected suggests that unbelievers, after examining Jesus to see if He meets their needs, declared Him to be useless or undesirable. Though He was not what they wanted, He is specifically the One whom God the Father has chosen to be the foundation of His eternal work.

2:8 stone of stumbling … rock of offense: Unbelievers, because they do not follow God's Word, find Jesus to be repugnant, an obstacle in their way and a cause for disapproval and anger. they also were appointed: The Greek does not clearly indicate whether those who are presently unbelieving (v. 7) are appointed to stumbling, to being disobedient, or to both. However, the context reveals that it is God who does the appointing.

2:9 But you: This verse provides a direct contrast to the previous verse, a contrast between those who believe in Jesus Christ and those who do not. a chosen generation: God has not left to chance those who will be part of a unique body of people, a group who will serve Him. He has reserved that decision for Himself. a royal priesthood: Believers are transformed not only internally (v. 5, which describes us as being made into "a holy priesthood") but also externally. We are a priesthood that functions in a ruling capacity, as kings. a holy nation: Believers are a unified group of people who are set apart for God's use. His own special people: God protects those whom He has adopted into His family. proclaim the praises of Him: The purpose for our having been transformed into these marvelous wonders is that we might declare to the world the works of our glorious God.

2:10 obtained mercy: Although we once deserved condemnation because of unbelief (John 3:18, 36; Eph. 2:1–3), we no longer are under the sentence of judgment (Eph. 2:4–7).

The Christian Calling: Holiness

Writing to believers in Christ who were experiencing extreme persecution at the hands of a pagan culture, Peter advocated holy living. Seven times in Peter's first letter, we find the word holy (hagios in Greek) used in reference to conduct or behavior. And even when the word is not explicitly used, pure conduct is called for again and again.

Holy implies sacredness, being consecrated to God, or being worthy of God. In order to qualify for this label, a person or thing has to be free from impurity. There can be no hint of moral pollution or spiritual defilement. To be holy is to be free from anything that would offend a perfect God.

This state may seem impossible to achieve. After all, how can imperfect, fallen creatures like ourselves live up to the command to "be holy in all { our} conduct" (1:15)? The answer is found in the opening sentence of Peter's letter. Sanctification, the process by which we are made holy, is "of the Spirit" (1:2). The Holy Spirit of God, who indwells us at the moment of salvation, is able to transform us. By the power of the Spirit we find the ability to "abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul" (2:11). As we yield ourselves to God, and as we soberly and vigilantly resist the devil (5:9) and all his temptations, we will find that God is able to "perfect, establish, strengthen, and settle" us (5:10).

Holy living should be our goal not merely because God commands it, but also because it befits our true identity. In Christ we are no longer citizens of a sinful world, but the "people of God" (2:10). We are "sojourners and pilgrims" in this world, on our way to our true home, which is heaven (2:11).

Furthermore, holiness serves an evangelistic purpose. It is a "holy nation" and "special people" who are able to "proclaim the praises of Him who called you out of darkness into His marvelous light" (2:9). It is our "honorable" conduct and "good works" that cause evildoers to glorify God (2:12).

Finally, Peter speaks of the day when we will stand before God and give an account for the way we have lived. Those who have maintained a lifelong fear (reverence) of God resulting in holy living will be best prepared for that day of reckoning (1:17).

2:11–25 Remaining true to God implies exhibiting a life that constantly does what is right—a life that is submissive to others for the sake of God. Remaining true to God also may involve suffering for Him and demonstrating the same attitudes that Jesus maintained when He suffered in His earthly ministry (Rom. 8:17; Phil. 1:29).

2:11 sojourners and pilgrims: With these words, Peter reminds believers (1:1) that this earth is not our home. We are foreigners here, traveling to our eternal home, heaven. The word translated abstain literally means "to hold away from one's person." In other words, we must distance ourselves from our own self-indulgent urges. war: Life is not a game but a war to be waged, and that war is a matter of eternal life or death (Rom. 7:23; James 4:1). Yet the war is not necessarily fought on a physical, temporal plane, but on a spiritual one.

2:12 having your conduct honorable: Peter's emphasis here is the actual behavior of Christians. When internal struggles come (v. 11), responding with right actions is crucial because we live in a world in which we are considered outsiders. Gentiles here refers to those who are not believers in Christ, not to those who are not Jews. they speak against you as evildoers: Despite our good works, those who are unbelievers will slander us. they observe: The Greek word for observe, used only here and in 3:2, implies a conscious, ongoing examination—in this case, of the actions of believers. The day of visitation probably refers to the final day of judgment when all people, believers and unbelievers alike, will fall on their knees and acknowledge who Jesus Christ is and what He has done through His people.

2:13 Peter forcefully commands Christians to submit voluntarily to governing authorities. He does not make submission a matter of personal conviction or choice. He decrees that it is an obligation for all Christians. to every ordinance of man: This phrase suggests that the submission of Christians is not to be exercised solely in relation to civil authorities (v. 14), but to all kinds of rules that Christians encounter (2:18; 3:1). for the Lord's sake: The command to submit is to be carried out not grudgingly or under compulsion but joyfully and willfully for the glory of God. Christians are not to have an attitude of rebellion.

2:14 governors: This term was used by the Greeks for all people, apart from the supreme ruler of a nation (v. 13), who exercise authority on behalf of the government of a country. punishment of evildoers: One role of government officials is the exercise of judgment against those who do wrong. praise of those who do good: Peter does not say, “for those who are Christians,” but “for those who do good,” whether they are Christian or non-Christian. One of the primary responsibilities of government is the rewarding of those who serve as good citizens.

2:15 the will of God: The authority backing Peter’s command for civil obedience is the God of the universe, the Sovereign Ruler over all citizens and governments and over all Christians and non-Christians. put to silence: Our actions should make our accusers speechless, like a muzzle placed over their mouths. ignorance of foolish men: The world is totally in the dark (v. 9) when it comes to recognizing the hand of God at work.

Enduring Hardship

How should Christians react to injustices in the workplace? Healthy confrontation may be called for. There's a time to claim one's own rights or stand up for the rights of others. Scripture provides many examples and guidelines. For instance, Jesus gave instructions on how to deal with a believer in sin (Matt. 18:15–17), and Paul appealed to Caesar when he realized that justice was being withheld from him (Acts 25:8–12).

On the other hand, there is also a time to quietly suffer injustice as a matter of testimony, as Peter indicates (1 Pet. 2:18–21). Jesus told His followers the same thing (Matt. 5:38–42), and Paul discouraged lawsuits among believers for the sake of their testimony (1 Cor. 6:7).

Either way, Christians should never just ignore injustice. We may decide to quit if our employer is grossly unjust. But we should do so not out of cowardice or an unwillingness to endure hardship, but to honor Christ or else to find a constructive, godly alternative elsewhere.

2:16 not using liberty: Freedom in Christ must be used wisely (1 Cor. 6:12, 13; 10:23–31). A cloak for vice may be understood either as an excuse made up before the fact (a reason for wrongdoing), or after the fact (a cover-up for wrongdoing). The context here seems to support the second. as bondservants of God: We should submit all our actions to God, for He is our Master.

2:17 Honor all people: We need to treat all people with great respect. Love the brotherhood: We are to have a special relationship with those who are our fellow Christians (Gal. 6:10). Fear God: Our reverence for God should be the basis of our relationships with others. All people are created in His image, and He is the One who has placed some people in authority over us. Therefore, we should treat everyone with love and respect. Honor the king: We are to demonstrate great respect to those who are in positions of authority.

2:18–20 The Christian attitudes of these verses may be applied to employer/employee relationships today. Servants: Household slaves. with all fear: Out of reverence for God. do good (v. 20): In God's eyes. When we patiently bear undeserved persecution, God is pleased because His grace is at work in our lives.

2:18 Servants: Somewhere from one-third to half of the population of the Roman Empire were slaves. The percentage of Christians who were slaves may have been even higher. be submissive … with all fear: Workers are to take their responsibilities seriously. but also to the harsh: Christians are to serve even the worst of bosses with respect.

2:19 Those who suffer faithfully but unjustly as a result of their service to God please Him. Such suffering has a great reward (Matt. 5:10–12; Rom. 8:17, 18; Phil. 1:19; 2 Tim. 2:12). Peter himself had asked Jesus about this and received an exciting encouragement about the divine compensation package (Matt. 19:27–30). endures: Believers are not merely to survive the difficulties that come their way; rather, they are to bear patiently their heavy loads. Grief here is not the result of loss but of being afflicted. wrongfully: This verse is about injustice, about people being treated worse than they deserve.

2:20 Credit suggests benefit or personal gain. There is no advantage to believers for successfully enduring a deserved punishment for wrongdoing, yet there is great value when we honor God with our actions when we are unfairly condemned by others (3:17). take it patiently: Endurance and perseverance in the face of suffering please God.

(Gk. hupogrammos) (2:21) Strong’s #5261: In common Greek usage, this word designated a tablet that contained the entire Greek alphabet. Students would use this to trace the alphabet, learning each letter from alpha to omega. The life of Jesus, a life of suffering, is just such a tracing tablet. We, the learners of Jesus, are to trace this life, beginning from alpha and going on to omega.

2:21 For to this you were called: Part of being a Christian is the privilege of serving God faithfully when we encounter undeserved judgment (Phil. 1:29). leaving us an example: Observing how Christ handled unjust punishment gives us insight as to how we also may endure such trials.

2:22 Who committed no sin: Christ was perfect in everything He did, even when He was wrongly condemned to death by the world. Nor was deceit found: In His thoughts and attitudes, Jesus was perfect.

2:23 reviled: Although He was insulted and abused, Jesus remained in control of His words and did not utter slanderous remarks in return. threaten: Although He suffered physical pain, Jesus did not cry out that He would get even or even that He desired to inflict pain on those who were causing Him agony. committed Himself: The Greek does not have Himself, and thus does not say whom or what Jesus kept giving over to God. Most likely, He constantly entrusted both Himself and His revilers to the power of God in order to let God deal with both as a righteous judge. When we pray, we are to forgive (i.e. release to God) any offenses. It is not ours to “get even” (Mark 11:25, 26).

2:24 who Himself bore our sins: The Greek wording emphasizes Jesus’ personal involvement in the act of paying the price for our sins. It also emphasizes that it is our sins that Jesus bore on the Cross. The tree is the Cross. that we … might live for righteousness: The purpose of Christ’s bearing our sins is that we might live to please Him. by whose stripes: The Greek word for stripes is singular rather than plural. Thus, our spiritual healing comes neither from Jesus’ day-to-day sufferings nor from His sufferings that led to the Cross, but from the one ultimate wound—His death.

2:25 Shepherd: This title portrays Christ as One who tenderly and wisely provides for all our needs. Overseer: Christ is also our Guardian, our Protector, the One who watches over us. This is the only place where the titles Shepherd (Pastor) and Overseer (Bishop or Elder) are used in the singular. No one else is qualified to be the one Shepherd and Overseer of our souls—only Christ is. For this reason the NT regularly describes the church and its congregations as having more than one leader (Titus 1:5).

3:1–7 Because of what Christ has done for us on the Cross, both wives and husbands are to make their marriages reflect Jesus Christ, even when difficulties arise (Eph. 5:32, 33).

3:1 In the same manner that citizens are to relate to their government leaders (2:13–17) and employees to their employers (2:18–25), so wives are to relate to their husbands. be submissive: Wives are commanded to place themselves willingly under the guidance and control of their husbands, living in such a way that their husbands will be challenged to live in obedience to God's truth. do not obey the word: Peter here is referring to non-Christian husbands (v. 20; 2:7, 8; 4:17). without a word: A godly wife does not preach to her husband with words but with the Christlike beauty of her daily life. may be won: The goal of her actions is to see the unbelieving husband become a Christian (1 Cor. 9:19–22).

3:2 chaste conduct: The Christian wife is to live without moral defect or blemish. Fear here refers to respect for God.

3:3 Do not let your adornment be merely outward: Christians are to spend more time developing their inner character than attempting to make themselves look beautiful on the outside (1 Sam. 16:7). Peter is not condemning women who wear jewelry. He is emphasizing the importance of a woman's character. We can spend most of our lives on things that are transitory rather than on things that are permanent—such as what clothes or jewelry we wear, or the car we drive. It is not wrong to be involved in temporal things, but we must put special effort into the development of inner character (compare 1 Tim. 2:9, 10).

3:4 the hidden person of the heart: The Christian wife is to be concerned with developing those intangible aspects of her life which are not flashy, but which are interwoven throughout all life. Incorruptible beauty involves inner qualities that do not decay or fade like makeup, jewelry, and clothes (v. 3). gentle and quiet spirit: Peter encourages Christian wives to exhibit attitudes that do not demand personal rights, attitudes that are not harsh and grating but are soothing and tranquil.

3:5 in this manner: These methods have been tested and proven to be God-honoring and effective by the spiritual women of previous generations.

Sarah's Example

Sarah (1 Pet. 3:6) was no doubt well known to the Jewish believers to whom Peter was writing. Just as Jewish men valued their connection with Abraham (compare Matt. 3:9; John 8:39; Acts 13:26), so women regarded themselves as daughters of Sarah. Peter affirmed that desire by describing what it would mean for Christian women facing severe persecution: doing good and not giving in to fear.

The Book of Genesis does not record Sarah calling her husband "lord," but the term was commonly used by members of a clan to show esteem to the head of the clan. By using such a title of respect, Sarah was honoring Abraham and demonstrating her submission to God by following her husband's leadership (3:1, 5).

Sarah exerted some leadership of her own by arranging for her servant Hagar to bear Abraham a son (Gen. 16:2–4), and later by urging him to send Hagar and her son Ishmael away (21:10–14). It's interesting that God instructed Abraham to listen to (obey) Sarah, even though Abraham was displeased with her plan.

In holding up Sarah as a model, Peter emphasized her good works and courageous faith (compare Heb. 11:11). She followed Abraham into some risky situations where courage and righteous living were required (Gen. 12:15; 20:2). In a similar way, Peter's readers were undergoing "fiery trials" as a result of their faith in Christ (1 Pet. 4:12). The key to their survival was not to capitulate to cultural standards of worth, but to develop a Christlike inner character, which is both beautiful and enduring (3:3, 4).

3:6 calling him lord: Sarah was not worshiping Abraham; she was showing him respect. not afraid: Fear of her husband should not be the driving force that causes a Christian wife to practice the principles of godly marital relations.

IN FOCUS

“heirs together”

(Gk. sunkleronomos) (3:7; Rom. 8:17; Eph. 3:6; Heb. 11:9) Strong’s #4789: The Greek word means “joint-heirs” or “co-heirs.” For Christian couples to be “joint-heirs” is for them to have an equal share and joint-participation in the Father’s kingdom. The concept of inheritance is prominent both in the OT and NT (Num. 26:56; Ps. 25:13; Is. 60:21; Matt. 5:5; Gal. 3:29). For believers, Jesus promises an eternal inheritance in His kingdom. Paul uses the same Greek word to describe Christians’ participation with Christ in glory (Eph. 3:6).

3:7 Christian husbands are to demonstrate toward their wives the same unselfish spirit as Christian citizens (2:13–17), Christian subordinates (2:18–25), and Christian wives (vv. 1–6). with understanding: A Christian husband should be intimately aware of his wife’s needs, her strengths and weaknesses, and her goals and desires. He should know as much about her as possible in order to respond in the best way to her. giving honor: A Christian husband gives honor to his wife because she deserves honor (vv. 1–6). weaker vessel: The weakness in view here is primarily physical weakness, since the term vessel means the human body. being heirs together: The relationship described here is one between a Christian husband and his Christian wife, since all Christians and only Christians are heirs of the grace of life (Rom. 8:17). that your prayers may not be hindered: A Christian husband’s spiritual relationship with God is directly affected by the way he treats his wife.

3:8 be of one mind: The idea is that of two people traveling the same mental path together. (Phil. 2:1–4). having compassion for one another: Used only here in the NT, the one Greek word (sumpatheis) for the five English words means having the same feelings as or suffering together with another person (Rom. 12:15). be tenderhearted: Christian affection should be demonstrated toward all people. be courteous: Literally, the Greek term (tapeinophrones) means to have a mind that does not rise far from the ground (i.e., to have an attitude of humility).

3:9–17 Only when we return good for evil do we receive the blessing that God wants to give us (v. 9). Verses 10–12 quote from Ps. 34:12–16 to support this truth. Verses 13–17 declare that it is better to do the right thing even if we suffer for it.

3:9 reviling for reviling: Peter encourages Christians to act like the Lord Jesus. He endured suffering and ridicule in silence, entrusting His just cause to the ultimate Judge (2:23). but on the contrary blessing: Peter emphasizes the contrast between our natural tendency as human beings, to get even when we are offended, with the way we should act as believers: returning good to those hurt us (Eph. 4:25, 29). that you may inherit a blessing: Christ will reward us for any suffering we endure in His name (Matt. 5:10–12; 19:27–30).

3:10 refrain: Christians are to cease and desist from speaking those things that might harm or deceive another. speaking deceit: Deceit means ensnaring someone through trickery, falsehood, or guile.

3:11 turn away from evil: Christians are to avoid what is sinful. seek peace and pursue it: Believers are not merely to desire peace; they are to run eagerly toward the goal of peace, yet always honoring God in their actions.

3:12 Peter uses the imagery of eyes and ears to remind his readers that God knows everything about believers, especially their suffering, and that He listens and responds to their cries for help (Heb. 4:12–16). the face of the LORD is against: In direct contrast to God's all-knowing and all-caring interest in His children who serve Him, He is diametrically opposed to those who do not follow His path of righteousness.

3:13 who will harm you: Under normal circumstances, those who do what is right are less likely than those who do what is wrong to be hurt by others. you become followers: The idea conveyed is that of someone who is enthusiastic about doing good.

3:14 Since not everything in the world functions as it should, even those who do God's will may undergo suffering. for righteousness' sake: Believers should make certain that when they suffer it is only because they have served God faithfully and not because they have done anything wrong (4:14, 15). you are blessed: God especially honors those who suffer for doing what is right (Matt. 5:10–12).

3:15 sanctify the Lord God: Believers should acknowledge the eternal holiness of Christ by revering Him as the Lord of the universe who is in control of all things. to give a defense: Peter assumes that the Christian faith will be falsely accused. He therefore encourages Christians to have rational answers to respond to those false accusations. Meekness is the same term translated gentle in v. 4. Meekness is not weakness. Scripture indicates that both Moses and Christ were meek men; however, they were certainly not weak men. Fear implies a high degree of reverence or respect.

3:16 those who revile: Peter uses a different term here than in 2:23 and 3:9 for revile. In this verse, "revile" (Gk. epreazo) indicates false accusation or abusive treatment.

3:17 for it is better: Peter is not encouraging believers to seek out situations in which they will experience suffering. Instead, he is saying that believers should make certain that when they suffer it is the result of having been faithful to God rather than because they have done evil (2:19, 20). if it is the will of God: Suffering may be part of God's perfect and wise plan for a believer (Matt. 5:10–12).

3:18 once for sins: Christ's death on the Cross was a once-for-all event. He died once for our sins; He does not have to be "recrucified" each time we sin. that He might bring us to God: Christ died so that we can be reconciled to God.

3:19, 20 There are various interpretations of the meaning of these verses, primarily because of the ambiguity of the phrase spirits in prison. The Greek term translated spirits can refer to human spirits, angels, or demons. There are three main interpretations: (1) Some interpret these verses as describing Jesus going to the place where fallen angels are incarcerated and declaring His final victory over evil in His work on the Cross. These commentators suggest that Peter is referring to the days of Noah because these fallen angels were typified by the gross immorality of those "spirits" who married human women at that time (Gen. 6:1–4; 2 Pet. 2:4; Jude 1:6). Depending on the commentator, this proclamation is assigned to the time between Christ's crucifixion and resurrection, or to a time after Christ's ascension to heaven. (2) Others hold that spirits refers to human spirits. Thus, Christ preached to human beings who had died in Noah's day and were in the realm of the dead (hell or Hades). Although some have insisted that Christ's preaching included an offer of salvation to these people, this is at best unlikely and at worst misleading, for Scripture never concedes a "second chance" for sinners after death. The content of Christ's preaching was most likely a proclamation of His victory over sin. (3) Finally, another major interpretation understands this passage as describing Christ preaching through Noah to the unbelievers of his day.

Since they rejected Noah's message of salvation, they were presently in prison—that is, hell.

3:21 an antitype which now saves us: The symbolic act of baptism is the answer of a good conscience of one who has been saved from the penalty of sin (Rom. 4:1–6) by trusting in the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ (Rom. 6:4, 5). The floodwaters symbolize the baptismal waters, which in turn symbolize the salvation that can be obtained through Christ's death (Matt. 28:19, 20; Acts 2:38).

3:22 Being at the right hand of God means that Christ is in a position of power and authority. subject to Him: One day not only will authorities and powers—authorities and powers indicating different classes of angelic beings—recognize Christ's authority, but so will all people, believers and unbelievers alike (Phil. 2:9–11).

4:1–11 Suffering teaches Christians to live in such a way that they honor God. Christians are to be serious and joyful as they reveal through their lives the love and spiritual abilities that God has given to them.

4:1 in the flesh: Christ's suffering was real because He took on our human nature. arm yourselves: In order to fight the good fight successfully, believers must take on the same mind as Christ (Phil. 2:5). He who has suffered in this context refers to suffering Christians. has ceased from sin: Those who serve God faithfully in the midst of suffering take on a different attitude toward sin than what they previously held. Sin no longer holds the same grip on them. The phrase has ceased here does not suggest that those who have suffered become sinlessly perfect or that they will never sin again.

4:2 that: The focus of the lives of those who suffer for Christ is on doing God's will, rather than on living according to sinful passions.

4:3 Lewdness speaks of insolent, shameless behavior that goes unchecked in a person's life. Revelries refers to long, protracted feasts that involve much drinking and immorality. abominable idolatries: The idea here is that some forms of idolatry may have been detestable even to the civil authorities. Of course, all types of idolatry are hateful to God (Ex. 20:3–5; Deut. 7:25; 32:16, 17).

4:4 they think it strange: Unbelievers cannot understand the transformed lives of believers. flood of dissipation: In contrast to believers, who live in order to please God, unbelievers live without thought of the eternal consequences of their acts. They fill their lives with evil deeds that have no eternal value. speaking evil of you: Unbelievers typically ridicule those who refuse to follow them in their frivolous and wicked lifestyles.

4:5 They will give an account: Although unbelievers think they are free to do as they please, they are greatly mistaken. There are consequences to what they do. One day they will stand defenseless before God and give an account of all of their wickedness (Rev. 20:11–15).

4:6 There are four main interpretations of whom Peter refers to when he speaks of the dead in this verse. (1) Some see a connection between the gospel preached in this verse and the proclamation of Christ in 3:19, 20. Accordingly, they understand this verse to be about Christ offering salvation to those who lived in pre-Christian times (3:19, 20). This is most likely mistaken, because there is no indication in Scripture that anyone gets a "second chance" to be saved after death. (2) Another group of commentators also connects this preaching to 3:19, 20, but holds that this verse is speaking of Christ preaching the gospel only to the righteous people of OT times. The other two interpretations maintain that this verse is not connected to 3:19, 20: (3) One view has Peter speaking of the gospel which was preached to believers who are now dead. They had died just like other people, but they were now living with God. (4) The final and perhaps the most sound interpretation of this verse is that Peter is referring to the spiritually dead. The gospel was being preached to them so that they could come alive spiritually.

4:7–11 We will be ready for the end if we keep our relationship with God current through serious and watchful prayer, and if we maintain fervent love for one another (v. 8, explained in vv. 9–11).

4:7 Christ can come in judgment at any time. Therefore, everyone should be ready to give a reason for the way he or she has lived. serious: Christians should curb all sinful passions in light of the coming of the Lord. watchful: Peter urges his readers to be sober-minded and disciplined so that they can offer their prayers to God.

“love”

(Gk. agape) (4:8; Rom. 5:5, 8; 1 John 3:1; 4:7, 8, 16; Jude 21) Strong’s #26: This Greek word was rarely used in Greek literature prior to the NT. When it was used, it denoted showing kindness to strangers, giving hospitality, and being charitable. In the NT, the word agape took on a special meaning: It was used by the NT writers to designate a volitional love as opposed to the purely emotional kind. It is a self-sacrificial love, a kind naturally expressed by God but not so easily by men and women.

4:8 have fervent love among yourselves: Christian commitment for the good of one another is to be intense, stretched out to the maximum, holding nothing back. love will cover a multitude of sins: Peter is not suggesting that one Christian’s love atones for another Christian’s sins. Rather, by introducing this proverb from the OT (Prov. 10:12), he is reminding us that love does not stir up sins. We can demonstrate our love for our fellow believers by truly forgiving them and not talking openly about their past sins.

4:9 Be hospitable: In NT times, hospitality typically meant housing and feeding travelers for two to three days with no expectation of payment in return. without grumbling: Being truly hospitable required personal sacrifice. Therefore, many who performed such acts of kindness to strangers sometimes complained behind the backs of their guests about the hardships of caring for them. In this letter, Peter exhorts those Christians to serve others cheerfully.

4:10, 11 This is one of the most succinct but concentrated passages on the believer’s spiritual gifts. Other key passages are Rom. 12:3–8; 1 Cor. 12—14; Eph. 4:1–16.

4:10 As each one has received a gift: Every believer is gifted to serve. one another: This is crucial for us to understand especially in a society that is fast becoming more and more addicted to privatism and individualism. It is God’s plan to bring growth through relation, not through isolation. Stewards are managers or trustees who will be held accountable for using their gift in the best interest of the One who gave it to them.

4:11 as the oracles of God: Those who teach God’s truth to others should teach it in a reverent manner so that their hearers will respect the Word of God. with the ability which God supplies: Not relying on their own strength, Christians should use the power God gives them to do His will on earth.

These underground catacombs were used by early Christians as a place of refuge from persecution by the Roman authorities. Peter encouraged believers experiencing such persecution to persevere and remain loyal to Christ (1 Pet. 4:12, 13).

4:12–19 Peter instructs Christians regarding suffering. Some suffering, that which is experienced and for Christ, is natural and thus is to be expected. Some suffering, however, will come specifically from Christ and will have serious, eternal consequences. This suffering will be directed toward both Christians and non-Christians but the outcome for these groups will be significantly different.

4:12 do not think it strange: Apparently Peter's readers were astonished that they had to suffer as Christians, especially to the extent that they were suffering. The Greek word translated fiery trial here was also used to speak of the intense fire that burned away impurities in metals (1:6, 7). to try you: For Christians the purpose of suffering is to prove their true character, to clear away the dross of sin and to allow the pure nature of Christ to show itself. some strange thing: Christians should expect and prepare for suffering.

4:13 rejoice: That these early Christians were rejoicing in the midst of their suffering is evident. Peter, by using the Greek present tense of the command rejoice, urged them to keep on rejoicing. when His glory is revealed: Suffering will be part of the Christian experience until Christ returns (Rom. 8:18–22).

4:14 reproached: Christians may be unjustly blamed because of their association with Christ. Peter calls this situation blessed because it brings great reward in the next life (Matt. 5:10–12). rests upon you: When Christians suffer unjustly on behalf of Christ, they will discover that the close relationship they have with God during that period will refresh their spirit.

4:15, 16 But let none of you suffer as a murderer, a thief, an evildoer, or as a busybody: Peter again returns to this truth mentioned before in 2:20 and 3:17, to show that it is not suffering in itself which is virtuous, but suffering for the name of the Lord, or as a Christian, which counts. None of his readers should suppose that just punishment for sin by the government would bring the praise of God. The name "Christian" was applied in NT times as a term of derision (Acts 11:26; 26:28). Just being a Christian was at times punishable by death, or lesser penalties. History indicates that many have been killed for admitting to being Christians in these times of persecution by the government. Let him not be ashamed, that is, of this name of being a "Christian." Let him rather be proud of it, and use this derogatory name as a means and instrument for bringing glory to God.

4:17 the time has come for judgment: Judgment does not always imply condemnation in Scripture. When used in relation to Christians, it consistently refers to the evaluation of a believer's works for the purpose of reward (1 Cor. 3:10–15). the house of God: The focus here is not on a building but on believers. those who do not obey: Throughout this letter, Peter speaks of those who are not part of God's eternal family as being disobedient (2:7, 8; 3:1, 20).

4:18 scarcely saved: No one deserves to be saved, and no one is able to be saved by his or her good works (Eph. 2:8, 9). Since everyone deserves condemnation, the fact that anyone is saved is solely the result of God's grace. appear: If God does not hold back judgment from His own people, imagine the end of the enemies of God who have no one to justify them before Him (Ps. 1:4–6; Rev. 20:11–15).

4:19 Christians are to entrust their very lives to God, especially in the midst of suffering, always recognizing that He is the faithful Creator who is in control of all things. God never gives us more than we can handle (1 Cor. 10:13); everything He does always has a good purpose (Rom. 8:28).

5:1–4 Christian leaders are to serve God faithfully, remembering that God's divine compensation package is incomparable. Christ had made that clear to Peter in Matt. 19:27–29.

5:1 Peter sees himself on the same level as the rest of the elders. Partaker is a key term in the Epistle to the Hebrews (Heb. 3:1, 14). It speaks of sharing in Christ's reign in the coming kingdom (Rom. 8:17; Rev. 2:26–28; 5:9, 10). Peter considers himself to be already participating partly in the glory that one day he will experience fully.

5:2 Shepherd the flock of God: An ancient Israelite shepherd would go before his sheep to lead them; he would not drive the sheep in front of him. Church leaders should lead the people of God in the same way: feeding, protecting, and guiding them (John 21:15–17). Christian leaders should also remember that they have been given responsibility for tending a flock that belongs to God, not to themselves. serving as overseers: Church leaders must do everything in their power to ensure that the Christians under their care are living according to God's Word. not by compulsion: The work of the ministry is to be done joyfully, not merely as a duty. not for dishonest gain: Christian leaders need to make certain that their work is not motivated by money, but by a passion for the good of those believers put in their charge (1 Tim. 3:3, 8; Titus 1:11).

The Business of the Church

There are many reasons why people seek positions of authority in a church. Some do it because they have authority at their normal job and therefore feel they should have authority at church. Some do it for just the opposite reason: authority is denied them at work, so they seek it in the church.

Peter reminds overseers (1 Pet. 5:2–4) that the presence or absence of authority or success on the job is more or less irrelevant to positions of authority at church. That may shock church members and leaders who have uncritically adopted models of church management from the business world. It's not that churches can't benefit from many of the practices found in business. Certainly in administration and finances, churches have much to learn from the efficient and effective policies of the marketplace. But the church is not a business, and philosophies and practices from that sphere need to be carefully evaluated and sifted in light of Scripture before they are put into effect.

5:3 nor as being lords over: Echoing a command that Peter heard directly from Jesus during His earthly ministry, Peter reminds all Christian leaders that they need to perform the role of servants, not of masters, to those whom God has assigned to their care (Matt. 20:25–28; Mark 10:42–45). being examples: Christian leaders should be a godly model to other believers (Phil. 3:17; 2 Thess. 3:9; 1 Tim. 4:12). Christ Himself set the example for all of us (John 13:15).

5:4 Chief Shepherd: Elsewhere Jesus is called the Shepherd (2:25), the good Shepherd (John 10:11, 14), and the great Shepherd (Heb. 13:20). crown of glory: God guarantees that those ministers who serve Him faithfully, in accordance with the guidelines of vv. 2, 3, will receive an eternal reward in Christ's coming kingdom.

5:5–11 God's people are to humble themselves before God, being wary of our enemy the devil but at the same time mindful that God brings a victory that lasts for eternity.

5:5 submit: Young men specifically are reminded not to usurp the authority of church leaders but to place themselves as subordinates under those leaders. The “swift to hear, slow to speak” of James is very appropriate. resists: God acts in direct opposition to those who are arrogant, contemptuous, or haughty—traits which are particularly evident in those who do not display an attitude of submission.

5:6 humble yourselves: All people will one day humble themselves under God’s power (3:21; Phil. 2:9–11). We as believers need to do it now.

5:7 casting all your care upon Him: We need to present all our worries, anxieties, and problems to God in order to let Him handle them.

5:8 Be sober means to be self-disciplined, to think rationally and not foolishly. Be vigilant means to be alert to the spiritual pitfalls of life and take appropriate steps to make certain that we do not stumble. your adversary: Satan is our avowed enemy. He never ceases from being hostile toward us; he is constantly accusing us before God (Job 1:9—2:7; Zech. 3:1; Luke 22:31; Rev. 12:10). like a roaring lion: Satan is both cunning and cruel. He attacks when least expected and desires to destroy completely those whom he attacks.

5:9 Resist him: We are not commanded to run, but to resist—to fight rather than flee. Victory comes when we remain committed to God, because He is greater than our enemy (1 John 4:4). knowing: Realizing that other Christians are undergoing the attacks of Satan and are being successful against him gives us the courage to press on and to secure the victory as well.

5:10 perfect: Like a doctor setting a broken bone, God will mend our broken lives and make us whole. establish: God will make our way stable, despite the instability we feel living in a world that inflicts suffering upon us. strengthen: God will give us the ability to succeed in all that we do for Him. settle: As a consequence of our facing the attacks of our enemy, God will build in us a firm foundation that will make us steadfast and immovable.

5:11 the glory and the dominion: God is in control of all things both in this world and throughout eternity. Amen: Responding to the Word of God by saying “amen” echoes a Jewish practice of declaring that everything that had been said is true and that the hearers were committed to putting into practice that truth (Phil. 4:20).

IN COMPARISON

Church Leaders

Peter concludes his first letter with an exhortation for overseers to "shepherd the flock of God" (5:2). The following is a summary of the responsibilities and qualification of overseers and of deacons, the other church official mentioned in the NT.

	Overseers/Bishops/Elders	Deacons
Meaning	The Greek word presbuteros literally means "aged," which explains the common translation elder.	The Greek word diakonos literally means "servant."
Responsibilities	• To pastor or "shepherd" God's church—to feed, lead, guide, and nurture (Acts 20:28; 1 Pet. 5:2) • To administrate or rule God's church (1 Tim. 5:17; Titus 1:5) • To teach and preach (Eph. 4:12, 13; 1 Tim. 3:2; 5:17) • To represent the church (Acts 20:17) • To pray for the sick (James 5:14)	• To tend to physical needs among the believers (Acts 6:1–6) • To free up the elders for their ministry in teaching and prayer (Acts 6:1–6)
Qualifications from 1 Timothy 3	• Blameless (v. 2; Titus 1:6) • Husband of one wife (v. 2; Titus 1:6) • Temperate (v. 2) • Sober-minded (v. 2; Titus 1:8) • Of good behavior (v. 2) • Hospitable (v. 2; Titus 1:8) • Able to teach (v. 2; Titus 1:9) • Not given to wine (v. 3; Titus 1:7) • Not violent, but gentle (v. 3; Titus 1:7) • Not greedy for money (v. 3; Titus 1:7) • Not quarrelsome (v. 3) • Not covetous (v. 3) • Rules own house well (v. 4) • Has submissive children (v. 4; Titus 1:6) • Not a novice (v. 6) • Has a good testimony (v. 7)	• Blameless (v. 10) • Husband of one wife (v. 12) • Not given to wine (v. 8) • Not greedy for money (v. 8) • Rules own house well (v. 12) • Reverent (v. 8) • Not double-tongued (v. 8) • Has a pure conscience (v. 9) • Tested (v. 10)
Qualifications from Titus 1	• Not self-willed (v. 7) • Not quick-tempered (v. 7) • A lover of what is good (v. 8) • Just (v. 8) • Holy (v. 8) • Self-controlled (v. 8)

5:12–14 By his concluding greetings, Peter reminds his readers that Christians are to build one another up through the exercise of God's grace and love.

5:12 Silvanus, whose Aramaic name was Silas, worked closely with both Peter and Paul (Acts 15:40; 16:19, 25, 29; 2 Cor. 1:19; 1 Thess. 1:1). testifying: Peter uses an intensive verb form here to show the intensity of his commitment to witness unashamedly of God's truth. Contrast Peter's cowardly behavior prior to Jesus' crucifixion (Matt. 26:69–75; Mark 14:66–72; Luke 22:54–62; John 18:25–27).

5:13 She indicates the people who comprise the local church in the city from which Peter was writing (the Greek word for church is a feminine noun). Peter uses the term Babylon to refer to Rome. By the first century, the original Babylon was a small and insignificant town. elect together with you: All of the people of God are chosen by Him to be His people (1:2). Mark my son: John Mark (Acts 12:12, 25; 15:37, 39) was Peter's spiritual son, not his physical one. What is being conveyed here is that the relationship between Peter and Mark is like that of father and son.

5:14 a kiss of love: Early Christians and Jews greeted fellow believers with a kiss on the cheek. Here Peter is encouraging believers to treat fellow believers as part of one large spiritual family of God (Rom. 16:16; 1 Cor. 16:20; 2 Cor. 13:12; 1 Thess. 5:26). peace: Once again Peter desires that these Christians who are undergoing much suffering will experience God's perfect peace in their lives (1:2).

The Second Epistle of Peter

——————— TEACHING AND LEARNING IS IMPORTANT

BECAUSE it involves truth and error. What a student learns becomes ingrained in the heart and soul. The student develops an attachment to it. If this "learning" is false—if the student comes to believe that something untrue is actually true—so much the worse. It will be hard to convince the person otherwise. And if the truth or error involves our eternal destiny, the stakes only go up. This is why Peter wrote his second epistle. The Christian faith that Peter had faithfully preached was not just a matter of philosophy. It was a matter of eternal life and death. Yet there were those who were peddling their own propaganda, falsehoods that contradicted the truth. Peter had to say something; he had to confront these falsehoods so they would not be mistaken for the truth.

With its emphasis on holy living and its efforts to refute false teachings, 2 Peter stresses sanctification. Ultimately Peter traces the motivation for leading a holy life back to the imminent return of Christ and the punishment and rewards Jesus would bring. The letter groups these teachings into five different themes. (1) Initially Peter asserts his own authority and the authority of the apostles' teaching. Their instruction would help the readers of 2 Peter to distinguish truth from error. (2) Evidently the recipients of this letter were having trouble establishing the connection between following Christ and leading a holy life. Peter reiterated to them that discipleship to Christ means putting away all kinds of immorality. (3) Furthermore, Peter warned them not to imitate the arrogance of the false teachers, who were slandering spiritual beings. (4) To encourage them to persevere and to remain faithful to the truths of the faith, Peter depicted the day of the Lord, which would result in a new heaven and new earth. (5) Toward the end of his letter, Peter encouraged his readers to be patient. God had good reasons for delaying Christ's return and the fulfillment of His prophetic program. The day of the Lord had been delayed, but it was still imminent. For this reason, they should vigilantly watch their belief and practice so that they would not be deceived by falsehood.

The obvious similarities between 2 Peter and Jude call for an explanation (compare ch. 2 with Jude 4–18). Some have suggested that Peter borrowed from Jude, while others have maintained the opposite. In addition, some have suggested that both authors borrowed from another, anonymous source. This type of borrowing was fairly common in the first century. For example, it is evident that Luke used other sources when he wrote his Gospel (Luke 1:1–4). Most scholars agree that the more complete and precise statements in Jude point to Peter borrowing from Jude. The fact that the early church treated James, a half brother of Jesus, with utmost respect (Acts 12:17; 15:13; 21:18; Gal. 1:19) may help explain why Peter borrowed from the letter of another half brother of Jesus, Jude.

Second Peter is one of the NT books that struggled the longest to gain acceptance into the NT canon. Church authorities such as Origen (around A.D. 240) accepted it as canonical but admitted that is was a "disputed" book. Early critics believed it was written in the second century by a disciple of Peter who used Peter's name. They based their belief on differences of language and style between it and 1 Peter, as well as differences in subject matter and approach. Furthermore, they noted the similarities between 2 Peter and Jude, asserting that the unknown writer of 2 Peter borrowed from Jude, something the apostle Peter would have never done.

Nevertheless, by the fourth century A.D. the church councils had accepted 2 Peter as one of Peter's authentic letters. Modern studies have shown that the differences with 1 Peter are not nearly so great as earlier critics contended, and the stylistic differences can be accounted for by the use of different secretaries. First Peter may have been written with the help of Silvanus (1 Pet. 5:12). It is quite likely that Peter either wrote the second letter himself or employed another scribe to write it down—perhaps Mark. Although 2 Peter does not refer to as many events in the life of Jesus as 1 Peter does, it accurately describes the Transfiguration, the prophecy of Peter's own death, the day of the Lord's coming as a thief in the night, and the prediction of the appearance of false prophets. All of these are clear allusions to Jesus' life as recorded in the Gospels.

There is clear evidence from the early centuries of Christianity that the church did not tolerate those who wrote in an apostle's name. In one instance (specifically The Acts of Paul and Thecla), the author of such a work was disciplined for doing so. Paul also condemned such practices in his Thessalonian letters (2 Thess. 3:17). From the preceding evidence, it is reasonable to maintain that Simon Peter wrote this letter, just as the letter itself asserts (1:1).

Second Peter can be dated some time between A.D. 64 and 68. It was probably written from Rome, where early church tradition has the apostle spending the closing years of his life. Peter died a martyr in A.D. 68, and the epistle was written shortly before that (1:14, 15).

Peter addressed his letter “to those who have obtained a like precious faith with us” (1:1), a way of saying “to all believers everywhere.” He had written 1 Peter to the widely scattered Christians in the Asia Minor provinces of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia. By the time he wrote 2 Peter, they were no doubt even more widely scattered. Some have noted that 2 Peter seems to be addressed to a group whom Peter knows well and who were facing a specific false teaching. Even if this is the case, the readers seem to be largely Gentiles (because of the multiple references to licentious lifestyles, a characteristic of Gentiles) or a mixed group of Jews and Gentiles, probably living in one of the provinces mentioned above. Word of their difficulties with false teachers had reached Peter in Rome, and he dispatched this letter to them to encourage them and warn them of the dangers they faced.

Commentary

1:1 apostle: With this term Peter identifies himself as an authorized spokesman for the truth that Christ proclaimed. In vv. 1–4 Peter describes the resources his readers have that will make growth in grace and knowledge possible. His apostleship is the first of these resources. like precious faith: Anyone who has faith in Jesus has the same access to God as any other believer. This access is the second great resource that Peter's readers possess. It was obtained when they were given the gift of righteousness (justification). The righteousness believers are given is the righteousness of Christ Himself. our God and Savior Jesus Christ: This title of Jesus reflects Peter's great confession in John 6:69: "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God."

1:2 Grace and peace is a common Christian greeting in the epistles, combining Greek and Hebrew salutations. However, the phrase is more than a salutation to Peter. He sees grace and peace as blessings that spring from the knowledge of God and Jesus. The Greek word translated knowledge is a key word in this letter. It describes a special kind of knowledge, a kind that is complete. Since our knowledge of Jesus grows as we mature in the faith, we will experience His grace and peace on many different occasions in our Christian walk.

(Gk. theios dunamis) (1:3) Strong’s #2304; 1411; divine nature (Gk. theios phusis) (1:4) Strong’s #2304;; 2304; 5449: These are unique expressions in the NT. The divine power is the power God used in raising Christ from the dead and is that same power available to the church (Eph. 1:19, 20). This divine power has provided us with the spiritual ability to live a godly life. The divine nature is the nature that characterizes God, the nature that is expressed in holiness, virtue, righteousness, love, and grace (1:5–7). By being regenerated with the divine nature, believers can exhibit the same characteristics.

1:3 The apostle Paul identifies the divine power referred to here as “the power of His resurrection” (Phil. 3:10; 4:13). This power is the third resource for godly living that Peter lists in this letter (v. 1). by glory and virtue: These words suggest the qualities of Jesus that attract believers to Him. The glory that John saw in Jesus (John 1:14) was His authority and power. The glory that Peter saw probably was manifested at the Transfiguration (vv. 16–18). Jesus’ virtue is His moral excellence that continually awed His disciples.

1:4 Great and precious promises refers to the numerous offers of divine provision found in Scripture. These promises offer us the glory and virtue of Christ as the basis for our growing participation in the divine nature. We have Christ within us, as He promised (John 14:23), to enable us to become increasingly Christlike (2 Cor. 3:18). Because we have become new creatures in Christ, we have already escaped the corruption (the moral ruin) that is in the world through lust (perverted desire). We should make our escape from this world evident to all by our godly behavior and the renewing of our mind (Rom. 12:2). These promises are the fourth resource (vv. 1, 3) upon which believers may draw for sustaining help.

The Source of Power

Do we think we have what it takes to "make it" in life? According to 2 Pet. 1:3, we do. Peter says that God's power gives us what we need to experience real life in a way that pleases Him. God wants to affect every area of our lives—work, marriage and family, relationships, church, and community.

How can we make God's power operational in our experience? Peter says that it comes "through the knowledge of Him who called us." In other words, we must grow closer to Christ. Real power comes from having an understanding of our place in God's purposes and relying on His provisions.

1:5 add: This is the same word rendered "supplied" in v. 11. As we add these qualities to our faith, God will "add" to us an "abundant entrance" into the everlasting kingdom. The verb epichorego has a colorful and fascinating history. In Greek drama the plays were put on by the combined effort of a poet (who wrote the script); the state (which provided the theater); and a wealthy individual called a choregos, who paid the expenses. This called for a generous but sometimes costly effort on his part. In Peter's view, God has written in the blood of Jesus the captivating script for a Christian life; the world is the theater where it will be played out; but the believer must cooperate by expending his diligent efforts to make the script come alive in vivid display. This exhortation begins a section (vv. 5–11) in which Peter describes the responsibilities that result from possessing the godly resources described in vv. 1, 3, 4. Faith marks the beginning of the Christian life (Acts 3:16; Rom. 3:28; Heb. 11:6). Through genuine faith, God grants eternal life to a spiritually dead person (Eph. 2:1). Virtue is the same word used in v. 3 in reference to Christ's character. We cannot produce virtue ourselves; but we can choose to obey the virtuous promptings of the Holy Spirit who lives in us. Knowledge (practical wisdom) is obtained by dedicating ourselves to learning God's truth in the Scriptures and putting that truth into action.

1:6 Self-control means mastering one's emotions rather than being controlled by them. The false teachers whose views Peter was exposing believed that knowledge freed people from the need to control their passions. perseverance: A person who exercises self-control will not easily succumb to discouragement or the temptation to quit. Viewing all circumstances as coming from the hand of a loving Father who is in control of all things is the secret of perseverance.

1:7 The Greek word for godliness was used by ancient pagans to describe a religious individual who kept in close touch with the gods. Here Peter uses the word to speak of the need for Christians to be continually aware of God's presence. Knowing that all of our life is in His hands should influence every aspect of our life. We should live for God and not for ourselves. Brotherly kindness is so closely linked with godliness that 1 John 4:20 says, "If someone says, 'I love God,' and hates his brother, he is a liar." As Jesus taught in John 15:12–17, love involves serving one another, sharing with one another, and praying for one another. Love here refers to God's kind of love, which originates not in the one loved but in the one who loves. God loves because He is love; we are to love because we are from God. Such love reaches beyond the Christian community to anyone, anywhere, seeking that person's highest good—even at a cost to ourselves.

1:8 neither barren nor unfruitful: The presence of the qualities listed in vv. 5–7 marks a healthy Christian and assures productivity in our lives. Thus, a person who asks how he or she can experience fruitfulness has the process laid out step by step 1:9 The lack of fruitfulness (v. 8) in a believer's life may be caused by two factors: blindness and forgetfulness. A shortsighted person is one who looks only at earthly and material values—what is close at hand—and does not see the eternal spiritual realities. Concerned only with this present life, such a person becomes blind to the things of God, forgetting the wonderful sense of cleansing that comes from turning oneself over to Christ.

1:10 In v. 10, Peter urges his readers to confirm call and election, not memory. It does not seem likely that a person could forget it if his sins had been washed away by the atoning death of Christ, but the whole matter could escape his notice if he were not urged to make sure about it. We cannot be sure of call and election if we have not been purged (v. 9) from our former sin. On the other hand, if these are confirmed by the fact that we have been cleansed from our old sins, it is certain that we shall never stumble.

1:11 entrance … abundantly: Peter distinguishes between a just-barely-made-it entrance into the eternal kingdom and a richly abundant one.

The Scripture indicates that fruitful and faithful living here will be rewarded by greater privileges and rewards in glory (Rev. 22:12).

1:12 to remind you: Three times in vv. 12–15 Peter speaks of his desire to remind his readers of the truth he has already shared. To do otherwise would be negligence on his part, since even established Christians can lose sight of the importance of pressing on to the end. Perhaps Peter is thinking of his own wavering which led to a repeated denial of his Lord even when he was most confident that he would never fail Him.

1:13, 14 Peter is conscious of the short time he has to be in his body. Paul also viewed his body as a tent or tabernacle, a temporary residence (2 Cor. 5:1). Jesus had told Peter that when he was old he would be taken captive and put to death (John 21:18, 19). Now that he had little time left, Peter encouraged his readers to seize the opportunity to display Christ's love while they still could.

1:15 careful to ensure: Several early church fathers took these words to be Peter's promise to leave behind a testimony of the truth for his readers, which they considered to be the Gospel of Mark (a Gospel widely regarded as Peter's testimony of the life of Jesus). Peter describes his decease as an exodus or departure (Paul's use of the term in 2 Tim. 4:6).

1:16–21 Peter reminds his readers to be faithful because the Second Coming of Christ is no fable. That coming is assured by two things: (1) Peter himself witnessed the majesty of Christ at the Transfiguration (vv. 16–18), which was a preview of His second coming in glory. (2) The prophetic word of the OT also foretold Christ's coming (v. 19).

1:16 False teachers were claiming that Jesus' resurrection and return, as well as the Holy Spirit's indwelling of believers, were all cunningly devised fables. Peter countered their faith claims with an eyewitness account. Peter himself had actually seen the power and coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. These are the twin themes of this letter: the power of Jesus available for holy living and the coming of Jesus as the glorious hope of each believer.

1:17, 18 Along with James and John, Peter heard the voice of the Father during the Transfiguration (Matt. 17:1–13). That voice conferred honor upon Jesus by identifying Him as "My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. 17:5). Jesus' glory was displayed in His shining garments (Mark 9:3). Thus, the apostolic witness of Jesus is established by three senses: they saw the transfigured Lord; they heard the voice of the Father (and the conversation with Moses and Elijah though Peter does not mention the latter here); and they remembered the event as taking place on the holy mountain. This grounds the event in history and removes it from the realm of myth or fable.

“morning star”

(Gk. phosphoros) (1:19) Strong’s #5459: The Greek term means “light-bearer” or “light-bringer.” Christ is the morning star, as elsewhere He is called the Bright and Morning Star (Rev. 22:16) and the Dayspring, that is, the rising sun (Luke 1:78). Presently, Christ shines in our hearts; when He returns, He will arise in our hearts and bring us into a perfect day. His outward coming will be matched by an inward rising, “an illuminating transformation” of our spirits.

1:19 We have the prophetic word confirmed may be rephrased as “we have the prophetic word as a surer confirmation.” As strong as an eyewitness account (vv. 16–18) may be, there is an even stronger confirmation that Jesus is who He said He was. The written Scriptures are even more trustworthy than the personal experience of the apostle Peter. They cast a light that shines like a lamp in a dark place and will continue to do so until the morning star rises (Rom. 13:12–14). In other words, the truths in the Bible will continue to point to the source of all truth, Christ, until He returns in glory.

1:20 of any private interpretation: Although some have taken this phrase to mean that no individual Christian has the right to interpret prophecy for himself or herself, the context and the Greek word for interpretation indicates another meaning for the verse. The Greek word for interpretation can also mean “origin.” In the context of v. 21, it is clear that Peter is speaking of Scripture’s “origin” from God Himself and not the credentials of the one who interprets it. There is no private source for the Bible; the prophets did not supply their own solutions or explanations to the mysteries of life. Rather, God spoke through them; He alone is responsible for what is written in Scripture. This is why Christians should study the Bible diligently. It is God’s Word.

1:21 prophecy never came by the will of man: No mere mortal chose to utter his own thoughts as though they were God’s. On the contrary, God chose holy men to be His spokesmen, men who uttered thoughts given to them by the Holy Spirit. The metaphor “borne along” or “moved” is that of a ship raising its sails into the wind and going in the direction the wind blows. This may possibly reflect Peter's memory of Jesus' words to Nicodemus recorded in John 3:8.

2:1–22 Peter describes the false teachers who are leading Christians astray (vv. 1–3, 11–22) and assures his readers that these teachers will be judged (vv. 4–10).

2:1 Just as God's prophets of the past were opposed by false prophets, believers are opposed by false teachers. The difference in terminology suggests that the false teachers among Peter's readers made no claim to being prophets, but were distorting the Scriptures with heretical interpretations. Peter's certainty that there will be such false teachers probably rests on Jesus' predictions (Matt. 24:4, 5). False teachers could be recognized by their secretive approaches, their doctrinal errors (such as a denial of Christ), and by their abrupt departure from the Christian community (1 John 2:19).

2:2 destructive ways: Peter is addressing here the ethical implications of false teaching. The Greek word translated destructive means "shameful" or "deliberately immoral." The false teachers gloried in the privileges of Christianity but treated its moral demands with indifference. blasphemed: The truth of Christian redemption is held in contempt by many because of the immoral behavior of professing Christians.

2:3 covetousness: The false teachers did not hesitate to take advantage of their followers in order to enrich themselves. judgment … destruction: Peter turns from the description of the false teachers to a description of their fate. Verses 4–8 provide three vivid examples of judgment on false teachers of the past.

IN COMPARISON

Right Living in a Wretched World

Writing to beleaguered Christians in an evil world where false teachers were aggressively spreading dangerous heresies, Peter urged, "Grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (3:18). The following is a summary of the components of spiritual growth Peter advocated.

Practice	Passage	Principles
Godly Living	1:1–15	• Through Christ we have been given everything we need to live godly lives. • We are partakers of the divine nature • We have been freed from the power of the old corrupt, sinful nature.
Reliance on the Scriptures	1:16–21; 3:1, 2	• Christian doctrine is not just another point of view; it is not a fable. • The Scriptures can be trusted because they were written by prophets and apostles inspired by the Holy Spirit. • The Scriptures function as a light in a dark age; they are an absolute in a relativistic world.
Opposition to False Teaching	2:1–22	• We are not to be swayed by the large numbers of people who are persuaded by unbiblical ideas. • Judgment is guaranteed for all who oppose the truths of God. • We should exercise discernment granted by the Holy Spirit to detect the deceptive teachings and alluring promises of the ungodly.
Watchfulness	3:3–18	• By looking for the return of Christ, we can avoid the sinful traps of the world. • We need to take care that we do not become lax in our thinking—God has set a day which will mark the end of this world as we know it. • God's promise of judgment should prompt us to encourage others to repent and believe in Christ.

2:4–9 Peter uses three illustrations of God's judgment against sin to prove that He will punish these false teachers: angels who sinned (v. 4), the ancient world of Noah's day (v. 5; Gen. 6:5—8:22), and Sodom and Gomorrah (v. 6; Gen. 19:1–26). He then gives two illustrations to show that God will deliver His own when they prove faithful in trials (v. 9): Noah (v. 5) and righteous Lot.

2:4 the angels who sinned: There are two main interpretations of this passage, depending on one's understanding of Gen. 6:1–6. Some think that Peter is referring to "sons of God" in Gen. 6:2. According to this interpretation, the "sons of God" were angels who rebelled against God and their role in creation. They began to engage in forbidden practices with the daughters of men. Their outrageous conduct was met with immediate judgment: the angels were cast into hell, or Tartarus, a place of final punishment. Tartarus involves severe limitation of action, symbolized by chains, and almost total lack of understanding, symbolized by darkness. A second group of commentators balk at the suggestion of sexual relations between angels and women. They consider this verse to be simply a reference to those angels who fell with Satan.

2:5 did not spare the ancient world: Peter's second example of God's judgment (v. 4) is the flood that came upon the ungodly in Noah's day (3:6; 1 Pet. 3:20). Noah is called a preacher of righteousness because his righteous life put to shame the immoral lives of his neighbors. Noah's building of the ark would certainly have given him the opportunity to explain the coming judgment and to invite people to repent and believe in God. But his entreaties fell on deaf ears, just as the truth of Christ's atonement fell on the deaf ears of the false teachers of Peter's day. Such indifference and unbelief brought the ungodly of Noah's world to certain destruction.

2:6 Sodom and Gomorrah is Peter's third example of God's judgment (vv. 4, 5). Genesis 19 makes it clear that sexual perversion was the primary cause of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. This was intended to be a fearful example of the seriousness of not observing the sexual distinctions which God has determined. From time to time these distinctions have been cast aside, and widespread breakdowns in social structures have inevitably followed.

2:7, 8 Three times in these two verses Lot is described as a righteous man. The Genesis account seems to portray Lot as a man influenced by the values of the world. Here we are told of Lot's reaction to evil: he was depressed by the filthy conduct of the wicked and upset at their lawless actions. Lot was considered righteous by God because he refused to join in the immoral revelry of that city. For this reason he was delivered by divine intervention. This example emphasizes the importance of grieving over the conditions of the lost, and refusing to accommodate to their amoral standards.

2:9–11 the Lord knows how: God is in full control of all events. He delivers the godly out of, but not away from, their trials. He also sees that the unjust do not escape their day of punishment. Two particular groups are singled out for judgment: those who live in unclean lust and those who hold authority in contempt. presumptuous, self-willed: These words describe the character and methods of false teachers. Their actions are characterized by boldness; they recklessly defy both God and man. Behind their presumption is a commitment to their own desires. The dignitaries that the false teachers slander are probably angels, although the word can refer to people in authority. The reference here is almost certainly to Jude 9, where the archangel Michael, disputing with Satan over the body of Moses, does not revile the devil but simply says, "The Lord rebuke you."

2:12 like natural brute beasts: False teachers are compared to animals in their behavior because they act in ignorance of the realities of death and judgment. Like animals, they also react only to present circumstances, without giving thought to the consequences of their actions. They pour abuse on things which they do not understand, like an angered dog attacks someone whom it thinks is threatening him. Since they act like animals, they will end up like animals; their inner corruption will be the cause of their destruction, as a mad dog is sometimes shot to death to keep him from harming others. The phrase perish in their own corruption can actually mean "corrupted by their own corrupt living." That is the irony of sinful living: its very pleasures in the end become distasteful. Sensuality is self-destructive.

2:13 False teachers are perverse in their display of evil, like those who carouse in the daytime. Even pagan societies thought it strange and unnatural to hold drunken revels in broad daylight. However, the false teachers had no qualms about practicing their erroneous concept of Christian liberty in clear daylight. As a result, they would receive the wages of unrighteousness, that is, spiritual death (Rom. 6:23). The feast mentioned here may have been the agape, or love feast, built around the celebration of the Lord's Supper. On the other hand, the term may simply refer to social contact with the heretical teachers. The heretics were so self-deceived that they actually thought they were celebrating their freedom in Christ with their drunken revelry at the Lord's Table. In fact, they were spots and blemishes, disfiguring and degrading the purity of the Lord's feast.

2:14 The eyes of the false teachers were full of adultery. They looked lustfully at women. They could not cease from sin because their fantasizing had become habitual. As a consequence, they convinced certain unstable souls in the church that adultery was acceptable Christian behavior and lured them into sexual immorality. Enticing means "to catch with bait." These new, unstable converts, not yet fully grounded in Christ, were easily hooked into an immoral lifestyle. trained in covetous practices: The latter half of v. 14 belongs with vv. 15, 16, since Balaam is an example of the covetous ways of the heretics. Peter's charge is serious for he maintains the false teachers have deliberately trained their hearts in greedy practices. Covetousness (Gk. pleonexia) is used both to refer to greed for money and greed for bodies (i.e., illicit or unnatural sex). Here it is primarily greed for money or comforts. But, as Jesus plainly stated, "You cannot serve God and mammon (money)" (Matt. 6:24). To attempt it is to put oneself under the curse of God—to be doomed to perish with the world in its rejection of God's grace.

2:15, 16 The account of Balaam in Num. 22—24 is used here, as well as in Jude 11 and Rev. 2:14, to depict the danger of forsaking the right way and going astray. Balaam's primary downfall was that he loved the wages of unrighteousness. He sold his prophetic powers to the pagan king Balak and, for a promised monetary reward, sought to curse the children of God. On his way to do this he was rebuked by his donkey, who saw what Balaam could not see—a mighty angel with drawn sword standing in the path. By this story Peter is encouraging those unstable souls who were easily impressed by the teaching of the heretics Though Balaam's subsequent sin of introducing immorality into the camp of Israel is not mentioned here, it is significant that both avarice and lust were the major motivations of the false teachers described here. These two sins are seldom far apart!

2:17 wells … clouds: Peter accuses the heretical teachers of awakening false expectations, like springs that contain no water or storm clouds that darken but produce no rain.

2:18 Allure, like enticing in v. 14, means "to catch with bait." The bait is great swelling words of emptiness, high-sounding promises that prove to have no real content. The hook is the lusts of the flesh, normal sexual desires that are practiced in wrong ways. The heretical teachers clearly were implying that once the soul is saved, what is done in the body is of no importance. those who live in error: The guarding of the flock from "wolves in sheep's clothing," as Jesus described false teachers, was one of the primary concerns of the apostles and is one of the chief tasks of pastors.

2:19 The irony of false teaching is that it promises great freedom while its advocates are already slaves to sin. The gospel offers release from the corruption of the world, but the false teachers were involved in moral ruin by their immoral practices (vv. 14–18) and greedy motivations (v. 3). These false teachers were probably twisting the Christian concept of freedom from the law into a license for sinning (Paul's condemnation of this type of thinking in Rom. 6).

2:20–22 The persons referred to in these verses have caused considerable difference of opinion among commentators. Generally, four views have been posited. First, some believe that the word they refers to the false teachers mentioned in the preceding verses rather than those persons deceived by them. A second view says that the apparent connection between the end of v. 18 ("the ones who have actually escaped from those who live in error") and the beginning of v. 20 ("if, after they have escaped the pollutions of the world") probably means that the "they" refers to unsaved people who were merely "listeners" of the gospel (v. 18). Third, some think that both the false teachers and their converts are in view and that they can lose their salvation. The fourth perspective proposes that the "they" refers to new converts who are warned against being entangled with a life of sensuousness only to find a less fulfilling life than before they were saved.

2:20 they have escaped: The subject of this phrase is the heretical teachers who are called "slaves of corruption" in v. 19. This verse seems to indicate that the teachers had formerly turned from the pollution of the world through a full and experiential knowledge of Christ. Now, however, they have fallen again into immorality, even becoming teachers of sinful lifestyles. As a result, the latter end is worse for them than the beginning. This phrase is almost certainly taken from Jesus' words in Matt. 12:45 and probably reflects Peter's memory of that occasion.

2:21 better … not to have known: Knowledge without obedience is dangerous. Jesus said of Judas that it would have been better for him not to have been born than to have turned from the truth he had known (Matt. 26:24). The phrases way of righteousness and holy commandment emphasize the ethical content of the knowledge the false teachers had (v. 20). They knew what was right and holy, but they deliberately chose to do what was wrong and corrupt.

2:22 according to the true proverb: Jews considered dogs and pigs among the lowest of animals, so Peter chooses these animals to describe people who have known the truth but have turned away from it. The first proverb is found in Prov. 26:11; the second is from the Syrian story of Ahikar, known to Peter and his readers. Jesus used dogs and pigs as pictures of mankind far away from God (Matt. 7:6). A review of the whole chapter shows that yielding to the money-mad, sex-obsessed, materialistic and anti-authoritarian drives of modern society are indications that an individual's heart is not in touch with Christ's lordship, but has succumbed to the delusions of the devil. Pride in knowledge is the point of attack.

3:1–18 Peter reminds us about Christ's second coming (vv. 3–9) and how we should live in the light of that event (vv. 10–18).

3:1 Peter returns to his exhortation of the believers, addressing them as beloved (vv. 8, 14, 17). this second epistle: It is natural to assume that the first epistle Peter implies here is 1 Peter. However, 1 Peter is not really a letter of reminder, as Peter suggests here (1:12–15). In addition, 1 Peter was sent to a wide range of readers living in five different provinces (1 Pet. 1:1), while this letter seems to be addressed to a single church (or nearby churches) whose people and circumstances Peter knows well. For these reasons, many believe that the first letter referred to here was one written to the same readers as 2 Peter, but now lost to us (see Paul's reference to an earlier letter in 1 Cor. 5:9). In both letters to this congregation, Peter sought to awaken his readers' pure minds to the dangers of phony leaders who claimed to be Christians.

3:2 words which were spoken before: The only way Peter's readers could recognize the errors of the heretical teachers was to compare their teaching with the teaching of the holy prophets and apostles. As Peter had already reminded his readers in 1:21, "holy men" spoke words given to them by the Holy Spirit, which were therefore utterly reliable. These completely reliable words are in the Bible, God's Word. The commandment of the apostles probably refers to the new commandment Jesus gave, that believers should love one another (John 13:34, 35). As the apostles developed that in their writings, it is clear that such love was to be pure and clean, free from sexual wrongdoing (1 Tim. 1:5).

3:3 A primary motivation for righteous living was the expectation of Christ's return (1 John 3:2, 3). However, the unforeseen delay in that coming would soon produce scoffers who would mock the coming, because they desired to live in ways that fulfilled their self-indulgent desires. The suggestion is that the scoffers here and the heretical teachers of ch. 2 are one and the same. The apostles had predicted that such scoffing would occur (2 Tim. 3:1–5; James 5:3; Jude 18). The last days refers to the present age (Heb. 1:2). Throughout the centuries, scoffers have denied the Second Coming whenever hedonism and humanism have prevailed in the church.

Looking Toward Eternity

As Peter neared the end of his life, he wrote a letter in which he offers some insight into the nature of time and eternity. He beckons us to view time in both thousand-year units and as mere days (2 Pet. 3:8), recalling the beginnings of creation (3:4–6). He also projects into the future, when judgment will be rendered and new heavens and earth will be home to those who fear God (3:10–13). Peter reminds us that God values a day as much as a thousand years, affirming the importance of the here and now (3:8). But he also affirms God's activity long before we came on the scene (3:9).

Peter's perspective challenges us to live with a view toward eternity and values that last—purity, holiness, and righteousness (3:11, 14). We need to avoid getting caught up in the here and now and losing sight of our eternal destiny. Neither the joys of today nor the problems of this week can quite compare with what God has prepared for us in eternity. Peter urges us to stick with the basics of the faith and resist the fleeting enticements offered in this present moment (3:17, 18).

3:4 all things continue: The basis for denying the supernatural reappearance of Jesus is that nothing of that nature has occurred in the past. Several Christian and even secular documents of the first two centuries report the dismay that spread among Christians when the promise of Jesus about coming soon seemed unfulfilled. The fathers who fell asleep refers to the OT patriarchs.

3:5, 6 they willfully forget: The scoffing teachers would choose to overlook events such as creation and the Flood. The people of Noah's time did not believe in Noah's warning because they had never experienced a flood. They forgot, as the false teachers later would, that God created the entire universe by His word, something that they also had not experienced. Just as creation was by His word, the world is being sustained by His word. Likewise, the world's judgment and destruction would be by His word. God is in control, no matter what happens to this world.

3:7 by the same word: Peter expands his prophetic look from the world that then existed (v. 6) to the heavens and the earth that now exist. Water was the chief element in the world before the Flood; fire is the destructive force in the present universe. But as the water of the pre-flood world was under the control of God, so the fire of the present age is kept preserved (in restraint) by that same word. The fire is just as literal as the water was in v. 5. Since the explosion of the hydrogen bomb, people have little reason to doubt this prediction. We cannot take for granted that our environment will continue to support human life forever. Everywhere Scripture predicts a coming day of judgment when the ungodly will be made to submit forever to the horror they have chosen in existence without God.

3:8–10 Again Peter reminds his readers that there is something that they must keep in mind when thinking of the parousia of Christ. First, vv. 1–7 have assured his readers that the scoffing is unfounded, based on the desire of the scoffers not wanting to know the truth (v. 5) and one day their faith in the truths of God will be vindicated when God, under His own timetable, destroys this world with the ungodly. There is considerable difference between the question "where is the promise of His coming?" and "when is the Lord coming?" The former is of the unbeliever and the latter is of a perplexed believer. Peter provides a fourfold answer to his questioner regarding the delay of the Second Coming.

3:8 a thousand years: God will surely accomplish His purposes and promises, even though it may appear that He is slow in doing so. His timing is always perfect.

3:9 The delay of God's judgment is not due to slackness, but to the Lord's longsuffering attitude toward His people. not willing that any should perish: This text does not teach that God actually decrees that all will be saved (universalism). The reference here is not to God's decree, but to His desire. Obviously everything that a sovereign God decrees will occur. Here Peter is describing the sovereign God's desire that all people would turn to Him and turn away from unprofitable lives (1 Tim. 2:4).

3:10 Day of the Lord here describes the end-time events, the Second Coming (descriptions of the end times are found in Dan. 9:24–27; 1 Thess. 5:2; 2 Thess. 2:1–12). At the end of this age in the day of the Lord's judgment, the heavens will pass away with a great noise and the elements will melt, presumably by fire (v. 12). The description that Peter gives of the judgment of God on the old heavens and old earth especially speak to our current age when we have seen the awesome destructive power of the atom. Some have thought that Peter is prophesying of the destruction of the earth by atomic warfare. Something much more destructive than what humans can do is in view here.

3:11 what manner of persons: The primary purpose of prophetic teaching is not to satisfy our curiosity but to motivate us to change our lives. Rather than working for things that will ultimately be destroyed, we should work for things that are eternal.

3:12–14 Verse 12 continues to mark the contrast in the way the Day is viewed by the ungodly and the godly; they tremble because it means punishment and destruction, while the Christian is looking for and hastening the coming of the day. Looking for (Gk. prosdokao) is used in this context with the sense of "anticipation" with the word hastening (Gk. pseudo) which means "hurry," or "get busy," and is translated "be diligent" in v. 14. The hope or expectation of the Christian, new heavens and a new earth in which righteousness dwells, is the basis for the exhortation to blamelessness and purity of conduct. There will be no false teachers in heaven.

3:15, 16 Note that Peter equates the letters of Paul with the rest of the Scriptures, indicating that Peter considered the apostle Paul's writings to be the Word of God. Note that Peter considers Paul's writings on the end times to be hard to understand. This should be a comfort to each of us who attempts to interpret the writings of Paul on the coming of Christ. Even Peter found them difficult. Because of this, however, Peter says some people who are untaught and unstable destroy themselves. Untaught refers to one whose mind is untrained and undisciplined in habits of thought. Unstable refers to one whose conduct is not properly established on the truths of God's Word.

(Gk. gnosis) (1:5; 3:18; Eph. 3:19; Phil. 3:8; Col. 2:3) Strong’s #1108: This Greek word for knowledge usually connotes progressive, experiential, and personal knowledge; it is knowledge that can grow. We need to grow in our actual, personal knowledge of Jesus Christ; such knowledge is the greatest protection against false teachings. One of the prominent themes in this epistle is Peter’s exhortation to the believers to attain a fuller, more thorough knowledge of Jesus Christ (1:8; 2:20; 3:18).

3:17, 18 Peter admonishes his readers that since they know truth, they should depart from the error of the wicked and grow in the grace and knowledge of the Lord.

The First Epistle of John

PART OF THE ARROGANCE OF HUMAN NATURE is to think that we know more than others do. In this letter, the apostle John addresses the problem of false teachers who were making lofty claims about their knowledge regarding the deity and nature of Christ. John counters their false claims by reminding his readers of the eyewitness accounts of the apostles, including himself. Jesus Christ came in human flesh, lived a human life, died, and then was raised from the dead. He was fully human and fully God. Anything else being taught by others was false. In this letter, John sounded the alarm: False teaching could not be tolerated. Falsehoods would lead to immorality, and immorality would lead to eternal death. In contrast, the truth would demonstrate itself in love, and love would lead to eternal life. For John, what one believed truly mattered.

John most likely wrote this letter with two purposes in mind—one pastoral and one polemical. John's pastoral purpose was to promote fellowship (1:3). But for the believers to have true fellowship, they needed to understand the true nature of God (1:5; 2:29; 4:7, 8). Thus, the pastoral purpose naturally leads to the polemical purpose (2:26), which was to protect his readers against the deceptive ideas of false teachers. If the believers were deceived by false doctrine, they would eventually lose their unity, which is possible only in the love of Christ. Evidently some deceivers had arisen among the believers (2:18, 19, 26). If Christians could sort out truth from falsehood, they would be able to maintain their unity in the faith and have an opportunity to show love to their fellow believers (3:11). For John, a person's behavior was naturally a result of that person's belief.

In accordance with John's purpose, fellowship dominates the first portion of this letter (1:5—2:27), while assurance of salvation dominates the remainder. Key concepts in the letter include eternal life, knowing God, and abiding in the faith. In addition, John develops theological ideas in this letter through explicit contrasts, such as walking in light or in darkness, children of God or of the devil, life or death, love or hate. With these contrasts John was attempting to draw a clear line between true and false teachers. John was writing to believers who were dealing with a particular type of false teaching, the contagious heresy of early Gnosticism. He wrote this letter to encourage them to abide in what they had heard from the beginning so that they could maintain their fellowship with God and their love for fellow believers. In short, he exhorted them to make their belief in Christ evident to all, so that correct doctrine could be identified by their righteous life and their wholehearted love for others.

Gnosticism was a problem that threatened the church in Asia Minor during the second century A.D. Gnosticism was a teaching that blended Eastern mysticism with Greek dualism (which claimed that the spirit is completely good, but matter is completely evil). This teaching was present in the church in a seminal form during the latter years of the first century. By the middle of the second century it had become a fully developed theological system, which included Gnostic gospels and epistles. John recognized the danger of Gnosticism and wrote to counteract its influence before it could sweep through the churches of Asia Minor. Based on the concept that matter is evil and spirit is good, some Gnostics concluded that if God was truly good He could not have created the material universe. Therefore, some lesser god had to have created it. According to them, the God of the OT was this lesser god. The dualistic views of Gnosticism were also reflected in the prevalent belief that Jesus did not have a physical body. This teaching, called Docetism, claimed that Jesus only appeared to have a human body and never actually suffered pain and death on the Cross.

Another heresy that John addressed in this letter and personally confronted at Ephesus was Cerinthianism. This heresy taught that Jesus was just a man upon whom the “Christ” descended at His baptism, that the Christ then departed from Jesus just before His crucifixion, and that thus the spiritual Christ did not really suffer and die for humanity’s sins on the Cross, but only appeared to do so.

There are several indications that John was addressing these heresies in this epistle. Note the use of expressions like “which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled” (1:1); “every spirit that confesses that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh is of God” (4:2); and “He who came by water and blood” (5:6). All of these phrases use explicit and vivid language to describe the Incarnation, the truth that Jesus is both completely God and completely human.

The author of this letter is understood to be John, the beloved apostle. Though he does not identify himself in this letter, the similarity of vocabulary and writing style between this book and the Gospel of John argues convincingly that both were written by the same person. The writings of the early church fathers, from Ignatius to Polycarp, also identify John as the author of this letter. Furthermore, in the epistle's first few verses (1:1–4), the author places himself among the eyewitnesses of the earthly life of Christ, as one who literally saw and touched "the Word of life." Obviously such a description fits an apostle but not a second-generation church leader. Finally, the author virtually calls himself an apostle (the "we" of 1:1–3; 4:14 seems to refer to the apostles).

Although some have argued that the epistle was written before the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, a later first-century date allows for the appearance of the ideas that later developed into Gnosticism, ideas that John was probably addressing in this letter. On the other hand, the letter could not have been written later than the end of the first century, when John died. Also, the evidence of early second-century writers who knew of the epistle and quoted from it demonstrates that it was written prior to then. Thus, 1 John probably was written just a few years before the Book of Revelation.

In determining the date of the writing, several factors should be considered. First, the tone of the book and especially the attitude of the author toward the readers suggest an older person addressing a younger generation. Second, Irenaeus indicates that John lived in Ephesus and wrote to the churches of Asia. John's letters to the churches of Asia in Revelation (Rev. 2; 3) substantiate Irenaeus's comment. It is natural to conclude that 1 John is directed to these same believers. Third, Paul visited Ephesus several times between A.D. 53 and 56, using the city as the center of his evangelism efforts. Timothy was in Ephesus with Paul around A.D. 63 and was still there when Paul wrote him around A.D. 67. There is no indication that Timothy and John were at Ephesus at the same time, so John must have visited Ephesus after Timothy's departure. This would put the date of the writing of 1 John after A.D. 67 but before A.D. 98. A date around A.D. 90 seems reasonable.

Commentary

1:1–4 These verses show similarities to the prologue of the Gospel of John (John 1:1–18). However, while the Gospel of John emphasizes the metaphysical nature of Jesus, the Word, these verses emphasize the personal experience of the apostles with the incarnate Word. The memory of Jesus Christ burned in the mind of John as he reflected on the three and one-half years that he and the other disciples were with the Lord. Now he wanted to be sure that the churches under his care enjoyed fellowship with the resurrected Lord and with other disciples. Verses 1–4 also introduce the message of the book. The Prologue contains a purpose statement in v. 3 which some see as controlling the message of the epistle, making fellowship the central issue which John addresses. In contrast, most scholars see 5:13 as the epistle's purpose statement, emphasizing the need of belief in Christ for eternal life. Actually, both purposes are worked out in the epistle.

1:1 That which could refer to (1) the revelation about Christ, (2) the teachings of Christ, (3) the eternal life manifested by Christ, or (4) Christ Himself. The words heard, seen, looked upon, and handled indicate that Christ Himself is the likely subject. The beginning may refer to creation or to the beginning of Christ's ministry. If it is creation, it is like the statement about Christ and creation in the Gospel (John 1:1). However, the context makes it likely that the reference is to the beginning of Christ's ministry, similar to 2:7, 24; 3:11. We is probably a reference to the apostles. The Word of life may refer to Jesus, who is the Word (John 1:1) and the life (John 14:6), or possibly to the gospel message and all that it says about eternal life. Most likely, the reference is to Jesus, the Word who brings life. This life is a gift from God, a gift that cannot be earned or taken from us.

1:2 The life that was manifested to the apostles is now declared by them. The life was not hidden or obscured so that few, if any, could find it. Rather, this life was made known openly and had its origin in God the Father. God had provided truth about Himself in nature and through the prophets of old, but the revelation in His Son (Heb. 1:1, 2) is God's finest and clearest presentation of Himself. This personal relationship with Jesus did not give John an undue advantage over Christians, even those to whom he wrote, who never had a physical encounter with Christ. John's experience with Jesus was one of revelation and faith (Matt. 16:17; 1 Pet. 1:7–12). We must not think that to have known Jesus personally would bring greater faith in Him. Many of those who actually saw and heard Jesus rejected Him. Acceptance of Christ is an act of faith, a reception of revelation from God in Scripture. Even when the personal experience with Christ was years away, the apostles and those who knew Jesus held to Him by faith, not by sight (John 20:29). God insured that the revelation of Christ had guaranteed testimony through the written gospels.

1:3 The primary reason John writes is to provide his readers with an understanding of what they must do to have fellowship with the apostles and God. Fellowship carries both the idea of a positive relationship that people share and participation in a common interest or goal. The fellowship John promotes is not only vertical, between believer and God. He writes that they may have fellowship "with us." Since John considered his readers to be Christians (2:12–14), we should not interpret fellowship as equal to being a Christian.

1:4 A Christian can have no real joy except in a proper relationship with God and others (Pss. 16:11; 51:12; John 15:11). If the false teachers against whom John writes should have undue impact on his readers, they may fail to maintain their close bond and Christian joy. Thus, he writes to give them the truth they need to sustain their relationship with the people of God and with the apostles.

1:5 God is light by nature, in His essential being, just as He is Spirit (John 4:24) and love (4:8). Light refers to God's moral character. no darkness at all: God is holy, untouched by any evil or sin. Because God is light, those who desire fellowship with Him must also be pure. At all stresses the absoluteness of John's emphasis. This is crucial to the thrust of this book.

1:6 Verses 6–10 contain three contrasts between words and works, or saying one thing and doing another. Following each contrast is the result of the action. If we say: The first false claim is to have fellowship with God while failing to reflect His moral character. Walk refers to a way of life or daily practice. To walk in darkness means to live contrary to the moral character of God, to live a sinful life. To claim fellowship with God without living a moral life or practicing the truth is to live a lie, since God cannot compromise His holiness to accommodate sin.

1:7 To walk in the light is to live in such a way that one is enlightened by the truth of who God is. John did not say “according” to the light, which would demand sinless perfection. with one another: When a Christian’s conduct reflects God’s moral character, then real fellowship is possible with other Christians. But it may be that one another refers to fellowship with God rather than fellowship with other believers. Our fellowship with God is dependent on walking in God’s light, where sin is revealed. Such revelation enables us to stay clean before Him. Only the blood of Jesus Christ can cleanse us from all sin, making it possible for imperfect believers to have fellowship with a holy God.

Freedom from Guilt

No one likes to feel guilty. Like an unwelcome guest, guilt shows up at the worst possible time and does not go away no matter how much you wish it would. Yet the truth is that we need guilt. It is the only proper response to any offense, whether a selfish thought or a premeditated murder. Even a nonbeliever wants a burglar to feel remorse for his theft. Why? Because he should. Guilt exposes the truth that we wish to avoid: we have all sinned. John puts it this way: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (1:8).

But John does not leave us with this dismal picture of ourselves. Instead, he goes on to paint a glorious portrait of a forgiving God. This is our only hope: "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1:9). Guilt does more than just deliver the distressing news. It unlocks the door to forgiveness. Progress, change, reform, and most important of all, God's forgiveness all start with confession.

Confession works against the worst part of human nature, the part that imagines itself to be better than it really is. What person has not felt, "I'm not perfect, but I'm not as bad as my next-door neighbor"? This mindset always stops short of confessing; it would rather ignore or ease feelings of guilt than admit them. But only open confession of our sins will completely cleanse us. Only when we admit that we are sinners, unworthy of God's grace, can we make a fresh start.

C. S. Lewis said that "no man knows how bad he is till he has tried very hard to be good." Similarly, we can never know how much we need freedom until we try to unload our burden of sin. Yet God's forgiveness will liberate us to begin anew on the path of righteousness.

1:8 The second false claim (v. 6) is that we have no sin. The idea would be that our sin nature is completely gone. To say this is to deceive ourselves (2 Chr. 6:36; John 9:41). The fact that we are not conscious of sin does not mean we are without it. It is so easy to cover over sin (Prov. 28:13). We will not deceive others; they usually see us clearly. Our problem is not seeing ourselves for who we really are. Every Christian can identify with David because he is a prime example of the believer who committed great sin but failed to see his sinfulness. He tried to carry on as the Lord's anointed one without the Lord's blessing. When Nathan the prophet confronted him, he was indignant at the man who took and killed the other man's sheep, yet could not see himself in Nathan's story (2 Sam. 11; 12). The truth is God's revelation, which says just the opposite. To have no sin is to have no need of a Savior, which would make the coming of Jesus unnecessary.

1:9 Though John uses we primarily to refer to himself and the other apostles as eyewitnesses of Christ (v. 1), here the term includes all believers who confess (acknowledge) sin. God says that we are sinners in need of forgiveness. To confess is to agree with Him, to admit that we are sinners in need of His mercy. If a believer confesses his or her specific sins to God, He will cleanse all unrighteousness from that person. The believer need not agonize over sin of which he is not aware. Forgiveness and cleansing are guaranteed because God is faithful to His promises. Those promises are legitimate because God is just. God can maintain His perfect character and yet forgive us because of the perfect and righteous sacrifice of Jesus, His own Son (2:2). Our salvation costs us nothing; it is a gift of God. But salvation is costly; it cost God the death of His Son. Since John is speaking to believers, the forgiveness here is not for their initial justification-salvation. His concern is sanctification-salvation. Christ accomplished the first portion of our salvation on the Cross while on earth (John 17:4). The second part of our salvation is before the throne of God, where Christ makes intercession for us (Heb. 4:15, 16; 7:23–28). the sins: The Greek text does not really say "our" sins, as is indicated by the italics in the English text. Literally the text reads, "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us the sins." It is probably that the sins of which John speaks are those we confess, not just any and every sin we commit. John proceeds on to say that Christ also, along with this forgiveness, cleanses us from all unrighteousness in our hearts. We should be careful to distinguish this family forgiveness of the Father for His children from the forgiveness we received at our redemption. This passage is written to those who are already saved from eternal judgment due to their sins but now are children of God in need of forgiveness for failures in their children walk.

Communicating Christ to Others

What exactly does it mean to "witness"? Many people associate the term with street evangelism. But street preachers can sometimes alienate people, although the boldness of their faith is acknowledged by all. What else, then, is needed for someone to be an effective representative for Christ?

John was one of Jesus' closest associates. In this first chapter of his first letter, John notes several basic elements of what it means to communicate Christ to others: • Our message grows out of our knowledge and experience of Christ (1 John 1:1–4).

• We make clear to others what we have heard from Christ (1:5).

• We live out our faith on a continuous basis, thereby avoiding lives that contradict our message (1:6–7). "Walk" is a metaphor for living used often in the NT (John 8:12; Rom. 4:12; Col. 3:7).

• When we fall short (as we all will, 1 John 1:10), we own up to it, avoiding deception about our walk or Christ's work (1:8–10).

Truthfulness, clarity, consistency, and honesty should be basic qualities of Christ's followers. They are things that last in the eyes of God, and they matter most to those evaluating the faith. We should offer nothing less.

1:10 we have not sinned: We may admit to having a sin nature while still denying any personal sin and therefore any need for confession. The Greek verb translated we have not sinned indicates a denial in the past that continues to the present. Unlike v. 8, which speaks of the guilt of sin or a sinful nature, this verse is about the denial of any particular sins. To make this denial is to call God a liar because God's word emphasizes the penetrating nature of sin (Rom. 7:14–24). Denying that sin is in us indicates that God's word is not in us. In other words, a person who denies committing sinful acts does not have the Word of God changing his or her life.

(Gk. parakletos) (2:1; John 14:16, 26; 15:26; 16:7) Strong’s #3875: The Greek word literally means “one who is called to our side.” This could be a comforter, a consoler, or a defense attorney. In John 14:26 and 15:26, the Holy Spirit is called our parakletos, our Comforter. Here Christ is called our parakletos, our Advocate. While the Holy Spirit works within us to comfort and help us, Christ represents us before the Father in heaven. The two paracletes work together in perfect harmony (Rom. 8:26, 27, 34).

2:1 With fatherly concern, the aged apostle John addresses his readers affectionately as children. He is the aged apostle with fatherly concern. He uses this Greek word seven times in this letter (vv. 1, 12, 28; 3:7, 18; 4:4; 5:21) and once in his Gospel (John 13:33). He also uses two similar words, tekna in John 1:12; 11:52; 1 John 3:2, 10 (twice); 5:2; 2 John 1, 4, 13 and paidia in 1 John 2:13, 18. that you may not sin: John's statements about sin (1:8, 10) were designed to make believers aware of sin's ever-present danger and to put them on guard against it. Lifeboats are on a ship not to make it sink but in case it does. According to Greek grammar, the if before anyone sins carries the added sense of "and it is assumed that we all do." This statement is not an encouragement to sin but a warning to all Christians to be on guard against sinful tendencies. Advocate: This Greek word is also used of the Holy Spirit in John 14:16, referring to a Helper for us in understanding the truth of God's Word. Here the word describes the intercessory work of the Son. When we sin, Jesus represents us as our Advocate with the Father to plead our cause in heaven's court. Satan, on the other hand, is the accuser of believers (Zech. 3; Rev. 12:10).

2:2 Propitiation brings about the merciful removal of guilt through divine forgiveness. In the Greek OT (the Septuagint), the Greek term for propitiation was used for the sacrificial mercy seat on which the high priest placed the blood of the Israelites' sacrifices (Ex. 25:17–22; 1 Chr. 28:2). On seeing these sacrifices the righteous anger of God was turned aside from Israel. Sometimes the term is understood by people to refer to the appeasement of a wrathful god who can be "bribed" with gifts by his devotees. This is foreign to the biblical perspective. But the word does indicate that God's anger against sin must be satisfied. In coming into the world as a man, God became the receiver of His own wrath and the means to providing escape from that wrath (the just and justifier, Rom. 3:26). Jesus Christ became this sacrifice in His death and satisfied God's wrath on the Cross. The sacrifice of Jesus' sinless life is so effective that it can supply forgiveness for the whole world (2 Cor. 5:14, 15, 19; Heb. 2:9). Christ's death is sufficient for all, but efficient only for those who believe in Christ. Not everyone will be saved, but Jesus offers salvation to all (Rev. 22:17).

2:3–11 In this section, three false claims are exposed, each introduced by the phrase "he who says."

2:3 we know Him: The NT speaks of knowing God in two senses. A person who has trusted Christ knows Him (John 17:3), that is to say, has met Him. Someone who has previously met the Lord can also come to know Him intimately (Phil. 3:10). In this verse John is talking about knowing the Lord intimately. In all of 1 John, the apostle uses "know" in this second sense. For example, he says everyone who loves is born of God and knows God (4:7), yet he says not to love does not mean that a person is not born of God, only that he or she does not know God (4:8). Therefore, in 1 John, knowing God is knowing Him intimately. Assurance that a believer has really gotten to know the Lord intimately is his or her attitude of wanting to obey God's commands (John 14:15, 20, 23, 24; 15:10–17).

2:4 does not keep His commandments: Disobedience shows a lack of personal knowledge of Christ. To claim to know Christ while disobeying His Word is to lie. truth is not in him: Not only does the conflict of word and action make a person a liar, but it also shows that the truth is not a controlling influence in that person's life (1:6, 8, 10).

2:5 but: In contrast to being a liar, keeping His commandments demonstrates a valid relationship with Christ and shows that God's love is expressed fully in the Christian. perfected: This verb expresses the idea of maturity and completeness. The love of God is perfected may mean one of two things: (1) The believer's love for God grows as he or she keeps God's Word, or (2) as the believer pursues fellowship and obedience, God's love for him or her is more fully completed. The second is indicated here. The believer begins to know by experience that he or she is in Him. As John explains in the next verse, in Him means "abiding in Him." Word is a synonym for commandment in vv. 3, 4. The love of God here may refer to (1) God's love for men, (2) a godly kind of love, or (3) a person's love for God.

2:6 abides in Him: Abiding is habitual obedience. It has the idea of settling down in Christ or resting in Him. It is evidenced by a life modeled after Christ. A Christian may fail to abide in Christ as evidenced by His repeated commands to abide in John 15:4–10. ought … to walk: The admonition to live by the teaching of Jesus reveals that this conformity comes from us. Slaves must follow the commands of their masters or they will be punished. Employees need to do their work to keep their jobs. However, the Christian as a child of God ought to obey God because of a sincere desire to do so. It should be a joy to follow in the footsteps of the One who died for us.

2:7 old commandment: In vv. 3–6, John insists that the test of personal intimacy and knowledge of God is obedience to Christ's commandments. But which ones? John emphasizes that he has no new obligation in mind, but rather what the believers have known from the beginning (v. 24; 1:1; 3:11; 2 John 5). This may look back to Jesus' command to love one another in John 15, or it may refer to the Mosaic law (Lev. 19:18). They had heard this commandment from the beginning of their Christian lives.

2:8 The new commandment that John refers to is love (v.10). It may be that John is simply repeating the statement of Christ in John 13:34, where Christ calls this a "new" commandment He gave to the disciples. Moses said, "Love your neighbor as yourself" (Lev. 18:19). Jesus said, "Love one another as I have loved you (John 13:34). This is the basis on which the world will know that we belong to Christ. It is the Christian's greatest apologetic. It is the divine imperative for missions. It is absolutely basic to the advance of Christ's kingdom. true in Him and in you: The command to love reached its truest and fullest expression in the life of Christ. He demonstrated what true love is by coming into our world and giving His life for us. Christians should follow His supreme example. We know that the new commandment is in effect because the darkness is passing away, and the true light is already shining. This new commandment of love belongs to the new age begun by Christ.

2:9 Brother here refers to a fellow believer. Can a person be a believer in Jesus Christ and hate his brother at the same time? Apparently so, for John sees his readers as fellow Christians. Moreover, there is no possibility that unbelievers do not hate fellow spiritual brothers. Unfortunately, it is not only possible, but often practiced. Biblical history provides examples of believers in the true God who acted like unbelievers in their attitudes and actions. For example, King David was guilty of murder which is the final expression of hate (Matt. 5:21, 22). But we can no longer harbor hatred and say we walk with God. If the Christian has a proper relationship with the Christ of love, he will love his brother.

2:10 Him refers to the loving Christian. He does not cause his brother to commit sin. Him can also be translated it, meaning that the light provides an environment which helps the Christian avoid committing sin.

2:11 he who hates his brother: Hating one's brother opposes the teaching of Christ to love one another. The idea that one could hate a brother and yet claim fellowship with God shows the utter darkness that has blinded the Christian to the truth. The believer who hates is in darkness and not light, in sin and not in fellowship with God. does not know where he is going: A believer who hates his brother has lost his spiritual perspective and sense of direction (2 Pet. 1:9). The person who loves his brother walks in the light of God and does not have the inward "stumbling block" that causes him to fall into all sorts of sin.

2:12–14 These verses contain two sets of three items, describing John's readers as little children, fathers, and young men. These three classifications are not physical age groups or spiritual stages. Rather, it seems that each group is a reference to all of John's readers. For example, viewed as little children, they know their sins are forgiven. Viewed as fathers, they not only have a relationship with God, but they also have knowledge of God that comes from obedience to His commandments. Viewed as young men, they are strong. The repetition of the triplet is for emphasis. John articulates that the purpose for writing this epistle was their spiritual progress. The second reference to children (v. 13) should be translated as have written rather than in the present tense, leaving the three groups balanced.

2:15–17 Having strongly affirmed their spiritual attainments, John now warns them of the dangers that surround believers, no matter how advanced their Christian walk. Love of the world denies a love for our holy God and identifies us with a system doomed to destruction.

2:15 Do not love the world may be rephrased as "stop loving the world." John's readers were acting in a way that was inconsistent with the relationship with Christ. World here is the morally evil system opposed to all that God is and holds dear. In this sense, the world is the satanic system opposing Christ's kingdom on this earth (v. 16; 3:1; 4:4; 5:19; John 12:31; 15:18; Eph. 6:11, 12; James 4:4). love of the Father: This refers either to the love felt toward God in response to His love or to God's love felt toward us. More likely, the former is the meaning. It is not possible to love the world and love God at the same time (James 4:4).

2:16 the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life: The world is characterized by these three lusts, which have been interpreted as corresponding to the three different ways Eve was tempted in the garden (Gen. 3:6), or the three different temptations Jesus experienced (Luke 4:1–12). However, the correspondences are not close enough to make it certain that John was alluding to either of these. Instead, John was probably making a short list of the different ways believers could be lured away from loving God. The lust of the flesh refers to desires for sinful sensual pleasure. The lust of the eyes refers to covetousness or materialism. The pride of life refers to being proud about one's position in this world.

2:17 passing away: John highlights the brevity of life. To be consumed with this life is to be unprepared for the next. What a tragedy to invest our resources in what will not last.

2:18–23 John now goes behind the world system to the devil, the god of this world, and his spokesmen, the Antichrist. The antichrist is revealed by his denial of Jesus as the Christ. These verses do not teach that anyone who leaves a given church is not a Christian. Rather, those who leave the apostolic teachings and deny the deity of Jesus are opposed to Christ, even if they claim the name Christian.

2:18 last hour: John views the rise of those who deny the truth of Christ from within the Christian community as an indication of the beginning of the end of all things. We should not understand hour as signifying a duration of time but a kind of time. God's countdown has begun, but He does not reckon time as we do (2 Pet. 3:8). Any attempt to date the ending of the world or Christ's coming is doomed to failure and often brings ridicule to the proclamation of Christ. Antichrists is a combination of two Greek words: anti, meaning "instead of" or "against," and christos, meaning "anointed one." Antichrists most likely means those who seek to take the place of Christ. The many antichrists are the false teachers John opposed in this letter (v. 22; 4:3; 2 John 7). They are reminiscent of the false christs Jesus told the disciples about (Matt. 24:24). They are forerunners of the future Antichrist, also known as the beast in the Book of Revelation (Rev. 13:1–18), who will exalt himself above God (Dan. 9:27; 11:31; 12:11; Matt. 24:15). As we are waiting for the any-moment return of Jesus Christ, there will be a growing prevalence of the counterfeits (Matt. 24:4, 5, 23–26).

2:19 When the false teachers went out from among the believers, they revealed that they did not belong to the Christian community; they were never true believers. they … us: In the opening verses of this book, John made a distinction between we and you (1:1, 3). We, the apostles, were the eyewitnesses of Christ; you were the readers. That same distinction is probably maintained here (v. 20). Thus, when John says these false teachers were not of us, he means they did not agree with the teaching of the apostles. These antichrists had departed from the apostolic churches, and their attitudes and actions were not of the apostolic persuasion. If they had been in harmony with the apostles, they would have remained in fellowship with them (1:1–3).

“anointing”

(Gk. chrisma) (2:20; 2 Cor. 1:21) Strong’s #5545: The Greek term chrisma is related to the title Christ, which means “Anointed One,” and is used in the Greek OT (the Septuagint) for the anointing of a high priest (Ex. 29:17). The anointing here depicts the impartation of the Holy Spirit to a person (Is. 61:1). As Christians, now indwelt by the Holy Spirit, we are joined to the Anointed One and share in His anointing (2 Cor. 1:21, 22). Therefore, we can know all things with respect to truth and falsehood. Because the Spirit lives within us, we know all that we need to know in order to resist the temptations of false teachers and to live godly lives in this world.

2:20, 21 Anointing here refers either to the Holy Spirit or to Scripture. This anointing is the protection that believers have against the false teachers. John says that these believers are in contrast to the ones who went out (v. 19), who were representatives of the Antichrist. The true Anointed One, Jesus, also has representatives who are anointed. Since only God knows everything, the phrase all things must be limited in some way. In this context, all things is all the truth the believers needed to resist the antichrists (v. 21). One of the main heresies the first-century church faced was Gnosticism, whose followers claimed to have secret knowledge of the truth that led to salvation. Here John was opposing this teaching by asserting that all believers knew the truth. As an apostle, John was merely reminding them of what they already knew, not acting as an exclusive source of the truth.

2:22, 23 Denying the deity of Jesus is the same as denying the Father and the Son. In John’s epistles, denying that Jesus is the Christ includes denying that He came in the flesh (1:1–3; 4:3; 2 John 7). A person cannot worship God while denying Jesus’ full deity and full humanity.

The Promise of Eternal Life

From beauty creams to vitamins to aerobics, many people today are pursuing a "fountain of youth." They want to avoid growing old, perhaps because it leads to the final, ultimate reality, death. That reality is so painful to most people that they won't even consider it. They make little or no preparation for their death and its aftermath.

John offers the one way that a person can actually do something about his or her death. He speaks of a revolutionary promise that God has made—we can live happily forever (1 John 2:24, 25)! God makes that promise of eternal life for those who put their faith in Jesus Christ.

2:24 let that abide in you: If John's readers would abide in the truths of the gospel, then they would abide in the Son and in the Father. Again, this is not a reference to eternal life, which is a gift, but to proper fellowship with the Son and the Father. By allowing Scripture to impact our lives, we abide in Christ and have fellowship with God. The message they heard from the beginning was that Jesus is the Christ (v. 22), the Son of God (v. 22) who had come in the flesh (1:1–3). If John's readers would resist the lies of the antichrists and hold on to the truth they had been taught from the beginning, they would continue abiding in fellowship with the Son and the Father.

2:25 Eternal life speaks of both the quality of life in the present, a life filled with the joy of God, and the promise of a future life in eternity.

2:26 Those who try to deceive you refers to false teachers, or antichrists. You indicates that it is possible for believers to be deceived by false teaching.

2:27 We are to base our walk with the Lord on the truth He has given us. Believers who know God's standards and desires for us but fail to put these truths into practice in their lives will also not mature in Christ (Heb. 5:11—6:12).

2:28—4:6 Because God is righteous, the divine sonship of Christians is revealed through righteous living, which includes love of fellow believers and orthodox belief in the deity of Jesus. This section moves from John's emphasis on fellowship to its basis, assurance of salvation.

2:28 John has been urging his readers to let what they have heard from the beginning abide in them (vv. 24–27). Here he advises them to abide in Christ Himself. If we abide in Christ we will avoid embarrassment when He returns. ashamed: The shame is the result of not having had a lifestyle of obedience when Christ returns.

2:29 Since God is righteous, those who practice righteousness will be recognized as being born of God. This verse does not say that everyone who is born of God practices righteousness. Believers can walk in darkness and sin (1:6, 8; 2:1). The point here is that when a child exhibits the nature of his or her father, he or she is perceived as the child of the father.

3:1 Behold what manner of love: John stands in amazement of God's love. But the greater amazement and appreciation is for the fact that God's love is expressed to human beings, that Christians are included in His family. God loves all believers, the weak as well as the strong. John describes Jesus on the night of His betrayal as "having loved His own who were in the world," and writes that "He loved them to the end" (John 13:1). God's love is in stark contrast to the love of the world. The world loves those who love them, while God loves even those who disobey Him.

3:2 When John admits ignorance of what we shall be when Jesus appears, his statement should cause us to be humble and cautious about detailed pronouncements of future events and the nature of our heavenly existence. God has chosen not to tell us many things either because we would not understand or because it might distract us from our responsibilities as believers (Acts 1:6–8). be like Him: Though we do not know all the specifics of our future existence, we do know that we will have a body like Christ's (Phil. 3:21). Believers will put on immortality and become free from the sin nature that presently plagues us.

3:3 Everyone who has the hope of seeing Christ and being like Him (v. 2) realizes that Christ is morally pure. This realization helps a person pursue purity even more.

3:4–9 The two classes of people described are those whose lifestyles are characterized by righteousness and those who are characterized by sin. A vital relationship with God is revealed by a righteous lifestyle. The practice of sin denies a relationship with Jesus since He came to take away sin.

3:4 The sin described in this verse is not occasional sin but a consistent lifestyle of sin. Lawlessness is not the absence of law but active rebellion against the law.

IN CONTEXT

Sinless Perfection?

Most followers of Christ would agree that they should pursue the highest moral integrity that they can. But John's statements in 1 John 3:6 appear to raise that standard to the point of sinless perfection. In fact, if the person who sins "has neither seen [Christ] nor known Him," then what hope is there for believers who fail?

Here is a case where the English language fails us. In English the word "sins" appears absolute and final: one sin and you're cut off from God. However, the form of the Greek verb here (hamartanei) conveys a sense of continuous action: "No one who abides in Christ makes a habit of continually sinning." The point is that true believers diminish their old patterns of sin as they grow in Christ, replacing them with new patterns of faith and love.

The situation is similar to losing weight by changing one's eating habits. No one obtains instant health, but over time and by sticking to a disciplined diet, one can make great strides in that direction.

Of course, the fact that we won't obtain sinless perfection in this life does not mean that we should deal lightly with sin. To do so would be an offense to God, as well as destructive to ourselves. Yes, God forgives individual sins, but if we persist in sinful patterns, we keep the power of Christ from operating in our lives. We also risk grave spiritual consequences, such as losing the ability to repent (Heb. 6:1–12).

Do we keep falling into a particular area of sin? John says that the way out of that frustrating predicament is to learn to continually "abide" in Christ. We need to confess our sins to Him and then concentrate not so much on avoiding sin as on maintaining our relationship with Him. After all, He has come to keep us from sin (1 John 2:1, 2). But if we turn away from Him and yield to sin's mastery, then, as John has written, we can neither see Him working in our lives nor know the joy of His presence.

3:5, 6 If Christ is sinless and the purpose of His coming was to remove sin, then whoever abides in Him does not sin. Habitually sinful conduct indicates an absence of fellowship with Christ. Thus, if we claim to be a Christian but sin is our way of life, our status as children of God can legitimately be questioned. Some understand sins to refer to even occasional sin rather than the habitual practice of sin. For them the true Christian either does not sin at all, or attains to a sinless state at some point. The affirmation of 1:9—2:2 shows that Christians do indeed sin on occasion. John is not contradicting himself here since the present tense verb can have the sense of practicing sin rather than just committing a single sin. neither seen Him nor known Him: In the act of sin there is no vision of God. Sin is the result of blindness and ignorance toward God (2 Pet. 1:9). Every sin that a believer commits is the result of wrongly thinking about God. In fact, if a believer never thought wrong about God, he or she would never sin. Little wonder that the apostle Paul urges us to bring "every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. 10:5). Any thought that we entertain that cannot pass that test may well be Satan's opportunity to take charge (Acts 5:2, 3).

3:7 let no one deceive you: Evidently the antichrists who were denying the doctrine of Christ (2:22) were also claiming to know God, yet were living in unrighteousness (1:6). John insists that to deny the doctrine of Christ is to not have Christ (2:23), and since God is righteous (2:29) and Christ is pure (v. 3) and has no sin (v.5) those who are born of God (2:29) have God's nature, and as they abide in Christ (v. 6) they do not sin (v.6). True believers practice righteousness because the One in whom they dwell is righteous. God's righteousness is revealed in His children through their conduct. Righteous conduct does not produce righteous character, but reveals its presence in us.

3:8 Satan's sinful nature is shown through the lives of those who belong to him. Jesus' purpose in coming was to destroy the devil's works. A person who sins, even a believer, is of the devil in the sense that he is participating in the devil's activity (2:19). Thus, John is indicating that it is possible for believers to do that which is of the devil (Mark 8:31–33, James 3:6).

3:9 The seed that remains is probably the divine nature in which believers can participate (2 Pet. 1:4). But the seed has been variously interpreted as Jesus, the Holy Spirit, Scripture, or the gospel message. In other words, this verse is saying that habitual sin is not consistent with the Christian walk.

3:10 Christians manifest their nature by practicing righteousness (2:7). Children of the devil display their basic nature by sinning. Believers who sin are not expressing their nature as children of God; instead, they are following the devil's pattern.

3:11 John identifies loving one another as absolutely basic to living for Christ and advancing His kingdom.

3:12 Cain is identified as a spiritual child of the devil. His brother Abel is identified as a child of God. Cain's act of murder was the epitome of hatred, and thus came from the wicked one (v. 8).

3:13 This looks back to 3:1. The world is the evil world system whose people respond to righteous Christians the same as Cain did to Abel (v. 1; John 15:18–20).

3:14 Love for fellow believers is experiential evidence that one has passed from the realm of death to the sphere of life. The tense of the verb have passed indicates that something experienced in the past has continuing and abiding results in the present. Christians experience a permanent passage from death to life at the time of salvation. Salvation is evidenced by our love for Christians. It is not a result of our love. The person who hates his brother is abiding in death. Having said this, it is important to realize that the assurance of salvation would be impossible if based solely on a believer's love for others. Thus, John is saying that Christians who have experienced Christ's salvation in the past should demonstrate their salvation by loving their fellow believers in the present. We have already seen in the epistle (1:8, 10; 2:2) that no one lives a sinless life. Such a subjective judgment of loving one's brethren could never allow anyone any certainty about eternal life, for how would one be sure at all times that one has fulfilled this command? John, then, in this passage is emphasizing that one cannot experience the life given by God in salvation if at the same time one is not loving one's brothers and sisters in the Lord; this does not speak of one's position in Christ.

3:15 eternal life abiding in him: Those who do not love their fellow Christians are not living in the light but instead are living in the darkness (2:11). They are not abiding in life but in death (v. 14). What they are doing is not of God but of the devil (v. 8). Eternal life is not abiding in these believers in the sense that it is not the controlling factor in their lives.

3:16–23 Love shown to the brethren and obedience to His commands reveals a healthy relationship with God. Murder and hate take life; love gives one's life. Jesus is the supreme example. Cain sacrificed his brother;

Christ sacrificed Himself. Christ's example is not just to be admired; it is to be copied (2:6).

3:16 God's love is expressed through self-sacrifice, not simply words. Actions speak much louder than all the promises and pronouncements that we might make. John stated in vv. 14, 15 the need to love other believers like we love ourselves. Here, however, he goes a step further in urging us to love other believers more than we love ourselves, to be willing to give our lives for others, even as Christ gave His Life for us.

3:17 Goods means "course of life," "living," or "livelihood." This same Greek word is translated life in 2:16. It refers to the material objects that sustain life. Therefore, the need that is mentioned is for food, clothing, and shelter. A believer gives his life (v. 16) by giving that which cost part of his life and will sustain the life of another. John uses a rhetorical question, then, to communicate that self-sacrificial love means sharing material goods as much as it means dying for someone. If one claims love for the brother or sister in Christ, but his actions deny that love, does the love of God abide in that Christian? The answer to the question is no. Love is revealed by its fruit. love of God: This does not speak to the Christian being loved by God or our love for God. Probably it refers to God's love working through the actions of the believer. If a believer does not act in love, then God's love has not found a residence in him.

3:18 To love in word is to feel love and speak loving words but stop short of doing anything. To love in tongue is to profess what one does not have at all. The opposite of loving "in word" is to love in deed and the opposite of loving "in tongue" is to love in truth. Love from the heart and with actions.

3:19 We can be assured of the presence of eternal life within us when we demonstrate self-sacrificial love to others. Believers who begin to truly love (v. 18) will know their behavior has its source in the truth and therefore will have confidence before God (v. 21). Thus, love benefits the giver and the receiver both. Of the truth means being identified with Him who is the Truth. Before Him recalls 2:28, 29 and refers to the Christian's appearance before the judgment seat of Christ.

3:20–22 Our heart condemns us in that we recognize that we do not measure up to the standard of love and feel insecure in approaching God. Our conscience may not acknowledge the loving deeds we have done in the power of the Holy Spirit, but God does, and He is superior to our heart.

Unlike our conscience, God takes everything into account, including Christ's atoning work for us. God is more compassionate and understanding toward us than we sometimes are toward ourselves.

3:23 In this context, faith in the name of … Christ is in relationship to prayer (John 14:12–15; 16:24, 1 John 5:5, 13–15). Notice that although believe is sufficient for receiving eternal life (John 20:30, 31), believe and love one another is essential for experiencing the results of this life (vv. 19, 22).

IN CONTEXT

Tough-Minded Faith

Christianity rightly has been characterized as a religion of love, but it's important not to take that emphasis to an unhealthy extreme. If, in the name of love, we uncritically accept every idea or value of others, we open ourselves up to error. God never asks us to put our brains in neutral when it comes to matters of faith.

John repeatedly appeals for love (1 John 2:10; 3:3, 10–24; 4:7–12, 16–21), but he also places a premium on truth—not the wishy-washy opinions that pass for "truth" in our society, but the absolute, eternal truths of God's Word. For example, John challenges us to "test the spirits" (4:1) and learn to discern between truth and error (4:6). He calls for us to avoid sin, which requires that we discern what is sinful (2:1; 3:4–10). He tells us to distinguish between the things of the world and the will of God (2:15–17), and he appeals for us to identify deceivers and avoid them (2:18–29; 3:7).

Paul echoes this appeal to be tough-minded when it comes to our faith. To be spiritual, he writes, means to be able to "judge" (discern or test) all things (1 Cor. 2:15). Likewise, we are to have the mind of Christ: tough in discernment, loving toward all, and fearless in the face of judgment (Phil. 2:5–11, 17, 18).

3:24—4:6 Orthodox confession reveals a living relationship. Fellowship with God is evidenced by those who listen to the apostles rather than false teachers.

3:24 Abides in this verse describes the mutual indwelling of Jesus and the Christian. The believer abides in Christ by keeping His commandments. Christ abides in the obedient believer as One who is "at home" with that believer. Jesus spoke of this mutual abiding in John 15:4, 5, 7. This is evidenced further by the reference to the Spirit being given to the Christian (4:1–3). Proof of one's salvation is obedience (the basis of one's salvation is the grace of God in Christ, and the medium of salvation is faith, Eph. 2:8, 9). This is not to say that one is not redeemed if we do not judge their actions to be in conformity to Christ—only that obedience indicates that a new life created by God and lack of obedience causes questions about whether this new life is present. This looks back at the Upper Room promises in John 14—16. This verse connects this paragraph with the previous section by the use of Spirit, a reference to the Holy Spirit in contrast to the spirits of the false teachers.

4:1 John speaks of the spirits of teachers in a way similar to what Paul says about the spirits of the prophets in 1 Cor. 14:32. John is not referring here to demon possession, but to teachers who promote error. Believers have the Holy Spirit (3:24); but false prophets obey evil spirits. A true prophet is one who receives direct revelation from God. A false prophet claims to have received direct revelation from God but in fact promotes erroneous ideas.

4:2 By this you know: One test of whether a person is led by the Holy Spirit is whether that person's beliefs agree with the truth of God's Word (2:22; 1 Cor. 12:3). Jesus Christ has come in the flesh: This test seems to be aimed at Docetists. They taught that Christ did not have a physical body. The test may also be aimed at the followers of Cerinthus who claimed that Jesus and "the Christ" were two separate beings, one physical and the other spiritual. In this letter, John is careful to use the name and title of Jesus Christ together to clearly express the complete union of the two titles in one person.

4:3 Cerinthus, a false teacher of John's day, denied the Incarnation by teaching that the divine Christ descended on the human Jesus at His baptism and then departed before His crucifixion (2:22). John teaches that Jesus did not merely enter into an already existing human being, but He came as a human being. The Greek tense of the verb has come and the meaning of the noun flesh indicate that not only did Jesus come as a human being; He was still a human being even as John wrote. God the Son is forever fully God and fully man. He is immortal and has received a resurrected human body of flesh that does not age or die. A denial of Jesus' full and true humanity proves that a teacher is not of God.

4:4 Of God means more than "belonging to." It indicates that the source of the original reader's attitude and actions was God (2:19). We must identify with either God or the devil. We can overcome by recognizing false teachers and refusing to follow them. He who is in you is the Holy Spirit. He who is in the world is the devil (5:19).

4:5 They is a reference to the false prophets (v. 1) who have the spirit of the Antichrist (v. 3). The false teachers, being a part of the world system ruled by Satan, are accepted by the world. The world believes their false teachings and receives them into fellowship.

4:6 We refers to the apostles, who find acceptance only among those who know God. He who knows God (2:3) listens to what the apostles have to say. This passage, then, gives two tests of the spirit: (1) the confession of Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God come in the flesh (vv. 1–3); (2) the acceptance of the teaching of the apostles.

4:7 Love for one another, which here means fellow Christians, proves our spiritual birth and our relationship with God. Born of God recalls Jesus' conversation with Nicodemus in John 3:3–6. Knows God recalls Jesus' words in John 14:7.

4:8 Know God here refers to an intimate, experiential knowledge (v. 6; 2:3) of God, rather than just information about God. John never says that those who do not love are not born of God (v. 7). Yet it is impossible to know God intimately without loving others, for God is love: Anyone in whom God dwells reflects His character. To claim to know God while failing to love others is to make a false claim (1:6).

4:9 The love of God for His children was visibly demonstrated through Jesus' work on the Cross on our behalf. Only begotten Son expresses the sense of uniqueness, not a literal birth (Heb. 11:17). John is the only NT author who calls Jesus this (John 1:18; 3:16, 18). In other words, Jesus is the unique Son of God; no other person is God's Son in the way He is.

4:10 propitiation: See 2:2. God initiated the provision for our need.

4:11 An exhortation to remember when we are tempted to be unloving. Our love must not be a mere sentiment. God asks us to give ourselves for the good of others, just as He gives.

4:12–16 Love for one another and an orthodox confession are evidences of a vital relationship with God, He abiding in us and we in Him.

4:13 By this looks forward to the evidence of His Spirit rather than back to the evidence of love (vv. 7–11) for proof that we abide in Him … and He in us (3:24). Mutual abiding refers to the fellowship we have with God as a result of our salvation. The evidence that God abides in us and we in Him is the experience of the Holy Spirit dwelling in us. In the remainder of this passage (vv. 12–16), John explains how a believer can know that the Spirit is working in his or her life (vv. 15, 16).

4:14 We refers to John and the other eyewitnesses of Jesus (1:1; 4:6). Though Jesus came as Savior of the world, this does not mean that every person is automatically saved. This is made clear in v. 15.

4:15 A sincere confession of belief is an indication that the confessor is saved. Abides in this context refers to salvation rather than the fellowship that results from salvation. To be a Christian, a person must believe that Jesus is the Son of God.

4:16 And we have known is parallel to "and we have seen" in v. 14. Abides in love means the Christian lives within the sphere of God's love. That love is both experienced and expressed through the Christian's life.

4:17–19 When we express mature love toward one another and understand God's love for us, we will experience assurance of salvation.

4:17 The mature expression of perfected love (v. 12) produces confidence as a Christian anticipates Jesus' judgment of the world. A person who abides in love will not be ashamed when Jesus returns (2:28; John 15:9–17).

4:18, 19 A mature understanding of God's love removes any fear of God's judgment.

4:20—5:5 An absence of love toward Christians denies love toward God. Fellowship with God is revealed by our confession that Jesus is the Christ and by our obedience and love of the brethren.

4:20–21 If expresses a Greek idea indicating that there are some who say and think what follows. John uses someone rather than we, and so dissociates himself from this group. The backdrop behind this question is probably the fact that the antichrists were claiming to love God while obviously being unloving.

5:1 The condition for being born of God, for being a child of God, is believing or trusting in Jesus Christ. Only correct, sincere belief produces spiritual birth. This birth is reflected in love for others who also have been born into the family of God (2:3–11).

5:2 By this points to the remainder of the verse which develops the theme of love further. The false teachers are probably in view. It is likely that they were guilty of excluding other Christians from their fellowship. Loving God's children is linked directly to obedience.

5:3 The love of God demands obedience (John 14:15). However, rather than being burdensome, God's commands free believers to be the people they were originally created to be: holy beings who clearly reflect the image of God.

5:4 Whatever speaks of the new nature of the child of God. Regeneration (that is, our spiritual rebirth) provides victory over the world that is opposed to God. The faith that overcomes the world is faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God (v. 5), who died for us (v. 6). The one who overcomes the world obeys God rather than following the expectations of the world. If we love God, we will find obeying Him a pleasure.

5:5 The faith which overcomes the evil world system involves the orthodox conviction that Jesus is the Son of God.

5:6–13 The Father bears witness that Jesus came in the flesh and is the source of eternal life in all who believe.

5:6 Water and blood have been interpreted in at least four ways: (1) as Jesus' baptism and death, (2) as His incarnation, (3) as the water and blood that flowed from His side on the Cross, and (4) as the baptism of the believer and the Lord's Supper. Most scholars favor the first interpretation. John is correcting the false teacher Cerinthus, who claimed that the Spirit came on Jesus at His baptism but left Him before His death (4:2, 3).

5:7, 8 The Holy Spirit testifies in accord with the water and the blood (v. 6) that Jesus is the Son of God.

5:9 We accept the witness of men so we should accept the witness of God.

5:10 The witness looks back to the anointing of the believer described in 2:27 and refers either to the Holy Spirit or to the testimony of the Scripture. The last part of the verse suggests that the Scripture is meant. John is contrasting those who accept and those who reject what God says. A person who trusts in Jesus possesses the witness, namely, the truth of God (v. 9). The one who rejects God's testimony is claiming that God is a liar.

5:11 This is the testimony is the same phrase as what is translated "this is the witness" in v. 9. God's witness or testimony is that He has given us eternal life … in His Son. Eternal life is not a wage to be earned, but a gift to be received from God (Rom. 6:23).

5:12 John clearly states that our relationship with the Son determines whether we possess eternal life.

5:13 Some assume that the phrase these things refers to the whole book of 1 John and conclude that the way to know that one has eternal life is not only to believe in the Son but also to live a righteous life and love fellow believers. However, the phrase does not refer to the whole book; but to the immediately preceding verses and similar expressions throughout this letter (vv. 9–12; 2:1, 12–14, 21, 26; 4:1). In other words, the foundation of assurance of salvation is belief in God's Word and His Son, of whom the Spirit and Scripture testify (vv. 11, 12). Those who trust Christ can know they have eternal life because God says they have it.

5:14–17 Assurance of our relationship with God produces confidence in prayer and an active concern for brethren who have sinned.

5:14, 15 Now connects the Christian's confidence in prayer with assurance of a vital relationship with God which includes enjoyment of eternal life. Continuing to believe in the name of the Son of God includes continuing to practice believing prayer (3:22; John 14:12–14). The key to knowing that God hears our prayers is to pray according to His will.

“sin”

(Gk. hamartia) (1:7, 9; 2:2; 3:4, 9; 4:10; 5:16; Gal. 1:4) Strong’s #266: The word literally means “to miss the mark,” to err. In this verse, there is one kind of sin one can recover from and another kind of sin from which one can’t recover. The difference is one which John’s readers were expected to recognize. We can only conjecture. The content of this letter suggests that those who had abandoned the Christian community (2:18, 19) in pursuit of heretical, “antichrist” teachings were irrecoverable. Their denial of Jesus’ true person (4:1–3) leads to unrepentant sin, which finally produces spiritual death.

5:16, 17 A believer should intercede for a sinning fellow Christian provided that (1) the believer sees the brother sinning and (2) the sin does not lead to death. Death may refer either to spiritual or physical death, though physical death is probably the case here. give him life: The believer can pray with confidence, knowing that it is the will of God that sinning believers should stop sinning. A sin leading to death may refer to blaspheming the Holy Spirit, rejecting Christ as Savior, rejecting the humanity or deity of Jesus, a specific sin such as murder (3:12, 15), or a life of habitual sin. Whatever it is, the sin seems to be a flagrant violation of the sanctity of the Christian community (Acts 5:1–11; 1 Cor. 5:5; 11:30). In other words, John is encouraging us to help fellow believers who are straying; we can be the tools God uses to restore an erring brother or sister to true fellowship.

5:18–20 These verses contain three concluding absolute truths, each of which is introduced by the phrase we know (vv. 18–20). The general idea of this concluding section is that a proper relationship with God results in confidence of our position in Christ within a hostile world. We is possibly another reference to the apostles (1:1). Does not sin conveys the idea of not practicing sin as a habitual lifestyle. The phrase cannot mean that believers do not sin because John just spoke of seeing a believer sinning (v. 16).

5:19 The apostles are of God, meaning He is the source of their actions and attitudes (2:19). Satan does not touch the one born of God (v. 18), but he does have the whole world in his grip and under his dominion.

5:20 The understanding that Christ gives enables us to know God in a personal, intimate sense. Jesus Christ is the true God; to know Him is to have eternal life.

Idols or pagan gods, which John exhorted his readers to "keep yourselves from" (1 John 5:21) were numerous in the first-century world. One of the most popular false gods was Diana, a fertility goddess of the ancient Romans.

5:21 Idols here may refer to literal idols, foods sacrificed to idols, false ideas in contrast to God's truth, or the doctrines of false teachers. John has just reminded his readers of the true God (v. 20). It is appropriate that he closes by exhorting them to stay away from false gods.

The Second Epistle of John

——————— THE EARLY CHURCH HAD ITS HANDS FULL with false teachers. First there were the Judaizers, who held that Gentiles who did not observe Jewish rituals could not be Christians. Then there were false apostles, who specialized in attacking Paul's credibility. Later came Docetists, Gnostics, and many others who distorted the truth. Each brought their own version of the truth.

Second John is testimony to the fact that no question consumed more time than "Who is Jesus?" The false teachers who prompted John to write this letter were promoting a heresy about this question. This heresy, called Docetism, was the teaching that Christ did not actually come in the flesh. In other words, Christ did not have a body but only seemed to have a body and to suffer and die on the Cross (v. 7). Yet these teachers claimed to be Christians, teaching the truths of Jesus' life and death.

John would have none of it. He urged the believers to cling to the truth: Jesus Christ came in the flesh. The word truth appears five times in the first four verses. John wanted believers to guard against falsehood, and the best way to do that would be to arm themselves with the truth.

The early church made a practice of supporting traveling ministers and teachers with gifts and hospitality. Christians in each church would house these missionaries and provide for their needs (3 John 5, 6). Since false teachers also relied on this hospitality, John urged his readers to show discernment and not to support traveling teachers "who do not confess Jesus Christ as coming in the flesh" (v. 7).

John wrote this letter "to the elect lady and her children." This is either a figurative reference to a church community or a literal reference to a specific person. Several arguments favor the figurative meaning and several favor the literal. In defense of the figurative, the issues addressed seem to reflect the problems faced by a church more than an individual. The plural pronouns in vv. 12 imply an audience of more than just one person. Neither the lady nor her children are named directly, although in 3 John three names appear. The fact that both Paul and John personified the church as a woman in other passages provides supporting evidence for the theory that this letter was addressed to the church as a whole (2 Cor. 11:2; Eph. 5:25–27, 31, 32;

Rev. 21:2, 9; 22:17). And finally, the greeting of v. 13 makes better sense when it is understood as a greeting from one congregation to another rather than from a group of relatives to their aunt.

It is just as possible that John wrote this letter to a literal woman. The phrase “elect lady” makes sense as a title for a well-known and respected woman. The reference to her children walking in the truth also makes sense when taken literally. The greeting from her sister’s children in v. 12 could well refer to the woman and her children. The proof is not conclusive for either possibility, so the true identity of John’s audience for this letter probably will always remain unknown. Yet the message of the letter remains clear: vigilantly guard against false teaching, and persevere in the truth.

The evidence is that the apostle John wrote this letter. Some have argued that there were two Johns, the apostle and a church leader known as John the Elder. But as with 1 John, evidence from the early church fathers identifies this letter with the apostle. Other evidences favoring John the apostle as the author of this letter are the similarity of the language and content of 1 and 2 John. John may have used the title Elder as an affectionate description of himself, since his authority as an apostle would not be in question at this late date.

This epistle was probably written soon after 1 John, for it assumes that the readers will understand what is meant by “antichrist” in v. 70, and it is likely that this letter was written there.

Commentary

1–3 The opening of this epistle follows the classic Greek formula of identifying the author and recipient and extending a greeting. John's introduction is similar to the introductions of Paul's letters: he identifies himself and his readers, and assures them of God's grace, mercy, and peace. In v. 3 are two distinctive themes of this letter: (1) the truth about Jesus Christ and (2) the necessity of love for others.

1 The Elder is probably the apostle John. The title can refer either to an old man, an older person deserving respect, or a church leader. Here the word probably refers to the author's authority in the church. The elect lady may be a specific person, or the phrase may be a figurative description of the local church. I love in truth: John links truth and love. The second use of truth refers to the body of doctrine that is true. This is God's revelation, the clear teachings and commands of Scripture.

2 truth: The reason that believers love each other is because of the indwelling truth (which is the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of Truth).

3 If we wish to experience God's grace, mercy, and peace, we must commit ourselves to His truth and communicate His love. Blessing comes from the Father and Son equally. John affirms the deity of Jesus by affirming the Son's equality with the Father.

4 Walking in truth means having an authentic relationship with God. Our walk with the Lord, if genuine, must be based upon His Word.

5 Specifically, our walk with God is based on His commandment to love one another (John 13:34, 35).

6 God's love is the basis of His desire for our obedience and, it is the reason He has revealed His will through His commandments in His Word. We prove our obedience to Him by demonstrating love toward one another. Love is an unlimited resource readily available to us, and it is tremendously effective in furthering the work of Christ.

7–11 Walking in truth means responding properly to deceivers by guarding against them and rejecting them. Having established that we are to obey God by demonstrating love toward one another, John must now address the problem of false teachers in the church. He shows that love for God means supporting the truth and rejecting those who stand against it.

7 One of the stumbling blocks to Christians is the many deceivers who subtly blur the truth about Jesus. Walking in truth means responding to deceivers by guarding against and rejecting them. Coming in the flesh refers to the Incarnation, the fact that Jesus is the God-man. The humanity of Jesus provides a test by which false teachers can be identified. The Gnostic heresy, against which John wrote in 1 and 2 John, included a denial of the physical body of Christ. People who deny the physical reality of Jesus are not Christians, but antichrists.

8 Being seduced by false teachers is one way that Christians can lose their reward at the judgment. With this in mind, John writes that the reason to guard against deceivers is our own desire not to lose our reward at the judgment seat of Christ. Jesus cautioned the church at Philadelphia to "hold fast what you have, that no one may take your crown" (Rev. 3:11). Every believer has the potential of a full reward or a complete loss of reward (1 Cor. 3:15). The determining factor is our faithfulness to Christ. Justification is not in view here because it is not something we worked for, but something we received as a gift from God (Rom. 4:1–6; Eph. 2:8).

9 Transgresses has the strong sense of running too far ahead, going too far. This is probably an allusion to the Gnostics, who considered themselves as having advanced beyond basic Christianity. Departure from Christ into doctrinal error indicates that a person does not have God. Love for God means supporting the truth and rejecting those who stand against it.

IN CONTEXT

Needed: Christian Discernment

We live in a day in which any and everything is tolerated. No matter how outlandish or how strenuously we disagree with what others cherish or embrace, we accept their right to their opinion. There seems to be no basis for saying "no" any more. Ours is an age of "I'm okay, you're okay."

But that is just not true. It would be more honest to affirm, "I'm not okay and you're not okay. We both need help that we can count on."

The early church faced a similar predicament. After Jesus' death and resurrection, many claimed to know Him and His message, even though their versions of the story differed remarkably. For instance, Paul faced a conflicting gospel in Galatia and at Philippi and vehemently challenged his opponents' claims (Gal. 1:6–9; Phil. 3:1–4). Likewise, John warned against those who distort the truth (1 John 2:18–29; 4:1–6; 3 John 9–11).

The recipient of 2 John, possibly a woman (2 John 1), was given to hospitality (10)—a wonderfully Christlike virtue. But John was concerned to help her become more discerning and not lend the reputation of her household to those who would distort the truth about Christ (7, 11). He knew that not all who claim Christ are true followers. So believers must develop discernment if they are to remain loyal to truth.

10 This doctrine refers to the Christian belief that Jesus is God come "in the flesh" (v. 7), He is completely human and completely divine. A Christian should not only refuse to receive false teachers in the sense of supporting them while they visit the community; a Christian should also avoid appearing to endorse their teachings. The proper response to deceivers is to reject them as unbelievers. This shows how seriously we should take the Scriptures and how careful we should be in evaluating the teachings of everyone.

11 greets him shares: To greet someone means to identify with that person publicly. This can refer to a personal greeting by an individual (v. 10).

12, 13 Having many things to write to you: Second John is a mini-version of 1 John. The author is saying that although he could go on and write much more, he prefers to be with them and speak to them face to face

(which in the first-century idiom is vividly “mouth to mouth”) in order that he might, as it were, restore them to spiritual life in Christ. The greeting from the elect sister is, of course, another congregation, perhaps a larger one where John lived.

The Third Epistle of John

STRUGGLES WITH FORCES OUTSIDE THE CHURCH can be harmful enough, but struggles within a church can be devastating. Third John was written in response to one such struggle within a local church. One of the church leaders, Diotrephes, had asserted control over the congregation to such an extent that he was prohibiting representatives of other churches from ministering to his congregation. Worse yet, he began driving away members of his own church who dared to help the representatives after he had refused to accept them. Diotrephes's actions violated Christ's command to love one another.

This was not a case of doctrinal deviation but of moral failure. However, it was as much a threat to the life of the church as the false teaching addressed in 1 and 2 John. Faithful members of the church community were being hurt by Diotrephes's arrogant attitude. The apostle John felt the need to deal with the problem and was planning a personal visit. In the meantime, the letter's recipient Gaius needed encouragement, and Demetrius needed support in his ministry.

The background of this epistle is similar to that of John's first two epistles, though the problem threatening the addressees of 3 John is made clearer from the content of the letter.

The early church had the practice of sending out itinerant ministers as messengers of the apostles or churches. These men would minister in a local church for a period of time, providing spiritual encouragement and doctrinal instruction. They were the equivalent of our modern evangelists, ministers, and missionaries who travel from their home churches to provide teaching and encouragement to other believers. Itinerant ministers were expected to know and teach the doctrines of the apostles, and while they were with the church, the community of Christians benefiting from their ministry was expected to support them. Titus's ministry as Paul's representative to the church in Corinth (2 Cor. 2:12, 13; 7:6–15; 8:6) and to the churches of Crete (Titus 1:5) is an example of this. As the itinerant ministers traveled from one place of ministry to the next, they would seek assistance and comfort from the churches of the communities through which they passed. This practice is reflected in Paul's instructions to Titus to assist Zenas and Apollos as they traveled (Titus 3:13).

As is true today, some leaders, filled with personal ambition instead of the love of Christ, sought to control their local congregations with an iron hand. In this case, a man named Diotrephes was trying to assert his leadership even against the apostles. Diotrephes had asserted his influence and was driving out legitimate representatives of the apostles in order to maintain his personal control.

The recipient of the letter was a Christian named Gaius, though no other record of him has been found to date. He was likely a member of one of the churches in Asia Minor to which John's influence had spread during his Ephesian ministry. He seems to have had the resources to show hospitality to itinerant preachers, and he was certainly a prominent and trustworthy person to whom John could give the task of standing firm against the authoritarianism of Diotrephes until the apostle could come to deal with the problem himself.

As with 1 and 2 John, the author of this epistle is generally accepted to be the apostle John. Similarities among the letters and early church tradition speak strongly of John's authorship. Although some have proposed that there were two Johns, the apostle and a church leader known as John the Elder, the consensus remains that the apostle wrote this letter.

No information is given within the epistle to indicate its date. The circumstance addressed in 3 John is markedly different from that of John's first two letters, and it is not possible to say whether it was written before or after 1 and 2 John. The letter was probably sent from Ephesus, where early church tradition says John located his ministry following the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

Commentary

1–4 Introduction: John's response to Gaius's walk in truth was joy and prayer for his blessing.

1 The Elder is the apostle John. The word Elder can refer to an old man, an older person deserving respect, or a church leader. Here the word is an appeal to the writer's authority in the church. Gaius was a common Roman name. The Gaius to whom John wrote was a Christian in one of the churches of Asia Minor. It cannot be said with certainty that this Gaius identifies with Gaius of Derbe (the traditional view, compare Acts 20:4), Gaius of Macedonia (Acts 19:29), or Gaius of Corinth (1 Cor. 1:14; Rom. 16:23). The traditional view is quite possible; at least we know that this Gaius was a leader in the church, he was very hospitable, and that he was a dear friend, perhaps a convert of John's.

Gaius and Prosperity

John's greeting (3 John 2) raises an important issue. It is clear that he expects God to give physical and material well-being to Gaius. Is that what believers today should be asking God for? Should we expect God to prosper us physically and financially? Is this verse an indication that He will? Notice some important things: (1) John is praying for Gaius's prosperity, not Gaius praying for his own prosperity.

(2) This is part of a formal greeting or blessing. We say very similar things today like, "Good luck," or "Have a good day," or "Stay healthy, kid."

(3) The Greek word here for prosper means "to travel well on a journey." That fits with its use in a blessing. Furthermore, it is not something one should actively pursue, but rather a gift that one should look for, a sense of "wholeness" like the OT concept of shalom that people enjoy when they follow God's precepts and live in His power.

(4) We don't know what Gaius's circumstances may have been, only that his soul was prospering. John may be saying, "You are doing so well in the faith; I wish you were doing as well in your health and the rest of your life."

(5) John's main concern is that Gaius would walk in the truth (3, 4), not that he would have a big bank account or be in tip-top shape.

Overall, it would be foolish to construct a general principle of material blessing from this verse, especially when so many other passages warn against that very thing.

2 may prosper … be in health … soul prospers: John's greeting may imply that Gaius was physically weak, though spiritually strong. More probably John is simply following the pattern of greetings common to Greek letters.

3 The reason for John's prayer is the testimony of others that Gaius walks in the truth. Truth here refers to the body of truth given to the church through the apostles and prophets, that is, the Scripture. Gaius walks according to the Word of God rather than the ways of the world.

4 My children is a description Paul uses of those he has led to saving faith in Christ (1 Cor. 4:14–17) and may indicate that Gaius was one of John's converts. It may also be a term John uses to describe those under his pastoral care, as reflected in 1 John 2:1, 12, 18, 28; 3:7, 18; 4:4; 5:21. To walk in truth means to walk according to God's Word, the revelation of His truth.

5–12 In these verses John affirms Gaius's responsibility to assist Demetrius despite the opposition of Diotrephes and his expulsion of those who received traveling missionaries. In the first part of this section (vv. 12).

5 you do faithfully: Gaius's support of the brethren, including those he does not know personally, reflects his faithfulness to the Lord. This emphasizes the importance of serving the Lord by being faithful in our responsibilities within our local churches.

6 worthy of God: These people had reported to others about Gaius's ministry in their lives.

7 Gentiles here refers to unbelievers, not to Gentile Christians. The majority of Christians in the churches of Asia Minor were Gentile converts rather than Jewish.

8 We become fellow workers in the Lord's service when we support the ministries of others, publicly as well as financially. To receive means to identify with people publicly, welcome them into our homes, and supply their needs.

9 I wrote: John had written an earlier letter that was either lost or possibly destroyed by Diotrephes, who was asserting his control over the church out of his own personal ambition (1 Pet. 5:1–5). John had probably written asking Diotrephes's church to extend hospitality to the traveling missionaries the apostle had sent out (v. 10), and Diotrephes had refused to heed John's request.

(Gk. ekklesia) (vv. 10; Matt. 16:18; Acts 8:1; Rom. 16:1; Rev. 1:4) Strong's #1577: The Greek term simply means "an assembly." It was used in secular Greek to speak of any gathering of people to a political or festive assembly. It was used by the NT writers to mean a local assembly of believers or the whole body of believers. In John's third epistle we see an example of both uses: "the church" in v. 10 has to be a specific local church. According to the overall pattern of the NT, it appears that the Christians of each city were unified under one group of elders (Acts 14:23; 15:2, 4; 20:17, 18; Titus 1:5). Within the local church in the city there were probably several "assemblies" or "meetings" of believers, held in various homes.

10 If I come reflects the idea of "when I come." John intends to come and take Diotrephes to task for his attitudes and actions, and to exercise his apostolic authority in punishing him. This is a warning similar to those of Paul in 2 Cor. 10:2; 13:1, 2. Diotrephes's sins include verbal attacks on John and his representatives, as well as active opposition to those who wanted to support legitimate ministers.

11 The proof of our commitment to God is that we personally reject evil and embrace a life patterned after that which is good. The idea of has not seen God is explained more fully in 1 John 3:4–9. The lifestyle that we exhibit is a direct reflection of the extent to which we have seen God. If we were to see God perfectly, we would never sin. Our sin is a result of a faulty vision of God. Therefore, the Scriptures encourage us to look at Christ (2 Cor. 3:18; 4:16–18; Heb. 12:2, 3), for the day when we see Him perfectly will be the day that we will be like Him (1 John 3:2, 3).

12 Gaius can trust John's endorsement of Demetrius, who not only has a good reputation but also has a testimony from the truth itself. In other words, Demetrius's life measured up to the teaching of Scripture and Christ's commands. His conduct matched his theology.

13–15 The brevity of the letter reflects John's plan to speak to Gaius soon. The apostle closes with a greeting of peace, a common feature of Greek letters. by name: John probably knew the church members well and asks Gaius to give each one a personal greeting.

The Epistle of Jude

FEW BOOKS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT HAVE more to say to our generation than the Epistle of Jude. Distorters of the faith will find the book distasteful because of its warnings and uncompromising stance against defectors from the truth of Jesus Christ. But to those who approach the book with receptive hearts, Jude's words speak as clearly and forcefully today as they did almost two thousand years ago.

This small epistle strikes the imagination with its vivid pictures of false teachers. The writer commands our attention with his appeals for defending the faith and growing in grace. The primary focus of the book is on the faith, the believers, and God—not on the errors and character of the heretics. It is notable that with all of the blunt descriptions of false teachers, Jude gives us neither a command to confront these troublemakers (only to avoid them) nor a plan of disciplinary action. He simply indicates they are under the condemnation of God.

The literary form of Jude is the common style of correspondence of that day. The letter opens with the author's name, a description of the recipients, and a conventional wish that they are well. Yet as with other NT epistles, the eloquence and depth of thought rises far above the usual business and personal correspondence. Jude comes quickly to his point. Not content merely to expose error, he forcefully exhorts his readers and concludes with a truly eloquent benediction.

From his opening sentence, the author assaults error, threatens judgment, and encourages holiness. The description of the errors of the false teachers is poetic in its imagery (vv. 3).

The obvious similarities between Jude and 2 Pet. 2 seem to show that one has borrowed from the other. The vocabulary of the two books is similar; both books use the OT for illustrations, and neither quotes it directly. The books deal with similar situations, though their approaches are different. Peter seems to be anticipating difficulty with false teachers (the future tense is used in 2 Pet. 2:1–3), while Jude uses the past tense to describe the situation (v. 4). On the other hand, because of the more precise language in Jude, many scholars believe that Jude was first and Peter borrowed from him, but this cannot be known for certain.

The author of this epistle calls himself Jude, and there is no reason to think that this is a pseudonym. There are six individuals named Jude in the NT, but only two are likely to have written this book: (1) the apostle Jude (Luke 6:16; Acts 1:13), who is probably Thaddaeus of Matt. 10:3; (2) Jude the brother of James and the half brother of the Lord Jesus. The brothers of the Lord are named in Matt. 13:55 as “James, Joses, Simon, and Judas.”

Since the author does not claim apostolic authority, and since v. 1) and a reference in a letter of Clement of Alexandria (around A.D. 153–217).

We might wonder why Jude did not assert that he was the brother of the Lord Jesus, but his first readers would already have known this. Also, even in the years following the Resurrection, there were already some superstitions surrounding the “holy family” that Jude might have wished to avoid.

Although assigning an exact date for the writing of Jude is impossible, it is likely that the book was written between A.D. 60–64. It was almost certainly written before A.D. 70, since Jude does not make any reference to the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. If he had been writing after this event, he would doubtless have mentioned it, since it would serve as an example of God’s judgment.

Commentary

1 Instead of flaunting his honored relationship as a half brother to Jesus, Jude calls himself a bondservant, a servant of the Son of God. There were basically two types of slaves in the Roman world. One became a slave by force and the other by choice. The latter bonded himself to his master for life. This pictures the type of slave that Jude was. called: This is the primary description of Jude's readers: they had been chosen by God to represent Him in this world.

2 Mercy, peace, and love be multiplied: These words in Greek express a strong desire. Though mercy is mentioned in a greeting only four other times in the NT, those occurrences are important because they also precede a warning against false teaching (1 Tim. 1:2; 2 Tim. 1:2; Titus 1:4; 2 John 3). Mercy is God's undeserving favor on us. Peace is the state of a person who rests in God completely for salvation and protection. The spiritual result of mercy and peace is love. Love is a response to God's work toward Him and others around us. Mercy might be seen looking up, peace looking inward, and love looking outward.

3–16 These verses serve as the center of Jude's argument and purpose for writing. Verse 3 reveals the deep concern and passionate personality of the writer. Though he desires to pursue a subject of theological importance to the readers, namely "our common salvation," an urgency to give them warning takes precedence. The book divides his readers from the false teachers that he warns against and describes. At several places in the letter he turns his attention to his readers with the pronoun "you" (vv. 19). Constant attention to exhort, inform, and comfort his readers reveals that Jude has the mind of a theologian but the heart of a shepherd.

3 Jude intended to write a more general doctrinal letter, but the present crisis demanded this short, pointed attack on doctrinal error. When Jude speaks of common salvation, he is referring to the unity all believers have in Christ. But due to the crisis of the infiltrating heretics, Jude does not dwell on the subject of the common salvation. Contend earnestly translates a Greek word that is the basis of the English word agonize. Christians are not called to passive service, but to vigilance in the cause of Christ (Phil. 1:27). The faith here does not have its usual sense of personal belief in Christ for salvation; here it means the body of teaching passed down in the church by the apostles (v. 17). This is similar to traditions about the Lord Jesus spoken of by the apostle Paul in 1 Cor. 11:1; 15:3–8. The revelation was not ongoing but once for all delivered, final and complete (Heb. 1:2). The world today is in flux. New fads and ideas come and go so fast that it is difficult to keep up with them. The truth of God, however, never changes. What God has said can always be trusted. This provides great comfort to the people of God.

4 The heretics were subtle. Their primary tactics were to pervert God's grace and to deny the authority of the Lord (Prov. 1:29). They were clever enough to have infiltrated the Christian community, even though they were ungodly. Jesus anticipated this kind of people when He spoke about wolves in sheep's clothing (Matt. 7:15). turn the grace of our God into lewdness: The teaching of grace can be dangerous when perverted by false teachers or carnal people who believe that because they have been saved by grace they may live as they please (Rom. 6:1, 2). the only Lord God and our Lord Jesus Christ: These false teachers not only lived immorally; they rejected the authority of Christ. The first Greek word translated Lord here means "Master." It identifies one who possesses absolute power and thus commands obedience. In the original wording it is clear that the entire statement refers to Christ: Jesus is both our absolute Sovereign and our God. Titus 2:13 uses a similar Greek construction in another significant passage that teaches the deity of Jesus.

5–11 These verses expand the twofold statement of v. 5–7 Jude illustrates such sinful activity by three examples from the OT: the children of Israel, the fallen angels, and the residents of Sodom and Gomorrah. Verses 8–11 develop the rejection of Christ's Lordship (v. 11), though even the angel Michael did not express such an attitude with Satan. Three examples of such rebellion are seen in the stories of Cain, Balaam, and Korah.

5 though you once knew this: These Christians were given fair warning concerning false teachers from the words of Christ and the apostles (vv. 18) but they had become negligent and were no longer on guard. destroyed those who did not believe: The Israelites of the Exodus had a magnificent beginning in Egypt but a disastrous ending in the wilderness. That we have begun with the Lord does not mean that we will have the glorious conclusion we might have envisioned at the beginning of our salvation journey. The false believers who had infiltrated God's people would be judged, just like the false believers who rejected God in the wilderness (Num. 25:1–9).

6 The meaning of this verse is disputed, as is a similar reference in 2 Pet. 2:4. It is clear that the angels to which Jude refers are not holy angels of God. Instead these angels could be those who had previously fallen with Satan. Some think that these angels are "the sons of God" of Gen. 6:2, who took on human form and married women before the Flood. According to this interpretation, these perverted angels were condemned by God to chains and darkness and are presently awaiting the final judgment of Satan and all his angels (2 Pet. 2:4).

7 in a similar manner to these: As the angels had committed sexual immorality with humans, so the citizens of Sodom and Gomorrah had pursued all kinds of sexual perversion (here strange flesh refers to homosexual acts; Gen. 19:5). They were also judged by God with fire from heaven (Gen. 19:24).

8 The false teachers were arrogant and had their own agenda. They had not been commissioned by the church nor called by the Holy Spirit. Jude calls these ungodly persons dreamers, perhaps because they claimed divine revelation, but more likely because they denied the Lord and thus were living in an unreal world of deception. They were creating their own false world in which indulging in immorality went hand in hand with salvation. reject authority, and speak evil of dignitaries: The false teachers even rejected those who were placed in positions of authority in local congregations. They not only preferred error to truth but also demeaned and rejected those who taught the truth.

IN CONTEXT

The Use of Apocryphal Sources

The Jewish Apocrypha consists of books and writings that were never recognized as part of the canon of Scripture, but which served a devotional purpose for many believers of ancient times, including some of the authors of the NT. Jude cites two books of the Apocrypha in his letter. Jude 9 apparently comes from The Assumption of Moses, and v. 9 is a reference to that book.

Jude is not the only NT author who quotes extrabiblical sources. In 1 Cor. 10:4, Paul apparently made use of a Hebrew commentary (the Midrash) to support his interpretation of Israel's wilderness wanderings. In Acts 17:28 and Titus 1:12, he quoted from pagan poets to support some of his assertions. Though we do not know where the names Jannes and Jambres come from (2 Tim. 3:8), Paul did not hesitate to use their story as an example of godlessness for Timothy.

Should the NT writers have quoted from apocryphal sources? Surely God had no trouble guiding the biblical writers in selecting material from these sources. Luke knew of "many" accounts of the life of Christ (Luke 1:1), which he set out to better with his own "orderly account" (1:3). Along the same lines, Paul had at least one letter from the Corinthian church to guide his responses in 1 and 2 Corinthians. Even the devil is quoted in Matt. 4:3, 6, 9. This does not mean that these sources are inspired, or even accurate, but it does mean that sometimes NT writers drew from the written sources God had given them to communicate effectively what He wanted them to say. The writers of Scripture wrote all that, and only that, which God had inspired them to say. We must affirm with Peter that the ultimate origin of Scripture is the mind of God (2 Pet. 1:19–21).

9 Jude's description here is probably taken from an apocryphal book called The Assumption of Moses, written in the first century A.D. There is no record in the Bible itself of the archangel's encounter with Satan, or a detailed account of Moses' body (there is a reference to it in Deut. 34:6). Although Jude uses an extrabiblical source to illustrate the arrogance of the false teachers, this does not invalidate the inspiration of this letter, and it does not mean the source from which Jude quotes was inspired (see Paul's use of pagan authors in Acts 17:28; Titus 1:12). The name Michael means "Who Is Like God?" The desire to be like God was the initial sin of Satan (Is. 14:14). It was also the enticement that Satan offered Eve: "You will be like God" (Gen. 3:5). Michael, though opposing Satan, refused to bring a reviling accusation against him. Michael would not even accuse Satan, the chief of blasphemers, of being a blasphemer. Instead, he left judgment to God. This reverence for the prerogatives of God stands in great contrast to the heretics who were slandering anyone and everyone (vv. 10).

10 The false teachers do not know the truth of the gospel. They speak on matters that they do not understand, as natural people and not as spiritual people (1 Cor. 2:14). They have understanding not of the Spirit of God, but only of what they share in common with the animal world, things far less than God's intent for His human creatures.

11 The heretics are compared to three OT failures. Cain, a tiller of the soil, did not place his faith in the Lord. The way of Cain is the way of pride and self-righteousness (Gen. 4:3–8; Heb. 11:4; 1 John 3:12). Balaam epitomized the sin of greed. He was a pagan prophet, an enemy of God, who believed he could profit from doing the work of God (Num. 31:16; 2 Pet. 2:15; Rev. 2:14). Similar to Balaam, the ungodly teachers in the church appeared to be religious. They sought to mix in with the people of God, and they were even accepted by the believers. However, their true motive was greed. Korah was a Levite (Num. 16:1–3, 31–35) who resented the prominent positions of Moses and Aaron as God's representatives. The Lord brought judgment on him and his followers for rebelling against those He had placed in authority. Christians need to be careful not to speak against spiritual leaders in a careless way (Titus 3:1, 2).

12, 13 spots in your love feasts: The people of God had been deceived by people who appeared to be messengers of God but instead were ministers of Satan (2 Cor. 11:4, 13–15). The Greek word for spots may also be translated "hidden reefs"; it serves as a strong warning to be on guard against deceivers. clouds without water … trees without fruit: Clouds may look like they will bring rain until the wind blows them away (Prov. 25:14). Trees may look productive until autumn arrives, the time for fruit to be picked. The ministers of Satan promise spiritual growth but do not satisfy the hunger of God's people for the truth. Not only are they without fruit, but they are rootless and incapable of bearing, since they are unable to tap the true source of sustenance (Ps. 1:3). They talk about God but are truly godless. raging waves … foaming … wandering stars: These godless people put on a great show but lacked any substance. They boasted of liberty but placed the people of God in bondage to sin (2 Pet. 2:19). After they had done their evil deeds and made their profits, they, like wandering stars, moved on to other places to exploit God's people again. darkness forever: These deceivers might not be punished for their evil deeds in this world, and their true character and deeds might fail to be discovered by Christians, but their punishment is certain.

14 Enoch, the seventh from Adam: Jude quotes from the apocryphal Book of Enoch here. This was a book supposedly by Enoch, who was taken to heaven by the Lord before he died (Gen. 5:21–24). Ten thousands is a Hebrew expression meaning a limitless number.

15 ungodly: This word is repeated four times, making the verse one of the most striking in the letter. In view of the wicked nature of evil persons, how could the church allow them to stay in their midst? They are ungodly, yet they are with God's people, claiming to represent God. Just as Judas Iscariot appeared to be a follower of Christ right up to the end, so do these religious leaders (note the contrast with believers in v. 1; John 13:18–30).

16 grumblers, complainers: This verse describes various ways evil people misuse their tongues. Instead of praising God, they boast; instead of encouraging, they whine and complain. Their lives are characterized by intense selfishness and a slavery to personal desires. By using flattering words, they try to gain a following for themselves that opposes the proper authorities in local congregations.

17 The words of the apostles are important because they express the will of God. In discerning the spirit (v. 19) of anyone claiming to speak for God, the only sure standard for evaluation is the Bible. Those who attack the central truths of Scripture, the ones concerning God, Christ, and salvation by God's grace through faith, must be avoided.

18 Jude points out that nothing that has been observed about the false teachers should have taken the believers by surprise. The apostles had given warning (v. 17) that in the end times evil deceivers would come among them. The description of the heretics as mockers indicates that one of their main tactics to gain credibility was to tear down godly leaders.

“sensual”

(Gk. psuchikos) (v. 19; 1 Cor. 2:14; 15:44; James 3:15) Strong’s #5591: The Greek term literally means “of the soul” or “natural,” as opposed to “spiritual,” or “having the Spirit.” It is translated “the natural man” in 1 Cor. 2:14. According to the Scripture, a person’s being, both soul and body, should be ruled by “the spirit,” that part of a person which is influenced by the Holy Spirit. But in the “natural” person, the spirit is subservient to the natural soul, which is worldly in its motives and aims.

19 When Jude declares that the false teachers are without the Spirit, he leaves no doubt as to their eternal destiny. They are merely worldly persons and do not belong to God.

20, 21 Jude tells us how to keep ourselves in the love of God. It is clear that Jude is encouraging us in this verse to cultivate our love for Christ, for we cannot be separated from His love for us (Rom. 8:35–39).

22, 23 We have certain obligations to other believers. First, we need to show mercy to those in any kind of spiritual or physical need. Second, we need to use discernment (making a distinction) in helping our brothers and sisters in the church. Some will require tender care and patience to help them grow in Christ. With others, we may need to use drastic action to rescue them from the temptations of sin. In rescuing our fellow believers, there is always the need to use wisdom and caution to prevent getting caught up in the sin that caused them to fall. Hating even the garment defiled by the flesh is a metaphor for staying wary of sin—as Paul says, “considering yourself lest you also be tempted” (Gal. 6:1).

24, 25 Jude concludes his letter with exuberant praise for the Lord, who alone could keep the readers from being deceived. Stumbling probably refers to the possibility of being tripped up by the false teachers’ errors. Note that Jude does not use the word falling, but stumbling. Only a person who is already walking or running (frequent biblical images of the Christian life) can stumble (Gal. 5:7; 1 Thess. 4:1; Heb. 12:1; 1 John 2:6). God is able to keep us from stumbling (Pss. 37:23, 24; 121:3; Prov. 4:11, 12). He guards us in this life, despite all the dangers and pitfalls that deceivers put in our way. Faultless is a Greek word used of sacrificial animals that had no blemish and thus were fit to be offered to God. Only God can save us, cleanse us from our sins, and present us to Himself as faultless, for God is the Author and Perfecter of our faith (Heb. 12:2).

The Revelation of Jesus Christ

——————— AS OUTSIDE PERSECUTION AGAINST CHRISTIANS increased, the first-century church also faced internal problems. They struggled with suffering, spiritual warfare, heretical doctrine and practice, and spiritual apathy. Christ had promised to return—but when? And how? And what would He do about the problems facing the church when He did come back?

Confronted with these circumstances, the original readers of Revelation needed to be both encouraged and exhorted. On the one hand, Revelation was intended to be a promise of divine protection from God's judgment on the world. On the other hand, those who read the book were to take it to heart and obey, worshipfully standing for the Word of God and the testimony of Jesus, as the apostle John had. In recording the Revelation of Jesus Christ, John wanted to reassure his readers that Jesus Christ controls the course and climax of history.

God's overriding purpose in all of history is the establishment of the promised messianic kingdom. Associated with this ultimate divine objective is the opportunity for believers to persevere by faith in a life of obedience. The prospect for these overcomers or victors is the destiny of reigning with Christ as co-heirs in His kingdom.

The book titles itself "The Revelation of Jesus Christ" (1:1). Christ is pictured as the glorified Son of Man (1:12–16), the Lion of Judah (5:5), the worthy Lamb (5:8–13), the Son who will rule all (12:5), the Bridegroom (19:7–9), the conquering King of kings and Lord of lords (19:16), and the rightful Ruler of His earthly (20:4–6) and eternal (22:1, 3) kingdoms. It must never be forgotten that "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy" (19:10). His person, victory, and rule result in worship and praise throughout the Book of Revelation.

The book details Christ's directions to the churches (chs. 2; 3) and describes "the wrath of the Lamb" (6:16), His judgments on the sinful world (chs. 6; 8; 9; 14; 16—18) prior to His second coming (19:11–21). This focus on the last times is completed by a brief description of the Lord's thousand-year reign (20:2–6), His judgment of the entire existing created order (20:4, 11–15), and His eternal rule (21:1—22:5).

The death, resurrection (1:5), and ascension (12:5) of Jesus Christ are the historical backdrop for His gracious offer of redemption from sin and eternal life (22:14, 17). Believers (2:5) and unbelievers (9:20, 21) both are urged to repent and to overcome by "the blood of the Lamb" (12:11). Those who obey are a royal priesthood for the Lord (1:6; 5:9, 10) and will reign with Him (20:4, 6). Their prayers are continually before God's heavenly throne (5:8; 8:3, 4).

In the power of the Holy Spirit, John received great visions (1:10; 4:2; 17:3; 21:10) as well as crucial messages that the church needed to hear (2:7). In the spiritual realm, Revelation depicts a divine struggle against Satan and his demons (2:9, 10, 13, 24; 3:9). Yet this battle against the deceiver of the world and the "accuser of our brethren" has already been won by the blood of the Lamb (12:9–11). All that remains is for Satan and his followers is to be sentenced to their just, eternal punishment by the Lord (19:20—20:3, 10). Their doom is sure.

From about A.D. 53 the apostle Paul used the great city of Ephesus as a center for evangelism and church planting throughout the Roman province of Asia (Acts 19:10). Probably the seven churches of Revelation were founded during this time or shortly thereafter.

While imprisoned in Rome (around A.D. 60–62), Paul wrote his letters to the Ephesians, the Colossians, the Philippians, and Philemon. Colossians was to be read "in the church of the Laodiceans" and "the epistle from Laodicea" was to be heard in the congregation in Colosse (Col. 4:16). Apparently the practice of writing epistles for wider circulation than a single individual or group was an accepted one, as seen in chs. 2 and 3 of Revelation.

Reliable historical sources dating from the second century A.D. place the apostle John in Ephesus and ministering throughout the province of Asia from about A.D. 70–100. It is likely that 1, 2, and 3 John were written by the apostle to Christians in that region around A.D. 80–100. During the latter part of this period, the emperor Domitian intensified his persecution of Christians. John was undoubtedly placed on the island of Patmos because of his Christian testimony. He was released after eighteen months by Emperor Nerva (A.D. 96–98), after which the apostle returned to Ephesus to resume his leadership role there.

The author of Revelation refers to himself as John. He is associated with the seven churches in the Roman province of Asia (present-day southwest Turkey) in their suffering, blessing, and perseverance. His stand "for the Word of God and for the testimony of Jesus Christ" (1:9) caused him to be exiled to Patmos, a small island located about sixty miles southwest of Ephesus in the Aegean Sea.

The author writes with prophetic authority. Allusions to Old Testament and extrabiblical Jewish literature saturate Revelation, suggesting that the writer is a Jew. Furthermore, striking parallels exist between the Gospel of John and Revelation. Thus, it is extremely likely that both books were written by the same author.

These lines of evidence do not prove that the apostle John wrote Revelation; however, John, who was one of the fiery "Sons of Thunder" (Mark 3:17) in his younger days, is the most likely candidate. The earliest witnesses in church history, such as Justin Martyr in the second century A.D., agreed that the apostle authored Revelation. However, a century later, Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria, determined that the book was written by another John, called "John the Elder." His view was based on differences between the language, style, and thought of Revelation and the more commonly acknowledged writings of John.

Through the ensuing centuries, Dionysius's conclusion has attracted some followers, including Martin Luther during the Reformation. Yet the external evidence of history still strongly supports John the son of Zebedee as God's inspired writer of the Revelation of Jesus Christ.

As for the date of its writing, clearly Revelation emerged during a time when Christians were suffering persecution. The dates most widely suggested are an early one, before A.D. 70, and a later one, around A.D. 95.

The strength of the late sixties date rests on the popular myth of that period that the deranged emperor Nero would be revived. This myth parallels much of the imagery of ch. 13. Reference to "the temple of God" and "the altar" (11:1) in Jerusalem, which were both destroyed in A.D. 70, also supports the earlier dating. But the later date, near the end of Domitian's reign as emperor (A.D. 81–96), is more likely. The picture of suffering seen in Revelation seems closer to what is known of the persecution under Domitian. There is also the statement of Irenaeus, in about A.D. 185, that John wrote Revelation "at the close of Domitian's reign." This would be around A.D. 95.

Commentary

1:1 Revelation (a word meaning "unveiling" or "disclosure") indicates that this book is a type of literature known as apocalyptic. The Revelation of Jesus Christ can mean it comes from Christ, or is about Him—or in this case most likely both, since He is the subject of the entire book. Christ's servants are believers. The phrase must shortly take place is an allusion to Dan. 2:28, 29, 45, since shortly seems to indicate that the things that must come to pass in the last days will take place in quick succession. John (v. 4) is the human writer of Revelation, whereas Jesus is the divine Author.

1:2 The word of God and … the testimony of Jesus Christ are the reasons John was exiled to the island of Patmos (v. 9) and are often the reasons Christians are still persecuted today. All things that he saw are the visions of the Book of Revelation.

1:3 Blessed, meaning spiritually "happy" from God's perspective, signals the first of seven beatitudes in Revelation (14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7, 14). This is the first of many groups of seven throughout the book, a number signifying completeness.

1:4 John addressed Revelation to seven churches in the Roman province of Asia, which today is southwestern Turkey. The churches fit within a square fifty miles on each side, and their names are given in order going clockwise from the southwest. Grace is the Christian version of a common Greek greeting; peace is a common Hebrew greeting. Him who is and who was and who is to come describes God, who not only exists now, but always has and always will exist (Heb. 13:8). The seven Spirits may refer to the angels of the seven churches (chs. 2; 3), to seven other angels (8:2), or to the fullness of the Holy Spirit (Is. 11:2).

1:5 Jesus Christ … the firstborn from the dead guarantees the Christian's future resurrection through His own resurrection (1 Cor. 15:20, 23). Though He is the rightful ruler, Christ will not fully exert His authority (Matt. 28:18) over the kings of the earth until His second coming (19:17–21). At that time, He will establish His kingdom on earth (19:6) and will appoint prepared rulers who will share His sovereignty in submission to Him (2:26, 27; 3:21; 5:10; 20:4; 21:24).

1:6 Kings and priests echoes the description of Israel in Ex. 19:6, a description which is also applied to the church by the title "royal priesthood” in 1 Pet. 2:9. Christ’s sacrifice of Himself (v. 5) has set apart believers as royal priests to offer spiritual sacrifices to God (Rom. 8:17; Heb. 3:1, 14; 13:15, 16).

1:7 Coming with clouds recalls Daniel’s vision of the Son of Man (Dan. 7:13; Matt. 24:30). Jesus applies Daniel’s vision to His glorious second coming (Matt. 24:30; Acts 1:11). Every eye indicates that Christ will be universally visible at His second coming, in contrast with His first coming in Bethlehem. The phrase pierced Him speaks of Christ’s crucifixion (John 19:34) and Zechariah’s prophecy that Israel will come to a point of mourning their rejected Messiah (Zech. 12:10; John 19:34, 37). In fact, all the tribes of the earth will mourn over Christ and regret their unbelief.

1:8 The Lord God’s self-description as the Alpha and the Omega, the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, means He is Almighty from the Beginning to the End of all creation. This knowledge can be a great comfort to a person who is suffering (v. 9). The Lord is sovereignly guiding history toward its consummation, the victory of Christ over all (1 Cor. 15:24–28).

The rocky, barren island of Patmos in the Mediterranean Sea—the place where John received the messages from God which he recorded in the Book of Revelation.

1:9 John strongly identifies with his readers as a brother and companion in the tribulation, a tribulation which some were already suffering (2:9, 10). The apostle Paul said there would be many tribulations (Acts 14:22) for the believer before the coming of the kingdom (11:15). Such trials develop patience and maturity (James 1:2–4) in Christ. Enduring trials that come our way is a prerequisite for reigning with Christ (Rom. 8:17; 2 Tim. 2:12). The immediate suffering of John was related to his exile on the small island of Patmos in the Aegean Sea. Although John had been exiled in an effort to silence the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ (the Greek word translated testimony literally means "witness" and is the basis for the English word martyr), His witness continued in the writing of Revelation (vv. 1, 2).

IN FOCUS

"the Lord's Day"

(Gk. kuriakos hemera) (1:10) Strong's #2960; 2250: This is the only mention of the Lord's Day in the NT. This was most likely the first day of the week, a day on which Christians gathered to worship and celebrate the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 11:20) because Jesus rose from the dead on that day. The early church father Ignatius seems to allude to "the Lord's Day," as does Irenaeus.

1:10 In the Spirit describes John's state of spiritual exaltation as he received the visions of the Apocalypse (4:1, 2).

1:11 The seven churches in the province of Asia each received the whole Book of Revelation, and each received an individual letter from Christ (2:1—3:22).

1:12 The seven golden lampstands represent the seven churches named in v. 11 (v. 20).

1:13 One like the Son of Man is a reference to Dan. 7:13. Comparison of these two passages, along with Jesus' common use of the name Son of Man (Matt. 20:28) for Himself, indicate that Christ is the subject of vv. 12–18. In the midst speaks of love and familiarity. Christ was fully man and fully God. The long garment and band (sash) indicate that the glorified Christ is dressed like a high priest (Ex. 28:4).

1:14 The white appearance is parallel to the description of the "Ancient of Days" in Dan. 7:9 and of Christ on the Mount of Transfiguration (Matt. 17:2). The similar descriptions demonstrate the purity and eternality of both God the Father and God the Son. Additionally, overcoming believers will be "clothed in white garments" (3:5; 19:8) in Christ's presence, symbolizing purity. Christ's eyes like … fire indicate His righteousness, as well as His judgment of everything impure (Dan. 10:6; 1 Cor. 3:13).

1:15 His feet of fine brass may speak of respect or power, as well as His treading everything underfoot (1 Cor. 15:25).

1:16 The seven stars are "the angels of the seven churches," according to v. 20. These probably are literal angels, since it would be unlikely to interpret one symbol by using another. A sharp two-edged sword was a fierce long sword. This sword, coming out of Christ's mouth, is symbolic of the judging power of the Word of God (Is. 49:2; Heb. 4:12).

1:17, 18 When Christ speaks of Himself as He who lives, and was dead, and is alive forevermore, He is referring to His eternal existence, His becoming a man and dying on the Cross, and His glorified resurrection state. The keys of Hades and of Death describes Christ's authority over those who have died physically and over their present resting place, which will be emptied and destroyed at the time of the great white throne judgment (20:11–15).

1:19 The phrase write the things which you have seen expands and clarifies Christ's earlier command, "What you see, write" (v. 11). "The things which you have seen" apparently refers to the vision of vv. 10–18. The things which are, and the things which will take place after this may refer to the present state of the churches in Asia (chs. 2; 3), followed by the visions of the future (chs. 4—22). The use of after this in combination with the vision of "One like the Son of Man" (v. 13) is an echo of Dan. 2:29, 45.

1:20 The angels of the seven churches have sometimes been understood to be human messengers or ministers. The normal NT meaning of the word angel, as in Revelation (v. 1; 5:2), is of spirit beings, who minister to believers (Heb. 1:14). It is not unreasonable to view angels as having authority over and responsibility for churches in the present age. This situation will be reversed in the kingdom of God: believers will judge angels (1 Cor. 6:2, 3). The seven churches have the glorified Son of Man in their midst (vv. 12, 13), recalling Christ's promise that "where two or three are gathered together in My name, I am there in the midst of them" (Matt. 18:20).

2:1—3:22 The seven letters are, with minor exceptions, organized in the following general pattern: (1) a description of Christ derived from the vision of ch. 1; (2) a commendation of the congregation; (3) a rebuke for spiritual deficiencies; (4) a correction for what is wrong; and (5) a promise to overcomers. The seven churches were congregations in Asia Minor in John's day. Sometimes they are interpreted as representing seven stages of church history. But this interpretation is unlikely, since there is disagreement among interpreters about what part of Revelation represents which period in history. More likely, these seven assemblies are examples of the kind of churches that exist throughout history (2:7). This means that all seven letters are warnings to every church in every age (2:7).

2:1 The angel of the church is either its guardian angel (Heb. 1:14) in spiritual warfare (Dan. 10:13) or some human leader. Ephesus was the most important city in Asia Minor when Revelation was written. It was the center of the worship of Artemis (or Diana; Acts 19:28), the goddess of fertility. It was a strategic commercial center and a great seaport. These were some of the reasons the apostle Paul invested nearly three years in establishing the church in Ephesus and the cities of the surrounding province (Acts 19:10; 20:31).

2:2 I know your works is a phrase that appears in each letter (vv. 9, 13, 19; 3:1, 8, 15), as a statement of recognition from the omniscient, omnipresent Judge.

2:3 persevered … patience … not become weary: These are qualities that produce character (Rom. 6:3, 4) and maturity (James 1:3, 4), as the believer faces trials and suffering.

2:4 The first love of the church may mean first in point of time, or first in importance. The greatest commandment is to "love the Lord your God" (Matt. 22:37, 38). Leaving the first love means a great diminishing of the church's initial love, or a turning away from the love of the Lord.

2:5 Remember … from where you have fallen speaks of a considerable drop-off of love (v. 4) in the Ephesian church. A generation earlier the same church was commended for love (Eph. 1:15, 16; 6:24), although it was also strongly commanded to grow in love (Eph. 4:2, 15, 16). Repent means to change one's thinking. It is clearly connected with changed behavior, as seen in the phrase and do the first works. The Ephesian Christians were to regain the lifestyle that they had before they departed from their first love (v. 4). To remove your lampstand would be to judge the church quickly or immediately.

2:6 Even if the Ephesian church did not love as it should have (v. 4), at least the Lord could positively say, you hate the deeds of the Nicolaitans. The Nicolaitans were a heretical group that troubled the churches at Ephesus and Pergamos (v. 15). Apparently their teaching and practice were immoral, perhaps even idolatrous (v. 14). Some church fathers connected this sect with Nicolas, one of the seven elected leaders in the Jerusalem church in Acts 6:5.

“the tree of life”

(Gk. xulon tes zoes) (2:7; 22:2, 14) Strong’s #3586; 2222: The term in Greek denotes “a tree that gives life,” that is, eternal life (John 20:31). This tree symbolizes the eternal life God has made available to humankind. The tree of life was present in the Garden of Eden, but its fruit was not eaten because Adam and Eve had fallen into sin (Gen. 2:9; 3:24). Jesus came to earth to restore humankind and to again offer them the tree of life (Rev. 2:7). Those who are in the new paradise, the New Jerusalem, will partake of the tree of life forever (Rev. 22:2).

2:7 He who has an ear, let him hear is reminiscent of Jesus’ warnings to His hearers after giving the parable of the sower (Matt. 13:9). When the Spirit of God speaks to the churches, it is to represent Christ (v. 2), for He is the Spirit of Christ (Gal. 4:6) who guides believers into all truth, and does not speak on His own authority (John 16:13). The one who overcomes is the believer who perseveres in obedience and is victorious in the face of trials. There are three main views about the nature of the overcomer in vv. 7, 11, 17, 26; 3:5, 12, 21. The first view is that the promise to the overcomer is experienced by all believers. In other words, all genuine believers are overcomers, and failure to overcome means that there was no true salvation in that person’s case. The second view holds that the promises are experienced only by those believers who are faithful and obedient, and failure to overcome means there has been a loss of salvation. The third view is that the promises are experienced only by believers who are faithful and obedient, and failure to overcome means a loss of rewards, not salvation (1 Cor. 3:15). None of these is without difficulties, but the correct interpretation would be the one that most consistently handles the details of all seven “overcomer” passages. This means the last view is most likely. Some promises to the overcomer are clearly conditional (i.e., 2:26) and cannot be predicated of all believers. The promise appears to be a reward for doing something that not all believers do. The overcomer is the Christian who overcomes the specific threat to him and his church by his faithful conduct/obedience. If every believer is an “overcomer” the reader would expect the phrase “he who believes” rather than “he who overcomes,” which suggests some distinction between believing and overcoming. The singular, “he who overcomes” implies that the victory is made on an individual basis, that not all Christians attain it. “A command that everyone keeps is superfluous and a reward that everyone receives for a virtue that everyone has is nonsense.” (Fuller). There is no point in warning Christians about something they will all do. There is no motivation to obey the warnings if every believer receives the “reward.” There would be no true reward. Some have argued that the term “he who overcomes” in Revelation 2 and 3 applies to all believers because of its use in 1 John 5:4, 5, where clearly all believers are in view. However, words take their meaning from the situation or context in which they are used. Other than the use of the same word, there is nothing about the context of 1 John 5 that reminds us of the context of Revelation 2 and 3. The context of 1 John 5 is a general promise to all believers without a condition. In Revelation 2 and 3, there are specific warnings and commands tied to the promises. In a general sense, by virtue of their faith, all Christians will overcome and live forever with God (1 John 5). However, not all Christians overcome to the same degree in this life and therefore will not be rewarded equally (Rev. 2 and 3). First John 5:4 and 5 is overcoming by faith in Christ and receiving a gift. Revelation 2 and 3 is overcoming by faithfulness to Christ and receiving a reward. There are two aspects of overcoming for the Christian. By their initial faith in Jesus Christ a believer overcomes by receiving eternal life (1 John 5:4, 5). By continued faith and faithfulness, a believer can overcome specific temptations and tests and receiver an eternal reward. This view seems to best fit the context as will be demonstrated in the notes on each “overcomer” passage. John is telling the Ephesian believers that they have spiritual obstacles to overcome. The problem in the church at Ephesus was a lack of fervent love for Christ. The church is commanded to “repent and do the first works” (v. 5), which suggests a lapse in Christian living. The reward for those who obey is the promise that they will eat of the tree of life. Eating of the tree of life is a promise of special intimacy with the Lord, a promise of renewing the fellowship lost before the Fall (22:14; Gen. 2:9; 3:22, 24; Prov. 11:30). The privileged access once denied Adam (Gen. 3:24) will be enjoyed by the overcomer. Paradise is the place Jesus told the believing thief he would go to after his death on a cross (Luke 23:43). Paul uses the term interchangeably with “the third heaven” in 2 Cor. 12:2, 4.

2:8 Smyrna was an important seaport thiry-five miles north of Ephesus. The presence of a Roman imperial cult and a large Jewish population made life difficult for believers in Smyrna. However, the churches of Smyrna and Philadelphia are the only two of the seven not rebuked by Christ in some way.

2:9 Although there will yet be great tribulation (7:14) unparalleled in world history (Matt. 24:21), believers must expect to suffer much tribulation even in the present age (Acts 14:22). Christians hindered by poverty in this life can take consolation in the fact that they possess great spiritual riches in Christ (Eph. 1:18). Those who say they are Jews and are not are either Jewish proselytes or Jews who refuse to believe the scriptural proof that Jesus is the promised Messiah (Rom. 2:28, 29). Calling these Jews a synagogue of Satan probably indicates that they were persecuting the believers.

2:10 You will have tribulation ten days has been understood as ten short outbreaks of persecution during the NT era, but more likely it means suffering for ten actual days, or one brief period. The crown of life may be the "victory wreath" of the martyr, following the normal Greek use of crown for the garland given to winners in athletic events. James 1:12 also promises the crown of life to believers who persevere under trial. Such perseverance will result in the ultimate enjoyment of life in God's kingdom.

2:11 He who overcomes by faith (1 John 5:4, 5) need not fear the unending torment of the unbeliever in the lake of fire, the second death (20:14). Some understand this statement to imply that those believers who do not overcome will be harmed by the lake of fire in the sense that when their works are tried by fire (1 Cor. 3:11–15) they will suffer loss of reward. However, this promise is best understood as a figure of speech where the positive idea is stated by negating its opposite. The second death refers to the experience of eternal death in the lake of fire (20:14, 15). No believer will experience the second death; the overcomer will suffer no loss whatsoever. The believer who is faithful to death is promised the crown of life, a wonderful experience of life in the hereafter. Thus, there is not only deliverance from the second death, but an experience of life to a rich degree (John 10:10).

2:12 Pergamos, the ancient capital of the province of Asia, was said to be the place where parchment was first used. Pergamos means "Citadel" in Greek. It was located fifty miles north of Smyrna and was situated on a high hill dominating the valley below. The sharp two-edged sword is the powerful word of Christ's mouth (1:16; Heb. 4:12).

2:13 Satan's throne implies that Satan's authority and power were honored either openly or in effect. Antipas (not Herod Antipas) had already suffered martyrdom, thus receiving the promised "crown of life." Hold fast to My name may well refer to the Arian controversy, which lasted for over a century and was finally settled in A.D. 325 by the Council of Nicea (southeastern France on the Mediterranean Sea). They did not deny Christ's name, for the essential deity of the Lord Jesus Christ was maintained.

2:14 The doctrine of Balaam is explained from its background in the OT (Num. 22—25; 31). Balak hired Balaam to turn the hearts of Israel away from the Lord. Apparently, similar seduction was taking place in the church at Pergamos, especially in regard to idols and sexual immorality (Acts 15:20).

2:15 The doctrine of the Nicolaitans, already seen in the church at Ephesus (v. 6), was apparently similar to that of Balaam (v. 14).

2:16 Repent; or else I will come to you quickly: The church was called upon to exercise its discipline. The coming mentioned is a judicial visitation in speedy judgment according to the Word of God.

2:17 The person who overcomes by faith amidst terrible circumstances (vv. 13–15) will receive hidden manna to eat. The hidden manna, white stone, and new name are all prospective rewards for faithfulness to God. The hidden manna recalls the food from heaven that sustained Israel in the wilderness (Ex. 16:4, 14, 15, 31), a portion of which was placed inside the ark as a memorial (Ex. 16:32, 33; Heb. 9:4). Believers in Pergamos were involved in pagan feasts, where they ate food sacrificed to idols and committed sexual immorality (v. 14). The promise, then, is for those who refuse to compromise and partake of the feasts. For them there will be a better banquet in heaven. The hidden manna also suggests special intimacy with Christ (Luke 14:7–11; 22:28–30). Overcomers are promised supernatural sustenance in the resurrected state to enable them to function effectively as co-rulers in Christ's kingdom. In John's day the white stone could signify acquittal from legal charges, but it seems best to relate this either to a custom in the Greek athletic games of giving a white stone to the victor in a contest, or to gladiators at the Roman games who had won the admiration of the public and had been allowed to retire from further combat. This symbol of victory over the enemies of God cannot be separated from a new name, which identifies the obedient believer in terms of his or her distinctive character.

2:18 Thyatira was a city with a large military detachment about thirty miles southeast of Pergamos. Recognized for its wool and dye industries, the city was also noted for its trade guilds. The description of Christ as having eyes like a flame and feet like fine brass virtually repeats the wording of Dan. 10:6.

2:19 This church has much evil in it, but Christ looks first at what can be commended. These are the strongest words of commendation addressed to any of the churches. faith … patience … works: Devotion and zeal did exist in the Middle Ages in spite of the apostasy and corruption of the majority. the last are more than the first: The darker the night, the more ardent was the company of the godly minority.

Jezebel

The name Jezebel (Rev. 2:20; 1 Kin. 19:1) instantly signified evil for John's readers. King Ahab's wife, Jezebel, left a bad taste in Israel (1 Kin. 16:31; 21:25; 2 Kin. 9:7–10, 22). After her passing, Jews avoided naming their daughters Jezebel.

Here in Rev. 2, a Jezebel is teaching people to worship false gods and encouraging immorality. The pagan religions of the day, including the emperor-worship of the Romans, usually involved idol worship and sometimes included sexual activity.

This Jezebel was no follower of Christ, but a false prophet leading people astray. Yet the believers at Thyatira stood by, watching and tolerating her teaching and promotion of sexual promiscuity in the name of religion.

2:20 Whether Jezebel is an actual name or a nickname, this woman's wicked actions parallel Queen Jezebel's in 1 Kin. 16 and 2 Kin. 9. Sexual immorality and things sacrificed to idols link the activities of Jezebel to the sins in Pergamos (v. 14). This description is strikingly similar to Babylon, "the great harlot" in Rev. 17:1–6. Behavior in the church can, on occasion, be tragically similar to the enemies of the Lord.

2:21 time to repent … she did not repent: In His grace and forbearance God gave this church time to repent. Godly men called upon the church to repent, but she refused to do so. Therefore, there is no call to repent in this letter. Only judgment remains. This church remains apart from the truth of God until she is joined with all the systems of religious evil of the world (compare chs. 18—19).

2:22 A sickbed is where a believer involved in prolonged, unconfessed sin may end up. The next step of God's discipline is death (1 Cor. 11:30). Sin can bring great tribulation into an individual believer's life, although this is not the great tribulation that will come upon the world prior to Christ's return (7:14).

2:23 Church members in Thyatira had apparently committed the sin unto death (James 5:20). Death is the eventual outcome for such sinful works (Rom. 6:23).

2:24 The depths of Satan may be the secrets known by those initiated into the things of the devil. There was considerable satanic influence in Asia Minor in John's day (vv. 9, 13; 3:9). Contrast the depths of Satan with "the deep things of God" (1 Cor. 2:10).

2:25 hold fast … till I come: Since there is no hope that the corrupt church will repent, the godly in her can only look for the coming of the Lord in faithful holding to the truth. The fact that the Thyatira saints are seen to go on to the time of Christ's coming reveals that the church as such goes on beyond its original period in the Middle Ages.

2:26, 27 Note that he who overcomes is further identified as the one who keeps My works until the end. To this faithful believer Christ promises the privilege of ruling and reigning with Him in His kingdom and sharing in His royal splendor (Luke 16:11; 19:17–19; Rom. 8:17; 2 Tim. 2:12). While all believers share the glory of Christ by being glorified with Him, it seems that not all believers will share His royal splendor with the accompanying privilege of reigning with Him. The words power over the nations and the quote from Ps. 2:9, which prophecies the Messiah's all-powerful role, link overcoming believers with the earthly rule of Christ in 20:4, 6. Only those believers who are overcomers and who persevere in obedience to the end of life have the promise of being co-heirs with Christ. He will share His sovereignty with messianic partners who have proven their trustworthiness in this life by doing the will of God to the end. This is the exalted destiny to which all believers should aspire.

2:28, 29 The morning star is Christ Himself in 22:16. For the overcoming believer, Christ's presence is the light in the dark and difficult times before the dawn of the Son's coming. Moreover, morning star refers to the faithful believer's share in the glory or splendor of Christ. Christ gives every faithful believer the privilege of being like Him in royal splendor, to various degrees (Dan. 12:3).

3:1 Sardis, located thirty miles southeast of Thyatira, had been the capital of Lydia. The worship of the Roman Caesar and of Artemis, goddess of fertility, were active here. The seven Spirits may be the Holy Spirit, or perhaps seven angels (1:4). The seven stars are "the angels of the seven churches" (1:20).

3:2 No one's works are completely perfect before God (Rom. 3:23). Unbelievers, those whose names are not "written in the Book of Life" (20:15), will be judged solely according to their works (20:12, 13).

3:3 Christ's warning that He will come unexpectedly as a thief echoes His repeated emphasis in Matt. 24:36—25:13: Be alert and ready for My coming (16:15).

3:4 Those who have not defiled their garments are those who have remained faithful to Christ. Unlike some of the believers, they have had victory over sin and have demonstrated a practical righteousness. The Lord promises those who have not defiled their garments that they will walk with Him in white, for they are worthy. This image probably describes righteous acts, not the imputed righteousness of Christ (19:8).

3:5, 6 The white garments probably symbolize the Lord's recognition of godly character and faithful service in this life (v. 4; 6:11; 19:7, 8). White is the color of the garments the redeemed will wear in the Lord's presence (7:13, 14). The Book of Life is the list of the eternally redeemed (20:12, 15). To not blot out is a figure of speech, affirming a positive by negating its opposite. Thus, it means "I will include their names." Blot out likely alludes to Ex. 32:32, 33, where God says He will blot out sinners, but not faithful ones like Moses, from His Book. Christ will make sure the faithful believer's name and works are not erased, but remembered and honored. confess his name before My Father and before His angels: The text does not state that any believer will have his name blotted out of the Book of Life (Luke 10:20). Rather, the faithful believer will be resoundingly confessed before the saints, the angels, and the Father by the Son (Matt. 10:32, 33; 2 Tim. 2:12). To have the Lord publicly confess one's name is to have the Lord's approval of one's character and service (Matt. 10:32, 33; 1 Tim. 2:12, 13).

3:7 Philadelphia, which means "brotherly love" in Greek, was a small city located about forty miles southeast of Sardis. Its location, vineyards, and wine production made it wealthy and commercially important. The key of David represents authority as the One who opens and shuts the door in the Davidic kingdom (Is. 22:22), a prerogative that is Christ's as the rightful "Son of David" (Matt. 1:1).

3:8 The door that no one can shut seems, in this context, to be entrance into heaven and "the New Jerusalem" (v. 12, 21, 22). It is possible that the open door is also an opening for witness or service (Col. 4:3). Despite their having little strength, the believers at Philadelphia had obediently kept Christ's word (1:3; Matt. 28:20) and had not denied His name.

3:9 Those in Philadelphia who ultimately belonged to Satan, though they claimed to be Jews outwardly (Rom. 2:28, 29), would ultimately be forced to worship before the church and to acknowledge that Christ has loved His own (20:4, 6).

3:10 Christ's promise to keep the believers from the hour of trial is most likely a promise that He will remove them before the period of unparalleled tribulation. However, some take this promise to mean that believers will not be removed but rather protected, during the trial. The hour of trial is another way of referring to the unparalleled judgment of "the great tribulation" (7:14) predicted in Dan. 12:1; Matt. 24:21.

3:11 The Christian must always be ready for Jesus' coming (3:3). Christ's return with expected suddenness is an incentive to persevere in faithful service. Through misconduct one can lose a crown that had been previously attained (2 John 8). The crown signifies the royal authority given to the victorious co-heirs of Christ. The judgment seat of Christ will be an occasion of either reward or regret (2 Cor. 5:10).

3:12 Christ promises that the faithful believer will be a pillar, the most stable and permanent part of a building. To be a pillar in the temple implies a prominent place of service in Christ's kingdom (Is. 22:23; Luke 19:16–19). He who overcomes: The overcomer is identified with the names of God (signifying His ownership); the city of God, the New Jerusalem (citizenship in the heavenly city); and Christ's new name (the full revelation of His character). The latter also implies special intimacy (vv. 4, 21; 2:7, 17). The overcomer is associated with the ultimate rulers and the governing center of the universe throughout all eternity (21:9—22:21).

3:13 He who has an ear, let him hear: Openness to the truths of the Word of God is a necessity for understanding the special destiny of the overcoming Christian.

IN COMPARISON

The Seven Churches of the Apocalypse

	Commendation	Criticism	Instruction	Promise
Ephesus (2:1–7)	Rejects evil, perseveres, has patience	Love for Christ no longer fervent	Do the works you did at first	The tree of life
Smyrna (2:8–11)	Gracefully bears suffering	None	Be faithful until death	The crown of life
Pergamos (2:12–17)	Keeps the faith of Christ	Tolerates immorality, idolatry, and heresies	Repent	Hidden manna and a stone with a new name
Thyatira (2:18–29)	Love, service, faith, patience are greater than at first	Tolerates cult of idolatry and immorality	Judgment coming; keep the faith	Rule over nations and receive morning star
Sardis (3:1–6)	Some have kept the faith	A dead church	Repent; strengthen what remains	Faithful honored and clothed in white
Philadelphia (3:7–13)	Perseveres in the faith, keeps the word of Christ, honors His name	None	Keep the faith	A place in God's presence, a new name, and the New Jerusalem
Laodicea (3:14–22)	None	Indifferent	Be zealous and repent	Share Christ's throne

3:14 Laodicea was forty-five miles southeast of Philadelphia and ninety miles east of Ephesus. It was a wealthy city with thriving banks, a textile industry, and a medical school. The city was also known for its sparse water supply. All of these characteristics are played upon in Christ's message to the church (vv. 15–18). References to Christ as the Amen (meaning "The True One"), the Faithful and True Witness, and the Beginning (meaning "The First Place" or "The Ruler") of God's creation indicate that the lethargic Laodicean church (vv. 15–18) should pay close attention to His words. The phrase about creation has been interpreted by some to teach that Jesus is the first being that God created. This is certainly not required by Greek grammar, and is contrary to other biblical passages. Christ is described in other passages of the NT as eternal (John 1:1–3) and as being God Himself (John 8:58; Phil. 2:6; Titus 2:13). Revelation speaks of Him as the First and the Last, the Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End. In fact, the Greek phrase in this verse can be translated in a more active sense, so as to read "the One who begins the creation of God."

3:15, 16 Cold water is refreshing; hot water is useful for medical purposes. Lukewarm water is neither. By analogy, the works of the Laodicean church made Christ want to vomit the believers out of His mouth. In very vivid terms, the Lord rejects the halfhearted efforts of self-satisfied Christians.

3:17, 18 The Laodicean church was spiritually self-deluded. Because the church was wealthy it assumed that it had need of nothing, when in actuality it was spiritually impoverished. The church believed that because it had expensive garments it was well-clothed, when it was really spiritually naked. It believed that physical sight indicated the ability to see spiritually, when it was actually blind to spiritual realities. Fortunately, Christ provides spiritual gold, heavenly white garments (7:13, 14; 19:7, 8), and healing eye salve to all who repent (v. 19).

3:19 God's love for His children manifests itself in rebuke and chastening when they go astray (vv. 15–18). The intent of the Lord's discipline is for our "profit, that we may be partakers of His holiness" (Heb. 12:10). The proper response to God's loving discipline is to repent (to change our wrong outlook) and be zealous to move away from a dangerous, lukewarm spiritual state (vv. 15, 16). These believers needed to change their perspective and seek the spiritual riches of the ultimate Overcomer.

3:20 I stand at the door and knock pictures the Lord Jesus seeking entrance into His own church (v. 14) for the purpose of renewed fellowship. Though it is often understood as Christ knocking at the door of an individual unbeliever's heart, the context makes that improbable.

3:21, 22 To him who overcomes: The promises to the faithful Christian reach a climax as the believer shares the actual throne with Christ. Those who share Christ's victorious experience on earth will have a victory similar to His. The victory of Christ led to His present position at the right hand of God in heaven, while the victory of believers leads to the privilege of sharing Christ's own earthly throne (2:26, 27; Luke 19:16–19; 2 Tim. 2:12).

Jesus Christ overcame by humble obedience, even to the point of death (Phil. 2:6–8). As a result, the Lord Jesus sat down … on His throne and will be highly exalted (Phil. 2:9–11). Just as Christ overcame through faithful obedience, a believer today who overcomes by humble, obedient faith will sit with Christ on His throne (20:4, 6). God's purpose in the church is to raise up co-heirs who will share Christ's authority in His kingdom. These co-heirs must overcome as Christ did by persevering in the faith despite suffering (Rom. 8:17; 2 Tim. 2:12).

4:1—5:14 This scene in heaven introduces the remainder of the Book of Revelation. Its characteristic movement of focus back and forth between heaven and earth is initiated here with the proclamation that Christ, “the Lamb who was slain” (5:12), is worthy to open the scroll revealing God’s plan (5:9), to reign, and to receive the praise of all creatures (5:10, 12, 13, 14).

4:1 This verse signals the beginning of a new section of the Book of Revelation, which reveals the terrifying events that will occur in the future. This is the main section of the Apocalypse, and it continues through 22:5. Come up here is also the command given to the two resurrected witnesses in 11:12. Some consider this command to refer to the rapture of the church before “the great tribulation” (7:14; Matt. 24:21). However, it may be simply a phrase in apocalyptic style that introduces John’s revelatory vision (v. 2).

4:4 Twenty-four elders occupy other thrones. The identity of the elders is not certain. Some think that they represent the church or believers in heaven, but it seems preferable to view the elders as angels who comprise a heavenly ruling council (Jer. 23:18, 22). Authority is invested in those who by reason of age or experience are best qualified to rule. While it may refer to elders who represent the church, it must be noted that the seventieth week of Daniel is about to begin and God is once again dealing with Israel while the church in heaven is for a time out of view. It is also unlikely (logically and sequentially) that the church as the bride would be enthroned before their Lord and husband is recognized as being worthy to rule (5:8, 9). In fact, the church is to share His throne which has yet to be established (3:21). These elders function as ruling priests in the present age. Michael, an angel, is identified as one of these chief princes (Dan. 10:13; Col. 1:16). In contrast, the church is not prepared to rule until 19:7, 8. The white robes and crowns of gold point to those who are confirmed in righteousness and who possess ruling authority. The wearing of the crowns indicates that the elders had already been judged and rewarded.

IN FOCUS

“seven Spirits”

(Gk. hepta pneumata) (1:4; 3:1; 4:5; 5:6) Strong’s #2033; 4151: This term connotes the “sevenfold Spirit.” Since the number seven represents completeness, this description of the divine Spirit depicts the sevenfold energy of the Holy Spirit, His perfect, complete, and universal energy. The term sevenfold probably corresponds to the earlier reference to the seven churches. The Spirit of God is one in His essence but numerous in His gracious influences. The origin of this expression could have been a popular interpretation of Is. 11:1, 2 in the Greek OT, which was taken as a reference to the sevenfold spiritual blessings.

4:5 Lightnings and thunderings reflect the awesome majesty of God and recall the divine authority to judge (6:1; 8:5; 11:19; 14:2; 16:18; 19:6). Seven Spirits of God as represented by seven lamps presents the fullness of the sevenfold character of the Holy Spirit (Is. 11:2, 3). The seven lamps or torches signify the unique role of the Holy Spirit in executing judgment.

4:6 The sea of glass, like crystal, makes the appearance of the heavenly throne room even more awe-inspiring. It will be the “victory stand” for believing martyrs in 15:2. The four living creatures are strikingly similar to the cherubim (angels) Ezekiel saw close to God’s throne (Ezek. 10:1–20). Full of eyes means that these creatures see everything.

4:7 The lion, calf, man, and eagle have been understood as referring to the four Gospels with their distinctive portrayals of Christ. However, the description recalls the four cherubim in Ezek. 1:4–10, and thus the four figures probably represent four different angels (Ezek. 10). These living creatures or angels seem to be associated with creation and its ultimate redemption.

4:8–11 Rest is a physical necessity of earthly life, but in heaven it is unnecessary. There is constant worship day and night. Holy, holy, holy recalls the similar heavenly scene in Is. 6:1–10. Was and is and is to come speaks of the eternal nature of God, past, present, and future. The elders cast their crowns before the throne, symbolizing the willing surrender of their authority in light of the worthiness of God as Creator. Because no one but God can create, He alone should be worshiped and recognized as sovereign.

5:1 A scroll … sealed with seven seals cannot be read until all the seals have been opened. The scroll apparently contains the judgments and redemption seen in later chapters. It may also be the scroll that was sealed in Dan. 12:4. There appears to be an allusion to the scroll the Lord handed Ezekiel in Ezek. 2:9, 10.

5:2–4 No creature in all of creation was found worthy to open the seals on the scroll in God's hand (v. 1).

5:5, 6 Here we see the consummation of God's twofold purpose in history: to reclaim His kingdom and to redeem His people. This twofold victory over Satan is first predicted in Gen. 3:15 and then covenanted to Abraham in the promise of a land and a Seed (Gen. 12:1–3, Deut. 30:1–5, 2 Sam. 7:12–16).

5:5 The Lion of the tribe of Judah (Gen. 49:8–10) and the Root of David (Is. 11:1, 10) are messianic titles for Jesus Christ. Prevailed refers to the death and resurrection of Christ on behalf of those who would be redeemed (v. 9).

5:6 The Lamb that had been slain is Christ, whom John the Baptist called "the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world" (John 1:29). How striking that Christ's worthiness is seen by John more in terms of a lowly lamb than a regal lion (5:5)! In the Bible, horns stand for power, strength, and the authority to rule (Dan. 7:8, 20, 24). Sent out into all the earth indicates that the Lamb knows exactly what is going on in the rest of the created realm while He is in the heavenly throne room.

5:7 The reception of the scroll from the Father demonstrates that judgment and authority over the earth is committed to the Son (Dan. 7:13, 14). The scroll is likely the same one sealed by Daniel (Dan. 12:9).

5:8 The prayers of the saints (believers) play an important role in the Lamb's opening of the scroll and the ensuing judgment (8:1–6). Golden bowls are also used to pour out God's wrath on the earth (15:7; 16:1–21).

5:9 The new song celebrates the redemptive work of the Son as the basis of His right to judge. Divine rule has its basis in creation (ch. 4) and redemption. Christ is worthy to open the scroll because He was slain on the Cross, purchasing with His blood believers out of every nation. True authority links both sovereignty and love, might and morality.

5:10 Many claim that the reign of the saints on the earth is a fancy. It is claimed that it is carnal and Jewish. The saints in heaven, who are made kings and priests (1:6), do not so regard it. That reign is not first spoken of in 20:4, because it has been stated in 3:21 in a promise and here in praise (compare Matt. 25:31).

5:11, 12 Innumerable angels join the living creatures and the elders in offering praise to Christ. They have a new appreciation for the loving heart of their Creator and sovereign Lord. They recognize His deserved right to rule and ascribe to Him all the necessary attributes for ruling. thousands of thousands: A host that could not be counted.

5:13, 14 Loud sevenfold praise for the Lamb spills over from the heavenly throne room and is joined by every creature … on the earth … under the earth … in the sea, as is seen in Pss. 148 and 150. Blessing and honor and glory and power: From the vantage point of heaven, these verses look forward to the climactic point when “every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord” (Phil. 2:11).

6:1—8:1 This section details the opening of the seven seals on the scroll by the Lamb who was found worthy. The scroll cannot be opened and read until all the seals have been broken. Therefore, the narrative of 6:1—8:1 apparently represents events prior to the outpouring of God's judgment contained in the scroll. The unsealing of the scroll follows the general pattern of the signs called "the beginning of sorrows" (Matt. 24:8) in the Olivet Discourse (Matt. 24:1–31). Some think that a number of these events have already taken place or will take place before the tribulation begins. Others think this section describes the beginning of the tribulation period.

6:1, 2 Because the first rider is on a white horse and is conquering, some take it to be Christ (19:11). If so, His full conquest is considerably delayed (19:11—20:6). Other widely held views are that this is the Antichrist, or a spirit of conquest and delusion (Matt. 24:3–6). The bow indicates that the rider is a warrior. The crown suggests that he is a ruler. The bow without the arrow could point to peaceful political conquest founded on military might. The emergence of this first rider most likely occurs at the beginning of the seventieth week of Daniel (Dan. 9:25–27).

6:3, 4 The red color of the second horse stands for bloodshed, and killing with the sword, for war instead of peace on earth (Matt. 24:6, 7). Man's efforts to effect a lasting peace will be frustrated. Mankind is now introduced to a version of history apart from the influence of the divine restrainer (2 Thess. 2:7, 8).

6:5, 6 The black horse apparently symbolizes famine, since the prices for the wheat and barley are extraordinarily high, as they would be in a time of extreme drought.

6:7, 8 Pale, which means literally "yellowish-green," is the color of a corpse. Thus, it is fitting that the pale horse is ridden by a figure named Death. Hades follows after Death to claim those who have died. This fourth judgment is the inevitable consequence of the first three. It is the greatest destruction of human life in recorded history. Up to this point, these three are characterized as the sword, famine, and pestilence. They are the same means that God used to bring the nation of Israel to repentance (1 Kin. 8:33–39; 1 Chr. 21:12), and in Revelation a godly nucleus does arise as a result of these judgments (7:3–8).

IN FOCUS

"Hades"

(Gk. hades) (6:8; 20:13, 14; Luke 16:23; Acts 2:27, 31) Strong's #86: The Greek term means "the place of the unseen." It designates the invisible world of the dead, as does the Hebrew word sheol. All people who die go to Hades because all pass from the visible world to the invisible. The association between death and Hades is therefore a natural one. Unfortunately, this word has often been associated with hell, a place of eternal punishment. But there is a different Greek word for hell; it is gehenna (Mark 9:43–45). We cannot avoid Hades, but we can avoid hell, by believing in Jesus and receiving eternal life.

6:9, 10 The fifth seal focuses on martyrs slain for standing for the word of God and Christ's testimony, the very reasons John was exiled to Patmos (1:9). These martyrs' souls are under the altar because sacrificial blood was poured beside the base of the altar in the temple (Ex. 29:12). The martyrs are impatient for the Lord to avenge their blood and to judge all those who are not among His redeemed (5:9). This vengeance will not be carried out completely until 19:2.

6:11 Each martyr is given the white robe of the overcomer (3:5) and told to rest … until God's appointed time. "Vengeance is mine," says the Lord (Deut. 32:35; Rom. 12:19); it will come in His perfect timing.

6:12, 13 A great earthquake also occurs in 11:13; 16:18. The effects on the sun, moon, and stars are worded similarly to Matt. 24:29, placing these events in proximity to the coming of the Son of Man (Matt. 24:30). Late figs appeared in the winter, the off-season, and were easily blown off the tree.

6:14 The description of the sky … rolled up could be related to the effects on the sun, moon, and stars (vv. 12, 13). It may also be describing the scene of the Son of Man coming on the clouds of heaven (Matt. 24:30). The moving of every mountain and island would cause seismic damage in excess of any recorded earthquake.

6:15–17 Wrath means "anger." God's wrath is presently revealed against unbelievers by letting them go their way and face the consequences of their behavior (Rom. 1:18–32). However, the great day of His wrath (Rom. 2:5) is still to come. Has come may mean "has taken place" or "has begun.” Who is able to stand is answered in the surrounding context. Unbelievers, no matter how strong, cannot stand. Those protected by the Lord are enabled to stand, whether on earth (7:1–8) or in God’s presence in heaven (7:9–17).

Worship or Wrath?

For some people, Christ makes very little difference in how one looks at life. Faith doesn't really matter. But in Rev. 4—10, John provides us with a peek into the future and the prospect of life or death forever. Clearly, the time we spend on earth is but a brief preamble to something much larger.

This section offers us a bird's-eye view of the coming apocalypse on earth and the promised joy of heaven (Rev. 4:1). The contrasts are severe. Those who embrace Christ and His provision for sin can anticipate a celebration that exceeds their greatest expectations. Those without Christ have cause to tremble for their refusal to accept His offer of deliverance from the wrath to come.

The message is plain: only in Christ is there hope of escaping wrath. That way of escape is offered right now. Waiting to accept Christ's offer only increases the risk of experiencing adverse judgment. It also deprives a person of new life today.

7:1 There are two visions in this chapter: the 144,000 servants of God (vv. 1–8) and the innumerable multitude now in heaven (vv. 9–17). The four angels seem to be God's divine agents associated with the judgments. The four winds represent destructive forces from every direction.

7:2, 3 Before the judgments are unleashed, God prepares to seal 144,000 of His servants on their foreheads. Seals are signs of ownership or authority that in ancient times were stamped onto a document by pressing a signet or cylinder into a lump of clay at the point where the document was opened and closed. God has the authority to open whatever seal He wishes (Matt. 27:66) or to place a seal on His child which no one else can break (Eph. 1:13; 4:30). Both perspectives lend confidence and security to a believer. In this case, the seal guarantees their preservation during the tribulation. Their identification as servants in an open fashion (on their foreheads) indicates that they are regenerated through faith in Christ and openly confess their faith.

7:4 One hundred and forty-four thousand may be taken either as an actual number or as a number symbolizing completeness (12 x 12 x 1000), referring to all who will be saved. The first option is more likely because of the details developed in vv. 5–8. The children of Israel is understood by some as the church, the new Israel (Gal. 6:16), and by others as the nation of Israel.

7:5–8 Judah is placed first in this list of the Israelite tribes because Christ, the Messiah, is the "Lion of the tribe of Judah" (5:5; Gen. 49:8–10). Reuben is next as Jacob's firstborn (Gen. 49:3, 4). Dan and Ephraim are omitted, perhaps because of their gross idolatry during the period of the judges, demonstrated by the incident in Dan (Judg. 18). Joseph and his son Manasseh are both included, as is Levi, bringing the number of tribes to twelve.

7:9, 10 The great multitude, in addition to praising God and the Lamb for providing salvation, will later glorify God for judging Babylon (19:1–3) and will proclaim "the marriage of the Lamb" (19:6, 7). This multitude of a multinational character might very well represent the evangelistic fruit of the labor of the 144,000 during the seven-year tribulation period. In His anger God will remember mercy. White robes may be the garments of overcoming believers (3:5, 18) or of martyrs (6:11). Palm branches were typically waved by crowds at victory celebrations (John 12:13).

7:11, 12 The intensifying scene of worship continues in the heavenly throne room (chs. 4; 5) with the added element of thanksgiving (7:12), apparently for the "salvation" of the "great multitude" (7:9). Salvation in Christ is something for which to be eternally grateful!

7:13 One of the elders (since he is part of the church in heaven, he knows the answer, compare 1 Cor. 13:12) asked John the identity of the great company, evidently to focus attention on their essential nature.

7:14 This vast multitude has come out of the great tribulation, referring to "the hour of trial which shall come upon the whole world" (3:10). In view of the great loss of life during this time period, martyrdom is most likely the means of their escape. Tribulation was already being experienced by the church in John's day (2:10; Acts 14:22). However, the great tribulation, predicted in Dan. 12:1, will be of an intensity "such as has not been since the beginning of the world until this time, no, nor ever shall be" (Matt. 24:21). Washed their robes … in the blood of the Lamb may imply martyrdom, but it more likely refers to forgiveness of sins through faith in Christ and His shed blood (1:5; 5:9).

7:15 The great multitude (v. 9) will serve the Lamb day and night. The 144,000 are later described as "the ones who follow the Lamb wherever He goes" (14:4). To serve indicates priestly service before the Lord (1:6; 5:10). The priesthood of Christians will enter a new phase in the presence of God in heaven. Temple actually refers to the inner sanctuary of the temple rather than the outer courts (11:19). The word translated dwell means "to live in a tent" or "to tabernacle." This verse echoes John 1:14. Believers who did not see Christ when He lived on this earth in His first coming will go to heaven, where He will dwell among them.

7:16, 17 Shepherd them and lead them to living fountains of waters recalls Ps. 23. The Lord who is the Shepherd in Ps. 23:1 is equated here with the Lamb. Both King David and the great multitude (v. 9) will "dwell in the house of the LORD forever" (Ps. 23:6), with Christ as their pastor. The "living" waters explain why there is no thirst (v. 16). The water of life is freely available to all who will come to Christ by faith (22:17). God will wipe away every tear means that there will be no crying, sorrow, or pain in the presence of the Lord.

IN DEPTH

Revelation as Apocalyptic Literature

The word revelation (1:1) is a translation of the Greek word apokalupsis, from which we get the English words apocalypse and apocalyptic. An apocalypse is a special kind of prophecy. It features what most people associate with prophetic works of all kinds—dramatic, symbolic predictions of the future communicated to a prophet in a vision. The OT contains apocalyptic sections in Daniel, Ezekiel, and Zechariah, which were written around the sixth century B.C. Much of the Book of Revelation is apocalyptic.

Jewish apocalyptic literature outside the Bible flourished from the second century B.C. through at least the first century A.D. In most cases, these works were written to encourage and comfort the Jewish people, who were enduring the hardships of oppressive foreign rule. Some of these works are found in the Apocrypha and the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Because of its many symbols, apocalyptic prophecy is harder to interpret than any other kind of Scripture. Sometimes explicit interpretations (1:20) or an obvious reference to OT imagery or visions interpreted in previous passages (Dan. 7) give strong clues. In other cases, we must guess or infer the meaning. Revelation's four horsemen, the locusts, the dragon, and the beasts have all challenged commentators ever since John first wrote of them.

It helps to remember that like the nonbiblical apocalyptic literature of its day, Revelation's purpose is to comfort and challenge its readers. It affirms God's sovereign control over history and the certainty of His plan for the future. It reminds us that our present difficulties have a connection to the future, a future firmly in God's hands.

Though most of the Book of Revelation is apocalyptic, not all of it is. Revelation also contains straightforward prophecy (1:3) and seven letters of admonition (1:4). As prophecy, it focuses on our present duties and their relationship to the future. As a letter, it gives advice and encouragement to the believers at seven churches (1:4, 11; 2:1—3:22). In the final analysis, the Book of Revelation is a hybrid of apocalypse and prophecy written within the framework of an ancient Greek letter. The purpose of this letter is to inspire us to overcome all obstacles by steadfastly holding on to our faith (2:7, 17, 25, 26; 3:5, 11, 12, 21). The central message of the letter is clear: God is in control of all of history. He is coming back; and He will come in judgment, rewarding those who have remained faithful to Him (22:7, 12, 13, 20).

8:1 The seventh seal on the scroll (5:1) is opened, finally allowing it to be unrolled. Silence in heaven for about half an hour seems to mark a brief but significant break between the unsealing of the scroll (6:1—8:1) and the trumpet judgments (8:6—11:19). This silence is broken only by a heavenly offering and "the prayers of all the saints" (vv. 3, 4). It is, however, the eerie silence before the storm as all of heaven awaits the coming judgment.

8:2 The judgments of the seven trumpets unfold in a pattern parallel to the unsealing of the seven-sealed scroll (6:1—8:1). This has led some to conclude that both describe the same time period from different angles, but greatly increased severity of the trumpet judgments makes this unlikely. The sounding of a trumpet had more than one significance in the OT. It was used to gather the Lord's people (Num. 10:7, 8), to assemble the Lord's army (Num. 10:9), to announce a new king (1 Kin. 1:34–39), and to proclaim the Year of Jubilee (Lev. 25:9). In this context, the sounding of trumpets indicates a declaration of war.

8:2–6 The seven angels who stand before God are likely "the angels of the seven churches" (1:20). The prayers of God's saints seem to have a part in the judgment of God. The censer is a firepan used for burning incense. The golden altar reflects the splendor of the heavenly throne room (4:2, 3). Incense here may speak of the fragrance of the infinite perfections of Christ that accompanies the prayers of all the saints or is mingled with their prayers. The addition of this incense is necessary to make our prayers acceptable before the throne. In breaking the silence in heaven (v. 1), the prayers of God's people for God to act in just judgment (6:10) are heard and responded to with noises, thunderings, lightnings, and an earthquake.

8:7–12 As in the sequence of the first four seals, the angels sound the first four trumpets in rapid succession. But the effects of the trumpet judgments on earth are far more devastating than the seal judgments. A third of all trees and grass; a third of the sea, the living creatures in the sea, and the ships on the sea; a third of all rivers and springs of water; and apparently a third of all daylight and moonlight are affected by the trumpet judgments. The first four judgments seem designed to reverse in part the original creation of God. The Lord initially assaults the environment. Food is destroyed; distribution of goods is crippled; water supply is severely limited; production is cut drastically.

8:7 When the first angel sounds the trumpet, a storm of hail, fire, and blood breaks forth. This incredible blend of destruction and horror sounds like a combination of the imagery of the first (Ex. 7:19, 20) and seventh (Ex. 9:22–25) plagues of God upon Egypt. A third here could be figurative for widespread, but not yet complete, destruction.

8:8, 9 A great mountain burning suggests a massive island volcano erupting explosively over a far-flung section of ocean waters. The description of the effects on the sea, however, indicates that this is much more than windblown pollution from volcanic ash. The sea becoming blood and the creatures in the sea dying are like an extension of the first plague on the Egyptians, the turning of the waters of the Nile River into blood (Ex. 7:17–21).

8:10 Star here translates the same term used for the angelic star in 9:1 and for Christ as "the Bright and Morning Star" in 22:16. But the precise meaning of each word must be carefully interpreted in its context. Here the star seems to be a huge asteroid that falls from heaven to earth, burning like a torch as it enters the atmosphere. The star could fall on a third of the rivers and … springs by disintegrating as it passes through the earth's atmosphere. It is also possible that the pollution of the headwaters of a number of the world's major rivers and underground water sources could rapidly spread to a third of the planet's waters.

8:11 Wormwood is a plant found in the Middle East, known for its bitter taste. Here and elsewhere (Lam. 3:19) the term is figurative for bitterness. Normally wormwood is not poisonous, but the plague of the third trumpet involves effects far more potent than the taste of this bitter plant: many men die from the water. Rapid pollution of a third of the world's drinking water would set off a chaotic crisis. The Lord will now expose the infidelity of the human heart in an unmistakable fashion (9:21).

8:12 Reference to darkening of the sun, moon, and stars is reminiscent of the ninth plague upon Egypt (Ex. 10:21, 22), and of the heavenly disturbances involved in Christ's description of His second coming (Matt. 24:29, 30). It is also similar to the phenomena of the sixth seal (6:12). A third of the day did not shine could mean that the sun, moon, and stars will not be seen for several hours of the normal cycle of day and night. But probably what is meant is that the intensity of light during the day and night is reduced by a third because of cosmic and atmospheric disturbances (vv. 7, 8, 10).

8:13 Woe, woe, woe refers to the impact of the three remaining … trumpet judgments on the unbelieving inhabitants of the earth. The first woe is the fifth trumpet (9:12); the second woe is the sixth trumpet (11:14). The third woe is said to be “coming quickly” and may be the same as the seventh trumpet (11:15–19), although that is not stated. If not, the final woe may be focused on Babylon, the great harlot, because of the climactic use of “woe” (translated alas in 18:10, 16, 19).

9:1 The star fallen … to the earth may be a demon (v. 11), Satan himself (12:9), or an angel serving God (20:1). It most likely is Satan or one of his subordinates who is given authority to release a vast demonic host which had been imprisoned in the pit. Satan will launch one final massive effort to prevent the establishment of God's kingdom on earth. The bottomless pit is the interim jail for some demons (Luke 8:31). It is also the place of origin of the beast (11:7; 17:8). Furthermore, it will be the place where Satan will be imprisoned during Christ's reign (20:2, 3).

9:2 Smoke is an accurate visual description of a huge locust swarm seen at some distance. Since the smoke arose out of the pit, the swarm is undoubtedly demonic (11:7).

9:3 Locusts, or grasshoppers, were greatly feared in ancient agricultural societies because they devoured crops. In Ex. 10:12–15, a plague of locusts wiped out what was left of Egypt's crops. Joel 1:2 tells of an invasion of locusts that the Lord used to judge unrepentant Judah, which was a foreshadowing of the day of the Lord. Perhaps that passage is a basis of the imagery in vv. 2–10. Scorpions sting with their tails, causing great pain and even death (v. 10). The only point of comparison between the locusts and the scorpions is the "stings in their tails" (v. 10).

9:4 God controls the locusts' actions, causing them to avoid those who have the seal of God (7:2–4). Since no harm is to be done to the grass or any tree—just unbelieving people who do not possess the seal of God—these insects are not ordinary locusts (vv. 7–10). A seal is placed on the 144,000 "of all the tribes of the children of Israel" (7:2–4) to protect them during "the great tribulation" (7:14). All those who have believed the gospel of salvation through Jesus Christ are "sealed with the Holy Spirit" (Eph. 1:13) until the final day of redemption and inheritance (Eph. 1:14).

9:5, 6 The torment apparently lasts five months because that is the life span of a locust. Many unbelieving men will seek death, but unsuccessfully. The passage does not say how their death wish is frustrated. However, this time period is an additional opportunity for these unbelievers to repent before the Lord (vv. 20, 21) and to be saved through Christ.

9:7 The phrase like horses prepared for battle may be further explained in v. 9 as "like breastplates of iron." If so, this means the locusts have some sort of armor. Crowns … like gold may imply that the locusts have high status among the demons but still rank below their king, Abaddon or Apollyon (v. 11). faces of men: The locusts have some humanlike characteristics.

9:8 Hair like women's may refer to the long antennae of insects. Teeth … like lions' suggests strength and cruelty, a description similar to that of the beast in 13:2.

9:9–11 The organization of the locusts out of the bottomless pit (9:2) under a king and wearing crowns themselves (9:7) implies that these may be in a hierarchy like "principalities … powers … rulers of the darkness of this age" (Eph. 6:12). The angel of the bottomless pit is demonic and controls the demonic locusts (vv. 3–10). If this angel serves God, this is another instance where the activity of Satan or his demons is under the Lord's sovereign control (2 Cor. 12:7, 9). The name of the angel in Hebrew as in Greek means "Destruction."

9:12 The first woe spoken of in 8:13 is the demonic locust plague that comprises the fifth trumpet (vv. 1–11). This implies that the two remaining woes are the sixth (vv. 13–21; 11:14) and seventh trumpets (11:15–19).

9:13 The fact that John heard a voice instead of a symphony of the voices of all the martyrs (6:9, 10), and a voice of authority instead of an angel's voice (8:3–5), indicates that the speaker is the Lamb who was slain and has redeemed His people (5:9).

9:14–16 The great river Euphrates is the eastern boundary of the land promised to Abraham and his descendants in Gen. 15:18, as well as the geographic area from which powerful enemies like Assyria and Babylon came to invade Israel (Is. 8:5–8). It may represent the seat of Satan's former victory (in the Garden of Eden). The release of the four angels at the exact hour and day is in keeping with apocalyptic literature's portrayal of God's sovereign control of the timing of His plan (Dan. 9:24–27). The army of … two hundred million will kill a third of mankind, under the command or influence of the four angels who were released. A third of humankind could number in the billions. Coupled with the former destruction of one-fourth of humanity, over one-half of the world's population will have been killed. Some hold that a third here is merely a stylistic feature of the trumpet judgments (8:7–12). Note also that widespread killing had already visited a fourth of the earth during the opening of the fourth seal (6:8), and many died during the catastrophes of the first three trumpets (8:7–11), further reducing the world population.

9:17–19 Although it is the horsemen for whom the number of two hundred million is given (v. 16), the horses they ride and their killing power are primarily described. There are similarities between the horses of the sixth trumpet judgment and the locusts shaped "like horses" (v. 7) of the fifth trumpet. The mention of breastplates (vv. 9), the comparison with lions (vv. 8), and the power in their tails (vv. 5, 10) could suggest that these two passages offer different perspectives on the same demonically inspired force. This is unlikely, however, because the locusts are not given authority to kill (v. 5), but only to torment, while the horses kill a third of mankind.

9:20, 21 The rest of mankind who do not repent does not include those who "have the seal of God on their foreheads" (v. 4; 7:2–4). The unwillingness to repent despite the incredible devastation of the plagues is reminiscent of Pharaoh's attitude toward most of the plagues that came upon Egypt (Ex. 7:22; 9:7). Repent here means to change one's mind about ungodly works, to stop trusting demons and idols and to turn to the Lord Jesus Christ in faith (Luke 24:47; Acts 26:20).

10:1–11:14 This section serves as an interlude between the sixth and seventh (11:15–19) trumpet judgments much as Rev. 7 was a parenthesis between the sixth and seventh seals. Again there are two scenes: the little scroll (ch. 10) and the two witnesses (11:1–14), as there were in the first interlude (7:1–8; 7:9–17).

10:1 This mighty angel could be the "strong angel" of 5:2 or the angel "having great authority" of 18:1. It is unlikely that this is Michael, who is referred to by name elsewhere (12:7; Dan. 12:1), or Christ, since He is never called an angel in the NT. Furthermore, unlike Christ, this angel comes to earth before the time of tribulation is over.

10:2 The little book is not the same as the scroll that was unsealed in 6:1—8:1. It is more likely the scroll eaten by Ezekiel (Ezek. 2:9—3:3), although this scroll causes John's stomach to become bitter (vv. 9, 10), not just his spirit (Ezek. 3:14). The angel standing with one foot on the sea and the other on the land conveys the image of taking possession. A majestic representative of God's throne is intervening in the affairs of the earth.

10:3, 4 The devil and his hordes present themselves as fierce lions (9:8, 17; 1 Pet. 5:8). The victorious lion of Judah (5:5) also has an angelic servant who roars like a lion. It cannot be known what the seven thunders uttered because a heavenly voice, perhaps Christ's, commanded John to seal up what he had heard (Dan. 12:4, 9). Perhaps the seven thunders constitute absolute justice with no place for mercy and no remembrance of God's covenants with Israel. There will be no total obliteration of Israel, and He will not totally destroy the earth.

10:5, 6 swore by Him who lives forever: Only by the all-powerful authority of the eternal Creator can the mighty angel (v. 1) make the declaration about how and when "the mystery of God would be finished" (v. 7). After the sounding of the seventh trumpet (11:15–19), there will be no more delay in the unfolding of events leading toward Christ's return (19:11–21). All will happen in rapid-fire order. Delay (Gk. chronos, "time") means time prolonging the final outworking of the mystery of God, not delay caused by God arbitrarily putting off the final stanza of earthly history foretold by the prophets (v. 7).

10:7 The mystery of God, truth that has not been previously revealed (Eph. 3:9), will be revealed and finished as the events of the final half of the Apocalypse develop. Significant aspects of this mystery have already been revealed through the OT and NT prophets, but much remains that will be understood only when the events take place.

10:8–11 As words of judgment, the book would make John's stomach bitter, in the same way that Ezekiel's spirit had become bitter (Ezek. 3:14). The events of Ezek. 2 and 3 occurred soon before God's judgment on Judah and Jerusalem and were in effect the prophet's commission. John may have sensed a similar commission here to prophesy his message of judgment to the world. John's prophecy about peoples, nations, tongues, and kings may refer specifically to the remainder of the second woe (11:1–14), since there is a focus on the testimony of the two witnesses. However, the use of similar expressions in 13:7; 14:6; and 17:15 implies that John's commission to prophesy most or all of the Book of Revelation, a prophecy which speaks of all the events leading up to Christ's second coming (19:11–21).

11:1 John is given a reed like a measuring rod, much like that used by Ezekiel (Ezek. 40:3, 5) in his vision of the measuring of the temple (Ezek. 40—48). measure the temple … altar: This is the temple of the tribulation period that will eventually be desecrated (13:14, 15; Dan. 9:27; Luke 21:24; 2 Thess. 2:4). The measuring of those who worship there may mean that those who worship the Lord in the temple will be protected, while unbelieving Gentiles will not.

11:2 Luke 21:24 prophesies that the Gentiles will tread the holy city underfoot until "the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled." Apparently the period of forty-two months is the conclusion of "the times of the Gentiles." Gentiles here may also be translated "nations" (v. 9; 10:11).

11:3 Forty-two months (v. 2) is the same length of time as one thousand two hundred … sixty days (12:6). Almost certainly "a time and times and half a time" (12:14) is also a period of three and a half years made up of forty-two thirty-day lunar months. These expressions draw from the prophecies in Daniel (Dan. 12:6, 7, 11, 12). The two witnesses will prophesy for 1260 days with astounding power (vv. 5, 6). Therefore, it seems that the beast's period of domination (v. 7; 13:5) follows the ministry of the witnesses, each occupying roughly half the tribulation period. The two unnamed witnesses are striking similar to Elijah (vv. 5, 6; 1 Kin. 17; Mal. 4:5) and Moses (v. 6; Ex. 7—11), who appeared together with Christ on the Mount of Transfiguration (Luke 9:29–32). It is also possible that these two witnesses symbolize all faithful believers testifying during the tribulation. Clothed in sackcloth means the witnesses are mourning for the unrepentant world to which they prophesy (Matt. 11:21).

11:4 The witnesses are described as two olive tree and two lampstands, linking them to the vision in Zech. 4 of "the two anointed ones, who stand beside the Lord of the whole earth" (Zech. 4:14). There the two anointed ones are Zerubbabel and Joshua the priest. But the overarching principle for these and all other witnesses for the Lord is that their testimony to the truth is "not by might nor by power, but by My Spirit" (Zech. 4:6).

11:5 Fire coming out of the mouth of the two witnesses so that anyone who opposes them is killed is close to the description of the plague of death brought about by the army of horsemen in 9:16–18. Apparently their ministry is unstoppable for three and one-half years (11:3) until "they finish their testimony" (11:7). The fire is also reminiscent of two of Elijah's miracles (1 Kin. 18; 2 Kin. 1).

11:6 The two witnesses have the authority to prevent rain during the days of their prophecy, identifying them with Elijah, whose prayer caused it not to rain for three and one-half years (James 5:17). Turning the waters into blood (Ex. 7:17–21) and striking the earth with plagues (Ex. 7—11) is reminiscent of Moses in Egypt.

11:7, 8 Finish translates the same word Jesus shouted climactically and triumphantly from the Cross: "It is finished" (John 19:30). The beast is allowed to kill the two witnesses in the same city where Jesus was put to death. The beast, who emerges as the satanically empowered world ruler in chs. 13; 17, emerges from the bottomless pit, as did the demonic locust plague of the fifth trumpet (9:1–10). The great city in Revelation is often Babylon (14:8), which possibly represents Rome (1 Pet. 5:13). But the further description where also our Lord was crucified seems to refer to Jerusalem. Some see the phrase as symbolic, meaning the sinful world in which Christ was crucified. Sodom was the prototype for the moral degeneration of this great city (Gen. 19); Egypt was the prototype for its rampant idolatry.

11:9, 10 The peoples, tribes, tongues, and nations are those to whom the gospel witness must continue until "the end of the age" (Matt. 28:19, 20). Those who dwell on the earth are those upon whom God's judgment falls (6:10, 8:13). Being dead for three-and-a-half days recalls the three and one-half year ministry of the witnesses (v. 3). The death of the two prophets (v. 7) will set off a global celebration among unbelievers who have hated their message of truth.

11:11 Breath … from God entered them recalls Ezekiel's prophecy of the resuscitation of the dry bones (Ezek. 37). Such a public resurrection could cause great fear worldwide if it were broadcast by means of modern satellite technology. The entire sequence of events would serve to remind Israel of the ministry of Jesus Christ—His death, resurrection, and ascension.

11:12 Come up here is the same command given to John in 4:1. Ascended … in a cloud recalls the description of Christ's ascension (Acts 1:9) and Paul's teaching about the Rapture in 1 Thess. 4:17. Some hold that the rapture of the church takes place at this point. But it is difficult to reconcile this description of death and resurrection (11:9–11) with the taking up of living believers (that is, the Rapture).

11:13 In the same hour: Soon after the two witnesses ascend to heaven, a great earthquake (6:12) will destroy a tenth of the city, resulting in seven thousand casualties. Those who survive will be terrified and will glorify God.

11:14 The second woe includes the sixth trumpet (9:12–21) and a second interlude (10:1—11:13). The third woe is apparently the seventh trumpet (vv. 15–19), since it is said to be coming quickly, and since 8:13 relates the woes to the last three blasts of the trumpet. The final woe may extend further since the word woe recurs in 12:12.

11:15 Our Lord … shall reign forever anticipates the return of Christ (6:12–17; 19:11–21).

11:16–18 The twenty-four elders were previously seen as continually worshiping God (4:10, 11) and the Lord Jesus (5:8–10). Here their thanksgiving to the Lord God Almighty enters a new phase: they praise God's power and wrath and the corresponding distribution of reward and judgment. This stanza of heavenly thanks seems to reflect on the fulfillment of the great messianic prophecy in Ps. 2.

11:17 Reigned may refer to a present rule in heaven, or to the fact that Christ has already come to earth to subdue the nations (v. 18) by this point. It is also possible that this is a past tense of certainty, signifying a future event as good as done in God's plan for the world. For example, in Rom. 8:30, the believer is said to be justified and already glorified (past tense), although glorification in fact takes place later, when the Christian comes into Jesus' presence.

11:18 Here God's wrath has come (6:16, 17). The wrath of Satan will also be seen in 12:12, but the divine wrath cannot be rivaled (14:19). The time of the dead includes the bestowing of rewards upon God's people, His servants, prophets, and saints (2 Cor. 5:10), and the pronouncement of everlasting judgment on the unbelieving nations (Matt. 25:46). This is what the martyrs prayed for in 6:10; it is not completed until 20:12–15. Those who fear God's name are those who have responded by faith to "the everlasting gospel" (14:6, 7), possibly including those who feared and glorified God in v. 13.

11:19 The temple of God here is not the one in vv. 1, 2. That earthly temple had an outer court "given to the Gentiles" (v. 2); this temple is in heaven. An ark of the covenant is spoken of here, even though the ark of the covenant made by Moses was probably destroyed by the Babylonians when they looted and burned the temple in Jerusalem (2 Chr. 36:18, 19). The ark represented God's presence, leadership, and protection of Israel in the wilderness (Num. 10:33–36) and in the Promised Land (Josh. 3:3, 15–17). The ark here may represent similar blessings related to the New Covenant and Christ's return (Heb. 9:1, 4, 11, 23–28). It may also look ahead to God's protection of "the woman"who gave birth to the Messiah in "the wilderness" in 12:5, 6, 14. Lightnings … thunderings proceed from God's throne in heaven (4:5), and were poured out on earth at the beginning of the trumpet judgments (8:5), along with an earthquake (8:5), then hail (8:7).

IN CONTEXT

Symbolic Pictures of Heavenly Conflict

The Book of Revelation frequently uses visons, symbols, and images that the first readers would have understood. The vision of the woman clothed with the sun, moon, and stars (Rev. 12:1) portrays the salvation struggle between good and evil.

Throughout the Greco-Roman world people told stories of divine deliverers destined to defeat evil dragons. The dragon tried to slay the newborn deliverer, but the deliverer miraculously survived, grew up, and returned to slay the dragon. In one version of the story, the emperor seems to have claimed to be the dragon-slayer. In Revelation, the wicked emperor is himself a pawn of the dragon, and the true ruler, the Child Jesus, is the One who will triumph over all the world's kingdoms (Rev. 12:5).

The writer of Revelation has interwoven echoes from the OT. The woman with the sun, moon, and twelve stars can be interpreted as Israel (Gen. 37:9), as in some later Jewish traditions about twelve stars. The OT portrays the faithful remnant of Israel as God's virgin bride, in contrast to a portrayal of unfaithful Israel as a prostitute. The OT and the Dead Sea Scrolls portray the righteous remnant of Israel laboring and giving birth to a child, symbolizing the future restoration of God's people (Is. 66:7–10; Mic. 5:3).

In Revelation, the woman's first Child (Rev. 12:2–5) is often interpreted as Jesus and her other "offspring" as Christian believers (12:17). As John wrote to first-century churches in Asia (Rev. 1:4, 11), his imagery of a woman birthing her Child and of conflict with the dragon would have been familiar to his readers.

12:1 In Revelation a sign is a person or event that looks beyond itself to some greater significance. In John's Gospel, each sign points to the divinity of Christ (John 2:11). In Revelation, besides the additional great signs in heaven (v. 3; 15:1), there are demonic signs on earth (13:13, 14; 16:14; 19:20). The woman clothed with the sun is interpreted by some as the church, by others as believing Jews, and by still others as ethnic Israelites. The garland of twelve stars is a reference to the twelve tribes of Israel, or perhaps to the twelve apostles (21:12–14). The stars recall Joseph's vision (Gen. 37:9–11), which signified the preeminence of Joseph over his brothers.

12:2 The description of labor and pain before giving birth to the Child who becomes ruler of the nations (v. 5) may speak specifically of Mary, the mother of Jesus (Mic. 5:3; Luke 2:5–7). Later details (vv. 6, 13–17), however, suggest that the woman probably has a broader reference. Since similar imagery is used of Israel in Mic. 4:9, 10, it may picture the Jewish nation or the believing remnant within the nation. In addition, the first prophecy of the Bible, Gen. 3:15, serves as the ultimate backdrop to this struggle between a woman and Satan.

12:3 The sign of the fiery red dragon is interpreted in v. 9 as Satan, who first appears in Scripture as the serpent in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 3). The imagery is in keeping with OT and extrabiblical usage (Is. 27:1). The dragon with the seven heads and ten horns refers to Satan and the empire over which he rules during the course of time. Seven heads, ten horns, and seven diadems refer to Satan's (v. 9) brilliance, power, and glory as "god of this age" (2 Cor. 4:4). This description is almost identical to that of the beast from the sea in 13:1.

12:4 The reference to a third of the stars may link this event to the earlier trumpet judgments in which a third is the characteristic proportion of destruction (8:7), including a "third of the stars" (8:12). However, many understand this reference to speak of the rebellion of a third of the angelic host following Satan. The attempt of the dragon to devour the newborn Christ Child reveals that the strategy of Herod to kill the baby Jesus (Matt. 2:3–16) was satanically inspired.

12:5 The male Child who will rule … with a rod of iron is the messianic figure of Ps. 2:8, 9; however, there is no earthly rule over all nations at this point. From the perspective of this heavenly scene, the Child-Ruler is soon caught up to the throne of God, apparently referring to the ascension of Christ (Acts 1:9).

12:6 The wilderness here is a place of protection prepared by God (Hos. 2:14) for the woman. The reference to God's feeding the woman in the wilderness recalls the Lord's miraculous provision for Israel in the Sinai wilderness (Ex. 16). One thousand two hundred and sixty days is the period of provision and protection for the woman in the wilderness. The detailed way in which this same length of time is expressed ("a time and times and half a time" in v. 14) suggests half of a literal seven-year tribulation period (Dan. 9:27).

12:7, 8 Michael is an archangel (Jude 9). According to Dan. 12:1, he is a special guardian angel for the nation of Israel. Apparently he commands an army of angels. Michael and the heavenly forces are victorious, making heaven off-limits to Satan and his demons.

12:9 The devil's expulsion from heaven to the earth means that this world becomes his base of operations, and that his anger is vented toward the remaining inhabitants of the earth (v. 12). Thus, it is likely that the end times will be the greatest period of spiritual warfare (Eph. 6:10–18) in history.

12:10, 11 The heavenly defeat of Satan (vv. 7–9) is followed by reference to his earthly setbacks, including the crucifixion of Christ (the blood of the Lamb), the verbal witness of believers (the word of their testimony), and the martyrdom of some of the brethren. All these events precede the coming of the kingdom of our God.

12:12 Those in the heavens have good reason to rejoice, because of the permanent expulsion of the devil. On the other hand, the earth and the sea (natural creation) now has an additional woe (8:13; 9:12; 11:14) to contend with—the great anger of the devil, who knows his time is short. Soon Satan is to be bound in the bottomless pit for a thousand years (20:1–3).

12:13–16 Much of the imagery in these verses seems to be parallel to the Exodus period in which Israel was pursued by Pharaoh and his army (Ex. 14). The later reference to "the song of Moses" (Ex. 15) in Rev. 15:3 lends support to this understanding.

12:13 The defeated earth-bound dragon (Satan, 12:9) now angrily persecuted the people from whom the Messiah comes, represented by the woman who bore the male ruler (12:1, 2, 4, 5). This may be ethnic Jewish people, or, if this group is in view in 12:10, 11 (brethren, blood of the lamb, testimony), it must be Jewish believers.

12:14 The woman (vv. 1–6) is somehow brought to her place of protection from the serpent, the wilderness, as if carried on the wings of a great eagle. This is reminiscent of how Israel escaped the Egyptians and came to Mount Sinai (Ex. 19:4; Deut. 32:11, 12). A time probably equals one year, so the period of protection here is three and one-half years, which corresponds to the length of the two witnesses' testimony in 11:3. It is also equivalent to the period of the beast's authority ("forty-two months" in 13:5), which includes his ability "to make war with the saints and to overcome them" (13:7; Dan. 7:25; 12:7).

12:15, 16 The danger of the flood to the woman is averted when the earth opens up, perhaps as it did to claim the rebellious Korah and his followers in Num. 16:30–33. There is no way of determining whether this describes an actual flood or figuratively describes the onslaught of Satan against those protected by God.

12:17 Enraged by his inability to destroy the woman, Satan, the dragon, resorts to war against a related group. The rest of her offspring are believers in Christ, since they keep the commandments of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ. It is not clear whether they are Jewish believers (physical offspring of the woman) or Gentile believers (spiritual offspring; Gal. 3:29). In desperation, Satan opposes every trace of a biblically oriented faith in Christ.

13:1, 2 The description of the first beast (seven heads … ten horns … ten crowns) is very similar to that of the great dragon (that is, Satan) in 12:3. Whereas the crowns are on the heads of the dragon, they are on the horns of the sea beast. The seven-headed beast may refer to Gentile world power as it relates to Israel, especially in the end times. The heads are identified both as mountains and as rulers (17:9, 10). A mountain is typically a symbol for a kingdom (Dan. 2:34, 35, 44, 45). The seven heads could be Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Greece, Persia, Rome, and a restored Roman Empire. The ten horns may signify the final form of Gentile world power. The beast receives his power and authority from the dragon. The parallel to the four beasts (especially the fourth) in Dan. 7 and the explanation of the beast given in 17:8–11 make it seem that the beast symbolizes both a revived Roman Empire, which exercises universal authority, and a specific ruler, whom John calls the "Antichrist" in 1 John 2:18. The blasphemous name may be the common claim of ancient Roman emperors to be divine, or blasphemy against the name of the true God (vv. 5, 6) as Daniel predicted of the "willful king" during the tribulation period (Dan. 11:36).

13:3, 4 One of his heads may stand for a specific ruler, but more likely it stands for an empire. The unbelieving world is enticed (12:9) by Satan to follow and worship the beast. Those who worshiped the beast also unwittingly worshiped the devil, who gave authority to the beast. Any false worship or idolatry is ultimately demonic and satanic (1 Cor. 10:20–22). The beast is worshiped because the world is convinced that no one is like him and that no one can successfully make war against him.

13:5–7 Forty-two months is the duration of the beast's worldwide supremacy, in keeping with the prophecy of Dan. 7:25. He likely gained his full measure of power after killing the two witnesses (11:7) at the end of their three and one-half year ministry (11:3). The two consecutive figures together add up to a total of seven years, the overall length of the tribulation period.

13:6, 7 This first use of the word tabernacle in Revelation (15:5; 21:3) may look back to the time when the power and presence of God were undoubted because the glory of God was seen clearly in the wilderness tabernacle. It may also look ahead to the time when God's tabernacle will be among His people in the new heaven and earth (21:3). In the meantime, there is no visible answer to the beast's blasphemy. He will appear to be victorious over God's people.

13:8 The Book of Life is the register of those who will receive eternal life, in contrast to those destined for the lake of fire (20:12, 15). Just as it was God's plan before the world began that Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God, would be slain for humanity's sin, so the names of believers have been included in the Book of Life from the beginning (17:8).

13:9 If anyone has an ear, let him hear seems to imply that either the following saying (v. 10) or the wider context has significant present application, not just future reference. Therefore, widespread spiritual delusion and blasphemy, as well as persecution and martyrdom, should not surprise believers at any point in history.

13:10 Even when believers face captivity or are being killed, they can have patience and faith, knowing that God will vindicate them (Rom. 12:19) on "the day of wrath and … righteous judgment" (Rom. 2:5).

13:11 Another means "another of the same kind," speaking of the close relationship between this beast from the earth and the previous beast that emerged from the sea (v. 1), even though their outward appearance is markedly different. This beast's actions described in vv. 12–17 make it virtually certain that he is the false prophet spoken of in 16:13; 19:20; 20:10. The two beasts may also symbolize the intermingling of secular, political power and religion during the Roman period and during the last days. This is the only place in Revelation where lamb does not refer to Christ. The lamb with two horns here is an emblem of Jewish worship and religious authority. Spoke like a dragon probably indicates that the second beast's message comes from the dragon (Satan), just as the first beast took his power and authority from the dragon (13:2).

13:12–15 Great signs, such as calling fire from heaven and giving breath and speech to the image of the first beast, are persuasive. These signs are very similar to those performed by the two witnesses (11:5, 6). The performance of great signs by the power of Satan is part of the mass deception prophesied by Paul in 2 Thess. 2:8, 9.

13:16, 17 The mark is equivalent to the name of the beast and the number of his name. Apparently the mark of the beast is some sort of identifiable proof of ownership and loyalty placed on the right hand or the forehead. Since there is no evidence of such a practice in first-century society, this mark is apparently an evil counterfeit of the seal on the foreheads of the servants of God in 7:3; 14:1.

13:18 After the preceding description of the tyranny of the beast, an explanatory comment designed to impart wisdom and understanding to the reader is given. The number (the "name" in v. 17) of the beast is 666; it is also described as the number of a man. The beast is merely a man, not a god, as the signs might suggest. The number 6, just short of 7 (the number of completeness), is intensified as 666—the number of the most powerful man who is not God. This man's identity will some day be understood in relation to the number 666. It is a key for identifying the Antichrist.

14:1 Mount Zion is a synonym for the earthly Jerusalem, focusing on the hill where the temple was built. There is some difficulty in deciding whether this is a reference to the earthly or to the heavenly Mount Zion (Heb. 12:22). The one hundred and forty-four thousand have God's name written on their foreheads, instead of the name of the beast (13:17). In 7:2–4 the protection for this group is referred to as a seal on their foreheads. This is intended to be a contrast to the mark of the beast (13:16, 17), or it may be a sign visible only in heaven and in the new earth and heaven (3:12; 22:4).

14:2, 3 The new song is probably the one sung before God's throne in 5:9, 10. Since that song is about redemption and victory in Christ, apparently only those already in heaven and those redeemed from the earth, like the hundred and forty-four thousand, are allowed to learn it.

14:4 The virgins are symbolic of spiritual purity (2 Cor. 11:2). Redeemed believers will not compromise with evil. They will reject false doctrine and refuse to worship the beast. In the NT, the firstfruits are the first part of a crop to be gathered, implying a much larger harvest to come later (1 Cor. 16:15). At times, the term emphasizes only the sanctified nature of a sacrifice (James 1:18). Certainly the commitment of the 144,000 to God emphasizes that they are holy ones, set apart to God. However, the continuing offer of the gospel (v. 6) and the harvest imagery (v. 15) also implies that many others will come to faith in Jesus Christ (vv. 12, 13).

14:5 The 144,000 were not sinless in their earthly lives (Rom. 3:23), but they were without deceit and fault with regard to their testimony for Christ. In particular, they did not participate in falsehood, because they rejected the lie of the Antichrist (2 Thess. 2). They were without fault or blemish because they refused the mark of the beast.

14:6, 7 The angel who preaches the gospel to every nation, tribe, tongue, and people helps to fulfill God's promise that the gospel "will be preached in all the world as a witness to all the nations" (Matt. 24:14) before Christ returns. The word gospel, which literally means "good news," is used here only in Revelation. Even at this late stage in God's judgment He continues to offer everlasting life to the world (John 3:16). The gospel message at this point beseeches unbelievers to fear God and give glory to Him and to escape the hour of His judgment. Earlier, some people had responded in this manner after the miracle of the two witnesses' resurrection (11:11–13). The activity of this angel may be behind the scenes, prompting a worldwide proclamation of the gospel by those who will declare the truth even at the cost of their lives.

INSIGHT

Babylon: A Symbol of Evil

In Revelation, Babylon (Rev. 14:8) probably represents, more than a city, an entire world system in rebellion against God. The OT prophets often prophesied the fall of Babylon, the capital of an empire that destroyed Jerusalem and carried away God's people into captivity. So here Babylon becomes a fitting image for a society that persecutes believers but which God will ultimately destroy.

In the first century, Babylon may have been a code word for Rome, built as it was on seven hills (17:9). Under the Roman emperor Domitian (A.D. 81–96), Christians were severely persecuted, especially for refusing to participate in the cult of emperor worship. Each mention of Babylon in Revelation shows that it is linked with evil and resistance to God.

Historically, Babylon oppressed and captured Judah. In the same way, John's figurative Babylon oppresses the people of God and holds them captive under its mighty grip. History is a war between two cities: "Babylon," the capital of idolatry and oppression, and "Jerusalem," the center of Christ's peace and justice.

John's buildup to the clash of these two titans is epic in scope and drama. The climax comes here in ch. 14, where judgment finally falls on Babylon, and the bowls, plagues, and intoxicating wine of God's wrath are poured out on her. A tremendous tidal wave of evil sloshes back and forth in the passage, like the last great battles of World War II. But the outcome is assured; Christ will prevail.

14:8 Another angel proclaims part of the bad news of judgment to those among all nations (Matt. 28:19) who will not receive the Good News of the gospel (v. 6). Babylon is first mentioned in Revelation here, and it becomes the focus of God's judgment in the following section (chs. 16—18). The great city here is Babylon; earlier the phrase was used to describe the city where "our Lord was crucified" (11:8), perhaps meaning Jerusalem in that reference.

14:9–11 A third angel announces with a loud voice the tragic eternal destiny of the one who rejects the offer of the gospel (vv. 6, 7) and worships the beast (ch. 13). In Romans, Paul speaks of the wrath of God as being revealed from heaven (Rom. 1:18) against unbelievers, as God allows them to receive the just consequences of their own ungodly behavior. In 6:17, "the great day of His wrath" was announced (11:18). Now it will be experienced in its full strength by those who follow the beast. In the just outworking of God's wrath, unbelievers who worship the beast will be tormented … forever and ever, with no rest day or night.

14:12 The patience of the saints echoes 13:10, as well as John's place as a partner with his readers in the "patience of Jesus Christ" (1:9). Those who patiently keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, even in very difficult times (ch. 13), will receive a special divine blessing (v. 13).

14:13 Blessed signals the second of seven beatitudes in Revelation (1:3; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7, 14). Six of the seven are clustered in the latter third of the Book of Revelation, perhaps as promises to encourage exemplary Christian response in the extremely difficult circumstances of the end times. From now on may mean from the point in the tribulation John is referring to, or from the time John was writing to his original readers. Spiritual rest is available to anyone who comes to Jesus Christ in faith (Matt. 11:28). The martyrs under the fifth seal had been told by the Lord to rest "a little while longer" (6:11), until God's plan was complete. Here the believers who have died are also told to rest from their labors, in the knowledge that their good works will be remembered and rewarded (1 Tim. 5:25).

14:14, 15 The reference to the Son of Man with a golden crown on His head indicates that the figure is Jesus Christ (1:13; Dan. 7). Some, however, hesitate to make this identification, largely because another angel gives the first figure the command to reap, which seems improper if "One like the Son of Man" is Christ. Yet there is no impropriety in having a representative of God the Father entrust judgment to the Son of Man (John 5:22). The Son will judge humankind as one who shares human nature. A sharp flint or iron sickle was the primary tool for an ancient grain harvest. Since the 144,000 have been received by God as the firstfruits (v. 4) of His harvest, the rest of the harvest of the earth is surely ripe for salvation (Matt. 13:37–43), as well as judgment.

14:16 The power of the Son of Man (Jesus Christ) is shown in that, with one thrust of His sickle, the harvest of the earth is reaped. This pictures the events of chs. 16—19 as parts of one rapid succession of judgment. Thus, this judgment is experienced by the inhabitants of the entire world.

14:17, 18 Another angel is placed in charge of the harvest of the clusters of grapes that are also ripe, meaning worthy of judgment. The other angel, referred to as having power over fire, may be the angel at the altar in 8:3–5. Perhaps the fire will burn the tares separated in the harvest (Matt. 13:38–43).

14:19, 20 A winepress was a trough in which workers trampled grapes with their bare feet, causing the juice to flow down into a vat. This common OT sign of God's wrath and judgment (Is. 63:3) apparently also explains how "the wine of the wrath of God" (v. 10) is produced. The image of the winepress is symbolic of an unbelievable quantity of shed blood. This description of the flow of blood indicates an unparalleled slaughter of life. One thousand six hundred furlongs is nearly two hundred miles. This great bloodshed is probably the result of Christ's defeat of the collected human armies (19:17–19) as He returns before "the supper of the great God" (19:17), which some hold to be the Battle of Armageddon (16:16).

15:1 Another sign looks back to 12:1, 3, where the symbolism of the woman and the dragon also appeared in heaven. This sign is great and marvelous, apparently because it deals with the seven last plagues sent by the Lord. The plagues, "the bowls of the wrath of God" (16:1), are much stronger and more widespread than the trumpet judgments in 8:2—11:19. The wrath of God is complete with the seven last plagues (15:1—19:5). They are immediately followed by the Second Coming and the marriage supper of the Lamb (19:6–21).

15:2 A sea of glass is mentioned in 4:6 as a place of worship before the throne of God. Here it is seen mingled with fire, which is often a sign of God's judgment. The fire shows that the wrath of God acting in judgment has reached its zenith. The sea of glass also serves as the Lord's victory stand for all of His overcomers. Those who have the victory over the beast are believing martyrs who "did not love their lives to the death" (12:11).

15:3, 4 The song of Moses is a reference to Ex. 15:1–18, in which Israel celebrated its deliverance from Egyptian bondage, specifically from Pharaoh's army (Ex. 14). That song, remembering the great OT redemption, was sung by Jews in their Sabbath gatherings, as well as by early Christians at Easter. The song of the Lamb compares the completed redemptive work of Jesus Christ with God's deliverance in the Exodus. Perhaps the victorious overcomers in v. 2 are "safe on the other side," and the intensifying judgments of the preceding chapters are comparable to the climactic destruction of Pharaoh's army when the Red Sea closed in upon them. Considering God's great … works and character, every person should fear the Lord and glorify His name by trusting Jesus Christ. All nations is the same phrase found in Matt. 28:19 and Luke 24:47, expressing the scope of the Great Commission, Jesus' command to proclaim Good News to all nations. Worship means "to prostrate oneself," calling to mind Paul's description of the time when "every knee should bow" to Jesus Christ, the Lord (Phil. 2:10, 11).

15:5 The temple of the tabernacle links the powerful imagery of the heavenly temple in 11:19 with the strong parallels in ch. 15 to the Exodus period, when the majestic presence of God was clearly seen in the tabernacle. The tabernacle of the testimony calls attention to the Law or the tablets of testimony given to Moses (Ex. 31:18; 32:15). In the new heaven and new earth the tabernacle of God will be with believers because He will dwell eternally with them (21:3).

15:6 Seven angels come forward to administer the seven plagues, which are the last plagues (v. 1) God will send forth before Christ returns. clothed in pure bright linen … golden bands: Because their garments signify purity and righteousness, the angels are representatives of spotless justice.

15:7 The golden bowls of wrath recall the similar golden bowls that in 5:8 hold incense, representing the prayers of the saints.

15:8 The smoke that filled the temple had its source in the power and glory of God and prohibited access into the most holy place. The smoke signified God's resolve to act in judgment as an expression of His character and authority. Judgment was now irreversible, with no place for intercession (Lam. 3:44).

16:1 The loud voice from the temple is likely the voice of God, since no other heavenly being could enter the heavenly temple "till the seven plagues of the seven angels were completed" (15:8).

16:2 The effect of the first … bowl being poured out is a terrible sore upon all who had the mark of the beast (13:16, 17). The Egyptians faced a similar affliction during the sixth plague of the Exodus (Ex. 9:9–11). Just as God's great power could not be denied by the Egyptians and their magicians (Ex. 9:11), so unbelieving people will be unable to deny God's sovereign justice as the bowls of God's judgments rapidly progress (vv. 9, 11, 21).

16:3 The second … bowl turns the sea into blood, as did the second trumpet (8:8). However, only a third of the sea was affected by the trumpet (8:8, 9). This bowl brings about the death of every living creature in the sea. This verse is similar to Ex. 7:17–21, in which the Nile River is turned to blood; however, the judgment here is infinitely worse because of its global scope.

16:4 The third … bowl, like the third trumpet (8:10), targets the rivers and springs of water. This time, however, the impact is worldwide (compare 8:10, 11), and the water sources turn to blood instead of just becoming "bitter" (8:11).

16:5 The angel of the waters is probably the same angel who poured out the third bowl (v. 4), and not a separate figure. Because God is eternally righteous, His judgment of the inhabitants of the earth (v. 10) and their violent, unrighteous works is completely just.

16:6 God forces the unrepentant (v. 9) unbelievers who have shed the blood of God's people to drink blood in order to avenge the deaths of the martyrs, as some of them requested in 6:10. Saints refers to those who are set apart because of their relationship with Jesus Christ. In Revelation, saints may be Christians in general (5:8), or those believers facing persecution and martyrdom (13:7). Prophets may refer to all of God's spokesmen who have been killed as a result of persecution, or specifically to the two witnesses who prophesied for three and one-half years (11:3–13, 18).

IN FOCUS

"the Almighty"

(Gk. pantokrator) (4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7, 14; 19:6, 15; 21:22; 2 Cor. 6:18) Strong's #3841: The Greek word means "one who has power over everything"—in other words, the One in total control. God commands all the hosts of powers in heaven and earth, and He is able to overcome all His foes. The title Almighty occurs often in Revelation as this book unveils God's awesome control over all the universe and throughout all history.

16:7 In 6:9, 10 the martyred saints cried out for God to show His righteousness by judging the wicked. Because God is now doing that, they affirm that His judgment is true and righteous.

16:8 The fourth … bowl is reminiscent of the fourth trumpet in its effect on the sun (8:12). But in this plague, the sun's heat is intensified instead of diminished.

16:9 Those who followed the beast here blaspheme the name of God, just as the beast himself did (13:5, 6). They cannot argue against the existence or power of God, but even so they will not repent and give God glory (v. 11, 21). The Good News of Christ is still in effect even just before His return (19:11–21), though it is apparently rejected by all unbelievers who are still alive.

16:10, 11 The fifth … bowl is focused against the throne of the beast, apparently referring to his worldwide kingdom and authority (13:7). The phrase "Satan's throne" is used in 2:13 to speak of the satanic foothold in Pergamos as a result of the prevalence of emperor worship there. (All other uses of throne in Revelation refer to the Lord's throne.) The darkness in 6:12–17 caused even world leaders to fear "the wrath of the Lamb" (6:16). At this late date, the beast and his followers still blaspheme the God of heaven and refuse to repent of their deeds. Pains and sores may be roughly parallel to the torment suffered by those stung by the demonic locusts during the fifth trumpet judgment (9:5–10). However, it is more likely that pains refers to the scorching by the sun in vv. 8, 9 and sores to the effects of the first bowl (v. 2).

16:12–14 The sixth bowl involves the Euphrates River, as does the sixth trumpet (9:14). Both judgments deal with demonically inspired military forces. The army of two hundred million (9:16) will kill a third of all humankind (9:18); the army in vv. 12–14 will do battle against God (19:19–21).

16:12 With the water of the river Euphrates completely dried up, invasion from the east would be much easier. The kings from the east have been understood as the Parthian armies that menaced the eastern half of the Roman Empire, though any powerful force from Asia would fit the wording of this verse.

16:13, 14 Unclean spirits spread forth the authoritative words of the dragon (Satan; 12:9), the beast, and the false prophet—an unholy trinity. There will be great deception involved in the signs (13:13, 14) that are used to persuade the kings of … the whole world to gather for battle against God. In 6:15, 16, the kings of the earth recoil in fear before the judgment of the Lamb. Here the kings are willing to wage war against God. The difference seems to be their confidence in the power of the beast, since they reason, “Who is able to make war with him?” (13:4). The battle of that great day takes place at Armageddon (v. 16; 19:17–21).

16:15 Blessed indicates that this is the third of seven beatitudes in Revelation (1:3; 14:13; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7, 14). Coming as a thief looks back to Jesus’ warning to believers to be vigilant because of the unexpected timing of His return (Matt. 24:43, 44).

"Armageddon"

(Gk. armageddon) (16:16) Strong's #717: This Greek term, which appears only here in the NT, appears to be derived from the word har, which means a mountain, and the word Megiddo, a name of a city in Manasseh. In this area, God overthrew the Canaanite kings by miraculously aiding Deborah and Barak (Judg. 4). Josiah, the ally of Babylon, was also defeated and slain here. The name Megiddo comes from a Hebrew root meaning to "cut off" and thus means "slaughter" (Joel 3:2, 12, 14). Just the mention of the famous battleground of Armageddon to a Jew would suggest a horrific slaughter.

16:16 The place of the battle spoken of in v. 14 is Armageddon, a Hebrew word meaning "Mount of Megiddo." Some believe that this is not an actual place, but rather a symbol of the final battle between good and evil.

16:17 The seventh … bowl is the climax of all of Revelation's judgments. It is done: This is God's final act of judgment before Christ comes.

16:18 A great earthquake as had not occurred before goes well beyond the great seismological damage throughout history and the earlier earthquakes in Rev. 6:12; 8:5; 11:13; and 11:19.

The ruins of the ancient city of Babylon are testimony to the destruction of this pagan city described in the Book of Revelation (Rev. 16:19).

16:19, 20 The great city of Babylon (11:8) seems to be the epicenter of the most destructive earthquake the world will ever see. The quake seems to be worldwide, wreaking havoc on the cities of the nations. Babylon had not been forgotten before God. Here He acts on His earlier promise that Babylon would fall (14:8) and that the cup of His wrath would be dispensed (14:10). Babylon here may refer to the rebuilt ancient city, or it may be a symbolic name for Rome (17:9). It may also be a way of referring to any proud human society that attempts to exist apart from God. Babylon's classic manifestations of rebellion against God are the Tower of Babel (Gen. 11:1–9) and the Babylonian Empire under Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 4:30).

16:21 Hail falling from heaven, with each stone weighing about seventy-five pounds (a talent), would be phenomenally destructive. Still, unbelievers blasphemed against God instead of repenting (16:9, 11). Apparently by this point, their hearts are so hardened they will not respond properly to the Lord no matter what His display of power and judgment.

17:1, 2 The reference to one of the seven angels who had the seven bowls marks this passage as a continuation of 16:17–21. The coming reference to "BABYLON THE GREAT" (v. 5) has the same linking effect. Many waters are interpreted in v. 15 as "peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues." Although Babylon is only called the harlot in vv. 1, 5, 16, and 19:2, her habitual fornication was introduced in 14:8, as was her imminent and well-deserved judgment. Both the kings of the earth and the inhabitants of the earth are seduced into committing spiritual adultery with Babylon. The indication is that she made them drunk with power, material possessions, false worship, and pride. The wine of Babylon's fornication (14:8) is judged forcefully and finally by God in "the wine of the fierceness of His wrath" (16:19).

17:3 In the Spirit describes John's spiritually exalted state as he receives the various visions of the Book of Revelation (1:10). The wilderness is where the woman identified as "Babylon, the mother of harlots" (v. 5) is seen sitting on a scarlet beast (12:3; 13:1). Since this woman normally "sits on many waters" (v. 1) and since the woman who gave birth to the Child-Ruler fled into the wilderness as a place of protection (12:6, 14), perhaps Babylon here is seen as being in league with the dragon and the beast as they ferociously pursue God's people (12:13–16). The description of the scarlet beast clearly identifies him with the beast from the sea—the Antichrist—in 13:1, 5, 6. The ten horns are interpreted in v. 12 as ten kings; they may represent the ten toes of Nebuchadnezzar's vision (Dan. 2:41).

17:4 The woman, Babylon, is dressed like a queen (18:7), wearing purple, scarlet, gold, and pearls. Though the appearance of "the great harlot" (vv. 1, 5) is regal, her royal golden cup is full of abominations and … filthiness, speaking of idolatry and unclean acts that disgust God. This description is given first from the standpoint of people, who look at the outer appearance, and then from the perspective of God, who knows the heart (1 Sam. 16:7).

IN CONTEXT

The Sinful City and the Antichrist

The great harlot, identified with Babylon (Rev. 17:5), is a powerful and wealthy center of human civilization that leads the kings and all the earth in rebellion against God. As ancient Babylon led people away from God and into idolatry and wickedness, so the harlot sets the nations against Him. Rome in the first century may have been one manifestation of the harlot; the "seven mountains" (17:9) could recall the original city of Rome that was built on seven hills.

Other societies and governments in human history have also seemed to be in open rebellion against God. This great harlot is empowered by the beast, the Antichrist. The church, by contrast, is likened to a wife united with her Husband, Christ, at His return (19:7, 8). John's vision continues as the beast and his armies prepare for a battle that cannot be won. Christ has already secured the victory. The beast and his prophet are captured, and his armies are destroyed by the sword from Christ's mouth (19:15).

17:5 The name on Babylon's forehead may imply that Babylon is ultimately subordinate to the beast (13:16, 17). MYSTERY may be the first part of the title for BABYLON THE GREAT. But based on the use of the word mystery in v. 7, this verse should probably read, "on her forehead a mysterious name was written." The title itself suggests that all spiritual harlotry and abominable acts in history are somehow the offspring of Babylon.

17:6 The woman Babylon is drunk with the blood of the saints and Christian martyrs (Matt. 24:21), as well as by "the wine of her fornication" (v. 2). Thus, her actions are doubly repugnant to the Lord, as are the acts of anyone who persecutes God's people. The woman's hatred of Christianity is clearly portrayed in this verse. Being drunk from saints' blood implies a time of extraordinary slaughter.

17:7 What the apostle John saw still needed to be explained to him in its details. Since the disclosure was granted him, not to perplex but to instruct him, the angel (compare v. 1) promises to clarify the mystery of the woman and of the beast.

17:8 The description of the beast as one who was, and is not, and will ascend … and go to perdition is a conscious contrast to the description of God in 1:4, 8. Was apparently indicates that the beast had been manifested in the past (Dan. 7). Is not suggests that the beast was not working his evil in John's day. Will ascend … to perdition suggests eternal ruin or punishment. Those whose names are not written in the Book of Life (13:8; 20:12, 15) are deceived by the beast because they do not know its certain eternal destiny. All they see is one who once existed and has now made an incredible reemergence.

17:9, 10 The mind which has wisdom possesses divinely aided spiritual understanding, which is a mind receptive to God's truth (1:3). The clause may possibly be connected with v. 8 rather than v. 9, and may refer specifically to wisdom in understanding who the beast is. It may also refer to the following verses, the interpretation of the heads, the beast, the horns, and the woman (vv. 1–6). The seven heads of the beast (v. 3) symbolize both seven mountains and seven kings. Since the word mountains also means "hills" in Revelation (14:1), most interpreters understand this as referring to the seven hills along the Tiber River, a well-known designation of the city of Rome. However, seven mountains may also refer to successive world empires, since mountains are typically symbols of earthly kingdoms or empires (Ps. 30:7; Jer. 51:25; Dan. 2:44, 45). According to this view, five would be past kingdoms (perhaps Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Medo-Persia, and Greece), with sixth being the Roman Empire and seventh another which has not yet come. Perhaps it is to be a revived Roman Empire. Kings may refer to Roman emperors, but this is unlikely since more than five had reigned before the writing of Revelation.

17:11, 12 The beast … is … the eighth, and is of the seven: The beast is related to the seventh king, but also has a separate identity. The obscure wording may express the worldwide amazement that the beast was healed from a deadly wound to rule the world again (13:3). It seems that the eighth world empire is some form of a revived Roman Empire over which the Antichrist establishes the imperial authority of a dictator. He will overcome three horns, or nations (Dan. 7:20), and will claim universal authority. one hour: A limited time is allotted to the ten kings, or ten horns (1:3; Dan. 2:34, 41, 42), who will receive authority to rule alongside the beast (18:10, 17, 19). The Lord's sovereignty is not threatened in these statements of sequence and duration because the beast cannot change the fact that he, because of God's just judgment, is going to perdition. The time frame for these events may coincide with 16:14, in which the preparations for the battle at Armageddon are described.

17:13 The ten kings who ultimately rule under the authority of the beast (v. 12) cooperate fully and give back their power and authority to the beast. Some understand these ten rulers to be provincial heads in the Roman Empire in John's day, while others take ten symbolically to mean a host of national powers aligned with the beast. Still others see a ten-nation confederacy, perhaps a revived latter-day Roman Empire (Dan. 7:7, 19, 20, 23, 24).

17:14 The ten kings in league with the beast will be so bold as to make war against the Lamb (Christ). He, the all-powerful Lord of lords and King of kings (19:16), will easily overcome them at His second coming (19:19–21). This wording is in direct contrast with 13:7, where the beast and his forces are allowed by God "to make war with the saints and to overcome them." Many of those whom the beast defeated and even killed are now numbered in the conquering army of the Lamb. The Lord's army is composed of the called, chosen, and faithful—probably the heavenly soldiers of 19:14.

17:15 The waters of 17:1 are interpreted as all the peoples and nations of the world.

17:16, 17 The ten horns (the kings of v. 12) will grow to hate Babylon, the harlot. As a result, they will expose and then utterly destroy her. Since this description is similar to God's judgment on Babylon in 18:8, it seems that the Lord sovereignly uses the forces of the beast as His instrument of judgment on the kingdom of Antichrist (ch. 18) before they themselves are destroyed (19:19–21). With the advent of the beast as a supreme ruler given to self-deification (Dan. 11:36; Matt. 24:15; 2 Thess. 2), Satan has originated an entirely new order. This order is so radically different from the great harlot, that the beast, or perhaps the political aspect of Babylon, turns upon and destroys the religious aspect of Babylon.

17:18 The woman in John's vision (vv. 1–6) is the great city Babylon (16:19), yet is also the ancient "mother of harlots" (v. 5). Thus, the satanic influence of this city over the world's leaders has continued from Babel through Babylon to Rome (v. 9, 10), its classic manifestation in the first century A.D.

18:1 The angel which John now saw had great (divine) authority, not just short-term authority like the ten horns and the Beast (17:12, 13). In coming from the glorious abode of God, this angel still reflects the Lord's glory upon the earth (15:8), perhaps much as Moses' face shone with God's glory after being in His presence (2 Cor. 3:7–11).

18:2 Babylon … is fallen continues the thought introduced in 14:8 and 16:19, describing the city's destruction. The normal dwelling place of demons is the bottomless pit (9:1, 2). A prison is a place of banishment. Thus, Babylon, in the wake of her fall and judgment, will become a virtual hell on earth.

18:3 This unparalleled judgment from God has come because of Babylon's spiritual fornication (idolatry and abominations; 17:4) with the nations and their kings, largely through rich commerce, providing many merchants an abundance of wealth.

18:4, 5 Come out … my people is a command that echoes Is. 52:11 and especially Jer. 51:45, prophecies proclaimed at a time when the Babylonian Empire was ripe for judgment.

18:6–8 God will avenge Babylon's long history of iniquities and sinful works to the fullest extent and beyond (double; Is. 51:19). Instead of glorifying God, Babylon glorified herself (14:7; Rom. 1:21) with a royal lifestyle. She had thrived on pleasure and excess, but now judgment will leave her with only torment and sorrow. The climactic judgment of ancient Babylon also arrived in one day ("one hour" in vv. 10, 17, 19), as Darius the Mede invaded the city and killed Belshazzar (Dan. 5:30, 31).

18:9–19 This section is framed like an ancient lament and is especially similar in content to Ezekiel's lament over the destruction of Tyre (Ezek. 27).

18:9, 10 The world's kings, the illicit partners of Babylon, will see her burning and weep out loud, probably as much for their loss as hers. They will, however, stay at a distance (v. 15) to escape her torment.

18:11–13 The merchandise includes purple, an expensive dye; citron wood, valuable material for cabinet making; and fragrant oil (literally "myrrh") and frankincense, both of which the wise men gave as gifts to the infant Jesus (Matt. 2:11). Bodies and souls refers to the slave trade.

18:14–16 clothed … adorned: The description of wealthy Babylon is almost identical to that of the harlot Babylon in 17:4.

18:17–19 Those who make their living from trade on the sea also lament the judgment and burning by which Babylon is made desolate. They throw dust on their heads in an expression of great sorrow, which is also seen in Ezek. 27:30 in the lament over Tyre.

18:20 This call to rejoice is a compressed introduction to the longer praise hymn in 19:1–5. Judgment for killing God's prophets is mentioned in 16:6, but this is the only place in Revelation other than 21:14 where Christ's apostles are mentioned. If specific apostles are in mind here, Peter and Paul's deaths at the hands of the state in Rome probably apply here. If Babylon is the symbol of all the enemies of God and His people, and not just the Babylonian or Roman manifestations, even the killing of James in Acts 12:1, 2 is being avenged here.

18:21, 22 The concluding lament over the fall of the great city Babylon comes from an angel powerful enough to hurl a huge millstone weighing thousands of pounds into the sea as an illustration of the swiftness and violence of Babylon's judgment.

18:23 From this point on in Revelation, the voice of bridegroom and bride is heard only in regard to "the marriage of the Lamb" (19:7–9) and the New Jerusalem, "a bride adorned for her husband" (21:2). Sorcery (literally "magic arts") is used in 9:21 to refer to the sins of humankind at large. Perhaps Babylon's influence is seen as corrupting all the nations.

18:24 The blood of the slain seem to refer to all the martyrs for the cause of Christ throughout history (6:10; 17:6). However, it may refer specifically to those who were slain during the tribulation, particularly during the beast's reign (13:7, 15).

19:1 The great multitude here is the "great multitude which no one could number" in 7:9. The reference to salvation (7:10) and the later reference to the twenty-four elders and four living creatures (v. 4; 7:11, 13) seem to support this understanding. However, some contend that multitude here refers to angels. Alleluia represents the Hebrew word meaning "praise the LORD." The Hebrew word is well known in the OT from its frequent use in the Psalms ("praise the LORD" in Ps. 150:1, 6). The Greek transliteration of it appears in the NT only in Revelation (vv. 1, 3, 4, 6).

19:2 God has proven true to His Word (6:10) and righteous in His just judgments (16:5, 6) upon Babylon, the great harlot (17:1, 5, 6). All Christians are God's servants (1:1), but some of these servants have died as martyrs. All can look forward to serving God forever (22:3).

19:3 Alleluia: God is praised because evidence of Babylon's just judgment will continue eternally.

19:4 The twenty-four elders and the four living creatures constantly worship God (4:2–11; 5:8–14; 11:16; 14:3). The representatives of the angelic realm praise the Lord for the destruction of the system that originated in a fallen angel, Satan.

19:5 With so much praise and adoration filling the scene, one would not expect further summons to praise and extol God. But even after the third "Alleluia," it must be stressed that God is worthy of nothing less than eternal praise. All God's bondservants, of whatever rank or position, both small and great, are included in the invitation to praise Him; for the word of invitation comes from the seat of God's government.

19:6 sound of many waters: Now a heavenly multitude. The Lord God Omnipotent enters His reign after the destruction of sin and the Antichrist (vv. 11–21). Reigns is a Greek aorist tense, normally translated "reigned." But here it more likely means "is beginning to reign." An entirely new and different government is coming, not a democracy, but a theocracy—a government by God when the "Lord God Onmipotent" shall reign in righteousness (Is. 11).

19:7 Here the Lord is glorified specifically because the marriage of the Lamb has come at last. In both the OT (Hos. 2:19, 20) and the NT (Eph. 5:23, 32), God's people are viewed as the Lord's betrothed bride or wife. The bride of that time would make herself ready by bathing, rubbing on oil, and using perfume. Her hair would be specially fixed and she would wear her wedding gown.

19:8 fine linen: The bride of the Lamb wears a garment of precious fine linen that symbolizes the good works of believers. The fine linen, clean and white, refers not to the imputed righteousness of Christ, but to righteous acts of the saints. The garment signifies faithfulness in the habitual doing of good works. The garment is one that the believer must put on himself and consists of godly works produced in dependence upon the Holy Spirit. It is an outward reflection of character and conduct which is developed in this life (Matt. 22:11, 12). The reward for such godly character and conduct at the judgment seat of Christ consists of this garment and all the rights and privileges which are promised to the overcomer. Believers are not only heirs of God and thus have a home in heaven as a free gift (John 14:1, 2; 1 Pet. 1:3–5) but the overcomers (those who endure to the end of this life) and co-heirs with Christ and shall reign with Him (Rom. 8:17). John admonishes us to abide in Christ so that when we see Him, we will be confident and not be ashamed at His coming (1 John 2:28).

19:9 Blessed introduces the fourth of the seven beatitudes in Revelation (1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 20:6; 22:9, 14). The marriage supper of John's day would begin on the evening of the wedding, but the celebration might continue for days. The marriage supper here is a time of joyous feasting to be enjoyed by the church and especially by the overcomers who will reign with Christ. The key to being able to participate in the wedding banquet is faithfulness to God.

19:10 To worship any person or object other than God is a form of idolatry (Ex. 20:3–5). The angel rebukes John for his error (22:8, 9) and tells John that he is simply a fellow servant with him and his believing brethren. The testimony of Jesus here refers to the witness about Jesus (1:2, 9). Biblical prophecy looks to or is dependent upon the work of Christ and its proclamation (1 Pet. 1:12).

19:11 This verse answers the question asked about the beast in 13:4: "Who is able to make war with him?" Christ can defeat him.

19:12 Eyes … like a flame of fire parallels the description of the glorified Christ in 1:14. Many crowns show Christ to be more powerful than either Satan (12:3) or the beast (13:1). In ancient society, a name was more than a title. It revealed a person's character. No one knew except Himself apparently means that there are parts of the character of the eternal and limitless God (1 Tim. 6:15, 16) that only God knows, though Christ may reveal such matters at His second coming.

19:13 A robe dipped in blood may speak of Christ's redemptive death on the Cross (7:9), or His trampling of the "winepress of the wrath of God" (v. 15; 14:19, 20), or both. The Word of God cannot be the name that no one knew except Christ (v. 12) because that name is revealed in John 1:1, 14.

19:14 The armies in heaven may be angelic hosts (5:11; Matt. 26:53), but 17:14 speaks of those with the Lord at His coming as being "called, chosen, and faithful," all terms for believers (Rom. 1:7; Eph. 1:1; 1 Pet. 2:9). The garments of fine linen, like that of the Lamb's bride in v. 8, supports this interpretation. White horses, a common symbol of victory, would be appropriate for those who are already victorious over the beast (15:2).

19:15 The sharp sword that comes out of Christ's mouth is the two-edged sword spoken of in 1:16. Strike the nations may be a general statement of judgment or a specific reference to the armies of the earth being "killed with the sword" in v. 21. Christ will rule … with a rod of iron in fulfillment of the messianic prophecies in Ps. 2:8, 9; Is. 11:4. Treads the winepress of God's wrath recalls the command in 14:18–20 to gather the grapes of the earth for the "great winepress of the wrath of God."

19:16 KING OF KINGS means the One who is supreme over all earthly rulers. The phrase "Lord of lords and King of kings" is found in 17:14, anticipating the Second Coming.

19:17, 18 The birds are told to gather to feast on the carcasses of the fallen armies gathered in opposition against Christ.

19:19–21 This picture of the beast and his extensive force has already been seen in 17:14 and is almost certainly the same as those gathered for "the battle of that great day of God Almighty" (16:14) at Armageddon (16:16). The beast (13:1–10) and the false prophet (13:11–17) are captured and cast alive into the lake of fire, the eternal destiny of all unbelievers (20:10, 14, 15). They are apparently the first to suffer the torment of the lake of brimstone. The rest of the beast's allies are killed by the sword from the mouth of the victorious Christ. Apparently all those who now suffer death go to Hades (Matt. 16:18), to which Jesus has the keys (1:18), until Death and Hades are emptied and cast into the lake of fire (20:13–15).

Interpreting Revelation

Interpreting Revelation has caused much debate, and at least four standard methods for interpreting the book have developed. Preterists view the book as referring almost exclusively to first-century events. Historicists view the book as referring to the unfolding of church history until Christ's second coming. Idealists see the book as symbolizing the eternal conflict between good and evil. Futurists see the book as mainly about the end times. Sometimes interpreters blend two or more of these approaches.

Furthermore, the "thousand years" of 20:2–6 has been the basis of three different views of the millennium (the Latin word for "thousand years"). The amillennial (no millennium) interpretation sees Christ as ruling spiritually in the church now; Satan has been bound or at least hindered during this present church era. According to this view, there will be no literal thousand-year reign; instead, Christ reigns through the church for an unknown number of years before He returns. The postmillennial (after the millennium) interpretation understands that by the spread of the gospel the world will become progressively more Christian. When the world becomes completely Christian there will be a millennium, then Jesus will return in glory. The premillennial (before the millennium) view holds that Jesus Christ will return to earth to set up His visible kingdom. At that time Satan will be bound for a thousand years.

Those who accept the premillennial position take specific views on when Christ will remove believers from the earth before He returns (19:11–21). A comparison of the common symbolism of Daniel and Revelation, as well as time references in Dan. 7:25; 9:27; 12:7 along with those in Rev. 11:2, 3; 12:6, 14; 13:5, seem to indicate that a seven-year period (Dan. 9:24–27), often called the Tribulation, will precede Christ's return. Five different views have tried to explain the timing between the rapture of the church and the Tribulation. (The word rapture comes from the Latin translation of "caught up" in 1 Thess. 4:17.) Pretribulationists expect the Rapture to take place before seven years of tribulation. Midtribulationists say the Rapture will occur midway through the seven-year period. The posttribulation view states that the church will go through the Tribulation, but will be removed at the time of Christ's second coming. The prewrath view places the Rapture between the mid-and posttribulational points, before the climactic wrath of God.

Each of these positions depends on a different view of how the text of Revelation should be interpreted. It is a good idea to keep this in mind whenever you try to understand a position or talk about it with others. The central idea on which all these views agree is that Christ will return some time in the future, and that His return will be a welcome sight to His people. Our hope and prayer is the same as the apostle John's: "Come, Lord Jesus!" (22:20).

20:1–3 The angel here may be the same one who had the key to the bottomless pit in 9:1, 2. The bottomless pit is presently the place of imprisonment of some demons (Luke 8:31) and will be the place from which the beast ascends (17:8). Thus, it is fitting that the Devil will be held there for a thousand years. The dragon of 12:3, 9, known as Satan, was in control of the serpent in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 3). God has a sovereign plan for Satan. He will be shut … up in the abyss for a thousand years and then will be briefly released to deceive the nations one final time (vv. 7–9) before being cast into the lake of fire (v. 10). Must be released indicates that Satan will not escape from the pit but instead will be allowed to go forth from the pit to fulfill God’s sovereign plan.

“Devil”

(Gk. diabolos) (2:10; 12:9, 12; 20:2, 10; Matt. 4:1; Acts 10:38) Strong’s #1228; Satan (Gk. Satanas) (20:2, 7; Matt. 4:10; Rom. 16:20) Strong’s #1228; 4567: The word diabolos signifies a slanderer, one who accuses another. Hence that other name given him: “the accuser of our brethren” (Rev. 12:10). The name Satan signifies an adversary, one who lies in wait for or sets himself in opposition to another. These and other names of the same fallen spirit point to different features of his evil character and deceitful operations.

20:4–6 The interpretation of the thousand-year reign of Christ has been the subject of much controversy. Some understand a thousand years as a specific statement of time, while others take it figuratively as a round number for a long but undetermined period.

20:4 Thrones … reigned indicates that believers will participate significantly with Christ during His millennial rule (1:6; 2:26, 27; 5:10). This may be a partial fulfillment of Dan. 7:18, 27. The aspect of judgment in ruling is referred to in 1 Cor. 6:2–4. At the onset of the kingdom, authority is officially transferred from angels to men (Heb. 2:5, 8). A new world order is established with the overcoming saints of the church age ruling together with Christ in His kingdom (Rom. 8:17). Those who had been beheaded are believers martyred by the beast (13:7, 15) and may also be the victorious throng who sing praises to the Lamb in 15:2–4. John could identify with those who lost their lives because of their witness to Jesus and God’s word, since John was exiled to the island of Patmos for the same reasons (1:9).

20:5 Did not live again indicates that the resurrection of the dead will not encompass all people at the same time, as passages like Dan. 12:2 and John 5:29 may also indicate. Like 1 Cor. 15:23, 52, this passage indicates that there will be a first resurrection of dead believers before the thousand years of Christ’s reign and a final resurrection after the millennium is finished, before the great white throne judgment (vv. 11–13).

20:6 Blessed begins the fifth of seven beatitudes in Revelation. The other six (1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 22:9, 14) all look forward to life with Christ beyond the first resurrection (v. 5). The first resurrection is assured for all believers. But the blessedness mentioned here belongs more precisely to those who have a part in the first resurrection. It is possible that this refers only to those believers who qualify to function as king-priests in Christ's kingdom. This might be what Paul was referring to when he spoke of his goal of obtaining the prize of Christ (1 Cor. 9:27; Phil. 3:10–14). The second death is the everlasting death of torment in the lake of fire for unbelievers who face the great white throne judgment (vv. 11–15). John has previously stated that the one who overcomes will not be hurt by the second death (2:11).

20:7–9 At the conclusion of Christ's thousand-year reign, Satan will be released by God to deceive the nations … of the earth (vv. 2, 3) again as he has throughout history (12:9). As a result of satanic deception, the world's armies will gather for battle against God again as they had done before Christ's second coming (16:13, 14; 19:19, 20). Gog and Magog was a common rabbinical title for the nations in rebellion against the Lord, and the names recall the prophesied invasion of Israel in Ezek. 38; 39. Some hold that the battle of vv. 8, 9 is the one spoken of in Ezekiel, but there are major differences as well as similarities in the two passages. The use of fire … out of heaven to destroy gathered armies is also seen in Ezek. 38:22; 39:6. Camp is used elsewhere to refer to armies (Heb. 11:34) or the barracks of such forces (Acts 23:10). Some interpret the camp of the saints as being symbolic of the unity of the people of God. The beloved city may symbolically refer to the home of God's people. However, the New Jerusalem is commonly called "the city of My God" (3:12) and "the holy city" (21:2). The city here may be the renewed earthly Jerusalem, ready to give way to the everlasting sinless glory of the New Jerusalem (21:1—22:5).

20:10 When the final rebellion is put down by the Lord (vv. 8, 9), the devil will join the beast and the false prophet (19:20) in torment forever in the lake of fire (14:10, 11; Is. 66:22–24; Mark 9:48).

20:11 The great white throne is a picture of God's holy rule and judgment. The One occupying the throne may be God the Father (1 Cor. 15:24–28) or both the Father and the Lamb (Christ), as in the New Jerusalem (22:1, 3). The earth and the heaven fled is a poetic way of describing the burning up of this creation and its related works, as described in 2 Pet. 3:10–13. There is no place for this sin-polluted creation in the new heaven and new earth (21:1—22:5).

20:12 The dead, called “the rest of the dead” in v. 5, are raised and made to stand before God’s throne of judgment. To some, the first resurrection (v. 5) includes only martyrs (v. 4), so that both believers and unbelievers will stand before the great white throne. Others point to the broad promises to Christians in the Book of Revelation of ruling with Christ (1:6; 2:26, 27; 5:10) as evidence that all Christians will experience the first resurrection and thus will not have to endure the great white throne judgment. Books refers to the record of all works done in this life. Since all have sinned and fall short of God’s standard (Rom. 3:23), the opening of these books would certainly lead to eternal sentences in the lake of fire. The Book of Life, God’s register of those who are saved (17:8), is also opened. So although no one will be judged acceptable based on works (Eph. 2:9), many will be saved by God’s grace received by faith in Jesus Christ (Eph. 2:8).

IN CONTEXT

The Millennium

The term "millennium," coming from the Latin mille, "one thousand," is used to identify the 1,000-year rule of Christ with His saints (Rev. 20:4–7). This is the only place in the NT where such a period is described. Christians are divided over how to interpret the 1,000-year reign and the events surrounding it.

Some believe that the binding of Satan represents Christ's victory on the Cross. The 1,000 years is, then, symbolic of the church age during which the saints will rule spiritually with Christ. Satan's rebellion at the end of the 1,000 years is his final desperate attempt to challenge God before the return of Christ to judge the world. This view is called amillennialism because it does not believe in a millennial period separate from the church age.

Others believe that the victories of Christ (19:1–21) and the binding of Satan (20:1–3) represent the gradual triumph of the gospel throughout the church age. The millennium is, then, symbolic of an indeterminate time of earthly harmony after the progress of the gospel has resulted in the kingdom of God on earth. Only after this time will Christ return to finally defeat Satan (20:7–10) and judge the world (20:11–15). This view is known as postmillennialism because it teaches that Christ will not return until after the millennium.

Other Christians believe that 19:1–21 depicts Christ's second coming which will culminate in the binding of Satan (20:1–3), after which the saints will be raised and rule with Christ on earth for a period symbolized by 1,000 years (20:4–6). At the end of this period Satan will be released for one last rebellion and will be destroyed (20:7–10). Then the unrighteous will be raised and all will be judged (20:11–15). This position is called premillennialism since it teaches the return of Christ before the millennium.

20:13, 14 The sea is the resting place of unburied bodies. Death and Hades refers not only to dying, but to existence beyond the grave (1:18; 6:8). The picture here is of all intermediate abodes of human bodies giving them up to God's judgment. While unbelieving humanity is judged according to its works, Death and Hades, the Lord's final enemy (1 Cor. 15:26), is also destroyed by being cast into the lake of fire. The second death is spiritual and eternal, the just punishment of the wicked. The first death is physical dying. Both are included in the overall meaning of the death that came upon the human race because of Adam and Eve's sin (Gen. 2:16, 17; 3:1–19; Rom. 5:12).

20:15 Only God's elect, those whose names are written in the Book of Life, will escape the lake of fire. The rejection of the eternal gospel results in eternal condemnation (14:6, 7).

21:1, 2 New here suggests freshness, not just a second beginning. This is the fulfillment of the prophecies of Is. 65:17; 66:22; 2 Pet. 3:13. Significantly, this eternal renewal has already begun in the life of the believer because, using the same term, Paul says, “If anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation” (2 Cor. 5:17). The present heaven and … earth, including the sea, were burned up in the great white throne judgment (20:11, 13), and thus have passed away before the arrival of the new heaven and earth. The fact that there will be a continuation of some features of the present creation in the new heaven and new earth is implied by the description of the New Jerusalem as the holy city, a title that is applied to the present Jerusalem in 11:2. Yet the drastic difference in the new eternal state is obvious from the fact that there will be no more sea, which was a major part of the original creation (Gen. 1:6–10). It is impossible to tell whether the New Jerusalem will sit on the new earth, since all three references to it describe the holy city as coming down out of heaven (v. 10; 3:12). Prepared as a bride is essentially the imagery of 19:7, 8, where God’s people—or, more specifically, Christ’s church—are prepared for “the marriage … of the Lamb” (19:9). Her husband refers again to Christ, the Lamb (v. 9), but the bride is the New Jerusalem, according to vv. 9, 10. In other words, Christ’s bride (v. 9) is the redeemed inhabitants of the holy city (vv. 3–7, 24–27).

IN FOCUS

"New Jerusalem"

(Gk. Ierousalem kaine) (3:12; 21:2) Strong's #2419; 2537: The Greek term denotes "the brand-new Jerusalem." The New Jerusalem that comes out of heaven is plainly distinct from the earthly Jerusalem, the former capital of Israel. This is the city Abraham looked for, the city that has foundations, whose builder and maker is God (Heb. 11:10). This is the city that exists even now in heaven, for Paul calls it the Jerusalem that is above (Gal. 4:26).

21:3 In this verse, God is described as dwelling among His people. This recalls the Incarnation, the fact that Jesus "became flesh and dwelt among us" (John 1:14), and is a fulfillment of the promise in 7:15 that God will dwell among His redeemed people. A virtually identical promise was given to Israel in Ezek. 37:27, 28.

21:4, 5 Wipe away every tear fulfills the promises in 7:17 and Is. 25:8. No more death … no more pain goes far beyond the earlier promise of 7:16, which promises freedom from hunger, thirst, and scorching heat. Former things have passed away echoes both v. 1 and 2 Cor. 5:17. The believer's rebirth through faith in Christ brings newness to that person's life, but it is only in the eternal state that God will make all things new.

21:6 It is done echoes the voice from the throne in 16:17 that proclaims the completion of God's wrath being poured out on Babylon. Here the completion of the new creation by Him who is the Alpha and the Omega of all things is the focus. Water of life may be recalling Jesus' references to living water in John 4:14; 7:38, in connection with eternal life and life in the Holy Spirit. This water is further described in 22:1. A similar offer of God's grace to him who spiritually thirsts is repeated in 22:17.

21:7 He who overcomes will inherit not only the specific promises to the churches in 2:7, 11, 17, 26–28; 3:5, 12, 21, but all things. The most wonderful part of this inheritance is that the believer will be a son (a person who is a rightful heir) of God forever. Sonship as a concept embraces more than a relationship based upon a shared nature. It is a special honor associated with the Davidic covenant, including privileged intimacy and ruling authority (2 Sam. 7:14). While adoption as a son is all of grace (Gal. 4:5) and all Christians are adopted sons by virtue of spiritual birth, not all sons fulfill the requirements of such an exalted status (Matt 5:9, 43–45). A person can be a son and not necessarily behave as a son. A true son reflects a life of obedience (Jer. 7:23; 11:4). A willingness to yield to the leading of the holy spirit is characteristic of the sons of God (Rom. 8:14).

21:8 The characteristics of those who are not in Christ through faith—the unbelieving—are described. These unbelievers are destined for the lake of fire, eternal death after God's final judgment (20:12–14). All whose names are not written in the Book of Life (20:15) are judged according to their works (20:12), and are shown to be worthy of endless death (Rom. 6:23). In 1 Cor. 6:9–11, Paul makes essentially the same point.

21:9, 10 Since the beginning of this passage is similar to the beginning of ch. 17, it seems that the Lamb's wife, the New Jerusalem, is being contrasted with Babylon, "the great harlot" (17:1, 5). In the spirit is the exalted state in which John received the apocalyptic visions of this book (1:10), the last of which carried him away (17:3) to a high mountain overlooking Jerusalem.

21:11 This description of the eternal city, New Jerusalem, emphasizes God's glory, which is a source of the light for the city (21:23). God's heavenly glory is like a jasper stone (4:3); the light in the New Jerusalem will be similar to the brilliant crystalline reflection of priceless jasper.

21:12, 13 The description of the great and high wall that contains twelve gates named after the twelve tribes … of Israel echoes Ezek. 48:30–35. Commentators variously interpret these twelve gates as representing all of God's people, including both Israel and the church, or as representing strictly the Israelites.

21:14 The twelve foundations, the huge stones upon which the wall of the New Jerusalem rests, contain the names of the twelve apostles of Christ (Luke 6:13–16), calling to mind Paul's imagery of the apostles as the foundation of the house of God in Eph. 2:20 (Jesus' promise to His apostles that they would occupy a prominent place in His kingdom in Matt. 19:28).

21:15–17 The reference to the reed to measure the city recalls Ezek. 40; 41, as does the reference in 11:1, 2. The city seems to be laid out as a cube, since its length, breadth, and height are equal. The cube was an ancient symbol of perfection. The Most Holy Place in the OT tabernacle and in the temple were cubic in design. The symmetrical measurements of the city are so vast (twelve thousand furlongs, or about 1400 miles) and the wall is so thick (one hundred and forty-four cubits, or over 200 feet) that they almost surpass the imagination. The imagery indicates that the city is the dwelling place of God's presence, just as the tabernacle and temple had been. It is impossible to be certain whether ordinary measurements should be applied to the eternal state, though the reference to the measure of a man (human standards) may imply that they should.

21:18 As thick as the walls of New Jerusalem are (200 feet; v. 27), they are as transparent as crystalline jasper. The vast city itself (v. 16), especially the streets (v. 21), are also like clear glass, even though they are made of pure gold. The overall effect is that of an incredibly beautiful and transparent city, symbolizing never-ending glory and purity.

21:19, 20 The stones that serve as foundations of the wall for the New Jerusalem are named for the twelve apostles (v. 14), although there is no way to know which of the precious gems represents each apostle. While the exact color of some of the stones is uncertain, it is probable that jasper is colorless, sapphire is blue, chalcedony is green or greenish-blue, emerald is bright green, sardonyx has layers of red and white, sardius is blood-red, chrysolite is yellow, beryl is blue or blue-green, topaz is golden, chrysoprase is apple-green, jacinth is blue or blue-purple, and amethyst is purple or violet.

21:21 The twelve gates of the eternal city, representing the twelve tribes of Israel (v. 12), are each made from one huge pearl. What is immediately striking is that the street in the New Jerusalem is gold (v. 18), but it is also significant that only one street is mentioned (22:2).

21:22 There will be no temple building in the New Jerusalem because the Father and the Son (the Lamb) will be there. Recall that Christ referred to His body as a temple (John 2:19, 21) and that the church itself is called "a temple of God" (1 Cor. 3:16), "a holy temple," and the "dwelling place of God" (Eph. 2:21, 22).

21:23 Because of the light provided by God's glory and the Lamb, there is no need of the sun or of the moon in the eternal state (contrast Gen. 1:14–19). It is speculated that God's glory was the source of the light mentioned before the creation of the sun and moon in Genesis (Gen. 1:3–5, 16).

21:24 From all the nations (Matt. 28:19; Luke 24:47), Christ redeemed His people (5:9), continually calling unbelievers to repent of their sins and believe in Him (14:6, 7). Great multitudes who may be among this group in the eternal Jerusalem have come into the Lord's presence in 7:9 and 15:1–4.

Others hold that the nations here refers to believers from nations that existed during the millennium (20:1–10).

21:25 The gates to the eternal city will not need to be shut because everything that could threaten the city has been defeated (v. 27) and consigned to the lake of fire (20:15).

21:26 This verse builds on the truth of v. 24. But notice its glory. In the worship of Israel no Gentile could enter into the holy precincts without serious repercussions. Remember the persecution Paul suffered when some inferred that he had brought a Gentile into the temple (Acts 21:22–29). But no barriers will be found in the New Jerusalem.

21:27 Never again can the devil (12:9), the one behind every abomination and lie (John 8:44), emerge to instigate sin (Gen. 3). His eternal destiny in the lake of fire is certain (20:10). Only believers, whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life, are allowed by God to enter the New Jerusalem.

22:1 The river flowing with the water of life is reminiscent of the water coming from the temple in Ezek. 47, as well as of Jesus' expression "rivers of living water" (John 7:38), symbolizing the new covenant ministry of the Holy Spirit (7:39).

22:2 The tree of life in the original creation was in the middle of the Garden of Eden (Gen. 2:9), from which all of humanity was excluded after sin entered the world (Gen. 3:22–24). Ezekiel's apocalyptic vision included trees bearing fruit every month with medicinal leaves (Ezek. 47:12). Since only one tree of life is mentioned here—even though it is on both sides of the river—it is probably meant as a parallel to Gen. 2, implying that a new, better, and everlasting Eden has come.

22:3 No more curse means that the affliction of sin, especially on the human race and creation (Gen. 3:14–19), will be erased. As God had fellowship with Adam and Eve before their fall into sin (Gen. 3:8), so the Lord will again be with His servants eternally. In turn, His servants will worshipfully serve Him (Rom 12:1).

22:4 The believer's hope today is to see the Lord face to face (1 Cor. 13:12), something neither Moses nor any other human was previously allowed to do (Ex. 33:20). The name … on their foreheads is both in contrast to the mark of the beast (13:16, 17) and in fulfillment of the promise to the faithful believers at Philadelphia (3:12). It may also extend the imagery of the 144,000 in 14:1.

22:5 No night … no lamp fulfills Christ's proclamation of Himself as "the light of the world" (John 8:12; 9:5; 12:46). The eternal inhabitants of the New Jerusalem (20:15; 21:27) shall reign forever with the Lord, as implied in 1:6 and stated in Dan. 7:18, 27.

22:6, 7 The visions of Revelation are meant to inform the servants of God, true believers who will serve and reign with the Lord eternally (vv. 3, 5), as to what could take place very soon. Blessed begins the sixth of seven beatitudes in Revelation (v. 14; 1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6).

22:8, 9 John makes the mistake of worshiping an angel for a second time (19:10). Again the angel reminds John that he is merely a fellow servant of God and admonishes him to worship only God.

22:10 Earlier John was commanded to seal up (that is, not to write down) the utterances of the seven thunders in 10:4, as Daniel had been instructed to do (Dan. 12:4, 9). The reason John is now told not to seal the book is that the time of its fulfillment is potentially very near.

22:11 unjust … filthy … righteous … holy: This verse, on the surface, seems to be a prediction that believers and unbelievers will live out their lives true to their nature until the final judgment (20:12–15). However, it is almost certainly an implied, indirect evangelistic appeal based on the continuing offer of the gospel in v. 17 and 14:6, 7.

IN FOCUS

"the Alpha and the Omega"

(Gk. to A kai to O) (1:8; 21:6; 22:13) Strong's #1; 2532; 5598: Alpha and omega are the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet. In every context this phrase is used, it is difficult to tell whether the title applies to the Father or to Christ or to both. Most likely it can be attributed to both. God in Christ comprises everything, all that goes between the Alpha and the Omega, as well as being the First and the Last. This expresses God's fullness, comprehensiveness, and all-inclusiveness. He is the Source of all things and will bring all things to their appointed end.

22:12, 13 The rewarding of each believer according to his or her works is taught in 2 Cor. 5:10. Christ's rewards are meant to provide a powerful incentive for an obedient life. Little wonder that the apostle Paul rigorously disciplined himself so that he would not be disqualified from the reward of reigning with Christ (1 Cor. 9:24–27). The judgment seat of Christ can be a time of great regret, or it can be an occasion of supreme joy (2 Cor. 5:9–11). After Christ comes again, He will give rewards to His own. This can be counted on because Christ is in control of all history and eternity.

22:14, 15 Blessed introduces the last of the seven beatitudes in Revelation (v. 7; 1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6). Since the tree of life is literal but is also viewed figuratively (Prov. 3:18; 11:30; 13:12; 15:4), it suggests a quality of life involving an intimate fellowship with Jesus Christ based upon a persevering obedience. This may be a fulfillment of Christ's provision of life, and more abundant life (John 10:10). Since no one can enter … into the city unless their name is written in the Lamb's Book of Life (21:27), this beatitude is speaking of those justified by faith who express that faith in obedience (Eph. 2:8–10). The obedient overcomer is promised the reward of entering through the gates of the city, possibly a privilege reserved for those who share in the Lord's victory procession.

22:15 Dogs was a common expression used by Jews to speak of Gentiles (Matt. 15:26); here, however, it more likely speaks of false teachers (Phil. 3:2). Loves and practices a lie indicates a life dominated by falsehood (21:8).

22:16 the Root and the Offspring of David: Jesus is both the Source and Son of David, echoing the wording of Is. 11:1, 10. Jesus is both greater than David and the rightful heir to the throne of David. Bright and Morning Star means that for the Christian, Jesus is the comforting light in a dark world until the dawn of His return (2:28).

22:17 This invitation by the Spirit remains open to anyone who will come by faith to Christ to accept the Lord's gracious offer of eternal life.

22:18, 19 The Book of Revelation was intended to be heard and obeyed (v. 7; 1:3), not tampered with. The person who either adds to or takes away from its contents will receive from God the strictest punishment, a punishment with eternal consequences. This terrifying warning is even stronger than that of Deut. 4:2 and Prov. 30:6.

22:20 The fact that Jesus is coming quickly within the scope of God's overall plan for this creation is a repeated theme in Revelation (3:11; 22:7, 12). John adds the hope of all believers to the declaration of Christ by praying, come, Lord Jesus.

22:21 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ begins and concludes the Book of Revelation (1:4), implying that the message of grace and the free gift of eternal life in Christ (Eph. 2:8, 9)—not merely the message of judgment upon unbelievers—can be found in this book.

Important Archaeological Discoveries and the Bible[1]

Definition and Importance of Biblical Archaeology

THE LAST 150 YEARS HAVE WITNESSED THE BIRTH, growth, and phenomenal development of the science of biblical archaeology. This new science has performed many wonders in furnishing background material and in illustrating, illuminating, and in many cases authenticating the message and meaning of the Old and New Testament Scriptures.

Biblical archaeology may be defined as a study based on the excavation, decipherment, and critical evaluation of the records of the past as they affect the Bible. While the general field of archaeology is fascinating, much more so is the study of biblical archaeology, since it deals with the Holy Scriptures. This is the reason for the growing enthusiasm for biblical archaeology. The attraction lies in the supreme importance of the message and meaning of the Bible. The Scriptures, by virtue of their character as the inspired revelation of God to people, have naturally held a paramount place in the interest and affection of humankind. Biblical archaeology, illustrating the Bible in its historical background and contemporary life, attracts a measure of the interest that lies in the Bible itself. Accordingly, this science has a worthy ministry of expanding biblical horizons on the human plane. No field of research has offered greater challenge and promise than that of biblical archaeology.

Until the beginning of the 19th century very little was known of biblical times and biblical backgrounds, except what appeared on the pages of the Old Testament or what happened to be preserved in the writings of classical antiquity. This was considerable for the New Testament era but very little indeed for the Old Testament period. The reason for this is that Greek and Latin historians catalogued very little information before the fifth century B.C. As a result, the Old Testament period was very little known extrabiblically, and what was known was confined to what the Bible gave.

This from the viewpoint of contemporary secular history was sparse. The result was that before the beginning of the science of modern archaeology there was practically nothing available to authenticate Old Testament history and literature. One can therefore imagine the fervor aroused among serious Bible students by illuminating discoveries in Bible lands, especially from about 1800 to the present. In fact, modern archaeology may be said to have had its beginning in 1798, when the rich antiquities of the Nile Valley were opened up to scientific study by Napoleon’s Egyptian expedition.

Foundational Discoveries of the 19th Century

Although the most notable discoveries affecting the Bible and particularly the Old Testament were not made until the 20th century, foundational discoveries were made in the 19th century and prepared the way for the modern era.

The Rosetta Stone—Key to Egypt's Splendid Past

This very important monument was discovered in 1798 at Rosetta (Rashid), near the westernmost mouth of the Nile River, by an officer in Napoleon's expedition to Egypt. It was a slab of black basalt trilingually inscribed, which may be said to be the key that unlocked the door to knowledge of the language and literature of ancient Egypt and turned out to be the inscription that opened the modern era of scientific biblical archaeology.

The three languages in which this monument was found to be inscribed were the Greek of 200 B.C. and two forms of Egyptian writing—the older, more complicated hieroglyphic script and the later simplified and more popular demotic writing, which was the common language of the people. The Greek could at once be read and provided the clue to the decipherment of the other two ancient Egyptian scripts. Sylvester de Sacy of France and J. D. Akerblad of Sweden succeeded in unraveling the demotic Egyptian by identifying the Greek personal names it contained, namely Ptolemy, Arsinoe, and Berenike. Thomas Young of England then proceeded to identify the name of Ptolemy in the hieroglyphic portion, where groups of characters enclosed in oval frames, called cartouches, had already been surmised to be royal names. From this point on, the young Frenchman Jean François Champollion, 1790–1832, was able to decipher the hieroglyphics of the monument, show the true nature of this script, make a dictionary, formulate a grammar, and translate numerous Egyptian texts, from the year 1818 to 1832.

Champollion's achievement formally opened up the science of Egyptology. Scholars from henceforth were able to read Egyptian monumental inscriptions and reliefs. From that time forth the literary treasures of the Nile Valley have been opened to scholarly study. Today many universities maintain chairs in the language and culture of ancient Egypt. These studies have opened up vistas of history hitherto unknown so that, from the beginning of Egypt about 2800 B.C. to 63 B.C. when Rome took over, the entire history of the land of the Nile can fairly well be traced.

All of this has tremendous bearing on the background of the Bible. Egypt figures largely in the patriarchal narratives and the Book of Exodus and all through the Pentateuch. As a result, the background of the story of Joseph and of the sojourn of the children of Israel in Egypt, their deliverance under Moses, and much of their sojourn in the desert and later history in Canaan can now be set in the general framework of Egyptian history. It can be said that the whole context of the Old Testament history, in its broad span from Abraham to Christ, is made immeasurably clearer because of the vast strides in our knowledge of Egypt. That great nation of antiquity interacted with the mighty Assyro-Babylonian empires on the Tigris-Euphrates and with the Hittite power on the Halys across the tiny bridge that was ancient Palestine.

The Behistun Inscription—Gateway to Assyro-Babylonian Antiquity

This famous monument was the key to the languages of Assyria and Babylonia. It consists of a large relief panel containing numerous columns of inscription, which was boldly carved on the face of a mountain about five hundred feet above the surrounding plain of Karmanshah on the old caravan route from Babylon to Ecbatana. Unlike the Rosetta Stone written in ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics, and later in popular demotic and in the Greek of the third century B.C., the Behistun Inscription was written in the wedge-shaped characters of ancient Assyria Babylonia. It contained about twelve hundred lines of inscription. The three languages in which it was inscribed were all written in cuneiform characters, consisting of Old Persian, Elamite, and Akkadian. The third language, the Akkadian, was the wedge-shaped language of ancient Assyria and Babylonia, in which thousands upon thousands of clay tablets discovered in the Tigris-Euphrates region are inscribed.

Early excavations revealed a mass of material on which this curious wedge-shaped Babylonian-Akkadian writing appeared. But it was an unsolved riddle. Practically no progress was made until a young English officer in the Persian army, Henry C. Rawlinson, in 1835 and the following years made the dangerous climb to the Behistun Inscription and made copies and plaster of paris impressions of it. Rawlinson knew modern Persian and set to work to decipher the old Persian, the cuneiform part of the inscription. After a decade of labor, he finally succeeded in translating the five columns, nearly four hundred lines of the old Persian portion of the Behistun Inscription, and sent it to Europe in 1845. The text translation and commentary on it were published in 1847 in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society.

In conjunction with the literary part of the monument was a life-sized figure with numerous individuals bowing before it. This person turned out to be Darius the Great (522–486 B.C.), the Achemenid prince who saved the Persian Empire from a rebellion. The scene depicts the king, as Rawlinson's translation of the Persian portion of the inscription shows, receiving the submission of the rebels. The emperor is portrayed at the top of the relief accompanied by two attendants. His foot is placed upon the prostrate form of a leading rebel. The king's left hand holds a bow, while his right hand is lifted toward the winged disc symbolizing Ahura-Mazda, the spirit of good, whom Darius, an ardent follower of Zoroaster, worshiped. Behind the rebel stands a procession of rebel leaders, roped together by their necks. Beside and beneath the sculptured panel the numerous columns of the inscription appear, relating in three languages how Darius defended the throne and crushed the revolt.

Working on the supposition that the other inscriptions told the same story, scholars were soon enabled to read the second language, which was the Elamite or Susian. Then last, but most important, they could decipher the Akkadian or Assyro-Babylonian. This was a great discovery, for this wedge-shaped character of writing is recorded on numerous literary remains from the Tigris-Euphrates Valley. It opened up a vast new field of biblical background, so that today, as in the case of the Rosetta Stone opening up the science of Egyptology, the Behistun Inscription has given birth to the science of Assyriology. Moreover, both Egyptology and Assyriology offer great help in understanding biblical backgrounds and biblical history. No Bible dictionary, Bible handbook, or commentary that is up-to-date can ignore the great findings of these sciences.

The task of deciphering cuneiform is increasing with every decade. Numerous cuneiform libraries have been discovered from antiquity. Two unearthed at Nineveh contained thousands of clay tablets. The library of Ashurbanipal (669–625 B.C.) contained some twenty-two thousand tablets. Among the tablets unearthed in this collection and sent to the British Museum were Assyrian copies of the Babylonian creation and flood stories. The identification and decipherment of these particular tablets by George Smith in 1872 produced great excitement in the archeological world.

Not only in Babylonia but in many other places large bodies of cuneiform literature have been uncovered. For example, the famous Amarna Letters from Egypt were discovered in 1886 at Tell el-Amarna about two hundred miles south of modern Cairo. These Amarna Tablets proved to be diplomatic correspondence of petty princes of Palestine in the 14th century B.C. with the Egyptian court at Amarna. The Amarna Letters give an inside glance into conditions in Palestine just before the conquest by Joshua and the Israelites. Many scholars actually think that they describe aspects of that invasion. One of the documents from the governor of Jerusalem (Urusalim) tells Amenophis IV that the "Habiru" (perhaps the Hebrews) were overrunning many Palestine cities and could not be held back.

Other important bodies of cuneiform literature bearing upon the Bible have been retrieved from Boghaz-Keui and Kanish in Asia Minor. Others come from Susa and Elam, others from the city of Mari on the middle Euphrates, others from Ras Shamra (ancient Ugarit), mentioned in the Amarna Letters and located in North Syria. Others stem from various sites within and without Babylonia.

The Moabite Stone—A Sensational Literary Find

This important inscription, found in 1868, offers another example of the discoveries of the 19th century that prepared the way for the great finds of the 20th century. The inscription dates from about 850 B.C. It was erected by Mesha, king of Moab, and is often styled the Mesha Stone. It tells of the wars of Mesha of Moab with Omri, king of Israel, and Omri's successors. It also tells of Mesha's wars with the Edomites. The material recorded on the Moabite Stone parallels biblical history recorded in 2 Kings, chapters 1 and 3. Numerous places mentioned in the Old Testament occur on the stele (inscribed monument). Among them are Arnon (Num. 21:13; Deut. 2:24), Ataroth (Num. 32:34), Baal Meon or Beth Baal Meon (Josh. 13:17), Beth Bamoth or Bamoth Baal (Josh. 13:17), Beth Diblathaim (Jer. 48:22), Bezer (Josh. 20:8), Dibon (Num. 32:34), Jahaza (Josh. 13:18), Medeba (Josh. 13:9), and Nebo (Num. 32:38).

This inscribed monument or stele measures 3 feet 81/2 inches in height, 2 feet 31/2 inches in width, and 1 foot 13/4 inches in thickness. Its thirty-four lines constitute the longest single literary inscription yet recovered extrabiblically dealing with Palestine in the period 900–600 B.C. It records that Moab had been conquered by Omri and his son Ahab but was set free from the Israelite yoke by Mesha's god Chemosh. This deity is represented as commanding King Mesha to go to war against Israel, who, according to 2 Kings 3:27, offered up his eldest son as a burnt offering upon the wall to propitiate the god Chemosh and to secure his favor.

The Moabite Stone is written in the language of Moab, which was very similar to the Hebrew of the time of Omri and Ahab. This inscription, therefore, has great value in tracing the development of early Hebrew through the centuries. When it was discovered, the Mesha Stone was not only the longest and oldest Phoenician-Hebrew inscription then in existence, it was the only one. Now the Gezer Calendar is known and dates from c. 925 B.C. It is a school boy's exercise written in perfect classical Hebrew. This small limestone tablet, found at ancient Gezer, gives an incidental sidelight on Palestinian agriculture as well as on ancient Hebrew writing. Such discoveries as the Gezer Calendar and the Mesha Stone not only give glimpses into the background of the Bible but form important links in the culture and history of the people outside the pale of Israel.

Great Discoveries of the 20th Century

Although such discoveries as the Rosetta Stone, the Behistun Inscription, and the Moabite Stone are important for their time and laid the foundations of scientific archaeology in the 19th century, it remained for the 20th century to produce the most thrilling and outstanding archaeological finds. During this period biblical archaeology came to be a refined and precise science, adding to the frontiers of biblical knowledge on the human plane and making tremendous contributions to the background, historical and cultural, of the written Word of God.

The Code of Hammurabi—Light on Mosaic Laws

Hammurabi (actually named Hammurapi), the sixth king of the first dynasty of Babylon who ruled in Babylon from 1728 to 1676 B.C., was not always the great world power as we think of him today. Instead, according to the Mari Documents (see Mari Texts under a separate heading in this article), he was somewhat of a minor power when compared to other kings of his day in the early years of his reign. Yet, he is memorialized for eternity with the discovery of the Code of Hammurabi, discovered in 1901. The code, a copy of which was discovered by Jacques de Morgan at Susa in Elam, where it had been carried off by the Elamites from Babylon, is inscribed on a stele of black diorite over seven feet tall and approximately six feet wide. On the stele the code contains some 250 laws or stipulations. At the top of the stele is a bas-relief showing the king receiving the law code from the god Shamash, the god of justice and law.

The code, which is not actually a code per se, but more of a collection of laws, written near the end of Hammurabi's reign, is important in furnishing background material for comparison with other ancient bodies of law. It is natural that it should offer comparative data for the study of the law of the Torah or Pentateuch. This type of code contains a form of laws known as casuistic law or case law, based on specific cases of human conduct. The formula for this type of law is: "If someone does this to another human being (and the infraction is defined), then the penalty is (whatever is prescribed in the code)." James West, in his book Introduction to the Old Testament (Macmillan, 1981, page 180), states, "The social, civil, and criminal laws in the Pentateuch are cast in this form. The subjects covered include the various facets of a complex society, but, as compared with Hebrew laws, the extra-biblical codes exhibit a greater concern with property rights, a less rigorous attention to persons, and scarcely any regulation at all of religion and cult."

It is believed by some scholars that the Code of Hammurabi was not actually written to be used in the practice of law, but is more of an expression of philosophical, intellectual, or literary ideas and ideals to demonstrate the ethical and legal thinking of the day. Furthermore, the code was certainly not written by Hammurabi himself, but most likely by scribes in his employment who penned his name to the document.

For Jewish and Christian tradition the code has value because it enables us to better understand some of the legal writings found in the Pentateuch, such as the Covenant Code (from Exodus 21–23). But the law found in the Torah (Pentateuch) is also very different in places. For example, much of the law found in the Torah is known as apodictic law, which take the form of imperatives such as "You shall . . . , or You shall not . . . ." A good example of apodictic law is found in the Ten Commandments.

The Elephantine Papyri—Light on the Ezra-Nehemiah Era

Discovered in 1903 on the island of Elephantine at the First Cataract of the Nile in Egypt, these important documents give an interesting glimpse of one of the outlying regions of the Persian Empire in the latter part of the fifth century B.C. The Elephantine Papyri come from a Jewish military colony settled at that place. Inscribed in Aramaic, the language of diplomacy and trade throughout western Asia in the Persian period and that was gradually replacing Hebrew as the everyday tongue of the Jewish people, the contents are varied, ranging from the copy of the Behistun Inscription of Darius to such a document as a Jewish marriage contract. The letters tell us about the sacking of a Jewish temple at Elephantine in an anti-Jewish persecution about 411 B.C. The Jews at this far-off colony worshiped the Lord whom they referred to by the name of Yahu.

Other letters from Elephantine that have in recent years become known and have been published by the Brooklyn Museum demonstrate that the temple was rebuilt after its destruction. They contain mention of Yahu as “the god who dwells in Yeb, the fortress.” Compare Psalm 31:3. These new papyri demonstrate that Egypt was still under the authority of Persia in the first years of Artaxerxes II (404–359 B.C.).

The Elephantine Papyri therefore illuminate the general background of the period of Ezra-Nehemiah and the earlier Persian period. They shed important light on the life of the Jewish dispersion in a remote frontier place such as Elephantine in Egypt. They also are invaluable in giving the scholar a knowledge of the Aramaic language of that period, and many of the customs and names that appear in the Bible are illustrated by these important literary finds.

The Hittite Monuments from Boghaz-Keui—Mementos of an Imperial People

In 1906 Professor Hugo Winkler of Berlin began excavations at Boghaz-Keui, a site that lies ninety miles east of Ankara in the great bend of the Halys River in Asia Minor. It was discovered that this was an ancient Hittite capital. Numerous clay tablets were dug up written in texts containing six different languages. A large number of these were inscribed in the cuneiform characters of the Hittite language. Eventually deciphered through the labors of three men and particularly of the Czech scholar Friedrich Hrozny, this language proved to be the key to a great deal of background of interest to the biblical student.

Before the Boghaz-Keui tablets revealed the Hittites to be an ancient people, the biblical references to them used to be regarded in critical circles as historically worthless. In the five books of Moses, references to the Hittites as inhabiting the land of Canaan and as among those whom the Israelites drove out occur in several places (Ex. 33:2; Deut. 7:1; 20:17; Josh. 3:10; 24:11). In the various lists the order varies, and there is not an inkling that one reference might be the name of a powerful imperial people and the other a small local tribe. Less than a century ago the “Hittites” meant little more to the reader of the Bible than the “Hivite” or the “Perizite” still does.

It was commonly known from the biblical record that when Abraham settled in Hebron he had Hittites as neighbors. It was everyday knowledge that one of David’s eminent soldiers was Uriah, a Hittite. But who would have expected that “Hittites” were more prominent than “Gadites” or “Beerothites”?

Now it is known that two great periods of Hittite power are to be noted. The first goes back to about 1800 B.C., and the second is dated from around 1400 to 1200 B.C. In this latter period of Hittite supremacy the powerful rulers reigned at Boghaz-Keui. One of these was named Suppiluliuma. This great conqueror extended his empire to the confines of Syria Palestine. The great Rameses II of Egypt, in the famous battle of Kadesh, collided with Hittite power. A Hittite treaty of peace with the pharaoh in the twenty-first year of the latter’s reign was confirmed by a royal marriage.

About 1200 B.C. the great Hittite Empire collapsed, and the Hittite city of Boghaz-Keui fell. However, important centers of Hittite power remained at Carchemish, Sengirli, Hamath, and other places in north Syria. As a result of the excavation and decipherment of various Hittite monuments, the whole context of the ancient biblical world has been illuminated.

Because of this increased background knowledge, such allusions as those to the “kings of the Hittites” (1 Kin. 10:29; 2 Chr. 1:17) are much better understood. Also Ezekiel’s reference to unfaithful Jerusalem as having an Amorite for a father and a Hittite for a mother (Ezek. 16:45) are now comprehensible. The manner in which archaeology has brought to light the ancient Hittites furnishes a good example of the way this important science is expanding biblical horizons.

The Religious Texts from Ras Shamra (Ugarit)—Canaanite Cults Exposed

One of the most important discoveries of the 20th century was the recovery of hundreds of clay tablets that had been housed in a library situated between two great temples, one dedicated to Baal and another dedicated to Dagon, in the city of Ugarit—modern Ras Shamra in north Syria. These clay tablets date from the 15th to early 14th centuries B.C. They are inscribed in the earliest-known alphabet written in wedge-shaped signs. Professor H. Bower of the University of Halle recognized this new writing as Semitic. Numbers of scholars such as E. Dhorme and Charles Virolleaud began working on the decipherment of this new Semitic language.

First intimations of the archaeological importance of the ancient city of Ugarit, which was unknown until 1928, came in the spring of that year when a Syrian peasant plowing in his field a little north of present-day Minet el-Beida suddenly came across some antiquities. On April 2, 1929, work began at Minet el-Beida under the direction of Claude F Schaffer. After a month's work he changed to the nearby tell of Ras Shamra. Only a few days' work demonstrated the importance of the new location. On May 20 the first tablets were uncovered. Schaffer continued excavations from 1929 to 1937. Between 1929 and 1933, the bulk of significant religious texts were recovered in the royal library in the area. Many of these were inscribed in an early Canaanite dialect of the late Bronze and early Iron periods.

The City of Ugarit

This flourishing second-millennium city, which had been known by scholars from Egyptian inscriptions from the Tell el-Amarna Letters and Hittite documents, was located on the north Syrian coast opposite the island of Cyprus, about eight miles north of Latakia and fifty miles southwest of Antioch. It was situated on a bay and had a port that could be used by seagoing trade ships. It was a harbor town known in Greek times as Leukos Limen, the white harbor. It is now called Ras Shamra, "hill of fennel," because fennel grows there.

The hill that comprises the ruin of the ancient city has the form of a trapezium with the long side about 670 yards north and south and the longer diagonal about 1,100 yards. The hill is about twenty-two yards high. The site was located on the important trade route along the coast from Egypt to Asia Minor, which was connected by a road with Aleppo, Mari on the Euphrates, and Babylon. The sea route from Ugarit to Alashiya—that is, Cyprus—was a short one.

Very early, Ugarit struck up a brisk trade with the Aegean Islands. It became an important harbor. One of the main exported articles was copper, which was used in the production of bronze. Copper was imported from Asia Minor and Cyprus. Bronze was produced in Ugarit. Being a Phoenician town, Ugarit, like its sister cities, delivered timber to Egypt. Not only cedars from the interior were exported but other kinds of wood as well. There were also blue dye factories. Great heaps of murex shells indicate this. These shells, abundantly found along the east Mediterranean coast, produced a famous dye of antiquity.

Literary Importance of the Texts

After preliminary work by many scholars, Cyrus Gordon worked out a Ugaritic Grammar and later put out an edition of the texts called Ugaritic Literature. The decipherment of the texts showed the important parallels between Ugaritic and Hebrew literary style and vocabulary. By 1936 H. L. Ginsberg had made some far-reaching observations with regard to common structural elements. Ginsberg's study showed that Canaanite poetry, like Hebrew, was basically accentual, that is, it consisted of numbers of feet, each of which was accented. Since the Ugaritic language is very closely connected with biblical Hebrew, much light has been shed upon Hebrew lexicography. Any recent lexicon of Hebrew must take into consideration the vocabulary used at Ugarit. Future Hebrew dictionaries will include many words hitherto misunderstood or only partially known.

For example, the word beth-heber (Prov. 21:9; 25:24) hitherto rendered "house" has been shown from Ugaritic and Assyrian to mean specifically "a storehouse." These verses could then be rendered "It is better to dwell in a corner of the housetop, than with a contentious woman and in a storehouse." It is of interest to note that the Egyptian proverbs of Amenemope, which have many parallels to the biblical Book of Proverbs, employs a word for "storehouse" in exactly the same sense.

Religious Significance of the Ugaritic Inscriptions

By far the most important contribution of the religious texts from Ras Shamra (Ugarit) is in giving the Bible student background material for the study of Old Testament religions. The epics set forth very clearly the Canaanite pantheon. We now know that this pantheon of the Canaanites was headed up by the god El, the supreme Canaanite deity. This is also a name by which God is known in the Old Testament (cf. Gen. 33:20). This name, El, often occurs in Old Testament poetry (Ps. 18:31, 32; Job 8:3). It occurs frequently also in prose in compound names, for example, El Elyon, the God Most High (Gen. 14:18); El Shaddai, Almighty God (Gen. 17:1); El Hai, the living God (Josh. 3:10). El is a common Semitic word for God.

Later Excavations at Ugarit

During World War II excavations at Ras Shamra were discontinued. They were resumed in 1948 and have been going on regularly. Work under the direction of C. F. Schaffer has been centered upon uncovering the great palace. The most important discoveries in connection with this structure were the royal archives. These archives, discovered in the palace, were of a historical nature in contrast to the mythological ritual texts of the early years, 1929–1937. The archives in the west wing of the building contained administrative documents to a large degree relating to the royal estates. Those in the east wing had documents relating to the capital city. Those in the central archive were mainly legal finds. Almost all documents were inscribed in the common language of these centuries, namely Akkadian. A few were written in Hurrian and Ugaritic. The names of twelve Ugaritic kings were found in the documents that date from the 18th to the 13th centuries B.C. The seals of the royal acts are remarkable as they all are identical in design at the top, without regard to the name of the reigning king. The motif is well known from Babylonian glyptic art and shows homage being paid to the deified king.

Numbers of fine objects have been recovered from the palace, especially pieces from the king’s bedroom. Especially noteworthy was the large ivory foot panel of the royal bedstead, perhaps the largest single piece of ivory carving yet recovered in the Near East. Another remarkable piece found in the campaign of 1952–1953 is the ancient Ugaritic alphabet of thirty letters. This piece is now housed in the National Museum at Damascus.

The Nuzi Tablets and the Biblical Horites

From this city east of ancient Asshur and a short distance west of Arrapkha, which flourished in the middle centuries of the second millennium B.C., have come several thousand cuneiform texts. These texts have proved of immense value, illustrating the rise of the Hurrians and patriarchal customs. The present site of Nuzi is Yoghlan-Tepe. It is a mound 150 miles north of Baghdad near the foothills of southern Khurdistan. Nuzi was excavated in 1925–1931 by the American School of Oriental Research in Baghdad and Harvard University. The name “Nuzi” was used during its occupation by the Hurrians.

Before the time of the Hurrian settlement the site of Nuzi was occupied by a different ethnic group, called the Subarians. In this older period, the city bore the name of Gasur, and its earliest occupation goes back to prehistoric times. But the vital interest in the town stems from its occupation by the Hurrians and the cuneiform texts that have been excavated from it and from nearby Arrapkha, modern Kirkuk, some nine miles to the east.

The Nuzi Tablets and the Hurrians

Modern archaeology has not only resurrected the ancient Hittites, who were for centuries practically unknown except for sporadic references on the pages of the Bible, but also the enigmatic Horites. In the books of the Pentateuch there are numbers of references to a perplexing people called Horites. These people were defeated by Chedorlaomer and the invading Mesopotamian army (Gen. 14:6). They were governed by chiefs (Gen. 36:20–30). They are said to have been destroyed by Esau's descendants (Deut. 2:12, 22).

This unknown people used to be thought of as a very local, restricted group of cave dwellers. The name "Horite" was thought to be derived from the Hebrew hor; "hole" or "cave. Other than this etymological description the Horites remained completely obscure, not appearing outside the Pentateuch or in extrabiblical literature. Within the last thirty-five years, however, archaeology has performed a miracle in resurrecting the ancient Hurrians, the biblical Horites. They are known not to be a local, restricted group but to be a prominent people who took a preeminent place on the stage of ancient history. It is now known that they not only existed but played a far-reaching role in ancient Near Eastern cultural history. As a result of the discovery of the Hurrians, the popular etymology that connects them with "cave dwellers" has had to be abandoned.

The Hurrians or Horites were non-Semitic peoples who, before the beginning of the second millennium B.C., migrated into northeastern Mesopotamia. Their homeland was in the region south of the Caucasus. They appear first upon the horizon of history about 2400 B.C. in the Zagros Mountains east of the Tigris River. In the period around 2000 to 1400 B.C., the Hurrians were very common and widespread in Upper Mesopotamia.

The Nuzi Tablets and the Patriarchs

The main interest of the Nuzi tablets lies in the illumination of patriarchal times and customs. In the patriarchal narratives, many local practices have been quite obscure to the modern reader. Numerous clay tablets from Nuzi and nearby Arrapkha have in many cases illuminated these customs, so that now we see them as they existed in the general historical background of the time. Although the Nuzi tablets are to be dated in the 15th and 14th centuries B.C., sometime after the patriarchal period (c. 2000–1800 B.C.), nevertheless, they illustrate the times of the patriarchs. The reason is that when the patriarchs came out of Ur, they sojourned in Haran and mingled in west Hurrian society. But the same customs prevailed by extension among the west Hurrians as among the east Hurrians at Nuzi and Arrapkha. Hence, the results obtained at Nuzi are valid by extension for the west Hurrians, as well as for a period considerably later than the patriarchs.

In Genesis 15:2 Abraham laments his childless condition and the fact that his servant Eliezer was to be his heir. In the light of this situation, God assures the patriarch that he is to have a son of his own to inherit his property. The Nuzi tablets explain this difficult matter. They tell how a trusted servant, an apparent outsider, could be heir. At ancient Nuzi, it was customary in Hurrian society for a couple who did not have a child to adopt a son to take care of his foster parents as long as they lived, take over when they died, and then in return for his filial duty to become their heir. But it is important to note that if a natural son was born, this agreement was nullified, at least in part, and the natural son became heir. Eliezer was plainly Abraham’s adopted son. But the miraculous birth of Isaac, as the promised posterity, altered Eliezer’s status as heir.

At Nuzi a marriage contract occasionally included the statement that a given slave girl is presented outright to a new bride, exactly as in the marriage of Leah (Gen. 29:24) and Rachel (29:29). Other marriage provisions specify that a wife of the upper classes who was childless was to furnish her husband with a slave girl as a concubine. In such a case, however, the wife was entitled to treat the concubine’s offspring as her own. This last provision illuminates the difficult statement in Genesis 16:2 with its punning: “I shall obtain children by her,” which means “I may be built up through her.” It is interesting to note that the related law of Hammurabi, paragraph 144, offers no complete parallel. There the wife is a priestess and is not entitled to claim the children of the concubine for herself.

It is thus seen that in Nuzian law and society in which the patriarchs moved for a time, marriage was regarded primarily for bearing children and not mainly for companionship. In one way or another, it was considered necessary for the family to procreate. After Isaac's birth, Abraham's reluctance to comply with Sarah's demand that Hagar's child be driven out is illustrated by local practice at Nuzi. In the event the slave wife should have a son, that son must not be expelled. In Abraham's case, only a divine dispensation overruled human law and made the patriarch willing to comply.

Cases involving rights of the firstborn occurring in Genesis are also illustrated. In the Bible Esau sells his birthright to Jacob. In the Nuzi tablets one brother sells a grove that he has inherited for three sheep. Evidently this is quite comparable in value to the savory food for which Esau sold his right.

In Hurrian society birthright was not so much the matter of being the firstborn as of paternal decree. Such decrees were binding above all others when handed down in the form of a deathbed declaration introduced by the following formula: "Behold now, I am old." This situation helps to illuminate Genesis 27, the chapter that tells of Jacob stealing the family blessing.

The obscure teraphim are also explained in Nuzian law. We now know that the teraphim were small household deities. Possession of them implied headship of family. In the case of a married daughter, they assured her husband the right to her father's property. Laban had sons of his own when Jacob left for Canaan. They alone had the right to their father's gods. The theft of these important household idols by Rachel was a notorious offense (Gen. 31:19, 30, 35). She aimed at nothing less than to preserve for her husband the chief title to Laban's estate.

The texts from Arrapkha and Nuzi have at last supplied details for explaining these difficult customs. In special circumstances the property could pass to a daughter's husband, but only if the father had handed over his household gods to his son-in-law as a formal token that the arrangement had proper sanction.

Another custom illuminated is that found in Genesis 12:10–20; 20:2–6; 26:1–11, where the wife of a patriarch is introduced as his sister with no apparent worthy reason. The texts from Nuzi, however, show that among the Hurrians marriage bonds were most solemn, and the wife had legally, although not necessarily through ties of blood, the simultaneous status of sister, so that the terms “sister” and “wife” could be interchangeable in an official use under certain circumstances. Thus, in resorting to the wife-sister relationship, both Abraham and Isaac were availing themselves of the strongest safeguards the law, as it existed then, could afford them.

Critical Value

Discoveries such as those at Nuzi and Arrapkha are forcing higher critics to abandon many radical and untenable theories. For example, not long ago it was customary for critics to view the patriarchal stories as retrojections from a much later period and not as authentic stories from the Mosaic age, namely, the 15th century B.C. But now the question rises, How could such authentic local color be retrojected from a later age? The Nuzi tablets have done a great service to students of early Bible history in not only attesting the influence of social customs in the patriarchal age and in the same portion of Mesopotamia from which the patriarchs come but also have demonstrated these narratives are authentic to their time. Such discoveries add greatly to our historical background and enable us in our modern day to reveal them in their genuine local color and historical setting.

The Mari Letters—Light on the World of the Patriarchs

One of the most historically and archaeologically rewarding sites that has been discovered in Mesopotamia and Bible lands is the city of Mari, modern Tell el-Hariri on the Middle Euphrates, about seven miles northwest of Abu-Kemal, a small town on the Syrian side of the Syro-Iraq frontier.

The ancient city owed its importance to being a focal point on caravan routes crossing the Syrian desert and linking the city with Syria and the Mediterranean coast and with the civilizations of Assyria and Babylonia. This site was further identified by William Foxwell Albright in 1932.

Mari began to be excavated in 1933 by Andre Parrot under the auspices of the Musée du Louvre. The results were the digging up of an ancient imperial city of great importance and splendor. World War II interrupted excavations in 1939, after six highly successful campaigns had taken place. In 1951 this work was resumed. After four further campaigns it was broken off in 1956, as a result of the trouble over the Suez Canal.

Among the most important discoveries at Mari was the great temple of Ishtar, for the Babylonian goddess of propagation, and a temple-tower or ziggurat. The temple itself had courts of the Sumerian type, columns, and a cella. The ziggurat or temple-tower was similar to that at Ur and other Mesopotamian sites. Statuettes were uncovered to illustrate the popularity of the Ishtar fertility cult. One of the palace murals depicts the fact that the ruling monarch at Mari was believed to have received his staff and ring, the emblems of his authority, from Ishtar.

Another important discovery at Mari was the royal palace. A sprawling structure contemporary with the first dynasty of Babylon, it was built in the center of the mound and contained almost three hundred rooms. The throne room furnished some rare specimens of well preserved wall paintings. This huge building with its beautifully colored mural paintings, its royal apartments, administrative offices, and scribal school is considered one of the best preserved palaces of the Middle East. The structure was built by later Amorites, who worshiped the deities Adad and Dagon. In the postwar campaign the excavation centered mainly around the older strata going back to buildings of the pre-Sargonic period from the time of the dynasty of Akkad.

The Royal Archives

The most interesting finds, however, were the so-called Mari Letters, some twenty thousand clay tablets dug up, which have revolutionized knowledge of the ancient biblical world. These documents were written in the dialect of Old Babylonian. They date from the era of Hammurabi, about 1700 B.C., the same monarch whose code was discovered in 1901 at Susa. These records constitute memoranda of the king and governors of the city-state of Mari and belong to the time of the kings Yasmah-Adad, under whose reign the construction of the palace was begun, and Zimri-Lim, under whom it was completed. Some of the correspondence is that of King Yasmah-Adad with his father, the powerful empire builder King Shamshi-Adad I ofAssyria, as well as with the representatives of the provinces of his realm. King Zimri-Lim’s correspondence also figures in exchanges of diplomatic correspondence with King Hammurabi of Babylon, as well as with the king of Aleppo and other vassals. Two letters dispatched from Aleppo to Zimri-Lim deal with prophetic utterances delivered in the name of the god Adad of Aleppo. The subject and tenor of these remind one of biblical prophecies.

Biblical Value of the Mari Texts

These records are of great value to biblical students because they stem from the region that was the home of the Hebrew patriarchs for a number of years before going on to Canaan. At the time of the third dynasty of Ur, Mari was ruled by the governors of the kings of Ur. Eventually, however, a prince of Mari, Ishbi-Irra, who had brought the city-state of Isin under his dominion about 2021 B.C., was instrumental in bringing about the downfall of the city of Ur.

Nahor, which figures prominently in the patriarchal narratives (Gen. 24:10), is mentioned quite often in the Mari Letters. One letter from Nahor is sent from a woman of that town to the king and runs as follows:

"To my lord say, Thus Inib-Sharrim, thy maid servant. How long must I remain in Nahor? Peace is established and the road is unobstructed. Let my lord write and let me be brought that I may see the face of my lord from whom I am separated. Further, let my lord send me an answer to my tablet."

The term "Habiru," very important since Abraham is the first individual in the Bible to be named a "Hebrew" (Gen. 14:13), is found frequently in the Mari Letters, as is also the case in the Nuzi tablets. In both instances the term apparently means "a wanderer," "one who crosses over," or "one who passes from one place to another." This explanation fits Abraham and the early patriarchs very well since they were nomadic travelers. When Abraham left Ur in southern Mesopotamia to migrate to Canaan, he no doubt passed through the magnificent city of Mari. There can be little doubt that he and Terah with their families put up in one of the caravansaries there. Perhaps they spent days or weeks in the famous city and went sightseeing in the palace, traces of whose grandeur are still visible to the eye of the modern archaeologist.

Historical Value of the Mari Letters

These documents establish that Shamshi Adad I of Assyria, who ruled about 1748–1716 B.C., and Hammurabi the Great of Babylon were contemporaries. With these facts and other details furnished by the Mari documents, the date of Hammurabi can be fixed at about 1728–1676 B.C. This and other evidence have forced scholars to give up identifying Hammurabi of Babylon with Amraphel (Gen. 14:1).

Hammurabi became a strong military leader and administrator. He was a member of the first dynasty of Babylon that reigned from 1830 to about 1550 B.C. The power of this dynasty reached its height under Hammurabi's rule. Hammurabi defeated Rim-Sin of Larsa and established himself over all the city-states of Lower Babylonia. His expanding military machine enabled him to destroy Mari. It was his code of laws, as we have seen, that was discovered at Susa in 1901. This famous codification has remained classic in illustrating and illuminating Israelite laws.

It was during the reign of Hammurabi that the Babylonian story of creation was composed. The poem glorified Marduk, the patron god of Babylon, whom Hammurabi established as the national god of Babylonia. In this period, the early Sumerian language became an antiquity and Semitic-Babylonian came into common usage.

The Mari Letters and the Amorites

About 2000 B.C. the Semitic-nomadic peoples, who lived along the desert fringes of the Fertile Crescent, invaded the centers of established civilization. Known as "Westerners," they are preserved in the Old Testament as "Amorites." Amorite states came into existence all over the Mesopotamian area. Nahor, Haran, Mari, Qatna, and Ugarit all appear as Amorite cities with Amorite kings. Babylon itself became the capital of an Amorite state under Hammurabi. This important historical fact is clearly reflected in the Mari Letters and in the peoples known as "Amorites" or "Westerners." In such a manner archaeology is slowly but surely outlining the historical framework of the patriarchal age. Such discoveries as the Mari Letters prove of incalculable assistance to the historian of the ancient biblical world.

The Lachish Ostraca—Jeremiah's Age Lives Again

In the excavations of Lachish, a southwestern Palestinian city, the most astonishing finds were some letters embedded in a layer of burnt charcoal and ashes. They were eighteen in number and were in Hebrew writing done in the ancient Phoenician script. Three more of these letters were discovered in later campaigns in 1938.

Almost all of the letters were written by someone named Hoshiah, who was stationed at some military outpost, to Jaosh, who was evidently a high-ranking officer in the garrison at Lachish. It was the era of the Babylonian overrunning of Palestine several years before the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. The Babylonians had attacked and partly burned Lachish some ten years before in the reign of Jehoiakim. These particular letters were in the layer of ashes that represent the final destruction of the city. Accordingly, they are to be dated from 587 B.C., when Nebuchadnezzar was making the final siege of Jerusalem and also of Lachish and Azekah.

Identification of Lachish

This large mound, one of the largest occupied in Palestine, is located thirty miles southwest of Jerusalem, twenty miles inland from the Mediterranean, and fifty miles west of Hebron. It is mentioned in the Amarna Letters and in earlier Egyptian sources. Its strategic importance is attested by its being on the main route from central Palestine to Egypt. It overlooked the rich Shephelah (terrain that descended to the coastal lowland). The fortress city was an ideal barrier between the Philistine plains and the elevated Judean country. It was one of the principal fortified cities of Judah and one of the bastions taken by the Israelites in their conquest of Palestine (Josh. 10:31–35). The site of Umm-Lakis was first thought to be Lachish. Then the location was sought at Tell el-Hesy by Sir Flinders Petrie, a pioneer archaeologist. William Foxwell Albright finally identified it correctly with the large mound of Tell el-Duweir.

Nebuchadnezzar captured Lachish in 588–586 B.C. (Jer. 34:7). Marks of a huge conflagration on the road leading up to the gate and on the adjacent wall display that the attackers relied largely upon fire, for which felled olive trees not yet harvested supplied the fuel.

Excavations at Lachish

The Wellcome-Marston Archaeological Expedition in 1933 commenced work there, under the direction of J. L. Starkey. In 1938 Starkey was killed by Arab brigands, and the work was carried on by Lankester Harding and Charles H. Inge.

Besides evidences of earlier occupation, Lachish disclosed settlement by the Hyksos about 1720–1550 B.C. These people overran Egypt during this period. A typical Hyksos defense ditch or fosse, with a ramp of clay and lime that apparently provided an enclosure for their horses, was brought to light. In the fosse three Canaanite Egyptian temples built between 1450 and 1225 B.C. were excavated. A Persian temple of a much later period was also found. Cemeteries at Lachish yielded a great quantity of pottery, jewelry, scarabs, and skeletal evidence. A well, 200 feet deep, was located within the city, the remains of a tremendous engineering excavation for water storage, which was not completed. A shaft of about 85 feet terminates in a rectangle 80 x 70 feet cut to a depth of 80 feet. The aim was a water system that would have been much larger than that provided by Hezekiah for Jerusalem in the Siloam Tunnel and comparable to similar systems at Gezer and Megiddo.

A good quantity of inscribed material has been removed from the Lachish excavations. A bronze dagger from about 1700 B.C. contains four pictographic signs, samples of the early script. A bowl and a ewer contain specimens of the same early writing as that found at Serabit el-Khadem. The name “Gedaliah” was found on a jar handle and may be the official whom Nebuchadnezzar set over the land after the fall of Jerusalem (cf. Jer. 40–42).

Contents of the Lachish Letters

But of all the epigraphic discoveries at Lachish, the most important are the Lachish Letters. These letters may be briefly described as follows: Letter 1 lists names, the majority of which are found in the Old Testament. Letters 2 and 5 consist largely of greetings. Letter 3, the longest, contains the most information. This concerns movements of Jewish troops and also makes an interesting note to an unnamed prophet and his word of warning. Letter 4 states that Hoshiah, though observing the signals of Lachish, cannot see those of Azekah. Azekah may well have fallen earlier, for this letter states, “We are watching for the signal station at Lachish according to all the signals you are giving, because we cannot see the signals of Azekah.” Letter 6 contains the biblical expression, “to weaken the hands of the people.” This recalls Jeremiah, who uses a similar expression (Jer. 38:4).

Historical Importance of the Letters

The Lachish Letters give us an independent view of conditions in Judah in the last days before the fall of Jerusalem. As the Neo-Babylonian army advanced, the doom of Jerusalem was sealed, in contrast to its deliverance under the Assyrian, Sennacherib, as Isaiah had predicted (2 Kin. 19:20, 32–36). Relentlessly, Nebuchadnezzar advanced on the city after a terrible eighteen-month siege in 587–586 B.C. The walls of the city were broken down, the houses and the temple burned, and the people carried away to exile (2 Kin. 25:1–12).

Jeremiah conducted his difficult ministry in these agonizing times. His reference to Azekah and Lachish is most interesting. “When the king of Babylon’s army fought against Jerusalem and all the cities of Judah that were left, against Lachish and Azekah; for only these fortified cities remained of the cities of Judah” (Jer. 34:7).

Tell Zakariya in the Shephelah region has been identified as Azekah. In 1898 it was excavated by Frederick K. Bliss of the Palestine Exploration Fund. It had a strong inner fortress buttressed with eight large towers.

The Lachish Letters concern the time just prior to the fall of the city and present the same conditions of turmoil and confusion that are revealed in the Book of Jeremiah. Numerous place names that occur in the Bible are found in the letters, as well as personal names. Hoshaiah appears in Jeremiah 42:1 and Nehemiah 12:32. God is referred to by the four-letters YHWH, which are the consonants of the name “Jehovah” or “Yahweh.” It is also interesting to note that many of the men’s names have Yahweh endings. A prophet like Jeremiah is referred to in the letters. But this is most probably not Jeremiah himself.

So complete was the destruction by the Babylonians that it took many centuries for Judah to recover. The returned remnant was tiny and weak. The small Jewish state stamped its coins with the name “Yehud,” that is, Judah, but not until after 300 B.C. do substantial archaeological remains appear, and then they are not abundant. Certainly the Babylonians did a thorough job of destroying Jewish power for many centuries.

The Paleographic Importance of the Letters

Being inscribed in biblical Hebrew, in which the Old Testament Scriptures were written, and with stylistic and vocabulary similarities to the Book of Jeremiah, these letters are of great paleographic importance. They help the scholar to trace the evolution of the Hebrew alphabet, noting the formation of the letters and their style. They also enable one to see how the Old Testament Scriptures, which were then written, appeared.

Surely research of this type, that makes it possible for the scholar to look back, to resurrect the past, and to see how the language of the Old Testament developed, is fascinating. Great strides are being made in this field of enquiry. It is one truly bright spot in original biblical studies. This type of study is of immense value in expanding historical backgrounds and illuminating Holy Scripture on the human plane.

The Dead Sea Scrolls

The middle of the 20th century saw the greatest manuscript discovery of modern times. In 1947 a young Bedouin shepherd stumbled upon a cave south of Jericho, containing many leather scrolls of Hebrew and Aramaic writing and about six hundred fragmentary inscriptions. Great excitement prevailed in the archaeological world. In 1952 new caves containing fragments of later scrolls in Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic were found. These other startling manuscript discoveries have been followed by news of additional manuscripts found in other caves in the Dead Sea area.

The Date of the Scrolls

After intensive study of the manuscripts from the Dead Sea area, scholars define three periods: 1. The Archaic Period, about 200–150 B.C.; 2. the Hasmonean Period, about 150–30 B.C.; and 3. the Herodian Period, about 30 B.C. to A.D. 70. The great majority originated in the second and third periods, especially the last half of the second period and last half of the third period.

Although attacks have been made against the antiquity and authenticity of these manuscripts, two lines of evidence substantiate their antiquity. The evidence of radiocarbon count, a scientific method of dating, places the linen in which the scrolls were wrapped in the general era of 175 B.C. to A.D. 225. Scholars relying on paleographic evidence date these documents by the form of the letters and the way they are written in comparison with other eras of writing. They are able to demonstrate that they come in the intermediate period between the script of the third century B.C. and of the middle of the first century A.D. W. F. Albright observes, “All competent students of writing conversant with the available material and with paleographic method date the scrolls in the 250 years before A.D. 70.

The Contents of the Scrolls

Literally hundreds of scrolls and scroll fragments were found through the excavation at Qumran. A summary of these findings are as follows:

In Cave One there were seven major scrolls found. Among these were two copies of Isaiah, one complete and one partially complete; The Manual of Discipline; Pesher on Habakkuk (a commentary); Thanksgiving Hymns; The War Scroll; and Genesis Apocryphon. There were also additional fragments from other scrolls found here. In Cave Two there were thirty-three fragments discovered. From Cave Three fourteen fragments were reclaimed. Cave Four produced the largest collection of materials. Literally thousands of scroll fragments were found here, both biblical and sectarian. In Cave Five twenty-five fragments were found. Cave Six contained some thirty fragments. Cave Seven contained nineteen fragments written in Greek. This was unique because most of the other scrolls and scroll fragments were written in Hebrew or Aramaic. In Cave Eight there were five fragments. Cave Nine produced only one fragment. From Cave Ten the archaeologists recovered an inscribed piece of pottery. Finally, in Cave Eleven approximately eighteen fragments were discovered.

Copies of every book of the Hebrew Scriptures were found here with the exception of the Book of Esther. Sectarian books found here include the Manual of Discipline, The War Between the Children of Light and Darkness, The Book of Jubilees, and The Copper Scroll. From these sectarian scrolls and scroll fragments we have been able to learn much about first-century Palestinian Judaism and also about the Essene sect, the scribes who copied the Dead Sea Scrolls. The biblical books found are the earliest extant copies to date. Before the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls, the earliest manuscript of the Hebrew Scriptures dated to the ninth century A.D.

Most of the scrolls are written in either Hebrew or Aramaic, but we have some scroll fragments written in Greek. The scrolls are usually written in one of four types of script: archaic, Hasmonean, Herodian, or ornamental.

Other Manuscript-Yielding Sites

In 1952 a cave was uncovered at Murabbaat in another part of the desert. This yielded manuscripts chiefly from the second century A.D. in Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic, including a few texts of Genesis, Exodus, Deuteronomy, and Isaiah. Several Hebrew letters were discovered from the period of Simon ben Keseba, that is, Bar Kochba, who led the revolt in A.D. 132–135. A notable exception to the second century A.D. date of this material is an archaic Hebrew papyrus piece, a palimpsest, a list of names and numbers, dated in the sixth century B.C.

In the same general area, other caves have been found, one group in Khirbet Mird, northeast of the monastery of Mar Saba. These contain Arabic papyri, Greek and Christo-Palestinian-Syrian documents, with fragments of biblical codices, all late Byzantine and early Arabic. Another group of manuscripts date from the period of the bulk of the Murabbaat material. Among them is a version of the minor prophets in Greek and a corpus of Nabatean papyri, both of great biblical and historical importance.

Excavations at Khirbet Qumran

Khirbet Qumran was excavated between 1951 and 1954. This Essene community, with the nearby caves, proved to be the richest manuscript-yielding center. Members of this community copied these manuscripts and preserved them by hiding them in the caves. The Essenes at Khirbet Qumran, seven miles south of Jericho near the shores of the Dead Sea, were next to the Pharisees and Sadducees in importance in sectarian Judaism. This site has become one of the most publicized places in Palestine because of the phenomenal manuscript finds in the cave-dotted cliffs.

Excavations at Khirbet Qumran have fully authenticated this site as the center of Essenic Judaism. As the result of the recovery of coins, pottery, and architectural remains, the story of Qumran's occupation can now be told. Four periods in the later history of the site are traced.

Period 1

The first period extends from its founding about 110 B.C. under John Hyrcanus. Numerous coins of this ruler were dug up, as well as of other Hasmonean rulers including Antigonus, 40–37 B.C., the last ruler of this line, to the seventh year of Herod, 31 B.C. At this time an earthquake apparently leveled the site.

Period 2

The second period at Qumran dates from the rebuilding and enlargement about A.D. 1 until the Roman destruction in June, A.D. 68. During this era in the lifetime of Jesus, John the Baptist, and the early Christian apostles, Qumran flourished, influencing Judaism and the early Christian church. Coins have been found dating from the reign of Archelaus, 4 B.C. to A.D. 6, and from the time of the Roman procurators down to the second year of the first Jewish revolt in A.D. 66–70. The Roman army, which took Jericho in June, A.D. 68, evidently likewise captured Qumran. One coin, marked with an X, belonged to the Tenth Legion. Iron arrowheads were found in a layer of burned ash in the excavation.

Qumran Fell to Roman Occupation

Some coins describe Judaea Capta. These date from the reign of Titus, A.D. 79–81, and mark Period 3 as the Roman occupation after Jerusalem's destruction in A.D. 70. Evidence that Qumran structures were converted into army barracks indicates that a Roman garrison was stationed there from about A.D. 68 to A.D. 100. At this time the site apparently was abandoned.

Period 4

Qumran is distinguished by reoccupation of the site during the second Jewish revolt, A.D. 132–135. Coins dating from this era indicate that here the Jews made their last stand to drive the Romans from their country. After that Qumran sank into obscurity.

Architectural Remains at Qumran

The main edifice at Qumran is 100 feet by 120 feet and formed the communal center and hub of the complex. At the northwest corner was a massive defense tower with thick walls enforced by stone embankments. Some coins from the time of the second Jewish revolt (A.D. 132–135) attest its use as a fortress against Roman power.

Alongside the general meeting room is the largest hall of the main building. Here was located the scriptorium. Several inkwells of the Roman period, and even some dried ink, indicate that the manuscripts had been copied by the community's scribes.

Also in the complex were two cisterns (artificial reservoirs) carefully plastered. There were installations for ablutions and baptisms. Of the possibly forty cisterns and reservoirs, the bulk of them must have been used for storage of water in the very hot, dry climate.

Of great interest is the cemetery, containing about one thousand burial places. De Vaux excavated many of these tombs. They are noted for their lack of jewelry and any evidences of luxury.

Khirbet Qumran and the Essenes

Not only do the excavations at Khirbet Qumran demonstrate that it was the headquarters of Essenic Judaism but three authorities who were contemporary witnesses attest the same fact, namely, Josephus, Philo, and

Pliny. Pliny, for example, locates the Essenes at precisely the spot where Qumran is situated, namely, “on the west side of the Dead Sea.” He also designates the town of En Gedi as situated “below the Essenes.”

Josephus relates their unselfish character, industry, and communal life. He extols their love for common toil, says they dressed in white, and describes their three-year probationary period before admission to the sect, and other phases of discipline. He also mentions their various lustrations and says that they numbered about four thousand. He comments on their celibacy, piety, convictions concerning immortality, and their belief in rewards for righteousness.

Philo gives a similar description of this group in Judaism. The library at Qumran attests their delight in the Bible and literature. This is reflected in information given by Philo and Josephus. The Essenes carefully copied Holy Scripture and took pains to preserve it.

Recent Excavations in Jerusalem

The Ophel Garden

One of the most exciting excavations to take place in Jerusalem in the past three decades is also one of the most recent: the excavations to the south of the Temple Mount, known as the Ophel Garden. Here we find a collection of buildings and architectural styles representing various periods dating from the Turkish Period all the way back to the time of King Solomon. The stones found here were used in the construction of buildings from the Second Temple Period, from the temple of Herod the Great. These are the stones pushed from the temple walls by the Romans when they destroyed the temple in A.D. 70.

What makes this excavation so special? It reveals additional walls of the temple from the Second Temple Period (37 B.C. to A.D. 70). Up until the early 1980s, all we had of the Herodian temple was that small part of the outside wall known as the Western Wall or the "Wailing Wall." Now a new section of the wall to the west and the south has been opened for public viewing. This new section helps us to better see and understand just how magnificent the temple must have been. Some of the stones revealed here weigh an estimated eighty tons—some of the largest building stones ever found anywhere in the world! But there is also more.

The archaeologists who supervised most of the work are two very prominent Israeli scholars, Benjamin Mazar and Meir Ben-Dov. Much of their work has been published in an excellent work entitled In the Shadow of the Temple (Jerusalem: Keter Publishing, 1982). There is such a wealth of knowledge from their work that we cannot possibly do this excavation justice here. We can, however, lift up a few of their findings.

First, from their work we have learned of a long street that ran the entire length of the western wall of the temple, more than five hundred meters long. Along this wall, at its base, were shops, probably for the sale of religious articles used in the home (such as the menorah, mezzuzah, tefilin, or talit). In addition, deep in the ground beneath the southwestern corner a stone was found upon which was written the inscription "To the place of trumpeting." This must have fallen from the wall above during the Roman destruction. According to Jewish historical sources, the "place of trumpeting" was known as the "Pinnacle of the Temple," the place from which the shofar or ram's horn was blown to announce the beginning and ending of the Sabbath or Shabbat, daily temple worship, festivals, feast days, and holidays. It is this very place that is identified with one of the temptations of Jesus reported in the New Testament Gospels. Until this discovery it had been assumed that the pinnacle of the temple was located on the southeastern corner of the temple wall because it stood high overlooking the Kidron Valley. This, of course, would make no sense at all, since most of the people who needed to hear the trumpeting were living inside the wall in the lower city and near to the Temple Mount.

Second, Mazar and Ben-Dov found a collection of ancient, first-century miqvot or miqvah baths (Jewish ritual immersion baths) in the area of the southern steps that led into and out from the temple (these will be discussed in detail later). These miqvot would have been used by men entering the temple for worship and prayer, particularly priests, to satisfy ritual cleanliness for which religious Jewish men had a passion. Perhaps Jesus even used these baths when he entered the temple from the south.

Third, there are two sets of gates found here for entering and exiting the temple. Both sets are now sealed or closed. The eastern gate (known as the Eastern Huldah Gate, named for the prophetess Huldah) was for entrance into the Court of the Gentiles, the large court that surrounded the temple itself. The western gate (known as the Western Huldah Gate) was for exiting from the temple. However, there was a provision that stated that a person in mourning could enter through the exit and exit from the entrance. By this people would know that they were in mourning and could offer words of comfort.

Finally, here we find the remains of a massive staircase leading into the temple area. These steps were not only an entrance, but also a place where rabbis could teach privately, in a non-traditional way. When a rabbi would teach publicly he would teach inside the Court of the Gentiles, in a colonnade known as the “Royal Stoa.” These teaching sessions were characterized with questions and answers, a common Jewish style of teaching, and open to anyone who wanted to listen or dialogue. This public teaching would take place on the Temple Mount. But if a rabbi wanted to teach more privately and in a manner not open to questions (in other words, if the teacher wanted to deliver a lecture), this would take place on the steps at the southern end of the Temple Mount. These steps were known colloquially as the “Teaching Steps.” Perhaps it was here that Jesus spoke the words found recorded in Matthew 23.

All in all, this excavation has vastly increased our knowledge of these areas found outside of the Temple Mount to the south and southwest and has given us a clearer picture of the vastness of the temple.

The Essene Quarter

Where was the place of the Last Supper? This has been a hotly debated question for centuries. At last we think we have an answer! For centuries, when Christian pilgrims would visit Jerusalem, they would be taken to an "Upper Room" at present-day Mount Zion; and here they would read or tell the story of the Last Supper. In fact, this is a traditional site that cannot be dated back any farther than the Crusader Period, and this room was used as a place of prayer by the Muslims during the Turkish Period. This is certainly not the place where Jesus shared the Passover meal with His disciples the night of His arrest. That place has been long since destroyed.

If, then, this is not the place of the Last Supper, where should we look? Our answer lies in two unrelated sources: the New Testament and the writings of Josephus Flavius, a first-century Jewish historian. According to Luke 22:10–13, we find "'Behold, when you have entered the city, a man will meet you carrying a pitcher of water; follow him into the house which he enters. Then you shall say to the master of the house, "The Teacher says to you, 'Where is the guest room where I may eat the Passover with My disciples?'" Then he will show you a large, furnished upper room; there make ready.' So they went and found it just as He had said to them, and they prepared the Passover." For those who know a little of Jewish culture, there is something strange here. In the first century men did not usually carry water. This would have been considered as women's work. Why would a man be carrying water? Perhaps because he was an Essene monk.

Josephus tells us that there was a major earthquake in 31 B.C., and during this earthquake the Essene monastery of Qumran was destroyed. Herod the Great gave the Essenes a place in the Upper City of Jerusalem to establish a monastery there and they moved their headquarters to Jerusalem. This area was known as the Essene Quarter. Following the death of Herod the Great in 4 B.C., the Essenes moved back to the wilderness of Judea and rebuilt their monastery at Qumran. However, they left behind a small group of monks to maintain their monastery in Jerusalem. Perhaps it was here that Jesus shared the Last Supper, the Passover, with His disciples. There is no better explanation of why this man would be carrying water and why Jesus wanted His disciples to follow this man.

Where was this Essene monastery of Jerusalem located? Until the mid–1980s no one knew. At about that time, however, the remains of a gate was found not far from the traditional Upper Room, behind the Dormition Abbey on Mount Zion, with the inscription “The Essene Gate.” We now know where the monastery was located and a new excavation is under way to recover this place where Jesus had the Last Supper with His disciples.

Ebla

The modern Arabic name for this 140-acre mound in the Northwest corner of Syria is Tell Mardikh. Archaeologists of the University of Rome began digging this mound in 1964 and found an inscription in 1968 that identified this site as ancient Ebla. They uncovered portions of impressive buildings from the time of the biblical patriarchs (1900–1700 B.C.); and beneath these were palaces and temples of the Early Bronze Age (2400–2250 B.C.). This was the discovery of an early but advanced civilization that was previously unknown.

In 1974, 1975, and 1976, three rooms of one palace yielded almost seven thousand well-preserved clay tablets and about thirteen thousand fragments of other tablets with cuneiform writing on them. This archive of ancient Sumerian and Canaanite literature is very important. The tablets contain economic, political, and legal records of Ebla. (Understanding the cultures of Israel’s neighbors aids biblical interpretation.) They show that Ebla was a merchant empire. Its rulers controlled trade routes that reached into the Mesopotamian Valley, into the mountains of modern-day Turkey, and to the edge of the Nile Valley.

But more importantly, some tablets are dictionaries—the earliest known—providing the meanings of words used in both the Sumerian and early Canaanite (Eblaite) languages. (Languages help archaeologists understand the cultures.) Many Canaanite words at Ugarit and Hebrew words in the Old Testament can be understood more accurately because they also occur on these early tablets.

Many place names occur in the Ebla records, including those familiar to readers of the Bible: Haran, Damascus, Hazor, Beth Shan, Shechem, Joppa, Eshkelon, Jerusalem, Dor—and some scholars believe also Sodom and Gomorrah. Since the Bible itself presents these as real places, the Ebla tablets help support its historical reliability.

About ten thousand names of people are found on the tablets. Among them are biblical names such as Adam, Eve, Noah, Jubal, Abram, Ishmael, Hagar, Keturah, Bilhah, Israel, Micah, Michael, Saul, David, Jehorum, and Jonah. Although these names do not refer to the biblical personages, they establish that the names in Scripture are authentic.

Sometimes, however, the tablets contain mythic and legendary stories that conflict with the Scriptures (e.g., different creation accounts). Such cases illumine the biblical authors' polemics against pagan worldviews.

The excavation project continues until the present and may be expected to cast more light on the Bible's meaning and reliability.

The Thrilling Story of Biblical Archaeology Is Not Yet Completed

Other great discoveries as a result of continuous research in Bible lands promise even greater contributions to biblical studies in future years. For example, the recovery of thirteen Coptic codices from Nag Hammadi in Upper Egypt, since 1945, have almost rivaled the Dead Sea Scrolls in actual biblical importance. These even include the apocryphal “Gospel of Thomas” and are of inestimable value, especially from a critical standpoint in dating New Testament literature.

What new and exciting discovery affecting the Bible may we expect the archaeologist’s spade to turn up next? The prospect should engender a love for the Scriptures and a desire to study them employing history, linguistics, and archaeology as the means under the Holy Spirit to a more accurate understanding of the Bible’s message to humankind.

Backgrounds to Modern Church History

How the Three Main Branches of Christianity Came About

THE ORGANIZED CHURCH OF MODERN TIMES IS composed of three large branches: Orthodox, Roman Catholic, and Protestant. These three segments of Christendom developed over a period of fifteen centuries. The Christian church of the first several centuries was unified structurally and had not yet taken on the threefold division that is so familiar to us today. Only in the developments of the next several centuries did these particular designations begin.

Originally the early church had major centers throughout the Roman Empire, over each of which arose a bishop who directed the affairs of the church in his particular region. The major centers of the second century were Jerusalem, Antioch, Alexandria, Ephesus, and Rome. Ephesus later lost influence, and the influence of Jerusalem was reduced following its destruction in A.D. 70 and the paganizing of Israel by the Romans after the Bar Kokhba revolt in A.D. 135. Prior to the sixth century there was no one bishop who was viewed as being over the entire church of Christ throughout the empire; instead there were five separate patriarchs who shared equal oversight.

Starting with the bishop of Rome called Gregory the Great, however, that bishop began to be recognized as chief among his peers. Based on this, one could place the formalization of the Roman Catholic Church at the end of the sixth century. Meanwhile, the eastern church retained considerable freedom from Rome and eventually became known as the Orthodox Church. Its leadership came from the bishop of Constantinople, the eastern capital of the Roman Empire.

The Protestant branch of Christendom separated from the Roman Catholic Church in the sixteenth century after the Reformation led by Martin Luther. The Reformation, which emphasized Scripture and deemphasized tradition as the standard of church doctrine, completed a split with Rome which had been initiated by Christian dissenters as early as the thirteenth century.

Historical Factors Prior to the Protestant Reformation

Heresies

Errors of doctrine began in the Christian church almost as soon as the church began. The apostles contended with false teachings about the requirements for justification before God (legalism), and about the nature of the physical body of Christ and of reality itself (early forms of gnosticism). Between the first century and the modern era numerous heresies have arisen: Ebionites denied the true deity of Christ, as did later Dynamic Monarchianists and Arians; Modalists denied the Trinity; Eutychians and Nestorians struggled with the doctrine of the person of Christ in His human nature. These are only some of the more prominent errors, many of which are found in contemporary cults. Other heresies concerned the matter of human sin (Pelagianism) and the nature of the atonement. Heresy did have the positive result of forcing the church to more clearly define orthodox biblical doctrine, much of which has been expressed in the various creeds.

Persecutions

The early church went through ten separate persecutions. The harshest and most pervasive were the persecution of Domitian at the end of the first century (c. 90–96), the persecution of Decius (249–51) in the midst of the celebration of the 1,000th anniversary of the founding of Rome, in which there was a major push for return to the ancient religions; and, last and most severe, the persecution of Diocletian (303–311). The church braved these tribulations, however, and grew even stronger.

Constantine

Soon after the persecution of Diocletian, a subsequent emperor, Constantine, became a Christian. He began to use the machinery of the Roman government to strengthen his newfound faith, and he finally declared Christianity to be the official religion of the empire. Constantine’s mother Helena, who was also a Christian, heard of the disrepair of many of the biblically significant sites in the Holy Land and traveled there to secure their protection through the building of shrines, some of which are now situated under ancient churches. Constantine was instrumental in bringing about an affirmation of Christ's deity at the Council of Nicaea, as expressed in the consequent Nicean Creed.

Mohammed

In the seventh century an Arabian named Mohammed claimed to have revelations from God, which ultimately gave rise to the Koran and the faith of Islam. Mohammed claimed that this faith was the final revelation of God, though he recognized the genuineness of earlier revelations given through Moses and Jesus, both of whom he considered great prophets. He enforced this new faith through the power of the sword, and eventually conquered many of the lands that had been largely Christian. These events eventually led to the Crusades of the eleventh through the thirteenth centuries.

Crusades

A call to deliver the Holy Land from the Muslim conquerors began in the late eleventh century. The first crusade was successful in capturing the major cities of Asia Minor and the city of Jerusalem. Following this came several other crusades which turned out not to be of lasting success. To attract soldiers for these crusades some prospective enlistees were offered immediate entrance to heaven if killed, or forgiveness of debts and freedom from taxes if they lived.

The Reformation

The Roman branch of the church held unfettered sway in the west from the sixth century until the Reformation of the sixteenth century, which sought to restore the ancient faith of the first several centuries. The centers of the Reformation were Germany with Martin Luther; Switzerland with John Calvin and Huldreich Zwingli; and Scotland with John Knox.

How Christianity Has Affected Secular History

What would life be like if Christ had not come and Christianity had not spread throughout the world? It would most likely be much different. Although Greece gave western civilization much art, philosophy and literature, and Rome provided law and government, it was the Christian worldview that provided the basis for modern science, efforts to alleviate poverty, universal education, and the ideals of equality and liberty enshrined in the documents of the many governments. The God of order and beauty provided for the view that nature was predictable and orderly. The Christian belief that all humanity is a creation of God gave a foundation to the self-evident truth of life, liberty and pursuit of happiness. Since people are made in the image of God they are valuable apart from their station in life, amount of wealth, or utility to society. People are helped, educated, and protected simply because they are made in God's image. Loss of these Christian ideals would undoubtedly be a tragic loss to the well-being of humanity.
