A Different Kind of Commentary

EVERYONE WHO READS THE BIBLE AT ALL WANTS to know more about it and understand it better. A variety of helps have been developed to that end, although most of them are focused on specific categories of information—atlases for map study, dictionaries or lexicons for words studies, or individual books dealing with specific books of the Bible.

For a general yet thorough study of the whole Bible, the best resource is a commentary. Commentaries come in all sorts of shapes and sizes, from one volume to sixty! Unfortunately they also come with some negative baggage, at least for ordinary Bible students. Do a word association on "commentary" with most people and you will hear words like "long," "dry," "boring"—perhaps even "confusing." Many commentaries are written and designed for scholars and specialists, and by and large they do a good job of meeting the needs of those people. If you are not in that elite group, however, commentaries may leave you feeling intimidated.

Nelson's New Illustrated Bible Commentary breaks the commentary mold. From conception to final production, it has been planned and developed for people who are not typical commentary users—ordinary Bible readers and students, Sunday school teachers, and Bible study leaders. This book does have scholarship too—more than forty evangelical scholars have contributed to its contents. But it offers much more. It is brief yet complete, with verse-by-verse annotations on the whole Bible in less than 2,000 pages. It is at the same time clear and relevant, speaking to issues people face in their daily lives today. Perhaps most conspicuously it is attractive and appealing, with one or more interesting features on almost every two-page spread.

Watch for these in-text features as you move through this commentary.

—word studies to help you grasp what the original writers of the Greek and Hebrew words actually meant —brief pieces of background information that you might otherwise have missed —longer pieces of background or historical information, helping you discover the how and why of biblical incidents

—articles that emphasize life-application principles, so you can more readily put the Word to work in your life

—articles describing cultural factors that have some bearing on a biblical incident and thus shedding new light on the world of the Bible —charts and tables, so you can recognize the relationship between people and events more quickly and easily

—personality profiles to help you see Bible characters as fully rounded individuals

—timelines to go with every Bible book, allowing you to place the books within their historical setting

All of these are listed by page number in the pages following this article.

In addition, each Bible book commentary opens with a helpful introduction and an outline. Maps and photographs are scattered appropriately throughout the volume. Major feature articles offer an overview of the Old and New Testaments as well as a look at key biblical themes and doctrines. An article between the testaments helps you bridge that 400-year period. Other features in the Appendix help you gain a better grasp of how biblical archaeology illuminates the Bible and how church history shows the Bible's message in action. Closing the book is a General Bibliography, offering you carefully selected resources to extend and deepen your studies more.

Not only do we believe that Nelson's New Illustrated Bible Commentary is unique in the marketplace—we believe that you will find it uniquely helpful in your life as a Christian who wants God's Word to shine into your world.

The Old Testament at a Glance

The Classification of the Hebrew Bible

ENGLISH READERS ARE FAMILIAR WITH THE CLASSIFICATIONS and order of the Old Testament in the English Bible. The divisions are the Law of Moses, the Historical Books, the Poetical Books, and lastly the Prophets. The Jews of today and in the days of Christ, however, had a different structure and order. The major divisions were the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms or Writings (Luke 24:27, 44).

The Law

The Law contains the books of Moses, which present the beginnings of the world and of the covenant people Israel. God is presented as the Creator of the material universe, then more specifically as the Creator of the people that bear His name. Moses received the family histories (Gen. 2:4; 5:1; 10:1) that had been passed down from the various faithful of mankind through the father of Israel, Abraham. Moses probably used these to write the Genesis account, plus the oral tradition which surely would have come through the children of God in bondage in Egypt concerning their heritage and the acts of their leaders. The majority of the remainder of the Pentateuch (the five books) would have been concurrent with Moses' own life and experience.

The Prophets

The Hebrew Scriptures list the Prophets as Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings ("the Former Prophets"), and Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the twelve Minor Prophets ("the Latter Prophets"). The inclusion of so many books in this category comes about because the Hebrews correctly understood prophecy to be *forth*telling from God as well as *fore*telling. Moreover, the term "prophets" stands over an entire portion of sacred text even if every part of the section might not be predictive in nature. The books of Samuel and Kings, for example, are called Prophets even though their content is largely historical. The Prophets set forth the words of God to the covenant people regarding His promises to them and their duty to obey His law given through Moses. In addition, the stories tell of men like Elijah and Elisha, as well as the rising star of Israel, David, whom Peter tells us was a prophet (Acts 2:30).

The Writings

The Writings were sometimes broadly called “the Psalms,” and consist of Psalms, Proverbs, Job, Song of Solomon, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther, Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Chronicles. (Song of Solomon through Esther are termed “The Five Scrolls.”) These portions of the Hebrew Bible contain the devotional and wisdom literature of Israel, as well as some historical and prophetic material. Non-poetic books that are relatively late chronologically find their place among the Writings in the Hebrew canon.

The New Testament at a Glance

LIKE THE OLD TESTAMENT, THE NEW TESTAMENT has several noticeable divisions. They are Gospels, History, Letters, and Apocalypse (Revelation).

What Exactly Is a Gospel?

The Gospels present a kind of literature that is very different from other ancient and modern writings. They are not biographies of Christ, seeking to develop a full-orbed understanding of Jesus' life, His friendships, His family, or His mental and psychological dimensions. They are also not histories of heroic deeds or collections of His famous sayings, though some of these kinds of materials are found in the Gospel accounts.

The four Gospels appear to be a new genre for which other categories are inadequate. These accounts of the life, works, and words of Jesus are preaching material regarding the redemptive work of God in Jesus Christ. They are the good news from God that is manifested in the life, ministry, death, burial, resurrection, and ascension of Christ.

The Growth of Christianity Through the Eyes of Luke

The Book of Acts is part two of Luke's book. He presents to Theophilus the results of his investigation of the life and work of Jesus in his Gospel, and then in Acts he continues to recount the work of the apostles of Christ through the power of the Holy Spirit sent from Him. Acts sets forth the growth of Christianity in six stages: 1:1—6:7; 6:8—9:31; 9:32—12:24; 12:25—16:5; 16:6—19:20; 19:21—28:31.

The Nature of New Testament Letters

The letters written by the apostles and their companions are different from the letters most people would write today. Writing tools and materials were not plentiful, so the authors sought to conserve space when writing. Moreover, the greetings and benedictions in the New Testament letters are unlike the sort of correspondence we would see now, but they are similar to the introductions and conclusions found in other first-century letters. The New Testament authors composed their letters in order to solve problems in the church or to communicate the gospel of Jesus Christ to those who needed to hear about it.

The Revelation of Jesus Christ

The Book of Revelation is unique among the New Testament books, reflecting a genre of literature familiar to the Jews, called apocalyptic. It sets forth in vivid and emotional terms the triumph of Christ over His enemies, in agreement with the prophetic teachings about the conquering Messiah and the discourses of Jesus in Matt. 24 and Mark 13 concerning His second coming.

Themes of the Bible

—————— AS WE READ THE BIBLE, WE NOTICE THAT THROUGHOUT God's word certain important themes are repeatedly mentioned or implied. Several of these basic scriptural topics are described below.

Faithfulness

God reveals Himself in the Bible as One who can be fully trusted. He exhibits complete integrity in all He says and promises; consequently His people are to have complete confidence in His promises concerning them (Num. 23:19; Is. 55:11). Studying the faithfulness of God will bring about spiritual stability and confidence in a believer's daily walk.

Love

In the Old Testament the verb “to love” (Heb. ahab) and its related words cover the full range of meanings the English word “love” has, including love for God (Ex. 20:6; Ps. 40:16) and the love God has for His people (Deut. 7:13; Hos. 3:1). The Old Testament also uses the Hebrew word chesed specifically for the covenant love the Lord has for His people, referring to His steadfastness or loyalty.

In the New Testament the primary Greek verbs expressing the concept of love are agapao, loving as an act of will, and phileo, loving as a response to a person or object. In the synoptic Gospels, one notes that the primary use of the word “love” is with regard to the great commandment (Matt. 22:34–40; Mark 12:28–34; Luke 10:26–28). Love is a possibility only because the believer has responded in faith to God’s saving act in the death and resurrection of Christ (Rom. 5:8; Gal. 2:20).

Justice

Justice is founded in the being of God and is an extension of His holiness. God is shown to be a sure defender of the poor and the oppressed (Ps. 10:17, 18; Jer. 9:23, 24). The Psalms base justice on God's role as the sovereign creator of the universe (Ps. 99:1–4), so the idea extends beyond the nation of Israel (Ps. 9:7–9; Dan. 4:27). In view of God's concern for the poor and the weak, a corresponding quality is expected from God's people (Deut. 10:18, 19). When they properly carry out justice, they are agents of the divine will (Is. 59:15, 16; 2 Cor. 9:8–10). God's demand for justice is so central that other responses to Him are empty or diminished if they exist without it (Amos 5:21–24; Mic. 6:6–8; Matt. 23:23). Paul (primarily in Romans) uses the language of justice to describe God's work of salvation as he expounds the righteousness of God.

Judgment

In the Old Testament God appears frequently in the role of “Judge of all the earth” (Gen. 18:25), or more generally the “God of justice” (Mal. 2:17). Judgment implies not only an unbiased weighing of good and evil, but also vigorous action against evil. It is because of this understanding that the people of God are summoned to exercise judgment in turn (Is. 1:17; Zech. 8:16). It is a strongly personal notion, closely linked to God’s characteristics of mercy, lovingkindness, righteousness, and truth.

The New Testament continues to stress judgment as part of God’s nature and essential activity (Rom. 1:18; Heb. 12:23; 1 Pet. 1:17; 2:23; Rev. 16:5). His judgments are not confined to the future but are already at work in the present age (John 8:50; Rom. 1:18, 22, 24, 26, 28; Rev. 18:8). Judgment is associated even now with Christ, who exercises the Father’s judgments.

Mercy

Just as strong as the emphasis on judgment is the Bible's recognition of God's mercy. By His grace God extends help and forgiveness to sinners who deserve only condemnation, as well as practical help to those who are suffering under life's burdens. God shows compassion toward those who have broken His law (Dan. 9:9; 1 Tim. 1:13, 16), although such mercy is selectively bestowed upon the undeserving (Rom. 9:14–18). God's mercy extends beyond withheld punishment (Eph. 2:4–6) to include the blessings of salvation.

Jesus showed mercy toward the afflicted when he healed them, as in the case of blind men (Matt. 9:27–31; 20:29–34) and lepers (Luke 17:11–19). Jesus was modeling the behavior He expects from His followers: because God is merciful, He expects us to be merciful as well (Matt. 5:7; James 1:27).

Truth

The Hebrew idea of truth is generally associated with constancy, permanence, faithfulness, and reliability. God above all is true, that is, real and reliable (Is. 65:16; Jer. 10:10); His people are to seek God's truth (Ps. 25:5; 51:6; 86:11) and judge truly. The lack of truth is lamented (Is. 59:14, 15; Zech. 8:16).

For the Hebrews, truth was basically moral and relational, not simply intellectual. For the Greeks, the emphasis of truth was intellectual rather than a matter of trust or reliance. The New Testament usage draws on both understandings. The word is found mainly in Paul's writings and in John's Gospel and letters. John builds on the understanding that God is true or real (John 3:33; 7:28). Christ reveals God and thus reveals truth (John 8:26, 40; 18:37). Christ is full of grace and truth (John 1:14, 17), He is "the truth" (John 14:6; read John 1:9; 15:1), and He sends the Spirit of truth (John 15:26). Paul teaches that truth is to be obeyed (Rom. 2:8; Gal. 5:7), that it proves reliable (2 Cor. 7:14; 11:10), and that its opposite is malice and evil (1 Cor. 5:8). The Greek idea of truth as correct knowledge appears most clearly in Paul's pastoral letters. One is to know the truth (1 Tim. 4:3; 2 Tim. 2:25) and avoid false beliefs (2 Tim. 2:18; 4:4).

Holiness

In Hebrew, to be holy primarily means to be separate from the ordinary or profane. God is holy, and people, things, and actions may be holy by association with God. Psalms and Isaiah frequently refer to God as the Holy One (Ps. 78:41; 89:18; Is. 1:4; 5:19; 30:15). Places where God appeared and was customarily worshiped were also holy (Gen. 28:11–22; Ex. 3:5). The temple in Jerusalem was the most holy place in Israel because God's presence dwelled there (1 Kin. 8:10, 11); consequently, persons and things relating to the temple were holy (Lev. 22; 27). Israel itself was a holy nation (Ex. 19:4; Lev. 19:2; Deut. 7:6) because the Lord set it apart for His purposes.

The New Testament reaffirms the ideas of holiness found in Judaism. God, the temple, and the law are all holy. The physical temple is deemphasized because Gentile Christians had moved away from the practice of Judaism and because the temple was destroyed in A.D. 70, but the temple occurs as a metaphor for Christian holiness (1 Cor. 3:17; 6:19). God is addressed as "Holy Father" by Jesus (John 17:11), praised in heaven by the threefold "holy" of Isaiah (Is. 6:3; Rev. 4:6–10), and addressed by the petition of the Lord's Prayer, "Hallowed be Your name" (Matt. 6:9; Luke 11:2).

Missions

God has always used His people to proclaim His mighty deeds and saving grace. The nation of Israel was to declare the goodness of God to the Gentiles so that they might enter into covenant with God. The Book of Isaiah is filled with declarations regarding the salvation of the Gentiles (Is. 11:10; 42:6; 49:6; 60:11).

It was not until the advent of the church that the good news of God's salvation in Christ was being proclaimed widely in the world. Jesus commands His people to go into all the world and preach the gospel (Mark 16:15). It is through "the foolishness of the message preached" (1 Cor. 1:21) that people are drawn to faith in Jesus Christ. Salvation is of God, but He uses His people as the means by which He saves sinners.

Doctrine in Scripture

Classifications of Theology

THEOLOGY IS SIMPLY ORGANIZED THINKING ABOUT God. Different ways of organizing those thoughts has resulted in different types of theology, each with its own merit. Christian theology presupposes the existence of God (theology proper) and His revelation of Himself in the Bible (bibliology). These presuppositions are not without firm intellectual foundation; in fact, they comprise two large categories of doctrine in their own right. Theology proper and bibliology form the starting point and foundation for true Christian theology. The more the doctrines are studied, the more certain the foundation becomes; but they are necessary presuppositions if the student of the Scriptures is to start correctly. As the adage goes, “Well begun is half done.”

Doctrine is the summation or description of the truth found in the Bible. Theology is the process of arriving at that doctrine. The major ways to approach the study of theology are biblical theology, historical theology, systematic theology, and practical theology.

Biblical theology concerns the unfolding of truth in specific books and passages of Scripture. It recognizes the progressive revelation of God (defined below) and therefore does not necessarily aim to present the whole of a biblical doctrine, but to establish that portion of doctrine taught in the Scripture under consideration. The different books of the Bible were occasioned by specific circumstances and needs. Therefore, often the intent of the author was not to develop a doctrine fully, but rather to teach the truth necessary to accomplish a purpose that the occasion required.

Historical theology deals with the theological perspectives set forth by Christians through the centuries. This approach looks at the teaching as it has developed over time. Studying the way that the Scriptures have been understood helps the modern seeker of truth to clarify his or her own thought concerning many important doctrines.

Systematic theology is the organized presentation of the various doctrines, with full consideration of both biblical theology and historical theology. Doctrines are developed and articulated as a part or subset of the total structure of systematic theology. This does not mean that tradition has equal weight with the Bible in development of doctrine. Rather, it humbly respects the fact that other thinkers through the ages have wrestled with the same biblical truths, aided by the illumination of the same Holy Spirit. The conclusions and thoughts of the people of God through the centuries can contribute to the present understanding of the Scriptures.

Practical theology emphasizes the correlation of theology to life's needs. It shows the connections between doctrine and application, paying attention to the ways in which theology pertains to issues concerning ethics and society, the interaction of people, and the mission of the church.

The Major Categories of Doctrine:

Bibliology • The doctrine of the Bible

Theology Proper • The doctrine of God

Christology • The doctrine of Jesus Christ

Pneumatology • The doctrine of the Holy Spirit Angelology • The doctrine of angels (including Satan and demons) Anthropology • The doctrine of man

Hamartiology • The doctrine of sin

Soteriology • The doctrine of salvation

Ecclesiology • The doctrine of the church

Eschatology • The doctrine of last things

The Development of Doctrine in the Bible

To understand the development of doctrine, it is necessary to understand two concepts: progressive revelation, and how the church developed its theology.

Progressive revelation means that God worked over time, with different persons and through different means, to reveal Himself and His truth in the Bible. A clear indication of this in Scripture is found in Heb. 1:1–3 as well as 1 Pet. 1:10–12. Because of this, we often weigh the later portions of Scripture more heavily regarding doctrine, for they provide the fuller explanation of many teachings. However, later biblical writers sometimes presuppose certain well-developed knowledge on the part of their readers and so do not state the assumed knowledge. In such cases, earlier portions of Scripture may give us a fuller understanding of certain aspects of doctrine.

Theological development in the church has been necessary because of the occasional and nonsystematic nature of the New Testament writings. The Bible contains enough truth for the establishment of clear, coherent doctrine, but it rarely presents that truth in a systematic teaching. Therefore, the people in the church have necessarily and appropriately contributed thought and organization as the truths of the Bible have been expressed and extended within their own historical and intellectual setting.

The Practical Importance of Doctrine

Biblical teaching, or doctrine, is not intended by God to stop with the enlightenment of the intellect. Enlightenment is a necessary first step, but truth is intended to impact the thinking, habits, and behaviors of its recipients.

Examples of this are abundant in Scripture (for example, Rom. 12:1; 2 Pet. 3:11). It is the intended pattern of Scripture that understanding of truth should motivate application of truth. Always learning but never acknowledging the truth (2 Tim. 3:7) is a description of the process of Christian thought short-circuiting at the mind and not getting to practical outworking. The writer of Hebrews tells us in Heb. 5:11–14 that Christian maturity comes through practicing biblical truth, not just by possessing the knowledge. James writes that we are to be “doers of the word and not hearers only” (James 1:22).

It is a theological and practical error, however, to reverse the order and take an application of truth and build a doctrine from it. As an example, the application of self-denial for one person should not become a prescription of lifestyle for another. Romans 14 illustrates clarity in conviction and charity in extension of that conviction to others. Dogmatic practices without foundational truth become a system of religion without power.

The Trinity in the Bible

———— Historical Development of the Doctrine of the Trinity

THE TERM TRINITY IS NOT FOUND IN THE BIBLE but is a theological word which expresses the clear teaching of Holy Scripture, especially the New Testament. The first theologian of the church to use the term was Theophilus who spoke of God as trias. The great Latin church father Tertullian first developed the concept of trinitas, one God in three persons. Though the fathers of the church in the second and third centuries spoke of the three persons of the Godhead while recognizing that there is but one God, the councils of Nicea (A.D. 325) and Constantinople (A.D. 381) gave the fullest expression to the Biblical doctrine.

The Bible Explicitly Teaches That There Is Only One God

The Teaching of the Old Testament

Belief in one God in the ancient Mediterranean world was unique to the nation of Israel. The faith of Israel is given in the famous Shema: “Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God, the Lord is one” (Deut. 6:4). Repeatedly the teaching of the Law and the pronouncements of God’s prophets confirm this absolute truth.

The Teaching of the New Testament

The church continued the teaching of the Hebrew Scriptures, as well as the teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ, that there is only one God (1 Cor. 8:6; Eph. 4:6; 1 Tim. 2:5). This it did in contrast to the rampant polytheism that permeated the Greco-Roman world with its multitude of gods, including worship of the emperor as a god during the latter half of the first century. As the apostles and later the church began to articulate this monotheism against pagan religion, it was necessary to explain how this belief in one God was consistent with the concurrent belief that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are each God and yet still only one God.

Glimpses of the Trinity in the Old Testament

Use of the Word Elohim with Singular Verbs The usual word for God in the Hebrew is Elohim. This noun is in the plural, whereas in several places the term for God is a singular, such as El or Eloah. In spite of the plural term for God, the true Jewish faith was strongly monotheistic. When Elohim is used regarding the God of Israel, it is used with singular verbs, indicating that the God of Israel is a single being. The plural allows for a plurality of expression for God, as later revealed in the New Testament, but Hebrew grammar may also simply be using a plural of plenitude.

Use of Plural Personal Pronouns On three occasions the Old Testament uses plural personal pronouns when speaking of God. The first occurrence refers to the creation of humanity: “Let Us make man in Our image” (Gen. 1:26). The second pertains to God deciding to confuse human languages at the tower of Babel: “Let Us go down” (Gen. 11:6–9). The last reference is to the call to mission: “Who will go for Us?” (Is. 6:1–8).

The Angel of the Lord Several times in the Hebrew Scriptures, reference is made to “the Angel of the LORD” (Yahweh). It is evident from the contexts that these references do not speak simply of a created messenger of God but of God Himself. In certain contexts the Angel of the LORD is identified as God Himself (Gen. 16:7–13; 18:1–22), but in others He is distinguished from God (Gen. 19:1–28, especially v. 24; Zech. 1:12, 13; Mal. 3:1). Such appearances most likely are of the preincarnate Christ, who is the revelation of the Father (John 1:18; Heb. 1:1–3). After the incarnation such appearances of the Angel of the LORD end, for now the revelation of God is present as a human in the person of Jesus Christ (compare Ex. 14:19 with Ex. 23:20; 1 Cor. 10:4).

The Explicit Teaching of the New Testament

The Teaching of Jesus Christ on His Relationship to the Father and the Holy Spirit Jesus is the Son of the Father. Jesus calls Himself the Son of God, and He also calls God His Father in a way that implies a profoundly unique association. Moreover, Jesus claims a relationship with God the Father as a partner from all eternity. At other times Jesus makes statements and does deeds that cause others to recognize His claim to equality with God. The specific charge of blasphemy made against Christ was His admission to being the Son of God (Luke 22:70). These texts identify the person Jesus, preexistent to the world, as being God and yet distinct from God the Father.

Like Jesus the Son, the Holy Spirit is also a divine Person. Before Christ left the earth to be with the Father, He promised a Comforter similar to but distinct from Himself. He and the Father come to the believer through this Person, the Holy Spirit.

In a sense, each Christian is identified with the Triune God. Jesus in His prayer for believers in John 17 indicated that God would dwell with believers in Christ, “I in them and You in Me” (John 17:23).

The Teaching of the Apostles on the Trinity God is called the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ as well as of Christians (Eph. 1:2; Phil. 1:2; 2 John 3). The apostle John specifically calls Jesus God (John 1:1, 18; 8:58). In several places Paul identifies Jesus as God (Rom. 9:5; Phil. 2:6; Titus 2:13), as does Peter (2 Pet. 1:1). The Holy Spirit is declared to be God by Peter (Acts 5:4) and is listed alongside the Father and the Son (Matt. 28:19; 2 Cor. 13:14).

The Doctrine of Salvation

The Meaning of Salvation in the Bible

GENERALLY IN THE OLD TESTAMENT, THE TERM salvation concerns physical deliverance or preservation. The major Hebrew verb for salvation, yasha, carries the sense of help, deliver, or save, and is used about 205 times in the Bible. It occurs in contexts of removing a burden or danger (Ex. 2:17) and can be used of removing someone from the danger of defeat (Josh. 10:6). At other times the term refers to being liberated or set free (Judg. 12:2). Used in civil law, yasha pertains to the obligation of one who hears the cry of someone who needs to be saved from mistreatment (Deut. 22:27; 28:29; 2 Sam. 14:4). The Hebrew word appears in many prayer petitions in reference to war and judicial issues (Pss. 3:7; 20:9; 72:4; 86:2). The noun speaks of preservation from threatened, impending, and perhaps deserved danger and suffering (Gen. 49:18; 1 Sam. 14:45; Is. 12:3).

New Testament

The New Testament concept of salvation includes most of the elements of the Old Testament concept and adds spiritual dimensions. The Greek term soteria has both national and personal aspects. National deliverance is discussed in Luke 1:69. There is personal deliverance from the sea (Acts 27:34) and prison (Phil. 1:19), and spiritual and eternal deliverance through repentance and faith in Jesus Christ (Acts 4:12; Rom. 10:10). The New Testament uses soteria and the related verb sozo with regard to God's power to deliver from the bondage of sin (Phil. 2:12); the future deliverance of believers at the coming of Christ (Rom. 13:11; 1 Thess. 5:8, 9); and the deliverance of the nation of Israel at the second advent of Christ (Luke 1:71; 2 Thess. 2:10; Rev. 12:10).

Jesus the Savior

The designation of Jesus told to His mother by the angel Gabriel was that of Savior, namely, “you shall call His name Jesus, for He will save His people from their sins” (Matt. 1:21). That He carried that sense of mission throughout His life is clear from His statements in Mark 10:45: “For even the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many”; and in John 12:27: “Now My soul is troubled, and what shall I say? ‘Father, save Me from this hour’? But for this purpose I came to this hour.” The role of Jesus Christ as Savior of the world is further exhibited by His willingness to go to the Cross when He could have called the forces of heaven to rescue Him (Matt. 26:53, 54). Rather, He freely gave Himself on the Cross, as depicted in all four Gospels. Ironically, the ones standing by the Cross spoke true words: “He saved others; Himself He cannot save” (Mark 15:31).

Terms Used in Reference to Spiritual Salvation

Election is that aspect of the eternal purpose of God whereby He certainly and eternally determines who will believe and be saved (Matt. 22:14; Acts 13:48; Eph. 1:4; 2 Thess. 2:13). Yet no one is excused from believing by this doctrine. God "desires all men to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2:4). Acts 2:21 states that "whoever calls on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Whoever does not accept God's free offer of salvation has no one but himself to blame.

Predestination differs from election in that predestination relates specifically to the intent of God to conform those whom He has chosen to the image of Christ (Rom. 8:29, 30).

Calling is used in two senses. The first is the general call of the gospel addressed to all humans (Matt. 22:14; John 3:16–18; 16:7–11). The second call is the application of the word of the gospel to the ones God has chosen, and results in regeneration (John 6:44; Rom. 8:28, 30; 1 Cor. 1:23, 24).

Law is the means by which God governed His covenant people in the Old Testament, whereas He established His covenant by grace (Gen. 17:7). The New Testament demonstrates that the role of the law is not to justify, but to show us what sin is. It was only a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ (Gal. 2:16; 3:24) Regeneration refers to the spiritual change brought about in a person by the Holy Spirit, namely a new life. This change is from spiritual death to spiritual life. It is a change in one's very nature, to one in communion with God. The New Testament explicitly presents the doctrine (2 Cor. 5:17; Eph. 2:1; 1 John 4:7), whereas the Old Testament implies it. Moses spoke of Israelites who would have "circumcised hearts" (Deut. 30:6). Isaiah also described changes that resemble the New Testament depiction of the new birth (Is. 57:15).

Justification is first presented in the Bible with regard to Abraham. The Scripture says that Abraham believed God's promises to him and this faith was accounted to him as righteousness (Gen. 15:6; Rom. 3:23—4:12; Gal. 3:6). If personal fulfillment of the law were necessary to justification before God, no one would have been saved. Believers in God are justified by faith in Christ, who is God's sacrifice. This satisfies God's righteous demands; all those who trust in Christ are counted righteous (Rom. 4:5; 5:1).

Sanctification is the work of God in developing the new life and bringing it to perfection before God. It is being separated from the sinful life and being set apart for a sacred purpose. Though Christians are sanctified fully in Christ, they are gradually becoming experientially what they already are positionally (Rom. 6:11; 12:1; 1 Cor. 1:2).

Glorification is the completion of the work of God in the believer. In justification, God placed us in a righteous position before Himself. In sanctification, God is working in the Christian to bring him to the image of Jesus Christ. Glorification is when God presents the believer perfect without sin in heaven (Rom. 8:30).

How We Got Our Bible

How the Word of God Came to Be Written

THE AUTHORS OF HEBREW SCRIPTURES ARE NOT AS identifiable as those of the New Testament. The books arose in the midst of the law given by Moses and the prophets sent by God to the children of Israel. The first five books (the Law) were written by Moses almost entirely. The remainder of the Old Testament is composed of the prophets and writings in the Hebrew canon, whereas the English Bible includes the following categories: historical books, poetic books, and prophetic books. These books include such authors as Samuel, David, Joshua, Solomon, and major prophets such as Isaiah, Jeremiah, and a number of lesser-known figures who wrote smaller books called the minor prophets. Each of these authors presents his words as being the Word of God.

New Testament

The New Testament was written by apostles of Jesus Christ and companions of the apostles. Letters were written to individuals, churches, or larger groups of persons either to confirm the truth of Christianity, engender belief in Christ, correct problems in the local churches, or argue against error. The Book of Revelation also seeks to present God’s plans for the end of the age.

How the Inspired Writings Were Passed Down

Old Testament

The Old Testament was written between 1440 B.C. and approximately 400 B.C. The Law of Moses was maintained in the Hebrew community by the priests of the temple. Later books continued to be deposited with these leaders until the destruction of the temple and then found their way into the teaching community begun by Ezra and continued in the synagogues. Trained scribes copied biblical texts by hand until the modern printing press came into use. The copies of the Masoretes of the ninth century A.D. are very close to the recently discovered Dead Sea Scrolls, which originated a thousand years earlier.

New Testament

The New Testament books were copied by local Christian communities and passed from one to the other for decades before an entire collection was made. Since the early letters were written on papyrus, they wore out rapidly and required regular copying. In the early fourth century A.D., fifty copies of the entire Old and New Testament Greek Scriptures were made at the order of the first Christian emperor, Constantine. It is likely that the Vaticanus and Sinaiticus codexes, two of the longest early manuscripts to survive, originated from this order.

What is the Canon of Scripture?

The word canon is a word used to identify the writings of the prophets, the apostles, and their companions, which are inspired by God and authoritative for truth pertaining to doctrine and life. It means “rule” or “standard.” A book is not inspired because it is declared to be canonical but is canonical because it is considered inspired. Therefore, the church discovered the canonicity of the Old and New Testament books; it did not determine or cause their canonicity.

How the Canon Was Decided

The books accepted by the Jewish community originated over a period of approximately one thousand years. The first question regarding a writing's acceptance was whether the book was written by a prophet of God. Generally the book would have statements of says the Lord," or "the word of the Lord came." Second, miraculous signs or accuracy of fulfillment served as confirmation of a prophet's message. Third, the book had to be internally consistent with the revelation of God found in the teachings of other canonical books, especially what God gave through Moses.

The first question for the church to answer about a book's inclusion in the canon accepted by Christians was whether it came through the apostles of the Lord or through persons under the guidance of an apostle, such as Luke. Second, the book had to come with the power of God and be effective for changing lives. Third, it must have been generally accepted by the people of God. This latter test refers first to the ones who received the book and next to the transmission in the church. Determination of the New Testament canon took place over a period of years, reaching its final form at the Synod of Carthage in 397.

The Manuscripts of the Bible

Old Testament

Fragments of the Hebrew Scriptures number in the tens of thousands, the majority dating between the third century B.C. and the fourteenth century A.D. The greatest attestation to the Hebrew Old Testament is the manuscripts found in the Dead Sea Scrolls, which mostly date from the third century B.C. to the first century A.D.

New Testament

Manuscript evidence for the New Testament is abundant. There are more than five thousand existing copies, many with New Testament books entirely or largely intact. Also there are several older translations of the New Testament into languages like Syriac, Coptic, and Latin that survive in thousands of manuscripts. No work of antiquity even approaches the New Testament for authenticity.

The First Book of Moses Called Genesis

———— THE WORDS, “IN THE BEGINNING, GOD CREATED the heavens and the earth,” have evoked considerable debate; but without apology, that is how Genesis begins. In the words of one of the historic creeds: “I believe in God the Father almighty, Maker of heaven and earth.” These words are only the beginning of this book of beginnings—a prologue to a prologue. Genesis gives more than an account of creation. It also describes other beginnings—humanity’s Fall into sin and the start of God’s elaborate rescue mission for all peoples. It tells what happened first in many important respects (creation, sin, judgment, languages, races, marriage). But at the center of Genesis lies God’s sovereign call to Abram and Sarai, a couple of idol worshipers in the Middle East.

The book has two parts. The first part (chs. 1–11) serves as a prologue to the second part (chs. 12–50), which is the book’s main event: God’s sovereign work in Abraham’s family to accomplish His good will for all nations. The prologue (chs. 1–11) provides keys that unlock the rest of the book and the rest of the Bible as well.

Four key concepts presented in Genesis 1–11 are crucial for comprehending the rest of the Bible. First, the God who entered the lives of Abram and Sarai is the same God who created the entire universe. He is the only true and living God: Yahweh, the Creator and the Savior of the world. Second, all people have rebelled against God, their benevolent Creator, and His good will for them. Humanity has inherited a state of sinfulness from Adam and Eve’s rebellion in the garden of Eden. Third, God judges and will judge the actions of all people. By sending the Flood, God made it clear to Noah and to everyone that human wickedness is entirely unacceptable. God cannot let evil reign free in His creation. Fourth, sin continues to plague all of humanity even after the Flood. Although the Flood did not wash away sin, God, as the second half of Genesis (chs. 12–50) reveals, has a plan to save humanity from its own evil deeds.

The first part of Genesis provides the setting for the story of Abram and Sarai (chs. 12–50). Their world is populated by a broad spectrum of “people groups," each with its own language, customs, values, and beliefs, and all have adopted their own imaginary gods.

Genesis' main story—God's plan to bless all nations through Abraham's descendants—starts in chapter 12. It begins with God's call to Abram and Sarai (Abraham and Sarah) to become the parents of a new people, a new nation. This new nation would become God's tool for blessing all peoples. Even though Abram and Sarai were merely an elderly couple with the means to travel, God chose to begin His plan of redemption for the entire world with them. The Genesis description of their experiences demonstrates the irruption (breaking in from without) of God's blessing into their lives.

Central to God's blessing was His covenant with Abraham—the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 12:1–3; 15:1–21). God, the awesome Creator of the entire universe, freely chose to make everlasting promises to Abraham and his descendants. These promises in the Abrahamic covenant were the foundation for all of God's subsequent promises and covenants in the Bible. Genesis is not merely a beginning; it provides the foundation for the rest of the biblical narrative.

The Book of Genesis was written and compiled by Moses in the Wilderness of Sinai. Biblical and extrabiblical evidence points to this fact. Jesus clearly assumes Mosaic authorship of Genesis in the statement, "Moses therefore gave you circumcision" (Acts 15:1). Since the reason for circumcision is mentioned only in Genesis 17, Jesus had to be referring to Moses' compilation of the story. Second, both Jewish and Christian tradition unanimously agree with this biblical testimony: Moses compiled and wrote the Pentateuch, the first five books of the Bible, in the Wilderness of Sinai. This would place his authorship of Genesis around the fifteenth century B.C.

Many scholars since the nineteenth century have denied Moses' authorship of Genesis. Some of these scholars have suggested that the Pentateuch, including Genesis, was compiled at a later date, perhaps in the sixth century B.C. According to this analysis, anonymous editors used at least four documents to piece together the Pentateuch. These four documents were identified by tracing the divine names, such as Elohim and Yahweh, through the Pentateuch, and by tracing certain variations in phraseology and word choice. The four documents are called the J document, which uses Yahweh for God; the E document, which uses Elohim for God; the P, or Priestly, document; and the D, or Deuteronomic, document. More recently, this dissection of the Pentateuch has been challenged and no real consensus has emerged from the ensuing scholarly debate.

By appreciating the unified structure of Genesis, Moses' guiding hand in the compilation and authorship of Genesis can be discerned. Certainly, Moses used other literary sources to piece together his narrative. Sometimes these sources are identified, such as in Genesis 5:1. Moses presumably edited these older documents to make them understandable to his readers, the second Israelite generation after the Exodus. And later prophets updated the language for the ensuing generations of Israelite readers.

But after all the analysis, it is clear that Moses wrote and compiled Genesis to encourage the early Israelites while they were preparing to enter the land of Canaan, the Promised Land. The content of Genesis would have been especially significant to them. It explains why their ancestors went to Egypt in the first place, why their nation was destined for another Promised Land, and why God had revealed Himself so dramatically to them in the wilderness.

Commentary

Twin Themes in the Bible

Two major themes run like railroad tracks through the Bible, from the original creation of the heavens and the earth (Gen. 1:1) to the creation of a new heaven and earth (Rev. 21:1). One track is creation, the other is redemption (closely related to salvation). It's important to keep both in mind when reading and interpreting Scripture.

The creation track reminds us that …

• God in Christ has made everything there is. He is Creator and Lord (Gen. 1:31; Col. 1:16, 17).

• God has created and called people to oversee the earth as His managers (Gen. 1:27, 30; Ps. 8:6). People have been given a mandate to care for the earth—to preserve, protect, and use it wisely.

• Everyday work matters to God. We are His coworkers, called to accomplish meaningful tasks for which He will hold us accountable (Gen. 2:8, 15; Eccl. 9:10; 12:13, 14).

• What happens here and now, in this present, physical world, matters to God (John 5:17; Eph. 2:10).

The redemption track reminds us that …

• God has committed Himself to reclaiming this fallen world and rescuing sinful people through His Son, Jesus Christ (Gen. 3:15; Rom. 8:19–22).

• God desires that no one be lost, but that every person come to repentance and faith in Jesus (2 Pet. 3:9). As believers, we have a mandate to spread the gospel to the ends of the earth (Mark 16:15; Acts 1:8).

• Salvation affects everything about us, our relationships, our character, and our conduct (Col. 3:17).

To ignore either of these two tracks is to get derailed from a balanced understanding of God's work in the world as revealed in the Bible.

1:1 In the beginning is a thesis statement, which can be paraphrased, "Here is the story of God's creation of the heavens and the earth." John 1:1 speaks of a time that predates Gen. 1:1, but no information is given here on what happened before this time. It is possible that the rise, rebellion, and judgment of Satan transpired before these events. In ch. 3 Satan has already fallen (he tempts Eve in the guise of the serpent), and Gen. 6:1–4 speaks of angels who are already fallen. Furthermore, God's angels already have been created (3:24). In ch. 1 the focus is on the creation of the material world—the heavens and the earth. God: This standard Hebrew term for deity, Elohim, is in the form called the plural of majesty or the plural of intensity. In contrast to the ordinary plural (gods), this plural means "the fullness of deity" or "God—very God." Even though the word for God is plural, the verb for created is singular. It means "to fashion anew." This often used word in the Bible always has God as its subject. Here, it means that God renewed what was in a chaotic state. God changed chaos into cosmos, disorder into order, emptiness into fullness. The heavens and the earth mean "all of creation" or "the cosmos."

1:2 The two words without form and void express one concept—chaos. The earth had been reduced to this state (Jer. 4:23); it was not the way God had first created it (Is. 45:18). Darkness is a potent biblical symbol of evil and wrong (Job 3:5; Ps. 143:3; Is. 8:22; John 3:19). The deep is a term for the secret places of the waters (7:11). This term sounds enough like the name of the Babylonian goddess Tiamat to remind the ancient reader of the Babylonian story of creation, to which the biblical story stands in dramatic contrast. All these images together portray chaos, disaster, and devastation. From this portrait of utter ruin, God brought an orderly creation. The Spirit of God was hovering like a mother stork might hover over her nest—a portent of life to come from the dark, murky depths of the chaos below (the Spirit is described as a dove in Matt. 3:16).

1:3 Let there be light: These words express a principal theme of the Bible: God bringing light into the darkness (Is. 9:1, 2). Here, God produced physical light. The NT records God sending His Son to be the light of the world (John 8:12). In the end, there will no longer be any darkness at all (Rev. 21:23). God said it, and it was done: there was light. His command caused reality.

1:4 Having examined the light, God declared it to be good—a powerful term of God's blessing.

1:5 Day … Night: The naming of these elements of creation is a mark of God's sovereignty. In the thinking of the peoples of the ancient Near East, naming something was a mark of power or lordship. For them, names were not merely labels, but descriptions with some force to them. Since the sun was not yet created (vv. 14–19), the first day (literally, a day, one) is ambiguous. Some say that the "seven days" is a literary frame on which the story of creation is draped. Others argue for a strict pattern of seven twenty-four-hour days.

1:6 In biblical usage, firmament means "heavens." Literally, it means "something stretched out, like hammered metal."

1:7, 8 divided the waters: The notion of upper and lower waters is somewhat mysterious. The language may simply refer to waters gathered in a liquid state and to moisture in the atmosphere. The division of the waters is another of God's acts in bringing order out of disorder.

1:9 The gathering of the waters and the separation of the dry land are further actions of God in establishing control over the chaos described in v. 2. Each act of separation and distinction brings order out of disorder, form out of formlessness, cosmos out of chaos. Each act also demonstrates the Lord's power and wisdom (Prov. 8:22–31).

1:10 The naming of the earth in this verse suggests that the term was used in anticipation in v. 2.

1:11–13 The broad words grass, tree, and fruit tree encompass all plants, shrubs, and trees. The reference to seed and kind speaks of the fact that the plant kingdom will continue to reproduce. God not only created plant life but also set in motion the processes that make plant life reproduce.

1:14, 15 The creation of the sun, moon, and stars is described in general terms in these verses; vv. 16–18 spell out the details. Lights (Heb. meorot) in the firmament are luminaries (objects that shine). They produce the division between the day and night. signs and seasons: Some have mistakenly viewed these words as a biblical basis for astrology. The signs in this case relate to phases of the moon and the relative positions of stars that mark the passage of time from the vantage point of earth. The two words form a pair that may be translated seasonal signs.

IN CONTEXT

The Creator Is Not Sun or Moon

In Gen. 1:16, the words “sun” and “moon” were not omitted by accident, for the writer was aware that two prominent gods in the Near East were the sun and the moon. In Egypt, the sun was associated with the gods Amon-Re, Re, and Aton. The Egyptians believed that Re created the world, and that one of Re’s “eyes” was the moon god Tefnut. Another Egyptian god, Ptah, was also considered Creator, and its two eyes were the sun and the moon.

In Mesopotamia, the sun god Shamash was worshiped as the benefactor of the oppressed. Canaanite worshipers knew the sun as Shemesh. The appearance of this god’s name in place names (1 Sam. 6:12) hints at its importance to that polytheistic people, whose moon god was of secondary importance.

The author of Gen. 1:14–19 makes the case that the Creator of the world is on a different plane than the sun or the moon. They are only “greater” or “lesser” lights, creations of God, and therefore not to be worshiped.

1:16 As in vv. 14, 15, the term for lights can mean “luminaries.” The word can either designate the sun, which emits light, or the moon, which reflects light. He made the stars also: This is a remarkable statement. In the ancient Near East, other religions worshiped, deified, and mystified the stars. Israel’s neighbors revered the stars and looked to them for guidance. In contrast, the biblical creation story gives the stars only the barest mention, as though the writer shrugged and said, “And, oh, yes. He also made the stars.” Such a statement showed great contempt for ancient Babylonian astrology (Pss. 29; 93).

1:17–19 God set them: Interestingly, the sun and moon are not named here, though they are clearly intended. The principal issue throughout these verses is that God alone is in control.

1:20, 21 The verb for created (Heb. bara) is the same one used in 1:1 (also in v. 27 for the creation of man). According to its kind suggests that these things have the capability to reproduce themselves (v. 12). God not only made the living creatures but also gave them the power to propagate and to proliferate, to fill the air and the seas in great numbers and in wonderful variety.

1:22, 23 God blessed them: The first use of this important phrasing in the Bible (1:28; 2:3; 12:2, 3), and it is used of fish and birds!

1:24 The expression living creature contains the word sometimes used for the soul, but the word can also mean "life," "being," "living thing," or "person," depending on the context. The same phrase is used for man in 2:7. cattle and creeping thing and beast of the earth: Three sweeping categories, like those of vv. 11 and 20, make the point that God created all living things.

1:25 God saw that it was good: This is the sixth time this phrasing is used (1:4, 10, 12, 18, 21). Everything that God had made so far was good.

“God”

(Heb. pl. elohim) (Gen. 1:1, 26; Deut. 7:9; Is. 45:18) Strong’s #430: The standard Hebrew term for God. This word is related to similar words for deity found throughout almost all Semitic languages. The basic meaning is probably “Mighty” or “the Almighty.” In Hebrew this word often occurs in a form called “the plural of majesty” or “the plural of intensity.” In contrast to a normal plural (that is, “gods,” such as the false gods of 1 Kin. 19:2), the Hebrew uses this plural to mean “The Fullness of Deity” or “God—Very God!”Many Christians point to the plural form of this word as revealing the plural nature of God. God is one, but He is also three distinct persons: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

1:26–28 This is the high point of the text, that toward which the passage drives from the beginning. In the viewpoint of Scripture, there is nothing grander in all of God’s creation than mankind, whom He has made in His image to reflect His glory.

1:26 Let Us make is emphatic, emphasizing the majesty of the speaker. Furthermore, the use of a plural for God allows for the later revelation of the Trinity (Gen. 11:7; Matt. 28:19). “Us” cannot refer to the angels that are present with God because man is made in the image of God alone, not also in that of the angels. in Our image: What is the image of God in man? The traditional view is that God’s image is certain moral, ethical, and intellectual abilities. A more recent view, based on Hebrew grammar and the knowledge of the ancient Near East, interprets the phrase as meaning, “Let us make man as our image” (the Hebrew preposition in this phrase can be translated as). In ancient times an emperor might command statues of himself to be placed in remote parts of his empire. These symbols would declare that these areas were under his power and reign. So God placed humankind as living symbols of Himself on earth to represent His reign. This interpretation fits well with the command that follows: to reign over all that God has made. according to Our likeness: This phrase draws attention to the preceding figure of speech. Since God is Spirit (John 4:24), there can be no “image” or “likeness” of Him in the normal sense of these words. Indeed, image-making was later strongly prohibited because of the clear ties that it has with idolatry (Ex. 20:4–6). We may not make images of God, for

He has already done so! We are His images; it is we who are in His likeness. This is the reason God values people so much: we are made to reflect His majesty on earth. have dominion: Rule as God's regent. That is, people are to rule as God would—wisely and prudently—over all that God has made (fish, birds, cattle, and so on).

1:27 So God created man: This is the third time the verb for create is used in Gen. 1 (vv. 1, 21). Here it is used three times. The language of vv. 26, 28 is elevated prose; this verse is pure poetry. The twelve words of the original Hebrew are arranged in three lines that have their own poetic repetition and cadence. The term for "man" (Heb. adam) is likely associated with the term for "red earth" (Heb. adama). Here the word is generic, including male and female. These words are sexual. Some have thought that Adam's and Eve's "discovery" of human sexuality was the forbidden fruit of ch. 3. However, these words indicate that human sexuality was a part of the original creation (5:2). Although the misuse of human sexuality is soundly condemned in Scripture (Lev. 18), its proper use is celebrated (Gen. 2:24, 25; Song). Verses 26–28 include the woman no less than the man in the story of creation.

1:28 God blessed them: God's smile, the warmth of His pleasure (1:22; 2:3; 9:1; 12:2, 3). God delighted in what He had made (Prov. 8:30, 31). The word translated subdue (Heb. kabash) means "bring into bondage." This harsh term is used elsewhere of military conquest (Zech. 9:15) and of God subduing our iniquities (Mic. 7:19). As a king sets off to war to conquer a territory, so humans are told by the Great King to subdue the earth and rule it. Why this need to subjugate the earth? There are at least four possibilities: (1) sin would ruin the earth, and people would have to expend great effort to live there (3:17–19). (2) Satan would defy the will of God and make all good efforts difficult. (3) The earth left to itself would not remain good. Instead, God planned that people would need to manage and control it. (4) The beauty of the earth was only in the garden that God planted (2:8); the rest of the earth would be hostile. Whatever the case, subdue does not mean "destroy" or "ruin." It means to "act as managers who have the authority to run everything as God planned." This command applies equally to male and female.

1:29 Many suggest that Adam and Eve were vegetarians because God gave them every herb and every tree.

1:30 to every beast: The implication is that animal life may have been herbivores at the beginning. This is speculative, however. The text may speak in an abbreviated way of the ultimate nature of the food chain, that vegetation is at the base of that chain by divine design.

In this painting by Michelangelo in the Sistine Chapel in Rome, God is portrayed as the Creator. After six days of work, God was pleased with His creation (Gen. 1:31).

1:31 This is the seventh use of the term good in the creation story (1:4, 10, 12, 18, 21, 25). It is only one of several key terms that are used in multiples of seven in this text.

“Heavens”

(Heb. shamayim) (Gen. 1:1, 8, 9; 2:1; Ps. 2:4) Strong’s #8064: The Hebrew word for heavens may refer to either the physical heavens, the sky or atmosphere of earth (2:1, 4, 19), or to the dwelling place of God (Ps. 14:2), the spiritual heaven. The expression is probably derived from a word meaning “to be high, lofty.” To describe God as living in the heavens is to describe His exalted position over all people. The physical heavens testify to God’s glorious position and also to His creative genius (Ps. 19:1, 6).

2:1 While mention is made of the heavens, the focus in the first chapter has been on the earth. Although the earth is not the physical center of the universe, it is the center of God’s great creative work.

A Day of Rest

When God "rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had done" (Gen. 2:2), He was modeling for humanity His intention for a weekly day of rest. Clearly He did this for the sake of Adam and Eve (and for us), because God Himself does not tire or need to rest as people do. In what sense, then, did He rest from His labors, and in what sense should we rest from ours?

The term Sabbath has the root meaning of "cessation." On the seventh day God ceased His work of creating the world (Ex. 20:8–11). However, He did not cease His work of sustaining and maintaining the world (Ps. 145:15, 16; Col. 1:17). This distinction helps to clarify the significance of the Sabbath, a day that God set aside (or sanctified) and blessed. His clear intention was that people would emulate Him by pausing from their labors —the exercise of their dominion over the creation (Gen. 1:28–31)—for one day out of seven.

Was this day of rest given merely as a day off? No, for one of the most important purposes of the Sabbath today is to provide a day for believers to worship and focus on God, as individuals and communities (Is. 58:13, 14). This, of course, does not mean that we are free to ignore God on the other six days; every day belongs to Him (compare Rom. 14:5–13). But by designating one day as a special opportunity to come before the Lord, we demonstrate our dependence on Him as Creator and our obedience to Him as Lord.

This means that the Sabbath—or in NT times, the Lord's Day—was not intended simply as a "day off" to catch up on chores or pursue leisure activities. Not that these are wrong, but the point of the day is to "stir up love and good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as is the manner of some, but exhorting one another" (Heb. 10:24, 25).

There is an obvious tension here regarding how we should treat the Lord's Day as a Christian Sabbath. In deciding the issue, it is worth remembering that Jesus pointed out that God established a day of rest for the sake of people, not the other way around (Mark 2:27). Sabbath observance is not to become a legalistic obligation. In fact, conditions occasionally require work on the Sabbath: an ox can get stuck in a ditch and must be gotten out (Luke 14:5). Likewise, human beings have basic needs even on Sundays (John 5:8, 9).

When God rested on the seventh day and set it aside, He did not intend to turn Sabbath-keeping into a strangling rule. The Sabbath was meant to provide true freedom, freedom from turning work into tyranny and freedom to enjoy fellowship with God, our neighbors, and our loved ones.

2:2 God did not rest because of fatigue but because of His accomplishment. God is never weary (Is. 40:28, 29). The verb translated as rested (Heb. shabat) is related to the word for Sabbath (Heb. shabbat), which means "rest." Many assume that the basic meaning of the Sabbath is worship, but this is not the case (Ex. 20:9–11; Deut. 5:12–14). By God's blessed inactivity on this seventh day, He showed that He was satisfied with the work He had done.

2:3 God blessed the birds and fish (1:22), humans (1:28), and now the seventh day (Saturday). He sanctified it; He made it holy. Thus, from the beginning of time, God placed special value on a certain day of the week.

2:4 The term translated as history is found in ten significant passages in Genesis (5:1; 6:9; 10:1; 11:10, 27; 25:12, 19; 36:1, 9; 37:2). The term may be translated family histories and is a major marker of the different sections of the Book of Genesis. In the day means "when." The LORD God is a significant new term for God. The word translated as God is the same word as in 1:1. The word translated as LORD is the proper name for God, Yahweh, or Jehovah (Ex. 3:14, 15). The God of ch. 1 and the LORD God of ch. 2 are the same.

2:5 The order of events in the second creation story is somewhat different from the first account (1:1–2:3). Conditions were radically different from those we now know and understand. The phrase not caused it to rain anticipates the story of the Flood (chs. 6–9). Here was an element of creation that was still in process. man to till the ground: The Hebrew term for man sounds similar to the term for ground (1:26; 2:7).

2:6 The precise meaning of the term translated as mist is unknown. Obviously it refers to some manner of irrigation before the Lord brought the cycles of rain into being.

2:7 Formed is the term for a potter's shaping of pots. Since man is made from the dust of the ground, that is where he returns when he dies (3:19). Although God created light with a mere word (1:3), He created man by fashioning a body out of mud and clay, transforming the clay into something new, and then breathing life into it. This breath may be the narrator's way of describing the infusion of the human spirit, with its moral, intellectual, relational, and spiritual capacities. God showed tender care and intimate concern in the way He shaped man. living being: This is the same term that was used of animal life in 1:24. In this phrase we see how humans and animal life are similar, but the breath of life makes humans distinct from all other creatures.

2:8 The term Eden is not explained except that it is eastward. The exact location is unknown. The planting of a garden is a touch of God's meticulous, personal care. This picture of a caring and loving God complements the picture of the strong and transcendent Creator in ch. 1.

2:9 As created, man was able to enjoy pleasant sights, something that would later become corrupted by sin and give rise to lust (1 John 2:16). Eden was an extraordinarily appointed garden, with choice specimens of the finest trees and plants. Two trees of very special importance were also there, the tree of life and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil (2:17; 3:24).

2:10–14 This river and its four tributaries would not have survived the great Flood (chs. 6–9). The provision of this grand river is a powerful demonstration of God's great care for His garden. The names Pishon (v. 11), Gihon (v. 13), Hiddekel (v. 14), and Euphrates (v. 14) relate to later rivers that were known to the first readers of the text. These later rivers likely would only approximate the location of the original rivers. Here, the Christian reader thinks of the river found in the future vision of the New Jerusalem, where there is also a new tree of life (Rev. 22:1, 2).

2:15 The garden was perfectly prepared. It was man's home and he had to tend and keep it. Even the biblical paradise required work (1:26–28)!

2:16 In His great grace, God gave permission before He gave restriction. The permission was broad, of every tree, while the restriction was narrow (v. 17). Man could do almost anything he wanted. It appears that man limited his diet to vegetation at first; only after the Flood is there mention of God's gift of meat as well (9:3).

2:17 the tree of the knowledge of good and evil: The phrase suggests "full knowledge" by tying together two contrasting words (as in 1:1, "heavens and earth"). We know little about this tree. Presumably, God wanted man to learn wisdom, but wisdom tied to his relationship with his Creator. shall surely die: These emphatic words are made of two forms of the verb meaning “to die.” The point is not that the guilty person would drop dead right then but that it would certainly happen some time; there is no escape (Heb. 9:27).

2:18 It is not good: This is the first time a negative assessment appears in Genesis. God did not want Adam to be lonely, so He fashioned a helper comparable to him. This phrase indicates that this helper (or partner) would be truly fitting and fully adequate—just right. Some have thought that the term is demeaning, but it simply means “one who helps,” and in fact is used to describe God when He comes to our aid (Pss. 33:20; 115:9, 10, 11). It does not refer to someone who is secondary or inferior.

2:19 The same verb for formed used here for God’s creation of animals is also used for His creation of man in v. 7. Again, the verb suggests a potter at work casting his pots. But now, the pots are a lion and a raccoon, a raven and a stork. It appears that God created each animal (or group of animals) for the man too serve, study, and classify, to see what he would call them. In giving each animal its name, Adam demonstrated his right as God’s regent (1:26–28). He was lord over all created order. Furthermore, Adam’s names “stuck.” That is, he demonstrated perfect insight in the names he used for the animals. They were more than titles; they were terms that described the animals accurately.

2:20 In his close study of the living things that God paraded before him, Adam did not find a helper comparable to him. He needed a companion just like him (v. 18), not a servant or an aide but another life like himself, having intelligence, personality, ethical and moral sensitivity, and spirituality. Yet the only living things that Adam found were some fascinating animals!

IN DEPTH

God as Creator

God created the heavens and the earth" (Gen. 1:1). These words form one of the Bible's principal assertions about the material world: that God created it all. The first two chapters of Genesis present two complementary accounts of creation (Ps. 104 and Prov. 8 present two additional accounts). Chapter 1 pictures God in sublime terms, grand and awesome. The Hebrew term used for deity in this section (Elohim) speaks of God's majesty, sovereignty, and awesome power. With a mere word, God spoke the entire universe into existence. When He finished, He called every part of His creation "very good" (1:31).

Chapter 2, on the other hand, presents a more personal picture of creation. It focuses on the creation of man and woman, the only beings in creation who reflect the very image of God. In this section, God's personal name (Yahweh, or LORD) is used rather than His title, "God." This is because God personally shaped Adam from the dust of the earth, breathing life into him, and forming Eve from Adam's flesh and bone. Moreover, the section depicts God placing Adam and Eve in a beautiful garden and interacting with them.

Of course, these two chapters are not written in terms of modern science. But neither are they written in what would have passed for science in ancient times. If the Bible had been written in the "scientific" language of its day, it would be little more than a relic today. Had it been written in the scientific language of the Middle Ages, it would have been a mystery to its first readers and nonsense to us. Had it been written in the scientific language of our own day, it would have been unintelligible to prior generations and, to be sure, a relic in future years.

These first chapters of Genesis reveal God's identity as Creator in language that makes sense to every sort of audience. The chapters spoke first to a people on the move, at the dawn of Hebrew history. Over the ages, they have spoken to ancient and medieval peoples. And today, they speak to people from all backgrounds. The modern person sometimes wonders why the language is not more precise. Yet these chapters do not aim at precision; their aim is clarity concerning one certain truth: God created the heavens and the earth.

2:21 This is the first surgery, and God was the Surgeon. In His kindness, God used an unusually deep sleep as an anesthetic. Later, the Lord would bring a "deep sleep" (perhaps meaning a "trance") upon Abram when He was about to establish His covenant with him. Abram, in his "sleep," was still aware of what was going on; the memory would be lasting. Adam's response (v. 23) suggests that he, too, had an awareness of what was happening during his supernatural slumber. God's use of a rib was fitting. He might have started over with dust and clay. But by using a part of Adam himself, the identification of Adam with his partner would be ensured. As Luther observed, God might have taken a bone from a toe and thus signified that Adam was to rule over her; or He might have taken a bone from his head to indicate her rule over him. But by taking a bone from his side, God implied equality and mutual respect.

2:22 The verb made means "to build." The expansion of one small part into a complete body makes sense in today's understanding of molecular structure and DNA.

2:23 This is now means "At last!" bone of my bones: Adam's wording is poetic and exalted; seeing Eve was a shocking and exhilarating experience because the match was perfect. Here was a mirror of himself, someone just like him, and yet different! She shall be called Woman: In giving the woman her name, Adam was functioning as he had in naming the animals (v. 19). Yet the name that he gave her matched his own. She was woman, and he was man; they were perfectly suited for each other.

2:24 In marriage, a man is to leave his family, join his wife, and unite with her. Though this process establishes a new home distinct from the parents' home, it does not sever all ties with the extended family (the clan). In the biblical period, extended families were quite close and interdependent. The words be joined speak of both a physical embrace and more general aspects of marital bonding. In marriage, man and woman are a "we," not just a "me and you." One flesh suggests both a physical, sexual bonding and a lifelong relationship. There are still two persons, but together they are as one (Eph. 5:31). The term speaks of a unity with diversity (Heb. ehad) rather than absolute unity (as Heb. yahid). This term (Heb ehad) is the same term used in the famed Shema, the creed of Israel, where it is commonly translated, "the LORD is one (Deut. 6:4; compare Eph. 5:31). In the NT, Jesus refers to this text (Gen. 2:24) as the foundation of the biblical view of marriage (Matt. 19:5; 1 Cor. 6:16).

2:25 Because the man and the woman knew only good, they were not ashamed even though they were both naked. They were comfortable in their physical bodies, in their sexuality, in their relationship, and in their work—with no wrongdoing. The wording of vv. 24, 25 suggests the couple experienced sexual relations in the garden as a part of their God-intended experience. At 4:1 we first read of procreation, not necessarily the couple's first sexual experience together.

3:1–5 Though not equated with Satan in the OT, the serpent is clearly identified as such in the NT (Rev. 12:9). Here, then, is Satan's first deception of the human mind and will.

3:1 With no introduction, the serpent appeared in Paradise. This is the first clue in Scripture of creation outside the one Adam and Eve experienced. The serpent symbolizes something both fascinating and loathsome. Yet neither Adam nor Eve saw the danger embodied in the serpent. The Hebrew word for cunning sounds like the Hebrew word for naked in 2:25. Adam and Eve were naked in innocence; the serpent was crafty and sneaky. In Eve's innocence and naïveté, she showed no surprise on hearing a strange voice from the snake. Has God indeed said: Note that the serpent did not use the divine name Yahweh.

3:2 We may eat: Eve repeated the positive words of God (2:16).

3:3 There was one tree Eve knew to be off limits. This tree was in the middle of the garden. nor shall you touch it: Some interpreters suggest that the woman was already sinning by adding to the word of God, for these words were not part of God's instructions in 2:17. Yet the first sin was not lying; it was eating the fruit that God had forbidden. Her words reflected the original command well enough and indeed they would have ensured that the command would be kept. In fact, in 20:6 and 26:11 the word expresses the taking of a person sexually to be one's own. Thus, it may be translated, "You may not eat it; that is, consume it," which would be a common Hebrew way of saying the same thing twice for clarification or emphasis.

3:4 For the first time (here), Satan lied: You will not surely die. Lying was Satan's craft right from the beginning (John 8:44). The serpent boldly denied the truth of what God had said. In essence, the serpent called God a liar.

3:5 By arguing that God had an ulterior motive, the serpent appealed to Eve's sense of fair play. you will be like God: God's fullness of knowledge was only one of the superiorities that set Him apart from the woman. But the serpent combined all of God's superiority over the woman into this one audacious appeal to her pride.

3:6 Notice the parallel to 2:9; this tree was like the other trees. It was good for food. These words imply that this was the first time Eve considered disobeying God's command. After all, there was nothing in the tree that was poisonous or harmful, and it was desirable. The issue was one of obedience and disobedience to the word of God. She took and ate: Once she disobeyed God, all the world changed. (Note, however, that Rom. 5:12 speaks of the sin of Adam rather than the sin of Eve.) Because she did not die, she gave it to her husband. And he ate: Adam sinned with his eyes wide open. He did not even ask a question. He knew as well as she that the fruit was forbidden. Adam and Eve had now broken faith with the Lord, and the world was forever changed.

3:6 This verse records the tragic story of the fall of mankind in four clearly defined steps. First, sin begins with the sight of sin (Gen. 9:22; Job 31:1): the woman saw. The sight of sin itself is not sin, but that is where the pathway that leads to sin embarks. Her second step was desire in that direction. Sight alone is no crime, but to desire that which we have innocently seen, if it cannot be ours, is sin (Deut. 5:21; Matt. 5:28; James 1:13, 14; 1 John 2:15–17). Eve's third step on the pathway to sin went beyond coveting to indulging. She took what was not rightfully hers according to the prohibition of God. Desiring the forbidden fruit was covert sin; taking and eating it was overt and active sin. The final step was the involvement of another in the sin: she gave to her husband. There is no such thing as private sin; every sin affects someone else. Eve's sin affected Adam; and consequently, Adam's sin affected the entire race. The whole human race sinned in Adam, for "through one man sin entered the world" (Rom. 5:12). Sin always involves others and thus becomes compounded. Other striking examples of these same steps on the pathway to sin can be found in the lives of Achan (Josh. 7:21) and David (2 Sam. 11:1–5, 15, 24).

3:7 The serpent was right; they knew good and evil (v. 5). This is the awful truth about a skilled liar: the deception comes mixed with truth. Their eyes were opened. They discovered that they were naked. All of a sudden with no one around but the two of them, they were ashamed (2:25). Their lovely naïveté was now replaced by evil thoughts, and they covered themselves with fig leaves.

3:8 The scene is pathetic and sad. Here comes the Lord for an evening walk and a cozy chat. But Adam and Eve, who have "become wise," cower in the trees to avoid being seen by the Creator of the universe. What had been a perfect, shameless fellowship has turned into dreadful fear of God. This was not fear in the sense of true piety, as with Abraham, Moses, David, and Solomon, but the raw terror of being discovered in the wrong.

Sin Is a Choice

What is it in human nature—a nature which God created—that makes it temptable, vulnerable to sin? Adam and Eve were created apart from sin, and without the need to sin, yet some characteristic in their makeup allowed sin to enter their lives (Gen. 3:6, 7). What was that characteristic?

Scripture offers two answers. For Eve, the choice to believe a lie was the doorway through which sin entered her life (Gen. 3:13; 2 Cor. 11:3; 1 Tim. 2:14). For Adam, it was the choice to ignore God's voice of authority (Gen. 3:17). These two choices—self-deception and self-will—are two sides of the same coin. Both remain as complicating realities in our own lives today, allowing sin to continue to take root and bear its deadly fruit in us, until Christ enters our lives and breaks the bonds of sin, empowering us to resist it.

Temptation is sin's call to our basic needs and desires to be satisfied in self-serving or perverted ways. It is also a call to practice self-deception, finding ways to justify doing as we please even though we know in our heart of hearts that it is wrong.

For this reason, Scripture frequently speaks of blindness as a willful act in which we choose to practice rebellion and self-deception. But when Christ enters our lives, He regenerates our hearts and sets us free to choose what is true and righteous (1 Cor. 6:9–11; James 1:26, 27; 1 John 3:7–9).

3:9 God in His mercy did not destroy both of them immediately. He even called out to them and interacted with them (vv. 10–12). God's mercy reaches further than we usually believe, or else we would all be destroyed.

3:10 I was afraid: They had not become like God but were now estranged from God.

3:11 The Lord carried the interrogation to its sad ending by posing one question after another.

3:12 A guilty man's first line of defense is blame. Adam blamed the woman, and then he blamed God for having given her to him (for David's contrasting response to Nathan, read 2 Sam. 12:13).

3:13 the serpent deceived me and I ate: A simple statement of fact.

3:14 to the serpent: The Lord turned first to the serpent and brought His judgment upon him. God did not excuse the woman because she was deceived, but He did bring the harsher judgment on the one who deceived her. The language in these verses is poetry, something that adds solemnity to them. The word translated as cursed here is used only of the curse on the serpent and on the ground (v. 17). The woman and the man faced harsh new realities, but they were not cursed (God had already blessed them; 1:28). The text suggests that the serpent became a creature that slithers on the ground and appears to eat dust. This implies that before this the serpent had some other bodily form.

3:14 The effects of the Fall reached well beyond the man and woman to the animal kingdom, which began to suffer along with man through the Edenic Curse (Jer. 12:4; Rom. 8:20).

3:15 enmity between you and the woman: This is not just about snakes; it is about the enemy of our souls, Satan. your seed and her Seed: The language is ambiguous but still contains the promise of a child. The term seed is exceedingly important. It may be translated offspring (15:3) or descendants (15:5, 13, 18). The term may refer to an individual (Gal. 3:16) or a group of people. This means, among other things, that Eve would live, at least for a while. The Seed of the woman is the Promised One, the coming Messiah of Israel. Seed continues to be used throughout the Bible as a messianic term (Num. 24:7; Is. 6:13). The meaning of the phrase your seed as it applies to the serpent is uncertain (John 8:37–47). The reference is ultimately to Satan. your head: This is sometimes called the "first gospel" because these words, as indirect as they are, promise the Coming One whom we know to be the Lord Jesus, the Messiah. The Lord was showing mercy even as He judged (4:15). Bruise His heel speaks of a serious injury, but it is contrasted with the bruising of the head—the defeat—of the serpent's seed. When Jesus went to the Cross, He was bruised in His heel. That is, He suffered a terrible but temporary injury (John 12:31; Col. 2:15). In His resurrection, He defeated His enemy. From that moment on, Satan has lived on borrowed time. He is already defeated; only the announcement of victory needs to be given (Rom. 16:20).

Is Work a Curse?

What was the curse that God put on creation (Gen. 3:17–19)? One of the most stubborn myths in Western culture is that God imposed work as a curse to punish Adam and Eve's sin. As a result, some people view work as evil. Scripture does not support that idea: • God Himself is a worker. The fact that God works shows that work is not evil, since by definition God cannot do evil. On the contrary, work is an ongoing activity of God (John 5:17).

• God created people in His image to be His coworkers. He gives them ability and authority to manage His creation.

• God established work before the Fall. Genesis 1 and 2 record how God created the world. The account tells how He placed the first humans in a garden "to tend and keep it" (Gen. 2:15). This work assignment was given before sin entered the world and before God pronounced the curse (Gen. 3). Obviously, then, work cannot be a result of the Fall since people were working before the Fall.

• God commends work even after the Fall. If work were evil in and of itself, God would never encourage people to engage in it. But He does. For example, He told Noah and his family the same thing He told Adam and Eve, to have dominion over the earth (Gen. 9:1–7). In the NT, Christians are commanded to work (Col. 3:23; 1 Thess. 4:11).

• Work itself was not cursed in the Fall. A careful reading of Gen. 3:17–19 shows that God cursed the ground, not work, as a result of Adam's sin: "Cursed is the ground for your sake; In toil you shall eat of it."

Notice three ways that the curse affected work: (1) Work had been a joy, but now it would be "toil." People would feel burdened by it and even come to hate it. (2) "Thorns and thistles" would hamper people's efforts to exercise dominion. In other words, the earth would not be as cooperative as it had been. (3) People would have to "sweat" to accomplish their tasks. Work would require enormous effort and energy.

Most people know how burdensome work can be. Workplace stresses and pressures, occupational hazards, the daily grind, office politics, crushing boredom, endless routine, disappointments, setbacks, catastrophes, frustration, cutthroat competition, fraud, deception, injustice—there is no end of evils connected with work. But work itself is not evil. Far from calling it a curse, the Bible calls work and its fruit a gift from God (Eccl. 3:13; 5:18, 19).

3:16 your sorrow and your conception: These two words mean "your sorrowful conception" (1:2; 4:12; 9:2; Ps. 9:2). That is, the woman's joy in conceiving and bearing children will be saddened by the pain of it. The word desire (Heb. teshuga) can also mean "an attempt to usurp or control" as in 4:7. We can paraphrase the last two lines of this verse this way: "You will now have a tendency to dominate your husband, and he will have the tendency to act as a tyrant over you." The battle of the sexes has begun. Each strives for control and neither lives in the best interest of the other (Phil. 2:3, 4). The antidote is in the restoration of mutual respect and dignity through Jesus Christ (Eph. 5:21–33).

3:17–19 Adam got his share of blame, even though he tried to escape it (v. 12). Cursed is the ground: Though the curse was not directed at the man, it is trouble for him. Now his life will be marked by toil, thorns and thistles, sweat, and finally death. These words imply that before the Fall the ground was not filled with noxious weeds and work would have been more pleasant (2:15). to dust you shall return: Death will now come to humankind, whereas there had been the possibility of living forever (Rom. 5:12–14). The word of God was sure: God had stated that they would certainly die (2:17). Now they were served notice concerning the process of aging and decay that was already at work (5:5; 6:3). Although some have termed the words of this section as God's Covenant with Adam, the Hebrew term "covenant" (berit) is lacking and the content appears to be less than that of a covenant.

3:20 The name Eve (Heb. hawwa) is related to the verb meaning "to live." Eve is our common mother, just as Adam is our common father. This is Adam's second name for her. The first was woman, the feminine complement to his own masculinity (2:23).

3:21 This is the first place that the Bible mentions killing animals for human use. The shedding of the blood of these animals was a shadow, in a way, of the shedding of the blood of innumerable animals in the sacrificial system that would be enacted under Moses. And all the sacrifices under Torah would one day point to the greatest sacrifice of them all, the death of Savior Jesus as the propitiation of our sins.

3:22 become like one of us: By means of their rebellious act, the man and woman now shared something with God. But they were also at enmity with Him because of their sin. Adam and Eve's knowledge of good and evil had made them not wise but foolish. The fruit of the tree of life stopped aging. To eat of this tree was to live forever. One day this tree will be planted anew and its fruit will be for the healing of the nations (Rev. 22:2).

3:23 The man had been formed by God outside the garden (2:5–8, 15) and had been given the task of tending and keeping it. Now he was removed from the garden and sent to till the soil from which he was taken (2:5; 3:17–19).

3:24 Even though Eve sinned first, this section (vv. 22–24) focuses on the man, Adam. This is the first reference to holy angels or the cherubim in Genesis. The creation of the angels (including those who rebelled against God; 6:1–4) preceded the creation activities described in chs. 1 and 2. A cherub (plural, cherubim) is an angel who takes on a particular form (Ex. 25:18–22; compare Ezek. 1:5–28). Cherubim, like all angels, are spirit beings, but they can take on physical bodies. Adam and Eve were barred by a flaming sword from the garden that God had planted for their enjoyment. There was no way back in. The fact that the tree of life remained, even though guarded by angels and a sword, was a ray of hope. Is it not possible that because He had it guarded and did not uproot it, that one day its fruit may be eaten again? Indeed, one day we will see it again (Rev 22:2). Adam and Eve were no longer welcome in God's presence, but they had the hope that one day Paradise would be regained.

4:1 The verb knew (Heb. yada) is a splendid euphemism for sexual intercourse. It describes an intimate relationship that includes ardor, passion, mutuality, and oneness. This was an act of procreation, but most likely not the first sexual union between Adam and Eve. The name Cain is related to a word meaning "craftsman" or "metalworker," but it also sounds like the Hebrew word translated I have acquired. At times in Genesis the meaning for a name is taken directly from it (for example, Ishmael in 16:11); at other times the meaning is based on a pun—a word that sounds similar to the name itself.

4:2 We have no explanation of the name Abel as we have with Cain (v. 1). Perhaps after Abel was murdered (v. 8), the parents looked back with sadness on the brevity of his life and called him Abel (meaning "vapor") because his life was over so quickly. Keeping sheep and tilling the ground were equally valid occupations. They reflected merely different interests of the two brothers, not their character. The story of Cain and Abel begins a motif in Genesis of competing sons (like Esau and Jacob; 25:26).

4:3 Genesis does not explain how the practice of sacrificial worship began. The first readers of the book understood it well because they had been instructed in full by God through Moses (Lev.). Some people assume that Cain's sacrifice of fruit was deficient because it did not involve shedding blood, which God required for forgiveness of sins (Heb. 9:22). But nothing in ch. 4 indicates that Cain and Abel came to God for forgiveness: their sacrifices were acts of worship. In the later sacrificial system of Israel, God blessed the presentation of grain offerings alongside the sacrifices of animals (Lev. 6:14–23). A farmer presented a portion of his produce just as a herdsman presented a sample of his flock. Cain's sacrifice was deficient because Cain did not "do well" (v. 7), not because the sacrifice was the "fruit of the ground."

4:4 Abel's sacrifice was the best that he had to offer, the firstborn and their fat. There are no similar descriptive words for Cain's sacrifice. That is, Cain brought a token gift of his produce to the Lord, but Abel brought the very best. God respected or looked with favor first upon the person, then on his sacrifice (Ps. 40:6–8). Abel's offering was "more excellent" than Cain's because of Abel's faith in the Lord (Heb. 11:4).

4:5 Something deficient in Cain's attitude was reflected in his offering. Instead of repenting of his wrongdoing, Cain became angry and, we discover, filled with jealousy (v. 8).

4:6, 7 The gracious words of the Lord were that Cain could get it right! He did not have to go on being angry and morose, he could do well. Sin was lying at the door, about to pounce on him as a lion.

4:8 The murder was stunning in its lack of precedent, its suddenness, and its finality. Jesus spoke of this ghastly event as historical fact (Matt. 23:35).

4:9 your brother: The words emphasize the horror of the murder; it was in the family. Indeed, all muder is "in the family," for we are all related in Adam.

4:10 That blood of Abel cries out until the blood of One more innocent than Abel is shed as well (Heb. 12:24). In the manner of his death, Abel depicts the Savior Jesus.

4:11, 12 Cain was the third to be cursed of God; first was the serpent (3:14) and then the ground (3:17).

4:13 My punishment: Usually rendered "iniquity" (Ex. 20:5), here the term speaks of the result of iniquity.

4:14 Sadly, Cain expressed his distress only at the punishment he received, not at his crime. Nor was there any note of repentance concerning his dreadful action. anyone who finds me: Most have assumed that the others whom Cain feared were sisters and brothers already born but not mentioned or those yet to be born. This idea is based on the wording of 5:4, "and he {Adam} had sons and daughters." Some have proposed that God created others outside the Garden of Eden, but the Scriptures give no indication of this. It makes sense to conclude that Cain was afraid of his siblings.

4:15 It is remarkable to observe the mercy of the Lord in Cain's life. Though Cain had murdered his brother, the Lord did not slay Cain. And though the Lord brought a curse on Cain, He still protected him, by a mark, from being slain by others. In His wrath, God remembers mercy.

4:16 The land of Nod is a wordplay on the term for vagabond (vv. 12, 14). The point is more theological than geographical; to be apart from the presence of the Lord is to be a vagabond in a "vagabond-land."

4:17 Cain most likely acquired a wife from among his other siblings (v. 14). The name Enoch means "Dedicated One," the same name as the godly descendant of Seth who "walked with God" (5:21–24). The fact that Cain built a city named after his son speaks of a dramatic, rapid increase in population.

4:18 In quick succession, six generations from Cain to Lamech are mentioned. The verse indicates a rapidly expanding population, for the listing of each of these sons includes corresponding wives.

4:19–21 Here, the story of Lamech's most celebrated descendants is given. Lamech represents skill and strength as well as arrogance and vengeance. This Lamech is not the same as Lamech, the son of Methuselah (5:28–31). two wives: This notable act suggests a deliberate attempt by Lamech to subvert the original pattern of God of one man and one woman (2:24; read the words of Jesus on the subject in Matt. 19:4–6). Adah … Zillah: Only rarely in these accounts are the names of women mentioned.

4:20, 21 Jabal is celebrated for the guild of tent dwellers associated with his name. Jubal is celebrated for the guild of musicians associated with his name.

INSIGHT

The City of Enoch

The city of Enoch is the first city mentioned in the Bible. Its location is unknown. It was founded by Cain (Gen. 4:17), a fugitive in the land of Nod ("wandering"), who named the city after his son, Enoch ("dedicated" or "initiated"). The city was probably small, perhaps even a settlement of several families, but nonetheless called a "city" (Hebrew, ir), implying an enclosed space with permanent dwellings, in contrast to the tents of nomadic shepherds. Possibly it was the birthplace of civilization, specialized occupations, and the arts (4:20–22).

4:22 Some suggest that iron was not known during the time of Tubal-Cain, and this verse means that later metal workers who did work with iron could look back to Tubal-Cain as the "father" of metallurgy in general. Naamah: Even more rare than the names of mothers in these accounts (v. 19) are the names of daughters and sisters.

4:23, 24 What follows is a boastful taunt song that captures the violent spirit of Lamech. The words of Lamech are poetic, making the passage memorable and powerful (12:1). I have killed a man: In this boast, Lamech indicates that he has followed in the worst pattern of his ancestor Cain. In his wicked braggadocio, he taunted God by his words seventy-sevenfold. Whereas the Lord would bring vengeance on the slayer of Cain "sevenfold" (v. 15), Lamech boasted that by himself he would greatly magnify the vengeance on anyone who attacked him. This is another example (although in wickedness) of the inflation of numbers for effect (Num. 1:46).

Bronze and Iron

True bronze (Gen. 4:22) is an alloy of copper and tin. Iron (v. 22) is an element that in its pure state is soft. Its usefulness for making tools and weapons did not appear until it could be reliably combined with carbon to make steel. It was still rare in the time of Pharaoh Tutankhamen (1336–1327 B.C.). One dagger was discovered in his tomb.

4:25 and Adam knew his wife again: These words recall the opening words of the section (4:1) and bring the section to its conclusion. After the long, sad digression about Cain and his descendants, we return to Adam and Eve and their new progeny. With the death of Abel (v. 8) and the expulsion of Cain (vv. 11, 12), Adam and Eve had no son to carry on their line for good and for the promise of the Messiah. Hence the importance of the birth of Seth. His name is related to a Hebrew verb meaning "to place" or "to set," for he was appointed to take the place of the murdered son in the plan of God.

4:26 The birth of Enosh meant that the line of Seth would continue; the promise of the Lord (3:15) would not be forgotten. began to call on the name of the LORD: These words can hardly mean that only now did people begin to pray to God. Rather, the verb call means "to make proclamation." That is, this is the beginning of preaching, of witnessing, and testifying in the name of the Lord (12:8).

5:1–32 This chapter abbreviates the family history that connects Adam to Noah. We do not know how much time the chapter represents. Its purpose is connection rather than chronology.

5:1 The word genealogy (or "family histories") is found in ten significant passages in Genesis (2:4, note). The term is a major building block of Genesis. In the day means "when." likeness of God: What God made humankind to be (1:26–28) continues after the Fall (ch. 3; compare also 9:6, after the Flood).

5:2 The original creation of humanity is in two complementary genders, male and female, as 1:26–28 clearly states (1:27).

5:3 one hundred and thirty years: The long lives of the people of the early chapters of Genesis have led to considerable speculation. One suggestion is that these ages were possible because of tremendously different climate and environmental conditions before the Flood (chs. 6–9). A second suggestion is that these ages are ways of expressing the relative importance of the figures; that is, that these are hyperbolic figures that use exaggeration to indicate significance in the ancient world. likeness … image: These are the same terms, but in reverse order, that are used of humankind in God's creation in 1:26.

5:4 sons and daughters: There may have been a very large number of children born from our first parents. We may presume intermarriage among them, of course. The problems associated with incest, addressed in Lev. 18, would not have occurred when the genetic pool was pure and unpolluted.

5:5 When God made Adam and Eve, the expectation was that they would live forever. There is a profound sadness in Adam's death, for it reminds us of Adam's mortality, and our own. and he died: This refrain is given at the conclusion of each of the ten names in this chapter except one (Enoch; v. 24). The judgment of God on fallen man was fulfilled in the death of Adam and each of his successors (3:19; 6:3). Death entered the world through this one man, and through him passed to all people (Rom. 5:12; 1 Cor. 15:22).

The Purpose of Genealogies

Genealogies appear at a number of places in the Bible. Some readers may be tempted to skip over these lists as if they were inconsequential, but that would be a mistake. The genealogies of Scripture serve several important purposes. For example, some of them trace the ancestry of important people in the narrative (Gen. 5:1). Others show the links between the people and nations of the world (Gen. 10:1). Others reveal God's sovereign plan at work down through generations (Ruth 4:18–22).

Generally speaking, there are two kinds of genealogies, linear and segmented. A linear genealogy traces the history of a people to a particular goal, person, or office. For example, the extended genealogy of 1 Chr. 1—9 highlights the royal line of David, among other things. By contrast, a segmented genealogy shows how various social groups are related. For example, Gen. 25:1–4 gives the names of Abraham's sons through his wife Keturah, believed to be the ancestors of some of the Arabian tribes.

The genealogies of the Bible help to show that faith in God is not just a subjective experience but an objective, historical reality based in fact. Belief can be rooted in history, which is moving toward a goal. On the other hand, genealogies help to remind us that genuine faith involves human beings who are linked together by blood. History is handed down from parents to children, generation after generation, until it reaches its dramatic conclusion in God's good time.

5:6–20 The pattern of the genealogies is as follows: (1) name "A" lived "x" years; (2) name "A" begot name "B"; (3) name "A" then lived "y" years; (4) name "A" lived "z" ("x"+ "y") years in all; (5) and he died. See also the pattern in the line of Shem (11:10–26). These lists are incomplete (compare Matt. 1:1–17); they serve merely to indicate major figures over an extended period of time. As in many such genealogical listings, which were originally oral, these were designed to be recited by memory to mark certain key figures through time for purposes of connection, for tying two great periods or names together. In this case, the point is to tie the line of continuity between Adam and Noah through the line of Seth. Thus, when the text says that name "A" begot name "B" at a certain age, the name given for “B” may not be the immediate child but a remote descendant. This conforms to biblical patterns elsewhere and to patterns in the ancient Near East and in many tribal societies even in our own day.

5:21–24 The most fascinating name in this listing is that of Enoch (not the son of Cain of the same name, 4:17). The phrase, Enoch walked with God (vv. 22, 24), expresses a life of fellowship with and obedience to the Lord (as was true of Noah, 6:8). It also recalls the experience of Adam and Eve, who had lived in even closer proximity to the Lord before the Fall (3:8). he was not: This phrase does not mean that Enoch ceased to exist but that he was taken into God’s presence, for God took him. Only Enoch and Elijah (2 Kin. 2:11) ever had this experience. Enoch’s remarkable experience was both a testimony of his deep faith in God (Heb. 11:5, 6) and a strong reminder at the beginning of biblical history that there is life in God’s presence after death for the people of God. What Enoch experienced in a remarkable, dramatic fashion is what each person who “walks with God” will experience—everlasting life with the Savior.

5:25–27 Methuselah is said to have lived longer than any other figure mentioned in Genesis, 969 years.

5:28–31 The most important thing Lamech is remembered for is his descendant Noah. The name Noah is the only one that is commented upon by the narrator in this chapter. It is a form of the word meaning “to rest” and is associated with comfort. Noah’s name refers to a reversal of the curse.

5:32 These sons of Noah, Shem, Ham, and Japheth, figure in the ensuing story of the Flood (chs. 6–9).

“Walked”

(Heb. halak) (Gen. 5:24; 6:9; Deut. 13:4; Ps. 128:1; Mic. 6:8) Strong’s #1980: The basic meaning of the Hebrew verb translated here as walk is “to go” or “to travel.” The word is used often in the OT to signify merely a simple act of motion (Gen. 13:17; 2 Sam. 11:2). In 6:9 and other passages, the word possesses connotations of a habitual manner of life or a constant relationship with God. Thus the word describes Noah, Enoch, and other people of faith as living in a close relationship with their God and in obedience to His commands. Throughout Scripture, believers are called to walk with God daily, abiding in Him completely (Gal. 5:16; 1 John 2:6).

6:1–4 This is one of the most debated OT passages. Three principal interpretations are: (1) The sons of God represent the godly line of Seth, and the daughters of men represent the ungodly line of Cain; their intermarriage led to apostasy, compromise, and sin. (2) The sons of God are powerful kings who practiced an enforced polygamy by taking wives of all whom they chose, leading to other wicked practices. (3) The sons of God are fallen angels who cohabited with human women (the daughters of men), producing offspring that were tyrants. Whichever view one settles on, it is important to see that this paragraph is a prologue to the story of the Flood. It accounts for the general description of wickedness mentioned in v. 5. The most likely interpretation is that the sons of God were fallen angels. This is the view of Jewish scholars and best explains the text. There are two principal objections to the fallen angel view. (1) Angels do not marry (Matt. 22:30), so the whole notion is impossible. (2) This idea is so abhorrent to biblical thought that it breaks all analogy. Yet it is possible that these were angels who left "their proper domain" (Jude 6) and whose sin led to a special divine judgment (2 Pet. 2:4). It may be that in this isolated case, fallen angels did assume human form and marry human women; this was such a monumental breach of God's order that it provoked God's judgment on the world through the Flood.

6:1 The term daughters clearly means female children of human parents. The daughters were simply women.

6:2 The sons of God refer to a different group from either the men or their daughters. The phrase occurs elsewhere in the Bible and clearly means "angels." Job 1:6 presents Satan and his angels coming into the presence of the Lord for an audience with His Majesty. Satan's angels are there called "the sons of God," with the suggestion that these angelic beings were once holy ones who served the Lord, but were now allied with the evil one. Genesis assumes the existence of the good angels of the Lord (3:24), and of Satan and his angels. It also assumes that the latter are already fallen and under God's judgment (1:2). In 3:1, the serpent (Satan) was already at work as the father of lies (John 8:44). Here it appears that some of Satan's angels, spirit beings, took on human form (3:24) and, out of a perverted lust, seduced women. In response, God reserved these angels for special judgment (Jude 6; 2 Pet. 2:4) and cleansed the earth itself (with the Flood).

6:3 My Spirit: This is the second reference to the Holy Spirit in Genesis. The first is in anticipation of order and wonder (1:2); this second is in anticipation of destruction. Scholars are not sure what the Hebrew term strive means; it is found only here. Flesh speaks of the mortality of humankind (3:19; 5:5). his days: Some interpret this phrase as suggesting that the human life span will be reduced to 120 years. However, the reduction of the human life span to modern levels does not occur until well into the stories of the Patriarchs. More likely, this phrase means that God will extend a "grace period" of 120 years before expending His wrath (in the Flood).

6:4 The Hebrew word for giants means "fallen ones" (from the Heb. verb napal, meaning "to fall"). Many ancient cultures have legends of titans and demigods. This verse appears to be explaining this common memory of humankind.

6:5, 6 was sorry: This language is what theologians call anthropopathic (1:31); that is, the Lord is described as having human emotions (Num. 23:19). In these words we sense the passion of the Lord. He had desired so much from humanity and was overwhelmingly disappointed.

6:7 I will destroy: Humanity's ruin extends to all living things that God had made on the earth.

6:8 But Noah: In this contrast lies the hope of all of subsequent human history. Were there not a man and a family who by God's grace stood out from the wickedness of their day, there would have been a new beginning on the part of God that would have omitted all of us!

6:8 Grace in Hebrew comes from a root meaning "to bend or stoop"; thus, the condescending or unmerited favor of a superior person to an inferior one is implied. This is its first occurrence in Scripture and it is often used redemptively (Jer. 31:2; Zech. 12:10). Mankind, the beasts of the field, and the fowl of the air would be destroyed. But God would call out a remnant unto Himself.

6:9–13 Noah was a just man, and like Enoch, walked with God. "Just" relates to Noah's relationship with God; he was in a right relationship with God. He was also perfect, which conveys the idea of maturity or completeness. The phrase in his generations explains that Noah lived this way among his contemporaries, who were so wicked that God was going to destroy the world.

6:10 These three sons, first mentioned in 5:32, will form the family tree of the nations following the Flood.

6:11 The verb translated corrupt has the idea of being ruined, spoiled, or destroyed. Sinful people were bringing ruin to the world that belonged to the living God (Ps. 24:1).

6:12 all flesh: The language is similar to that of Ps. 14:2, 3.

6:13 God's message to Noah was graphic and severe. But the faithful reader of the Bible is also impressed with God's grace. The Creator of the universe, who owes man nothing, took one man into His confidence. end of all flesh: It would appear that the God's "grace period" of 120 years (v. 3) was now complete.

INSIGHT

The Flood Through Other Eyes

Divine destruction of the world by means of a flood is known in cultures around the world. Most of these stories appear to have had their origin in the biblical account (Gen. 6:5—9:29). The ancient Near East, however, has numerous myths of the great flood, which are separate retellings of the same event producing numerous versions. Mesopotamian flood stories are first found written in the Sumerian language in the earliest known literature (third millennium B.C.). Two of the most famous are the Gilgamesh Epic and the story of Atrahasis.

6:14 The word ark (Heb. teba) means "a box." An Egyptian word from which this term may be drawn means "chest" or "coffin"; the same term is used of the box in which the baby Moses was placed in the Nile (Ex. 2:3). We usually picture a boat or a ship with bow and stern. But a ship is designed to move through the water as a conveyance; the ark was built merely to float on the water. The Hebrew word for gopherwood is merely transliterated because that type of wood is not known today. Noah made rooms in the ark and used pitch to seal the ark against leaks. It is not certain what this sealing agent was. What a comical thing this must have been! We do not know where Noah lived in the pre-Flood earth, but there is nothing that indicates he was near an ocean. Yet he was building the largest floating box that had ever been seen.

6:15 The cubit is about 18 inches. Hence, the ark was about 450 feet long, 75 feet wide, and 45 feet high.

6:16 The window was an "opening." The need for circulation of air, yet protection from the torrents of water, demanded a good deal of engineering and crafting. This opening could be covered (8:6).

6:17 I Myself: The Hebrew text places significant emphasis on the personal role of God in the ensuing storm.

6:18–21 In strongest contrast to God's punishment in the preceding verse, God in His mercy established His covenant with Noah. This is the first time the word covenant is used in the Bible; some believe the concept of covenant is found in 3:15, but the word doesn't occur until here. The details of this covenant were given after the Flood (9:9). Here, in the midst of judgment, the Lord stooped down to meet the needs of His servant (Pss. 40:1; 113:6) and to enter into a binding oath with him. In order to perpetuate the human family, God promised to preserve Noah's family and two of every sort of animal.

6:22 Noah's complete obedience is similar to Abram's (Gen. 12:4; 22:3). God has told Noah to build an ark, but Noah has never seen an ark. Nevertheless, in total faith and trust in his God with whom he walks Noah did according to all that God commanded him. Little wonder is it recorded that, "By faith Noah, being divinely warned of things not yet seen, moved with godly fear, prepared an ark for the saving of his household, by which he condemned the world and became heir of the righteousness which is according to faith" (Heb 11:7).

7:1 The initiative is the Lord's (8:15), just as in the call of Abram (12:1).

7:2, 3 The command to take seven each of every clean animal is a new detail (6:19). The additional clean animals could be used for food and for sacrifice once the waters subsided (8:20–22).

7:4 The number forty is a significant number, representing a special fullness of time (v. 12; Num. 32:13; 1 Kin. 19:8; Matt. 4:2).

7:5 Again, Noah obeyed the Lord fully.

7:6 six hundred years old: This is the second notice of the age of Noah; he was 500 years old when he became a father (5:32).

7:7–9 The time had now come for the family and the animals to enter the ark. The events of these few verses summarize an immense labor; yet the gathering of the animals must have been largely the work of the Lord and their management the work of Noah and his sons.

7:10 The number seven follows the pattern of symbolic numbers begun in 2:3 (4:24).

7:11, 12 seventeenth day: The detail is remarkable; but then, so was the day! fountains of the great deep … windows of heaven: The waters of the ocean were raised, and the waters of the heavens fell, both converging in a super-inundation of rain for the forty days (v. 4).

7:13–15 The animals seem to have been drawn to the ark and to Noah by the compelling force of the Lord.

7:16 shut him in: The Lord who had drawn them now closed the door on them. That shut door was a symbol of closure, safety, and God's deliverance.

7:17, 18 Four times in this passage the phrase the waters prevailed is used (vv. 18–20, 24). The verb means "to be strong" or "to be mighty." From this word, numerous words are derived for strength, might, and powerful people.

7:19, 20 the high hills under the whole heaven were covered: The question of hyperbolic language is naturally raised here; yet these words do suggest a flood that covers the whole of the earth.

7:21, 22 Without exception, death extended to every creature—all flesh—whose home was on the land.

7:23, 24 man: People died—old people and young; beautiful and brave along with the grisly and gray. Only Noah and those with him escaped the terrible, universal death of the wicked. Jesus affirmed the historicity of the “days of Noah” when he compared them to the end days (Matt. 24:37, 38; Luke 17:26, 27). Peter similarly used the story of Noah and the Flood as a pattern for the final judgment (1 Pet. 3:20; 2 Pet. 2:5; 3:5, 6).

8:1, 2 God, in His great mercy, remembered Noah. God faithfully loved the people with whom He had covenanted.

8:3 hundred and fifty days: Note the symmetry of time. It took the same amount of time for the waters to recede as it took for them to rage over the earth (7:24).

8:4, 5 tops of the mountains: The surging of the waters had been so great that the mountains had been submerged (7:19, 20).

8:6 Again, observe the symmetry of the numbers in this account. The rains had come for forty days (7:12); now the ark was subsiding for forty days.

8:7 The flight of the raven was observed from the ark; this hardy bird kept flying until it was able to locate land.

8:8, 9 The more gentle bird, the dove, sought land; finding none this bird returned to the ark.

8:10, 11 The olive leaf is a potent symbol of peace and restoration.

8:12 which did not return: This proved to Noah that the earth had once again become an inhabitable environment.

8:13, 14 After over a full year, the waters had returned to their place (7:11). As in the beginning (1:9–13), God had again brought the waters of the earth into their place, and He had dried the earth. The Flood began in Noah's year 600, month 2, day 17 (7:11) and ended in Noah's year 601, month 2, day 27 (8:14).

8:15 The fact that God spoke to Noah is another mark of God's great grace to Noah and of how much He valued him (7:1; for God's words to Abram, read 12:1).

8:16–19 As God called Noah and his family to enter the ark (7:1), so now with all danger past He graciously invited them to go out of the ark.

8:20 an altar: This is the first mention of sacrificial worship since the days of Cain and Abel (4:3–5); yet we may assume that the principle of sacrificial worship was perpetuated through the line of faithful people (ch. 5). In joyful and magnificent devotion to the Lord, Noah sacrificed animals and birds from all the clean animals and birds he had preserved on the ark (7:2).

IN COMPARISON

A New Beginning

By saving Noah and his family, God gave humanity a second chance, a fresh start. Note the similarities between the Creation story and Noah's story.

	The First Beginning: Adam and Eve	The Second Beginning: Noah and His Family
God's Action	God created Adam and Eve from the dust (2:7).	God saved Noah and his family from destruction (7:23).
God's Provision	God planted the Garden and gave Adam and Eve plants to eat (1:29–31; 2:8).	God saved animal species along with Noah and gave Noah and his family animals for food (6:17–22).
God's Blessing	Be fruitful and multiply; have dominion over all living things (1:28).	Be fruitful and multiply; all living things will be filled with fear and dread of you (9:1, 2).
God's Covenant		Never again will God destroy the earth with a flood; He will always provide the annual seasons (8:21, 22; 9:11).
God's Prohibition	Do not eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil (2:16).	Do not shed the blood of any person (9:5, 6).
God's Warning	Those who eat of it will die (2:17).	Of those who shed blood God will demand a reckoning (9:5).
God's Evaluation	It is very good (1:31).	Humanity's heart is evil (8:21).

8:21 a soothing aroma: By these words we understand that the sacrifices were acceptable and pleasing to God (4:3; Lev. 1:9). The Lord received Noah's offering as an act of devotion to Him (Num. 15:3). I will never again curse the ground: The awful devastation of the earth and its fullness that the Flood caused will never be repeated. It is also possible that this is a reference back to 3:17. This is the good news. The bad news is that God knew that the conditions of humankind had not changed. the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth: This is the same charge against man with which the Flood story began (6:5). Nonetheless, the promise of God is that overwhelming judgment will not be repeated—not until the final judgment (2 Pet. 2:5).

8:22 while the earth remains: The words of this verse are in a poem of powerful effect (12:1–3). These words might easily have become a song of faith, the response of the people of God to the promise He made (v. 21). Later in Israel's history, the prophets recalled God's great promise to Noah (Is. 54:9, 10).

9:1 The blessing of God on the family of Noah provided a new beginning for humankind. The word blessed expresses the idea of God's smile, the warmth of His pleasure (1:22, 28; 2:3; 12:2, 3). In a way, the promises that God had given to the first people were now restated for Noah, a "new Adam" (1:26–28). Among other things, the new populating of the earth by Noah's family means that human society began again with a shared understanding of earliest human history, including the creation and Flood stories. Be fruitful and multiply was God's command in the beginning (1:28).

9:2 the fear of you and the dread of you: The two phrases express the same idea. The language of God's blessing here is far stronger than the language of the first (1:28, 29); now the animals and birds will have an innate fear of humans, and they are placed under human control.

9:3–5 you: Three new realities mark the post-Flood world: (1) meat may be eaten along with plants; (2) blood is not to be eaten with meat; and (3) the taking of a person's life is now punishable by death.

9:3 From this verse it may be argued that up to this point men and women ate only vegetation (2:16).

9:4 blood: This restriction gets more attention in Leviticus (Lev. 17:11, 12). Blood represents the animal's life. It may be used in sacrifice, for all life belongs to the Lord.

9:5 lifeblood: More sacred than the life of an animal is the life of a person. Animals may be slain for food, but no wanton slaying of humans is allowed.

9:6, 7 These verses are poetry for impact and memorability. The image of God (1:26, 27; 5:1) is still in man (or is man); sin did not destroy it. God values humans more highly than animal life because only humankind possesses God's image.

9:8–10 This is the second occurrence of this enormously important concept, the covenant, in Genesis (6:18). God promised that He would establish His covenant with Noah and here He accomplished this great work (Gen. 15:18; contrast 3:15). This covenant extends to animals of every sort (v. 10).

9:11 There will never again be another Flood like that described in chs. 6–8.

9:12–15 The rainbow is a memorial to God's promise never to flood the earth again and a constant reminder of His oath. Later, Abram (Abraham) would ask the Lord for a sign of the covenant promise He had made to him.

9:16, 17 I will look on it is a precious note. For not only do people stop to look at a rainbow, but God will look on it also.

The Noahic Covenant

The rainbow that appears after a summer thunderstorm symbolizes God's mercy, His compassion on all. Moreover, it is a sign of God's covenant, His binding agreement with all humanity to never destroy the earth with a flood.

God initiated this covenant under the worst circumstances: "The earth was filled with violence" (Gen. 6:11, 13). Even though humanity's decline into evil greatly troubled God, He favored one man, Noah, and determined to save him and his family from the coming judgment and establish His covenant with them.

Although Noah was surrounded by violence and all kinds of evil, he walked with God (6:9) by seeking to obey Him. Noah's simple obedience is recorded five times in this story (6:22; 7:5, 9, 16; 8:17, 18). God called this obedient man to build an ark. With this large boat, God saved Noah from the cleansing waters of the Flood. With the past evils and sins washed away from the earth, Noah and his family could start anew (read 1 Pet. 3:21 for Peter's analogy comparing baptism with the Flood).

God not only gave them a fresh start but also an unconditional promise, or covenant, not to destroy the earth with a flood no matter how evil Noah's descendants became. Indeed, He promised that until the end of the earth there would be the seasons of planting and harvest and day and night. God unilaterally promised to uphold the rhythms of the earth in order to sustain human life, even though humans had rebelled against Him, their Creator.

Today all of us—Noah's children—should remember God's mercy to us when we see the beauty of the rainbow.

9:18, 19 The sons of Noah have been mentioned earlier (5:32; 6:10; 7:13); their mention here assures us of their survival through the Flood and sets the stage for what happens next. the father of Canaan: This identification was particularly important to the first readers of Genesis, the people of Israel, who were about to enter the land of Canaan (Deut. 1:1). But this notice also prepares the reader for the shameful story that is about to be recalled (vv. 20–23).

9:20, 21 The vineyard was a standard feature in the agricultural setting of ancient Israel. Here it is noted because of Noah's drunkenness (v. 21).

9:22 It is not clear whether seeing his father's nakedness was Ham's chief offense. The following verses (especially v. 23) imply that Ham made fun of his father, and that this news reached Noah after he awoke.

9:23, 24 Shem and Japheth took great pains to honor their father, not wanting even to glance at his nakedness.

9:25 The three sons had been blessed with their father (v. 1). Thus Noah cursed Ham indirectly by cursing his son Canaan (10:6). Some once believed that this verse justified the slavery of African peoples (who, it was alleged, were descended from Canaan), but those people misinterpreted the verse. Canaan was under the curse of his father. As the Hebrews stood on the banks of the Jordan River about to enter the land of Canaan (Deut. 1:1), they would have been encouraged by this verse because it promised victory over the Canaanites.

Ancient Vineyards

To be fruitful, vineyards require considerable care. When the grapes are crushed for their juice, organisms found on the outside of the peel reach the juice. The organisms multiply and cause the juice to ferment and become wine (Gen. 9:20, 21). If it ferments too long, it becomes vinegar. Ancient farmers had to balance these different factors.

9:26, 27 Shem is given precedence over his brothers, while Japeth is also blessed. Eber and Abram were descended from Shem (11:10–30) so Shem's blessing is ultimately a blessing on Israel. Again, the poetic cast of these words (vv. 25–27) adds power and memorability to them (Gen. 12:1–3). Just as Noah blessed (and cursed) his sons before his death, so Jacob was later to bless his sons before his death (ch. 49).

9:28, 29 Noah's death was the end of an era. Only he and his family spanned two worlds, that of the earth before and after the Flood. His long life (950 years) gave him opportunity to transmit to his many descendants the dramatic story that he had lived out with his family. Peoples in places and cultures the world over have memories and stories of a great Flood in antiquity. The details differ, but the stories remain.

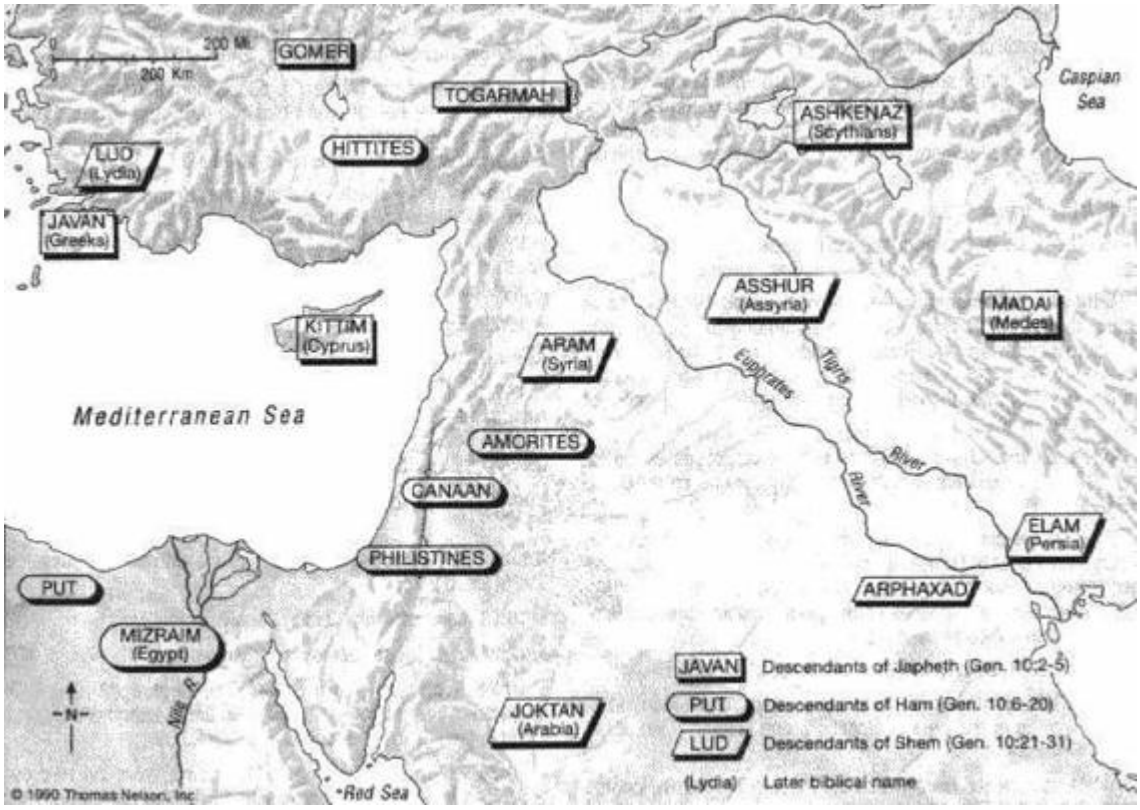
10:1—11:32 From these chapters, we learn that the peoples of the earth are all descended from the family of Noah, but there remain a few mysteries. For one thing, the mention of names moves from individuals to peoples to cities. Second, the point of view is from a later date, when the people of Israel had as their geographical center the land of Canaan. While the words imply universal humanity, they omit a global perspective. Finally, the chapters give no clear sense of time: they span many thousands of years.

10:1 Genealogy (or "family histories"; Heb. toledot) is found in ten significant passages in Genesis (2:4, note). The names of the sons of Noah were first given in 5:32 (6:10; 7:13 9:18).

10:2–4 The listing of the sons of Japheth is more brief than the others. Among the persons and peoples mentioned is Javan (vv. 2, 4), an ancient name for the Greek people. It may be that many of Japheth's descendants migrated to Europe.

10:5 The migrations of the peoples to different lands would have come after the events of 11:1–9 (the Tower of Babel).

10:6 Ham's family included more than just his son Canaan (9:25). Cush, Mizraim, Put, and Canaan are Ham's four sons. Cush is the ancient name for Ethiopia; Mizraim is a name for Egypt. The sons of Cush are given in vv. 7–12, the sons of Mizraim in vv. 13, 14, and the sons of Canaan in verses 15–19. This section does not list the sons of Put.



The Nations of Genesis 10

10:7–11 The sons of Cush include the infamous Nimrod (vv. 9–12). The description of him as a mighty hunter before the Lord suggests great arrogance. Like Lamech the descendant of Cain (4:19–24), his infamy was proverbial. His territory was in the lands of the east, the fabled ancient cities of Mesopotamia; these include Babel, Erech, Accad, and Calneh (v. 10). The term Accad (or Akkad) supplies the name of the language of ancient Babylon and Assyria, Akkadian. The prophet Micah would later use the name Nimrod to describe the region of Assyria, which would come under God's judgment (Mic. 5:5, 6).

10:12–15 The names associated with Canaan (9:22) are peoples who settled in the region of greater Canaan. Some of these names were still associated with the land at the time of Abraham. The sites of Sodom and its allied cities were later destroyed in the firestorm of Gen. 19.

10:16–20 This summary verse speaks of families … languages … lands … nations as in v. 5. This reference shows that the story of the Tower of Babel (11:1–9) overlaps the listing of the nations in ch. 10.

10:21–24 Eber is the name that gives rise to the term Hebrew, which is first used of Abraham in 14:13. Such a name is patronymic (a father name). Eber is mentioned at the head of the list because of his importance to the Hebrew people. He is directly the son of Salah (v. 24). His placement at the head of the list is from the vantage of the Hebrew people. Abraham is the father of the Hebrew nation specifically (12:1–3); but Abraham descends from Eber, and Eber from Shem. The other names associated with Shem include Elam, Asshur, and Aram, major people groups in the OT. These and other peoples, including Israel, have become known as Semitic, a word derived from the name Shem.

IN PLACE

The First Major City

Erech is the biblical form of Uruk, a Sumerian city on the Euphrates river in ancient Mesopotamia. Although Erech is cited only in Gen. 10:10 and Ezra 4:9, its historical importance far exceeds its scant biblical mention. It played a major role in the development of urbanization and was one of the world's great religious centers.

The first evidence of public architecture, cylinder seals, and the origins of writing come from Erech, and building projects included the earliest known ziggurat. Late in the fourth century B.C., the population of Uruk began to expand its culture and controlled the major trade routes and the surrounding regions economically.

10:25–31 Peleg: The "division of the earth" in his days may refer to a major movement in plate tectonics, although we expect such movement to be of an exceedingly gradual nature. Nonetheless, the division of the earth (however it occurred) would be a major factor affecting the migration patterns of ancient peoples.

10:32 the families of the sons of Noah: Although not every ancient people group is listed in this "Table of the Nations," its clear teaching is that all the varied peoples of the earth, no matter of what land or language, are descended from Noah. The divisions among them are merely the results of the later incidents.

11:1–9 With the famous story of the confusion of languages at the Tower of Babel, the prologue to the Bible draws to a close. It is necessary for the reader who comes to Gen. 12 to know that Yahweh, who speaks to Abram (Abraham) in Gen. 12, is the Creator of the earth, that mankind is in rebellion against Him, that He has brought judgments of varied kinds on mankind, including the Flood, and that the family of mankind is now greatly diverse and complex. Then one is prepared to learn of God's gracious actions in the life of one man and his wife to bring His blessing on all peoples everywhere. The confusion of languages at Babel (11:1–9) is also the story of the beginnings of racial, ethnic, cultural, and familial diversity. In the promised One, of whom Gen. 12:3 (22:15–18) speaks, the peoples of the earth will become the people of God, and all the languages of the peoples will speak together in praise of the Lamb (Rev. 5:8–14).

11:1 one language: This account speaks of a time soon after the Flood, a time before the family had begun to disperse (contrast 10:5, 20, 31, 32).

11:2 The land of Shinar is the region of ancient Babylon in Mesopotamia (Gen. 10:10), part of modern Iraq. This is one region traditionally suggested as the location of the Garden of Eden. The peoples of the earth came there from the east.

11:3 The use of bricks for building a large structure was common in this early period. Use of huge quarried stones weighing many tons came later. The immense building blocks of later times were dressed so well that they could be fitted together without mortar.

11:4 to the heavens: This hyperbole may have reflected the memory of these people regarding the mountains to the east, where they once lived and worshiped their gods "in the heights." They had migrated to the plain. They wanted to become famous as the Nephilim (giants) were before the Flood. Motivated by pride and arrogance, they wanted to make a name for themselves. lest we be scattered: They feared that they might be dispersed —by implication, by the Lord—and not achieve the greatness they sought.

11:5 the LORD came down to see: A figurative way of speaking that indicates the omniscience (the all-embracing knowledge) of the Lord (Gen. 18:21).

11:6 nothing that they propose: The potential is that humankind will become as willfully sinful as they were before the Flood. God will not allow this to happen.

11:7 Us in this passage is similar to the language of 1:26–28. The plural pronoun emphasizes the majesty of the speaker. Variation in language, culture, values, and clans all started at this point. Were it not for human arrogance, this division would not have been necessary. One day peoples of all languages and cultures will unite to celebrate the grace of God's risen Son, lifting their voices together in praise of the Lamb (Rev. 5:8–14).

11:8 the LORD scattered them: There are three great judgments on sinful humanity in the first section of Genesis (chs. 1–11). The first is the expulsion from Eden (ch. 3); the second is the Flood (chs. 6–9), and the third is the scattering of the people from Babel (Luke 1:51).

Brickmaking

Bricks (Gen. 11:3) made of clay or a claylike mixture of mud and straw were one of the primary materials used for construction in the ancient world There were probably two methods for making bricks. The easiest was to pack clay into a mold and let the block dry in the sun. The Hebrews probably used this method in Egypt (Ex. 5:7) and later in the Promised Land (2 Sam. 12:31; Jer. 43:9).

The Babylonians, whose ancestors probably constructed the tower of Babel (Gen. 11:4), used a more advanced technology of firing their bricks in kilns to make them harder and more durable. They also made them larger, up to a foot square, and flatter in order to support more weight than an ordinary brick.

11:9 There is a pun in the name Babel that no Hebrew reader would miss. The verb meaning "to confuse" (Heb. balal) sounds similar to the name of the city (Heb. babel). The principal city of ancient paganism (Babylon) is merely a site of confusion because there the LORD confused the language. Babel (and Babylon) serves as a name and symbol in the Bible for activities directed against God by the nations of the earth (Rev. 17).

11:10 Genealogy (or family histories) is found in ten significant passages in the Book of Genesis (2:4, note). The Jewish nation came from Shem. Hence, the accounts that follow make much of him and his family.

11:10–25 The pattern in this genealogy is similar to that in ch. 5; but here only the first three elements are given: (1) name "A" lived "x" years; (2) name "A" begot name "B"; (3) name "A" then lived "y" years. As does ch. 5, the list leaves out some names, focusing on major figures in the line from Noah to Abraham. "B" may be a remote descendant rather than the immediate child of "A" (5:20). Thus the genealogy shows that Abraham was a descendant of Noah through Shem, just as Noah was a descendant of Adam through Seth. Note also that while the people listed in ch. 11 lived very long lives, they did not live nearly as long as those mentioned in ch. 5. In fact, the people lived progressively shorter lives, from the 600 years of Shem (vv. 10, 11) to the 148 years of Nahor (vv. 24, 25). Note also the absence of a total for the time from Shem to Abram (vv. 26–30); it must have been at least several thousand years, but we do not know exactly how long. Excavations from Ebla in north Syria include texts from around 2500 B.C., and the ancient texts from Sumer, the first literate culture in the ancient Near East, date from around 3500 B.C. These ancient texts speak of a great flood many generations before their own time. The approximate date for the birth of Abraham is 2150 B.C.

11:26 Terah: At long last we come to the family of Terah and the births of Abram, Nahor, and Haran. Years later, Abram would be renamed Abraham (17:5), and would become the father of Isaac (21:1–5). He was the progenitor of the Hebrew people from which the Promised Deliverer, Jesus, comes.

11:27 The term genealogy (or family histories) is found in ten significant passages in Genesis (2:4, note). Abram, Nahor, and Haran: These three sons of Terah would be expected to carry on his name (11:31). Haran begot Lot: Lot is a nephew of Abram; he figures prominently in the upcoming account (12:4, 5; 13:1–13).

11:28 The untimely death of Haran leaves his son Lot to carry on his name and to establish his destiny. For generations, scholars have believed Ur of the Chaldeans to be the famous Ur located near the ancient delta in the Persian Gulf where the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers flow together. More recently, some scholars have noted the tablets at Ebla that speak of an Ur in the region of north Syria and suggest that this is the city of Haran’s death.

From Babel to Pentecost: Scattering and Gathering

The confusion of languages at Babel was an explosive moment in history. It introduced geographic and linguistic barriers that survive to this day. However, in breaking up the unified community at Babel, God was working out His purposes. He knew that the people were united around a sinful desire to thwart His will, not to honor it (Gen. 11:6). Therefore, He miraculously disrupted their communication as an act of grace. He was preventing humanity from committing itself en masse to rebellion and eventual self-destruction.

Many centuries later, the same God who scattered the peoples at Babel began to gather them together again. At Pentecost, His Spirit began to create a new community unified around Jesus Christ (Acts 2:1–13). The Lord even breached linguistic barriers on that day—a miracle to match the miracle of creating different languages at Babel.

Since the beginning of history, God has been at work to save people from sin. He still uses the principles of scattering and gathering to do that. Only now, after Pentecost, the people that He "scatters" are equipped with the message of His grace and the power of His Spirit. He is helping them overcome every barrier that stands in the way of people knowing Him.

11:29 Sarai means "Princess," implying a person of noble birth. Sarah (as she is later called; 17:15) has the same meaning. The name Milcah is related to the verb that would be translated "to reign" and means "Queen." daughter of Haran: Evidently, Nahor married his niece. We learn later that Sarai was Abram's half sister. Milcah, who later gave birth to Bethuel, became the mother of Rebekah, the bride of Isaac (24:14). Although Rebekah's father and brother speak of faith in Yahweh, Josh. 24:2 reveals that the family had been idol worshipers in earlier times.

11:30 The sad fact that Sarai was barren marred her life and yet led to an opportunity for God to accomplish a miracle on her behalf (Gen. 21:1–5).

11:31, 32 Abram's epic move to Canaan begins in ch. 12 with Abram receiving a command from the Lord to leave his land to go to a new land. Did the journey begin with Terah or with Abram? It appears that Terah, for his own reasons, decided to move from Ur to Canaan. He began the journey with several members of his family. However, they went to Haran, where Terah died. This was the first step of the journey of Abram and Sarai to the land of promise. We should not charge Abram (Abraham) with sin, as is sometimes done, for moving to Haran, "when God wanted him to go to Canaan." Abram (Abraham) is presented as the great hero of the faith in 12:1–9, not as a person of only partial obedience to the Lord. The Lord was at work in the family's move from Ur to Haran. He becomes even more active and directive in the move from Haran to Canaan (12:1–4). And Abram (Abraham) becomes the father of the faithful (Rom. 4:16).

12:1—15:21 This section of the Bible begins with God's call of Abram and Sarai (later named Abraham and Sarah) to become the parents of a new people through whom God would reach all the families of the earth.

12:1 The name Yahweh, translated as LORD, is not explained until Ex. 3:14, 15. But the readers of Genesis needed to know that the one who spoke to Abram is the same Yahweh who later would form the nation of Israel and who had created all things (Gen. 2:4). To a world that believed in many gods, the name of the true and living God was significant. The account begins with the revelation of the word of the Lord, the irrupting grace of Yahweh, with He who sovereignly breaks into the lives of needy people from without. Gen. 1:3 records God speaking the words, "let there be light." Genesis 12:1 shows Yahweh speaking to Abram in words of great grace (7:1; 8:15, the words of Yahweh to Noah). John 1:1 speaks of the incarnation of the Word. In all the Bible the message is the same; it is Yahweh, the Lord, who reaches out to people, who reveals Himself, who extends His great grace. had said: God had spoken the promise to Abram in Ur (11:31). Now that Abram's father had died and been buried in Haran, Abram recalled Yahweh's words and acted upon them. Abram means "Exalted Father." Later it will be changed to Abraham, meaning "Father of Many." Get out: Verses 1–3 are poetry, aiding memorability and a sense of solemnity and gravity (14:19, 20; 16:11, 12; 25:23). country … family … father's house: Here are three levels of ever-increasing demands on the life of Abram and Sarai. The country was the region of his dwelling, the family was his clan, and his father's house was where he had responsibility and leadership. Upon the death of Terah, Abram would have become the leader of the family group. God's commands to Abram were intensely demanding because they caused him to leave his place, his clan, and his family in a world where such actions were simply not done. Only the poverty-stricken or the defeated would wander; only the landless and the fugitive would move about and leave their ancestral homes. But the Lord's words to Abram commanded that he was to leave everything and go to a place that God would not even define until Abram got there: a land that I will show you.

“Land”

(Heb. erets) (Gen. 1:1, 10; 4:16; 12:1; 13:10; Deut. 34:2; Ps. 98:3) Strong’s #776: The common OT word land possesses several nuances of meaning, including: earth in contrast to the heavens (1:1); land in contrast to the sea (1:10); ground as a plot of real estate or a geographical location (4:16); the land of a sovereign nation (13:10, 12); or even the people who live upon the earth (Pss. 98:3; 100:1). In essence, all land belongs to God as its Creator (Ps. 24:1). Thus when God promised the Israelites the “land” of Canaan, it was His to give. Because the land of Canaan was an important element in God’s covenant with the Israelites (12:1), it became one of their identifying characteristics—the “people of the land” (Gen. 13:15; 15:7).

12:2, 3 There are seven elements in God’s promise to Abram in these two verses. The number seven suggests fullness and completeness, as in Gen. 2:2, 3. This celebrated passage is a prologue to the set of passages that together form the Abrahamic covenant (15:1–21, note), the irrevocable promise of God. (1) God commanded Abram to leave his home and family, promising to create a great nation through him—the people of God (18:18). This people would be the Hebrew nation. God set them apart to be His agents to reach other nations. This first element and the seventh element are the most significant in the set. (2) God promised to bless Abram. The blessing of God is His smile, the warmth of His pleasure (1:22, 28; 2:3; 9:1). The Lord’s promise of His personal blessing to Abram and Sarai included the benefits of a long and healthy life (15:15; especially 24:1), plus wealth and importance (13:2). (3) That one’s name would live on long after one’s lifetime was a supreme honor (6:4). Those who brought shame on themselves would be forgotten (11:4). The name Abraham, by which we remember Abram (17:5), is one of the most honored of all names in history. (4) be a blessing: The phrase is a command. That is, Abram was under divine orders to be a blessing to others. This he did whenever he told about the living God before other nations and peoples (v. 8). (5) those who bless: Elements five and six are closely related; together they form a poetic couplet. (6) him who curses: Whereas God would bless the peoples (plural) who blessed Abram or his descendants, His curse came upon the individual (singular) who cursed Abram or his descendants. (7) The final and most significant of the Lord's promises to Abram and his descendants was that all the families of the earth would be blessed through them, the Jewish people who are descended from Abram.

12:4 With the magnificent promise of the Lord as his sole motivation, Abram departed. He obeyed (Gen. 17:23; 22:3). In his obedience, Abram behaved as Noah had, demonstrating genuine righteousness (6:22; 7:5). Lot went with him: Some have imagined that Abram disobeyed God by taking Lot with him. However, the verse suggests that Lot made the decision. seventy-five years old: The Bible rarely indicates a person's age when events occur, but it does so several times for Abram. As we will see, this testifies to God's mighty works in Abram's life at his advanced age.

12:5 This is the first mention in the Bible of Canaan, the geographical stage for God's acts of salvation. Canaan was populated with peoples involved in gross idolatry (15:16). God promised this land to Abram and Sarai.

12:6 passed through: This verb resembles the name Hebrew (Gen. 14:13). Here the Hebrew Abram was "passing through" the land, crossing over to his destination. Shechem: This ancient site was in the center of the land; later under Joshua's leadership the people would commemorate the Lord's covenant there (Josh. 24:1). tree of Moreh: A terebinth or ancient oak tree would serve as a lasting marker for future generations to observe (13:18; 18:1; 23:17). The term Moreh means "The Teacher." It is related to the term Torah, which means "Instruction." Here Abraham began symbolically taking possession of the land that would one day be the territory of the Great Teacher and His instruction. The land was already occupied by the Canaanites (13:7), but by God's promise it would belong to Abraham's descendants.

12:7 the LORD appeared: This was the first time God appeared (theophany, or divine appearance) to Abram in the land of Canaan, but certainly not the last (13:14–17). To your descendants: The land of Canaan was a gift to the descendants of Abram. God owned the land (Ps. 24:1); it was His to do with as He pleased. The people of Canaan had lost their right to occupy the land due to their awful depravity (15:16). Thus God declared that this land would become the land of Israel (15:18–21; 17:6–8). This verse forms a part of the Abrahamic covenant (15:1–21, note), and Abraham quoted it many years later to his servant (24:7).

The Patriarchs

Genesis 12—50 tells the accounts of Israel's "patriarchs." The events of the first three patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (chs. 12—38) take place primarily in Canaan, although Abraham originated in Mesopotamia (Ur and Haran). The life of the patriarch Joseph (chs. 33—50) is set primarily in Egypt.

"Patriarch" refers to the founder or ruler of a tribe, family, or clan. The Israelites traced their ancestry to one man, "the patriarch Abraham" (Heb. 7:4; compare Is. 51:2), and they laid claim to Canaan based on God's covenant with the first three patriarchs to "possess the land" (Deut. 1:8). The phrase "the patriarchs" eventually referred to Jacob's twelve sons (Acts 7:8, 9). Exact dates for the period in which they lived cannot be established.

12:8 Later, in the time of Jacob, the site of Bethel would play an important role (Gen. 28:10–22). Ai means "Ruin." The name suggests that the site was a ruin of an ancient city. Abram responded to God's appearance by building an altar and worshiping the Lord. called on the name of the LORD: Not a private prayer, but a public proclamation. Abram was evangelizing—telling others about the Lord. God had commanded him to be a blessing to the nations (12:2) and he was doing it. The meaning "to proclaim" or "to preach" for this Hebrew verb is found also in 4:26; 21:33; 26:25.

12:9 South: This Hebrew word is often transliterated as the Negev (13:1; 24:62). The population of Canaan, along with their flocks and herds, kept Abram from finding a location for his own herds and flocks. He kept wandering further south, into the Negev, until he had room for them.

12:10 Sometime after Abram's arrival in Canaan, famine forced him to leave. Famine can arise either from forces of nature or from war and its disruption of farming (26:1; Ruth 1:1). to Egypt: The Scripture does not say whether Abram wanted to go.

12:11 beautiful countenance: Only rarely does the Bible refer to a person's appearance (other examples are Joseph at 39:6 and David at 1 Sam. 16:12). The comment on Sarai's beauty compares to ones on Rebekah (Gen. 24:16) and Rachel (29:17). Sarai's physical beauty was remarkable given her advanced age—she was ten years younger than Abram, or about sixty-five (12:4; 17:17).

12:12 The point is that Abram and his entourage would not be able to slip into Egypt secretly. They were many, with plenty of possessions, herds, and flocks. The Egyptians would see them, and Abram knew that Sarai's beauty would be noticed too.

12:13, 14 my sister: Sarai was Abram's half sister, the daughter of his father but not of his mother (20:12).

12:15 commended her: A form of praise (much like that in Ps. 113:1). to Pharaoh's house: Abram's ploy backfired!

12:16 treated Abram well: Abram was enriched by Pharaoh's actions, but at the possible loss of his wife. Some critical scholars used to think that camels were not domesticated nearly so early as this; they viewed the term camels as an error. It is now known that camels had been domesticated, although rarely. They represented great wealth; to have a camel in this period was like having an expensive limousine.

12:17 the LORD plagued Pharaoh: The first example of the cursing and blessing element of God's promise (12:2, 3).

12:18–20 In his indignation, Pharaoh dismissed the couple. The Lord protected Abram and Sarai for their role in salvation history.

13:1, 2 Abram and Sarai returned from Egypt to the South or to the Negev (12:9; 24:62), a region where they could live with their considerable wealth in livestock, silver, and gold. From there they journeyed back to Bethel, the site where God had appeared to him. Again Abram called on the name of the LORD (12:8).

13:3–7 Lot shared in his uncle Abram's prosperity to some degree. The crowding of range lands led to disputes and strife between their herdsmen. The Canaanites and the Perizzites: As in 12:6, the point of this phrase is that the land was already populated; Abram and Lot did not come into a region that was empty. They had to compete for available land for their rapidly growing herds and flocks.

13:8, 9 we are brethren: Abram acted with kindness, not wanting to fight his nephew's family and herdsmen. Abram gave Lot his choice. In doing this, Abram not only showed a lack of self-interest, but also confidence in God's continuing provision for him.

13:10–12 Lot was greedier than Abram; he wanted the well-watered region in the plain of Jordan, near the Dead Sea. Sodom and Gomorrah: In light of the fate of these infamous cities (chs. 18; 19); the first readers would be amazed to learn of the abundant water the region had once enjoyed. like the garden of the LORD: This exuberant comparison recalls the conditions of Eden (2:10). In an arid region, abundance of water would evoke images of Paradise. The "little" town of Zoar later figured in Lot's life (19:22).

13:13 Lot's choice of the more favorable land led him into territory that was populated by the worst of the Canaanites, the infamous evil people of Sodom (chs. 18; 19). The rest of the peoples of Canaan were given 400 years before their idolatry and wickedness demanded judgment (15:16).

13:14–17 This section forms part of the set of texts that set the stage for the Abrahamic covenant (15:1–21, note). This section builds on 12:1–3, 7, the passage in which God first gave His great promise to Abram.

13:14 The LORD reaffirmed the promise to Abram after his lack of faith in Egypt (12:10–20) and his separation from Lot.

The Journeys of Abraham

13:15–17 all the land: None of the land was outside the promise. Your descendants translates the Hebrew word for seed (zera). At times this term refers to many descendants and at other times to a unique individual, the Coming One (Gen. 22:18; Gal. 3:16). as the dust of the earth: A hyperbole or overstatement (15:5; 22:17). Abram's walk in the land is a symbolic act of taking possession. Abraham himself would not take possession of the land (Heb. 11:13–16); his descendants would (12:7; 15:17–21).

13:18 Hebron became one of the principal centers for Abram's stay in the land (23:2). Abram was still living in a tent, not in the cities. Abram continued to build altars to worship the living God (12:7, 8; 13:4).

14:1, 2 Most scholars no longer think it is likely that Amraphel king of Shinar was the famous Hammurabi of Babylon.

14:3 The Valley of Siddim is most likely submerged under the waters of the Dead Sea.

14:4 they served: That is, the kings from Mesopotamia forced the kings of the cities in the Valley of Siddim to pay tribute.

14:5–9 The punitive raid of the foreign alliance took at least a year to organize. The raid must have been formidable, given the list of cities they attacked as they made their way to the encounter with the rebellious kings.

14:10 asphalt pits: The Hebrew term for pits is written twice ("pits pits"), meaning that bitumen pits were everywhere.

14:11, 12 all the goods … Lot: Lot was not only captured, but he was also now living in the city of Sodom, an "exceedingly wicked and sinful" city (13:11–13). This sets the stage for the events of chs. 18; 19.

14:13 Here is this first use of the word Hebrew in the Bible. It comes from the name Eber, first mentioned in the table of the nations in ch. 10. The word (Heb. ibri) is related to a verb meaning "cross over" or "pass through" (Heb. abar), perhaps reminding us that Abram "passed through" or "crossed over" from another place in order to obey the Lord's command. Abram had moved to Hebron at the terebinth trees of Mamre (13:18, 24).

14:14, 15 The fact that Abram could field 318 fighting men from among his own servants is an indication of the great wealth and honor that the Lord had given him (12:2, 3).

14:16 Abram's raid was a complete success. He regained all the goods stolen by the raiding party from Mesopotamia and rescued his nephew Lot.

14:17 When Abram returned from his successful attack on the raiding party from Mesopotamia, he was met by two kings, one from Sodom and one from Salem. Abram turns at first to the king of Salem.

14:18 Melchizedek means "My King Is Righteous." Melchizedek was a contemporary of Abram who worshiped the living God. king of Salem: Salem is an older, shorter name for Jerusalem. The word is based on the root from which we get the word shalom, "peace." bread and wine: While these were staples of everyday life in ancient times, their use here had a different purpose—to celebrate God's deliverance of Abram and his troops. the priest of God Most High: The term for God used here expresses God's power over the nations. The great surprise about Melchizedek is that he appears from nowhere, without mention of parents or background, without any introduction of ties to the Lord. This mysterious quality of Melchizedek allows the writer of Hebrews to compare him with another priest, the Lord Jesus Christ (Heb. 5–9; Ps. 110:4).

14:19 And he blessed him: Melchizedek is the first to bless Abram; thus he comes under the special provision of God's promise of blessing (12:3). Blessed be Abram: The words of the blessing are in two lines of poetry, making them more memorable as well as adding a sense of power and effectiveness. The phrase God Most High is used in both lines of the blessing for special emphasis. Possessor may also mean "Creator" (Prov. 8:22).

14:20 blessed be God Most High: When we bless God, we acknowledge Him as the source of all our blessings (Ps. 103:1, 2). Melchizedek declared the true nature of Abram's victory—God delivered him. Here is the first mention of the tithe in the Bible (Deut. 14:22). Abram's gift indicates that he considered Melchizedek a true priest of the living God; in giving this gift Abram was giving to the Lord.

14:21 Abram seems to have ignored the king of Sodom (v. 17) until he had worshiped with the king of Salem. Now he hears the demands of this king, who asked for his people but not for his goods.

14:22 Abram raised his hand as a symbol of a strong oath. In other passages it is a sign of defiance. Abram identified Yahweh, translated here as the LORD, with the God Most High. This is a clear statement that he and Melchizedek both worshiped the true, living God.

14:23 I will take nothing … strap: In these words, Abram strongly rebuked Sodom and its king (13:12, 13). Abram stood in strong contrast to his nephew Lot who had moved into the wicked city (14:12).

14:24 Aner, Eshcol, and Mamre: Abram's allies (v. 13) were not bound by his own resolution. The term Mamre is also a place name associated with Hebron (18:1; 23:17).

15:1–21 This section is one of the texts that present the Abrahamic covenant (17:1–22; 18:1–15; 22:15–18; 26:23, 24; 35:9–15; compare 12:1–3, 7; 13:14–17).

15:1 After these things is a transition phrase; what follows is a new incident in Abram's life (22:1). the word of the LORD … a vision: The writer of the Book of Hebrews reminds us that God spoke "at various times and in various ways" (1:1). The use of a vision is only one of the means by which God interacts with His servants. This was the third appearance of the Lord to Abram since his arrival in the land of Canaan (the first at 12:7; the second at 13:14–17; ch. 17). your exceedingly great reward: The greatest thing in all of life is relationship to God.

15:2 Lord GOD translates the Hebrew word for Lord (Adonai) and the name Yahweh. Abram and Sarai were childless (11:29, 30). Later we learn that Abram had six sons by a concubine named Keturah (25:1–6). That relationship with Keturah must have occurred after the events of this chapter. heir of my house: According to long-standing custom, a man who was childless would adopt someone, perhaps a slave, to be his principal heir. If the man later had a child, then the natural child would replace the adopted son as the principal heir. Similar laws were part of the legal codes of the Near East, including the famed Code of Hammurabi of Babylon. We read of Eliezer of Damascus only here, but he had the honor of being Abram's heir because Abram and Sarai had no child of their own. Some have wondered if Eliezer is also the unnamed servant of Abraham who went on the quest for a wife for Isaac (Gen. 22:5; 24:2).

15:3 Offspring represents a word that is also translated seed and descendants (3:15; 15:5, 13, 18).

15:4 from your own body: Eliezer was not a physical son of Abram; God promised that Abram himself would father a child, even in his advanced age.

15:5 Only God can count the stars (Ps. 147:4; Is. 40:26). The saying means that the descendants of Abram would be innumerable (Gen. 22:17; compare 13:16). Your descendants translates the Hebrew word for seed. This word is used to refer to the coming Messiah (Num. 24:7; Is. 6:13).

15:6 When God made a promise, Abram believed in the LORD. "Believed" is from the Hebrew root aman, meaning "to be established," "to be confirmed." When God commanded Abram, he obeyed (12:4; 22:3). Nothing so marks the lives of Abram and Sarai as their belief in God (Heb.

11:8–19). It is this belief, faith in the only living God, that saves the sinner from sin (John 12:11). He accounted it to him for righteousness: Some have thought that in OT times people were saved by their good deeds rather than by faith, but this idea is mistaken. Abram was not saved because of righteous living or obedience, but by believing in God and so being declared righteous by Him. The only valid work is the work of faith (John 6:28, 29).

15:7 I am the LORD, who brought you out: This is the self-authenticating declaration of the Lord. His grace enables a person to believe. Ur: See 11:28, 31.

15:8 how shall I know: The text suggests that Abram was asking the Lord for a commemorative sign of His promise, not that he was troubled by unbelief.

15:9, 10 Abram had only to prepare the sacrifice and bring it to God; the Lord would enact the sign (v. 17). This emphasizes the unilateral, unconditional nature of the covenant.

"Believe"

(Heb. aman) (Gen. 15:6; Ex. 4:31; 2 Chr. 20:20; Ps. 116:10) Strong's #539: The Hebrew word translated believe is from a root meaning "establish" or "confirm." The English word amen, which is used to express approval, comes from the same root (Neh. 5:13; Ps. 41:13). Belief is one of the most important ideas in all the Bible, because a person must believe God in order to be saved from sin. For this very reason, the NT makes much of the fact that Abraham believed God (Heb. 11:8–12). Whenever the Scriptures, OT or NT, state that a person "believed in the Lord," it signals that the person has made a decision to treat God's word as certain and has made a commitment to do what God wants (15:6; John 1:12).

15:11 Abram had come not to feed the vultures, but to see a great sign from the Lord. For the rest of the day he kept the vultures away from the animals while waiting for God's sign.

15:12 Abram fell into the same sort of deep sleep that God placed on Adam (2:21). Abram was still aware of events around him. His trancelike state allowed him to remember these events for the rest of his life. horror … darkness: These two words give great emphasis to the meaning: "an overwhelmingly dark horror." This kind of reaction to the indescribable holiness of the Lord (Ps. 113:4–6; Is. 6:3; 40:25) is natural; Abram was about to experience the presence of the Almighty. This was a moment of profound dread and holy awe.

15:13 Know certainly is the same construction as "you shall surely die" at Gen. 2:17. Your descendants translates the Hebrew word for seed (vv. 3, 5, 18). Strangers are those who dwell temporarily in a foreign place. Abram was a stranger in the land of Canaan; his descendants would become strangers in another land (Egypt). four hundred years: No doubt this would impress Abram, but consider how it would impress the first readers of the book. They were the generation who came to fulfill God's promise! (Ex. 12:40–42.) 15:14 I will judge: God fulfilled this prophecy in the ten plagues (Ex. 7–11). The Israelites of the Exodus acquired great possessions when they plundered the Egyptians (Ex. 12:31–36).

15:15 to your fathers: A way of speaking about death; the phrase may include the promise of life after death as well (Gen. 25:8; 35:29; 49:33; 1 Sam. 12:23).

15:16 in the fourth generation: This expression reflects the longer life spans of people in Abram's day (compare 400 years in v. 13). iniquity of the Amorites: In a sense, the Lord was granting a stay of execution for the peoples of Canaan (12:5). He would allow their sin to reach a critical level —the word "iniquity" (Heb. awon) also speaks of "guilt." The command of God to take the land from the Canaanite peoples (Deut. 20) would come only when their iniquity was complete.

15:17 The deep sleep came on Abram when the sun was setting (v. 12). Now in heavy darkness, he saw supernatural light. a smoking oven and a burning torch: These symbols represented the glory of the Lord to Abram. Smoke and fire, with clouds and darkness, often precede God's acts of judgment (Ex. 19:16–20; Ps. 97:2–6; Is. 6:1–5; Joel 2:2, 3; Zeph. 1:14–16). This oven and torch imagery may indicate the impending judgment on Canaan, the promise that God's word to Abram will be kept. between those pieces: This last element has profound implications. In solemn agreements between equals (parity treaties), both parties would pass between the bloody pieces of slain animals and birds. The symbol would be evident to all: "May I become like this if I do not keep my part of the deal." But Abram was not to walk this grisly pathway. Only God made that journey in the symbols of smoke and fire. The fulfillment of the promise of God to Abram, the Abrahamic covenant, is as sure as is the ongoing life of the Lord (22:15–)!

15:18 The same day that Abram believed in the Lord (v. 6) and God counted it to him for righteousness, God made a covenant with him. Belief in God remains the model for us today (Rom. 4:22–25). covenant: The first time this very significant word is used of God's promise to Abraham. In this case the agreement is between a superior and an inferior. Compare 21:27, where the word is used in a parity treaty between Abraham and Abimelech. See Gen. 26:28 for a parity treaty between Isaac and Abimelech. Descendants translates the Hebrew word for seed, which may refer to a populace or to an individual. The Jews who would descend from Abram would fulfill this promise as the seed (collectively); so also the Christ who is the Seed (singular) would ultimately fulfill this promise (Gal. 3:16). One day, both the Savior and His people will fulfill this promise to the uttermost (Mic. 5:2–5). This land is the key term for this section. As already noted, God's promise to Abraham included his descendants and the Promised One, the Seed of Gen. 3:15 (Is. 6:13). But the promise also included the land of Canaan (which was to become the land of Israel). We first see this in 12:7. This section greatly emphasizes it, and in later texts it is renewed repeatedly (17:6–8). God removed the people of Israel from the land of Canaan several times, but He never revoked His everlasting promise (17:8). The promise will be fulfilled in its fullness when Jesus Christ returns (Is. 9:1–7). The river of Egypt may be the Nile, or it may be what is called today the Wadi el'Arish, a smaller watercourse at the natural boundary of Egypt and the land of Israel. the River Euphrates: The northern arm of the Euphrates in Syria.

15:19–21 the Kenites … Jebusites: This list of nations served two purposes. (1) It defined the borders of the land. (2) It impressed: no fewer than ten nations would be supplanted by the nation of Israel. The Israelites who heard these words must have been greatly encouraged.

15:20 Most Hittites lived in Asia Minor (modern Turkey), but there were some Hittites in Canaan (ch. 23). the Rephaim: A people of unusually tall stature; they are called giants in 2 Sam. 21:15–22 (Num. 13:33; Deut. 2:11; 3:11, 13).

15:21 The term Canaanite could be used broadly to include all the people groups in Canaan (12:6), or more narrowly, as here, to indicate a particular people group (10:15–20).

16:1 had borne him no children: One of the principal themes in Genesis is the quest for children, especially sons. This appears in 4:1 with the birth of Cain. In Abram and Sarai's lives the theme gets a lot of attention (11:29, 30; 12:1–3; 15:1–4; also chs. 17; 18; 21). In the OT world, infertility caused great distress (25:21). At that time, the woman was always blamed. When a woman was not able to conceive a child, her husband might divorce her. Sarai's desperate ploy to have a child through Hagar was fully in accord with the practices of those days.

16:2 Sarai knew that conception was from the Lord (4:1); her words, the LORD has restrained me, expressed her grief. Earlier her husband had complained to the Lord that he was childless (15:2). go in to my maid: In the culture of the ancient Near East this would have been expected. Abram's peers would not have regarded it as immoral. obtain children by her: Hagar would become a surrogate mother for Sarai. At the time of birth, the mother would undress herself and stay near the birth mother. As the child was born it might be placed on the wife's body, a ritual indicating that it was born on behalf of the woman who was unable to have children herself.

16:3 Sarai and Abram enlisted Hagar's aid only after ten years of waiting for God's promise to be fulfilled. At this point, Abram would have been eighty-five years old and Sarai seventy-five (12:4; 17:17).

16:4 despised: Sarai paid an emotional price for doing what the culture accepted. Using a surrogate mother may have been expedient and acceptable to the culture, but the hatred and belittling by the arrogant young servant woman was excruciating for Sarai. Now that she saw the pride of her servant, Sarai was humiliated.

16:5 The LORD judge: This is as close as we come to the use of cursing among God's people in the Bible; such words arose out of Sarai's utter desperation.

16:6 Sarai's frustration led her to treat Hagar harshly. Neither she nor Abram behaved well during this stressful time. The Bible often shows its best characters at their worst moments.

"Accounted"

(Heb. chashab) (Gen. 15:6; Ex. 26:1; Is. 33:8) Strong's #2803: This complex verb has two distinct ranges of meaning. The first is associated with calculations of some sort: "count" (Lev. 25:27; Prov. 17:28), "esteem" (Is. 53:3), "impute" (2 Sam. 19:19), "reckon" (Lev. 27:18, 23). The second includes the element of planning. Thus the word has the meaning of "think" (1 Sam. 1:13), "devise" (Esth. 8:3), "artistic design" (Ex. 26:1; 35:35), or "regard" (Is. 33:8). As used in 15:6, the word has commercial connotations. Abram's faith was "accounted" to him for righteousness; that is, computed or tallied as a credit or deposit in Abram's favor. Paul also appeals to this credit and debit language of the accounting ledger in his explanation of justification by faith (Rom 4:3).

16:7 the Angel of the LORD: This wonderful phrase is used to speak of God as He relates Himself directly to His people. Angel means "messenger." by a spring of water in the wilderness: The detail is appropriate for Hagar's experience. There she was, alive with a child within her, and yet she had no place to go and no future. Hagar was like that spring in the wilderness.

16:8, 9 and He said: On several occasions this passage states that the Angel of the Lord spoke directly to Hagar (vv. 9, 10, 11). where … where: The Lord asks these questions not from a lack of knowledge but to give Hagar an opportunity to express herself.

16:10 God's promise to Hagar to multiply her descendants is similar to the one given to Abram and Sarai (15:5; 17:20; 22:15–18). Descendants translates the Hebrew word for seed (for its use elsewhere, see 3:15; 15:3, 5, 13, 18). The promise is meant to encourage Hagar, and later God renews the promise (17:20).

16:11 The name Ishmael uses the divine name El and means "God hears."

16:12 This is something of a mixed blessing as is Isaac's to Esau (27:39, 40). Wild man suggests that Ishmael and his descendants would be unsettled, ever on the move. His hand … against suggests that his descendants would often be at war. Still this people would endure. They would dwell in the presence of all his brethren. This has indeed been the case, for Ishmael's descendants are the Arab peoples who populate most of the Middle East today. Very few of the peoples of the OT world have survived to our own day. For example, all ten nations of 15:19–21 have ceased to exist. But two peoples survive: Israel, the Jewish people, descended from Isaac; and the Arabs, descended from Ishmael (17:19–22).

16:13–16 Though Hagar was Egyptian, she had evidently come to faith in the LORD of Abram and Sarai. As a recipient of God's blessing, she gave Him a commemorative name, You-Are-the-God-Who-Sees. Her words, have I also seen him, suggest amazement at God's grace and humility in His presence. After the death of Abraham, his son Isaac lived at Beer Lahai Roi (25:11).

17:1–22 This text is a part of the complex of passages that form the Abrahamic covenant (see list at 15:1–21), the irrevocable promise of God.

17:1 ninety-nine years old: From Abram's perspective, God waited a long time to fulfill his promise. Abram was seventy-five years old when he came to the land of Canaan (12:4). At eighty-six he became the father of Ishmael (16:16). Then thirteen more years passed without a son being born to Sarai (12:1–3; 15:3, 5, 13, 18). For the fourth time, the LORD appeared to Abram after he came to the land of Canaan (the first is in 12:7; the second in 13:14–17; the third in ch. 15; the next in ch. 18). I am Almighty God: God used the name Shaddai for Himself for the first time (28:3; Ex. 3:14, 15; 6:2, 3). This word is similar to a word for mountain, to which God's strength and endurance can be compared. walk before me: As Enoch had walked with God (5:21–24), so now Abram was commanded to walk before God. He was to conduct his life as an open display of faithfulness to the Lord. Be blameless means to have integrity.

The Abrahamic Covenant

God burst into the lives of an older, childless couple, Abram and Sarai, with words of strong determination: “I will make you a great nation; I will bless you” (Gen. 12:2). This gracious promise was unconditional. God would multiply Abram’s descendants and give them the land of Canaan (13:14–17). He formalized His promise to Abram as a formal agreement between a superior king and an inferior servant (15:1–21). Finally, He swore by Himself that He would do it (22:15–18). His word was irrevocable.

Yet within His unconditional promises, God made demands. He commanded Abram and Sarai to leave their home and their extended family to go to a new land (12:1). He commanded them to be a blessing to others (12:2), to walk before Him and be blameless (17:1), and to circumcise the males in their household as a sign of the covenant (17:10). Although God’s promises were unconditional, Abram’s temporal participation in God’s blessing was conditioned on his faithfulness and his obedience to God’s commands. Abram withstood the test—he believed and obeyed (15:6; 22:1–18).

17:2, 3 This is the second time the word covenant is used of God’s relationship with Abram (15:18). Before God instituted His covenant with Abram, He had already spoken to him with wonderful words of His great promise (12:1–3, 7; 13:14–17). The verb translated will make is not really a future tense in Hebrew. The covenant had already been established; here God is restating it to Abram (v. 4). The verb may be understood to mean, “{Again} I make.” The words multiply you exceedingly are a different formation than is usual (16:10), giving the statement a highly emphatic sense.

17:4 a father of many nations: Abram’s principal descendants are the Israelites, who are the centerpiece of biblical history and are the line from which the Savior Jesus comes. But Abram is also the father of other nations. He is the father of Ishmael and the Arab peoples (ch. 16), as well as a number of other people groups descended from Keturah, a concubine (25:1–6).

17:5, 6 Abram … Abraham: This name change is significant. Abram means "Exalted Father." Abraham means "Father of Many"—a direct reflection of his new role. The new name is unequivocally a name of relationship with the living God, to whom Abram had turned from idols (1 Thess. 1:9).

17:7 The Abrahamic covenant (12:1–3) is the foundation upon which all later divine covenants with God's people are based. Everlasting means the covenant would last through all time. to be God to you: With these remarkable words, God pledged His ongoing relationship with the people of Abraham (2 Sam. 7:14; Is. 52:11; Ezek. 37:26, 27; 2 Cor. 6:14–7:1). This was later celebrated in the creed of Israel, the great Shema (Deut. 6:4; Ps. 100:3). Descendants is from the Hebrew word for seed; it may mean an individual person as well as a people (3:15; 15:3, 5, 13, 18).

17:8, 9 The promise clearly included the Israelite people and the land (Canaan). The two are linked in the language of the covenant in ch. 15. Even though God removed Israel more than once from the land; He promised them ultimate possession of Canaan. It is an everlasting possession. The same word used of God's covenant (v. 7) is used of the land.

17:10, 11 Circumcision means "cutting around," a minor operation that removes the foreskin from the male organ.

17:12, 13 An eight-day-old boy and his immune system would be strong enough for the operation, but he would be too young to remember the pain. or bought with money: The regulation extended to slaves and foreigners in the community of Israel. Thus circumcision was the distinctive sign of all men in the household.

17:14 There is something of a pun in the expression cut off. Any man who did not accept circumcision would be cut off from the community. Some have thought that this section of Scripture concerns only the external act of circumcision, but we know God's concern to be greater (Deut. 10:12–20). Circumcision—an outward sign—stood for a thorough commitment to God—an inward reality. Hence the apostle Paul demands that the heart be circumcised to God (Rom. 2:25–29).

17:15 Sarai … Sarah: Both names mean "Princess." Like the name change from Abram to Abraham (vv. 4, 5), the new name accompanied a new relationship with God.

17:16 bless her: The Lord's blessing was for Sarah as well as Abraham (12:1–3). A summary of the language used for Abraham in vv. 6–8 is used of her in these verses. The writer to the Hebrews also celebrated Sarah's faithfulness to the Lord (Heb. 11:11).

17:17 Fell on his face recalls the words of v. 3. Abraham's laugh is unexpected and shocking but completely understandable! For twenty-four years Abraham had heard, and believed, the same promise: one day he would become the father of a son who would found the nation of promise. He had tried to force the birth of a legitimate heir (chs. 15; 16), but God had assured him that the true heir would not be an adopted slave (15:4) nor the child of a surrogate mother (16:11, 12). But now, after nearly a quarter of a century and at the age of ninety-nine (17:1), Abraham had reached his limit. Even if Sarah were to conceive now, she would be ninety when the baby was born and he would be one hundred! At this point it seemed as though the whole thing might be a joke. And so at last he laughed.

17:18 Abraham's plea shows his love for his son Ishmael and his desire that in some tangible way the covenant promise of God would finally come to pass.

17:19 Isaac means "Laughter" (21:1–6).

17:20 God had blessed Ishmael before he was born (16:11, 12) and here He renewed and amplified the blessing. As the Hebrew people would have twelve tribes, so Ishmael's people would also have twelve families (25:12–18).

17:21 Isaac whom Sarah shall bear: The promise was plain. The father and mother were named, the child was named, and the time was named.

17:22 God went up: We sometimes read of the Lord coming down from heaven; here we read of Him returning there. Such language is expressive of God's holiness, transcendence, and wonder (Ps. 113:4–6).

17:23–27 Abraham took Ishmael: Again we see Abraham completely obey the command of the Lord (12:4; 22:3). On the very day he received the command from God, he did just as the Lord commanded. All the males in his household from little boys to aged men were treated alike.

18:1–15 God reaffirmed His covenant with Abraham, reconfirming His promise to Sarah. This section is also a part of the complex of texts that make up the Abrahamic covenant (15:1–21, note).

18:1 This is the fifth time the LORD appeared to Abraham since he had come into the land of Canaan. (1) The first was the appearance at the altar Abram built in Shechem when he first entered the land (12:7). (2) The second was after Lot had separated from Abram when they came back to Canaan from Egypt (13:14–17). (3) The third followed Abram's heroic rescue of Lot from the league of invading kings and the subsequent encounter with Melchizedek (15:1–21). (4) The fourth came thirteen years after the birth of Ishmael, when the Lord renewed His covenant with Abraham and instituted the rite of circumcision (17:1–22). Mamre was one of Abram's allies in his battle against the invading kings from Mesopotamia (14:13). The place name Mamre was probably associated with a personal name. This region came to be known as Hebron (13:18; 23:17). in the heat of the day: The southern desert or the Negev (12:9) can become very hot in the summer, reaching above 110° F. People usually did hard, physical work early in the morning or late in the afternoon.

18:2–3 Verse 1 states that it was the Lord who appeared to Abraham; v. 2 speaks of three men; v. 13 suggests that one of these men was the Lord. Who were the other two? Probably attending angels; each of the three visitors looked like men, but one was even greater than angels (19:1). The writer of Hebrews used this account to encourage hospitality to strangers, "for by so doing some have unwittingly entertained angels" (Heb. 13:2). Abraham's words My Lord suggests that he suspected the identity of the visitors, but perhaps he was not sure until later of the full significance of the event.

18:4–6 Abraham hurried: His rapidity of motion is remarkable for a man his age, and for "the heat of the day" (v. 1) 18:7 Tender and good point to "an exceptionally fine calf." In biblical times, one could not carve out a steak and then put the rest in the freezer! When a calf was slaughtered for a meal, it was for a feast (Luke 15:23) and had to be consumed in its entirety or the meat would quickly go bad (Prov. 9:1–4). Abraham and Sarah are pictured here as preparing a wonderful feast for their divine guest(s).

Circumcision

The rite of circumcision (Gen. 17:10) became a powerful, enduring symbol of God's covenant relationship with Abraham and his offspring. Technically speaking, circumcision refers to the surgical removal of a male's foreskin. The procedure was widely practiced in the ancient world, including the Egyptian and Canaanite cultures. But they performed the rite at the beginning of puberty as an initiation into manhood. By contrast, the Hebrews circumcised infant boys as a sign of their responsibility to serve God as His special, holy people in the midst of a pagan world.

God instructed Abraham to circumcise every male child in his household, including servants (17:11) as a visible, physical sign of the covenant between the Lord and His people. Any male not circumcised was to be "cut off from his people" and regarded as a covenant breaker (17:14). The custom was performed on the eighth day after birth (17:12), at which time a name was given to the son (Luke 1:59; 2:21). In the early history of the Hebrews, the rite was performed by the father but eventually was carried out by a specialist.

The Hebrew people came to take great pride in circumcision. In fact, it became a badge of their spiritual and national superiority. This attitude fostered a spirit of exclusivism instead of compassion to reach out to other nations as God intended. Gentiles came to be regarded as the "uncircumcision," a term of disrespect implying that non-Jewish peoples were outside the circle of God's love.

Eventually the terms "circumcised" and "uncircumcised" became charged with emotion, as is plain from the discord the issue brought about centuries later in the early church (Gal. 2:12).

18:8 butter and milk and the calf: Because of a misunderstanding of a passage in Torah, later Jewish people determined that it was sinful to eat milk products with meat products. Strangely, this became one of the most deeply imbedded ideas in traditional post-biblical Judaism. But it is based on an erroneous interpretation of the Bible. The texts in question prohibit boiling a young goat in its mother's milk (Ex. 23:19; 34:26; Deut. 14:21). The passage actually prohibits an odious practice the Canaanites did to appease their gods. It appears that they would boil a goat doe's first kid alive in its mother's milk with the hope that the goat doe would have many kids in subsequent years. These texts had nothing to do with dietary laws; they regulated the religious practices of sacrifice. The feast that Abraham and Sarah served to their mysterious guests clearly includes both milk and meat products being served together. No prohibition of mixing the two is implied here, or in any other biblical passage.

18:9 Where is Sarah: Although the focus of God's promise in ch. 17 was on Abraham, the focus here is on Sarah.

IN COMPARISON

Barrenness

Sarah laughed at the thought of bearing children at such an advanced age (Gen. 18:11, 12). But she may have laughed more out of pain than surprise, for in the ancient world to be barren, as she was, was considered a curse (Gen. 16:2; 20:17, 18; Luke 1:25). It was even considered grounds for divorce.

Several women in Scripture illustrate the predicament of the childless woman. Yet it's interesting that each of those named eventually gave birth to a child.

Sarah (Gen. 16:1, 2; 18:11, 12; 21:6, 7)	Used her maid Hagar as a surrogate childbearer, but then rejected both Hagar and the child, Ishmael; eventually gave birth to Isaac, changing laughter of pain to laughter of joy.
Rebekah (Gen. 25:21)	Conceived after her husband Isaac prayed to the Lord on her behalf; gave birth to twins, Esau and Jacob
Rachel (Gen. 29:31—30:24)	Driven by despair, used her maid Bilhah to compete with the other wife of her husband Jacob, her older sister Leah; eventually gave birth to Joseph and later Benjamin, whose birth caused her death.
Manoah's wife (Judg. 13)	Told by God that she would conceive a son who would be a Nazirite; gave birth to Samson, a judge of Israel.
Hannah (1 Sam. 1)	Desperately prayed for a son, whom she vowed to dedicate to the Lord; gave birth to Samuel, a judge of Israel.
Elizabeth (Luke 1:5–25, 57–66)	Conceived after her husband Zacharias was promised a son who would be the forerunner to the Messiah; gave birth to John the Baptist.

18:10 Sarah your wife shall have: The wording was important because the couple had tried in the past to achieve the fulfillment of God's promise (chs. 15; 16).

18:11 had passed the age of childbearing: The text uses three phrases to describe the advanced age of Abraham and Sarah, with a special focus on the fact that Sarah had ceased to menstruate.

18:12 therefore Sarah laughed: She acted like Abraham had on an earlier occasion (17:17). She knew the facts of life, but she would soon be greatly surprised by the One who determined them.

18:13 the LORD said: Here the text makes it plain that the Lord Himself was one of the three guests. Why did Sarah laugh: This is one of the most wonderfully human passages in the Bible. The woman of faith, like her husband, had believed for years in God's promise. But now she found her faith stretched to the limit. God knew she had laughed.

18:14 Is anything too hard for the LORD: That is, there is no wonder that God cannot do. The verb for "too hard" (Heb. pale) is a term of "wonder-working." One of the names for the Coming One is "Wonder-Working (Heb. pele, a noun) Counselor" (Is. 9:6). At the appointed time: This section makes much of the fact that God chose the timing (Gen. 17:21; Eccl. 3:9–11). time of life: A reference to the length of pregnancy.

18:15 Afraid of being found out, Sarah denied that she had laughed. In His mercy God did not punish her, as He had not punished Abraham who also laughed. (17:17). But neither did He allow her embarrassed denial to stand. She had laughed. Sarah would laugh again, but that time it would be in joy rather than disbelief (21:1–7).

18:16 In 19:1 two of these men are called angels. looked toward Sodom: This verse begins the account of God's judgment on the sinful cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. and Abraham went with them: Abraham's hospitality enabled him to talk further with the living God.

18:17, 18 the LORD said: When this phrase is compared with 18:1, 2, 13, 16; 19:1, we come to the conclusion that two of the guests of Abraham and Sarah were angels and the third was none other than the living God! Shall I hide: The language of God in this section lets us "hear his thoughts," as if He were a man reflecting on the fact that Abraham had a vested interest in the city of Sodom because Lot lived there (14:12; 19:1).

18:19 for I have known him: The language here speaks of the intimate relationship, which motivates the Lord to accomplish His purpose in Abraham (22:12). to do righteousness and justice: One idea in two words —"genuine righteousness" (Mic. 3:1; 4:8).

18:20 The outcry against Sodom and Gomorrah suggests a moral center in the universe; the outrageous sins of these cities are an affront to the righteousness of God (19:4–8).

18:21 I will go down now: This picturesque way of speaking of the omniscience of the Lord (His all-embracing knowledge) heightens the sense of wonder (11:5). There is nothing that God does not know, although we may say that He "comes down" to see "what is going on" in His earth (Ps. 113:4–6).

18:22 stood before the LORD: An intercessor, pleading for the salvation of others.

18:23 The exchange between Abraham and God serves as a dramatic theodicy, a justification of the Lord's ways. Abraham's great concern, of course, was for his nephew Lot and his family (14:12; 19:1).

18:24 fifty righteous: That Abraham begins with a fairly low number may indicate that the overwhelming majority of the city of Sodom were wicked.

18:25 far be it from You: There is in Jewish tradition a boldness of expression to the Lord based on a strong sense of faith in Him and a confidence in Him that ultimately He is good (Ps. 100:5). When the famous question Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right is turned into an assertion it becomes the bedrock of faith in the justice of God (1 John 1:9). The Judge of all the earth will do right!

18:26 That the Lord would spare the city for the sake of fifty righteous men (later for the sake of ten, v. 32) is a mark of His extraordinary grace.

18:27–33 Abraham was determined to go on bargaining, but he knew that he was arguing with God. So he went one step at a time, pleading the case for the righteous in smaller and smaller numbers: from forty-five down to ten. Perhaps Abraham thought there were at least ten righteous persons in the city; but alas, there were not (as the report of ch. 19 shows).

19:1 Lot's fortunes had gone very well. The gate of a city was the place where the town elders met (Ruth 4:1). Lot had become so enmeshed in the life of the city that he had become a ruling elder. bowed himself: A term commonly used for the worship of God (22:5; 24:26); here it describes Lot's act of reverence to special guests (compare 18:2). The angels appeared as men (18:2), and Lot greeted them as such.

19:2 My lords is a greeting of respect for special visitors. your servant's house: Lot's generous offer of hospitality may have been motivated out of kindness toward them as well as his sense of the dangers his city might hold for them.

Sodom and Gomorrah

• Two of the five “cities of the plain” (Gen. 13:12) at the southern base of the Dead Sea in a fertile area that was said to be like Eden (13:10).

• Sodom means “place of lime,” Gomorrah means “submersion.”

• Notorious in the Bible and elsewhere for wickedness and rebellion against God (for example, 2 Pet. 2:6) • Area chosen by Lot, Abraham’s nephew, as the place to graze his flocks and pitch his tent (Gen. 13:11).

• Judged by God for a variety of sins, including failure to care for the poor and needy despite incredible wealth (Ezek. 16:49), and for sexual immorality (Jude 7).

• Destroyed by brimstone and fire that rained from the sky (Gen. 19:24, 25). The region is still barren, even though it was once “well watered everywhere” (13:10).

• Site of frequent earthquakes and other geological events. Nearby repositories of salt, asphalt, and sulphur are abundant.

19:3 Feast here indicates much drinking as well as eating.

19:4 The men of Sodom were aggressive homosexuals, bent on raping innocent travelers. Under the circumstances, Lot showed great courage by inviting his guests to stay at his house under his protection.

19:5 The Hebrew verb for know is ordinarily used of normal sexual relations between a male and female (4:1). Here it is used to describe the perversion of homosexual sex between men (Rom. 1:18–32, especially vv. 26, 27). The term sodomite comes from this passage.

19:6–8 Lot’s plight was severe; he had invited guests into his home for protection and was now in danger of seeing them abused by an unruly mob. Lot’s desperation led him to risk the lives of his own two daughters to protect the lives of strangers from the mob. We can see why an outcry from the city had gone up to the Lord (18:20, 21).

19:9, 10 Stand back: The crazed crowd was now about to attack Lot, whom they resented as an outsider even though he had risen to a position of prominence in the city.

19:11 Those who were morally blind were now stricken with physical blindness by the angelic guests (read about a similar angelic blight in 2 Kin. 6:18). Only the confusion and panic of these wicked men spared Lot and his family from vicious assault.

19:12 The angelic guests had completed their search and were about to bring down the judgment of God on the city. In mercy, they offered an escape to Lot's immediate family. There simply were not sufficient righteous persons in the city for it to be spared (v. 13; 18:24–33).

19:13–15 Arise can mean "make haste."

19:16 Lot lingered. He had mixed feelings about the destruction that was to come. Lot and his family needed to be propelled from their home by physical force. The verb for took hold means "to seize." the LORD being merciful: This is the whole point of the story. God could have destroyed the city of Sodom with no word to Lot or Abraham (18:17). But because of God's mercy here (Heb. hemla, from the verb hamal, "to spare," "to have compassion"), His angels grabbed Lot and his family and brought them forcefully to safety.

19:17–19 There is something pathetic about Lot's words and I die. All "hell" was breaking loose and he was worried about a possible wild animal in the mountains! Lot was quite unstable. The only reason he was being spared was because of God's love for his uncle Abraham (vv. 27, 28).

19:20, 21 this city: Despite the gravity of the situation, Lot was still bargaining. He could not see himself as a wanderer in the hills, so even a little city was preferable to a life with no home at all.

19:22 Zoar: "Insignificant in Size."

19:23–26 Sun had risen: Throughout the account, special attention is given to time. The rain of brimstone and fire may be explained in a couple of ways. It is possible that God used a volcanic eruption or some similar kind of natural disaster. Then, the miracle would be in the Lord's timing and in the narrow escape of Lot and his family. See Ex. 14 for a similar possibility. It is also possible that the destruction of these cities was an act of judgment outside the normal range of natural occurrences.

19:26 The command was clear, not to look back or linger (v. 17). Lot's wife disobeyed and looked back. By implication, she was reluctant to leave. pillar of salt: Her destruction was sudden. Nothing was left of her but a mineral heap. Jesus referred to her in His teaching on the sudden destruction that will come in the last days. "Remember Lot's wife," Jesus warned (Luke 17:32).

19:27, 28 On the very morning that the cities were destroyed, Abraham looked on from a distance and saw the destruction. When he saw the smoke, he must have known the truth: there were not even ten righteous in the city (18:32).

19:29 Part of the reason for God's grace to Lot was that God remembered Abraham. Lot could barely tolerate the wickedness in the city (2 Pet. 2:7, 8), but only he felt that way. If it were not for Abraham, Lot would have died with the other inhabitants.

19:30, 31 Lot had begged the angels to give him a safe haven in the little city of Zoar (vv. 18–22), a request they granted. But following the devastation of the cities of the plain, Lot did not even feel safe in this city. So he lived in a cave.

19:32 Lot's daughters now conspired together to make their father drunk so that he would have sexual relations with them. the lineage of our father: We can hardly approve of their action, yet their desperation was real. Their husbands had died and they were not likely to remarry. Their mother was also dead and they judged their father unlikely to remarry and have more children. Should they die childless, there would be no one to carry on their family name. For the peoples of biblical cultures, this was an overwhelming loss (ch. 38).

19:33–35 and he did not know: The narrator inserts this phrase twice (v. 35) to protect Lot. This was not deliberate incest on his part; the daughters alone were responsible for what happened.

19:36–38 The shameful act of incest led to the births of two sons who would later greatly trouble Israel, Moab and Ben-Ammi.

20:1 Abraham’s deception about Sarah in the city of Gerar was later to be repeated by his son Isaac (ch. 26). This is an example of a son taking after his father. The present story is also a replay of Abraham’s earlier mistakes in Egypt (12:10–20).

20:2 Sarah was the half sister of Abraham (v. 12). Abimelech … took her: This action put Sarah in the king’s harem, but not in his bed. Because of her advanced age, it is probable that Sarah was more desirable to Abimelech for her wealth than for her physical appearance.

20:3 Presumably, Abimelech was a pagan king. Yet God warned him of the wrong that he was about to commit. This is another instance of the protective care that the Lord gives His people (Gen. 31:24; compare Num. 22:12, 20). a man’s wife: The Hebrew words speak of Sarah and Abraham on a level of equality and dignity. Both are spoken of as a lords or nobles, literally “a noble wife of a noble man.”

The Legacy of Sodom and Gomorrah

Throughout Scripture and in countless extrabiblical works, Sodom and Gomorrah and the other cities of the plain (Gen. 13:12) stand as a symbol of divine judgment for collective wickedness. What was once a well-watered, fertile region is today barren, full of tar pits, mounds of asphalt, and marsh. These ill-fated cities remind us that wickedness will not go unpunished. They also show that God not only judges sinful individuals, such as Lot's wife (19:26), but also entire cities and their surroundings.

However, the story is not all bad news. After the tragic end of Sodom and Gomorrah, "God remembered Abraham" (19:29). When we remember the patriarch's righteous example, several lessons of the story become clear:

• Prayer makes a difference. Abraham shows us that it is legitimate to pray for cities, as he did (18:22–33). We may not always be able to go to a city, but we can still pray for it. Abraham prayed more for a place than for individual people. He prayed persistently for an entire city, believing that nothing was too hard for the Lord (18:14). Moreover, he prayed for justice in the city, as well as for its peace and salvation. His example challenges us to ask: Are we praying for cities today? If so, what are we asking God to do? Save the city, or judge it?

• People count. Ten believing persons living in Sodom could have saved it (18:32). In other words, the presence of righteous persons acting as salt and light can preserve places where evil runs rampant. Even though Sodom was filled with wickedness, God would have saved it if He had found even a handful of righteous people. He spared Zoar, for the sake of one righteous man—Lot (19:16–22; 2 Pet. 2:6, 7). As God's people, are we living righteously in the places to which He has called us?

• God is sovereign. God's decision to destroy four cities of the plain but to preserve the fifth, Zoar, shows that He is ultimately in control. Let there be no mistake: God does not want to destroy cities or their systems and people (2 Pet. 3:9); but He can, and will. He decides when, where, and how judgment will fall. On the other hand, God can rescue people from evil places when and if He wishes. We might ask: Do we trust and respect the sovereignty of God? Do we live with a perspective that He is ultimately in control? Do we act as though we are accountable to Him?

• Pride goes before a fall. Sodom was destroyed not only because of sexual sin (Gen. 19:1–17; Jude 7), but because it had pride and a surplus of wealth, yet failed to care for its poor and needy (Ezek. 16:48–50). Its example challenges us: What are we doing with the resources God has put under our control?

• Fleeing from the city does not avoid sin; it only spreads it around. The behavior of Lot and his daughters after fleeing from Sodom shows that sin is not confined to the city; they exported Sodom-like immorality to the hinterlands (Gen. 19:19–22, 30–36). Are we running from the city in order to "escape" its problems and evils? Is it possible that God wants us to stay and live as His representatives of righteousness?

20:4, 5 Lord, will You slay a righteous nation also: Abimelech had not even touched Sarah; he did not want to die for a sin he had not committed. He argued that his actions so far were innocent. They were based on what Abraham and Sarah had told him.

The Fear of the Lord

Interestingly, the OT has no word for "religion." But the phrases "the fear of the Lord" and "the fear of God" come close to expressing what we today mean by religion. The phrases take into account a lifestyle in which people take seriously an all-wise, all-powerful, and all-righteous God who holds them responsible for their behavior.

20:6 This passage emphasizes the dream state Abimelech was in. The Lord's response to him was one of grace; God had kept the king from touching Sarah.

20:7 This is the first use of the term prophet in the Bible. The term indicates more a relationship to God than an ability to speak for Him. Abraham's relationship to God was the basis for God's command that Sarah be restored to her husband.

20:8–10 The gravity of the situation must have touched the king so strongly that his fear quickly spread to his family and servants. Abimelech's questions of Abraham are especially touching: What have you done to us? is followed by the reverse How have I offended you? This last question uses the verb meaning "to sin" (Heb. hata), a word that fits more strongly with the noun to follow in a great sin (the Hebrew noun is from the same root as the verb). His last question of Abraham might be paraphrased, "What were you thinking?"

20:11–13 Abraham gave two reasons for his actions. The first was based on his assumption that he was in hostile territory. That is, with no fear of God, there would be no justice among the people. A king set on doing whatever he wanted might seize Sarah as a first step toward subjugating Abraham and taking over his property. Second, Sarah was truly my sister. The marriages of the family of Terah were very close. In this patrician society, the marriages of close relatives was regarded as a sign of rank. Abraham and Sarah apparently agreed that she would invoke the plea that she was his sister wherever they might happen to be (v. 13). Later, the Law would prohibit the marriage of people so closely related.

20:14–16 Abimelech made a significant payment to Abraham in silver in order to compensate Sarah's hardship. His words your brother may have been sarcastic. The Hebrew verb translated as rebuked can merely mean “vindicated.” This verb is used in legal terminology to describe the settlement of a dispute.

20:17 So Abraham prayed to God: However the situation began, it ended in mercy with Abraham acting as a priest for Abimelech before the true and living God. In this way, the people of Gerar learned about the Lord, as had happened in Egypt years earlier (12:10–20).

20:18 the LORD had closed up all the wombs: Three things are indicated by these words. First, the stay of Abraham and Sarah had been prolonged in Gerar before Sarah’s identity became known. Some months would have had to pass before the people realized that they were no longer conceiving at normal rates. This means that Sarah had lived in the harem of the king for several months. Second, the Lord reached out to these people in a way they would find difficult to resist; the wish to procreate was relentless in the ancient world, as these accounts consistently emphasize. Third, God graciously protected Sarah—and Abraham. The chapter ends with irony. Because of God’s desire to protect Sarah, He had closed the wombs of the women of Abimelech’s house. Soon the Lord would open Sarah’s womb to give her a child, long after she was too old to conceive naturally (21:1, 2).

Gaining a Son from a Slave

Ancient marriage contracts obligated wives to provide a son. Contracts dating from the mid-second millennium B.C. have been discovered in the city of Nuzi specifying that if a wife bore no male children she had the obligation to provide a child via a female servant. A child thus born would be considered the child of the wife, which meant that a barren wife had fulfilled her marriage obligation. Hence Sarai's words, "Perhaps I shall obtain a child by her" (Gen. 16:2).

Abram's reluctance to send Hagar and Ishmael away (21:9–11) reflects another aspect of the Nuzi tablets. Servants who provided such children were not supposed to be sent away but treated favorably.Thus it took the voice of God (21:12) to convince Abram to listen to Sarai's desire.

21:1 And the LORD visited Sarah: The Bible stresses that the Lord causes conception; that children are a gift of the Lord (Ps. 127:3). The verb visit is an extraordinary choice here, because it means that the Lord entered directly into the affairs of His people. This was what He did for Sarah as He had said … as He had spoken: These two phrases speak of the exact fulfillment of His promise to Abraham (17:21) and Sarah (18:14).

21:2 It appears that Sarah conceived while she and Abraham were living in Gerar (20:1; 21:22). The contrast is wonderful: God had closed the wombs of the family of Abimelech (20:18), and now He opened Sarah's womb. bore Abraham a son: A great fact that the Bible elsewhere celebrates (25:19; Heb. 11:11). in his old age: The writer of Hebrews says Abraham was "as good as dead" (Heb. 11:12). What a miracle this was! To both Abraham (17:21) and Sarah (18:14), God had emphasized the concept of His set time.

21:3 Isaac means "He (God) Is Laughing (Now)." At one time Abraham had laughed at the improbability of having a son in his old age (17:17); Sarah had laughed too (18:12). But now, with the birth of the child, laughter took on its happier meaning. Sarah got the joke (vv. 5, 6)!

21:4 circumcised his son: Abraham's pattern of obedience to the Lord continued unchanged (12:4; 17:23; 22:3). The sign of the covenant was most important for the son of promise (17:9–14).

21:5 one hundred years old: (Compare 12:4; 16:16; 17:1.) Amusingly, Abraham was precisely the age that caused him to laugh aloud (17:17).

21:6 Among the many name jokes in the Bible, few are as wonderful as this one; the words for laugh in this verse are related to the name Isaac (v. 3).

21:7 nurse children: Wondrously, this woman of ninety (17:17) now had breasts filled with milk and her arms full with a child! In the theology of the Bible, Isaac's birth suggests the promise of an even greater miracle, the miracle-Son, Jesus.

21:8 weaned: In biblical times children were nursed through the toddler period. The life of Isaac was to be marked by celebration, a feast. As glad parents, Abraham and Sarah rejoiced in each major step of his life. This makes the story of Isaac's near death (ch. 22) all the more suspenseful.

21:9 The Hebrew verb for scoffing is related to the name for Isaac (21:3, 5). Here is a bad turn on a wonderful joke. Young Ishmael, now perhaps seventeen, was mocking the joy of Sarah and Abraham in their young son.

21:10 Sarah's greatest moment came at the birth of her child; this moment was one of her worst. It is understandable, of course, that she would find Ishmael's derision hurtful even as she had Hagar's (16:5). But even in that culture it was reprehensible to send Ishmael away. When a surrogate wife had borne a son to one's husband, that mother and child could not be dismissed even if the first wife subsequently gave birth to a son. This partly explains Abraham's reluctance to do what Sarah demanded (v. 11). What is more, he still loved his son Ishmael (16:15; 17:18).

21:11, 12 but God said: This is the sixth time Abraham received a direct word from the Lord since coming to the land of Canaan. listen to her voice: Abraham needed to hear God give him permission to send Hagar and Ishmael from his home. In Isaac alone would the principal covenant be fulfilled. Ishmael had his own promise (v. 13; compare 16:10–12), but nothing God promised to Ishmael would replace His promise to Isaac.

21:13, 14 This scene must have been exceedingly difficult for Abraham. He had no idea that another morning in his life would be even worse (22:3). Bread and a skin of water are meager provisions. The skin refers to a water bag made of animal skin. sent her away: Years before, Hagar had had to leave the same household while pregnant with Ishmael (16:6). wilderness of Beersheba (v. 31): Later there would be a city built in this place; in this early period it was merely a region for herding sheep and goats. Isaac was later to rediscover water in this region (26:33).

21:15 water … used up: It would not take long for the two refugees to use up their meager provisions.

21:16 let me not see: Despite her sometimes mean spirit against Sarah, Hagar loved her son. The thought that she was about to lose her son to the desert heat was unbearable for her.

21:17 God heard: What wonderful words these are! There is no pain of His people that He does not see or hear about (Is. 40:27, 28; Heb. 2:10, 18; 4:15). God was near to deliver; the child would not die.

21:18 God renewed his promise to Hagar and Ishmael; Ishmael would become a great nation (16:10–12).

21:19 Hagar was so overcome with grief that she was unaware of the provision of water right before her. God showed a well of water. How fitting that the promise of God would again be beside a provision of water

(Gen. 16:7, 14). Often in the pages of the OT, a spring or well of water is a symbol of spiritual salvation as well as physical deliverance (Is. 12:3; Jer. 2:13).

21:20 God's promise was realized in Ishmael's life. He became an archer; that is, he learned to hunt.

21:21 wife: Hagar made sure that Ishmael married an Egyptian, one of her own people, much as Abraham's servant searched for a wife for Isaac from among his parents' people (24:4).

21:22 Abimelech: It appears from this verse that Abraham and Sarah were still living in the region of Gerar (20:15). Phichol: This commander of the army is also mentioned in the later encounter with Isaac (26:26), unless the name is a hereditary term, as perhaps was that of Abimelech (26:8). God is with you: With these words, Abimelech and Phichol introduced their desire to form a treaty with Abraham.

21:23, 24 swear to me by God: This kind of oath was a complete, binding obligation (22:16). God would be witness to the act and a witness against anyone who might break it. kindness: This exceedingly important term (Heb. hesed) sometimes translated "loyal love" is often used in the Psalms to describe God's character (Ps. 100:5). Here we see its proper context in a binding relationship. The term basically describes covenant loyalty (24:12).

21:25, 26 It turned out that there was a dispute between the two concerning a well. For those who tended sheep and goats, water rights and wells mattered a great deal. Abimelech agreed to settle the issue promptly.

21:27 This is the first use of the word covenant for a parity treaty (15:18). A parity treaty is a binding agreement between two equals, similar to today's business contract. At 26:28 there is a parity treaty between Abimelech and Isaac, and at 31:43–55 there is a covenant between Jacob and Laban.

21:28–31 Abraham made the occasion all the more memorable by his presentation of seven ewe lambs to Abimelech. The Hebrew number seven is similar in sound to the verb meaning "to swear" (v. 24). Thus Beersheba would be the well where they swore and the well of the seven ewe lambs. In the next generation the ritual would be repeated with a similar meaning given to the site (26:33).

21:32, 33 The hope was that the tamarisk tree would long mark the spot of this major treaty. called on the name: As in 12:8, Abraham did more than just pray to the Lord; he made proclamation in the Lord's name, telling everyone about the LORD, the Everlasting God, the Master of eternity. Not only does He live forever, but He meets the needs of His people for all eternity.

21:34 Although Abraham had been promised the whole of the land for his posterity (Gen. 12:7; 15:18–21), in his own life he lived under agreements with others in their land (Heb. 11:13–16). The name Palestine comes from the word for Philistine.

22:1–19 Without question, this narrative is one of the most shocking and memorable in the whole Bible. And yet in its outcome it is one of the finest texts describing the loyalty of the Lord to His covenant and to His servant Abraham. It also reveals remarkable faith on the part of Abraham, Sarah, and Isaac and points to the future sacrifice of God's only Son, Jesus.

22:1 after these things: A new story is about to begin (15:1). The term God includes the definite article ("the God"; Gen. 6:2; 27:28; 31:11; 46:3; 48:15). This is a way of indicating that the "Genuine Deity" or the "True God" is making these demands, not a false god or a demon. Note that the same use of the definite article occurs in 41:32 twice. This is the seventh time that God revealed Himself to Abraham since Abraham came to the land of Canaan. God tested Abraham in order to give Abraham an opportunity to show his true character. The verb does not suggest entrapment to harm or to destroy Abraham and his faith, but to refine him, to allow him to display his inner character. The words "do not lead us into temptation" in Matt. 6:13 suggest thee same idea.

22:2 only son: Abraham had one son by Hagar (ch. 16), and as we learn later he had six sons by Keturah (ch. 25). But only Isaac was uniquely born (the same idea is in the description of Jesus as the "only begotten," John 1:18). Indeed, the Greek term for "only begotten" is used to describe Isaac in Heb. 11:17. The point is not that Abraham had no other children, but that this was the unique child in whom all the promises of God resided. But that wasn't the only reason God's command would test Abraham's faith; this was Isaac, the son who had brought God's "laughter" to Abraham and Sarah (21:12). Moriah: "Where the Lord Provides" or "Where the Lord Appears." burnt offering: Abraham was not simply to strike his son and wound him, and then nurse him back to health. He was commanded to go through the steps of offering a sacrifice that burned an animal or person entirely. The toll of this command on Abraham and Sarah must have been enormous. What a poignant picture of what our God did to His unique Son for us!

Kill My Own Son?

It seems incredible that God would tell Abraham to "take … your son, your only son Isaac, whom you love," and offer him up as a sacrifice (Gen. 22:2). What sort of God would ask such a thing? What sort of God would test a man's faith with such a weighty request?

It was a severe test of Abraham's faith. Perhaps most of us would have failed the test. We might even have rejected God as cruel and bloodthirsty. But Abraham believed God. Though the sacrifice of Isaac seemed to go against God's promise of an heir, Abraham believed that God would still fulfill His Word, even if it required Him to raise Isaac from the dead (Rom. 4:17).

The request was also a harsh lesson that all of life comes from and belongs to God (Gen. 2:7; Job 27:3; 33:4). In essence, life is merely on loan to us, both as parents and children. God can ask for its return at any time. So in that respect, the request to slay Isaac was similar to the difficult period that Abram and Sarai endured as they waited for the birth of this very son (Gen. 18:1–15; 21:1–7). Their lives and the lives of any children they might have were in the hands of God.

Let there be no mistake: God abhors human sacrifice, as many OT passages make clear (Lev. 18:21; 20:2; Deut. 12:31; Ps. 106:35–38; Ezek. 20:30, 31). So when Abraham was about to slay His son, God stopped him short of the actual sacrifice and provided an alternative in Isaac's place. It proved to Abraham that his faith was well-placed: God is the God of mercy.

He is also the God of wisdom. He sometimes makes what to us may seem like strange requests. But if like Abraham we will believe and obey, He will reward our faith with His goodness and righteousness.

22:3, 4 Nothing is said of Abraham's thoughts, or the thoughts of the boy's mother. All we read is the account of the father's complete obedience to God (12:4; 17:23; compare the complete obedience of Noah in 6:22; 7:5). Difficult, heavy tasks were usually done in the early morning because of the heat of the midday in this part of the world (18:1).

22:5 If the young men (servants) had accompanied Abraham and his son to the sacrificial site, they might have tried to restrain him from his awful deed. He told them to stay with the donkey, he and his son were on their way to worship the Lord. we will come back: In the Hebrew text, these words are even more arresting than in a translation. The three verbs all show a strong determination on the part of the speaker (12:2): "We are determined to go, we are determined to worship, we are determined to return." There are three possibilities for Abraham's speech: (1) he was lying to the servants to buy time; (2) he was suffering from delusion, and no longer speaking rationally; or (3) he believed that he and the boy would return. He had heard, many times, God's promise to create a nation through Isaac (12:1–3, 7; 13:14–17; 15:1–21; 17:1–22; 18:1–15). He still believed it. He had concluded that even if he had to destroy his son, God would bring him back from death (Heb. 11:17–19). Only in this way could Abraham have gone ahead with the task before him.

22:6 As Christ on His way to Golgotha to be crucified, the son of Abraham also bore an instrument of death on his back. The fire would be live coals in a clay pot of some kind. A special knife was used in sacrificial worship.

22:7 My father … where is the lamb: Isaac still did not know what Abraham planned to do.

22:8 for Himself: The wording is stronger in this order: "God Himself will provide." went together: These words appear again in v. 19.

22:9, 10 the place: The site of Moriah is significant (vv. 2–4, 14). bound Isaac: Jewish scholars call this text "the binding of Isaac." At this point, Isaac knew that he was the sacrificial victim. Surely he could have run away from his aged father! Yet, like the Savior on an even darker day (John 10:17, 18), he was willing to do his father's will (Mark 14:36).

22:11, 12 the Angel of the LORD: An appearance of God (16:7; compare 24:7; 48:16). At the last moment, God spoke to Abraham from heaven; twice He called out his name. Do not lay your hand: The words used demanded an instant response. Abraham was just about to strike his son, then God stopped his hand (15:1). now I know: Certainly God knew ahead of time how this event would end. But in these words, God stood beside his servant Abraham, experiencing each moment with him and applauding his complete trust (18:19). The term for fear means to hold God in awe; this is the central idea of piety in the Bible (Ex. 20:20; Prov. 1:7).

22:13 With his attention solely on the awful task at hand, Abraham had not seen the ram until he looked for it. In an amazing manner, his earlier words of God's provision came to pass (v. 8).

22:14 The wonderful name The-LORD-Will-Provide is developed from the faith statement of Abraham to Isaac in v. 8. Compare the name of faith that Hagar gave to the Lord, "The-God-Who-Sees" (16:13). As God provided a ram instead of Abraham's son, so one day He would provide His own Son! Moriah is where Jerusalem and later the temple were built. And it was at Jerusalem that the Savior would die.

22:15–18 This is one of the texts that contain the Abrahamic covenant (see list at 15:1–21)—God's unbreakable promise to create a nation through Isaac.

22:16 By Myself I have sworn ("sworn," Heb. shaba) means "By Myself I swear" or "I bring Myself under complete obligation." When a man took an oath, it was considered unchangeable (25:33). When God took an oath, His eternity guaranteed the fulfillment of His word.

22:17 blessing I will bless you: The doubling of these verbs and the ones that follow (multiplying I will multiply) is a Hebrew idiom that powerfully emphasizes the certainty of the action. as the stars … as the sand: This use of hyperbole or exaggeration on God's part (Gen. 15:5; 13:16) must have overwhelmed Abraham. In ancient walled cities, the structure protecting the gate was the most important; to control the gate was to control the city. Later, the blessing of her family on Rebekah would contain the same prayer for her (24:60).

22:18 At times the term seed refers to a large number of descendants (13:16); at other times it refers to one unique descendant, the Coming One (as here and in Gal. 3:16). Here it is a grand play on words: The seed was Isaac; and by extension the Jewish nation; and the Seed was also Jesus.

22:19 As he had said (v. 5), Abraham returned with his son, and they all went together (v. 8) back to Beersheba.

22:20–24 Milcah: The family of Nahor had first been noted at 11:29. It is touching to observe that there was correspondence between the families; but this genealogical notice also leads to the birth of Rebekah, who would figure significantly in the story to follow. This little piece is one of the family histories that help tie the Bible together.

23:1 Sarah's 127 years allowed her to see her son Isaac reach adulthood.

23:2 Kirjath Arba means the "Village of Arba" or the "Village of Four" (Josh. 14:15). Abraham had lived for a while near Hebron at the location of some ancient terebinth trees (13:18; 18:1; 23:17). At this point the name Canaan would be particularly bitter to Abraham. None of the land was his. He had negotiated for water rights and herding privileges (21:22–34), but the land was not his; it still belonged to the Canaanites (12:6).

23:3 The Hittites had their principal center in Anatolia (modern Turkey). But there were some enclaves of Hittites (sons of Heth) in Canaan (15:20), and the region of Hebron was apparently one of them. It was with Hittites that Abraham negotiated to buy a burial spot for his beloved wife, Sarah.

23:4, 5 I am a foreigner and a visitor: Abraham was a "resident alien" in the land. His words were self-deprecating, to help him establish a bargaining position.

23:6 The sons of Heth (Hittites) responded with complimentary words. The adjective mighty is the term for deity (elohim as in 1:1). As an act of kindness, the Hittites let Abraham use one of their places for the burial of his dead family members.

“Seed”

(Heb. zera) (Gen. 3:15; 13:15; 15:3; 22:18; 28:13; Ps. 89:4) Strong’s #2233: The Hebrew word translated seed can literally mean a seed sown in the ground (1:11, 12) or figuratively one’s offspring or descendants (13:15). The word can refer to a large group of people, such as the descendants of Abraham or the nation of Israel, or to an individual. In some parts of Genesis it refers specifically to the coming Messiah, as in God’s promise that the woman’s “Seed” would defeat the serpent (3:15; Num. 24:7; Is. 6:13; Gal. 3:16). As such, the term takes on great importance in the Bible: It is through Abraham’s seed, both collectively in Israel and singularly in Christ, that God would reach out to save all people (15:3).

23:7–11 Abraham stood up and bowed: Abraham’s posture followed the customs of the time (v. 12). Abraham was not willing to bury Sarah in a borrowed tomb; he wanted to have a place that would belong to his family long after his death. His words meet with Ephron indicated that he wanted to purchase some property, the cave of Machpelah. Ephron the Hittite responded to Abraham’s request by generously offering to give him what he sought, plus the nearby field as well.

23:12, 13 I will give you money: He was not interested in the field, and he offered again to buy the cave. (Perhaps he believed a gift so easily given might as easily be withdrawn at a later time.) In any case, by money Abraham did not mean coins as we might think today. Coins were not invented until at least 650 B.C. Abraham was offering a generous weight of silver.

23:14, 15 The dialogue of the chapter is wonderful; it presents a step-by-step description of the bargaining process. Ephron gave the purchase price, then seemed to dismiss it (What is that between you and me?).

23:16 Abraham weighed out the silver: He could have received the property without cost, but since he paid the agreed upon amount there could be no question at a later date.

23:17 Abraham had to purchase not only the field and the cave, but also the trees. This meant that he was responsible for the maintenance of these trees as well. All was done in the formal, legal manner of the time. The record is fascinating to read, but also noteworthy for this: the only land Abraham ever really possessed was a burial spot for his wife.

Modern Hebron, successor to the ancient city of the same name where Abraham bought a burial cave for Sarah and his descendants (Gen. 23:19).

23:18–20 Abraham buried Sarah. Years later, Abraham would be buried in the same cave (25:10).

24:1–67 The passage tells how an unnamed servant of Abraham found a suitable wife for Isaac. The account is marked by a lingering style, with the loving details and repetition so treasured by the storytellers in Hebrew tradition. Above all it records the kind providence of the Lord toward His people.

24:1 The LORD had blessed Abraham in all things is a fulfillment of Gen. 12:2, 3, the original promise.

24:2 Some have thought the oldest servant to be Eliezer of 15:2 because of his high position over all that Abraham had.

24:3 swear by the LORD: Such an oath indicated how exceedingly important the matter was to Abraham. from the daughters of the Canaanites: This was not an issue of racism, as is sometimes thought—it was theological. The Canaanite peoples worshiped the false gods Baal and Asherah (15:16; compare Deut. 7:3).

24:4–7 The LORD God: The terms used of God in this chapter are extraordinarily rich, describing the strong faith not only of Abraham but also of his servant. Abraham repeated a major theme of God's covenant to him. His descendants would inherit the land (see list at 15:1–21). His angel: This phrase is grammatically equivalent to the expression "the Angel of the Lord." It is a way of referring to God's presence (Gen. 16:7; 22:11; 48:16).

24:8–10 The possession of camels in this ancient period was regarded as a mark of extraordinary wealth. Mesopotamia means "Aram of the Two Rivers." The location is northern Syria beyond the Euphrates (compare the location of Balaam's homeland, Num. 22:5; 23:7). The city of Nahor is known as Haran (11:31).

24:11 Traditionally, women drew water in the early morning or in the evening to avoid doing this heavy task during the heat of day.

24:12–14 O LORD God of my master Abraham: This language does not mean that the servant himself did not believe in the living God; rather, it was because of his faith that he prayed in this manner. The Lord had made His covenant with Abraham. The servant was making his appeal on the basis of God's covenant loyalty to Abraham, as is seen in his appeal to God's kindness (his covenant loyalty, 21:23). In the Psalms, this is the principal word used to describe God's "loyal love" (Ps. 100:5).

24:15 Rebekah's name may mean "Ensnaring Beauty." She was of the family circle of Abraham (22:20–23).

24:16–18 Such commentary on a woman's beautiful appearance is rare in the Bible (see the description of Sarai in 12:11; Rachel in 29:17; Joseph in 39:6; compare 1 Sam. 16:12). Her chastity is noted: a virgin; no man had known her. The word translated virgin is not a precise term; hence the clarification, "no man had known her."

24:19 I will draw water for your camels: This gesture went far beyond her social duties. This was precisely the proof that the servant had requested from the Lord.

24:20–22 The young woman must have been wondering what was happening to her because expensive gifts, such as a golden nose ring and two (gold) bracelets, would not ordinarily be given to a stranger.

24:23 Whose daughter are you: In biblical times, a young woman's identity was closely tied to her father's (Ruth 2:5), and a married woman's to her husband's. After stating her family ties (v. 24; 22:20–23), Rebekah responded that there was plenty of room for him to lodge with them (v. 25).

24:24–26 Abraham's servant was overwhelmed by God's grace, so he worshiped the LORD. He prostrated himself to the ground (the meaning of worshiped; 19:1; 22:5). No wonder Abraham had so greatly trusted him (vv. 1–9).

24:27 Blessed be the LORD: In these and the following words, Abraham's servant gave God true, public praise, as is later to be found in the Book of Psalms (Ps. 105:1, 2). Mercy and truth together mean something like "the Lord's utterly unswerving loyalty." being on the way, the Lord led me: What an outstanding pairing of concepts! God did not lead someone who was being lazy but who was already actively pursuing the will of God.

24:28, 29 We tend to remember Laban from his subsequent dealings with Jacob (chs. 29–31). Here he appears to be a gentle servant of God, recognizing Abraham's servant with gracious hospitality (v. 31).

24:30–49 I will not eat shows the servant's enthusiasm. The Lord had done a marvel, and the servant wished to delay eating until he had told his great story to Rebekah's family. The servant's story continues with a dramatic flair, noting details of timing and activity.

The Value of Gold

Gold can be found in nature as a metal, either pure or mixed with silver or copper. It is easily worked and does not corrode. It has been used as a measure of value from early times and is a perennial symbol of wealth and rank (Gen. 24:22).

24:50, 51 It is surprising that Bethuel the father was not more active in these proceedings (vv. 29–31). Perhaps he was aged or infirm; in any event, Laban, Rebekah's brother, seems to be the one making decisions. The thing comes from the LORD: In these words and in Laban's first responses to the servant of Abraham, v. 31, it appears that the family of Bethuel and Laban also worshiped the living God (11:27–12:4; Josh. 24:2). Here is Rebekah: Brother and father recognized the work of God and they responded graciously and immediately.

24:52 Before doing anything else, Abraham's servant worshiped the LORD by prostrating himself before God and by giving public acknowledgment of His provision (v. 26).

24:53–57 In the manner of the East and with the abundance that belonged to Abraham, the servant gave lovely and costly gifts of jewelry, first to Rebekah and then to her family. Again, the father is not mentioned.

24:58 Until now nothing had been said about Rebekah's desires, but her words I will go showed her willingness.

24:59 It was no easier for this family to send away their beloved daughter and sister Rebekah than it would be for us. This was an act of courage and faith in the Lord for all concerned.

24:60 they blessed Rebekah: In the customs of the ancient Near East, the family gave a formal blessing on her wedded life (Ruth 4:11, 12). These words are not mere sentiment nor are they a magical charm, but a prayer for God's blessing on her life. The mother of thousands of ten thousands: The two poetic lines echo the promise of God to Abraham and Sarah (17:15, 16). The term translated ten thousands means "myriads," "uncountable." It may be a play on the name Rebekah because in Hebrew the words sound similar. As in God's promise to Abraham (22:17), the possession of the gates of one's enemies meant power over them.

24:61–63 Rebekah and her maids must have made quite an entourage as they took off that day from Haran. Meanwhile, Isaac was also on the move (v. 62). Beer Lahai Roi was named in the story of Hagar's first expul-sion from Abraham and Sarah's household (16:13, 14).

24:62 The South is the Negev (12:9; 13:1).

24:63, 64 The precise meaning of the term translated to meditate is in dispute; perhaps it means "to walk about in thought."

24:65 In the manner of the East, wearing a veil would have been appropriate behavior for a young, unmarried woman who was about to come into the company of a man.

24:66 From the earlier recital to Laban (vv. 32–49), we can imagine the enthusiasm of the servant speaking to Isaac.

24:67 Isaac brought Rebekah to his mother's tent, a public act. his wife, and he loved her: Only rarely in the Bible do we read of romantic love (the Book of Ruth). But the Song of Songs rhapsodizes on it. Isaac's sense of grief at the death of his mother was now replaced by joy in the newness of married love. The story is lovely as it stands, a dramatic portrayal of God's kind providence toward His people.

25:1 The Hebrew phrase again took can be interpreted as “had taken.” Keturah: She was not Abraham’s second official wife. Instead she was a concubine (v. 6; 1 Chr. 1:32). As an unofficial wife, Keturah was probably with Abraham for life. Her sons had a status similar to that of Ishmael, Abraham’s son by Hagar (ch. 16), but without Ishmael’s particular blessing (16:10–16).

25:2 Midian was the father of the Midianites, some of whom later bought Joseph from his brothers (Gen. 36:35; 37:28, 36).

25:3–5 As the legal firstborn, Isaac received the grand share of his father’s fortune; beyond that, he received the blessing of God (v. 11; 26:2–5).

25:6 The concubines were Hagar and Keturah. To protect Isaac’s inheritance after his death, Abraham gave appropriate gifts to his lesser sons and sent them away.

25:7 God gave Abraham a long life as He had promised (12:2; 15:15).

25:8 gathered to his people: A burial. The phrase also indicates that there is an afterlife (15:15; 35:29; 49:33).

INSIGHT

Burials in Caves

Caves were not usually used as burial sites but as places of refuge (Gen. 19:30; Josh. 10:16; 1 Sam. 22:1; 24:1–3; 1 Kin. 19:13), or storage areas. In some periods, cadavers were buried in floors of houses, but mostly tombs were carved in the soft limestone rock of the Palestinian hills or dug into the dirt. Burial sites were used by families for generations. Abraham's purchase of the cave of Machpelah began a burial tradition continued by his descendants (Gen. 25:9, 10; 49:29–33; 50:13).

25:9 Abraham purchased the cave of Machpelah for the burial of his wife, Sarah (ch. 23).

25:10, 11 God blessed Isaac because He had already established "an everlasting covenant" with him (Gen. 17:19; Heb. 11:17). Later, God renewed the covenant with Isaac (26:2–5). Beer Lahai Roi means "The Well of the One Who Lives and Who Sees Me." At this well, an Angel of the Lord had appeared to Hagar (16:7–14).

25:12–18 genealogy of Ishmael: This passage distinguishes Ishmael's line, the line of the lesser promise (16:10–15), from Isaac's line (starting at v. 19), the line of the greater promise (for other genealogies in Genesis read note at 2:4).

25:16 God fulfilled his promise to Abraham (17:20). The descendants of Ishmael had twelve princes to govern them, just as the Israelites were divided into twelve tribes (ch. 49).

25:17 Ishmael … died: This notation of the death, following a long life, is a mark of significance to the narrator. The principal story will focus on Isaac, but Ishmael is not to be forgotten.

25:18 they dwelt: The descendants of Ishmael lived in a large area, including the Arabian peninsula and the desert land between Canaan and Mesopotamia.

25:19 genealogy of Isaac: There are ten significant genealogies in Genesis (2:4, note).

25:20 The story of the marriage of Rebekah and Isaac is recorded in ch. 24.

25:21 The Hebrew verb for pleaded (atar; used infrequently in the Bible) indicates that Isaac prayed passionately for his wife. For examples of passionate prayer, see Ex. 8:30; 2 Sam. 21:14; 24:25. Isaac waited twenty years for God to grant his prayer (vv. 20, 26). barren: Rebekah experienced a period of infertility just like Sarah, Rachel, and Leah (16:1; 29:31; 30:9). After a period of barrenness, the LORD specifically gave each child in the line of promise. In the OT world, the inability of a woman to conceive a child was regarded as a problem with the woman. In these ancient times, there was no understanding of sperm vitality and mobility, of course. Consequently, a barren woman might be both an object of pity and genuinely miserable herself (1 Sam. 1:6). In the Code of Hammurabi, barrenness was a legitimate reason for divorce. A woman divorced for this reason would not likely be remarried; her lot in life was truly pitiable. The recurring motif of barrenness in the family of God's promise may serve as a generation-by-generation reminder that the children finally born to these women were born because of the intervention of the Lord; thus, the LORD granted his plea. In this way, the children would not be regarded as simply the natural order of things, for each child in the line of promise was a distinct grace-gift from the Lord.

25:22 struggled: Rebekah's pregnancy was difficult. It seemed as though the two children were competing in her womb. inquire: In the context of sacrificial worship, Rebekah prayed to the Lord.

25:23 The LORD spoke directly to Rebekah (16:8–11). two nations: A theme of two sons recurs in Genesis: the sons of Eve (ch. 4), the sons of Tamar and Judah (38:27–30), and the sons of Joseph (ch. 48). In the ancient Near East, the firstborn would have preeminence. But this time God chose to bless the younger (compare 1 Sam. 16).

25:24 The birth of twins was regarded as a special blessing.

25:25 The name Esau sounds like the Hebrew word that means "hairy."

25:26 The younger brother grasped for his older brother's heel from birth. The Hebrew word that means "heel" sounds similar to the name Jacob. The name may mean either "He Who Grasps at the Heel (of Another)"or "He (the Lord) Is at His Heels (Is His Protector)." Later, Esau would taunt Jacob with the negative connotations of his name (27:36). Eventually God gave Jacob a new name, Israel (32:28).

25:27–34 A study of the patriarchal narratives indicates that there were two outstanding features associated with birthright, leadership of the clan and the guardianship of the promise.

25:27 hunter … mild man: The contrasting temperaments and interests of the two sons is similar to the contrast between Cain and Abel (4:2).

25:28 Isaac loved Esau: The following story illustrates the folly of parental favoritism.

25:29, 30 The ruddy color of his complexion (v. 25) was tied to his strong desire for the red food and later to the red land he inherited (36:8). Now Esau was known as “Red,” that is, Edom.

25:31, 32 Esau, as the firstborn, had a birthright to a double portion of the family estate. Moreover he inherited from Isaac the privilege of an everlasting covenant with God (Gen. 12:1–3).

25:33 swear to me: The formal oath, even though unwitnessed, would have been regarded as binding by both parties.

25:34 The Hebrew verb for despised implies utter contempt (Num. 15:31; 2 Sam. 12:9; Mal. 1:6). Esau scorned God’s promises given to the heirs of Isaac. Later, Esau greatly regretted his cavalier actions (Gen. 27:38).

26:1 An earlier famine occurred during the days of Abraham and led to Abraham going to Egypt (12:10–20). Abraham later had a similar misadventure in Gerar (ch. 20), a story that amazingly was repeated in some ways in the life of his son in the present narrative. The Philistines came to the coastland of Canaan following their defeat by the Egyptians around 1200 B.C. The Egyptians called them the "Sea Peoples." The Philistines were apparently Greek peoples who migrated eastward (1 Sam. 4:1; 2 Sam. 5:17).

26:2 The LORD appeared to Isaac for the first time on record. Interestingly, God had already spoken to Rebekah (25:22, 23). Even though Egypt's conditions may have been hospitable, the Lord prohibited Isaac from going to Egypt as his father had during the earlier famine (12:10).

26:3 bless you: The Lord fulfilled His promise to Abraham concerning Isaac (17:19). He established His everlasting covenant with Isaac just as He had with Abraham.

26:4, 5 God promised to make Isaac's descendants innumerable as the stars because of His covenant with Abraham (22:17). God promised to bless the entire world, all the nations, through Abraham's descendants (12:3; 22:18; 28:14).

26:6 Gerar was better for farming than the arid regions of the Negev.

26:7 Rebekah was a close relative (22:20–23) but not Isaac's sister. Isaac was even more deceitful than his father Abraham was (20:2, 12).

26:8 In this early period, window does not describe a pane of glass but an opening in the wall for ventilation, or an opening in the lattice work at the top of the building. showing endearment: This Hebrew wordplay for "sexual caress" and the name "Isaac" could be rendered: "He Who Laughs was laughing with Rebekah his wife."

Birthrights

When Jacob asked Esau to sell him his birthright (Gen. 25:31), he was looking to obtain a position that had both legal and spiritual benefits. In Bible times, the firstborn son enjoyed a favored position, which was his by right of birth (hence birthright). He was privileged to inherit a double portion of his father's assets (Deut. 21:17) and could expect to receive a special blessing before the father died. After his father's death, a firstborn son became the head of the family, carrying on the family name and even acting as the family priest.

The inheritance rights of the firstborn were protected by law; a father could not give his benefits to a younger son (Deut. 21:15–17). However, the firstborn himself could lose, forfeit, or sell his birthright. Jacob's son Reuben lost his favored position because he committed incest with his father's concubine (Gen. 35:22; 1 Chr. 5:1, 2). Likewise, Esau sold his birthright for a stew of lentils (Gen. 25:29–34), or "one morsel of food" (Heb. 12:16).

In doing so, Esau committed a grave sin. It was bad enough to squander his inheritance for a single meal. Far worse, he was throwing away the blessing of God, who he knew had promised to make a great nation of Abraham (22:15–18).

In this way, Esau serves as an example to believers today to hold onto what God has promised. Nothing is more important.

26:9, 10 how could you: A sense of moral outrage from the Philistine king. Ironically, Abimelech became the protector of Isaac and his wife.

26:11–13 God's special work for Abraham was extended to the son. The Lord blessed him so much that he became very prosperous and the envy of his neighbors.

26:14, 15 Abraham had made a covenant with Abimelech concerning the rights to wells (21:22–34). But enmity had led to acts of sabotage against these old wells.

26:16, 17 Although Isaac moved from Gerar, he did not leave the area.

26:18, 19 On the basis of Isaac's rights to the water in the area, his men dug new wells, giving these wells the same names as the old ones.

26:20 Esek comes from a verb meaning “to contend” and is used only here in the Bible.

26:21 Sitnah means “hostility” and is related to the Hebrew term for Satan.

26:22, 23 Isaac moved out of Gerar as the famine ended and water became more available. He returned to Beersheba, the land of his youth (22:19).

26:24 God of your father Abraham: God was faithful. He promised to the son what He had already promised to the father. This passage repeats the Abrahamic covenant (read references at 15:1–21).

26:25 Isaac followed the practice of his father (12:8). He made an altar and called on the name of the LORD: At this altar Isaac not only prayed to the Lord but also affirmed the reality of the living God in this special land (12:8; 21:33).

26:26 Abimelech came to end the animosity between his people and Isaac’s family because he recognized God’s blessing on Isaac (vv. 28, 29). Ahuzzath … and Phichol, associates of Abimelech, would witness the agreement.

26:27, 28 the LORD is with you: This was God’s design. He wanted to bless Abraham’s family because Abraham and his family followed Him. Then, God’s extraordinary blessing on His people would attract others to Himself (12:2, 3). The covenant formally bound both parties. The covenant here was as between two equals (for similar covenants, see Abraham and Abimelech in 21:2–34; Laban and Jacob in 31:43–55). The covenant between God and Abraham was of a different type, a covenant between a king and a servant (15:18).

26:29, 30 ate and drank: This ceremonial meal expressed the new relationship and memorialized the alliance (27:3, 4; 31:46, 54).

26:31 peace: The Hebrew term shalom suggests that things were “as they ought to be” between the two contracting parties.

26:32 This was either a brand new well or a redigging of Abraham’s well at that location (21:30, 31). The discovery of water was regarded as a blessing from God on their actions.

26:33 Shebah: The name is a wordplay on the Hebrew words that mean “swear” (v. 31) and “seven.” The name Beersheba may mean either “Well of the Oath” or “Well of the Seven.”

26:34, 35 Esau married Hittite women, who believed in many different gods. His parents wanted him to marry a woman who worshiped the living God (27:46; 28:8; 36:1–8). The name Judith is related to the word that means “praise,” similar to the name “Judah.” She is not mentioned among the wives of Esau in ch. 36. Perhaps, the marriage did not last. The name Basemath means “Fragrant.”

27:1–3 Isaac was old: Isaac actually did not die for many years (35:27–29). His actions were precautionary. his eyes: Isaac's failed vision allowed Jacob and his mother to trick him (vv. 11–29). For other blessings affected by Isaac's vision see Gen. 48:8–22. Ordinarily, a father would give the primary blessing to the firstborn, in this case Esau (25:29–34). Yet God worked contrary to cultural expectations and Isaac's favoritism (37:4). God had already blessed the younger (25:23).

27:4 Isaac wanted to memorialize his blessing on Esau with a ceremonial meal of savory food (27:30). my soul: This phrase is simply a substitute for the personal pronoun, "I." bless you: The father may have been unaware of the "deal" between the two sons where Esau sold his birthright to his brother (25:29–34). But Esau's words to his father (27:36) suggest that this was known to Isaac. Thus Isaac wished to overcome the loss of his son's birthright by the power of the words of great blessing. As it happened, Jacob would get both.

27:5 The mother had her favorite son as well, and the lack of understanding and agreement between the parents is an example of what today we might call a "dysfunctional family."

27:6, 7 her son: Rebekah, of course, was mother of both sons, but the phrasing here indicates her her special relationship with Jacob.

27:8–10 obey my voice: Rebekah wanted to circumvent the blessing that her husband planned to give to Esau. Here Rebekah appears to be calculating and devious. Yet God had told her that her younger son would have precedence over the older (25:23).

27:11, 12 Jacob wanted to know how he could pass as his brother. Esau had been hairy from birth (25:25). deceiver: Jacob feared that he would be discovered, not that he was doing wrong.

27:13–20 I am Esau: Jacob lied, then his lies led him to blasphemy. The attribution of his "good fortune" to the LORD indicates how far Jacob would go to achieve his aims.

27:21–27 come near: Isaac had to feel Jacob (vv. 21, 22), hear him (v. 22), question him (v. 24), kiss and smell him (v. 26, 27) before he finally believed Jacob's repeated lies. Each one of Jacob's lies needed another lie.

27:27–29 Ironically, Isaac began his blessing by describing the rustic smell of his son's clothing. peoples serve you: Isaac predicted that Jacob's descendants would obtain supremacy over other peoples. Jesus, as the King of kings and a descendant of Jacob, ultimately fulfilled this prediction (1 Tim. 6:14–16). master: This Hebrew word (gebir; also used in v. 37) is related to a word meaning “hero” (Heb. gibbor; Josh. 1:2; Is. 9:6) and describes one who is valiant and powerful. mother’s sons: Isaac intended that Jacob would bow to Esau. Yet because of Jacob’s deception, Isaac blessed Jacob instead. Cursed … blessed: Unwittingly, Isaac blessed Jacob with the words originally spoken by the Lord to Abram (12:3). Jacob became the heir to the everlasting covenant between Abraham’s descendants and the Lord.

27:30–32 Who are you: Surely Isaac recognized his older son’s voice.

INSIGHT

Becoming Head of the Family

Primogeniture is the social custom of giving the firstborn son the natural right to succeed his father as supreme head of the family (Gen. 27:32). Like the right of a prince to become king, it is not based on merit or talent but only on being the firstborn son. The Bible recounts several struggles between firstborn and younger sons.

27:33 In this word of despair, Who, Isaac realizes he had been duped by his own son. he shall be blessed: In this ancient culture, words could not be easily withdrawn as they often are today. Isaac's words of blessing had power; indeed, they were backed by the power of the Lord (vv. 27–29). They could not be withdrawn.

27:34 He cried: Esau's anguish was unbearable. Bless me: Surely Isaac had reserved some blessing for Esau.

27:35 Jacob had stolen the blessing Isaac had intended for Esau. deceit: Later, Jacob would be deceived by his uncle Laban (29:25).

27:36–38 rightly named: One meaning of the name Jacob is "He Who Grasps at the Heel (of Another)." Jacob lived up to the meaning of his name by trying to steal Esau's right as the firstborn. Actually, the blessing was one of the birthrights of the firstborn son. Esau, as the firstborn, probably hoped to overcome the loss of his birthright (25:29–34) with Isaac's powerful blessing. As it turned out, Jacob achieved both through underhanded means. The blessing was irrevocable (v. 37). Have you only one blessing: Esau repeated his pleas (v. 34). This repetition suggests a prolonged period of grieving.

27:39 Behold: The blessing for Esau was much weaker than the blessing for Jacob (for the "reserve blessing" for Ishmael, see 16:11, 12).

27:40 The blessing affirmed that Esau's descendants would serve his brother. Yet eventually they would free themselves from domination.

27:41 The feelings of Esau are now fully understandable; he hated Jacob. And they are shocking, for his plan was nothing less than to murder his brother, which recalls the fratricide of Gen. 4.

27:42–45 Apparently Esau revealed his evil decision to someone. Again, Rebekah intervened to help her favorite son. Laban was Rebekah's brother and Haran was her homeland (ch. 24). Earlier, Laban had welcomed Abraham's servant (24:29). The expression a few days is ironic, considering the great length, twenty years, of Jacob's subsequent sojourn (31:38, 41). bereaved: Rebekah would lose both her sons if Esau killed Jacob—the one to death and the other, like Cain, to exile. Sadly, she died before Jacob returned (31:18; 35:27–29).

27:46 daughters of Heth: Rebekah spoke to Isaac about Jacob's future wife because they had already regretted Esau's marrying Hittite women (26:34, 35). Furthermore, Isaac had found Rebekah in Haran.

28:1 Isaac agreed with Rebekah that intermarriage with the pagan women of Canaan was dangerous. These women would bring their own false gods into the household.

28:2 Padan Aram is a region of Haran in northern Aram (Syria) near the Euphrates River.

28:3 God Almighty: This Hebrew phrase, El Shaddai, is used by or in the hearing of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (35:11). God later identified Himself to Moses with this same name (Ex. 6:3).

28:4 Isaac formally passed on to his son Jacob the blessing that God had first given to his father Abraham (12:1–3). descendants: The Hebrew term seed may refer to a single individual (3:15) or to a number of people. This same term is used in prophecy to designate the coming Messiah, Jesus Christ (Num. 24:7; Is. 6:13).

28:6–9 Esau attempted to find favor in Isaac's eyes by doing what Isaac wished. By marrying Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael, Esau believed he had met the standard Isaac had given Jacob (v. 1). Sadly, Esau could not regain his lost blessing. Mahalath is the same woman as Basemath, the daughter of Ishmael, in 36:2. Her name probably means "Dance."

28:10, 11 The uses of the word stone to describe the pillow is problematic. Perhaps the stone was near rather than under his head.

28:12 dreamed: The manner of revelation in the patriarchal stories varies. This is the first where a revelation of the Lord came via a dream.

28:13 I am the LORD: God identified Himself as the God whom both Abraham and Isaac believed. Later, He becomes known as the God of Jacob (Ex. 3:15). Isaac, in his blessing, predicted Jacob would inherit this land (vv. 3, 4). Now God promised it!

28:14 The Lord ratified Isaac's blessing on Jacob's descendants (vv. 3, 4). all the families: Every time the covenant was renewed, God repeated His promise to show mercy to all people through Abraham's descendants (12:3; 22:18; 26:4). Seed refers to Jacob's sons; Jacob's descendants, the nation of Israel; and the Promised One (as in 3:15; Is. 6:13).

28:15 I am with you: Right when Jacob was running away from the consequences of his lies, God mercifully chose to reaffirm His promises. Jacob was in no position to earn God's favor. Yet God promised to be with him. God's choice of Jacob was not based on merit but grace. This is always true. God also saw in Jacob a man who would grow in faithfulness and in character strength. One day he would no longer be “Jacob,”—”He who supplants” (28:36)—but “Israel,”—“God persists!” (32:28).

28:16 I did not know: God takes the initiative in seeking and confronting us.

28:17 Afraid indicates a fear of God similar to terror. Afraid and awesome are related and indicate a fear of God similar to wonder and worship (22:12; Ex. 20:20; Prov. 1:7). In Jacob’s case, these twin emotions were mixed together. house of God … gate of heaven: God and heaven had come down to the very place where Jacob was sleeping!

28:18 stone … as a pillar: To commemorate the great event, Jacob set a stone on end and poured oil on top to consecrate it to God. Later he would refer to the Lord as “The Stone of Israel” (49:24). For Moses’ use of oil to consecrate the tabernacle see Lev. 8:10–12.

28:19 Bethel means “House of God.” God had also appeared to Abraham near Bethel (12:7, 8).

28:20 vow: Although Jacob made a conditional promise to be faithful to God, he based it on God’s promises to him (v. 15).

IN CONTEXT

The Mari Table: Towns

It is not known exactly when the patriarchs lived. Estimates for dating Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob rage from 2100 to 1800 B.C. These dates would locate the patriarchal period before, or simultaneous with, the Mari tablets, which have been placed between 1813 and 1760 B.C.

Mari was a powerful city, halfway between Babylon and the Mediterranean Sea on the banks of the Euphrates. It became rich through trading, and though it is not mentioned in the Bible it is well-known today because of the large archive of official documents discovered there. More than 20,000 clay tablets were dug up at the excavation site.

The Mari tablets frequently mention the cities Nahor and Haran. Abraham (Gen. 11:31) and Jacob (27:43; 28:10) lived in Haran, and Abraham's servant traveled to Nahor (24:10). Much of what is written in the Mari tablets may reflect aspects of culture known by the patriarchs.

28:21, 22 Jacob promised to give a tenth of his possessions to God. It is not known what prompted this percentage. His grandfather Abraham had given the same proportion to Melchizedek, the priest of God Most High (14:20). Later, the Mosaic law required giving a tenth to God (Deut. 14:22).

29:1 The people of the East were not Canaanites.

29:2–4 Shepherds would naturally gather at a well. As in the case of Abraham's servant (24:10, 11), Jacob met Rachel at a well, perhaps even at the same well. Because God allowed a number of significant events to occur at wells, they become a symbol of God's blessing and care (16:14; 21:19, 30; 26:32; Is. 12:3; John 4:1–26).

29:5 The term son is being used in a loose sense. Nahor was actually the grandfather of Laban (22:20–23). Laban's father was Bethuel (24:15, 50).

29:6–8 is he well: The expression involves the familiar term shalom in an idiom that was common in biblical speech. Rachel is a term of endearment, meaning "Ewe Lamb." As the daughter of his mother's brother, Rachel was a cousin of Jacob.

29:9, 10 still speaking: Rachel's arrival at that moment is a mirror of Rebekah's action to Abraham's servant so long ago (24:15–20). Again, God's timing is perfect (for Boaz and Ruth read Ruth 2:3).

IN DEPTH

Bethel

• A city of Palestine twelve miles north of Jerusalem.

• Originally called Luz (“light”), renamed Bethel (“house of God,” Gen. 28:19) by Jacob; later derided by the prophets (Jer. 48:13), especially Hosea, who called it Beth Aven (“house of idols or harlotry,” Hos. 4:15; 5:8; 10:5).

• Near the site of Abraham’s altar to God’s covenant (Gen. 12:8; 13:3).

• Place where Jacob erected a pillar to mark his dream of angels ascending and descending a ladder (28:10–22).

• Place where King Jeroboam of Judah established a rival, idolatrous sanctuary to the temple at Jerusalem by setting up a golden calf (1 Kin. 12:28–33; 13:1–32; 2 Kin. 10:29).

• Purged by King Josiah, the reformer who destroyed pagan shrines and idols (2 Kin. 23:15).

• Resettled after the Babylonian exile (Ezra 2:28; Neh. 7:32).

• Unmentioned in the New Testament.

• Not to be confused with Bethel in the territory of Simeon (1 Sam. 30:27), which may be the same as Bethul (Josh. 19:4) or Bethuel (1 Chr. 4:30).

29:11 kissed Rachel: Doubtless Jacob had heard the story of his mother’s encounter with the servant of Abraham many times. He knew their meeting was from God.

29:12–15 your wages: The story takes a new turn. Laban turns out to be a “sharp dealer,” a good match for Jacob “the supplanter.”

29:16 Leah was Rachel’s older sister. Her name may be a term of endearment meaning “Wild Cow.”

29:17 Delicate here may mean a special loveliness in her eyes or a weakness. beautiful of form: Rachel’s description is similar to the descriptions of Sarai (12:11) and of Rebekah (24:16).

29:18, 19 loved Rachel: A rare biblical example of “love at first sight” (for his father’s similar response to Rebekah read Gen. 24:67). The long seven years of service provides a stunning demonstration of the value Jacob placed on Rachel.

29:20, 21 seemed only a few days: A rare statement in the Bible on romantic love.

29:22 The Hebrew term feast indicates that there was drinking.

29:23 A public feast in recognition of the union made the marriage between Jacob and Leah official, even though Leah was the wrong woman.

29:24, 25 behold, it was Leah: The revelation of the morning light must have been nearly unbelievable to Jacob and a great hurt to Leah. We may also assume it was distressing for Rachel. Laban’s “dirty trick” not only showed contempt for Jacob but also demonstrated little care for his daughters’ feelings. The events also show how powerless women were in these circumstances in the ancient world. The Hebrew name deceived means “to act treacherously with” or “to betray” (1 Sam. 19:17). Jacob the deceiver had been deceived by Laban (27:35).

29:26 must not be done: The cultural necessity of Laban’s actions is doubtful.

29:27 Laban deceived Jacob in order to get another seven years’ work from him (for more of Laban’s sharp deals read Gen. 31:7, 41). Jacob loved Rachel so much that he was willing to work another seven years (v. 28).

29:28, 29 As did Zilpah (v. 24), Bilhah later served as a surrogate mother when Rachel was barren (30:3–8).

29:30, 31 Unloved (v. 33) actually means “hated.” The Lord graciously enabled Leah to conceive a child because she was unloved. The culture of the ancient Middle East placed value on a woman who could bear a child, especially a son. Although she was the beloved wife of Jacob, Rachel could not conceive. She desired Leah’s ability to conceive, and Leah desired the love that Jacob showered on Rachel.

IN CONTEXT

Women in the Ancient World

The record of Leah and Rachel stands out among the writings and stories that survive from ancient times. As near as we can tell, many cultures in the ancient world viewed women as little more than property. Furthermore, the men who recorded the literature of those times tended to overlook the presence and significance of their female counterparts. By contrast, the Bible not only includes women but also tells about their leadership, contributions, and feelings, and not just their sins and failures. Overall, Scripture provides an honest account of women as well as men in a fallen world.

29:32 Leah praised God for giving her a son. Perhaps Leah joyfully shouted "Behold a Son!" at Reuben's birth, which is what "Reuben" means. Leah's faith in Yahweh is attested in her acknowledgment that He had indeed seen her trouble and had reached out to meet her need. We are reminded of the story of Hannah (1 Sam. 1) and the great illustration of Yahweh's loyal love in Ps. 113:9. But there is more to the story than the isolated instance of child-bearing. From the birth of the first son of Eve our mother (4:1), OT accounts describe parents' quests for sons. Leah and Rachel fit this pattern, as do Sarah and Rebekah before them. Ultimately this quest leads to the birth of the Savior to Blessed Mary (Matt. 1:18–25), the fulfillment of the original promise of God to Eve that she would produce a Seed who would be the One to triumph over our great enemy (Gen. 3:15).

29:33 The name Simeon celebrates the fact that the Lord hears. He had heard Leah's prayers and He knew about her tragic relationship with Jacob.

29:34 Later, God chose the tribe of Levi to become priests and caretakers of the tabernacle. Then, the name Levi implied "Attached to the Lord."

29:35 Judah, the last of the first four sons of Leah and Jacob, was given a name related to (or sounding much like) a principal word for "praise of God" in the Bible (yadaÆ). This verb is translated "give thanks," but more properly means "to give public acknowledgment" (Ps. 118:1). Leah (in this verse) and Jacob (49:8) tie this name to the praise of Yahweh. Each of these four names then was an expression of the anticipation of Leah finally achieving loving acceptance by her husband. But it seems that in each case, Leah was to be denied her greater joy. We may also observe in the giving of these names that the narrator is not a modern philologist giving precise meanings to these words in their historical, linguistic development. Some of these names sound like the words to which they are related (Zebulun, at 30:20). Others are based on multilayered puns (Joseph, at 30:24). And some of the names mean precisely what they are said to mean.

30:1 The Hebrew verb for envied describes a strong inner feeling of rage (37:11), and may be translated "to act in zeal" (Num. 25:11; 1 Kin. 19:10; Zech. 8:2). Rachel's envy mirrored Sarai's envy of Hagar (ch. 16). or else I die: bitter feelings of jealously and rage.

30:2 Jacob's anger was aroused: We sometimes speak of someone being "livid with rage." In the midst of the bitterness in the family, which was growing with accusations and countercharges, the Hebrew idiom for anger is fascinating. Literally, it may be translated, "the nose of Jacob burned." The flushed face of the heavily bearded Semitic adult male would be most noticeable in the reddened nose—the origin of this expression. In the common Hebrew saying "the Lord is longsuffering" (compare Ex. 34:6), the Hebrew idiom means "long of nose," meaning that it is exceedingly difficult to cause Him to get angry. Unlike us, the Lord has a very long fuse (Ps. 103:8; Mic. 7:18). Jacob's rage against his hurting wife showed itself in a shifting of blame. Basically he said, "Don't blame me; blame God!"

30:3–5 Rachel's desperation led her to bring her maid Bilhah to Jacob as a surrogate wife (for Sarah doing the same thing with Hagar read ch. 16). This was accepted practice in the ancient Middle East to protect an infertile wife. A woman could be divorced if she failed to conceive.

30:6 Dan: In giving a name related to the Hebrew word that means "judge," Rachel thanked the Lord for hearing and answering her pleas.

30:7, 8 With the name Naphtali, which seems to mean "my wrestling," Rachel expressed the vehemence of her struggle with her sister.

30:9–13 Leah was happy because of her numerous sons, so she named her son Asher.

30:14 Mandrakes are a special type of herb that the peoples of the ancient Middle East regarded as an aid to conception. Their aroma was associated with lovemaking (Song 7:13). Reuben's discovery of the mandrakes led to another squabble between Leah and Rachel. In the end, Leah hired Jacob for a night with her.

30:15–18 The meaning of Issachar is in some dispute. It is treated as if meant "to hire out." Thus Issachar is "the Hired One," the one conceived because of the deal made between Leah and Rachel. Yet Leah again gives praise to the Lord, who had brought about the miracle.

30:19, 20 The verb "has endowed" in the Hebrew sounds something like Zebulun. The name is from the verb meaning "to be exalted." Thus

30:21 The name Dinah is related to the word that means “judgment.”

30:22 Finally, God enabled Rachel to have a child. The three verbs, remembered, listened, and opened, emphasize that conception is a gift from God.

30:23 my reproach: In Rachel’s culture a married woman without children was scorned.

30:24 By giving Rachel a son, God had removed her shame and brought joy to her life. The name she gave to him, Joseph, is a word-play in Hebrew on two similar sounding verbs that end up meaning, “He (Yahweh) Adds { Even as He Removes} .”

IN CONTEXT

Concubines

Leah and Rachel, the wives of Jacob, used their maids to compete with each other for their husband's favor by having them bear his children (Gen. 30:3–13). Thus the maids, Zilpah and Bilhah, became secondary wives or "concubines" to Jacob.

The practice of "marrying" concubines, a form of polygamy, was known throughout the ancient Middle East. A concubine was usually a female slave with whom the leading male of the family was free to have sexual relations. She was not considered an equal to his "full" wife (or wives), but she could not be sold if the man lost interest in her. However, rights varied from culture to culture.

One of the main justifications for keeping a concubine was to give birth to children, particularly a son and therefore an heir.

30:25 With the birth of Joseph by his beloved wife, Jacob was ready to go to his own place. Jacob had always wanted to return to Canaan (27:43, 44). Indeed, God had promised to bring him back to his homeland (28:4, 15).

30:26 Since Genesis speaks only of Laban's daughters during Jacob's visit, Laban probably did not have a son at the time (29:16). Therefore he adopted Jacob as his son and principal heir. The Code of Hammurabi attests that this was a common practice in the ancient Middle East. As the principal heir, Jacob and his family were regarded as a part of Laban's household (v. 43). But in the intervening years, Laban had fathered sons who would threaten Jacob's status in the family (31:1). Hence, he asked Laban to let him go.

30:27 God had promised to bless others through Abraham's descendants (12:2, 3). Now, God blessed Laban through Jacob, and later He would bless an Egyptian household through Joseph (39:5).

30:28 name your wages: These words must have sounded hollow to Jacob, given his earlier experience in striking a deal with Laban (29:15–30; 31:7).

30:29, 30 the LORD has blessed you: Both Laban (v. 27) and Jacob recognize the work of God in the increase of the livestock.

30:31, 32 Presumably, the speckled and spotted sheep would be the smaller part of the flock. The deal was to Laban's advantage.

30:33 my righteousness: Jacob asserted his trustworthiness.

30:34 according to your word: The deal was struck.

30:35, 36 three days' journey: A distance of about sixty miles separated Jacob's and Laban's herds so the animals would not mix. Jacob still tended Laban's flocks.

30:37–40 rods of green poplar: Jacob placed sticks of various colors in the watering troughs to symbolize his belief that God would bless him with more speckled and spotted lambs (v. 27; compare 31:5, 9, 10). Indeed, God blessed Jacob as He had promised (28:13–15). Jacob added all the speckled and spotted animals to his own herd.

30:41–43 With the symbolic multicolored rods, Jacob asked God to bless him with speckled and spotted animals from the stronger livestock in Laban's herd. Indeed, God promised to do just that in a dream (31:10), and Jacob became wealthy (v. 43).

31:1 These sons probably were born to Laban after Jacob had arrived in Haran (30:26). Concerned about their welfare, the sons accused Jacob of being a thief.

31:2 The countenance of Laban: Jacob realized that he had lost favor with his father-in-law, Laban.

31:3–6 God repeated the promises He gave Jacob at Bethel. He promised to be with Jacob as he returned to his homeland. This promise, I will be with you, is in fact related to the very name of God, Yahweh (Ex. 3:12, 14). Verses 11–13 describe more of this revelation.

31:7 Deceived may also mean "to trifle with" (compare 29:29).

31:8 speckled … streaked: Apparently, Laban kept on switching the deal as he watched the births of a variety of colored animals. But with every new deal, God always increased Jacob's herd.

31:9–11 The Angel of God may be translated The Angel of Genuine Deity. God revealed Himself in Jacob's dream (Gen. 28:13–17; 32:22–30). Jacob: Here, God used the positive meaning of the name Jacob "He (the Lord) Supplants." For the negative sense see Gen. 25:26; 27:36. In the past, Jacob ("He Who Supplants") had achieved what he wanted by deceit and trickery. Now he had achieved great wealth because of God's blessing. The Lord is the Great Supplanter! Although Jacob's name was later changed to Israel (32:28), the name Jacob continued to be a term indicating God's work in Jacob's life (46:2; Ps. 114:7).

31:12, 13 The Lord identified Himself as the same God who had revealed Himself to Jacob at Bethel (28:10–19).

31:14 Rachel and Leah agreed that it was proper to leave their father's home, despite the cultural ties that ordinarily would have kept them there (30:26).The births of sons to their father may have displaced their inheritance.

31:15 Both daughters resented the way their father had sold them (29:15). Furthermore, they argued that whatever God had taken from their father belonged to them anyway.

31:16–19 household idols: Laban's family was either polytheistic—believing in many gods—or henotheistic—believing in Yahweh as one god above all other gods (for Joshua's recollection of the polytheism of Abraham's relatives read Josh. 24:1–3). In this culture, possession of the household idols was the right of the principal heir. Rachel probably did not steal the idols in order to worship them, but to retain the rights of the principal heir for Jacob. Ultimately, the Lord's blessing on Jacob was more important for him than any rights derived from being Laban's principal heir.

31:20, 21 When a river is not named, it is often the Euphrates in these contexts. Jacob was about to repeat the journey made by his grandfather and grandmother years earlier. Like Abram and Sarai (12:1–4), he was going to Canaan.

31:22–25 But God: What great words! Man does what he can, but God is still in control. As is said, "Man proposes, but God disposes." Man plans, but God intervenes and delivers. The descriptive phrase Laban the Syrian is arresting. The term "Syrian" (better, "Aramian") reminds us that while Laban was of the extended family of Jacob, he was not part of the covenant community. in a dream: From time to time, God warned others not to harm His people (for Abimelech's dreams read 20:3, 6; for God's encounter with Balaam read Num. 22:12, 20).

Helping God Out

As his experience with Laban shows, Jacob had a tendency to try to "help God out" in solving thorny problems. Laban must have been a difficult father-in-law at best. He constantly found new ways to cheat his son-in-law, whether it involved a "bait-and-switch" bride (Gen. 29:14–30) or manipulation in the family business (30:25–36). At times Jacob responded as a principled man. But at other times he resorted to treating Laban in kind, using his own style of deception and scheming.

Eventually God told Jacob to return to his homeland with the promise, "I will be with you" (31:3). But instead of trusting God and making a clean break with Laban, Jacob began complaining to his wives (31:4–16), with the result that the family stole away, taking some of Laban's property with them (31:17–21). Pursued and caught by Laban, Jacob grew angry and attempted to justify himself (31:36–42).

Much of this could have been avoided if Jacob had simply trusted and acted upon God's promise to be with him. Instead, he further complicated his troubled family by causing Laban's daughters to turn on their father in deceit and treachery.

31:26 The sudden departure, Laban charges, was similar to a raiding party that took captives.

31:27 This was all bluff and they both knew it.

31:28 Done foolishly carries a threat with it, again showing the strange admixture of his words.

31:29 God of your father: Only God's warning in v. 24 stilled Laban's rage.

31:30 The principal charge is the theft of the gods. Laban needed these household gods in his possession to secure his sons' heritage.

31:31, 32 Jacob explained that he left in secret because of a genuine fear that he would not be permitted to leave with his family. Furthermore, he declared his household innocent of the alleged theft and cursed the thief of the idols with death.

31:33 Laban, certain that Jacob had stolen the idols, began his search in Jacob's tent. Last, he entered Rachel's tent. The fact that each wife had her own tent indicates that Jacob was rich.

31:34, 35 Rachel hid the idols in her saddle bags and sat on them while she made her excuses. Laban did not ask Rachel to move because of a male taboo respecting a woman who was experiencing her monthly period.

31:36 Jacob, in his anger, recited the woes of working for Laban. Trespass (Heb. pesha) means to "overstep a boundary." Sin (Heb. hattat) means "to miss a target" (as an archer might do). These words are used more often of actions against God than man, of course.

31:37 they may judge: Jacob had some leverage. Laban had been humiliated before his own men. His resolve to stop Jacob necessarily had to weaken.

31:38 Jacob had served fourteen years for his two wives (29:15–30). After that, he worked another six years for his flocks (v. 41). not miscarried: Here, Jacob affirmed his superior skills in managing the herds and God's blessing.

31:39–41 Jacob never charged Laban for any loss so that he could never charge Jacob for mismanagement. Furthermore, Jacob described the seasonal extremes that he suffered.

31:42 The Fear of Isaac: This name for God means that Isaac feared God with a reverential awe (Ps. 119:120). rebuked you last night: Perhaps Jacob knew that God had appeared to Laban.

31:43 Laban considered Jacob's children part of his extended family because he had adopted Jacob as a son and principal heir.

31:44 Covenant in this situation refers to a parity covenant, an agreement between equals. The word witness refers to a lasting reminder of a significant agreement or to a testimony that can be used in a court.

31:45, 46 Jacob, for a second time, set up a stone as a memorial. On the way to Haran at Bethel, he had already set up a pillar to mark the place where God spoke to him (28:18). Later he would erect another pillar at Bethel (35:14). In addition to the stone pillar, they also made a stone heap (v. 51). A ceremonial meal memorialized the agreement (26:30). At this meal, Jacob and Laban ate some of the animals that had been sacrificed while making the covenant.

31:47, 48 Jegar Sahadutha, Laban's term, is in Aramaic, and Galeed, Jacob's term, is in Hebrew. This is remarkable. Laban's term constitutes the only Aramaic words in the Book of Genesis. Further, even though this is a serious situation, we wonder if there may be some humor in the fact that they have two names and symbols (a pillar, v. 45, and a heap). Were the two men able to agree on anything?

31:49 Mizpah means "Outlook Point" and is related to the Hebrew word that means "to watch." God above had His eyes on both men to make them keep their covenant!

31:50 It is not easy to make up one's mind about Laban! Here he seems to show regard for his daughters' welfare; a moment ago he might have had to face the possibility of executing one of them. God is witness is the point of the text. They could not watch one another, but God would watch them both.

31:51, 52 The heap and the pillar (vv. 45–48) were a double witness between the two men. Neither was to cross these symbols in order to harm the other.

31:53 The wording in Laban's oath suggests that Abraham, Nahor, and their father, Terah, all worshiped the same God, the God of Abraham. Possibly, the family believed in the Lord as the one God above many other gods—henotheism (for an indication of Terah's polytheism compare Josh. 24:1–3).

31:54, 55 Jacob offered a sacrifice: This is the only time Genesis records Jacob engaging in sacrificial worship (compare 12:7, 8; 22:13). ate bread: As in other cases, the act of eating together further solemnized the agreement (26:30).

32:1 the angels of God: In a magnificent display of His care for him, God allowed Jacob to see that he was not traveling alone (2 Kin. 6:17).

32:2 Jacob discovered that God's armies were encamped around his family's camp. Mahanaim means "a double camp."

32:3–5 Jacob sent messengers to Esau with a report of his life over the last twenty years and with a request for favor, that is, grace.

32:6 Jacob viewed his brother's coming as a threat to his family, particularly when he learned that four hundred men were with him.

32:7 Here, the Hebrew term for afraid (yare) refers to fright or terror (31:42). Jacob divided his family into two groups in order to save one from the rage of his brother.

32:8–11 Jacob prayed to God that he might be delivered from Esau's rage. The Hebrew term for father indicates either the immediate father or a more remote male ancestor. By mentioning both Isaac and Abraham, Jacob appealed to the God who had spoken to his fathers. Jacob reminded the LORD of His promises to him. Then Jacob confessed his humility before God's mercy in the words I am not worthy. Next, Jacob asked God to deliver him. He did not pray in generalities. Instead, he named his concern: Esau! Finally, he concluded with another appeal to God's promises. Christians today can likewise base their prayers on God's proven character and His promises in the Bible.

32:12–21 a present for Esau: Jacob had prayed in faith; now he acted in faith. He gave Esau an overabundance of gifts. By giving the gifts at three different times, Jacob hoped to appease Esau gradually.

32:22–24 Jacob had been struggling all his life; even at the moment of his birth he was struggling with Esau (25:26). Later he struggled with Laban (ch. 31). Yet right before meeting Esau, Jacob had the struggle of his life! He who had once grasped his brother's heel now clung to the bodily form of the living God. Some believe that the Man who wrestled Jacob was the preincarnate Jesus Christ. Others believe the Man was the Angel of God (Gen. 21:17; 31:11). In any case, Jacob wrestled with a manifestation of God (vv. 28–30), and because of God's mercy he survived.

32:25, 26 He did not prevail against him: The Man could not turn Jacob away from the struggle—even though He could have easily defeated Jacob. This Hebrew verb translated touched (naga) refers here to God's special touch, as when God touches the earth (Amos 9:5) or the human heart (1 Sam. 10:26). Here, God's touch caused pain (Josh. 9:19; 2 Sam.

14:10). Yet Jacob would not give up. He would not release the Man until he received a blessing.

IN CONTEXT

Household Gods

One of the most curious patriarchal accounts is the theft of Laban's household gods by his daughter Rachel (Gen. 31:19). The story is peculiar because of Laban's insistence on finding these gods (31:33–35), and that they are not mentioned either before or after this incident. After all, they were probably made of clay, like the hundreds of other household gods that have been excavated, and had little intrinsic value.

The account also presents other puzzles, such as both men's claim of ownership of the wives, children, and flocks (31:43). Solving these puzzles is helped by evidence from the second millennium B.C. Nuzi tablets, which say that these household gods were at times used as evidence of family leadership. This may explain that Rachel stole the gods to give her husband the position of tribal leader. It may also explain why Laban was so insistent to have these gods back.

32:27, 28 God had burst into Jacob's life, had given him the sure promises that were given to Abraham (28:13–15), and now—following a nightlong struggle with him—He gave him a new name. The name Israel can mean "Prince with God," or perhaps it carries the idea of struggling or persisting, as the wordplay in this passage implies.

32:29 Jacob asks for the Man's name because Jacob had given his name. The Man does not answer. But Jacob might have developed his own name for the Man who had wrestled with him: "The Mighty God of Jacob" (49:24). God would one day reveal His name more fully to Moses (Ex. 3:14, 15).

32:30, 31 Jacob's experience with God physically changed him; he limped. The experience also had a spiritual impact on his life.

32:32 to this day: As always in Genesis, this phrase means the day of the first readers of the book. The Jewish rule against eating this muscle continues into modern times within Judaism.

33:1 For all Jacob knew, Esau was coming with 400 men to destroy his family.

33:2 maidservants and their children in front: Jacob aligned his family in a pattern that would protect them. He placed his favorite wife, Rachel, in the rear.

33:3 That Jacob bowed himself was an act of humility and a sign of contrition.

33:4–9 Instead of taking his revenge, Esau welcomed Jacob with joy. The event turned into a grand family reunion (for Joseph's family reunion read 45:15).

When You Least Expect It

Sometimes good happens to us when we least expect it. Sometimes we receive far more good than we deserve. When Jacob learned that Esau was approaching (Gen. 32:6), he was terrified. Here was his older twin brother—the brother that he and his mother had cheated out of his rightful portion of the family inheritance (27:1–29)—coming toward him with 400 men. Jacob assumed the worst. He cried out to God for mercy and deliverance (32:9–12) and sent his own extended family and his possessions to his brother's "welcoming committee" (32:13–23).

Yet to Jacob's surprise, Esau ran to him, embraced him, kissed him, and wept (33:4). This kind of grace was completely unexpected. It proved disarming to Jacob, and he could only respond by pressing his gifts on Esau, perhaps as a small remuneration for the lost inheritance (33:8–11).

Like Jacob, we, too, were extended grace and forgiveness when we least expected it, or deserved it. In providing salvation through Christ, God offers unmerited favor to people who actually deserve judgment (Rom. 3:23–25; 5:15–17; James 4:1–6).

Jacob insisted on paying back his brother, and Esau finally accepted. But we can never pay back God for what He has done for us. However, we can respond to His gift of love by showing that same kind of love to others, especially as God teaches us how (1 John 3:11–17).

33:10 your face as … face of God: Jacob presented his gifts to his brother as if they were gifts to God. In this manner, he reenacted Abraham's gifts to Melchizedek (14:20) and indeed, he fulfilled his vow to the Lord (28:22).

33:11 take my blessing: Before, Jacob had done all he could to take Esau's blessing (25:29–34; 27:1–45). Now a wiser man, Jacob wanted to bless his brother with what God had given him. He wanted to restore the broken relationship with his brother.

33:12–16 Following their reconciliation, the two brothers discussed the best manner for the completion of their journey. Jacob seems not to wish to be under obligation to Esau, so he resists each act of kindness from Esau. There is also no covenant made between the two brothers. Perhaps this means that while the brothers were no longer hostile to one another they would still never become “pals.”

33:17 Jacob stopped his journey and built temporary shelters east of the Jordan, perhaps at Deir Alla, one mile north of the Jabbok River.

33:18 Jacob retraced his grandparents’ route into Canaan through Shechem (12:6). Jacob did not live in the city, because it was devoted to pagan gods. Instead, he lived outside the city in a tent.

33:19 As his grandfather had purchased land for a burial place for Sarah (ch. 23), so Jacob bought a parcel of land. Even though God promised the entire land to Abraham’s family (12:7), they had to buy it one little piece at a time.

33:20 Jacob, now named Israel, built an altar for the worship of the Lord, just as his grandfather had (12:7). The name he gave the altar reflected his mature faith in “God, the God of Israel.” The God of Jacob’s fathers was now Jacob’s personal God, for He had fulfilled His promises and protected him (28:13–15).

34:1 Apparently Dinah was Leah's only daughter (30:21). It was natural for her to seek the companionship of other women.

34:2 Shechem noticed Dinah and forced her to have intercourse. The term violated translates the same word used for Amnon's rape of Tamar (2 Sam. 13:12, 14). Despite what he did, Shechem loved Dinah. The expression spoke kindly literally means, "spoke to her heart."

34:3, 4 Shechem's appeal to his father suggests that marriages were commonly arranged by parents.

34:5 When Jacob heard, he must have been enraged. The verb translated defiled here means "to make unclean."

34:6–10 Hamor presents what appears to be a reasonable position. The problem, of course, was that in these intermarriages there would be a loss of particularity, a loss of the sense of the promise, and a loss of the true worship of God. These concerns would have been lost on Hamor.

34:11, 12 Shechem is appealing in his naive expression of love.

34:13 spoke deceitfully: The proposal of the brothers was disingenuous (Heb. mirma, the same word used by Esau to describe the actions of Jacob in Gen. 27:35).

34:14–17 uncircumcised: Here, Jacob's sons took the symbol of their holy faith (17:9–14) and used it as a weapon against their foes.

34:18 Shechem proved his love for Dinah by his willingness to undergo circumcision as an adult.

34:19 Delighted is also the verb used in Hebrew with God as the subject in His delight in His people (Ps. 147:10, 11).

34:20–29 Most likely, Jacob's other sons joined Simeon and Levi in plundering the city. Jacob's sons let righteous anger over sin turn into unrighteous, unforgiving vengeance (Eph. 4:26).

34:30, 31 Jacob rebuked his sons for their terrible behavior (done in the name of the Lord). Instead of making the family a blessing to other nations (12:3), they were making the family obnoxious to its neighbors. The Hebrew word means "to stink." Jacob's family had become an embarrassing odor to their neighbors, something that at best needed to be ignored and at worst to be scorned. Sadly, Jacob's sons did not repent. Instead, they protested their father's rebuke.

35:1 God, for a fifth time, visited Jacob (Gen. 28:10–16; 31:3, 11–13; 32:1, 22–30; also Gen. 35:9–15). After the debacle at Shechem (ch. 34), God told Jacob to continue to Bethel, the place where God had first appeared to him (28:10–19). Again, Jacob retraced his grandfather Abraham's route (12:8). This is the first time in the Bible that God commanded an altar to be made for Him. Abraham constructed an altar, but no divine command was recorded (12:7, 8).

35:2 Jacob's command included the household idols that Rachel had stolen (31:22–35) as well as any idols among his servants. These foreign gods were gods of other people, not of Jacob. Indeed, the only true and living God is Jacob's God. purify yourselves, and change your garments: Jacob's household prepared for an encounter with the living and holy God. They cleaned themselves. Later, the Israelites would clean themselves in similar ways at the foot of Mount Sinai (Ex. 19) and at other times and places.

35:3 I will make an altar: Jacob declared his intention to obey God's command (v. 1). who answered me … has been with me: Jacob recalled God's constant protection (ch. 32) and His fulfillment of His promises (28:13–15) as a reason to obey and worship God.

35:4 As suggested by the nearby phrase foreign gods, these earrings probably represented some form of idolatry. In two other passages, earrings are mentioned in connection with idolatry (Judg. 8:22–28; Hos. 2:13). In many other passages, earrings are simply items of jewelry (Ex. 32:2, 3; 35:22; Prov. 25:12). The terebinth tree is a long-living deciduous tree, such as an oak. The tree has red berries and leaves shaped like feathers. Because the tree lived a long time, ancient people often used the terebinth tree to commemorate important events or to mark places of worship (Hos. 4:13).

35:5 God protected Jacob's family as they traveled. The Hebrew term for terror is related to the verb meaning "to be shattered" or "to be dismayed" (for examples of the use of this verb for divine judgment read Is. 7:8; 30:31).

35:6 Luz … Bethel: The change of name is explained at 28:19 (Josh. 18:13; Judg. 1:23).

35:7 El Bethel: Naming an altar added to the solemnity of the worship conducted there (22:14).

35:8 Deborah was a nurse of Rebekah (24:59). The Hebrew verb translated as died means “had died.” Deborah had already died, but at this point the family commemorated her death and buried her at Bethel.

35:9 God renewed His everlasting covenant with Jacob. This is the eighth passage dealing with the Abrahamic covenant (15:1–21, note).

35:10 God validated Jacob’s change of name and reaffirmed His promises to him. Now Jacob would be called Israel (32:28). Note that Genesis uses the names Jacob and Israel interchangeably (vv. 14, 20–22; 46:2).

35:11, 12 This is the third use of the name El Shaddai, God Almighty (17:1; 28:3; compare Ex. 6:3). God used His great name to attest His strong relationship with Jacob. Be fruitful is the language of the covenant and is used of Jacob here to demonstrate that it was he and not Easu who was the true heir of the promises (27:26–29; 28:3, 4). Nation and land are two words used by God in the promises to Abram (12:2, 7) and reconfirmed in the formal covenant (15:18–21).

35:13 God went up: The living God had made His will known and now returned to His abode. This is one of the rare expressions in the Bible of God ascending (Acts 1:9).

35:14 This is the second pillar Jacob set up to commemorate God’s revelation at Bethel (28:18). Later, Jacob referred to God as “The Stone of Israel” (49:24). drink offering: Jacob consecrated the pillar by pouring wine and oil over it.

35:15, 16 Ephrath is an alternative name for the region around Bethlehem (v. 19; 48:7; compare Ruth 1:3; Mic. 5:2). The King of Glory would one day be born near the birthplace of Benjamin (Matt. 2:1).

35:17, 18 fear: Rachel’s sorrow and fear that her second son might be stillborn became a symbol for all mothers who fear for their child’s life (Jer. 31:15; Matt. 2:18). Jacob’s name for his new son Benjamin indicates his youngest son’s special place in the family: at Jacob’s right hand. Benjamin would commemorate his beloved wife.

35:18 The phrase as her soul was departing does not indicate that the soul was considered a separate entity from the body with an existence of its own, but only that the life was departing.

35:19 Rachel was the only one of the principal characters in Abraham’s family of promise who was not buried at the cave of Machpelah (Gen. 23:19, 20).

35:20 Jacob had set up pillars to mark the Lord's great works in his life (28:18; 35:14) and to commemorate his agreement with Laban (31:45). Here he erected a pillar to mark his sorrow.

35:21 Eder means "flock." This flock tower is mentioned only here and perhaps in Mic. 4:8.

35:22–26 Reuben, Jacob's firstborn son, may have been asserting his right to be the principal heir. Maybe he felt slighted by Jacob's implication that the youngest son, Benjamin, was the son of his right hand. By sleeping with his father's concubine, he was asserting that he would succeed his father. Ironically, this very action caused him to lose the blessing he desired (49:3, 4).

35:27, 28 After more than twenty years of absence, Jacob finally visited his father. Sadly, his mother Rebekah was probably dead since she is not mentioned. Mamre is identified as Hebron, where Isaac passed his youth with his father Abraham (Gen. 13:18).

Pillars of Stone

Pillars of stone are the oldest kind of monument (Gen. 35:14). There are more than 3000 stone pillars at Carnac, France, dating from before 2000 B.C. When no writing accompanies a pillar, it is usually impossible to determine its meaning. The pyramids and obelisks of Egypt are in effect elaborations of the pillar.

35:29 The expression gathered to his people may also suggest a belief in the afterlife (15:15; 25:8; 49:33; 2 Sam. 12:23). Isaac's formerly feuding sons, Esau and Jacob, joined together to bury Isaac with his father and mother in the cave at Machpelah (49:31). Leah and Jacob would be buried there also (49:29–33; 50:12, 13).

36:1 The Hebrew term for genealogy means “family history” (2:4, note). At birth, Esau was notably ruddy in color (25:25) and he was called Edom, meaning “Red” (v. 8).

36:2, 3 Because Esau took his wives from the daughters of Canaan, his family would be no different from other families of Canaan. Rebekah and Isaac worried about Esau’s wives (26:34, 35; 28:6–9). Would they tempt Esau’s family to abandon the Lord, the holy and living God? Adah means “Ornament.” Her father’s name Elon means “Terebinth.” Aholibamah means “My Tent Is a High Place.” Anah may mean “Sing!” and Basemath means “Fragrant.”

It appears that the names of Esau’s wives are confused in Genesis. The names of his wives earlier in Genesis are: Judith the daughter of Beeri the Hittite (26:34), Basemath the daughter of Elon the Hittite (26:34), and Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael, sister of Nebajoth (28:9). In 36:2, 3 his wives are named as Adah the daughter of Elon the Hittite, Aholibamah (or better, Ohilibamah) daughter of Anah, the daughter of Zibeon the Hivite, and Basemath the daughter of Ishmael, sister of Nebajoth. The confusion in these names may have occurred because of scribal errors through the centuries. The versions show attempts to correct the name spellings to show some consistency. It is also possible that two of these wives of Esau had double names and that four, not three, women are in view. The confusion of names may be solved in the following manner: (1) Judith the daughter of Beeri (26:34) may not have survived, or may not have lasted as a wife to Esau. She is not included in the listing of wives in ch. 36.

(2) Basemath the daughter of Elon the Hittite (26:34) is the same as Adah the daughter of Elon the Hittite (36:2); apparently she bore both names. Thus she is distinct from Basemath the daughter of Ishmael (number 4, below).

(3) Aholibamah (better, Oholibamah) the daughter of Anah the daughter of Zibeon the Hivite is mentioned only in ch. 36.

(4) Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael the sister of Nebajoth (28:9) is the same person as Basemath the daughter of Ishmael the sister of Nebajoth (36:2); apparently she bore both names.

In this way, the confusion of names is more apparent than real. Even in our own day we find that certain names seem to have a “run” in families, not only among their children but also among their children’s spouses and in-laws. Thus we may say “Big David” and “Little David,” or “Lisa A” and “Lisa B.”

36:4–8 Genesis describes the growth of Esau’s family and possessions. He moved to Mount Seir. Eventually, the region would be named after Esau—Edom, the “Red” land (v. 43). Esau’s separation from Jacob was similar to the separation of Lot from Abraham (13:6–13).

36:6–8 This separation had occurred probably between Jacob’s purchase of Esau’s birthright (25:29–34) and the stealing of Esau’s blessing (27:18–29), before Jacob was sent to Haran (28:5). When Jacob returned to Canaan, Esau was already living in Mount Seir (32:3), southeast of the Dead Sea.

36:9–19 These verses parallel and expand on the genealogical list of Esau’s family in vv. 1–8. Verses 15–19 expand further on this same list. More care is given to the genealogy of Jacob. When the material is pulled together, we have the following family line: The sons of Esau (born before leaving Canaan): Eliphaz, whose mother is Adah (36:4); Reuel, whose mother is Basemath (36:4); and Jeush, Jaalam, and Korah, whose mother is Aholibamah (36:5). The sons of Eliphaz (son of Esau and Adah): Teman, Omar, Zepho, Gatam, Kenaz (36:11), and Amalek, whose mother is Timna (36:12). The sons of Reuel (son of Esau and Basemath): Nahath, Zerah, Shammah, and Mizzah (36:13). No sons are named for Esau’s sons by Aholibamah (36:14).

36:12 Timna’s son, Amalek, founded a people that later would trouble the Israelites (Num. 14:39–45).

36:20–30 The people of Seir, the Horites, had close interrelationships with Esau’s family. These family histories are repeated in 1 Chr. 1:38–42.

36:31–39 This list follows the list of the chiefs of Edom (vv. 15–19). The eight names in this list are unrelated to each other. This indicates that they were chosen for reasons other than royal descent.

IN CONTEXT

The Horites of Mount Seir

At one time, Seir and Edom may have been two separate geographical regions. Seir was mountainous and Edom was part of the Transjordanian plateau. Eventually Seir became part of the Edomite state and the names Seir and Edom were used interchangeably.

Two diferent peoples, the Horites and the Edomites, lived in the area known as Seir and Edom. The Horite genealogy in Gen. 36:20–30 is distinct from the Edomite genealogy in 36:9–19. The Horites appear to have been more pastoral, different from the agricultural Edomites. In the Bible the Horites are described as inhabiting the mountains of Seir until they were displaced by the Edomites (Gen. 14:6; Deut. 2:12).

When, in the nineteenth century, scholars discovered a people called the Hurrians, they assumed a connection with the biblical Horites. But the Hurrians were a political and cultural force in north Syria and in the Tigris area; their whereabouts in the northern regions does not correspond with the Horite association with Mount Seir. Thus the Horites should not be confused with the Edomites or the Hurrians. All that can be determined about them now is that they were very early inhabitants of Seir.

36:40–43 These chiefs probably followed the kings listed in vv. 31–39. They bear some of the names of their forebears (vv. 1–14). Esau was the father of the Edomites: Although Esau is not the heir of God’s everlasting covenant with the family of Abraham, God still blessed his family. They too became a nation.

Modern readers may understandably ask why a chapter like this is placed in the Bible. Why all this detail of names and chiefs? But readers in some parts of the world even today would find this material fascinating if not valuable. In many cultures, a great prize is placed on the accurate recital of the names of one’s forebears. Such must also have been the case among many of the peoples of biblical periods. These listings may evince several values: (1) A sense of connection that the descendant of Esau would have had in this recital of names; such a person would think highly of the fact that he or she had such an illustrious family line. (2) A sense of history that these names produce; any reader may look at this list and gain a sense, even in a cursory way, that the ancients had a strong desire for historical ties. (3) A sense of pride and worth in the memory of these details. In every culture there are those who are able (or who claim to be able) to trace back their ancestry through many centuries. (4) A sense of promise in that Esau was also given a promise from his father and from the Lord; that promise was kept (27:39, 40).

37:1—50:26 This last major section of Genesis is widely regarded as one of the finest works of narrative literature from the ancient world. Few characters in the OT are presented with as much clarity as is Joseph, and few story lines in the OT are given with as much detail and interest. Perhaps only the stories of Moses and of David surpass the account of Joseph. The story has a classic "U" shaped design, moving from a pastoral scene of familial prosperity, through an extended period of adversity and disintegration of the family unit, to a climax of restoration and reuniting of the family unit that result in a greater position of prosperity than when the story began.

37:1 in the land: When he left Laban, Jacob at first settled near Shechem (33:18–20). Then at the Lord's bidding he went to Bethel (35:1–15), where the divine covenant was renewed. Jacob traveled south again to Ephrath (later Bethlehem, 35:16–20), where Rachel died while giving birth to Benjamin. Finally, Jacob went to Hebron (Kirjath Arba), where he buried his father (35:27–29). Chapter 37 continues Jacob's story at Hebron (v. 14). The word for stranger (Heb. gur) can also mean "sojourner" or "alien." The Lord had promised that this land would become a permanent possession of Abraham's family (12:7). To the third generation that promise was still not realized. Jacob and his family were still aliens in the land.

37:2 history of Jacob: This is the tenth time this Hebrew phrasing is used in Genesis (2:4, note). Joseph was the first son of Jacob's favorite wife, Rachel (30:22–24). seventeen years old: This is one of the few places the Bible gives the age of a person at a certain event (12:4). Usually, it records only the length of a person's whole life. Bilhah is the maid of Rachel, who gave birth to Dan and Naphtali (30:4–8); Zilpah is the maid of Leah, who gave birth to Gad and Asher (30:9–11). a bad report: Since Joseph in general demonstrated his integrity (ch. 39), he was probably not slandering his brothers but accurately reporting some negligence on their part. Whatever his intentions, his brothers naturally would have resented him.

37:3 The name Israel was given to Jacob following his wrestling with the Lord (32:22–32). It is used interchangeably with Jacob (35:21, 22; 43:6). son of his old age: Jacob's favoritism for his son Joseph may be explained as well by the special love he had for the boy's mother (29:30). a tunic of many colors: This is a traditional translation. The Hebrew phrase

(ketonet passim) may simply mean a garment with long sleeves. The robe was distinctive in color or design and was probably costly.

37:4 they hated him: Unwittingly, Jacob's discriminatory actions made Joseph unpopular in the family.

37:5 In his youthful enthusiasm, Joseph told his family about his dream. Although the dream was prophetic, it alienated his brothers even more.

37:6 please hear: Joseph may be accused of willful action here, but more likely he was just not aware of how his words would be received. His exuberance led him to an unfortunate display of superiority over his older brothers.

37:7 my sheaf arose: Joseph's dream pictured the prominence that he would eventually have in the family. In the culture of his day, the firstborn was the prominent one (35:23). Joseph's dream not only insulted his older brothers, it also violated custom.

37:8 shall you indeed reign: The brothers understood immediately the meaning of Joseph's dream. Of course what they and he could not have known was that this dream would be fulfilled literally.

37:9 Joseph could have been more sensitive to his family's response to his dreams. His second dream was even more alarming. According to this dream, even the sun and moon, presumably his father and mother (though his mother was already deceased; 35:16–20), would bow to Joseph. The eleven stars were his brothers.

37:10, 11 Now, even his father was insulted by Joseph's behavior. The son could have talked about his dreams with more tact. kept the matter: Although he was insulted, Jacob pondered (compare Luke 2:19) Joseph's dreams for they were clearly from God.

37:12 The brothers journeyed north from Hebron (35:27–29), presumably in order to find better pastures for their flocks. Shechem plays a continuing role in the Genesis narrative. Abram had built his first altar to God there (12:6; 33:18).

“Dream”

(Heb. chalom) (Gen. 37:5; 40:5; 41:7; Joel 2:28) Strong’s #2472: The word simply means “to dream.” The ancients understood a dream or a vision as “watching during sleep,” suggesting a special state of consciousness. Often dreams were recognized as revelations from the gods, or from the Lord God Himself in the case of the Hebrews. Many times these dreams and visions were encoded in symbolic language that needed interpretation. Those who could interpret dreams possessed power in the ancient world (41:37–40; Dan. 2:46–48). Joseph both received and interpreted such messages but was able to interpret the figures and symbols of dream-events only as God enabled him (40:8; 41:16).

37:13 I will send you: The story of young Joseph being sent by his father to join his brothers is somewhat similar to that of David being sent by his father to join his brothers (1 Sam. 17:17–19).

37:14–16 well: The Hebrew word here, shalom, means “well, whole, sound” and is often translated by the word “peace.” bring back word: Because Joseph had earlier brought back a bad report, he would not be welcomed by his brothers.

The mound of Dothan (center), the Old Testament city where Joseph's brothers threw him into a pit and later sold him to slave traders (Gen. 37:17–28).

37:17 I heard them say: This unnamed (v. 15) individual was able to help Joseph, which we regard as providential provision: just the right person at just the right place and time to aid Joseph. Nevertheless, as it turns out, Joseph's journey soon ends in disaster, from which we suggest that when God is working out all the details, even this does not guarantee that a journey will be what we desire. Dothan is about ten miles north of Shechem, near Mount Gilboa.

37:18 saw him a far off: His distinctive tunic allowed the brothers to recognize Joseph at a distance (vv. 3, 23, 31). to kill him: His brothers' hatred and envy led them to discuss murder (vv. 4, 5, 8, 11).

37:19, 20 this dreamer: The Hebrew phrase expresses contempt and literally means "master of dreams." The brothers feared that Joseph's dreams may actually come true. By killing him, they could prevent this.

37:21 Reuben, as the firstborn son and principal heir, had the most to lose if Joseph's dreams came true (35:23). Yet Reuben intervened to spare Joseph's life. This was something of a contrast with his earlier wicked actions (35:22).

Sin Is Passed On Through Generations

People often assume that their "private" sins hurt no one but themselves. For instance, how could the sin of envy affect anyone else? Isn't coveting strictly a matter between them and the Lord?

But sins of character have a way of touching everyone with whom we have contact, especially those we love the most, our family. That is what happened in three generations of Isaac's family. His wife, Rebekah, was determined to gain Isaac's blessing for her favorite son, Jacob, even if it meant deceiving her husband (Gen. 25:28; 27:5–29). Thus she helped her son Jacob grow up to be a deceiver (27:35, 36).

Years later, Jacob's second wife, Rachel, became frustrated as her sister and rival, Leah, bore four sons for Jacob. Rachel's anguish developed into such strong envy that it created tension and anger in her husband, even though he loved Rachel dearly (29:34—30:2).

A bitter harvest of Rebekah and Jacob's deception and Rachel's envy was reaped in the third generation when Joseph's brothers began to envy him (37:11). They sold him into slavery and then deceived their father about it (37:23–35). Where had they learned to treat their sibling with jealousy and their father with such cruel deception? Clearly, they were following in their elders' footsteps!

Sin can pass from generation to generation, not just by what is said, but by what is lived. Attitudes are not so much taught as caught.

37:22 shed no blood: Reuben attempted to save Joseph's life by getting his brothers to leave Joseph in a pit. Without water in the pit, Joseph could only survive a few days. Reuben planned to rescue him in time. Reuben may have been motivated by a love for his father and a desire to ease the strained relationship with him that had resulted from his abuse of Bilhah (35:22; compare 49:4). Once Reuben convinced his brothers not to kill Joseph, he left (v. 29).

37:23 The action of the brothers toward the tunic shows how hateful to them this distinctive garment was, for they did not want him to have this garment even in death.

37:24 That the pit (v. 20) was empty of water meant that the brothers were leaving Joseph to die. A person can live for a considerable period of time without food but only a several days without water.

37:25 The crassness of the brothers toward Joseph is further seen in the words to eat a meal. Presumably even Cain did not sit down and eat a meal after killing Abel (4:1–9). The Ishmaelites were wandering traders. The name (it refers to the descendants of Ishmael, the son of Abraham; 16:11–16; 17:18–27; 25:12–18; 28:9; 36:3) is loosely equivalent to the name Midianite (v. 28). Gilead is a mountainous region in the Transjordan (31:21), famed for aromatic spices (Jer. 8:22; 46:11). Only the rich owned the few camels that were domesticated at this time.

37:26 What profit: The brothers not only considered killing Joseph, but started discussing how they could make the crime profitable.

37:27, 28 Midian was a son of Abraham by his concubine Keturah (25:2, 4; 36:35). The name Midianites is used interchangeably with the name Ishmaelites (v. 25), most likely indicating an alliance between the two peoples. Both terms refer to wandering Arab traders. Twenty shekels of silver may have been the going rate for a slave at the time. On the other hand, the Midianites may have paid a little less because they knew something was amiss (the standard price for a slave in later Israelite law was thirty shekels; Ex. 21:32). According to 42:21, Joseph begged his brothers not to sell him. The brothers considered Joseph as good as dead; he would never return from Egyptian slavery. The account would later be memorialized in song (Ps. 105:17), and the despicable act finds its parallel in the price paid to Judas for betraying the Savior (Matt. 27:3–10; compare Zech. 11:12).

37:29 Reuben returned, failed to find Joseph, and tore his clothes to express his grief. Tearing one's clothes was a common expression of profound dismay. Reuben's grief was genuine feeling for his younger brother mixed with the fear that he, the oldest brother, would be blamed.

37:30–35 Bringing the blood-covered tunic to their father was an attempt at legal deceit. This garment of Joseph's would constitute proof of his death (compare Ex. 22:13). Jacob then would be expected to confirm Joseph's death publicly, absolving the brothers of any further liability.

37:31, 32 The brothers used Joseph's tunic, the symbol of his favored position, as a grisly symbol of his supposed death. The tunic was distinctive because of its colors or its long sleeves (v. 3).

37:33 torn to pieces: The Hebrew expression means “utterly torn apart.” The fact that only the tunic was found suggested the destruction of Joseph’s body.

37:34 Jacob tore his clothes like Reuben did to express his sorrow.

INSIGHT

The Slave Traders

It is ironic that Joseph was sold to a band of Midianites (Gen. 37:28), because the Midianites were distant relatives of Joseph and his brothers through Abraham's concubine Keturah (25:1, 2). The Midianites lived as nomads in the desert region southeast of Canaan, along the northern coast of the Red Sea. They were often linked with the Ishmaelites (37:27, 28; Judg. 7:25; 8:24), with whom they apparently shared the slave trade to Egypt.

37:35 and his daughters: Genesis names only one of the daughters, Dinah (ch. 34). I shall go down into the grave: Joseph's apparent fate only made Jacob love him more and withdraw from the rest of the family. The brothers did not gain their father's favor by getting rid of Joseph.

37:36 Potiphar: An Egyptian name. an officer: The Hebrew term is used occasionally for a eunuch or a harem official (Gen. 39:1; Esth. 2:3). captain of the guard: This phrase may mean the palace guard, or perhaps, the harem guard. In either case, Potiphar was an important official in the Egyptian royal court.

38:1–30 Although some consider the story of Judah and Tamar an intrusion into the Joseph story, it does fit into the flow of the narrative. First, the story provides a stunning contrast between the morals of Judah and Joseph. Second, Judah's story illustrates the further disintegration of Jacob's family. Jacob's sons had sold Joseph, and now Judah married a Canaanite woman and solicited a Canaanite prostitute (who happened to be his daughter-in-law; v. 11–16). If this process continued, Jacob's family, the family of promise, would become like the people of Canaan. The fact that the Messiah's lineage would be eventually traced through Judah's line is a clear sign of God's grace and mercy (Gen. 49:10; Matt. 1:2, 3). It is difficult to overestimate the importance of the issues of this chapter as they relate to the ongoing purposes of God in salvation history. The topic of the chapter is seamy; the function of the chapter is didactic; the action of the chapter is ultimately salvific—the Lord is coming, and He will come through the family of Judah and of Tamar!

38:1 Judah departed from his brothers: Jacob's family was slowly falling apart. First, Simeon and Levi had taken revenge on Shechem (ch. 34). Second, Reuben, the firstborn, had abused Bilhah (35:22). Third, the brothers had sold Joseph into slavery (ch. 37). Now Judah, the fourth son of Leah, left the family circle and sought Canaanite friends. Adullamite: A person from Adullam. This place was in the hill country northwest of Hebron, later associated with David's flight from Saul (1 Sam. 22:1). During his period of disenchantment with his family, Judah embraced the Canaanite Hirah as friend and confidant (vv. 12, 20).

IN DEPTH

The Actions of Judah

Even though the actions of Judah were evil throughout most of the events recorded in Gen. 38, he was nonetheless by these events brought into contact with the peoples of the land. While they influenced him for evil throughout much of the story, at the end he had an effect on them for good. That is, God used Judah's sojourn among the Canaanites to bring a remnant of that people into contact with His family of faith.

In time, the people of Israel learned to celebrate the fact that among their mothers was a Canaanite woman of bold daring (Ruth 4:12, 18–22). Indeed, the Bible does not let us forget this. It comes to a head in the genealogy of Jesus the Messiah (Matt. 1:3). He who came to be the Savior not only of the Jewish people but also of the nations was descended not only from Jewish people but also from the nations whom He came to save. In these and many ways God displays His heart for the nations to know Him.

38:2 daughter of a certain Canaanite: Not only did Judah take a Canaanite as his friend, he took a Canaanite woman, the daughter of Shua, as his wife.

38:3–5 In quick succession, three sons were born to Judah and the daughter of Shua. Chezib is probably three miles southwest of Adullam.

38:6 Just as Judah had married a Canaanite woman, so now he found a Canaanite wife, Tamar, for his firstborn son, Er. In this way, Judah intermingled his family with the Canaanites. Tamar means "Palm," indicating endearing beauty. Surprisingly, Tamar becomes a heroine in the Bible (Ruth 4:12; Matt. 1:3).

38:7 The Lord did not judge the Canaanite woman, Tamar. Instead, he judged Er, the wicked firstborn son of Judah.

38:8 to your brother's wife: In the ancient Near East, for a man to die without leaving a son was regarded as an incalculable loss. A person's memory was preserved in his descendants. In order to maintain the family line and the name of the deceased, a brother or another near relative would marry the man's widow and father a child that would carry on the man's family. This is called levirate marriage, from a Latin word meaning

38:9 emitted on the ground: Because of his own selfishness and wicked attitude toward his deceased brother, Onan would not allow his brother’s widow to conceive a child. He feared the child would perpetuate the name of his brother Er and not his own.

38:10 The LORD judged Onan, just as He judged Er (v. 7).

38:11 Remain a widow: Instead of blaming his first two sons’ deaths on their own wickedness, Judah blamed the innocent Tamar. He feared that he would lose his last son to her as well. So Judah stalled her by insincerely promising to marry her to his last son when he was of age. Presumably, Judah hoped she would eventually remarry outside the family.

38:12 The death of Judah’s wife means that Judah had only one surviving son. Unless Judah remarried, his posterity was dependant on Shelah. sheepshearers: The time of sheepshearing was not only a time of work, it also was a time for celebration (2 Sam. 13:23, 24). Timnah is in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 15:10, 57). Hirah: Judah and Hirah’s friendship lasted a long time.

38:13 The suggestion in this verse is that Judah had broken contact with Tamar following the death of Onan. It was not he who spoke to her about his plans.

38:14, 15 The period for mourning was long past. Tamar’s continuing use of a widow’s clothing shows her desire to marry the surviving brother of her husbands, something she finally realized would not be allowed. She wore a veil both to avoid Judah’s detection and to pose as a cultic prostitute. Her desperate act was driven by a sense of injustice. On the one hand, Judah had broken his promise to marry her to Shelah. On the other hand, she had not done anything to deserve becoming a forgotten widow; her husbands’ deaths were not her fault. The term used here for harlot (Heb. zona) is the general one for a harlot in biblical Hebrew. However, the intent is made clear in v. 21 where the specific term meaning a cultic prostitute is used (v. 21, note). An ordinary harlot would not hide her face but would do everything she might to make herself alluring (compare the seduction scene in Prov. 7). But a sacred prostitute would hide her face from her “client” as a means of maintaining the fiction that the sexual embrace they would share was a “spiritual” act and not merely physical. The sacred prostitute was regarded as an instrument of the goddess Asherah, and lying with her was an act of worship in Canaanite practice. Judah is very familiar with these concepts, as his actions show.

38:16 Sacred prostitute or not, there was still a price to pay.

38:17 Judah's promise to give her a goat would ordinarily have been sufficient. However, Tamar insisted on a pledge.

38:18 The signet seal was an ancient means of identification. The seal was distinctively etched in stone, metal, or ivory and would hang on a person's neck. To confirm an agreement or transaction, the ancients would press the seal in soft clay (41:42). Basically, Judah gave Tamar the equivalent of a modern credit card. Presumably, Judah's staff was also marked in a distinctive manner. she conceived: The fiction of sacred prostitution would not last long if women priests always had babies. Thus these women practiced forms of birth control and possibly abortions to maintain the pretense that they represented "the virgin goddess." But even that conception took place here without "precautions" shows the work of God in the timing of the event. Here we see God working through activities that are unseemly to bring out of them His good. That God occasionally works through the unseemly actions of mankind is not an excuse to perpetuate sinful living, but it still remains a reason to celebrate His mercy. God's will will be done despite the efforts of sinful people to ruin things.

38:19 garments of her widowhood: Tamar resumed wearing the clothing of a widow, clothing that broadcast Judah's broken promises to the community.

38:20 the young goat: By the time Hirah (vv. 1, 12) came to pay what Judah had promised (v. 17), Tamar had already left.

38:21 Harlot translates a Hebrew term that literally means "holy woman" and refers to sacred or cultic prostitutes. Such prostitutes would have practiced their profession as part of the pagan local religions. The Hebrew term for "holy woman" is qedesha, and the basic meaning of the word "to be holy" (Heb. qadash) is not "purity," as many suspect, but "separation." That is, the meaning of the word is "to be distinct," "to be set apart," "to be reserved for a special function." That which was supposed by the Canaanites to distinguish a cultic prostitute from a street walker was that the cultic prostitute was "set apart" for sacred purposes. Similarly, in Israel common objects could be blessed by priests and "set apart" for the holy worship of God. Also, ordinary people may be set apart as "holy ones" who worship God in spirit and in truth. When the Bible speaks of the holiness of God (Is. 6:3), the principal issue is not His purity (although we celebrate His purity) but His separation. That is, to say that God is holy is to affirm that He is transcendent, that He is Other; that while His mercy is everywhere to be seen in all that He has made, He is never to be confused with His creation, for His glory outstrips the heavens (Ps. 113:5).

38:22–24 played the harlot: After about three months, Tamar's pregnancy was showing. Judah seized the opportunity to get rid of Tamar, demanding that she be burned. The Law of Moses mentions burning as the punishment for certain prostitutes (Lev. 21:9). But on this occasion Judah was not considering God's righteousness. He merely wanted to get rid of the woman he believed had been destroying his family.

38:24 Judah's immediate reaction reminds us of David's rush to judgment (2 Sam. 12:5).

38:25 The identification here of Judah as the guilty person bears a striking resemblance to the identification of David as the guilty person by Nathan (2 Sam. 12:7).

38:26 She has been more righteous: Judah, one of the heirs of the everlasting covenant with the living God, was put to shame by a Canaanite woman. To his credit, Judah confessed his sins.

38:27 The birth of twins was a special blessing from the Lord. This section continues a biblical theme of competing sons (chs. 4; 25–28).

38:28 his hand: There could be no mistakes in identifying the firstborn. The midwife used a scarlet thread to make sure everyone knew which baby had been born first.

38:29 breach: The other baby burst forth after his brother's hand had been withdrawn. Despite the brother's hand, Perez was the firstborn. He became the one who is in the lineage of David, and ultimately Jesus (Ruth 4:18; Matt. 1:3).

38:30 Both Perez and Zerah established families in the house of Judah (1 Chr. 2:3–8); even Shelah established a family (Num. 26:19–22). Tamar became a member of the family of promise, even though she was a Canaanite (Ruth 4:12). Matthew mentions Tamar—a woman—in the lineage of the Messiah. She had become a heroine of the faith, despite her origins and the nature of her actions (Matt. 1:3).

39:1 Joseph had been taken down to Egypt: This verse repeats the sense of 37:36 and resumes the Joseph story that was interrupted by the story of Judah and Tamar (ch. 38). The first readers of Genesis were the second generation that had come out of Egypt under Moses. This narrative explained to them why their parents were Egyptian slaves. Potiphar: Joseph's brothers probably expected that he would be sold as a common laborer in a heavy construction project. Such heavy physical labor under harsh conditions could make a young man's life short. Yet because of God's mercy, Joseph was sold to a rich and important royal official. See the note at 37:28 for the interchange of the words Ishmaelites and Midianites.

A Person's Name

The name of Perez is explained by an incident at his birth (Gen. 38:29). In the Bible, names are often connected with memorable facts about the persons being named, such as "Perez," which is related to the Hebrew word for breach. Ancient people thought that a person's name gave access to, or power over, that person.

39:2 The LORD was with Joseph: This key phrase of this section is repeated (vv. 21, 23). This phrase indicates that God cared for, protected, and blessed Joseph. Joseph occupied a very high station for a slave. He lived and worked in his master's house as a successful man; that is, as someone whose work was productive, who could be trusted, and who succeeded in his tasks.

39:3 Potiphar recognized that Joseph was successful because the Lord was with him. Perhaps Joseph had had some effect on his master's spiritual condition.

39:4 found favor: Joseph exemplified the faithful steward and illustrated the principle that one who is faithful in a little will be given charge over much (Matt. 25:21; 1 Cor. 4:2).

39:5 the LORD blessed the Egyptian's house: God commanded Abraham and his descendants to be a blessing to everyone (Gen. 12:2, 3). Here Joseph, thrust into a foreign country by the anger of his brothers, brought God's blessing to an Egyptian official's home. What is more, the Egyptian knew that the blessing was from God.

39:6 all that he had: Potiphar's trust in Joseph was so complete that Potiphar had no care except for his menu (v. 23). handsome: Seldom does the Bible mention a character's physical traits. This description is similar to the description of David (1 Sam. 16:12; for Sarai, see Gen. 12:11; for Rebekah, see 24:16; for Rachel, see 29:17).

39:7 Potiphar's wife began to flirt with Joseph. Perhaps she was bored. On the other hand, the Hebrew term saris translated "officer" in v. 1 ordinarily means "eunuch." If Potiphar was literally a eunuch, this might help to explain his wife's actions.

39:8 But he refused: Joseph exemplified the highest standard of personal behavior. The recurring phrase, “the LORD was with him” (vv. 2, 21, 23) helps to explain Joseph’s goodness. The empowering presence of God in his life helped Joseph to resist temptation.

39:9, 10 sin against God: Here Joseph not only stood up for his ethical beliefs, but he also told a woman who probably believed in many gods about the righteousness of the only true God!

39:11 none of the men: This time, the master’s wife caught Joseph alone.

39:12, 13 The clothing of a slave in the hot climate of Egypt probably did not consist of much. She grabbed Joseph. In the ensuing struggle, she wound up holding his garment. Joseph fled.

39:14–18 he has brought: She insulted her husband in front of other slaves. The term Hebrew is used only four times in Genesis (14:13; 39:17; 41:12). Here it is a racial slur. to mock: The verb suggests racial hatred. The Hamitic Egyptians scorned the Semitic peoples of Canaan (43:32). The Egyptian slaves must have envied Joseph’s success. Potiphar’s wife must have found ready ears among these men to believe her lies. She had not cried out, of course. But the charge of rape was as serious then as it is in our day. The attempted rape of a master’s wife by a foreign slave would have been an exceptional outrage.

39:19 The anger of Potiphar is understandable and expected.

Potiphar's House and Joseph's Temptation

Joseph's activities in Potiphar's house meant that day by day (Gen. 38:10) he was passing through the chamber that would be used for sleeping at night. The house would have had a front entrance, living or sleeping quarters, and storeroom at the back. Since his master's wife continued to lounge on her bed, presumably in ever-increasingly alluring attire and manner, the pressure on young Joseph must have been nearly unbearable.

From a human point of view, he might have decided that things were not going to get much better for him as a slave in a foreign land. As a young man with raging hormones, and as an insightful man with a realistic appraisal of his prospects, he might have yielded to her cries, even though the pleasures would be short lived. But he did not yield. Compare the seduction scene in Prov. 7 for someone, a fool, who did.

39:20 Because Potiphar, Joseph's master, was a royal officer (39:1), his slave Joseph would be a legal member of his household and therefore put in a special prison.

39:20 into the prison: Surprisingly, Potiphar did not have Joseph put to death or simply killed outright. Is it possible that Joseph had so impressed Potiphar during the considerable time he had been in his service that Potiphar found himself not fully believing the story his wife told him? Is it possible that Potiphar determined to throw Joseph into the royal prison, over which he had command (39:1; 40:3; 41:9–11) in order to spare Joseph's life? In any case, Joseph wound up in prison for something he had steadfastly refused to do.

39:21 The LORD continued to be with Joseph, even in prison (Ps. 139:7–12). Mercy can be translated "loyal love" (Ps. 13:5). Here in an Egyptian prison, Joseph experienced God's loyal love. God faithfully kept His promises by staying with His people—even in rough circumstances (for God's promises to be with Abraham's descendants see 12:1–3; 50:24). The keeper of the prison was the warden who was under the "captain of the guard" (40:3), namely, Potiphar (39:1).

39:22 The warden would have known, as Potiphar had (39:3), that the animating factor in Joseph's life was the presence of Yahweh. Thus Joseph spread the knowledge of the true God even to a prison (as Paul and other apostles were later to do).

39:23 the LORD made it prosper: Because of God's blessing, everything Joseph did prospered (Ps. 1:1–3).

40:1, 2 The butler and the baker of the king were important offices in the royal court. Offended stands for the word ordinarily translated as "sinned." Its principal meaning is "to miss the mark." The nature of their offenses is not explained.

40:3 The reference to the house implies that there were two holding areas for prisoners in this situation. One was the prison proper, the other was a type of house arrest associated with, but not in, the prison itself.

40:4 As a trustee of the prison, Joseph also served the high officials who were under house arrest awaiting the disposition of the charges against them.

40:5 Each … dream had its own interpretation; these were not ordinary dreams. They contained symbols that demanded explanation.

40:6 Joseph came to see the butler and baker because it was part of his duties as the prison trustee.

40:7, 8 Joseph's statement that interpretations belong to God was a bold testimony. But Joseph not only announced his faith, he then quickly acted upon it. Joseph had received such dreams as a younger man and had understood their meaning (37:5–11).

40:9–12 Joseph's words to the butler, lift up your head, form a grisly pun in the passage. Here they speak of the restoration of the butler to his former honor; in v. 19 they speak of death.

God's Mercy to Joseph

The mercy (Heb. chesed) that God showed to Joseph (Gen. 39:21) involved His faithful loyalty to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. God made promises to these patriarchs (12:1–3; 15:13, 14; 28:3, 4, 13–15), and in order to fulfill His commitments, He preserved Joseph through his prison ordeal. God often demonstrated His mercy by delivering His people from their troubles. For example, He delivered Lot from Sodom before destroying the city in judgment (19:19), and He showed mercy to the Israelites by leading them out of Egypt (Ex. 15:13).

40:13, 14 Joseph asked the butler to remember me so that his case might be reviewed and he might be delivered from a false imprisonment. Kindness represents a word that also means "loyal love." Joseph spoke of a binding obligation that his interpretation of the dream had placed upon the butler.

40:15 Joseph had two good reasons for seeking his release: being sold by his brothers into slavery and being framed by Potiphar's wife. In both cases he was an innocent victim. Presumably the butler would recognize the unfairness of Joseph's condition, since he himself had been unfairly charged and badly treated as well.

40:16, 17 Perhaps the chief baker's sense of guilt had held him back, but now he sensed that the time was right to announce his own dream. Both of these men respected Joseph's interpretations as true. Like the butler's, the baker's dream used the number three.

40:18 The interpretation of the baker's dream was bad news indeed: In three days the baker would be executed.

40:19 The pun in lift off your head is more evident in the Hebrew text (v. 13). More literally, the words read, "Pharaoh will lift your head … from you." That is, the line begins exactly as in v. 13, but with a deadly zinger at the end! It is not simply baked goods the birds will eat (v. 17), but the flesh of the baker. That is, he will not be allowed even a proper burial; he will instead be hanged and then his body will be left for the vultures. Clearly there was no point for Joseph to ask to be remembered by the baker (vv. 14, 15).

40:20–22 Only here do we learn that the third day was Pharaoh's birthday. The play on words of vv. 13, 19 comes to its culmination here in he lifted the head. Pharaoh brought both of the prisoners from their house arrest for all the other servants to see. The one he restored (v. 21), and the other he hanged (v. 22). It could be that there had been a threat against Pharaoh's life that involved the poisoning of food. Presumably the investigation led to two possible culprits, the butler who would serve Pharaoh his wine and the baker who would prepare bread for Pharaoh. The guilty party was executed; the other was given back his prestigious position. Pharaoh did this in the presence of all of Pharaoh's servants in order to both warn and encourage the servant household. Pharaoh would reward those who served him well, but would destroy any who meant him harm.

40:23 The butler did not remember his promise made to Joseph. The euphoria of his release and restoration took his mind away from his distressing days under arrest. Soon the sheer business of his life precluded any action on behalf of Joseph. So Joseph stayed in prison. And God was still with him.

41:1–57 This chapter describes the turning point in Joseph's life. He rose from a dungeon to the Egyptian throne room. God engineered the circumstances so that through Joseph, He could meet the needs of a nation during the coming famine and reunite Jacob's family.

41:1–8 This providential series of dream-pairs is now concluded. The dreams in 40:5 proved the means for involving Joseph in the dreams here, and it was these dreams that served to fulfill the first pair (37:5–9).

41:1 As in the case of his servants (40:5), Pharaoh had an unusual dream to which he attached great significance. The river is the Nile, the life stream of Egypt.

41:2 In ancient Semitic thought, the number seven had special significance. This significance probably had its roots in the seven days of creation (ch. 1).

41:3, 4 ugly and gaunt: The second group of seven cows contrasts strongly with the first. ate up: The bucolic scene quickly turns into a nightmare as the scrawny cows devour the healthy ones.

41:5–7 The second dream was very much like the first, only this time it presented heads of grain rather than cows. The numeral seven again was prominent.

41:8 magicians: The Hebrew term is related to the word for stylus, a writing instrument. Thus, the magicians were associated in some manner with writing and knowledge, no doubt of the occult. Yet here, as on a later occasion (Ex. 8:18, 19), the power of the magicians was shown to be limited. The wise men (Heb. hakam; also used for the "wise" man of Israel in Prov. 1:5) were a class of scholars associated with the courts of the ancient Middle East. They were either functionaries of pagan religions as here, or merely observers and interpreters of life. No one who could interpret is a scene similar to Dan. 2:1–13.

41:9 faults: The Hebrew word is usually translated "sins" (hataim). At long last the butler remembered his experience with the young Hebrew prisoner who interpreted his dream (40:9–15).

41:10–12 captain of the guard: In vv. 10, 12, this phrase refers to Potiphar (39:1, 19, 20).

41:13, 14 out of the dungeon: Joseph was manager of the prison (39:22, 23). Egyptian men not only shaved their face, but their entire body. They generally wore wigs. Egyptian officials scorned the "hairy" Canaanites, including the Hebrews (43:32). While in the service of Potiphar, Joseph probably adopted the manner and dress of the Egyptians. But in prison, Joseph could not keep up his appearance.

41:15 you can understand a dream: Pharaoh was desperate. He wanted a correct interpretation of his dream.

41:16 There is a strong emphasis on the word God. Joseph praised the power of the living God in the pagan court of Pharaoh. He would not take credit for his ability to interpret dreams or use his innocence to plead for his freedom. His answer of peace (Heb. shalom) suggests that Joseph already knew the dream contained some good news for the Pharaoh.

41:17–24 in my dream: Pharaoh repeated the information he had given earlier to his own magicians and wise men (41:1–8; compare vv. 1–4). One new detail is recorded here (v. 21): the seven ugly cows do not look better after eating the good cows (v. 30).

"Pharaoh"

(Heb. Par oh) (Gen. 41:1; Ex. 1:11) Strong's #6547: The name Pharaoh comes from the Egyptian word pr-o, which means "the great house." Originally the word Pharaoh was not a designation for the king of Egypt but a reference to his palace. The ancient Egyptians believed that Pharaoh was the living representation of the god Horus in Egyptian religion, identified with the cult of the sun god and symbolized by the falcon. The plagues against the Egyptians prior to the Israelite exodus from Egypt were cosmic in nature, a kind of spiritual warfare between the living God and the false gods of Egypt (Ex. 12:12; 15:11). The tenth plague, resulting in the death of the firstborn among the Egyptians (including Pharaoh's), was divine judgment upon Pharaoh's claim to deity (Ex. 12:29, 30; 18:11, 12).

41:25 Led by the Spirit of God, Joseph revealed that the dreams have the same meaning (22:15). God has shown Pharaoh: Again Joseph testified to the living God in a pagan court (39:3). God sent the dreams; God enabled Joseph to understand them; and ultimately God controlled and will control all things.

41:26–28 God has shown Pharaoh: The repetition of this phrase (v. 25) is for emphasis (v. 32). God put Joseph in Egypt during this critical time so that He could bless Egypt through a Hebrew. Then the true and living God's blessing would become known throughout the ancient world, for God had promised to bless all nations through the people of Israel (12:2).

41:29, 30 the plenty will be forgotten: The famine would be so severe that everyone would forget the years of plenty.

41:31, 32 God, and God: Joseph emphasized his reference to the true God as he witnessed to the reality of the only true God. He made it clear that he was speaking about the one God, not the numerous false gods that filled the Egyptian court, or even Pharaoh himself who was believed to be a god (22:1; 42:18).

41:33 a discerning and wise man: An exceedingly wise man.

41:34 One-fifth may seem large. However, the large amount would allow for spoilage, for extra grain for trade, and for extra grain to plant after the seven years of famine.

41:35 Pharaoh would view this large tax as an expansion of his own authority.

41:36–38 in whom is the Spirit of God: At least Pharaoh acknowledged that Joseph was extraordinarily wise. Or more likely, he testified to the reality of God's power in Joseph's life.

41:39, 40 You shall be over my house: Since Joseph was so wise, naturally he was the first choice for administering the collection of grain. in regard to the throne: Joseph was given enormous power. Only Pharaoh was above him.

IN CONTEXT

Egypt's Seven Lean Years

The record of Egypt's seven lean years (Gen. 41:27) appears to have an antecedent in Egyptian literature. A text called The Tradition of the Seven Lean Years in Egypt is attributed to pharaoh Djoser of the Third Dynasty of Egypt's Old Kingdom (c. 2650 B.C.). The text of this Egyptian story as it now exists came from scribes during the reign of Ptolemy V (204–180 B.C.). While this text is much later than the Genesis account, it is possible that it was copied from an earlier text.

The text recounts a letter that Djoser wrote to his overseer in Elephantine in southern Egypt, lamenting that the "Nile has not come up in my time for a space of seven years." Consequently grain was scarce, fruits had dried up, and "every man robbed his companion." Imhotep, the renowned vizier, or chief minister, to Djoser then tells him about the god Khnum, who resides at the birthplace of the Nile, namely Elephantine. Pharaoh Djoser then has a dream in which the god tells him that the Nile will soon "pour forth for you."

41:41 over all the land of Egypt: The Book of Genesis begins with the story of the fall of our first parents from paradise. It concludes with the story of the rise of a Hebrew slave from a dungeon to a seat beside the throne of the king. In Joseph's elevation there is a symbol of hope for all who believe in his God. One day all such believers will be lifted from the murky dungeons and dank habitats of their present experiences to positions of wonder and glory (Ps. 113:7–9).

41:42 With the signet ring, Joseph's orders would have the same authority as the word of Pharaoh (Esth. 3:10; 8:2). The ring had the signature of the Pharaoh in Egyptian hieroglyphics (38:18). Joseph would use the ring to mark clay or wax to authenticate royal documents and laws. Now wearing fine garments and a gold chain, Joseph must have felt a world removed from that of the prison dungeon.

41:43 Bow the knee: The Egyptian people bowed as a sign of respect and homage to Joseph's position, not as a sign of worship.

41:44 The hyperbole hand or foot here suggests the enormous power that Pharaoh accorded Joseph.

41:45 Zaphnath-Paaneah: Pharaoh honors Joseph by giving him an Egyptian name that probably means “The God Speaks and Lives.” While in some contexts, this would refer to an Egyptian god, in this case it refers to the true God of Joseph. Wherever Joseph went in Egypt, his name would point to the reality of his God. Asenath: An Egyptian name meaning “Belonging to (the Goddess) Neith.” Poti-Pherah means “He Whom Ra (the sun god) Gave.” On is a city in northern Egypt that was noted for its worship of Ra. But Joseph and Asenath’s sons were worshipers of the Lord, not Ra. Although Joseph married a pagan priest’s daughter, he trained his sons to worship the living God. Probably Asenath also became a worshiper of the Lord.

41:46 thirty years old: Thirteen years had passed since Joseph was sold by his brothers (37:2).

41:47 seven plentiful years: Just as God had revealed, the years of plenty came.

41:48, 49 The task was enormous for there was much grain. Joseph had to be a wise administrator. The skills he learned in Potiphar’s household and in the royal prison must have been helpful during this busy time. But in the end, God made Joseph succeed (v. 52; 39:23).

41:50–53 Asenath’s two sons carry on the two-son motif in Genesis (Ishmael and Isaac, chs. 16; 21; Esau and Jacob, 25:19–28; Perez and Zerah, 38:27–30).

41:54, 55 the seven years of famine: As Joseph had warned (41:30), bad years followed the seven years of plenty. Pharaoh allowed Joseph to handle the crisis. He trusted completely Joseph’s leadership.

Joseph—A Model for Marketplace Christians

People who work in today's marketplace may wonder at times how their faith applies in a tough business environment. If so, it helps to study the life of Joseph. He and Daniel (Dan. 1:6) are two of the best models in Scripture for how to honor God in a "secular" workplace.

Consider Joseph's circumstances. He was cut off from his family. He was part of a culture that worshiped pagan gods, and apparently he alone there worshiped the true God. Thus he had no support system for his beliefs or values and no one to turn to for godly counsel as he made far-reaching decisions. His boss, Pharaoh, was considered a god by the Egyptians. Likewise Joseph's wife was an Egyptian and his father-in-law a priest of the sun-god.

How did Joseph maintain his faith in such an environment? Consider several ways: • (1) He maintained his integrity. Joseph steadfastly resisted the sexual advances of Potiphar's wife (Gen. 39:7–10). He realized that moral compromise would have been an offense not only against his master, but even worse, against God. He remained committed to what he knew was right, despite the consequences.

• (2) He kept doing his best even when the situation was the worst. Unjustly thrown into prison, Joseph easily could have become bitter at God. He could have given up with the attitude, "What's the use?" Instead, he kept doing what God had designed Him to do—exercising authority, even in prison (39:22, 23).

• (3) He carried out the task he was given. Promoted to Pharaoh's right hand, Joseph was faithful in the responsibility. He wisely planned for the coming famine and managed the Egyptian economy in a way that saved many lives (41:46–49, 53–57). He recognized that the work itself was what God wanted him to do.

• (4) He used his power and influence compassionately. Second-in-command under Pharaoh, Joseph could have used his position as an opportunity to pay back his enemies, such as his brothers, the slave traders, and Potiphar's wife. Instead, the record shows just the opposite: he used his power to bring reconciliation (45:3–15; 50:20).

God used Joseph's faithfulness to preserve the children of Jacob (Israel) in order to fulfill His promise to Abraham (45:5–8). In the same way, God intends to use believers today in positions great and small to accomplish His purposes. Therefore it is crucial that we honor God through our work. Like Joseph, we need to be people of whom there can be no doubt—we are those "in whom is the Spirit of God" (41:38).

41:56, 57 Joseph enriched the treasury of Pharaoh by selling grain to the Egyptians. all countries: The whole known world came to Egypt to buy grain. Just as Joseph had testified to Egypt concerning the reality of the true God, so now he was able to testify to all nations.

42:1 Jacob said to his sons: By this time, Judah had returned to Jacob (ch. 38).

42:2–4 Benjamin: Jacob still played favorites (37:3). However, there is no mention of jealousy among the other brothers as there had been before (37:8).

42:5, 6 bowed before him: God fulfilled the dreams He gave to Joseph at the age of seventeen (37:5–11).

INSIGHT

Stone Storehouses

The Egyptians maintained large stone storehouses, primarily for grain (Gen. 41:48). This protected them from famine and helped stabilize prices. The granaries were often associated with the temples. The ruler was regarded as divine, and the department devoted to grain growing and distribution was one of the most important in the fundamentally religious government of Egypt.

42:7, 8 acted as a stranger: These men standing before Joseph had sold him as a slave twenty years before; yet they were his brothers! Now suddenly here they were, bowing before him, just as he had dreamed! Joseph's life was now thoroughly Egyptian. In fact, he had named his first son "Forgetfulness," as a sign of his estrangement from the painful memories of his family (41:51). What went through Joseph's mind as he recognized his brothers? No doubt shock, confusion, and anger. Joseph may have spoke roughly in order to control his emotions.

42:9–12 Joseph remembered the dreams and released his pent-up feelings. He accused his brothers of something he knew they did not do. In this way, Joseph set out to learn whether his brothers had changed for the better. Would they betray each other when under pressure?

42:13 the youngest: At the mention of his younger brother, Benjamin, Joseph must have had great difficulty hiding his feelings. and one is no more: These words must have been unbearable to Joseph. Although his brothers supposed he was dead, he was right before their eyes!

42:14, 15 Twice, Joseph accused them of being spies. The brothers must have been overcome with fear. They were standing before a man who had absolute, autocratic power. At his word they could be executed.

42:16, 17 Joseph demanded that Benjamin, his full brother, be brought to him. At the time, Benjamin was with Jacob (v. 4).

42:18–20 Here, Joseph gave his brothers a clue about who he was. In effect, Joseph told them, "I fear the one God" (41:32). For all of his more than twenty years in Egypt, Joseph had not lost his belief in the true God.

42:21 truly guilty: The brothers realized that they were being punished for what they had done to Joseph so many years ago. when he pleaded with us: The first account (37:18–28) does not include this detail.

42:22 Only Reuben had tried to save Joseph on that awful day (37:22). His plan to rescue Joseph was thwarted when the brothers decided to sell him to the Midianite traders instead of abandoning him in a pit to die. his blood: According to Reuben, the brothers would be punished for killing Joseph.

42:23 Joseph had been speaking in Egyptian and an interpreter was translating to the brothers. The brothers did not suspect that this Egyptian official understood what they said in their own language.

42:24 wept: At last Joseph's emotions went beyond his control. he took Simeon: Since Reuben, the firstborn son, had been Joseph's principal defender years ago, Joseph took Simeon, the next son, hostage (35:23–26).

42:25–27 fill their sacks: Joseph's actions here are both gracious and unsettling. The returned money would enable the brothers to come another time for another purchase. On the other hand, they might be accused of stealing it. money: This word refers to a certain weight of silver. Coinage had not yet been invented.

42:28 The discovery of some of their money frightened the brothers (but see v. 35). They accused God for their troubles.

42:29–34 The brothers truthfully reported to their father Jacob all that had transpired.

42:35 The discovery of the money in the sack of one of the brothers (vv. 27, 28) could have been explained as a mistake. But now they learned that each man's money was in his sack!

42:36 You have bereaved me: Jacob's grief increased. One son was dead; another was in prison; and now a third was threatened by an Egyptian official.

42:37 Kill my two sons: Reuben took the lead. He tried to comfort his father, just as he had tried to stop his brothers from hurting Joseph (37:22). The rash vow Reuben makes concerning his own sons is an attempt to show how determined he was. Nonetheless, such vows sometimes brought disaster in biblical times (read the story of Jephthah's daughter, Judg. 11:29–40). Better to follow Jesus' instruction for "Yes" and "No" in Matt. 5:33–37.

42:38 My son shall not go: Jacob was resolute. He had lost enough sons; he didn't want to risk Benjamin, his favorite. with sorrow: He assured his sons that risking the loss of Benjamin in addition to having already lost Joseph would lead him into depression and cause his premature death.

43:1–6 deal so wrongfully: Jacob blamed his sons for telling the Egyptian there was still another brother. His sons replied that they had simply answered the questions they were asked (v. 7).

43:7, 8 Send the lad with me: Judah promised that he would keep Benjamin safe. Judah had changed tremendously (contrast 38:1). Instead of leaving the family, he protected his brother and was concerned about his father's welfare.

43:9 The verb for be surety is related to the noun "pledge" in Gen. 38:17, 18. Blame is from the Hebrew verb often translated as sin (40:1; 41:9).

43:10, 11 Because of the famine, the fruits that they took may have been dried and the nuts may have been from earlier harvests. The principle staple they needed was grain.

43:12–14 This is the fourth time in Genesis that God is called El Shaddai (Gen. 17:1; 28:3; 35:11). If I am bereaved: Jacob finally realized there was no other option. Mercy, here, is a word that speaks in an unusual manner of the warmth of God's love for His people. The word is the plural of a word related to the womb; it may describe the maternal affection of God for His people. This is the OT basis for the Paul's words "the mercies of God" in Rom. 12:1. Old Jacob did not yet know that God in His great maternal affection for him had already made a full reunion of the family possible, including the son presumed to be dead.

43:15–18 The brothers must have been surprised. The last time, they were treated as spies and criminals (42:9–14). Now Joseph invited them into his house to dine with him.

43:19–23 The steward responded in an unexpected manner. He did not accuse them of anything; instead, he invited them into the house with a blessing of peace. Your God and the God of your father: Surprisingly, the steward expressed his own faith in the God of Joseph and Jacob. I had your money: Of course, this is not the whole truth.

43:24 They washed their feet because they wore open sandals on dusty trails.

43:25, 26 For the second time (42:6) the brothers of Joseph bowed down to him, just as his revelatory dreams had predicted (37:5–11).

43:27–29 Benjamin had not been a part of the earlier conspiracy against Joseph. The relationship between Joseph and his younger brother must have been particularly close, since Joseph was overwhelmed when he saw Benjamin (v. 30).

43:30–32 place by himself: Joseph maintained his disguise, so he followed the Egyptian custom of eating at a table separate from the Hebrews. abomination: This word can indicate the strongest revulsion, something that might cause physical illness (46:34). The Egyptians might have been repulsed by bodily hair.

43:33, 34 according to his birthright: The brothers might have been surprised and unsettled that they had been seated according to their ages.

44:1–5 Joseph continued to test the character of his brothers by commanding his servants to place his brothers' money in their sacks and a silver cup in Benjamin's sack.

44:6–12 In response to the servant's accusations, Joseph's brothers insisted on their innocence and promised to give up whoever had Joseph's silver cup. After searching all the brothers' sacks, the servant found the cup with Benjamin.

44:13 In genuine despair for Benjamin's predicament, the brothers tore their clothes. They could not let Benjamin die! Ironically a few years earlier, the same brothers had been debating whether to kill Joseph. Instead of tearing their own clothes in grief, they had torn Joseph's robe in order to cover up what they had done.

44:14 Although Reuben was the oldest, Judah took the leadership role in this section (46:28).

44:15 Here, divination is the practice of consulting the will of the gods by observing the liquid in a special cup. Allegedly Benjamin had stolen not only a silver cup from an Egyptian ruler, but a significant one. His action could have had grave consequences. The words such a man as I do not clearly mean that Joseph practices divination, only that he might be expected to.

INSIGHT

The Importance of Age

Joseph seated his brothers in order of their ages (Gen. 43:33). Rights of inheritance were almost inflexibly linked to the order of birth. In society as a whole, age was regarded as a title to respect. Contempt for one's parents or elders was a serious offense, in certain cases calling for extreme punishment (Ex. 21:17; Lev. 19:32).

44:16 The contrition of Judah was complete. He offered no excuse; what had happened was the will of God. He presented himself and all his brothers as slaves to Joseph.

44:17 Joseph demanded that the youngest son, the presumably guilty one, become his slave. Joseph's parting words, go up in peace to your father, were a test. Would the brothers leave Benjamin as a slave in Egypt as they had left Joseph? For the brothers, Joseph's words must have been especially bitter. There would be no peace in their father's household if Benjamin became an Egyptian slave.

44:18–29 Then Judah came near: The process that Joseph was imposing on his brothers was having a special effect on Judah. How remarkably he has changed from that period of his indifference to the rest of the family of promise (ch. 38).

44:30–34 Judah explained to Joseph the deep despair his father would experience if he lost Benjamin. Then he offered himself as a slave in Benjamin's place. Instead of showing indifference to his family as he had in the past (ch. 38), Judah offered his own life to save Benjamin's.

45:1 could not restrain himself: Joseph's emotions were now stretched to their limits. His feelings were as tight bands about to break. All control is gone.

45:2 Joseph wept so loudly that his voice was heard throughout the whole palace (46:29)!

45:3 I am Joseph: Joseph must have said this in Hebrew and not in Egyptian (42:23). Still, the brothers could not believe their ears. They had sold Joseph as a slave. He would certainly be dead. Could it be true? The Egyptian lord who held their lives in his hands was their brother!

45:4 Joseph realized that his physical appearance, his Egyptian manner, his high position, and his total power over them all conspired to make his words unbelievable. He told them to come closer so that they could recognize his face and voice. Joseph identified himself as the brother whom they had sold. Fear overcame Joseph's brothers again. Would Joseph take revenge?

45:5–7 Joseph used kindness to calm his brothers' fears. God sent me before you to preserve life: God had worked through the brothers' evil actions and hateful attitudes to preserve not only Jacob's family but also the lives of many in the ancient world. Yahweh had worked through their actions to bring about His greater work. This pattern may be found throughout Scripture and history. It comes to its grand climax in the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, which is the great point made by Peter in his pivotal sermon on the Pentecost Sunday, when the Church was created by God. While unbelieving Jewish officials and wicked Roman soldiers had conspired together to put Jesus to death, this was all done "by the determined purpose and foreknowledge of God" (Acts 2:23). In the same manner, the barbarous actions of Joseph's brothers prepared the scenario for the great saving work of the living God (50:20).

45:8 Joseph repeated that God had accomplished His good purpose through the evil actions of his brothers. a father to Pharaoh: Joseph was an adviser to Pharaoh much as a father might be an adviser to his son.

45:9, 10 Joseph told his brothers that they must live in Egypt during the famine. This was God's plan, for He had told Abram that his descendant would live in a foreign land (15:13–16).

45:11 I will provide for you: With his family close by, Joseph could make sure his family had enough during the famine.

45:12, 13 my mouth: Joseph still had to convince his brothers that he was really their brother.

45:14 Benjamin was Joseph's only full brother. Finally they were reunited.

45:15–20 It is another mark of the very high esteem with which Joseph was held by Pharaoh that the report of his reunion with his brothers was greeted with pleasure by Pharaoh and his officials. Pharaoh went beyond any expected act of hospitality to Joseph.

45:18, 19 Because Joseph was preserving the nation from destruction, Pharaoh was providing the best for Joseph.

45:20, 21 Joseph sent his brothers back to his father with the Pharaoh's blessing and many gifts.

45:22 Benjamin, the brother who was at the greatest risk (ch. 44) now received the greatest blessing.

45:23–28 When the brothers told their father the great news concerning Joseph, Jacob was stunned. But he revived, saw the gifts, and believed his sons. before I die: These words are triumphant. Jacob could see his favorite son, whom he had believed to be dead.

46:1 Jacob's journey to Egypt began a 400-year sojourn away from the Promised Land of Canaan. Jacob entered Egypt with his twelve sons, including Joseph; 400 years later Jacob's descendants would leave Egypt as a small nation. Jacob went to the site that was so important to both his grandfather Abram (21:22–34) and his father Isaac (26:26–33). At Beersheba, Jacob (or Israel) had left his family to go to Haran (28:10). offered sacrifices: Jacob worshiped God at Beersheba. He consecrated his family to the Lord before he left the Promised Land.

Joseph's Story

The remarkable story of Joseph's rise to power in Egypt is not just another rags-to-riches story. Fundamentally, the story is about how the Lord created a nation out of a troubled family. Jacob's family was plagued by jealousy. Rachel envied Leah, and Leah envied Rachel (Gen. 30:1). Leah's sons inherited this pattern of jealousy. They envied Joseph so much that they sold him as a slave (37:28). It may even be that Reuben abused Bilhah because of jealousy toward Benjamin (35:18–22). Also, the family was separating. After Joseph was sold into slavery, Judah left the family, associated with the Canaanites, and married a Canaanite woman (38:1–3). Simeon followed Judah's lead by also taking a Canaanite wife (46:10). With these jealousies and divisions, Jacob's family, the family of God's eternal promises (12:1–3), was becoming more and more like the pagan Canaanite community around them.

But the Lord did not let the troubles of this family thwart His good purposes. He had promised to shape a great nation from it, a nation that would spread His blessings to the whole earth (12:1–3). Jacob's family was divided, but God worked the events so that the family was reunited. Through a remarkable series of circumstances, God elevated Joseph from the positions of slave and prisoner to administrator of Egypt, Pharaoh's right-hand man. God transformed the evil plans of Joseph's brothers into something good (37:19–28; 50:20). As the administrator of the Egyptians' plan to survive the coming famine, Joseph could save the lives of many people in the ancient world. With his new name, Zaphnath-Paaneah ("God Speaks and Lives"), and his remarkable story, Joseph could witness to these people about the power and goodness of the living God (41:45).

But God's good plan did not end there. God used the physical hardship of famine to reunite Israel's family. When Joseph's brothers saw him, not only did they express sorrow for their former evil actions (42:21; 45:5), but they demonstrated a new loyalty to their other half brother, Benjamin. Judah, who had left the family before (38:1), begged for Benjamin's life, even at the cost of his own freedom (44:18–34).The reunion of the family and the pressures of famine prompted Jacob to move closer to Egypt, to the land of Goshen. God used the evil attitudes of the Egyptians—their hatred of shepherds—to isolate the family there (43:32; 46:34). In this isolation, God could develop a nation dedicated to worshiping and obeying Him. In all the exceptional events of Joseph's story, God remained faithful to His promises to Abraham (12:1–3). He created a great nation out of Jacob's family through a maze of human jealousy, family divisions, and racial hatred (50:20).

46:2 God appeared to Israel for the seventh time (35:1, 9). The fact that the names Israel and Jacob are used interchangeably indicates that the earlier negative connotations of the name Jacob have faded (31:11; 32:28; 35:10). Instead of meaning that Jacob "Supplants," the name Jacob now means that God "Supplants."

46:3 God, the God of your father: The self-identification of the Lord is a bit different here than at earlier times. The Lord is saying, "I am the true deity." By adding the words, "(even) the God of your father," the Lord identifies Himself as the God in whom Isaac had believed, even the One who had brought great blessing to Isaac. God had forbidden Isaac at a previous time to go to Egypt (26:2), and Isaac's father Abram had had an unpleasant experience in Egypt (12:10–20). Despite Joseph's gifts and words, Jacob feared what would happen in Egypt. Jacob's family numbered seventy (v. 27). Out of this family, God would bring a great nation (Ex. 1:1–7). Again, God renewed His promises to Jacob (35:11).

46:3 Do not fear was the same assurance given to Abraham and Isaac (Gen. 15:1; 26:24).

46:4 go down with you: God promised to be with His people, even in a foreign land. Joseph will put: Jacob's life was nearing its end. But God promised Jacob that his beloved Joseph, who he had thought was dead, would be with him at his deathbed.

46:5–7 It is the style of Hebrew prose to announce an important event and then to describe it as having happened. This adds solemnity and dignity to the text. The entire family and all their possessions were now in Egypt.

46:8–27 these were the names: The listing of the family of Jacob is not only a remarkable historical document, but also a source of pride. From this family would come the whole nation of Israel, God's people who would enter the Promised Land according to His promise (15:13–21). The order of the sons of Jacob is given according to their birth mothers (as in 35:23–26; their birth order is given in 29:31–30:24; 35:16–22).

46:8–15 First are the sons of Leah: Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun, along with their sons.

46:8 Reuben: The identifying phrase, Jacob's firstborn, which should have been a mark of great pride, became a mark of sadness. Reuben lost the right of the firstborn because of his sin with Bilhah (35:22; 49:3, 4).

46:9, 10 Shaul, the son of a Canaanite woman: This phrase indicates that marrying a Canaanite was unusual in Jacob's family. Only Simeon and Judah married Canaanite women (Joseph's wife is Egyptian).

46:11 The sons of Levi, Gershon, Kohath, and Merari became the founders of the Levitical families (Ex. 6:16–19). The sons of Kohath in particular became the founders of the priestly family, from which Aaron and Moses descended (Ex. 6:20–25).

46:12–14 The story of Judah's family, including the untimely deaths of Er and Onan, is found in ch. 38. Shelah was the only surviving son of Judah by his Canaanite wife, Shua. The other two sons, Perez and Zerah, were born to Tamar, his daughter-in-law.

46:15 Dinah's sad story is reported in ch. 34.

46:16–26 The total is sixty-six, and when Jacob, Joseph, and Joseph's two sons are added, the grand total is seventy. The number did not include the wives of Jacob's sons. Ancient Israelites regarded the number seventy as a token of God's special blessing on them.

46:27, 28 Jacob treated Judah as the leader among the brothers (44:18). Normally the firstborn, Reuben, would have been expected to lead (46:8).

46:29 Joseph, the great leader of Egypt, went to meet his family in Goshen, where they would settle.

46:30 Now let me die: Jacob's reunion with his son Joseph was the crowning event of his long life. Jacob lived for seventeen more years (47:28).

46:31–34 These verses show Joseph's leadership ability. He accomplished his goals by maintaining a genuinely deferential attitude to those in authority, by skill in making suggestions, and by a knowledge of the customs of the people. The Egyptians scorned shepherds (43:32). Abomination is a term referring to the strongest revulsion and distaste. God used the racial and ethnic prejudice of the Egyptians as a way of preserving the ethnic and spiritual identity of His own people. Jacob's family was already intermarrying with Canaanites (ch. 38) and was in danger of losing its identity as the people of God.

46:34 This verse is an inappropriate place for the chapter to end; this section extends to 47:12. There are several places in the Genesis where the chapter divisions are not at the best place in the narrative (2:1, 4; 27:46; 29:31; 30:25). It would seem that the better place for the end of ch. 46 would be at 47:12, with ch. 47 beginning with what is presently 47:13.

47:1–6 Joseph's plan worked. Pharaoh let Jacob's family live in Goshen (46:31) because the Egyptians detested shepherds (46:31–34).

47:6 Goshen is an area in the Nile delta that is well watered and ideally suited for the shepherding family of Jacob.

47:7–10 The presentation of Joseph's father before Pharaoh must have been a grand occasion. But surprisingly, Jacob blessed Pharaoh (vv. 7, 10). Pharaoh as the host might have thought of pronouncing a blessing on Jacob because of his great admiration for Joseph. But instead the visitor blessed the host in the name of the living God! Literally Jacob obeyed God's command to Abram's descendants to "be a blessing" (Gen. 12:2).

47:8–10 how old: Pharaoh's question suggests that the long ages of the patriarchal family were truly exceptional, even for this period. Jacob responded in humility and honesty. Jacob had experienced sadness or evil. Years of rivalry with his brother, Esau, and struggle with Laban had marked the early part of his life. For long years he grieved the supposed death of his son Joseph. His 130 years were fewer than the 175 years of Abraham (25:7) and the 180 years of Isaac (35:28). But his life was not over. He would live to the age of 147 and would die in Egypt (47:28).

47:11 With Pharaoh's blessing, Joseph arranged the perfect place for his family members to live.

47:12 provided … bread: As the one in charge of the distribution of food during the famine, Joseph made sure that his family was well supplied.

47:13 Now there was no bread: The famine was severe even in Egypt.

47:14 The money was quantities of silver. Because the stored foods belonged to the Egyptian state, the state's power and wealth grew immensely. The Egyptians gave up their silver, their cattle, and their property in the process of buying food to keep themselves alive. Canaan also continued to suffer from the famine.

47:15–19 When they ran out of money (silver), the people brought their livestock (v. 17) to purchase grain. When they no longer had livestock they sold their land. In this way the collective wealth of Canaan and Egypt went into Pharaoh's treasury.

47:20 Pharaoh's ownership of the land would eventually lead to gross abuses of power. For the abuse of the Israelites, see the Book of Exodus.

47:21 The movements of peoples from their farms into the cities was a significant event in the social and political affairs of ancient Egypt.

47:22 That Joseph gave preferential treatment to the priests of the pagan religions of that nation may be the most troubling issue for us in his administration of Egypt. Doubtless this was due to some extent to the powerful lobby that the priests would have had in the palace. Nonetheless, this seems to be a strange concession to idolatrous worship by Joseph, the man of God. The fact that the priests were under a system of rations from the throne may simply have tied Joseph's hands with regard to reform measures he might have wished to make.

47:23–26 With the land now in the possession of the state, Joseph imposed a system of taxation on the people. The state supplied the seed for planting, but one-fifth of the proceeds became the property of Pharaoh. This became standard practice in Egypt (v. 26). The people responded with gratitude (v. 25) because Joseph had saved their lives.

47:27 Jacob's family did not have to sell their possessions in order to acquire food. Since Joseph controlled all the supplies, he gave his family what they needed.

Seizing an Opportunity

Sometimes God puts an opportunity in our way that could advance our career and bring prosperity. That's what happened to Jacob and his sons when they migrated to Egypt. Of course, they were hardly looking for a career move; mainly they wanted to escape the famine in Canaan, and they ended up relocating largely at the request of Joseph. But once they arrived, circumstances created a unique opportunity.

Joseph was faced with a bit of a problem: how to introduce his long-lost family to Pharaoh. Pharaoh had an extremely high regard for Joseph. But what would be his reaction when he learned that Jacob and his sons were shepherds and ranchers? Those occupations were an "abomination" to the Egyptians (Gen. 46:34), fit only for slaves. One can gain some idea of how detestable they were by noting that when the brothers came on their second journey to Egypt, bringing Benjamin with them, they were forced to eat by themselves, away from the Egyptians (43:32). Apparently Hebrews and shepherds were synonymous in the Egyptian mind.

Joseph turned this potential embarrassment into an opportunity. He instructed his brothers to boldly claim their skills rather than downplay their occupation. He knew that Pharaoh probably would never change his opinion of shepherds, but most likely the ruler at least would allow the family to live by themselves in the Goshen district.

That's exactly how the plan worked out (47:1–6). In addition, Pharaoh's respect for Joseph led to a request that the brothers have oversight over Pharaoh's own livestock. He still detested shepherds, but when it came to the care of his own animals, apparently he preferred to employ the kin of someone he trusted.

The assignment matched the skills and experience of the brothers. Like many immigrants around the world today, they were willing and able to do work that people in host cultures find unacceptable. As a result, they prospered in the land (47:27; compare Ex. 1:7).

47:28 seventeen years: Even though Jacob had been willing to die when he rejoined his son Joseph (45:28; 46:30), God gave him a good number of years to enjoy his family.

47:29–31 Jacob wanted to do a few more things before his death. First, He wanted Joseph to promise to bury him in Canaan. Second, he wanted to bless each of Joseph's sons (chs. 48; 49).

47:29–31 your hand under my thigh: The action suggests a most solemn and binding promise (for the same sign between Abraham and his servant read Gen. 24:2). deal kindly and truly with me: The expression means "demonstrate to me the utmost covenant loyalty." In other words be faithful, just as God has been faithful to His promises. do not bury me in Egypt: Jacob asked to be buried in Canaan. He demonstrated his vigorous faith in God's promises by asking to be buried in the land promised to his descendants.

48:1, 2 Joseph knew the end of Jacob's life was approaching (47:29), but the news came that he was sick. This chapter continues a theme in Genesis of two competing sons. For Cain and Abel see ch. 4; for Jacob and Esau see chs. 25–28; for Perez and Zerah see 38:27–30. Often the younger supplants the older. God works in ways different from the ordinary and expected course of events.

48:3, 4 God Almighty: This is the fifth time the name El Shaddai is found in Genesis (17:1; 28:3; 35:11; 43:14; 49:25). Luz is the older name for Bethel. Jacob recalled God's appearances to him (28:10–15, 19; 35:6–13) and God's promises to his family.

48:5–7 The two sons of Joseph were Manasseh and Ephraim (41:50–52). Jacob reversed their birth order. He also said that they were as much his sons as were Reuben and Simeon, his first and second sons (29:32, 33). Because of the outrageous acts of Reuben (35:22) and Simeon (34:25), both of them had fallen from favor. Levi was also implicated in the outrage of Simeon (34:25). Therefore the rights and privileges of the firstborn son were passed down to two other sons, Judah (49:8–12) and Joseph (49:22–26). Reuben as the firstborn could have received a double portion of the father's inheritance. But Jacob gave the double share to Joseph (v. 22). Joseph's two sons are then counted with their uncles as founders of the tribes of Israel.

48:7 Rachel died beside me: The aged Jacob remembered the great love of his life, Rachel, who died giving birth to Benjamin.

48:8–11 I had not thought to see: Jacob recalled again his grief at the thought of Joseph's death and his joy at being able to see him again in this life (46:29). Now he could see Joseph's sons as well!

INSIGHT

Egyptian Bureaucracy

The Egyptian state supervised a bureaucracy capable of building pyramids and temples that required thousands of workers and decades of effort. Meticulous records were kept regarding commodities and the disbursements of food and drink to workers (Gen. 47:24). Standard-sized loaves of bread were common.

48:12–14 Joseph presented his sons to his father in an act of humility and respect. He placed his sons so that his father's right hand would rest on the head of the older son and the left hand on the younger. But Jacob deliberately reversed his hands, putting Ephraim first.

48:15 In his blessing, Jacob reaffirmed his great faith in the living God. Despite the self-serving acts of his youth, Jacob's faith had matured. Jacob used the definite article with the word God to emphasize "the Genuine Deity" (as in Gen. 6:2; 22:1; 27:28; 31:11; 46:3). He identified God as the One whom Abraham and Isaac served.

48:16 The Angel is an abbreviated way of referring to the Angel of the Lord (16:7; 22:11; 24:7). my name: Jacob wanted Joseph's two sons to inherit the blessing God gave to Abraham, Isaac, and himself.

48:17 Joseph realized that his father's right hand was on the head of the younger boy, and he attempted to rearrange his father's hands. But despite his dimmed eyesight, Jacob knew completely what he was doing. Once again in Genesis, God overturned the expected order of things. The older would serve the younger, just as Jacob himself had been elevated over his older brother so long ago (27:1–28:9).

48:18–20 as Ephraim and as Manasseh: Jacob recited the names of Joseph's sons with the youngest first. From then on, Joseph's two sons were known in that order.

48:21 Jacob promised Joseph that he would return to the land of Canaan. The promise was fulfilled after Joseph's death (50:24–26).

48:22 one portion above: By blessing the two sons of Joseph on the same level as his own sons, Jacob gave to Joseph the double share. from the hand of the Amorite: This promise would be fulfilled when the Israelites returned to Canaan to possess the land God had given them (15:12–21).

49:1 in the last days: The expression may be translated “in the glorious future.” Jacob described the future for his descendants.

49:2 Listen to these words are a formal introduction to what follows.

49:3, 4 Jacob began with warm words of praise to Reuben, his firstborn son (for his birth see 29:31, 32). But he ended with a rebuke of Reuben’s presumptuous actions with Bilhah (35:22). By going to his father’s bed, Reuben was attempting to solidify his claims as the firstborn son. In fact, he doomed his cause.

49:5–7 Simeon and Levi are linked because of the fierce and cruel revenge they took against Shechem and his people (ch. 34). Even though Shechem had raped their sister, their vengeance was excessive and an outrage against the sacred rite of circumcision. Because of what they did, Jacob described them as instruments of cruelty. Their anger was fierce and cruel, not righteous or zealous for God’s honor (vv. 6, 7). Because of their actions, they would be scattered in Israel. Later, Simeon’s allotment was scattered within the larger sphere of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 19:1–9), and Levi’s allotment was scattered in cities throughout the land (Josh. 21).

Jacob's Blessing

The last great event in the life of old Jacob was the prophetic blessing he gave to each of his twelve sons. The destiny of the nation was principally in their lives, for good or for ill. In Gen. 49 we read the Spirit-empowered blessings that Jacob gave to each son. The poetic casting of these words made them memorable, incisive, and powerful. These were oracles from God, much as any prophecy from Isaiah or Jeremiah.

49:8 Judah … shall praise: This verse is a wordplay on the meaning of Judah's name, "Let God Be Praised" (for the birth of Judah read 29:35). Jacob's praise for Judah was surpassed only by his praise for Joseph (vv. 22–26; ch. 48). Judah rose to the leadership of the twelve sons as Jacob passed over Reuben, Simeon, and Levi. Judah's selfless actions to save his brother Benjamin were exemplary (44:18–34), especially after the sorry episodes described in ch. 38.

49:9 The lion is an ancient royal symbol. It appears in Balaam's oracle (Num. 23; 24).

49:10 The scepter is an ornate staff or rod that is a symbol of royal authority. A lawgiver is the one who issues statutes. With these words, Jacob predicted that a royal line would rise from Judah's descendants. Shiloh is an obscure word, probably meaning the one "To Whom It Belongs." That is, until the One to whom all royal authority belongs comes, the tribe of Judah will always have a lawgiver in its ranks (Is. 9:1–6). Shiloh, like Seed (3:15), is a name for the coming Messiah.

49:11, 12 The imagery in this verse describes the warfare that the Messiah will wage to establish His reign (Pss. 2; 110; Rev. 19:11–21). Wine recalls the color of blood. The colors of his eyes and teeth speak of vitality and victory. The language of this passage expresses the mystery and wonder surrounding this Coming One, Shiloh.

49:13 Zebulun is given precedence over his brother Issachar (vv. 14, 15; for Zebulun's birth read 30:19, 20). His blessing will be the northern coastlands bordering Phoenicia (compare Josh. 18:10–16).

49:14 Jacob's words to Issachar portend a heavy enslavement following a time of plenty (Is. 9:1) For the birth of Issachar read 30:14–18.

For Issachar's allotment, compare Josh. 19:17–23.

49:15, 16 Dan shall judge: Dan's name is related to the word meaning "judge" (for his birth read 30:1–6).

49:17, 18 a viper by the path: This possibly means that some of Dan's descendants would abandon their faith in the Lord. Yet the godly can still expect salvation from the Lord.

49:19 Gad, a troop shall tramp upon him: Although the tribe of Gad will endure hardship, ultimate victory is promised (for Gad's birth read 30:9–11).

49:20 The brief words to Asher were happy and hopeful (for Asher's birth read 30:12, 13).

49:21 Naphtali: Again, the brief words promised hope and joy. For Naphtali's birth to Rachel's maid Bilhah read 30:7, 8.

49:22 Joseph: Only the promises given to Judah (vv. 8–12) can rival the praise Jacob gave to Joseph. For Joseph's birth to Rachel read 30:22–24; for the exaltation of Joseph's family read ch. 48.

49:23 The imagery of archers who shot at him represents Joseph's personal experience at the hands of his brothers and then the Egyptians (chs. 37; 39; 40).

49:24 Jacob described Joseph's eventual triumph. Not only did Joseph have great strength of character represented by the strong bow, he was protected by the Mighty God of Jacob. This is the first of five titles that Jacob used to describe God as he blessed Joseph (vv. 24, 25). The word translated as Mighty is found also at Ps. 132:2, 5; Is. 1:24; 49:26; 60:16. In all of these places it serves as a name for God. Perhaps this is Jacob's special name for God drawn from his experience with the divine wrestler (32:22–30). Using this special term for God in his blessing shows what great affection he had for his son Joseph. Second, Jacob called the Lord the great Shepherd. This term also would have great significance for a family of shepherds. God shepherds and cares for their family just as they shepherded their own flocks so often. God is the one Good Shepherd, who truly cares for the flock (Ps. 23; John 10). Even the Egyptian Pharaoh, who despised shepherds (46:28–47:6), appeared in statues with a shepherd's crook to represent his benevolent care for the nation. Third, Jacob praised God as the Stone of Israel. On the occasions when God spoke to him, Jacob (or Israel) erected stone pillars to commemorate the event (28:18).

God had become for him the “Stone of Israel,” the Rock that typifies stability and trustworthiness.

49:25 The fourth term Jacob used for God in the blessing of Joseph is the God of your father. Earlier, Jacob had described the Lord as the God of Abraham and Isaac (48:15). Here he expressed his faith in the God who had blessed him. Finally, Jacob called God the Almighty. This is the sixth and final time El Shaddai is used in Genesis. This name of God is found in association with Abraham (17:1), Isaac (28:3), Jacob (28:3; 35:11; 43:14; 48:3), and Joseph (here). In Exodus, God identified Himself to Moses with this name (Ex. 6:3). In this way, with five titles for God, Jacob prayed manifold blessings on Joseph.

“Almighty”

(Heb. shadday) (Gen. 17:1; 28:3; 35:11; 43:14; 48:3; 49:25; Job 37:23) Strong’s #7706: This divine name in Hebrew is El Shadday. El means God, and Shadday is probably related to the Akkadian word for mountain, or to a Hebrew verb meaning “mighty.” God is “mountainlike.” He is powerful, majestic, awe-inspiring, and enduring. Just like a mountain, He provides a shelter from the elements and from evil (Ps. 91:1, 2). Therefore, El Shadday can mean “Majestic Deity” or “the God Who Provides My Refuge.”

49:26 Jacob’s blessing on Joseph concluded with the most enthusiastic words. Separate (Heb. nazir) is the word also used for the Nazirites (Num. 6:1–21). Both Joseph and later Nazirites were separated from others in order to serve God’s holy purposes.

49:27 Benjamin: The image of a wolf is ominous (Judg. 20:21–25). For Benjamin’s birth and the death of his mother Rachel read 35:16–20.

49:28 the twelve tribes of Israel: Jacob’s blessings are prophecies about the destiny of each tribe. Some of the blessings are obscure. But the blessings on Judah (vv. 8–12) and Joseph (vv. 22–26) are clear prophecies from God about their destinies (compare Moses’ blessing of the tribes of Israel, Deut. 33).

49:29 bury me with my fathers: Jacob challenged his sons not to bury him in Egypt. Certainly Jacob knew that many thousands of his descendants would be buried in Egypt during the 400 years of their prophesied sojourn (15:13–16). But God had promised him that he would return to the Promised Land (46:4) His son Joseph had sworn a solemn oath to bury him in Canaan (47:29–31). Now at the moment of death, Jacob wanted more assurance that this oath would be kept.

49:30–33 Jacob identified the place as the cave … Machpelah, where Jacob’s father, mother, grandfather, and grandmother were buried. Abraham had purchased this land as a burial place for Sarah (ch. 23). gathered to his people: This phrase refers to death (Gen. 15:15; 25:8; 35:29), but it also may refer to immortality (2 Sam. 12:23).

50:1 wept: Joseph expressed his strong, genuine love for his father (45:1–3; 46:29).

50:2 embalm: Joseph directed that his father be embalmed (Heb. hanat, related to "spices") so that he could be buried in Canaan. One day Joseph would also be embalmed (v. 26).

50:2, 3 Embalming a body originated in Egypt. Vital organs were removed and placed in jars to be buried with the mummy. Body cavities were filled with salt, soda, spices, and gums to effect drying and preservation. The limbs and the body were tightly wrapped with several layers of linen cloth. A person's status during life determined the elaborateness of the mummy case.

50:4–9 Joseph made his request to leave Egypt to bury his father's remains in Canaan. The expression to the household of Pharaoh indicates that even Joseph did not always have immediate access to the Pharaoh's presence.

50:10, 11 At Atad in the Transjordan, the delegation mourned another seven days. This is the entrance to the Promised Land. The Canaanites were so impressed with the party of mourners that they named the place for them.

50:12–15 Joseph's brothers had a new fear. What if Joseph's kindness to them were something Joseph showed merely to please his father? With Jacob dead, would Joseph take revenge?

50:16, 17 The message may have been truthful or it might have been an invention of the brothers reacting to their fear. trespass … sin: The evil the brothers had done to Joseph (for Jacob's use of the same words to Laban see 31:36). Joseph wept: Joseph accepted the confession in the message as a sincere confession from his brothers.

Many People

Who were the "many people to be saved alive" encompassed by Joseph's statement (Gen. 50:20)? Certainly they included Jacob's family, said to be at least seventy persons (46:27; Ex. 1:5). Joseph's position in Egypt enabled him to save this group from starvation (Gen. 45:5–8). Yet many more people than just Joseph's family benefited from his presence in Egypt. God used Joseph to rescue Pharaoh and the Egyptians from the famine (41:53–55). In fact, as a result of Joseph's wise planning and management, people from all countries in that part of the world were able to find food in Egypt (41:56, 57).

But God's goodness through Joseph did not stop there. Because the Israelites were preserved in Egypt, they eventually became a great nation (Ex. 1:7), in fulfillment of God's promise to Abraham (Gen. 12:2; 15:5). In turn, it was through the Israelites that God brought Jesus into the world, and through Him made salvation available to every person and nation (Gen. 12:3; John 3:17; Rom. 3:21–26, 29).

Given this perspective, we can see that the "many people" far exceeded even those that Joseph probably had in mind. In fact, Christians today are among the "many" who have benefited from the good purposes carried out by Joseph. This suggests that the OT is not only about God's dealings with the Israelites, but about God's plan to reach the entire world through the Israelites.

God's purpose has always been to "save alive" as many people as possible by bringing them into right relationship with Him.

50:18–21 you meant evil: Joseph spoke clearly about how he viewed the events of his life (45:4–8). God meant it for good: God transformed the evil of a group of men into an exceedingly great work. Joseph not only saved the lives of numerous people in the ancient world, he also testified to the power and goodness of the living God. God works His good plan even through the evil plans of evil people. Even the worst events can be used in the hand of kindly Providence for His good. The most impressive example of this is the death of Jesus. Their evil brought God's best, the gospel of Jesus Christ. The experience of Joseph at the hands of his then-evil brothers was a miniature demonstration of God's saving actions in Jesus, the Coming One. Here the typology of Joseph is most strongly a pointer to the experience of the Savior. So with these kind words he comforted them, dispersing their fear.

50:22 one hundred and ten years: God blessed Joseph with a long life. This age may be compared to the 175 years of Abraham (25:7), 180 years of Isaac (35:28), and 147 years of Jacob (47:28).

50:23 children of Machir: The listing of the children of Ephraim before the children of Manasseh is a step in the fulfillment of Jacob's blessing. The younger son of Joseph was elevated over his older brother (48:8–22).

50:24 God will surely visit you: On his deathbed, Joseph expressed continuing faith in the promises of God. He reassured his relatives that God would continue to work in the family. In His time (15:12–16), God would keep His promise to give Canaan to Abraham's descendants (12:7; 26:3; 35:12; 46:4). to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob: This phrase is the standard way of referring to God's covenant to Abraham's family (48:15; 49:25; Ex. 2:24; 3:16). The recital of the three names reaffirms the certainty of the promise and God's commitment to fulfill it.

50:25 an oath: Joseph had buried his father Jacob in Canaan (50:7–14). Now he had the Israelites swear that they would take his bones to the Promised Land when the entire nation of Israel returned to Canaan. In this oath Joseph expressed his complete belief that God would keep His promise to give the land of Canaan to the Israelites (Heb. 11:22). Hundreds of years later, Moses would keep the Israelites' oath by taking Joseph's bones with the people into the wilderness (Ex. 13:19). Finally, Joshua would bury the bones of Joseph at Shechem after the conquest of Canaan (Josh. 24:32).

Preserving the Dead Body

Egyptian ideas about death and the afterlife emphasized preserving the dead body from decay (Gen. 50:26). Since Egyptian climate is very dry, the Egyptians were able to preserve bodies by drying them completely. They accomplished this by burying the bodies in natron, a naturally found combination of baking soda and sodium carbonate.

50:26 Joseph was embalmed, like Jacob (vv. 1–3) and like all members of the Egyptian ruling class.

The Second Book of Moses Called Exodus

———— THE BOOK OF EXODUS DESCRIBES THE CENTRAL historical event for the Israelites: their salvation from slavery in Egypt. In addition to being the Creator of the entire universe and the One who had covenanted with Abraham's family, God emerges in Exodus as the Savior of the Israelites. He saved them from Egyptian slavery and in the process molded them into a nation, as He promised Abram in Gen. 12:1–3. Similar to a child, Israel was "born" as a nation in the Exodus, grew and developed in the wilderness, and reached adulthood in the Promised Land. The Book of Exodus records the origin of this nation and can be considered the foundational charter for Israel.

Moses, the main character in this book, participated in an epic drama that featured unforgettable confrontations with a stubborn pharaoh, a last-minute escape, and a joyful celebration. Throughout this entire drama, God demonstrated His power and holiness through miraculous signs and wonders. Finally, through Moses at Mount Sinai, God taught His people how to become a kingdom of priests and a holy nation dedicated to serving and worshiping Him (19:6).

Exodus has two principal sections. The first section, written as a story of epic prose (chs. 1—18), portrays God as the Savior and Provider of His people. God first saved the infant Moses from a watery death and then provided him with the best education in the ancient world, Pharaoh's court. In this royal court and later in the Midianite wilderness, God shaped Moses into an instrument for saving His people, the Israelites, from slavery. Then at the chosen time, God sent Moses and Aaron to confront Pharaoh, the Israelites' oppressor.

The miraculous signs and plagues displayed in this dramatic encounter demonstrated God's power over the supposed gods of Egypt, especially Pharaoh, who claimed he was an incarnate deity. Since Pharaoh had attempted to destroy God's firstborn son (the people of Israel; Ex. 4:22, 23), the Lord, in the tenth plague, destroyed the Egyptians' firstborn sons. But the Lord passed over, or saved, the firstborn sons of the Israelites because they were His people and had obeyed His instructions concerning the Passover feast (ch. 12). With this tenth plague, the Lord saved His people from slavery. At the Red Sea, God saved them again, this time from the power of the Egyptian army (12:31–42; 13:17—15:21). The enslaved people were free! God was their Savior!

Not only did God save these slaves, He provided for them. When the Israelites left Egypt, God prompted the Egyptians to give them all kinds of goods (12:36). Then in the wilderness He turned bitter waters sweet (15:22–27), gave manna (food) from heaven (ch. 16), and brought water from a rock (17:1–7). Yet even with these miraculous provisions, the Israelites murmured and complained. They had barely finished singing the praises of the Lord (15:1–21) when they begin to murmur against His goodness (15:24). When would they trust in God their Provider?

The second section of the Book of Exodus is a series of detailed laws and instructions (chs. 19—40). But these laws are no ordinary laws. They reveal the very character of God. They reveal God as a Lawgiver and as the Holy One. This section records God's benevolent laws given in the context of a treaty with the Israelites. The Hebrew word translated law always has a positive meaning—"instruction." The Law is like an outstretched finger, pointing out the direction a person should take in life. In the Ten Commandments (20:1–17), God mercifully pointed out His way to His people, the way to life. But benevolent instruction was only part of God's plan for the Israelites. His larger plan was to establish a relationship with them based on a formal treaty (ch. 20).

Exodus concludes with instructions about the tabernacle—its construction, furnishing, and services. Many of these instructions point to the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. These instructions and the Israelite's encounter with God at Mount Sinai taught them that God is perfect and holy. He can be approached only in the way He prescribes.

At the close of Exodus, we read how the Israelites completed the construction of the tabernacle (39:33) and that the glory of the Lord came to fill it (40:34). God had saved His people, provided for them, made a treaty with them, and taught them how to live. Finally He lived with them (Ex. 25:8; 29:45). All was ready, it seemed, for the journey to the Land of Promise.

Traditionally, Jewish and Christian scholars have agreed that Moses compiled and wrote Exodus, along with the other books of the Pentateuch (Genesis through Deuteronomy). With the exception of the historical summary in the first chapter and the genealogical section in the sixth chapter, Moses participated in or observed all the events described in the book. Furthermore, unlike Genesis, Exodus mentions Moses' writing (17:14; 24:4; 34:27). Moses' training in Pharaoh's court (2:10; Acts 7:22) would have prepared him wonderfully for the task of the writing. However, Moses may not have written every word in Exodus. For example, the genealogical section in 6:14–27 appears to be a later scribal addition to the book. Yet, it is still reasonable to identify Moses as the architect and principal author of Exodus.

Some have observed that it would be unlikely for an author to use the third person ("he" or "Moses") rather than the first person ("I") in a narrative in which the author was so intimately involved. Yet in ancient cultures, the use of the third person for the narrator was customary.

Moses probably wrote his memoirs—which became the Pentateuch—while he was wandering in the wilderness with the Israelites. He wrote the early portions of Exodus, we suspect, with the full assurance that he would be a participant in Israel's blessing in the Land of Promise. Only much later (Num. 20:1–13) did Moses lose his opportunity to enter the land.

Commentary

1:1–22 The suffering of the people of Israel in the land of Egypt. Exodus picks up where Genesis ended, but with a significant difference. The family of Jacob is still in Egypt after four hundred years, but they are now reduced to servility, despite the evident blessing of the Lord in their lives.

1:1 Israel is also called Jacob. His twelve sons became the founders of the twelve tribes of the nation Israel.

1:2–4 The sons are listed according to their mothers and their ages. Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar and Zebulun are all sons of Leah. Benjamin is the son of Rachel. Dan and Naphtali are sons of Bilhah, the maid of Rachel. Gad and Asher are sons of Zilpah, the maid of Leah (for each son's birth, read Gen. 29:31–35; 35:16–20, 23–26).

1:5, 6 seventy persons: See Gen. 46:1–27. Joseph was not included among the seventy (for Joseph's death, read Gen. 50).

1:7 The extraordinary growth of the family of promise in Egypt is a great miracle and evidence of God's blessing. God multiplied a small family of twelve sons and one daughter into a nation that would conquer Canaan. This verse piles one descriptive phrase upon another to emphasize the incredible growth of Israel's family and God's hand in this miracle.

1:8–10 The new king did not remember Joseph—his privileged position in the older pharaoh's administration, his administrative skill that saved the Egyptians from starvation, and his enrichment of the pharaoh's treasury. This new pharaoh probably did not reign immediately after the death of the pharaoh of Joseph's day. More likely, this pharaoh was one of the Hyksos kings who descended from foreign invaders. Ethnically they were a minority in Egypt. These kings may have perceived the growing numbers of Hebrews as a challenge to themselves and to their control over Egypt. Deal shrewdly is a form of the verb meaning "to be wise" (Heb. hakam, in the Hithpael formation) and is used here in a negative, conspiratorial sense. In other places, it is used of godly, pious wisdom (as in the Book of Proverbs).

IN PLACE

The Land of Goshen

The "land" (Ex. 1:7) which the Hebrews inhabited during their years in Egypt was the land of Goshen (meaning "mound of earth," Gen. 47:27). This district is believed to have been in the northeastern territory of the Nile delta, but it was probably not irrigated by the Nile or its canals. For that reason, Goshen was more suited to grazing animals than to farming, and thus it was given to Jacob and his family during Joseph's days in power, because they owned many flocks (46:28–34).

By the time of Exodus, however, Joseph was long forgotten and the Israelites had become slaves to the Egyptians (Ex. 1:8–11). During this period, the Goshen district may have functioned as a Hebrew ghetto, housing the workers while they built the storage cities of Pithom and Raamses, both located in Goshen. However, Goshen later served as a place of protection as God kept His people from the plagues that He visited on Egypt.

1:9, 10 more and mightier than we: This declares that Israel was more numerous and powerful than policies for Egyptian security could tolerate. Egypt feared the consequences of a war in which Israel might side with the invaders.

1:11 By God's mercy, the Israelites were left to themselves for most of the four hundred years they were in Egypt. They increased dramatically during this period. But the time finally came when Pharaoh put taskmasters, (Heb. sarð) meaning "chiefs of slave gangs," over them. Pithom and Raamses: These store cities are mentioned according to the names by which they were known in later times. The Pharaoh Ramses (whose name presumably relates to the name of one of these cities) was not yet in power.

1:12 God multiplied His people in times of distress. The fear of the Egyptians toward the people of Israel was based on misjudgment and hatred. The term dread means "to feel a sickening dread" (Num. 21:4).

1:13, 14 The harsher the Egyptians made the lives of the Hebrews, the more they flourished. made their lives bitter: Later God commanded the Israelites to eat something bitter with the Passover meal so that they might remember the bitterness of their time in Egypt (ch. 12). rigor: This term (Heb. perek) means "harshness" or "severity." With every task the Egyptians gave to the Hebrews, they made things increasingly difficult for them. They hoped to break the Israelites' spirit with abusive slavery.

1:15 This chapter summarizes nearly four centuries of history. The king of Egypt mentioned here is probably not the Hyksos king alluded to in vv. 8–14. This king, perhaps Thutmose I (c. 1539–1514 B.C.), ruled Egypt when Moses was born (2:1–10). Hebrew midwives: Probably Hebrews themselves, or perhaps Egyptians who were given Hebrew names of honor. Most likely, these two women headed a guild of midwives. One thing is certain: they knew the living God (vv. 17, 21). Their names, Shiphrah ("Beautiful One") and Puah ("Splendid One"), are preserved in this account because they were godly women with a courageous faith. At the same time, the names of the pharaohs—the "important" people of the day—are omitted.

1:16 The custom was to support the mother on a birthstool during delivery. Pharaoh ordered the midwives to kill the baby boys because he feared the increasing numbers of Hebrew sons as a military threat.

1:17, 18 The Hebrew term for fear here (yare) is the word regularly used for piety, obedience, and the true worship of God (Gen. 22:12; Ex. 20:20). This is not the term for the sickening "dread" (v. 12) used to describe Egyptian responses to the Hebrew's increase. The midwives would not obey the evil commands of a human ruler, even when their own lives were at risk, because they wanted to please the God of heaven.

1:19 These evasive words are wonderful wit and not likely to have fooled anyone.

1:20, 21 God blessed the midwives because they feared God. The phrase of v. 17 is repeated for emphasis. He provided households for them: Ordinarily households were established for men. God established the families of these two midwives (Gen. 18:19) because they were faithful to Him.

1:22 Because he could not count on the midwives, Pharaoh commanded the Egyptians to kill the Hebrew male babies by drowning them in the river—the Nile.

2:1 Both of Moses' parents were from the house of Levi. Later, God chose this family to be the priestly family for Israel.

2:2–4 bore a son: As v. 4 shows, this is not their first child. The older sister was Miriam; Aaron was three years older than this son (Ex. 7:7). He was beautiful: The Hebrew word is the common term meaning "good" (Heb. tob), a natural and expected observation of a loving mother seeing her new baby the first time. The mother hid her baby from the authorities, who wanted to kill him. But after three months, she found it impossible (1:22). Just as the ark of Noah had been the means by which a family was saved from a watery death (Gen. 7:1), so this ark in which she placed her baby would be the means of saving him. She hoped that someone would find the ark and adopt the boy. She sent his sister, Miriam, to see what would happen.

2:5 This daughter of Pharaoh was probably one of many daughters. Even though the Egyptians were accustomed to bathe frequently, bathing in the Nile was a ritual dipping in the waters the Egyptians believed to be sacred.

2:6 The baby was one of the Hebrews' children. A Hebrew baby would have been circumcised on the eighth day. Although circumcision was practiced in Egypt, it was not done to infants. Upon unwrapping the infant's clothing, the women would have seen his "special mark."

2:7 The daughter of Pharaoh was not prepared to care for the baby. Since it was a Hebrew child, who would be better than a Hebrew woman to nurse it?

2:8 the maiden: The Hebrew term means a young woman of marriageable age; this is the word translated virgin in Is. 7:14. Miriam would have been in her mid-to-late teens.

2:9 Not only did God, through Pharaoh's daughter, protect the child from the river death that Pharaoh had commanded (1:22), but through Pharaoh's treasury He provided wages to the mother for caring for her own son!

IN CONTEXT

The Birth of Sargon

The account of Moses' birth (Ex. 2:1–10) resembles a familiar theme in ancient Near Eastern folklore: the exposure and rescue of an infant son and his ascent to a position of royalty. One of the most famous of these legends is the birth of Sargon of Accad, a ruler in central Mesopotamia around 2350 B.C.

According to the story, found in eighth century B.C. records, Sargon was born to a high priestess and an unknown father. His birth was kept secret and his mother set him in a basket among the bulrushes, where he was found by a person drawing water. As Sargon grew, he is said to have been granted the love of Ishtar, goddess of love and war, whose love is regarded as a token of Sargon's title to the throne.

2:10 After what was likely a prolonged period of nursing the child, the mother brought her son to Pharaoh's daughter, who then adopted the boy. The name Moses is probably related to the Egyptian word ms meaning "born," which is commonly found in Egyptian names. For example, "Thutmose" means "the god Thut is born." Pharaoh's daughter explains the meaning of the name: "Because I drew him out of water." In Hebrew, "Moses" means "He Who Draws Out" (Heb. mosheh). In this manner, Moses' name can refer the reader to the living God, who is the true Deliverer, and also to Moses, who would deliver the Israelites from the Red Sea (chs. 14, 15). The one who was drawn out of water would be the means of drawing the Israelite nation out of water. Yet he was one whose enemies wanted to drown him in the Nile (1:22).

Arab bedouin tents in the land of Midian, where Moses fled after killing an Egyptian (Ex. 2:11–15).

2:11 The years of Moses' experience in the pharaoh's court are not detailed. Yet Stephen, the NT martyr, reports a long-held and surely accurate tradition: "Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians and was mighty in words and deeds" (Acts 7:22). The training of Moses was the best education in the world at that time. He would have learned three languages: Egyptian, Akkadian, and Hebrew. When Moses came into the presence of a later pharaoh to demand the freedom of the Israelites (chs. 7—14), he was no stranger to the royal family. his brethren: At about the age of forty, Moses was confronted with a great personal crisis. He saw the mistreatment of his own people by his adopted people. He realized that while he had been living a life of disciplined luxury, his people were being abused.

2:12–14 Despite his privilege and position, Moses realized that there was no legal procedure for him to stop the abuses of the Egyptian taskmasters. Moved by a sense of injustice, he rashly killed the taskmaster.

2:15 Pharaoh sought to kill Moses because he had committed a capital crime. The land of Midian is the region of the Sinai Peninsula and Arabian deserts where the seminomadic Midianites lived (for the Abrahamic origin of the Midianites, read Gen. 25:1, 2). by a well: As in the stories of the fathers and mothers of Israel in Genesis (Gen. 16:7–13; 21:22–34; 24:10– 14; 29:4–12; 30:37–43), a well played a significant role in the story of Moses.

2:16 Like Melchizedek, the priest-king of Salem or Jerusalem (Gen. 14:18–20), the priest of Midian appears to be a foreigner who had come to worship the true and living God. His daughters came to the well since, in the ancient world, typically the women drew water (Gen. 24).

2:17 The shepherds had probably acted churlishly toward these women before. Unmarried women with no brothers had little protection in the ancient East. Moses stood up and came to the aid of the women. Once again, Moses demonstrated his sensitivity to injustice (vv. 11–13). That Moses helped them was a magnanimous action and must have been astonishing to the seven women (compare Jacob helping Rachel; Gen. 29:9, 10). The word translated "helped" is the principal OT verb for salvation (Heb. yasha). Its basic meaning, seen nicely here, is "to make room for." These churlish shepherds had come crowding in on the well, driving the women away, but Moses "made room for" the women, acting as their "savior."

2:18, 19 Reuel is also called Jethro (4:18). His daughters reported to him that they had been delivered by an Egyptian. The dress, appearance, and language of Moses would have given this impression.

2:20 Reuel's invitation to eat bread was about more than a casual bite to eat. He was recruiting Moses to marry one of his seven daughters.

2:21 Moses was content: For a fugitive from the powerful hand of the Egyptian pharaoh, the offer of a home, protection, and a new life would be appealing. Moses had come as an alien. He had nothing to offer but himself, and thus he would have become part of Reuel's household in the deal (Ex. 4:18). Zipporah means "Bird."

2:22 Gershom means "A Stranger There." Moses was doubly removed from his land. He and his people, the Israelites, were strangers in Egypt (Gen. 15:13). Now he was cast off from them and was estranged in yet another waiting place. For all he knew, he would be a stranger for the rest of his days.

2:22—3:22 Here is the first revelation of Yahweh to His servant Moses. This revelation of the divine Person and Name is given in four sections: (1) the setting in the need of the people (2:23–25); (2) the encounter at the burning bush (3:1–12); the revelation of the divine Name (3:13–15); (4) the commission that Yahweh gave to Moses (3:16–22).

2:23–25 the king of Egypt died: The death of Pharaoh (likely Thutmose III, who died about 1447 B.C.) meant that Moses could return to Egypt. At the death of a pharaoh, Egyptian authorities dropped all pending charges, even in capital cases (4:19). The plight of the Israelite people had reached fever pitch during the time of Moses' absence. Four different Hebrew words—translated groaned, cried out, cry, and groaning—are used to describe the Israelites' complaint (6:5). Corresponding to the four terms for the people's distress, four wonderful verbs are used to describe the Lord's response to His people: heard, remembered, looked, and acknowledged. Indeed, these four verbs are an introduction to the meaning of His Name, Yahweh. We may speak of them as present tense realities, for they are the ways in which God responds to His people. He hears, He remembers, He sees, and He knows. Each of these words separately, and all of them collectively, express not just an awareness of Israel's trouble but also a participation in their distress, as well as the assurance that He will deliver them from it (Ex. 6:5).

3:1 God now had another “flock” for Moses to tend, the people of Israel. Much as Jacob had become part of Laban’s family when he married Leah and Rachel (Gen. 29), Moses, for forty years (a generation in most circles), had been a part of the family of Jethro, whose name means “His [that is, the Lord’s] Abundance.” This word (Heb. hoteno) is related to the Arabic term meaning “the one who circumcises,” which helps us to understand the difficult text in Ex. 4:24–26. Horeb, another name for Mount Sinai, means “Desolate Place.” Yet because of God’s appearance on the mountain (here and in chs. 19; 20), this desolate place would become holy, the mountain of God (4:27). Usually this site is identified as Jebel el-Musa, a mountain in the southern Sinai Peninsula.

INSIGHT

Midian

Within the official boundaries of the Egyptian empire, in Palestine and the arid Sinai Peninsula, lived a diverse group called the Midianites. They appeared around the thirteenth century B.C. and were known as traders (Gen. 37:36) and metalworkers. Less clearly known is their religion, but some evidence indicates that they worshiped in tent shrines in the desert. The tabernacle that Moses was commanded to build (Ex. 26) may be related to Midianite practices. Moses father-in-law was, after all, a priest of Midian (Ex. 2:16, 18).

3:2 the Angel of the LORD: An appearance of God. This is the first occurrence in Exodus of this frequently used phrase (14:19; 23:20, 23; 32:34; 33:2; compare Gen. 22:11, 15). The flame of fire was an extraordinary sight, particularly since the bush was not consumed.

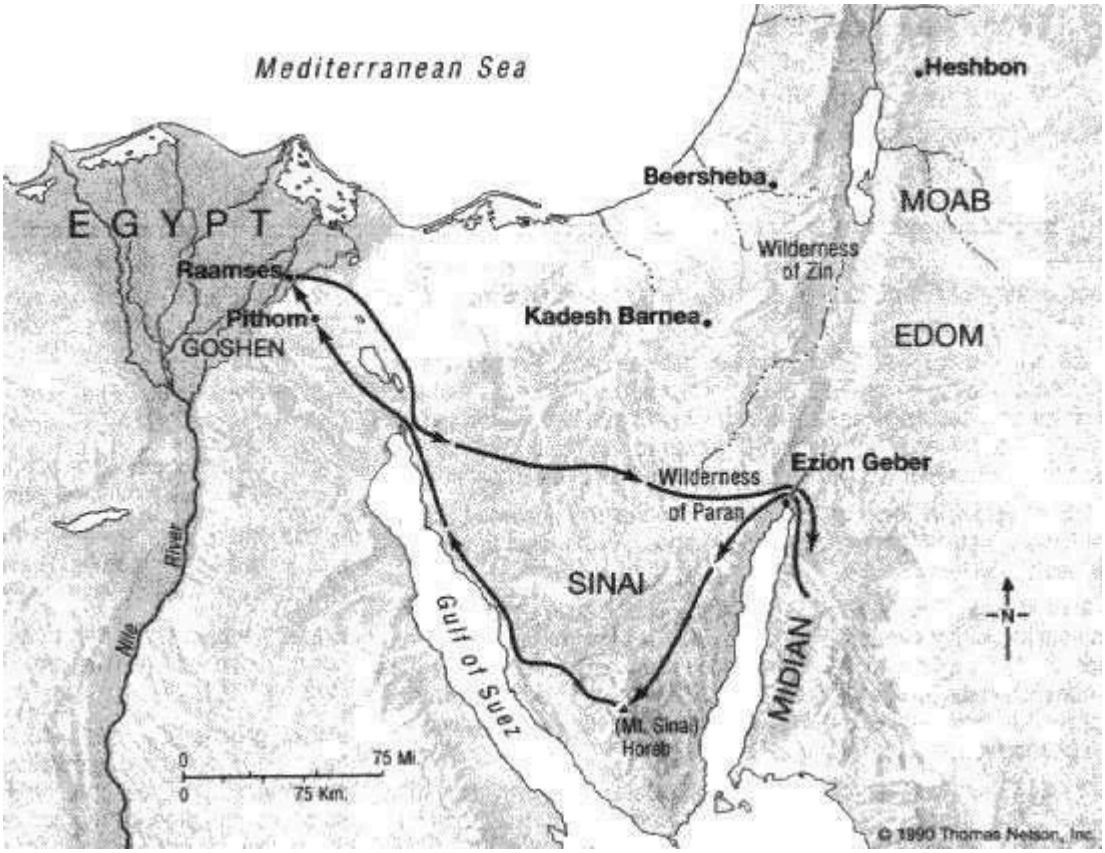
3:3–5 The ground had become holy; it was set apart by the divine presence. For Moses' vivid memory of this experience with God at the end of his life, read Deut. 33:16.

3:4, 5 The dramatic encounter of Moses with the living God is an unforgettable moment in biblical history. God's call to him with the repetition of his name evokes memories of God's call to Abraham as he was about to sacrifice his son (Gen. 22:11); similarly, Moses' response was similar to Abraham's (Gen. 22:1, 11).

3:6 God identified Himself as the God of your father—the God worshiped by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (v. 15). In announcing these names, the Lord was assuring Moses that His covenant with the fathers of Israel was still in effect. Moses hid: Moses had once hidden a body out of fear (2:12, 14); now he hides his face from the presence of Yahweh. Toward the end of his great life, Moses would reflect on this experience. As he pronounced his blessing on the tribe of Joseph, he included the words, " … and the favor Him who dwelt in the bush" (Deut. 33:16).

3:7 Three of the four verbs of relationship from 2:24, 25 are repeated: seen, heard, know. The first is in the emphatic state. This verse ties the introduction into the chapter's story line.



Moses' Flight and Return to Egypt

After killing an Egyptian, Moses fled through the Sinai and settled in Midian, where he married Zipporah. God spoke to Moses at the burning bush at Horeb, after which Moses returned to Egypt to assist the Israelites.

3:8–10 The words come down speak of God's gracious intervention on the earth (Ps. 40:1). Not only was God intimately aware of the troubles of His people, but now He would act on their behalf. The good and large land of Canaan was God's great pledge to His people (Gen. 12:7; 15:12–21; Ex. 6:8). flowing with milk and honey: The land of Canaan would sustain God's people well, with some sections given to agriculture and others for herds and flocks. Under God's blessing, milk and honey would seem to flow. The listing of the peoples reminds the reader of three things. (1) The land was not just a figure of speech; it was a real place with real people living in its borders. (2) As to the inhabitants, their time was nearly up; their cup of iniquity was now full and God's judgment was about to fall on them (Gen. 15:16). (3) While the land was God's gift, it was not vacant property; the land would have to be seized from the inhabitants. This could be done with the power of God.

3:11—4:17 Moses' objections to serving are ultimately questions about God. (1) Will He be with me? (3:11, 12). (2) What is He like? (3:13–25). (3) Does He have enough power? (4:1–9). (4) Can He accommodate Himself to me? (4:10–17). God answers these underlying questions.

3:12 God promised to be with Moses. Not only had God "come down" to deliver (v. 8), but now He promised to be present. This prefigures the Incarnation: Jesus would come down to deliver us from our sins and be with us. God gave Moses a sign, a final proof that this experience was a divine manifestation and not a dream. Here the sign is a reminder, memorial, or symbol (Ex. 8:23; 12:13). But the word can also mean a miracle of God, a wonder that demonstrates His power and presence (7:3).

3:13 His mind reeling with questions and wonder, Moses asked for the Name of God. His request was for a mark of authority. He had been absent from Egypt for forty years, and even his early years were spent aloof from his own people. He must have wondered how he would be believed. Thus, Moses asked for a sign of authority, a Name to use to ensure that the message would be received.

3:14 I AM WHO I AM: The One who spoke to Moses declared Himself to be the Eternal One—uncaused and independent. Only the Creator of all things can call Himself the I AM in the absolute sense; all other creatures are in debt to Him for their existence. But in addition, God the Creator declares His relationship with the people of Israel. The future tense of the Hebrew verb related to God's name is used in v. 12: The I Am will be with His people. Thus God declares His covenantal relationship with Israel with His name. Many refer to the "I Am" as the covenantal name of God.

Deliverance from Oppression

God is a God of justice. Therefore He notices when people are oppressed and abused, such as by governments, employers, and others in power. As the ultimate Judge, He can be counted on to right the world's wrongs, if not in this life then in the life to come. Exodus is the story of what God did when He heard His chosen people, Israel, crying out for justice and deliverance (Ex. 3:7–10).

The theme of deliverance is developed through hundreds of biblical passages about the poor and oppressed. Many of those passages remind us that such people ought to receive justice and reform, not just mercy or relief.

3:15 the LORD: This represents the Hebrew name Yahweh. The Hebrew word meaning "I Am" used in v. 14 is very similar. Translations into English often use LORD in small capitals to represent God's name Yahweh. Here, God does not merely declare His absolute existence, He also declares His relationship to His people. It is not simply that He exists, or even that He will ever exist, but that He declares that He is for His people. This is His name of grace, of relatedness, of covenant, and of condescending wonder. He is not a "new" deity but the same who made an eternal covenant with the fathers—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—and was worshiped by them (v. 6). But He has a Name. It is Yahweh. The last part of the verse is a couplet: this is My Name forever, and this is My memorial to all generations. As in other significant OT passages (Gen. 22:11–18), repetition and restatement are used for emphasis. Here they indicate the paramount importance of the divine Name.

3:16, 17 The instructions were now given to Moses so that he would hear again his part in the divine scheme of things (vv. 8–10).

3:18 you shall say to him: Moses is instructed in precisely what to say to Pharaoh. He is not required to come up with his own line of argumentation; only to serve as God's spokesman.

3:18 Three day's journey seems to be an example of an Eastern manner of expression, an argument from the lesser to the greater. That is, the first request was for a few days' distance from Egypt for the purpose of the worship of the living God. Since this request would not be honored (v. 19), it is certain that the demand to be set free altogether would not be honored either. The fact that Israelites had to go somewhere else to sacrifice to the LORD may have been an implied slur on the land of Egypt. The wickedness of the Egyptians polluted the land and made it unsuitable for worshiping their God. The Israelites needed neutral soil to worship God in purity (7:16).

3:19 The Hebrew words But I am sure are quite strong. They may be translated: "But as for Me, I know that the king of Egypt will not give you permission to go." The question many ask of this verse is important: Does this verse speak of the knowledge of God in the sense that "He knew how things would work out"? Or, does this verse present the foreknowledge of God in the sense that "He determined how things would work out"? See note at 4:21 for an answer and for a development of this theme. The mighty hand is the Lord's hand. God was the One who forced Pharaoh to free the Israelites (v. 20; 6:1).

3:20 The Lord's extended hand of mercy to the Israelites and of rage against the Egyptians is a constant theme in Exodus (for God's outstretched arm, read 6:6; for God's right hand, read 15:6, 12). My wonders are the ten plagues of chs. 7—12. The word "wonders" in Hebrew (niphlaot) refers to things only God can do, things designed to inspire reverence in His worshipers and fear in His enemies.

3:21, 22 God would so humiliate their leader Pharaoh that the common people of Egypt would become favorably disposed toward Israel. The Israelites, who had been slaves in Egypt, would not leave empty-handed. They would plunder the Egyptians by merely asking for precious goods (for the fulfillment of this prophecy, read 11:2; 12:35, 36). Later, the Israelites gave these very same precious goods to God as offerings for the tabernacle (ch. 35). Thus God enriched a slave populace so that they in turn were able to give their riches back to Him with thanksgiving.

4:1 But suppose: Daunted by the enormity of the task, Moses in a very human way began to think of the problems he might face.

4:2–5 God turned Moses' rod—probably a long wooden pole with the familiar shepherd's crook at one end—into a snake to demonstrate the reality of His power and presence during Moses' coming mission.

4:6, 7 Again God demonstrated His power to Moses by making his hand leprous and then healing it. Leprosy in the Bible included a wide variety of skin diseases.

4:8, 9 The third sign would be the transformation of the water from the Nile into blood. In fact, this occurred in the first plague (7:14–25).

4:10–12 In great patience, God reminded Moses that it was He who had made Moses' mouth, even as it is He who has fashioned each individual according to His wisdom. Then He promised to instruct Moses as to precisely what to say.

4:13, 14 At this point, Moses saw a flash of God's anger (read his words in Ps. 90:11). Although Moses did not know it, God was already arranging some assistance for Moses. He was sending Aaron to him (for their meeting, read v. 27).

4:15, 16 words in his mouth: As Moses was a prophet of God, so Aaron was to be a prophet of Moses (7:1). The prophet had one job: to represent accurately the message of the one who sent him or her. Moses would be as God to Aaron because he would tell him what to say, just as God would tell Moses what to say.

4:17, 18 Moses needed to gain permission from his father-in-law, Jethro, to leave (for a similar predicament involving Jacob, read Gen. 31). Moses had become an official part of Jethro's family (2:16–22; 3:1). Jethro's blessing Go in peace was covenantal in nature.

4:19 The words Now the LORD said are likely not a new revelation but a reference to the revelations of Yahweh to Moses (chs. 3 and 4). The verb may be translated "had said" (Ex. 6:28; 12:1).

4:20 Moses took his sons. Gershom, Moses' firstborn, is mentioned in 2:22. The name of the second son is not given until Ex. 18:4, after Israel's deliverance. This is Eliezer, whose name means "My God Is Help." Moses also took the rod of God, that is, the rod that God had used to demonstrate His power (vv. 2–5, 17).

4:21 In the following passage, Pharaoh, most likely Amenhotep II (c. 1447–1421 B.C.), is not simply the king of Egypt, but a symbol for all who resist God, for all of God's enemies. I will harden his heart: Some interpret these words as meaning that God would confirm what Pharaoh had stubbornly determined to do. In the first five plagues, the hardening is attributed to Pharaoh (7:13, 22; 8:15, 19, 32; 9:7). Then for the sixth plague, God hardened a heart that Pharaoh had already hardened (9:12). Others insist that God had determined Pharaoh's negative response to Moses long before Pharaoh could harden his heart. These interpreters point to this verse and to 9:16, in which God says that He raised up Pharaoh for the purpose of demonstrating His power.

4:22, 23 The nation Israel is God's son and naturally God is its Father. In the course of time, others—all those who would believe in God's Son—would become God's children (John 1:12). (The Lord also has a daughter; the "daughter of Zion" is a beloved expression for Jerusalem; Ps. 87). But the nation Israel is His firstborn. Eventually God would claim all of the Israelites' firstborn as His own because He saved them from the tenth plague—the destruction of the firstborn sons of all the Egyptians (Num. 3:12, 13).

4:24 The encampment might have been a primitive inn on Moses' route back to Egypt. the Lord met him and sought to kill him: The precise meaning of this passage is unclear. Clearly someone in Moses' family was not circumcised, despite what God had commanded. Most likely, Moses had kept one of his sons uncircumcised in order to please his Midianite family. (The Midianites practiced circumcision on a groom right before his marriage instead of circumcising male infants.) Moses' neglect was a crime deserving of death, especially for the future leader of God's people. For this reason God met or "seized" Moses (for another use of this same Hebrew verb, read v. 27).

IN CONTEXT

A Heavy Mouth

Among his objections against going to Pharaoh, Moses considered himself "slow of speech and slow of tongue" (Ex. 4:10). His difficulties in speech are not unprecedented in ancient Near Eastern literature.

Enmerker, the Sumerian king of Uruk and third successor to the famous Gilgamesh, is the main character in Enmerkar and the Lord of Aratta, an epic written in Sumerian near the end of the third millennium B.C. In a brief passage, a messenger is unable to comprehend a message given to him by Enmerkar. Like Moses, Enmerkar was "slow of speech," expressed in this epic as "heavy of mouth."

4:25, 26 At this time, circumcision was practiced with sharp stone knives rather than bronze because of associations with ancient traditions that may even have predated Israelite circumcision (Gen. 17). Many of Israel's neighboring peoples practiced circumcision, but none except Israel circumcised infants. husband of blood: Zipporah may have been angry that she could not follow the Midianite custom and leave her son uncircumcised.

4:26 The Lord who had met or "seized" Moses (v. 24), now let him go.

4:27, 28 The meeting of these two brothers after forty years must have been a very emotional moment. The Hebrew verb translated met encompasses the idea of a forceful, direct encounter, a bear hug (this same Hebrew verb is used in v. 24). How fitting that the two would meet on the mountain of God (3:1). Later at this mountain they would both minister together.

4:29–31 When they arrived in Egypt, they gathered the elders together. Aaron acted as Moses' prophet (vv. 14–16). It is not clear whether it was Aaron or Moses who did the signs. But the people's response was appropriate. They believed and worshiped the God who had sent these signs and messengers. God had visited them! Here God's visitation is for deliverance (Ruth 1:6). In other places the verb (Heb. paqad) refers to a visitation in wrath (Is. 10:12).

5:1 God emboldened Moses and Aaron to approach the powerful tyrant of Egypt with strong, daring words in the name of their God: "Let My people go." These word come repeatedly beginning with 7:16 (8:1, 20, 21; 9:1, 13; 10:3, 4). Yet the Lord told them what to expect (3:19; 4:21–23). It was God's plan that Pharaoh would not agree to their demand.

5:2 Who is the LORD: Later these arrogant words would haunt Pharaoh (12:31, 32). Indeed, he would ascribe greatness to God and shamefulness to himself and his people (9:27). Meanwhile, Pharaoh believed himself to be a god. He certainly felt no need to cave in to the demands of some other, unknown god. Sadly for him, he had never encountered the true and living God, hence his response, nor will I let Israel go, just as God had predicted (Ex. 3:19; 4:21–23). Note that Pharaoh had not yet hardened his heart (something not stated until 7:13). In the next encounter (ch. 7), Pharaoh would harden his heart resolutely.

5:2 Moses' first encounter reveals Pharaoh's central problem: I do not know the LORD.

5:3 The boldness of Moses and Aaron's first words (v. 1) is replaced with panic. The Israelites had to obey their God.

5:4–9 To punish Moses and Aaron for insolence, Pharaoh imposed severe measures on the Hebrew workers, who needed straw to strengthen the sun-dried bricks they were making. With no reduction in their daily quota, the people would have to gather the straw during their off-hours. Until now the Egyptians had provided it for them. Pharaoh invented a suitable excuse: The Hebrews had too much free time.

5:10–19 The officers (Heb. shoterim, meaning "subordinate officials"), the Hebrew leaders of the work gangs, understandably complained about the new work rules. Pharaoh repeated his excuse that the people were idle (v. 8) and ordered them to continue. The Hebrew crew chiefs were in a more precarious position than ever.

5:20, 21 The Hebrew crew chiefs turned their anger on Moses and Aaron. Indeed their words, Let the LORD look on you and judge, are a harsh curse. They felt that Moses and Aaron's words to Pharaoh were futile and only made him hate them more. The word translated abhorrent means "to cause to stink."

5:22–6:1 Greatly shaken at the outcome of his first encounter with Pharaoh, Moses offers a prayer of complaint.

5:22 Lord, why: While incongruous, these words are often linked in the experience of God's people. After people come to faith in the Lord, they often expect that their lives will be marked only by God's blessing. When troubles come, they almost inevitably wish to cry aloud, "O Lord, why?" Clearly, there is incongruity in these words. If He indeed is "Lord," then His ways are not to be questioned. The Hebrew crew chiefs' harsh charge against Moses greatly troubled him. His complaint to God, Why is it You have sent me? alludes to his initial reluctance to be the Lord's agent of deliverance (4:10–17).

5:23 speak in Your name: It seems that Moses expected Pharaoh to cave in as soon as he heard the use of the Lord's name Yahweh (3:14, 15; 5:1). Yet God had warned Moses that Pharaoh would do the opposite (3:19; 4:21). Moses had forgotten this clear revelation.

6:1 The Lord's response to Moses, Now you shall see, was designed to encourage him. Nothing had happened yet because God had not yet begun to act. strong hand: The reference seems to be to Pharaoh, although consistently the "strong hand" of Exodus is the Lord's (3:19, 20; 6:6; 15:6, 12). Thus the sense of the verse is, "Because of My strong hand Pharaoh will let them go, and because of My strong hand Pharaoh will drive them out of his land."

6:2–9 Yahweh's purpose in the Exodus. In the Lord's plan, Moses' futile and disheartening experience in his first encounter with Pharaoh (5:1–9) led to this most significant statement of the purpose that God intended in the Exodus. This section is so important that some biblical theologians believe this passage to be the heart of the Pentateuch. Here the living God explains His purpose for His people Israel.

6:2 By explaining His purpose for Israel, God encouraged Moses after his disheartening experience with Pharaoh (5:1–9). This passage builds strongly on the revelation of God to Moses at the burning bush (2:23—3:22). The words I am the LORD begin and conclude this section (vv. 2, 8). LORD stands for God's name, "Yahweh."

Dangers of Idolatry

God's promise to give the land of Canaan to Abraham's descendants (Ex. 6:4) meant dispossessing the Canaanites, a group of tribes descended from Noah's grandson Canaan (Gen. 10:15–20). They had been neighbors of Abraham and still lived in the land at the time of the Exodus. In the intervening years, however, their idolatries and immoral behavior had increased to the point where God was ready to judge them.

6:3 The patriarchs had known God Almighty. It is not that they had never heard the name Yahweh, but they had not known God in an intimate way. The patriarchs knew a great deal about God and had experienced His goodness in many ways. But they had not had the revelation that was granted to Moses and the people of his day.

6:4 My covenant: The Abrahamic covenant celebrated in Genesis (Gen. 12:1–3, 7; 15:12–21; 17; 22:15–18). pilgrimage: The fathers and mothers of Israel had wandered about in the land of Canaan without ever owning more than grazing rights, well treaties, and a burial ground for Sarah (Gen. 23; Heb. 11:8–10). They were strangers in Egypt, resident aliens, without citizenship in their own country.

6:5 groaning: This verse recalls the Israelites' cry in Ex. 2:23–25. With this wonderful introduction of Himself, the Lord was now ready to state His plan for Israel (vv. 6–8).

6:6–8 These verses express four aspects of God's plan for Israel. (1) He would deliver them from Egypt. This was more than freedom from slavery; it was a picture of their national salvation, for in the process the nation was redeemed from their sin (Ex. 14:31). (2) He would make them His people, a fellowship of believers. (3) He would be their God, a description of a one-on-one relationship. (4) He would bring them to Canaan, the Promised Land.

6:9 Despite God's powerful words to Moses, the people were still unwilling to believe. Their cruel suffering overwhelmed them. But they would eventually believe! They needed to experience the reality of the living God (14:31).

6:10, 11 The Lord renewed His command to Moses (4:22, 23). Pharaoh's arrogant rejection was not the end of the story, just the beginning.

6:12 Moses complained that his own people would not listen to him. How then would Pharaoh? Moses was still convinced that his uncircumcised lips (he was a poor speaker) would ruin everything (4:10).

6:13 The Lord's response was to repeat the initial command. This was not something to be negotiated, but something to be done. Following the parenthesis of vv. 14–27, the story continues in v. 28. There we learn that there was more to the interaction between Moses and the Lord than these verses suggest.

Positive Authority

Authority can be used in ways that bring liberty to people, not just limitation. Authority is sometimes thought of as nothing more than telling others what they cannot do and keeping people in line. But in God's instruction to Moses (Ex. 6:13), we are reminded that authority can bring freedom when applied wisely under the Lord's direction.

For example, a judge can use authority to release an innocent person from jail. A high school principal can use authority to obtain resources for teachers to teach effectively. A manager can use authority to reward a worker's performance and encourage creativity and excellence. So authority can be affirming and supportive rather than controlling and punitive.

Paul exercised a great deal of authority in the early church. But he recognized that his power was given to build others up not to tear them down (1 Cor. 13:10).

6:14–27 The family history of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam briefly interrupts the narrative. But this was not just a matter of public record, it was something to celebrate! All of Israel's priests would eventually come from this line.

6:14–16 Reuben was the firstborn of Jacob by his wife Leah (Gen. 29:32; 35:23; 49:3, 4). His sons are also listed in Gen. 46:9 and in Num. 26:5–11. Simeon was the second son of Jacob by his wife Leah (Gen. 29:33; 35:23; 49:5–7). His sons are also listed in Gen. 46:10 and in Num. 26:12–14. Jemuel in some lists is spelled "Nemuel" (Num. 26:12). Shaul the son of a Canaanite woman: This factor is also noted in Gen. 4:10. It is an ominous notation suggesting the problem of assimilation with the Canaanite peoples had God not brought the nation Israel to Egypt where such a practice could not continue (notes at Gen. 38). Levi was the third son of Jacob by his wife Leah (Gen. 29:34; 35:23; 49:5–7). His sons are also listed in Gen. 46:11 and in Num. 26:57–62 (1 Chron. 6:1–30). Based on Ex. 6:17–27, it is clear that the purpose of this section is to describe the family history of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam and not to describe the families of each of the tribes. The mention of the families of Reuben and Simeon here seems to be simply a "courtesy" based on their precedence among the sons of Jacob. Despite his sinfulness in association with his brother Simeon in avenging the rape of their sister Dinah (Gen. 34; 49:5–7), Levi lived a very long life, 137 years.

6:17–19 The three sons of Levi each fathered several families (1 Chron. 6:1–30) that would have significant roles to play in the worship of God. All true priests and Levites would come from their numbers.

6:20 The verses above have led to the mention of Amram, the patriarch in the family of Levi from whom Moses and his siblings were descended. According to the lists in similar genealogies (Num. 26:57–59; 1 Chron. 6:1–3), Amram the son of Kohath was a grandson of Levi. Jochebed, his wife, was also his aunt, the daughter of Levi. Later, the Law would prohibit marriages among such close relatives (Lev. 18), but the early families of Israel must have had many such "close" marriages. she bore him: The biblical use of language allows a remote ancestor to be regarded as one's "parent." A paraphrase would read, "She bore to her husband the family that resulted in the later birth of Moses." The actual names of Moses' mother, father, and his siblings are lost to us. By the time of Moses, many generations had passed from that of Amram, the grandson of Levi, and from Jochebed the daughter of Levi; indeed, the family of the descendants of Amram numbered in the thousands (Num. 3:27, 28). It is somewhat surprising for the modern reader to see language used in this manner. For the ancient Semite, it was sometimes more important to preserve the name of famous ancestors than even the names of persons closer in time, including the names of one's parents. The genealogy of Moses and his siblings was certifiable from the family of Levi. This was the important issue, for Aaron would become the father of the priests of the nation. See also the comments in the genealogies in Gen. 5 and 10, for similar "missing generations." The order of the sons is given here: Aaron was three years older than Moses (7:7). Miriam is not mentioned in this verse; most genealogies in Israel listed only sons. But the readers of Torah will not forget her; nor should we (Mic. 6:4). She, along with her celebrated brothers, were Yahweh's gifts to Israel.

6:21–23 Izhar, the second son of Kohath (v. 18) and Uzziel, the third son of Kohath, also founded significant families. Among the names mentioned is Korah, the priest who would later lead a rebellion against Moses (Num. 16). Korah's sons (v. 24) would survive his judgment (Num. 26:11) and would become a famous musical family whose songs became part of temple singing for generations (read the superscriptions to Pss. 84, 85, 87). Elisheba: The name of Aaron's wife (her Heb. name means "God is an Oath," that is, "It is by God One Swears") became "Elizabeth" in the Greek NT (Luke 1:5). Her father Amminadab (Heb., "My Kinsman [the Lord] Is Noble") was from a well-known family in the tribe of Judah (Num. 1:7; 2:3; 7:12, 17; 10:14) that later figured in the line of David, and thus of the Messiah (Ruth 4:19, 20; 1 Chron. 2:10). The sons Nadab and Abihu became proverbial in Israel of priests who used their office for evil purposes (Lev. 10:1–7; Num. 3:2–4). Eleazar and Ithamar were faithful priests.

6:24 sons of Korah: See v. 21.

6:26, 27 the same Aaron and Moses: The wording of this whole section (vv. 14–27) seems to come from a period quite a bit removed from the time of Moses and Aaron. This is an example of a section that may have been added to the Book of Exodus at a later period. As mentioned in Introduction, it is not necessary to argue that Moses wrote all the sections that the book contains. It is necessary, however, to believe that the entirety of the book, and all its parts, are authentic, authoritative, and inspired. Later scribes might have felt it very necessary to give the family history of Moses as a parenthesis in the story line so that readers would be well-aware of the connections Moses and Aaron had with the people of Israel. The repetition of the phrase with inversion of names not only identifies these men but also celebrates their memory.

6:28–30 These verses repeat the material of 6:10–13. The LORD spoke may be translated, "The LORD had spoken" (Ex. 4:19; 12:1). It is possible that the inclusion of the parenthetical genealogical material (6:14–27) necessitated a review. On the words uncircumcised lips see 6:12. Also, the chapter division at 7:1 is poorly placed; the new chapter should come at 7:8.

Moses as God

The Lord's statement to Moses that "I have made you as God to Pharaoh" (Ex. 7:1) may seem puzzling to a modern reader. But it helps to realize that the Egyptian pharaohs were considered gods, and that their words were seen as divine pronouncements. Thus they held absolute sway over the people.

Moses had been raised in a pharaoh's court (2:8–10), so he was well aware that Pharaoh would pay little attention to the statements of an ordinary human. Thus the Lord's message was a reassuring promise to Moses. God would persuade the ruler that in Moses he was dealing with someone who deserved a hearing.

7:1, 2 These verses repeat the issues of 4:10–17. Repetition with variation is a part of Hebrew prose style to show emphasis. you as God: As Moses was the prophet of the Lord, so Aaron became Moses' prophet. Aaron would speak for Moses, for a prophet was the "mouth" of the one who sent him (or her).

7:3, 4 I will harden Pharaoh's heart: It was in God's plan that Pharaoh would be inflexibly stubborn (note at 4:21), thus setting the scene for God to deliver His people by powerful signs and … wonders. The word sign (Heb. ot; Ex. 4:8, 9; 8:23) may be used to describe a reminder, a memorial, or a symbol, as in 3:12 (12:13), but here it speaks of a pledge or attestation of God's presence. The term wonder (Heb. mophet) similarly describes a special display of God's power. These two words paired together mean "irrefutable works." God would demonstrate His power and authenticate His agents, Moses and Aaron, with such works. The doubling of the personal pronoun, My … My, makes this assertion of God's irruption even more forceful.

7:5 God also planned from the beginning that the Egyptians would know that He and He alone was the living God. In the first nine plagues, God used forces of creation in a supernatural way to bring judgment on the Egyptians. In the tenth plague, the destruction of the firstborn of Egypt, God would stretch out His hand and bring judgment Himself (Ex. 12:12, 13, 29, 30).

7:6 did so … so they did: The obedience of Moses and Aaron is a recurring theme in the Pentateuch (Ex. 12:28; Num. 8:20–22). But even these men of God did not always obey Him.

7:7 eighty … eighty-three: In a sense, these men had already lived a lifetime (Ps. 90:10) before their principal life work had begun! Moses was to lead the nation of Israel for another forty years before he died (Deut. 29:5; 31:2; 34:5). Aaron died in the same year as his younger brother, at the age of 123 (Num. 20:22–29; 33:38, 39).

7:8—12:36 The Lord empowers His servant Moses against Pharaoh to enact His great plan of redemption. This section is the heart of the drama of redemption, containing the stories of the ten plagues, the institution of the Passover, the deliverance from Egypt, and the beginning of the journey into the Wilderness. It is one of the most dramatic OT narratives; it is epic prose at its best from the ancient world.

7:8 Then the LORD spoke to Moses and Aaron: This is the first time Moses and Aaron are referred to as receiving a message from God together.

7:9, 10 In the first confrontation with Pharaoh there was no talk of miracles (5:1–9). This time they would perform a miracle, a special display of God's power. Aaron's rod would figure prominently in several plagues (7:20; 8:5, 16; 9:23; 10:13, 22; 14:16; 17:5, 9). The sign that God had done before Moses, turning his rod into a serpent (4:1–5), was now repeated before Pharaoh and his courtiers.

7:11 Pharaoh was not about to be outdone. Wise men (Heb. hakamin) refers to his counselors, men of learning and insight. Sorcerers refers to those who practiced divination. They were prominent in the courts of ancient kings (Deut. 18:10; Dan. 2:2; Mal. 3:5). The magicians (Heb. hartumin, a word related to one that means "engraver," "writer") of Egypt were believed to possess occult knowledge (Gen. 41:8, 24; Ex. 8:7, 18, 19; 9:11; Dan. 1:20; 2:2). The power of these persons may have been in trickery and slight-of-hand illusions, or demonic power. The word enchantments (Heb. lahatim, a noun from the verb luÆt, meaning "to enwrap closely") speaks of "secret things" or "mysteries" (7:22); to paraphrase, "their bag of tricks." But in their encounter with Moses and Aaron, these men were no match for the power of God (8:19; 9:11)! Later, the royal courts of Israel had wise men (1 Kin. 4:34; Prov. 25:1), but the black arts of sorcery, divination, and astrology were forbidden (Deut. 18:9–14).

IN DEPTH

Magic and Magicians in Egypt

Throughout the ancient Near East, magicians were important members of royal courts. Magic was a means by which power could be transferred from the gods to humans. Magicians were generally well-educated and literate persons who had studied the incantations and actions that were needed to cause the gods or demons to honor human requests. Their official services were needed to understand the will of the gods, or to bring down curses on treaty-breakers, or to create catastrophes for enemies.

Egypt's magical traditions are the best known of all the ancient traditions. This is partly because other civilizations were impressed by Egyptian traditions, but mostly because a wealth of their magical texts remain, to give the world great understanding of their incantations, amulets, secret signs, geometric shapes, acrostic patterns, and names of famous persons.

In Exodus, Moses is presented as directing the plagues in the same manner as the Egyptians understood their magic to work. Except that through the miracles, Moses conveyed the power of his God. When the Egyptian magicians turned rods into snakes, water into blood, or called frogs out of the Nile, they believed it was the power of their gods working through them.

Pharaoh's magicians were largely unimpressed with Moses and his God as long as they were able to do the same tricks through their magical arts. But when they could not produce gnats, the Egyptians expressed admiration for Moses with the words, "This is the finger of God" (Ex. 8:19), which quotes an actual Egyptian magical phrase. In this way they acknowledged that Moses' God was greater than their gods.

7:12 his rod … serpents: The text does not say whether this was a genuine transformation or a trick of Pharaoh's evil sorcerers. It is possible that they knew what the first sign would be and had drugged or stunned serpents in some manner so that they might appear to be rods. In any event, their serpents were no match for Aaron's serpent; his swallowed theirs!

7:13 Many times Pharaoh's heart grew hard, meaning he became insensitive and dull to the demonstration of God's power (vv. 14, 22, 23; 8:15, 19, 32; 9:7, 12, 34, 35; 10:1, 20, 27; 11:10; 14:4, 5, 8). This was as the LORD had said—as God had planned from the beginning (3:19; 4:21; 7:3, 4). Pharaoh was willful (5:1–9). But he was captive to the dulling work of God's Spirit (Is. 6:10, concerning the people of Judah).

7:14 On other occasions (Ex. 4:21; 7:13, 22; 8:19) the term hard translates a form of the verb (Heb. hazaq) meaning "to strengthen," with the idea of being "perverse." Here the verb (Heb. ka bed) has the idea of being "heavy," "dulled," "insensitive," "peevish." See note at 4:21.

7:15 Some of the plagues were announced to Pharaoh beforehand; others came without warning. Those that were announced were the first (7:14–18), second (8:1–4), fourth (8:20–23), fifth (9:1–5), seventh (9:13–19), eighth (10:1–6), and tenth (11:4–8). Those not announced were the third (8:16, 17), sixth (9:8–10), and ninth (10:21–23). Note the pattern: two are announced, then a third comes without warning. This pattern occurs three times, culminating in the last, worst plague. to the water … the river's bank: Pharaoh went to the waters of the Nile not to bathe, but to be empowered. Pharaoh's bath in the Nile was a sacred Egyptian rite connected to Pharaoh's claim of divinity. rod: This rod is called the rod of God (Ex. 4:20) and the rod of Aaron (7:9).

7:16 The LORD God of the Hebrews: A similar identification of the Lord was used in the initial, disastrous encounter of Moses before Pharaoh (Ex. 5:1, 3). This time, Pharaoh would see a display of God's power, not just hear God's name (Ex. 2:23—3:15; 6:2–8; 9:1). The verb serve (Heb. abad, "to serve,") conveys the idea of sacred worship (Ex. 8:20; 9:1, 13). There is an implied criticism of Egypt as unfit for such worship because of its idolatry (3:18; 8:26, 27).

7:17, 18 The waters of the Nile may have chemically changed to blood. However, elements of the account suggest another possibility: (1) The first nine plagues form a set. Each of these is a natural event that occurs in a miraculous way, in quantity or timing. The change of the waters into blood would not be a natural event. (2) The plagues grow in severity with each successive one, coming to a climax with the tenth. A change of the water to actual blood would be out of step with this pattern. (3) The Hebrew word translated blood can refer to a red color, as in Joel 2:31. An appropriate miracle of natural timing might be that God caused torrential rains to flood and pollute the sources of the Nile to create this plague at the time it was needed. Red soil and algae would make the waters of the Nile red, unfit for drinking and deficient in oxygen for the fish.

7:19 The waters of Egypt came from the Nile and its annual flooding. The plague affected the entire water system of the nation, even the wooden and stone reservoirs that held additional supplies of drinking water.

7:20, 21 Moses and Aaron obeyed God's command and invoked the plague with the rod (4:1–8, 20; 7:9; 8:5, 16; 9:23; 10:13, 22; 14:16; 17:5, 9). Later believers in Israel would celebrate this great event in a song (Pss. 78:44; 105:29, 30).

7:22 magicians … with their enchantments: Perhaps the tricksters of Pharaoh were able secretly to color containers of water in an attempt to duplicate the sign of the Lord in the Nile River (7:11). Their attempts were feeble by comparison. Even with this demonstration of God's power, the heart of Pharaoh grew hard … as the LORD had said (3:19; 4:21; 7:3, 13, 14).

7:23–25 Pharaoh showed his utter disdain for the revelation of God's power over the Nile when he turned and went into his house. He also seemed oblivious to the suffering of his people.

IN PLACE

The Nile

As the saying goes, “Egypt is a gift of the Nile.” Therefore it is not surprising that with the first plague on the Egyptians, their river of life became a river of blood (Ex. 7:20). Apart from the Nile, Egypt would be nothing but desert. The Nile not only brings irrigation for the country’s crops but also the soil in which those crops grow. It is a rich source of fish, and in ancient times it was the main means of transportation, a source of papyrus for writing material, and even a calendar to mark the seasons.

The most striking feature of the Nile is its annual flood stage. During the spring and early summer, heavy rains and melting snow in the south, where the Nile’s headwaters begin, create a dramatic rise in the river’s level downstream. The Egyptians kept careful track of this flood stage using water-level gauges or Nilometers. By trapping the floodwaters through a system of channels, dikes, and irrigation works, farmers along the river’s banks were able to sustain their crops in an area where rainfall was unknown except in late winter.

The Lord turned the Nile to blood to impress upon Pharaoh that he was dealing with a far more powerful God than any he had yet encountered (compare Ex. 5:2).

The Nile River near Luxor, Egypt. God turned the waters of this river into blood to punish the Egyptians for not freeing His people (Ex. 7:14–25).

8:1, 2 Frogs, which in moderate numbers were regarded as signs of life, renewal, and happiness, would now become pests.

8:3–5 The rod of Aaron (7:19) was not a magician's wand; it was a powerful symbol of God's power in the hand of His servant (4:1–8, 20; 7:9, 20; 8:16; 9:23; 10:13, 22; 14:16; 17:5, 9). It is not clear in this passage, but it is likely, based on the words in 8:22; 9:4, 26; 10:23; 11:7, that the Hebrews were spared the effects of this plague on the land of Egypt. Only the polluting of the Nile (7:14–25) would have affected the Hebrew people directly.

8:6, 7 the magicians … with their enchantments: We do not know how or in what quantity the magicians (7:11) produced frogs; but doing so hardly helped the situation!

8:8 Note that Pharaoh did not turn to his magicians to relieve the land of the frogs; he called for Moses and Aaron to entreat the LORD (translated "intercede" in v. 9) on his behalf.

8:9 Accept the honor: Moses rises to Pharaoh's challenge and even invites him to set the time for Moses' prayer for relief from the frogs. In this way, Pharaoh would not be able to say that it was just a coincidence that the frogs began to abate at a certain time.

8:10, 11 The Bible, especially the prophetic books, asserts again and again that there is no one like the LORD our God. Here the living God was being contrasted to the false gods of Egypt (Ex. 9:14; 15:11; Is. 40:25). That God alone is incomparable (Ex. 9:14; 15:11; Is. 40:25) is one of the major teachings of the OT prophets. In a world in which gods seemed to be more plentiful than trees in a forest, the living God, Yahweh, was not to be compared to a one of them. He, and He alone, is distinct from all that is in His creation (Ps. 113:4–6). The question, "Who is like Yahweh?" has no answer (Mic. 7:18).

8:12 cried out to the LORD: The Hebrew verb translated cry places emphasis on the need at hand and suggests God's willingness to stoop down to answer that need (Ex. 22:27; Ps. 40:1). This same sort of prayer provoked the Lord to rescue His people (Ex. 2:23; 14:10, 15; 15:25; 17:4; 22:23, 27).

IN FOCUS

"Entreat"

(Heb. atar) (Ex. 8:8, 9, 29, 30; 9:28; 10:17, 18) Strong's #6279: This Hebrew word translated entreat (8:8) or intercede (8:9) is one of the biblical words for prayer. The word depicts a person earnestly beseeching God and basically means "to ask" (Gen. 25:21; Is. 19:22). Spreading out one's hands before the Lord in the OT was a common gesture associated with prayer (Ex. 9:29). This gesture expressed the petitioner's receptiveness to God and his or her need. Empty-handed, with nothing to offer but oneself, petitioners were asking God to fill their hands with His blessings. For this reason, God warned worshipers to petition Him with hands that were not soiled by unclean and halfhearted offerings (Mal. 1:9).

8:13, 14 There were so many dead frogs the land stank. The miraculous nature of this plague lay in the timing and magnitude of the invasion. God did not create new frogs from nothing; He caused frogs to come up in unnaturally large numbers at exactly the right time, and then to die at exactly the right time (vv. 30, 31; 9:33; 10:18, 19).

8:15 Pharaoh's behavior exhibits a pattern. During the time of stress, Pharaoh was willing to promise anything. But as soon as the stress ended, he hardened his heart and became unwilling to do what he had promised (3:19; 4:21; 5:2; 7:3, 13, 14).

8:16, 17 The plague of lice was the first not to be announced to Pharaoh beforehand. all the land of Egypt: It is not clear in this passage, but it is likely, based on the wording in 8:22; 9:4, 26; 10:23; 11:7, that the Hebrews were spared the effects of this plague. All the dust of the land became lice is hyperbole indicating unprecedented trouble with tiny insects in countless numbers.

8:18 The magicians … with their enchantments (7:11) failed this time. Perhaps the lack of announcement meant they had no time to prepare.

8:19 It is remarkable that Pharaoh's magicians attributed the plague to the finger of God. But what choice did they have? Their own competence was on the line. Still their words had no impact on Pharaoh (3:19; 4:21; 5:2; 7:3, 13, 14).

IN CONTEXT

An Ecological Disaster

The infestation of frogs (Ex. 8:1–15) and the other nine plagues created an ecological nightmare in Egypt. The Nile and its related waterways, the air over the land, the flora and fauna of the region, and many other natural systems were degraded by the region's ecological disasters.

But let there be no mistake. The responsibility for these natural disasters was Pharaoh's not God's. Although, as the Creator, God knew how to upset the intricate and delicate balance of Egypt's environment. The plagues were awesome and undeniable demonstrations of His power, and the fact that the Israelites were spared showed that God was in control of nature's forces.

8:20–22 The pressure on Pharaoh intensified with this plague. For the first time (read 9:4, 26; 10:23; 11:7), God vowed to set apart the land of Goshen for the protection of His people. Swarms of flies would be everywhere except near the Hebrews. By this means God would make Himself known among all in Egypt. In some ways this exclusion is the most remarkable aspect of the plagues, especially in the last one (Ex. 11:7; 12).

8:23 Make a difference, here, is "to set a ransom," but that meaning is not clear in this context. The translation "distinction" from the Septuagint (the LXX) may be the superior reading here (this follows the meaning of the key verb in 8:22).

8:24 There is no mention of the rod of Moses in this instance (compare 7:20). Perhaps the rod was lifted by Moses or Aaron, but the emphasis here is on the action of the LORD. As the Lord had warned, the flies brought havoc. Corrupted can be used of moral corruption (Gen. 6:12) as well as in physical ruin, as here.

8:25 The response of Pharaoh was one of only partial submission; in the land refers to staying within the confines of Egypt.

8:26 By using the strong terminology the abomination of the Egyptians (Deut. 17:1; 18:12; 22:5), Moses employed the ethnic and cultural sensibilities of the Egyptians to free the Israelites (Gen. 43:32; 46:34). The sacrificial animals of Israel would include sheep, something the Egyptians regarded as detestable. The Egyptians' anger against the Hebrews might lead them to stone the Hebrews to death.

8:27 Three days journey: See 3:18.

8:28 Pharaoh capitulates, but with strings attached.

8:29 Moses promised to pray for relief from the plague of flies, but he also warned Pharaoh to keep his promise (7:22; 8:15, 19).

8:30–32 As soon as the Lord removed the swarms of flies, Pharaoh reverted to his earlier stubbornness against Moses, Israel, and God—and hardened his heart (3:19; 4:21; 5:2; 7:3, 13, 14).

9:1, 2 the LORD God of the Hebrews: God forcefully identified Himself as the God of the Hebrews just as He said He would (3:18). The first time Moses spoke to Pharaoh in God's name, he was rebuffed (5:1–9). On subsequent occasions, God demonstrated to Pharaoh the power of His name (6:2–8; 7:16).

9:3 A very severe pestilence on the livestock of Egypt would destroy much of the economy of Egypt as well as its military preparedness.

9:4 make a difference: The same verb is used in 8:22 (11:7). Among the Hebrews, nothing would die. The miracles of the Lord in the first nine plagues lay in their timing, their intensity, and as here, whom they affected. As the Egyptians' animals would fall all about them, the animals of the Hebrews would continue to flourish.

9:5 Just as it had been announced, the plague began at a set time. The timing was a significant part of these plagues as was the subsequent relief (9:18).

9:6, 7 As with the fourth plague (8:24), the LORD did this thing. There is no mention of the rod of Moses (7:20). Even though Pharaoh sent his agents and confirmed that the animals of the Hebrews had been spared this calamity, the heart of Pharaoh became hard (3:19; 4:21; 5:2; 7:3, 13, 14).

9:8 to Moses and Aaron: This is the second plague to arrive with no warning (7:15). ashes: Moses' use of a symbolic act in the sight of Pharaoh indicated that the outbreak of disease was not a coincidence. This disease was from the Lord.

9:9, 10 It is not clear from the text whether the Hebrews were spared the plague of boils as they were spared the others, but it seems reasonable to think so (8:22; 9:4, 26; 10:23; 11:7). As in the case of the fourth (8:24) and fifth (9:6) plagues, there is no mention of the rod of Moses in connection with the plague of boils (7:20).

9:11 The reference to the hapless magicians (7:11) is almost humorous. Not only were they powerless, but they also suffered from the plague.

9:12 hardened the heart of Pharaoh: See Ex. 3:19; 4:21; 5:2; 7:3, 13, 14.

9:13, 14 The words to your very heart suggest a growing intensity in the plagues (chs. 11; 12). none like Me: God is beyond comparison (8:10). He is distinct from all the supposed gods of Egypt, who were now under His direct attack.

9:15 if I had: The Lord points out that He could have destroyed the stubborn Pharaoh right at the beginning.

9:16 for this … I have raised you up: God used Pharaoh's stubbornness (Ex. 4:21): (1) to demonstrate His power; and (2) to make known His name (10:2; Rom. 9:17, 18). Pharaoh was not only an evil ruler in a powerful state; he was an evil man, ungodly, unrighteous, and anti-God. Pharaoh set himself up as a god who maintained the stability of his kingdom. The Lord's judgment on him was an appropriate response to this fraud.

9:17 The term you exalt yourself has the idea of self-aggrandizement. In this, Pharaoh is behaving in a manner similar to that of the Prince of Tyre (Ezek. 28:1–10) and Satan, whom the Prince of Tyre emulated (Ezek. 28:11–19).

9:18 tomorrow: One theme in the plagues is the certainty of their timing (7:20; 9:5).

9:19–21 The fact that God was judging Pharaoh does not mean He was unmerciful. The Lord could have destroyed Pharaoh and his people in a moment (v. 15), but He did not. He could have brought each plague without warning, but in most cases He served notice (7:16). In anticipation of this plague, He warned the Egyptians to gather their livestock so they might be spared the hailstorm. Even some members of Pharaoh's court now took the word of the LORD seriously.

9:22–25 The wording of this paragraph is detailed, repetitious, and altogether frightening. We hear from time to time of terrible hailstorms with hail as large as baseballs. The wording of this text suggests that no hailstorm had ever been as terrible as this. The rod used here is the same one that was first described in 4:1–8 (4:20; 7:9; 8:5, 16; 10:13, 22; 14:16; 17:5, 9). The reference to fire probably means lightning (Lev. 10:2; 1 Kin. 18:38; Ps. 78:48).

9:26 The exclusion of the land of Goshen from the Lord's plagues was part of the miracle (8:22; 11:7).

9:27, 28 Pharaoh's response was more yielding than ever in the aftermath of this terrible blow. For such a proud man to say I have sinned was a stunning admission, as was his confession, the LORD is righteous. What a change from his initial arrogance (5:2)! But sadly, these words of contrition would not hold. Pharaoh would repeat them later (10:16, 17), only to take them back in the end.

9:29 I will spread out my hands: This is a gesture of prayer (Ps. 134:2) tied here to a request (v. 28; 8:8). Pharaoh finally admitted that the earth is the LORD's (Ps. 24:1).

9:30 you will not yet fear: Moses sees through Pharaoh's veneer; his repentance is not sincere.

9:31, 32 As in Canaan (Ruth 1:22; 2:23), barley was the first of the crops to be harvested in the late spring; wheat would be harvested in the summer. From this verse the timing of the yearlong series of plagues can be estimated (7:19).

Flax

Flax (Ex. 9:31) was grown mainly for its fibers, from which linen was made. Spelt is a food grain similar to wheat and can be grown is a less fertile soil. Wheat and barley have been grown in Egypt since 5000 B.C., and in Palestine since about 8000 B.C. All Egyptian agriculture depends on the Nile for water.

9:33–35 It took a miracle to stop the plague as well as to start it (8:10–14, 30, 31; 10:18, 19). Sadly, Pharaoh's remorse (v. 27) was short-lived; he hardened his heart (v. 34; 3:19; 4:21; 5:2; 7:3, 13, 14).

10:1 The coming plague of locusts would be preceded by a warning, so God commanded Moses to go in to Pharaoh (7:15). I have hardened his heart: Three verbs are used in Exodus to describe God's hardening of Pharaoh's heart. Usually the verb meaning "to make hard" is used (4:21). In 7:3, the Hebrew verb meaning "to make stiff" is used. Here the Hebrew verb that means "to make heavy" or "to make insensitive" is used.

10:2 your son and your son's son: The story of God's deliverance of Israel from Egypt was to be told by one generation to the next. the mighty things I have done: This whole phrase translates an unusual Hebrew verb that literally means "to make sport of" or "to toy with." The Lord was saying, "I have just been playing games with Pharaoh." The word signs refers to God's power, His revelation of Himself (v. 1; 7:9; 9:16).

10:3 refuse to humble yourself: Pharaoh's pride was his undoing. He believed himself to be a god, and paraded himself as one. God resists the proud but gives grace to the humble (Pss. 18:27; 147:6; Is. 57:15–21; 1 Pet. 5:5).

10:4 As in each of the first nine plagues, the Lord used a part of His own creation, locusts—well known as a recurring cause of destruction—to bring unparalleled devastation to Egypt.

10:5–7 The term snare (Heb. moqesh) can be used to describe a trap for birds (Amos 3:5). Here it speaks of Moses as a symbol of destruction for the Egyptians. Egypt is destroyed: This admission by Pharaoh's counselors fulfilled God's prediction that the Egyptians would acknowledge God's supremacy over Pharaoh (7:5; 8:19; 9:20; 12:33).

10:8, 9 Pharaoh's questions implied that he was not serious about releasing the Israelites. For example, Who are the ones that are going? was a preposterous question. From the beginning, Moses had demanded the release of the entire population of Hebrews, and he stated this again.

The Biting Edge of Sarcasm

Nothing takes the heart out of a person quite like biting sarcasm from an authority figure. It can be hard enough just to get up the courage to approach a powerful leader, but if that figure responds with derision, even the bravest can lose hope.

Pharaoh used sarcasm with Moses and Aaron when they came to warn of the plague of locusts (Ex. 10:10). There is no clear indication that they were disheartened by the ruler's taunts. But given Moses' fears before returning to Egypt, perhaps he and his brother were not exactly rejoicing as they went out from Pharaoh's presence.

There are at least three ways to handle biting sarcasm, especially when it is directed against one's faith: (1) Know who God is and why He has sent you. If people do not have much confidence in God to begin with, it won't take much to knock their faith out of them. Likewise, if they do not know God's purpose, it will be easy for a sarcastic comment to make them forget why they are doing what they are doing.

(2) Know yourself—your strengths and your weaknesses. What is the worst that someone could say to you, or about you? To what sort of comments would you be most sensitive and vulnerable?

(3) Know your enemy. What does your opponent stand to gain by turning you aside, or to lose if you prevail? Most importantly, do you know who your real enemy is?

However Moses and Aaron were affected by Pharaoh's words here, they nevertheless did not let it take the heart of what God had called them to do.

10:10, 11 Pharaoh grudgingly gave permission for the men to leave. Keeping wives, families, flocks, and possessions under his control would assure that the men would return.

10:12–15 Since Pharaoh was still obstinate, the Lord brought on the locusts and they covered the face of the whole earth. This is a hyperbolic way of expressing that this was an unprecedented disaster in all the land of Egypt. It is not clear in this passage, but it is likely (based on the words in 8:22; 9:4, 26; 10:23; 11:7) that the Hebrews were spared the effects of this plague.

10:16–18 Pharaoh confessed I have sinned, and Moses entreated the LORD on his behalf because Pharaoh could not stop the plague himself, nor could his magicians. The text is careful to attribute the relief to God and not to Moses. God was winning.

10:19 a very strong wind: As in the case of the frogs (8:10–14) and the hail (9:33), Pharaoh saw God's power over the forces of nature. Truly the earth was the Lord's (9:29; Ps. 24:1).

10:20 But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart: See 3:19; 4:21; 5:2; 7:3, 13, 14.

10:21–23 The ninth plague, thick darkness, came upon Egypt without warning. This plague, which could be felt, struck at the very heart of Egyptian religion, the deification of the sun as personified by the great gods Re, Amun, Aten, and Horus (the winged Sun disc). Re was to the Egyptians what Yahweh was to the Israelites. He was the ultimate supreme being who sustained all life. The "thick darkness" blotted out his supposed power in the land of Egypt.

10:22–26 A comparison with other passages (vv. 12, 13) suggests that when Moses stretched out his hand he was holding the rod of God (4:1–8, 20; 7:9, 20; 8:5, 16; 9:23; 14:16; 17:5, 9), an indication to Pharaoh that he was opposing the living God. The Hebrew expression thick darkness comes from a pair of words. The first is the common word for darkness. The second is used less often and describes deep gloom (Job 3:6, 10:21, 22; Ps. 91:6; Is. 29:18). This calamity would have affected the Egyptians the most. They worshiped many gods, but none so much as the sun. Even a normal solar eclipse would have had an impact, but an enshrouding darkness that lasted for three days was a frontal attack on their gods (12:12), on their Pharaoh and his supposed control of nature, and on all Pharaoh's counselors who were as helpless as he was. see … nor rise: The people must have been terrified.

10:27 But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart: See 3:19; 4:21; 5:2; 7:3, 13, 14.

10:28, 29 There can be no mistaking the intent of Pharaoh's threat, you shall die, or of Moses' reply, I will never see your face again. It is likely that Moses spoke the words of 11:4–8 as a part of this same conversation, interrupted only by the prophecy that begins in 11:1. This would explain Moses' "great anger" toward Pharaoh (Ex. 11:8).

11:1, 2 one more plague: At this point, the series of plagues had come to its climax. lets you go … drive you out: Pharaoh would be glad to be rid of the Israelites. ask from his neighbor: God had announced this from the beginning (3:21, 22; read 12:35, 36 for the result).

INSIGHT

Silver and Gold

Long before coins were introduced in about 625 B.C., silver and gold were used as a way of storing value. Ancient Egyptian bracelets and other items of gold jewelry were sometimes thick and heavy. A necklace buried with Psusennes I in about 991 B.C. (recovered in 1940) weighs more than forty-two pounds.

11:3 Another remarkable component of the Exodus was the Egyptians' favor (Heb. hen, also translated "grace") toward the Hebrews and admiration for their leader. After all that had happened, we might expect the opposite. But the positive feelings for Moses were shared, amazingly enough, even by Pharaoh's servants. This, too, is a part of the wit and irony of this great victory (15:3) the Lord had won over His enemy Pharaoh, who represents evil, sin, ungodliness, and even Satan.

11:4 Then Moses said: The text here is a bit ambiguous, and one might ask, "To whom was Moses speaking?" Verse 8 says that Moses left the presence of Pharaoh in great anger. It is likely that the words of 11:4–8 were spoken to Pharaoh on the occasion of Moses' last interview with him (10:27–29, and notes). The report of this part of that interview is delayed until ch. 11 in order to set it apart and make it even more memorable. This interpretation means that the last plague (the tenth) was one of those that was announced to Pharaoh as a solemn warning beforehand (7:15, note). About midnight I will go out: The Lord was the power behind all ten plagues. But in none of the earlier ones did He become personally involved as He did here. When it came to the death of the firstborn, He came to do that in person. The analogy to the Gospel is inescapable. When God planned the salvation of mankind, it was not something He left to an agent, to a messenger, to an angel. It was work He came to do Himself. It demanded the Incarnation; God became man. Thus in the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, this saving work was not delegated to another. God says in effect, "In salvation work, it is I Myself, and no other."

11:5 firstborn of Pharaoh … of the female servant: The use of these social opposites indicates totality (another use of social opposites is in 12:29). None of the Egyptians would escape this plague.

11:6 Prediction of the great cry to come (12:30) only intensified the tragedy. Pharaoh had been warned of this (4:22, 23).

11:7 In some of the other nine plagues, the text specifically says that God protected His people from the effects (Ex. 8:22; 9:4, 26; 10:23). Here, too, it states emphatically that none of the children of Israel would suffer in this last, most ghastly plague. God served notice that He did recognize a difference between the Egyptians and Israel (8:22; 9:4). The institution of the Passover (ch. 12) accentuated this great distinction. The Lord in His mercy protected His people even as He executed judgment on those who opposed Him.

11:8 Moses repeated God's prophecy: Pharaoh's servants would honor Moses and beg him for mercy. This was certainly an affront to Pharaoh, along with the fact that Moses left in great anger (most likely soon after the words of 10:28, 29).

11:9, 10 As in each of the other plagues, it was part of God's plan that Pharaoh would not heed God's commands or warnings. Only in the face of Pharaoh's stubbornness might the power of God be displayed.

IN CONTEXT

Origins of the Passover Meal

Certain elements of the Passover ritual can be traced to ancient ceremonies that celebrated the new agricultural year. These elements include a sacrifice to be eaten by the community, or eating a new crop, or bitter herbs, or unleavened bread. They might also include rituals of thanksgiving for not dying during the period between harvests, or for a new start. Through Moses, God revealed a new meaning for the Israelite meal.

To this day Passover is celebrated by Jewish families, prepared and eaten according to the regulations of Ex. 12. As the meal is eaten, the Passover story is told, not only as something that happened long ago but as happening now. It is now that God brings every person who partakes of the meal to freedom and salvation. The feast establishes identity: we are God's people, because God did these things for us. Anticipating the coming of God's Messiah, Jewish tradition added a place at the table for Elijah, should the prophet come "this year" to proclaim the Messiah's advent.

12:1 Now the LORD spoke: It is likely that this revelation of Yahweh had already occurred before the events of chs. 10; 11. The verb may be rendered "had spoken" (Ex. 4:19; 6:28). Although we often read words of divine revelation in Exodus, it is important to understand that such words convey a tremendous sense of God's condescending grace. What a wonder it is that God would speak to a man! It is also imperative to understand by these words that Moses (and at times Aaron), because of divine revelation, was not instituting Israel's traditions and rituals by his own clever mind. Thus, whenever we speak of "the Law of Moses," it is the Law of Yahweh conveyed through His agent, Moses, the man of God.

12:2 This month, called Abib in 13:4, corresponds to April-May and is also called Nisan. first month: As the Christian world dated time with respect to the birth of Christ, so Hebrew people began to mark time relative to the month of their departure from Egypt. In later Judaism an alternate dating system developed, with the new year celebrated in the fall (September–October).

12:3 Each family took a lamb on the tenth of the month but waited until the fourteenth day to kill it (v. 6), perhaps allowing time to notice any problems that might make the animal unfit for this holy sacrifice. The word for lamb can refer to either a young sheep or a young goat (v. 5). The Passover feast involved the whole family, the household.

12:4 Any household too small to eat a lamb in one meal was to join with another. No one was to be excluded.

12:5 Sacrifice was not a way to get rid of unwanted animals. Only the best lambs without blemish were suitable. a male of the first year: God meant the Passover lamb sacrificed for the Israelites to be a type (a picture or model) of the coming death of the Savior, Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 5:7). sheep … goats: We usually speak of the Passover lamb, but it could be a young goat as well.

12:6, 7 Each family took a lamb on the tenth of the month but waited until the fourteenth day to kill it (v. 3). The blood of the Passover lamb on the doorposts and … lintel was the Lord's provision for salvation from physical death, just as the blood of Christ is the Lord's provision for our salvation from spiritual death.

12:8 Verses 15–20 expand on the instructions for unleavened bread. See 1 Cor. 5:8 for Paul's comparison of sincerity and truth with unleavened bread. Bitter herbs reminded the people of the unpleasantness of slavery.

The famous rabbi Gamaliel, the teacher of the great rabbinic student Saul (Acts 22:3), who became the Apostle Paul (Acts 13:9), is remembered in the Passover Haggadah (liturgy) for his words, “Whoever eats the Passover rightly must eat the lamb along with unleavened bread and bitter herbs.” Paul himself was later to draw an analogy from unleavened bread to purity in keeping the feast of the Lord’s Table (1 Cor. 5:8).

12:9 roasted in fire: The manner of cooking is emphasized as is the idea of the totality of the lamb. In this way, none of its bones would be broken in preparation (Num. 9:12).

12:10 none remain: This was not an ordinary meal with expected leftovers; it was a sacred feast.

12:11 The people were to dress for travel, in readiness to march at the Lord’s bidding. Ordinarily they would not wear sandals (or shoes) in the house. One’s staff would be propped near the door, but not on this night. They were to eat in haste, ready to leave. It is the LORD’s Passover: (See v. 13 for the meaning of “Passover”). The commands for this night were not for the people’s comfort. They readied the people for God’s quick and miraculous deliverance. By the time of Jesus, the Jews ate this meal in a very leisurely manner, reclining on cushions around a three-winged table, the Roman triclinium (John 13:23). The first Passover meal was eaten in haste, but subsequent Passover meals could be less hurried, because the deliverance from Egypt had already been accomplished.

12:12 Pass through (v. 23) refers to linear motion, as in crossing over a stream (Gen. 31:21), crossing a border (Num. 20:17), or going across a territory (Num. 21:23). Abram used this word to describe his journey to Canaan (Gen. 12:6). This word is related to the name Hebrew (Ex. 1:15, 16; 2:6), perhaps meaning, “one who has come from the other side.” Here it is used ominously of the anticipated journey of the Lord to destroy the firstborn in the land of Egypt as threatened at the beginning (4:21–23) and told to Pharaoh’s face (11:4–8). I will pass through … I will strike … I will execute … I am the LORD: The repetition of the pronoun I emphasizes that God did this, not an angel or some other agent.

12:13 The term sign can mean a reminder, memorial, or symbol, as it does here (3:12), or a miracle that points to the power of God (7:3). The verb translated pass over (Heb, pasah; v. 12), from which the Hebrew name for Passover comes (v. 11), means “to spare” or “skip” (vv. 23, 27). It is used only in these three verses and in Is. 31:5. This judgment was carried out personally by the living God. I see … I will pass over you … I strike the land: As in v. 12, I is repeated for emphasis (read the report in v. 29).

12:14 Henceforth the day would be a memorial (similar to the word describing God's name in 3:15). feast to the LORD: Some of the religious duties are somber and require fasting. The Passover, however, was a feast of celebration. (The name of the prophet Haggai was based on the Hebrew word for feast.) The same term translated everlasting here was also used to describe God's name (3:15). The word means "in perpetuity," for time without end (Ps. 90:2).

12:15, 16 seven days: The Passover was tied directly to the Feast of Unleavened Bread, so named in v. 17 (Ex. 23:15; Lev. 23:4–8). Shall be cut off means "shall be executed" (Gen. 17:14). The term convocation means "gathering." On the days of holy convocation the only work permitted was the preparation of food.

12:17–24 As vv. 17–20 repeat and expand on the ideas of vv. 15, 16, so vv. 21–24 take up the main ideas of the Passover (vv. 1–14) and expand on them.

12:25–28 To ensure against forgetting this festival, these verses include instructions on how one generation should teach the next concerning its importance. to the land: The hope for entry into the Promised Land was an essential part of the salvation story. when your children say: These words are implemented in a significant part of the Passover Haggadah (liturgy): Questions are provided for children to ask, and the answers are prepared as well. He struck: The language of this verse is consistent with that of vv. 12, 13. The Lord Himself passed over the homes of the faithful in Israel, and the Lord Himself struck the homes of the Egyptians (v. 29). bowed their heads and worshiped: This is the second time that such words are used of the Israelites in the Exodus. so they did: The Israelites not only worshiped God, but they believed His words and obeyed Him.

12:29 Moses, at the very beginning of his commission, was told about the death of the Egyptians' firstborn (4:22, 23). Furthermore, he announced it directly to Pharaoh (11:4–8). God regarded the nation of Israel as His firstborn. In exchange for the attacks on His firstborn son, the Lord attacked the firstborn son of Pharaoh (vv. 12, 13, 23, 27). the firstborn of Pharaoh … to the firstborn of the captive: This use of opposites indicates totality —everyone in Egypt. and also livestock: Though not nearly as awful as the death of firstborn children, the death of the livestock was a blow to the Egyptians economically. These deaths were also attacks on their gods (v. 12).

12:30 The great cry in Egypt gives us only a glimpse of how Pharaoh's people paid for his choices. Not a house escaped. Wherever there was a family there was a death.

12:31 called for Moses and Aaron: Based on the words of Moses reported in 10:29, it is likely that this message was delivered by an intermediary. Pharaoh was grief-stricken at the death of his firstborn son.

12:32 your flocks and your herds: At last Pharaoh capitulated (10:9, 26). His words and bless me also show a softening of his heart. The death of his son, and the deaths of firstborn sons everywhere, must have shattered him to the core of his being.

12:33 The Egyptians urged the people to leave because they feared they might all die if the Israelites did not leave soon. A Psalm written later celebrated this miraculous deliverance from slavery: "Egypt was glad when they departed, / For the fear of them had fallen upon them" (Ps. 105:38).

12:34 The dough before it was leavened explains the "unleavened bread" of vv. 15–20. The Israelites did not have enough time to let the leaven (yeast) work in their dough. They left Egypt with unleavened dough. From that day on, unleavened bread would remind them of the haste of that night of flight from slavery.

12:35 asked from the Egyptians: This was God's plan from the beginning (Ex. 3:21, 22; 11:2, 3). The slaves were now being paid for their years of servitude. Pharaoh was no longer respected by his people. The ones who suffered through all ten plagues respected the nation of the God who had humiliated Pharaoh.

IN DEPTH

The Destroyer

The term “the destroyer” in Ex. 12:23 (a Heb. participle from shahat, in the Hiphil theme) seems to suggest that the agent of destruction is someone other than the Lord (but compare Ex. 12:12, 13).

Who then, or what, is “the destroyer?” If striking the firstborn of Egypt is done by none other than the Lord (vv. 12, 13), yet if the Lord is the one who may restrain “the destroyer” (v. 23), three possible solutions present themselves. (1) As with critical scholars, one might conclude that different “sources” were used in compiling this chapter, or that the texts are simply in disagreement with one another. For those who believe in the coherence of inspired Scriptures, this is not an adequate solution. (2) The use of the term “the destroyer” may be viewed as a way of speaking of God, but from a distance; it may be that this work of divine judgment was so distasteful that a substitute term needed to be used. The idea would still be that the destroying would be done by God. This is a possible notion, similar to an explanation given for the use of the phrase, “the Angel of the LORD” (Ex. 23:20). (3) The term “the destroyer” does refer to an agent of the Lord. Nevertheless, to remain consistent with the teaching of vv. 12, 13, that agent can be none other than the Lord Himself.

It seems that only with the NT revelation may this conundrum be solved. The “Destroyer” (the term should be spelled with a capital letter) appears to be another reference to the pre-incarnate Jesus! (This is also, we believe, the better solution to the meaning of the term “the Angel of Yahweh”; 23:20.) Certainly many will cringe at the notion of Jesus being described with this dark title; but they cringe as well at the picture of the Savior in Rev. 19:11–21. (Perhaps the same image is intended in the account of the Angel of the Lord with a drawn sword in His hand standing over the infamous Balaam; Num. 22:31.) Scriptural categories should not be established by “cringe-quotients”! There are many and varied portraits of the Savior-King in Scripture. Here is a neglected one, “the Destroyer!”

12:37 The familiar phrase the children of Israel refers to the heirs of God’s promises to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The Lord gave the name Israel to Jacob (Gen. 32:22–32). The reference to Rameses most likely relates to the store city Ramses mentioned in Ex. 1:11, perhaps Tell el-Daba in the Eastern Delta region. Succoth is possibly Tell el-Maskhuta further to the east. The number six hundred thousand men indicates a total population of some three million people. The actual numbering of the people did not take place until later (Num. 1). Thus, this verse should not be regarded as an independent witness to the number of fighting men in Israel at the time of the Exodus from Egypt, since it is derived from the later census (Num. 1:46).

12:38 The mixed multitude included Egyptians and perhaps other ethnic groups who had their own reasons for leaving. Some of these people later caused trouble when things did not go smoothly or as anticipated (Num. 11:4). The movement of this vast population was further complicated by their flocks and herds, which they needed to provide milk, meat, and hides, as well as sacrifices to the Lord.

12:39 The people baked unleavened cakes (bread without leaven) in obedience to God's command (vv. 1–20). and could not wait: The symbolism in this has to do with the haste of their departure, not (as some have supposed) something evil in leaven itself. If leaven were intrinsically evil, Israel would have been forbidden to eat leavened bread at any time.

12:40, 41 four hundred and thirty years: If the Exodus took place around 1446 B.C., Jacob's arrival in Egypt would have been around 1876 B.C.

12:42 The departure of Israel from Egypt was to be a night of solemn observance. The Passover has been carefully observed by Jews since that time. In a sense, Christians also celebrate the Passover when they celebrate the Lord's Supper, Jesus' last supper with his disciples that took place at the time of the Passover. When at the LordSupper Christians recall Jesus' saving acts for them, they can also thank God for His saving acts for the Israelites at the time of the Exodus.

12:43–51 The regulations concerning Passover may have been given at another time, but are included here because of the description of the first Passover earlier in the chapter.

12:43 no foreigner: The holy feast was designed for those who had come to faith in the living God. To invite others to share in the meal would cause people to lose their understanding of its sacred nature. However, this exclusion was certainly not designed to keep foreigners away from God (read the next verses).

12:44, 45 A servant who had faith in God and was circumcised could partake of the holy feast (Gen. 17:12). But persons who did not share in Israel's faith were excluded (v. 45).

12:46 in one house: The first Passover was celebrated in each home (vv. 1–13), for each house was marked by the blood of the Passover lamb. nor … break one of its bones: Not breaking the bones of the lamb foreshadowed Jesus' death: None of the Savior's bones were broken even though He suffered a horrible death (Ps. 34:20; John 19:33, 36).

12:47 All the congregation of Israel: This limited participation by outsiders and demanded participation from all of those who were part of the community.

12:48 The term stranger (Heb. ger) is different from "foreigner" (Heb. nekar) in v. 43. Both may speak of foreigners, but the term in v. 43 sometimes has negative overtones as well (for example, the word used for "foreign gods" in Gen. 35:2, 3; Josh. 24:20, 23). It would not be a light decision for a male sojourner to come to the Passover meal, for he would have to be circumcised! This rite would demand faith in the Lord and a determination to share in the responsibilities and promises of Israel. he shall be as a native of the land: These words anticipate Israel's residence in Canaan. But they also anticipate the idea of the new birth. In God's reckoning, a person of foreign birth who shares in Israel's faith has become as one who is native-born (Heb. 'ezrah; Lev. 17:15; 18:26; 19:34; 24:16, 22). That is, the foreign-born believer becomes "Zion-born" (Ps. 87 develops this more fully). Here are biblical roots for the NT teaching of a person of faith being "born again" or "born from above" (John 3:3–21).

12:49, 50 One law is the Hebrew term tora, basically meaning "teaching."

12:51 Armies refers to the hosts of multitudes of Israel, not necessarily to enlisted fighting men.

13:1–22 Before the dramatic story of the crossing of the Red Sea there is a record of foundational institutions that the Lord gave to Israel. These are: (1) the consecration of the firstborn (vv. 1, 2); (2) the Feast of Unleavened Bread (vv. 3–10); and (3) the law concerning the firstborn (vv. 11–16). This is followed by the Lord's command to the Israelites to travel in an unexpected direction (vv. 17–22).

13:1 The LORD spoke to Moses often, but Moses' close relationship with God was special (33:11; Num. 12:8).

13:2 The term translated consecrate means "to make holy." it is Mine: The explanation of the rite of consecration of the firstborn males to the Lord is developed further in vv. 11–16.

13:3 Remember this day: See 12:41, 42, 51.

13:4 in the month Abib: This verse defines the month of 12:2.

13:5–7 into the land of: There are several lists of the nations of the land of Canaan, but the lists have variations. The most complete list is in Gen. 15:18–21, where ten nations are mentioned. In the lists in Exodus, three, five, or six nations are mentioned, and not always in the same order (3:8, 17; 23:23, 28; 33:2; 34:11). Here, the Perizzites are not mentioned. These variations suggest that the point is not a complete catalog so much as a reminder that the land of Canaan was inhabited and that the inhabitants would have to be removed by force if Israel were to realize her divine destiny.

13:8 Even later generations of Israelites who had not been part of the Exodus were to say, "This is what the LORD did for me." They all shared in God's deliverance because of its lasting effects and God's promise of its permanence.

13:9–11 Sign: A similar commandment is found in Deut. 6:8. Jews would fasten a small box containing passages of Scripture to their hand and forehead during prayer to serve as a memorial. With or without such a physical sign, the symbol represented an internal reality: God's instructions were to become a rule for one's life.

IN CONTEXT

Eastern Literary Style

The nearly verbatim repetition of the Feast of Unleavened Bread exhortation in Ex. 12:14–20 and 13:3–10 represents a literary style used occasionally in the OT.

In presenting the laws of Israel, Hebrew style is "episodic." One finds here a little, there a little. In a more "Western book," the materials on a particular theme are often gathered to one place with repetitions being deleted. In the very "Eastern book" that the Bible is, there is a different literary and aesthetic style.

Further, even though the materials of Exodus were written (Ex. 24:4), most people would not have access to the written scrolls. Thus for purposes of common understanding, the text was frequently read aloud, and it is a feature of oral literature to be repetitive, which helps to fix the ideas in the minds of the hearers.

13:12 Set apart helps explain the meaning of consecrate in v. 2. The idea is "to treat as distinct," "to mark out as special." The term males qualifies the term every firstborn.

13:13, 14 A firstborn male donkey was redeemed with a lamb; a donkey was not allowed as a sacrifice to the Lord. Similarly, the Israelites were to redeem their firstborn sons; they were never to slay them in human sacrifice. In this way the people were dramatically reminded of the extent to which the Lord had gone to free them from slavery. He had spared their firstborn even as He slew the firstborn of Egypt, human and animal, to buy their freedom. Later the Lord claimed the Levites for Himself in exchange for the firstborn sons of the people (Num. 3:40–51).

13:15 sacrifice … all males: This was a heavy reminder of the costly sacrifice of their redemption. redeem: The strategy was later changed by the Lord by taking the Levites to Himself in exchange for the firstborn sons (Num. 3:40–51).

13:16 A sign was a reminder, memorial, or symbol (v. 9; compare Deut. 6:8).

13:17 If the people of Israel had traveled directly to Canaan, it would have been in a northerly direction along the coastal plain. Later this plain would be known as the land of the Philistines. There were some Philistine people in Canaan from an early period, but their main invasion and settlement of the land did not come before the mid-twelfth century B.C. The use of this name is similar to the use of later names for the store cities Israel had worked on in Egypt (Ex. 1:11). change their minds: The Egyptians had heavily fortified this coastal route for their own defensive purposes. The people might have been forced into battle with the Egyptians before they were prepared.

IN DEPTH

The Road Through Philistia

There were three ancient routes between Asia and Egypt. One ran from Elath near Ezion Geber (1 Kin. 9:26) across the Sinai Peninsula to an area of the Suez around the city of On (Heliopolis). Another stretched from near Beersheba in the Negev to the area of the Suez. A third route, and most used, especially by Egyptian armies, was the "way of the land of the Philistines" (Ex. 13:17).

In Egypt, this roadway was called the "way of Horus," after Egypt's earliest state god. A coastal route that left Egypt from the northeast, it ran along the northern reaches of the Sinai Peninsula and along the coast of Canaan. Since the land closest to the Mediterranean Sea was marshy, the route did not lie within sight of the Sea but lay inland a few miles.

The biblical name "way of the land of the Philistines" alludes to the coastal area where the Philistines lived and through which the way of Horus passed. In later times, when the Philistines were not a distinguished people, the route was simple called "the way of the sea" (Is. 9:1).

13:18 the way of the wilderness: The fact of the journey of Israel from Egypt is not in dispute. The route is another matter. The text is clear that the people did not go directly toward Canaan. Hence many alternative routes have been proposed to explain the direction they did take. The traditional route has the people moving in a southerly direction along the western shore of the Sinai Peninsula until they reached Mount Sinai in the far south-central region of the peninsula. The rendering the Red Sea comes from the Septuagint, the Greek translation of the OT completed about 150 B.C.; the Hebrew phrase means "Sea of Reeds." This phrase may refer to the ancient northern extension of the Red Sea. Many believe it was one of the marshy lakes in the region.

13:19 the bones of Joseph: The story of the last wish of Joseph and his death is found in Gen. 50:22–26. How wonderful that more than four hundred years later this dying wish, which required great faith in the living God, was accomplished!

13:20 We do not know the location of Succoth, Etham, and certain other early encampments of Israel (for Succoth, read 12:37.) 13:21, 22

God’s presence with His people was made dramatically apparent in a pillar of cloud and a pillar of fire (Ex. 14:19, 20, 24; 40:38; Num. 9:21). God stayed with His people throughout the Exodus experience. By these and other wonderful signs He made Himself unforgettable! Because God is Spirit (John 4:24), it is a mark of His gracious character that He made His presence seen and felt among His people. If the people focused on the fact of His presence, they would not need to fear.

A rocky shore along the Red Sea, at a point north of where the Israelites crossed during the Exodus from Egypt (Ex. 14).

14:1—15:21 The crossing of the Red Sea (or Sea of Reeds), the climactic part of the Exodus from Egypt, is given both in a prose account (ch. 14) and in poetry, a psalm of praise to God (ch. 15).

14:2 The locations of Pi Hahiroth, Migdol, and Baal Zephon are not known today. Pi Hahiroth may be a translation of an Egyptian name, perhaps "Dwelling of Hathor" or something similar. Migdol means "Tower" and might refer to some topographical feature. Baal Zephon means "Baal of the North," a name suggesting that Canaanite religious ideas had extended to this region. God told the Israelites to camp by the sea so that later He could deliver them miraculously.

14:3 The Egyptians would note Israel's route of escape, note the change in direction (v. 2), and conclude that they were bewildered. This was a ruse, of course, orchestrated by God Himself.

14:4, 5 then I will harden Pharaoh's heart: See Ex. 3:19; 4:21; 5:2; 7:3, 13, 14; 14:8. One more blow against Pharaoh was determined. The meaning of the verb gain honor is significant. When Moses and Aaron had first approached Pharaoh (5:1–9), he had treated the men and their God with contempt. With Pharaoh's final defeat, the name the LORD (that is, Yahweh) and its association with the people of Israel would be known and honored abroad.

14:6, 7 he made ready his chariot: At Pharaoh's command, the commander of the chariots pursued the Israelites. Six hundred choice chariots was a most formidable force. Chariots in the wars of the ancient world provided a decisive advantage over foot soldiers.

14:8 the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh: As He promised in 14:4.

14:9–11 We cannot fault the people for being very afraid; fear itself is not a sin. However, the sarcastic remark to Moses (and hence to the Lord) that there were no graves in Egypt showed a lack of faith. This is just the first of a series of complaints that they leveled against Moses. With each one their grumbling grew into open hostility (Ex. 16:2, 3; 17:2, 3).

14:12 The statement let us alone refers to Israel's response to Moses and Aaron after their first, disastrous approach to Pharaoh (5:21).

14:13 Stand still is a great statement of faith from Moses.

14:13, 14 Despite their harsh words, Moses did not lash out against the complaining people. Instead he sought to encourage them with a promise that they would see the salvation of the LORD. The Hebrew word for salvation, yeshua , comes from a term that has to do with "room" or "space." The people were under great pressure, squeezed between the waters before them and the armies of Pharaoh behind them. Salvation would relieve the pressure in a most dramatic way. This salvation was to come from God for He was pleased to provide it (v. 30; 15:2).

14:15 The people were to go forward—not to go back, not to give up.

14:16–18 Moses' rod is the same celebrated rod of God (Ex. 4:20) that Moses and Aaron had used in bringing forth many of the plagues against the Egyptians (4:1–8; 7:9, 20; 8:5, 16; 9:23; 10:13, 22; 17:5, 9). stretch out your hand: The power of God was going to be demonstrated in a most formidable manner. The Israelites, like the Canaanites, thought of the sea as an uncontrollable enemy. The parting of the Red Sea was an unforgettable demonstration that every force in all creation was completely under God's control (Ps. 93).

14:19 Here, the Angel of God and the pillar of cloud cooperated to protect and lead the Israelites (Ex. 23:20, 23; 33:9–11). The name Angel of God is an alternative expression for the Angel of the LORD. The pillar is later strongly associated with the Lord Himself (Ex. 33:9–11).

14:20 The pillar became two different realities, a curse to the pursuing Egyptians and a blessing to the entrapped Israelites. all that night: At night, God confused the Egyptians and let the Israelites pass through the sea.

14:21 Moses stretched … and the LORD caused: God commanded Moses to stretch out the rod of God (v. 16). This was not a magical wand. The power was from God Himself; it was not in the stick. One of the forces the Lord used to part the waters was a strong east wind. We may picture an exceedingly strong wind with a narrow focus, driving a wedge between the two walls of water that were formed.

14:22 The effects of the wind on the waters was so strong that the ground of the watercourse had become dry. It was an act of faith on Israel's part to cross over on this dry ground. They might have refused to go and would then not have been delivered from the Egyptian army.

14:23 Egyptians pursued: The startled and confused Egyptians pursued the Israelites even into the Red Sea.

14:24 The Lord waited until the time was just right. Then He caused confusion to fall among the Egyptians in the morning watch, while it was still dark.

14:25–27 Without their wheels, the chariots were more liability than threat. the LORD fights for them: This was the confession the Lord demanded; word spread widely. The Lord fought for the Israelites (vv. 4, 17, 18).

Miracles—Not an Everyday Occurrence

The parting of the Red Sea (Ex. 14:21) is one of the most well-known biblical examples of miracles, which are supernatural interventions by God into the natural order in a way that accomplishes His purposes and brings glory to His name.

One might suppose that every act of God is a miracle, and from the human perspective that may be so. Nevertheless, God usually seems to allow nature to operate according to the principles or laws with which He originally created it. Thus, for example, the normal course for the Red Sea would be for its waters to obey the laws of gravity and remain unparted.

But the Bible reveals certain times when God sovereignly overrules natural laws and causes matter to operate in ways that go beyond the ordinary. These are miracles, also called "signs," "wonders," or "mighty acts." At the Red Sea, God caused the waters to temporarily "disobey" the normal principles of gravity and thus the children of Israel were able to cross on dry ground.

14:28, 29 Of all the Egyptian men, horses, and equipment that entered the dry bed of the sea, not so much as one survived. The defeat was total. No doubt some Egyptian warriors had not actually entered the water and had survived. It was they who would spread the word about the Lord, the Warrior of Israel.

14:30 Saved, here, is a wonderful picture of deliverance expressed in the Hebrew meaning of the verb "to save," yasha. They had been given "room to breathe."

14:31 The great work literally means "the great hand." That is, God did it; Moses was just the visible executor (15:6). This great, climactic verse speaks of the genuine faith of the people of Israel at the end of their experience of God's saving works and at the beginning of their journey of faith. When we read so the people feared the LORD and the words that follow, we are meant to understand that the community had come to saving faith and so were a reborn people. They believed the LORD (the same wording used of Abraham's saving faith in Gen. 15:6; read Paul's comments in Rom. 4). It was also significant that the people believed His servant Moses. At the beginning of this miraculous ordeal, they had not believed him at all (Ex. 6:9). The people were transformed spiritually even as they were delivered physically. It is no wonder that they broke out in song (ch. 15).

15:1–19 This section contains the first psalm (or song) of any length in the Bible. It is a song of deliverance. Other poetic sections in Genesis (Gen. 1:27; 3:14–16, 17–19; 4:23, 24) are too brief to be called psalms. Moses composed this psalm, and its grammar, structure, and vocabulary testify to its ancient origin (read Deut. 32 and Ps. 90 for two other psalms by Moses).

15:1 Moses and the children of Israel sang in worship together, as a community of believers, not just as a nation. And they sang to the LORD; the living God was their main audience. The term triumphed gloriously is an emphatic construction, expressing exuberant joy over God's great victory (Ex. 18:8). Horse and rider can also be rendered "horse and chariot." The Hebrew verb for thrown is a rare and pictorial expression. It describes God as reaching down and tossing members of the Egyptian army into the water one by one.

15:2 Because my strength and my song is such an unusual pairing of words, some have thought that the word translated song must mean "power," "fortress," or something similar. However, the idea as it is expressed is wonderful: God is my strong song. That is, a person of faith may regard the living, omnipotent God as the reason for singing! my salvation: The word save and its related nouns have to do with room or space (14:13). With the terrifying sea before them and the pursuing Egyptians behind them, they were trapped. Yet God surprised them with His deliverance! The words of the first half of this verse are quoted in Ps. 118:14; Is. 12:2. I will praise Him: There are numerous words for praise in the Bible. But the Hebrew verb here (nawa) is unique; it means "to bring God beauty." By the sacrifices of one's lips (Heb. 13:15), people of all ages can bring beauty to the One who created all that is beautiful. my father's God: The Israelites worshiped the same God that Abraham, their father, had worshiped, believed, and obeyed. Today, Christians are part of Abraham's line because they also believe, obey, and worship the same God (Gal. 3:6, 7). Many faithful believers have preceded us.

15:3–5 To call God a man of war is most appropriate in this context. The battle has been won, and the praise belongs to the Victor. the LORD is His name: It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of God's name Yahweh in the Bible (Ex. 3:14, 15). Other supposed gods had secret names that only guilds of priests knew. By knowing a god's secret name, a priest supposedly had special access to that god. But the living God has made His name known to all, and salvation is found in His name alone.

15:6 The Exodus narrative has emphasized the extended, powerful right hand of God throughout (vv. 12, 16). This was a way of describing God's active and powerful presence among His people. God did not deliver Israel "from afar"; He "came down" to act among them (3:8).

15:7, 8 Moses used more figures of speech to convey the great feeling of the moment. The powerful wind that made the waters pile up on either side of the people (14:21) is described in poetry as a blast of Your nostrils.

15:9–12 The arrogance of the pursuing armies trying to fight the living God is described in v. 9. Who is like You: Many times, the Bible uses this language of incomparability to describe the true God. In a world in which there were many supposed gods, the Lord was unique. He alone is God. He is not just better than other gods; there are no other gods. No person, god, or thing can be compared to the one true God (Ps. 96:4, 5; Is. 40:25, 26; Mic. 7:18). Fearful means that God inspired wonder, worship, and obedience from the Israelites.

"Redeemed"

(Heb. gaal) (Ex. 15:13; Ruth 4:4; Is. 43:14) Strong's #1350: The basic meaning of the Hebrew verb translated redeem is "to protect family rights" or "to deliver." The word refers to the responsibility of a close relative to buy back family land that had been sold because of debt (Lev. 25:25). The same Hebrew word is used to describe Boaz's kindness to Ruth. Boaz not only bought back the family's land but also saved Ruth from poverty (Ruth 4:3–10). Boaz's kindness and willingness to save Ruth is a picture of the kindness of God. The Israelites had become the "family of God" (Ex. 4:22; 13:2). God had freely taken on the responsibility to buy them back, to pay the price to free them from slavery. The Lord was Israel's Redeemer as Isaiah proclaimed (Is. 43:14), but He was also the personal Redeemer of both Job and David (Job 19:25; Ps. 19:14). We too have a Redeemer, Jesus, who was willing to pay the price—His death on the cross—to free us from our sins (Gal. 4:5; Titus 2:14).

15:13 mercy: Best rendered as "loyal love," God's faithful love for His people (Ps. 13:5). Redeemed is from a word that has to do with protecting family rights. God had protected His family, the Israelites. Holy habitation refers to the land of Israel in general, the land that God was giving to His people for their enjoyment (v. 17).

15:14, 15 The news of Israel's deliverance from Egypt spread abroad (Josh. 2:9). God's powerful deliverance was not to be kept a secret. The nations of the world were to be put on alert: God fought for Israel, and Israel was on the march! These words should have encouraged the Israelites to have courage. Instead, the subsequent story illustrates the cowardice of the Israelites. They struggled to trust in their powerful God (Num. 13, 14).

15:16 fear and dread: A pairing of two words to express one emphatic thought, "overwhelming dread." The expression Your arm is interchangeable with right hand (vv. 6, 12). The verb for purchased ("to acquire," "to possess") can also mean "to create" (Gen. 14:19).

15:17 bring them in: The verse speaks of the hope for the near future, the conquest of the land of Canaan (soon to be the land of Israel), as well as the hope for the more distant future, the building of the temple.

15:18 the LORD shall reign forever and ever: Ultimately the salvation of Israel from Egypt points to the coming reign of the living God on earth over His redeemed people.

15:19, 20 Miriam, Moses' sister, is mentioned here by name for the first time. Most likely she is the one intended in the story of Moses' birth in ch. 2. She is called a prophetess. Although there is no record of women serving as priests in ancient Israel, women did serve as prophetesses (Deborah, Judg. 4:4; the wife of Isaiah, Is. 8:3; Huldah, 2 Kin. 22:14). As a prophetess (Mic. 6:4), Miriam spoke authoritatively from God. However neither she nor her brother Aaron was ever Moses' equal in intimacy with God (Num. 12). This passage also describes the Israelites' first worship service following their deliverance from the Red Sea. Women led this worship with timbrels and with dances, something later celebrated in the Psalms (Ps. 68:25).

15:21 The word answered may be translated "sang." The words of v. 21 are the first words of the psalm (v. 1). The point seems to be: Moses was the author of the psalm (v. 1); Miriam led in the singing, or perhaps in antiphonal response. The celebration included music, instruments, dance, and great praise of the living God.

15:22 Hagar had been found by the Angel of the Lord by a spring on the way to Shur (Gen. 16:7; 20:1; 25:18). The lack of water in this area would prove a constant test of Israel's faith in the God who had so miraculously rescued them (ch. 17).

15:23, 24 The verb complained is not so harsh as the verb in 17:2, but it expresses dissatisfaction. It is sometimes rendered "to murmur" (Ex. 16:2, 7; Num. 14:2; 16:11; 17:5). The people's recent deliverance from the Egyptian armies makes this complaint seem fickle and a true test of God's mercy. We are often like the Israelites, turning from praise to complaint far too easily.

15:25 The use of the tree made the miracle of cleansing easier to perceive.

Marah

Marah was a pool or well of water located in the Wilderness of Shur (Ex. 15:23–25; Num. 33:8, 9). Its name means “bitter,” indicating that its water was undrinkable. The well was the first stop for the Israelites after crossing the Red Sea and the site where God satisfied the Israelites’ thirst by miraculously turning bitter waters to sweet. This was a test of the people’s faith, after which the Lord made a covenant with them (Ex. 15:25, 26). Marah today is identified with modern Ain Hawarah on the Sinai Peninsula.

15:26 none of the diseases: As God had transformed the bitterness of the waters of Marah, so He promised to preserve His people from illness (Ex. 23:25). The descriptive phrase I am the LORD who heals you testifies to the mercy and power of God. It is still true: all healing comes from the Lord.

15:27 Elim means “Place of Trees.” The wells and palms of Elim were a welcome relief from the barrenness of the wasteland. Many times the Bible compares wells and springs to salvation and palm trees to blessing (Ps. 1). Elim is probably Wadi Gharandal, near the traditional (southerly) site of Mount Sinai.

16:1 The location of the wasteland called the Wilderness of Sin is uncertain; its position between Elim and Sinai depends on the location of Mount Sinai. (The name Sin has nothing to do with the English word sin.) The term second month means one month from the time of their departure from Egypt (compare 12:2, 18, 40).

16:2 the whole congregation: This phrase indicates a general dissent, not that there were no exceptions. Complained here is the same word used in Ex. 15:24 and 16:16-17. The point here is their impatience.

16:3 died by the hand of the LORD: How could the Israelites voice this outrageous complaint? All that God had done for Israel by His great right hand was in mercy and deliverance. This complaint centered on food (for a similar complaint concerning water, read 15:22–16). After God's great deliverance of the Israelites from the Egyptians and his provision of water, couldn't they see that providing sufficient food for them would be a small thing for their great God?

16:4 The Lord's response to the people's complaint was a promise of bread from heaven (manna, v. 15). God Himself would supply their food. But the Israelites' reception of this wonderful blessing from God was already tarnished by their attitude. What could have been a joyful discovery became a bittersweet one. A certain quota meant a daily amount (v. 5). The verb translated test (with God as subject) does not mean "to tempt one to fail," but "to prove what one really is" (Ex. 15:25; 20:20).

16:5 The gathering of twice as much on the sixth day would allow for the Sabbath rest (v. 25).

16:6, 7 you shall know: The people would experience God's power in a new way (v. 12). see the glory: They would have a renewed sense of God's presence and further evidence of God's mercy.

16:8, 9 Come near: The idea is relative; they were not to come too close (19:21).

16:10, 11 Because God is Spirit (John 4:24), He has varied the ways in which He has shown Himself. The glory of the LORD is one of the grand theophanies (appearances of God) recorded in Exodus. God first appeared to Moses in the burning bush (ch. 3). We do not know exactly what the people saw in the cloud, but the sight certainly made them aware of God's majestic and somewhat ominous presence (Ps. 97:2–5).

16:12 God promised ample provision for His people in meat and bread. And you shall know: God supplied the heavenly food so that the Israelites would know beyond a doubt that God was with them and was providing for them.

16:13 God provided meat through a natural event, the migration of quails through the region. It still was God's benevolent provision; the quails came at just the right time and in large numbers. On a later occasion, the gift of quails would come with judgment (Num. 11:31–35).

16:14, 15 a small round substance: There have been many attempts to explain manna as a naturally occurring substance that still might be found in the desert. Some have identified it as insect or plant secretions. The wording of these verses belies every one of these approaches. The description of the manna in these two verses (v. 31) is necessary precisely because it was not a naturally occurring substance (read the description in Num. 11:1–15.) The Israelites' question What is it? named the mystery bread: manna (v. 31). This is the bread: The manna could be made into bread. the LORD has given: The bread was a specific gift from God.

16:16 There would be sufficient manna for each person. Thus, no one was to take more than he or she needed. The Hebrew measure one omer is used only in this chapter in the Bible. It was about two quarts; v. 36 explains that it was one tenth of an ephah.

16:17–19 The Israelites' daily dependence on manna was an act of faith, hence the instruction let no one leave any. No one needed to gather more than one day's worth because there would be more manna on the next day. To do otherwise would only show doubt in God's provision.

16:20 The Hebrew word translated stank is a form of the Hebrew word baash used by the crew chiefs to describe how the Hebrew people fared when Moses and Aaron first approached Pharaoh: "you have made us abhorrent (stink) in the sight of Pharaoh" (Ex. 5:21). Moses became angry: Concerning one of many occasions on which the people would not follow the Lord's directions!

16:21 it melted: The ungathered manna would disappear during the day.

16:22–26 Perhaps the most amazing feature of the manna concerned the Sabbath. On the sixth day of the week, the people were to gather a two-day supply for each person. On any other day, manna that was kept from the day before would spoil and fill with worms. But on the Sabbath, the manna from the previous day would be as fresh as when first gathered. This is the most convincing argument that this "bread" was not a naturally occurring substance. six days … the Sabbath (v. 26): The characteristics of manna were a built-in reminder of the importance of the Sabbath day in the life of the people of Israel (20:8–11).

16:27–31 Some of the Israelites missed the point and went out on the Sabbath to gather manna. How long: The Lord's command had been clear, and yet the people simply ignored it.

The Weekly Rhythm

The seven-day week, with its rhythm of six days of work and one day of rest (Ex. 16:30), is revealed in Gen. 1 and Ex. 20. The early Assyrians and the Egyptians divided time into ten-day periods, while the Sumerians used a seven-day period. The recognized number of planets was seven, but this was not necessarily the reason for the length of the week.

16:31 coriander seed … honey: Apparently the manna was very tasty. It was also quite nutritious, and it was the staple of the Israelites for a full generation!

16:32, 33 The memorial pot of manna kept for later generations would serve as a reminder of this miraculous work of the Lord during Israel's wilderness period. Indeed, this pot of manna was a continuing miracle, for the manna would quickly rot and become wormy if a person tried to take more than a daily share (v. 20). Yet apparently the pot of manna before the LORD was kept for centuries without turning bad!

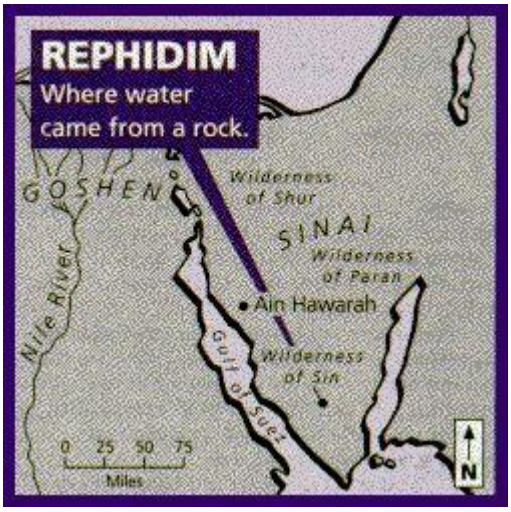
16:34–36 forty years: The completion of the story is anticipated before the intervening steps are recorded.

17:1 Rephidim may be located at Wadi Refayid in southwest Sinai (v. 8; 19:2; Num. 33:14, 15). no water: The need for water for the people and for their flocks must have been an immense problem, regardless of how we interpret the large number of 12:37.

17:2 There would have been no sin in asking for water. But the Israelites contended (Heb. rib) with Moses. This verb is often used in the prophets to describe a judicial dispute (Mic. 6:2). Here it means a grumpy complaining. Moses judged this to be a challenge to God's faithful mercy and evidence of unbelief in His provision. This was not the first time that the people had railed against Moses (14:11, 12; 16:2, 3); sadly, it would not be the last.

17:3 Why … to kill us: Their genuine concern for water led the people to accuse Moses of having an outrageous motivation. Ultimately their attacks pointed at God.

17:4 cried out to the LORD: Whereas the words of the people were couched in malicious accusations, the words of Moses were given in a cry for help. God does not condemn one who screams to Him for help (Ex. 2:23, 24; the same verb, Heb. saaq, is found often in the Psalms of Lament; Ps. 142:1).



Rephidim

Rephidim was an Israelite encampment in the Wilderness of Sin (not to be confused with the English word “sin”) at the foot of Mount Horeb. Its name meant “refreshments,” even though there was no water there for the people to drink. However, God miraculously provided water by having Moses strike a rock. It was renamed Massah (“tested” or “tempted”) and Meribah (“rebellion,” “strife,” or “contention”) because of the Israelites’ unbelief (Ex. 17:7). Rephidim was also the site of an attack by the Amalekites (17:8–16). During the battle, Moses lifted up his rod to assure victory. Aaron and Hur supported his arms throughout the day. Moses erected an altar there to commemorate the victory.

17:5 The participation of some of the elders shows that not all the people were making the strong, malicious accusations that are described in vv. 2, 3. Moses’ rod here is the same rod of God (v. 9; 4:20) that Moses and Aaron had used during the plagues of Egypt (Ex. 7:9, 20; 8:5, 16; 9:23; 10:13, 22) and with which Moses had signaled the parting of the waters (14:16).

17:6 The enveloping presence of God came down on the rock in a unique way. Later Paul said, “that Rock was Christ!” (1 Cor. 10:4; compare Deut. 32:30, 31, 37). Once before, Moses had been commanded to hold his rod over a body of water, and it became dry (Ex.14:21); here he was to strike a rock in a dry desert so that water would come from it. The striking of the rock pictured the coming death of the Savior. Water to satisfy the people’s thirst came from the rock that was struck. One day, living water to satisfy spiritual thirst would come from the death of Jesus, our Rock. Moses did so: The text does not say so, but the implication seems to be that the water came rushing out and the people had plenty to drink and to water their flocks. Indeed, it is likely that the water from the rock became a steady source.

17:7 Massah … Meribah: Had the people not behaved so horribly, God would have provided the water in a context of blessing, and the names for the place would have been positive. Sadly, the names referred to the temptation and contention that occurred there (read Num. 20:13, 24 for the use of these names again). From our point of view, we wonder how the question Is the LORD among us? could even be asked! The people had seen God's power in the plagues, the Exodus, the crossing of the Red Sea, and the provision of manna. Every day they saw the pillar of His presence. Yet had we been part of this crowd, we would likely have been as impatient and questioning as they were.

17:8 The people of Amalek were descendants of Esau, the Edomites (Gen. 36:1, 12). Their attack on Israel was unprovoked. The Israelites—and the Lord—regarded this attack as particularly heinous (vv. 14–16).

17:9 This is the first mention of Joshua, the man who would later succeed Moses. He had chosen Joshua to be his close aide (Ex. 24:13; 32:17; 33:11). the rod of God: The second time this wonderful phrase is used (4:20) and the last mention of the rod in Exodus (Num. 20:8, 9).

17:10 Joshua led the battle; this field training would serve him well later in Canaan. God had trained Moses for his work; He was now training Joshua to succeed him. Hur: The first mention of this close associate of Moses and Aaron (24:14). He should not be confused with the grandfather of Bezalel (Ex. 31:2; 35:30; 38:22).

17:11 Moses held up his hand (holding the rod of God, v. 9) not as form of magic, but as a visible sign that Israel's victory was in God's hands.

17:12 Moses was not a young man, and even a youth would grow weary sooner or later, so his aides supported his hands. Only in this way would Israel prevail; only in the power of God would they win their battle.

17:13 Joshua defeated: The armies of Israel would fight, as all armies might fight, with normal combat techniques. But the victory was assured because of God's power on His people's behalf.

17:14 Write this: Some people allege that the first five books of the OT, the Pentateuch, were not actually written down until centuries after Moses' death. Others concede that Moses may have written certain small sections, such as the one to which this verse seems to refer (Ex. 24:4). Yet it is reasonable to assert that Moses wrote some passages of the first five books at the clear command of God, as this verse indicates, and then the rest later to record the full story of God's dealing with the Israelites during his lifetime (Ex. 34:27, 28). The word memorial (Heb. zikkaron) is used of the Passover in Ex. 12:14. The book (Heb. sepher) refers to a scroll; bound books were not developed until many centuries after the time of Moses. recount it: The public announcement of an oracle of the Lord gave the sense that it was that much more certain. Joshua's later role as Moses' successor would make him an important witness to this oracle of the Lord. utterly blot out: Moses reiterated God's command to the second generation (Deut. 25:19). Saul's failure to complete this terrible work led to his own rejection by God (1 Sam. 15). Finally, King David completed the judgment of the Lord on the Amalekites (2 Sam. 1:1).

17:15 Moses built and named an altar, just as Abraham and Isaac had (Gen. 8:20; 12:7; 26:25; 33:20; 35:1). Naming an altar gave it special significance by marking out a characteristic of God that was associated with worship there; the name memorialized the idea. The-LORD-Is-My-Banner (Heb. Yahweh nissi; nissi may mean "pole" or "standard") is the name of the altar, not a name for God. This phrase is not a sweet sentiment; the standing pole at the altar was an inexorable battle call for the extermination of the Amalekites.

18:1 God wanted the salvation of Israel out of Egypt to be heard throughout the world (Ex.15:14, 15). Word of God's deliverance of the Israelites had reached the remote dwelling place of Jethro, the priest of Midian (for more on Jethro, read Ex. 2:18; 3:1; 4:18.) 18:2 Zipporah: After the shocking story of the circumcision of Zipporah's son, the narrative of Exodus does not mention her again until this verse (Ex. 2:16–21; 4:24–26). Most likely, Zipporah had returned to her father after that traumatic event. Now she visited Moses with her father. But after this passage, she is not mentioned again in the Bible. Later, it appears that Moses married another woman (Num. 12:1).

18:3 Now Zipporah's two sons stayed with Moses and became part of the families of Israel. However, the subsequent history of the family of Gershom involved a terrible scandal (Judg. 18:30).

18:4 Eliezer means "My God Is Help" or perhaps "My God Is Power." Although the birth and naming of Gershom (v. 3) was mentioned early in the narrative (2:22), it is only at this relatively late point in the second son's life—after the Exodus—that his name is mentioned. Furthermore, his name is tied directly to the Exodus: and delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh. Since naming a boy child was done at the time of circumcision, the delay to report the name of this son, and its association with the completion of the Exodus, lends more evidence to the meaning we have given to the tangled story in Ex. 4:24–26. Since the second son had not been circumcised on the eighth day of his life, Moses, the father, was in danger of losing his own life for this breach of covenant. The events of the circumcision of the son were such that the happy time of naming was not experienced. Zipporah seems to have returned with her father, Jethro, taking her two sons with her. Now, when Moses saw his second son again, he bestowed on him the name that represented God's saving work.

18:5, 6 The language in these verses suggests formality. Moses had been adopted into the family of Jethro when he had been a man adrift; his marriage brought certain lasting obligations. He had asked Jethro's permission to return to his own people in obedience to God's call (4:18). The heavy-handed repetition of the term father-in-law in this passage (vv. 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 12, 14, 15, 17, 24, 27) suggests that this is more than a courtesy title. Jethro had true authority over Moses.

18:7 bowed down, and kissed him: The ancient Middle Eastern acts of bowing and kissing were not acts of worship, but signs of respect and reminders of obligations between two people. It is strange that the narrative does not mention Moses' meeting with his wife. Well-being is a translation of the familiar Hebrew word shalom, meaning "peace."

“Delivered”

(Heb. natsal) (Ex. 3:8; Judg. 6:9; 1 Sam. 10:18). Strong’s #5337: This verb may mean either “to strip, to plunder” or “to snatch away, to deliver.” The word is often used to describe God’s work in delivering (3:8), or rescuing (6:6), the Israelites from slavery. Sometimes it signifies deliverance of God’s people from sin and guilt (Ps. 51:14). But in Ex. 18:8, the word is a statement of God’s supremacy over the Egyptian pantheon of deities. The Lord was so powerful that He could “snatch” the entire nation of Israel from Pharaoh’s grasp (18:10). This was only the beginning, for God repeatedly delivered the Israelites from their enemies (Josh. 11:6; Judg. 3:9). The Lord was their Deliverer, and the psalmists proclaimed this fact with joy (Pss. 18:12; 144:2).

18:9, 10 When Jethro rejoiced (hadad, a rare verb in Hebrew), he did more than express personal happiness. His joy came from his acknowledgment of the true and living God. The priest who may have known something about the true God now gave praise to God in the words and manner of a true believer.

18:11 Jethro’s words now I know that the LORD is greater imply that he had once regarded the Lord as one among many gods or perhaps as the principal among them. Here he declares full faith in God as the supreme Deity. behaved proudly: This verb (Heb. zid, “to boil up,” “to act presumptuously”) is found elsewhere in Exodus only at 21:14; read Neh. 9:10, 16, 29 for significant usage.

18:12 The burnt offering was totally consumed. However the other sacrifices were fellowship offerings. The priests of the Lord and the priest of Midian ate their part of the sacrifices together in common faith in the one true God. The scene is reminiscent of the one in which Abram celebrated the Lord together with Melchizedek (Gen. 14:18–20).

18:13 Judge here means “to render decisions.”

18:14, 15 The lively interchange between Moses and Jethro shows a very human side of Moses. He was driven by a desire to do everything perfectly, but his activities were far too time-consuming for one man to bear alone. Jethro observed this (vv. 17, 18).

Practical Principles of Leadership

Leadership has become a popular topic today, and for good reason. Effectiveness in any endeavor is largely a function of good leadership. The Bible offers many principles and models to help leaders serve their people more effectively. Of course, Scripture was not written as a management manual, and one has to be careful about misinterpreting and misapplying the biblical text. Nevertheless, a number of passages are directly related to leadership issues. Moses' conversation with Jethro (Ex. 18:13–23) is one of the most significant. Several principles flow out of this exchange: • (1) Moses, himself a man of authority, respected the authority of Jethro (18:7, 24). It would have been easy and perhaps even natural for Moses to become defensive and protect his own political "turf" when Jethro offered advice. But instead, Moses showed him respect, listened, and responded to the counsel of his father-in-law.

• (2) Authority has a way of becoming intoxicating (18:14, 15). Moses apparently knew little about delegation of responsibility. That may explain why he was overburdened. But when Jethro asked Moses why he sat "alone" advising everyone, Moses replied, "The people come to me to inquire of God." Could it be that the statement reflects the intoxicating allure of being in charge? Fortunately, Moses seemed eager to give up some of his centralized control.

• (3) Authority should be invested in others prudently (18:21). Jethro did not suggest that Moses merely fill a handful of leadership positions, the way so many do, with relatives and cronies. Rather, he described job qualifications based on proven character. In doing so, Jethro gave a reminder that delegation is a privilege, not a right. A leader ought to consider the quality and ability of prospective appointees.

• (4) Authority is a resource to be invested in others (18:22–23). By delegating authority to subordinates, Moses would unleash incredible energy that would take the people much further as a community than if he retained centralized control. People often think of authority as a position to be preserved. In fact, authority is a resource to be used up in empowering others to act more effectively.

• (5) Effective leadership increases the health and longevity of an organization and its people (18:22, 23). Moses probably prolonged his own life and ensured the progress of the nation by appointing effective judges. No organization can long survive if only a handful of its workers are involved in the task. By giving each member a stake in the outcome, leaders can bring far more eyes, ears, brains, and hands to bear on complex decisions.

Additional principles of leadership can be gleaned from the life of Nehemiah. And it ought to emphasized here that biblical kinds of leadership start with humility (Luke 22:24–27; John 13:2–17).

18:16 The verb make known (Heb. yara, in the Hiphil theme, "to teach," "to direct") is a form of the word from which the noun Torah ("law," Heb. tora) is derived. This fascinating verse suggests that God's laws were general when they were first given, then applied on a case-by-case basis. Doubtless, many of the specific laws in the Book of Exodus are the result of this process, the application of general principles to specific cases (21:1).

18:17–24 It is sometimes said that believers may only take suggestions from other people of faith. Many people, however, who do not have faith in the living God have experience and understanding of important issues. The wise believer is able to learn truth no matter what the source.

18:18, 19 Jethro gave his counsel in the context of his new faith in God, but it was rooted in experience and wisdom he had gained throughout his life.

18:20–22 Moses would teach the broad areas of God's instruction, and others would deal with more mundane cases. Major matters would still be brought to Moses. Jethro listed only five qualifications for the men who would aid Moses. His list has some similarities to the qualifications for church offices in the NT (1 Tim. 3:1–13). (1) They were to be able men having strength, efficiency, and wealth (Gen. 47:6; Ruth 3:11; Prov. 12:4; 31:10). (2) They were to fear God, showing piety, reverence, godly humility, and ready obedience (Gen. 22:12). (3) They were to be men of truth, conforming to God's character (Ex. 34:6). (4) They were to be haters of (turners from) covetousness, so they could not be bribed. (5) They were to be ranked, with rulers over them. In other words, each man was to be accountable to someone else.

18:23 and God so commands: Any arrangement must be in keeping with God's will if it is to be blessed by Him. in peace: That is, this would be for the general welfare of all concerned (v. 7).

18:24–27 heeded: We see Moses' character in this interaction. He was willing to listen to others and to improve the way he was doing things. This was also a mark of his leadership ability and his lack of self-absorbing pride (Num. 12). The report that Jethro went his way was not a moral judgment, merely a statement about his travels. By going back to his land, Jethro was able to extend the knowledge of the true God at a time when the Israelites mostly kept to themselves. Jethro the priest of Midian had become Jethro the minister of the Lord.

19:1, 2 The arrival of the community of Israel at Mount Sinai was a momentous event that would shape their subsequent history. The narrator (Moses) was tremendously impressed with the Lord's timing (Ex. 12:41, 51). Likely, the same day means exactly two months after the Exodus, the fourteenth day of the third month (12:2, 18; 13:4; 16:1). When the Lord first confronted Moses, it was before the mountain. At that time, the Lord had promised that the Israelites would worship God at this place (3:12). This promise of God was about to be fulfilled.

19:3 Moses went up to God because God had made His presence known on the mountain, and Moses was the only one who had access to the Lord (Ex. 33:9–11; Num. 12). Moses was the intermediary between the Lord and the people.

19:4 The poetic expression on eagles' wings is a lovely way of describing the people's deliverance from Egypt. The Lord had whisked the Israelites away from slavery and brought them to Himself. This type of language not only describes Israel's salvation from slavery, but it can also describe our salvation from sin.

19:5–8 For the first time in Exodus, the term covenant (Heb. berit) is used to refer to the Lord's solemn arrangement with the Israelites at Mount Sinai, sometimes called the Mosaic Covenant (Ex. 24:1–8; 31:12–18; 34:27, 28). In previous passages in Exodus, this term has been used of the Abrahamic Covenant (Ex. 2:24; 6:3–5). This same word is also used for binding treaties between Israel and other nations (Ex. 23:32; 34:12, 15).

19:9 God was able to reveal only so much of His splendor to a people who were unprepared for a full revelation. Hence, He appeared to them in the thick cloud. One scholar calls this "His elusive Presence," in the sense that the holiness of God makes demands on His character when it comes to revealing His wonder to people.

19:10, 11 The people were instructed as to how they might prepare for the visitation of the living God. They were to consecrate themselves, that is, go through purifying rites to be ceremonially prepared for the meeting.

"Consecrate"

(Heb. qadash) (Ex. 13:2; 19:10; 29:44) Strong's #6942: This Hebrew verb means "to make holy," "to declare distinct," or "to set apart." The word describes dedicating an object or person to God. By delivering the Israelites from slavery in Egypt, God made the nation of Israel distinct. Through His mighty acts of deliverance, God demonstrated that the Israelites were His people, and He was their God (6:7). By having the people wash themselves at Mount Sinai, the Lord made it clear that they as a people were being set apart for Him (19:10). Just like the Israelites, Christians also have been delivered, from slavery to sin. This deliverance has set us apart: we have been dedicated to our Savior and His purposes. We have been called to be His holy people (1 Pet. 1:15, 16; 2:9).

19:12 God commanded Moses to set bounds for the people. None could come near the mountain; they were all to keep their distance. When Moses first approached God at the burning bush, he was commanded to remove his sandals (Ex. 3:5). The people were not even to get that close.

19:13 not live: The threat of death demonstrated the seriousness of what was about to happen. What must it have been like, we wonder, to anticipate with terror and wonder a close encounter with the living God? The trumpet was a ram's horn (as in Josh. 6:4; the word in v. 16 is different).

19:14, 15 Sexual relations were also forbidden during the three days, for they would make the people ritually unclean.

19:16, 17 The epiphany of the Lord was a spectacular event of thunderings and lightnings and a thick cloud. The Canaanite god Baal was associated with these elements in the mythology of the day. His adherents believed him to be a god of storm, so clouds, thunder, and lightning would often be associated with him. But Israel learned that their God alone was the living God. He alone surrounded Himself in thick clouds, sent forth thunder and lightning, illuminated the earth, and filled the heavens with His wonders. Amazingly, one of the heavenly visitors played the trumpet rather than someone in the camp of Israel (compare Is. 27:13; 1 Cor. 15:52; 1 Thess. 4:16). None of the Israelites had ever heard such a blast. No wonder they trembled (Ex. 20:18, 19).

19:18 Even though we know God is everywhere, language such as the LORD descended gives us a greater appreciation of His merciful grace.

The omnipotent Creator came down to meet the Israelites. His presence evoked an overwhelming sense of awe. The smoke was an enveloping cover for God's glory, even as the associated fire reminded the Israelites of that great glory.

19:19–25 The blast of the trumpet (v. 16) was not simply a distraction. It was a part of the physical assault on the senses—a sound and sight overload. Despite the ever grander display of God's glory, Moses drew closer to God even as the people were shrinking back from Him.

20:1–17 This passage conforms to the pattern of ancient Middle Eastern treaties between a king and his vassals or servants. The Great King presented to His servants, the Israelites, the duties and obligations of the covenant He made with them.

20:1 And God spoke: The following words of God are known as the Law of Moses. However, Moses was merely a reluctant prophet, a mouthpiece for God's words. This law is really the Law of God.

20:2 I am the LORD your God: First, the Great King identified Himself by speaking His name (Ex. 3:14, 15). who brought you out: Then, God reminded the Israelites of His gracious actions on their behalf (chs. 12—15). In ancient treaties, a king would describe the history of relations between his kingdom and the one being contracted. In this treaty between the Lord and the Israelites, God described His gracious deliverance of Israelites from cruel slavery.

20:3 no other gods: God was not to be viewed by Israel as one God among many nor as the best of the gods. He was and is the only living God. He and He alone was to be worshiped, obeyed, and adored by the Israelites. Critical scholarship has long argued that the concept of monotheism was an achievement of Israel, such as art was the achievement of the Greeks and order was the achievement of the Romans. These critical scholars believe that it was not until the time of Amos (eighth century B.C.) that true monotheism (the belief in one God) was achieved. But the witness of the Bible is very different than this critical approach. The biblical story has the belief in one God as the true faith from the beginning of Israel's history as a nation. The first commandment is witness to this. And this was not something that Israel achieved; Israel was the recipient of the revelation of God.

Mount Sinai

The meeting between God and Moses on Mount Sinai (Ex. 19:20) has had a profound impact on the world. Its effects are still being felt to this day. But the exact location of Mount Sinai is unknown. As far as we know, the site never became a religious shrine attracting the devout on pilgrimages. Mount Sinai is the same as Mount Horeb (Ex. 3:1), where God spoke to Moses in a burning bush and commissioned him to lead Israel out of Egypt (3:2–10). Horeb may refer to a mountain range or ridge, with Sinai indicating a particular summit on the ridge. Usually the Bible uses the name Sinai to indicate the actual place where Israel met God (Ex. 19:11), and it uses the name Horeb in reflecting on the events that happened there (Deut. 1:6). A few peaks in the Sinai Peninsula have been suggested as the biblical Mount Sinai: Jebel Musa (named after Moses; 7,519 feet), which has a broad plain at its base that could have held the Hebrew encampment; Jebel Serbal (6,759 feet); and Jebel Katerina (8,551 feet).

20:4 not make … a carved image: Peoples in the ancient world produced many kinds of idols, images, and other substitutes for God. Israel was forbidden to do this from the beginning. They could not make anything that would detract from the exclusive worship of the living God. However, the prohibition of fashioning images was not an injunction against every kind of art.

20:5 The phrase bow down … nor serve form a pair of Hebrew words that describe one idea: any form of worship to another god. God is a jealous God (Heb. 'el ganna); that is, He has a zeal for the truth that He alone is God, and He is jealous of any rivals. The Hebrew verb translated visiting can mean coming in an act of mercy (Ruth 1:6) or coming in divine judgment (as here). third and fourth: Idolatry would bring judgment that would affect the idolaters' descendants.

20:6 The Lord's mercy (Heb. hesed, "loyal love") would extend even more to the descendants of righteous people. The contrasting of the phrases "third and fourth" (v. 5) with thousands demonstrates that God's mercy is greater than His wrath. The lingering effects of righteousness will last far longer than the lingering effects of wickedness. The pairing of the words love and keep is found also in Jesus' teaching (John 14:15).

20:7 The third commandment concerns the sanctity of God's name (Ex. 3:14, 15). The revelation of God's name, Yahweh, entailed some risk. If it was broadcast among the people there was more likelihood that people would not hold it in reverence. Use of God's name in vain (Heb. shaw) involved: (1) trivializing His name by regarding it as insignificant; (2) trying to use it to advance evil purposes by coaxing God to violate His character and purposes (one of the ways priests of false religions often used the names of their false gods); and even (3) using it in worship thoughtlessly.

Keep It Holy

What was God's will for the Sabbath (or "day of cessation," as the term literally means)? The fourth commandment is straightforward: "keep it holy" (Ex. 20:8). But what does it mean to keep the Sabbath "holy"?

The prologue to the Ten Commandments (20:2) provides a clue. All ten laws rest on the close relationship that God has to His people: • He is their sovereign Lord.

• He is their Almighty God.
• He is their Deliverer.
• He is their Savior.

If God's people keep in mind their relationship to the Lord and value it in their hearts, they will exhibit the kind of behaviors outlined in the Ten Commandments. For example, they will set aside one day of the week, the "day of cessation," in order to consciously emulate what their Lord did on the seventh day of creation.

God "rested" or ceased from His creative labors on that seventh day. He did not stop sustaining, maintaining, and redeeming the world, but He did cease from creating, shaping, and forming it. And that is what He asks His people to do, to set the day apart for Him, in order to do whatever He loves and desires, everything except the routine labors that are normally carried out on the other six days of the week.

Christians today have a degree of latitude in how they fulfill God's intentions for the Sabbath (Rom. 14:5–13). But the spirit of "keeping the Sabbath holy" still means to honor God, to focus on the needs of others rather than ourselves, and to pursue fellowship, unity, and concern for other believers.

20:8–11 The fourth commandment, remember the Sabbath day, was the special sign of the covenant with Israel at Mount Sinai (Ex. 31:12–18). With this command, God set Israel apart from its neighbors. Other peoples had their own various patterns of work and rest, but Israel was to set aside one day in seven for rest. The word Sabbath means "Rest." The day was kept holy by ceasing all labor on that day. The Sabbath was specifically the seventh day, Saturday. It was patterned after the seventh day of rest for God following the six days of creation. During the Sabbath, the Israelites worshiped God and recalled His deliverance of them from slavery (Deut. 5:15). The observance of the Sabbath included even foreign guests.

20:12 Before the discovery of ancient treaty patterns and their relation to the Ten Commandments, many people assumed that the two tablets of the Law (Ex. 34:1) were divided on the basis of laws relating to God and those relating to other people. In this approach, the fifth command, in this verse, would begin the second tablet. Following our understanding of ancient treaties, however, it is probable that each of the tablets contained all ten commandments. In the ancient world, one copy of a treaty would be placed in the principal temple of each contracting party. Here both copies were kept together before God and the people in the Most Holy Place. Honor your father and your mother: The term honor means "to treat with significance." It is the opposite of in vain (v. 7). Care of one's elderly parents was a basic element of social responsibility and godly piety in Israel. Here it is tied directly to how a person would fare in the land. People who were faithless to God in disregarding their parents would not last long in the new Promised Land.

20:13 The sixth to ninth commandments were designed to build a cohesive society in ancient Israel. Each was based on the value that God placed on people (their lives, their relationships, their property, and their reputation). Each of these commands was reaffirmed in the NT. The sixth commandment, you shall not murder, did not forbid all taking of life, for the Law itself included provisions for capital punishment (21:15–17, 23) as well as warfare (17:8–16). The deliberate murder of another person (outside the legitimate provisions of capital punishment or war) flagrantly violated the sanctity of life. This included murder committed by officers of the state (read the story of Naboth, 1 Kin. 21). The first murder recorded in the Bible was the killing of Abel by Cain (Gen. 4:8–14). Indeed, the death of Jesus, based on false charges and an illegal trial, was the most horrible murder of all time!

20:14 The seventh commandment concerned adultery. God regarded the sanctity of marriage as a sacred trust similar to the sanctity of life (v. 13). The marriage relationship was a symbol of faithfulness.

20:15 The eighth commandment protected the sanctity of property by prohibiting theft.

20:16 The ninth commandment prohibited bearing false witness. First, this command protected the reputation of people from libel by others. Second, this command established the ancient Israelite system of justice on a firm foundation. In ancient Israelite law, the judging of a person's guilt or innocence was based on testimony by faithful witnesses (Deut. 17:6). False witnesses would undermine justice.

20:17 Covet (Heb. hamad) means "to have a strong desire for." Coveting was not merely an appreciation of something from a distance, but an uncontrolled, inordinate, selfish desire. This tenth command governed an internal matter: the sin of coveting occurred in the mind. This demonstrated that God intended the Israelites not only to avoid the actions named in the previous commands, but also to turn away from the evil thoughts that led to those actions.

20:18–20 The response of Moses in this verse forms one of the most significant concepts in the first five books of the Bible. Note the interchange between the words do not fear and His fear. Moses told the people to stop being afraid; God was not going to hurt them. Yet they were very much afraid of the Lord (19:16; 20:18, 19). God did not want His people to live in terror of Him, as though He were an irrational, uncontrolled, violent force ready to be unleashed on innocent people without provocation. Rather, God wanted His people to respect the obvious hazards of wanton sin. Appropriate fear of God in this sense would make them circumspect, reverent, obedient, and worshipful, so that they might not sin.

20:21 God remained in thick darkness—a symbol of His elusive presence (Ps. 97:2). Only Moses could come near.

20:22–24 Israel was forbidden to make any altar more elaborate than an altar of earth. These individual altars would be used only until the selection of the central place for the worship of God (later in Jerusalem, Deut. 12). See Ex. 24:4 for an example of an altar built by Moses at Mount Sinai and 1 Kin. 18:31, 32 for an altar built by Elijah on Mount Carmel. Where I record My name can mean "where I cause My name to be remembered."

20:25, 26 your nakedness: The worship of the gods of Canaan involved sexually perverse acts. Nothing obscene or unseemly was permitted in the pure worship of the living God.

21:1 The word translated the judgments here (Heb. mishpatim) is one of several Hebrew words that describe the Law (the Torah). This word describes God's response to a specific action, something like an umpire's call. Laws that appear in this section are responses to specific cases among the Israelites. Often the people would present critical or difficult disputes to Moses (ch. 18). When Moses had to render a decision on an issue that he was not sure about, he would ask the Lord. The decisions that he gave became known as case law or casuistic law. Such laws differed from the Ten Commandments (20:1–17), known as apodictic law. The Ten Commandments were general laws not based on specific cases. It is believed by some that among the nations of the ancient world, only Israel had both casuistic and apodictic law. The purpose of these judgments seems to be to place limits on people's behavior.

Of Slaves and Servants

Slavery (Ex. 21:2) has existed throughout a great many cultures throughout history. Just as the Hebrews had been slaves in Egypt, it was "normal" for them to have servants and slaves in the Promised Land.

The laws concerning slavery did not condone it, but they did limit its worst aspects. And there were some peculiarities. For instance, the Law commanded that a man who had become a slave to pay his debts should be freed in the seventh year of his service (Ex. 21:2). However, no such law was given for setting free female debt slaves. Why? One reason might be that a female slave often became a concubine of her master's (Gen. 30:9), and therefore unlikely to find a man willing to marry her should the case arise. Without marriage, she would have had difficulty surviving on her own, for the culture of that day was not conducive to anyone, male or female, living as a single person. Thus the Law may have assumed that a female slave would remain permanently in her master's household.

Centuries later, Christians in the early church wrestled with the problems created by the conflict between their faith and the institution of slavery. To see how one believing master had to deal with the implications of a slave becoming a brother in Christ, see Philemon.

21:2 if you buy a Hebrew servant: Indebtedness or other crises might force a person to be sold into slavery. But what was to be done if that slave were a member of the Hebrew community? Moses ruled that the period of enslavement was not to exceed six years, and in the seventh he shall go free. Perpetual slavery of Hebrew men and women was prohibited.

21:2–5 Other rulings followed. (1) A slave who was married at the time of his enslavement would keep his wife. (2) If the marriage took place during the period of slavery, the wife and children belonged to the master.

21:6 If the slave being freed did not wish to leave his family behind, he was allowed to make a commitment of lifelong servitude. The slave would be taken before judges, where he would be given the opportunity to declare his intentions. pierce his ear: A sign of voluntary, lifelong servitude. This passage is not the explanation of the "opening of the ears" in Ps. 40:6, as is commonly supposed; that pictorial phrase is about the “coring of the ears” as the instrument of hearing, rather than a reference to voluntary slavery.

21:7–11 Women also endured the hardship of slavery. In ancient times, a family might be reduced to such a desperate state that it sells a daughter into bondage. The law in this section served to protect the purchased bride. If she were not acceptable to her new master, he would let her be redeemed, that is, her freedom might be purchased by another. In no case was she to be sold to a foreign people. If she were purchased as a bride for a man’s son, she was to be treated as one would treat a daughter. If the man took another wife later, he was to continue to treat the purchased bride with respect. Her food, her clothing, and her marriage rights would continue. A husband who refused these necessities was to let the woman go free.

21:12 This verse lays out the basic circumstances for capital punishment. In ancient Israel, as in our own day, cases often had mitigating circumstances that might weigh against a death penalty. Complicating the matter was the common practice of family retribution. A family who had suffered death or injury believed they had just cause to exact a penalty from the offender. These laws were meant to place limits on the penalties that might be carried out.

21:13 A person who accidentally murdered another could escape punishment by fleeing to a city of refuge (Num. 35:9–34). God delivered him: A phrase indicating that the death was accidental.

21:14, 15 acts with premeditation: The Hebrew word zid here means “to boil up” or “to act with presumption.” See 18:11 for the only other use of this verb in Exodus. Deliberate acts of murder, including the particularly heinous act of killing one’s parents, were punishable by death.

21:16 Kidnapping was a capital offense.

21:17 curses: Breaking the fifth commandment (20:12) in this harsh manner was also a capital offense.

21:18, 19 This ruling allowed the victim of a fight to be compensated for lost time and treatment of injury. Like other such laws, it is likely that a particular case resulted in this judgment.

21:20, 21 These provisions guarded somewhat against the abuse of slaves. They did not endorse the practice of slavery.

21:22–23 Defenders of abortion have sometimes cited this verse to support the idea that life in the womb is something less than a person. No matter how it is translated, this verse contains nothing that would support the modern practice of abortion on demand. She gives birth prematurely is one possible translation of the Hebrew. If this is a correct rendering, the subsequent "harm" would be harm to the baby (or perhaps to the mother and to the baby). More probably the Hebrew means that the woman suffers a miscarriage. If no harm follows: If the woman did not die from the blow, then the offender would be fined for the loss of her child. If, however, she were to die, then the penalty was life for life.

21:23–25 Here we encounter the best-known statement of lex talionis ("law of retaliation"). Many ancient cultures allowed punishments greatly out of proportion to the offense. In Israel, a judgment corresponded to the nature of the injury. The idea is no more than eye for eye, tooth for tooth, and so on.

21:26, 27 In this instance, the verb strike (Heb. nagaph) means to cause injury (in 12:23, 29, it includes the idea of causing fatality). A master who inflicted harm on his slaves could be compelled to set them free.

IN DEPTH

Suing for Damages

The Law was given to an agricultural society. Thus we find codes concerning goring oxen and open pits (Ex. 21:28–36). Nevertheless, the principles of care for human life and safety and for awarding restitution for personal injury carry over into any society and work environment.

For instance, God took a strong interest in preventive health care (Lev. 13:1–59), and that involved safety in the workplace and community. When an injury occurred, the injured party was due restitution in an amount and to a degree appropriate to the case. And the Law provided penalties for injuring another human being to an extent that would approximate the loss suffered by the injured party (Ex. 21:23–24; Lev. 24:17–22).

Further, nothing in Scripture suggests that injured persons should profit from their losses. Nor do we find anything about damages for pain, suffering, fear, psychological stress, or similar emotional conditions. We would do well today to consider carefully the OT prescriptions for settling property and injury cases. They show us the spirit with which we should seek restitution.

21:28–32 The judgments concerning the ox have a modern ring to them. An ox that caused human death was to be destroyed, but the owner suffered no further punishment. If, however, the ox had a history of injuring others and subsequently killed a free person, the owner could be put to death as well. In other cases, a heavy fine might be imposed but the owner's life spared. A shekel was about two-fifths of an ounce. Thirty shekels of silver was likely a sizable sum at that time. In those times, a slave did not have the same rights as the free person; thus the Law sought to place limits on the master in terms of abusive behavior.

21:33, 34 An unattended pit that caused the death of an animal would require restitution to the animal's owner because animals were the livelihood of their owners.

21:35, 36 The legislation in these verses has given rise to the expression: "it depends on whose ox was gored." In each of these instances, we believe particular cases were presented for judgment. The loss of one's ox presented a serious financial drain.

22:1–4 Just as stealing a horse in the days of the American frontier was sometimes punished by hanging (because of the great loss suffered by the person affected by that theft), so the stealing of an ox or a sheep carried heavy penalties. The restitution was usually greater than the value of the stolen animal. the sun has risen on him: To strike the thief after the act would be considered inappropriate use of force (lex talionis, 21:23–25). The thief who could not offer restitution was to be sold into slavery.

22:5–13 Restitution also played a role when animals were allowed to forage in another's field (v. 5), when unattended fires raged out of control (v. 6), and when goods left in another's care would disappear under suspicious circumstances (vv. 7, 8). As in the earlier laws, we surmise that each of these provisions was the result of specific instances of grievance being brought to Moses for judgment from the Lord.

22:10–13 In some cases of suspected mismanagement, an oath of the LORD would be an acceptable testimony of innocence. In other cases, restitution was demanded, unless it might be proven that the loss was due to circumstances beyond one's reasonable control.

22:14, 15 Borrowing had its consequences, as in our day, but the owner's presence was also a factor to be considered.

22:16, 17 The violation of a young woman was regarded as a serious affront. The payment of the bride price also meant that the one who had enticed her had to marry her (with the father's permission). The steep fine was meant to discourage young men from reckless behavior.

22:18–21 The Bible does not record any executions of sorcerers or sorceresses, but it does recount the deadly consequences of false worship (ch. 32; Num. 25).

22:22–24 Particular concern is expressed for the welfare of the widow and orphans, for they were powerless people. Yet those who might be their potential abusers needed to know that they were not entirely powerless, for God was on their side. they cry … to me: See note at 8:12. My wrath: One does not wish to place himself in "the line of fire" of the wrath of God. His own destruction would lead his family to be helpless as well. The issue of the treatment of widows and orphans forms a significant theme in public and private morality in biblical thought.

22:25–27 God also had a special concern for the poor in Israel. They were not to be subject to the abusive practices of moneylenders nor have goods they needed for survival taken as collateral. When he cries to me:

At the conclusion of this verse, the Lord declares why it is right and fitting for one in distress to call out to Him. He says I am gracious, an anticipation of the great revelation of His compassionate character to Moses in Ex. 34:6, 7.

22:28 revile God nor curse a ruler: Since God is the ultimate sovereign, to curse a lesser ruler might encourage disrespect for God's authority.

22:29, 30 Promptness was commanded both in offering the firstfruits of the field and in the presentation of one's sons to the Lord. The sons were to be redeemed (Ex. 13:11–16) on the eighth day. This verse reminded the Israelites that all they had was a gift from the Lord.

22:31 holy: Israel was to be set apart from other nations (19:5, 6). Meat torn by beasts was not to be eaten, presumably because the blood had not been drained from it.

IN CONTEXT

The Code of Hammurabi

Babylon’s King Hammurabi (1792–1750 B.C.) is best know for his law code, the Code of Hammurabi, which contains 282 laws and has numerous parallels with Scripture. Few of the laws, however, were ever cited in Babylonian court cases, and the Code ignores many subjects. Hammurabi did not create these laws; they appear to be a collection from diverse traditions.

The format of the Code shows some similarities with that of laws in Exodus, Leviticus, and Deuteronomy. For instance, both the Code of Hammurabi and the Covenant Code found in Ex. 20:22—23:33 carry a series of laws structured in an “if … then” format. This format, or style, is often called case law, since it describes particular cases or situations.

Similarities between these two Codes are further evidence that there was a widespread legal tradition in the second millennium B.C.

23:1 false report: Malicious talk is everywhere condemned in Scripture (James 3:1–12).

23:2 not follow a crowd: What modern words these are, and how appropriate for today.

23:3 partiality to a poor man: God's support of the poor (22:25–27) did not overrule His justice. Here God anticipated that some would use poverty as an excuse for greedy, even criminal, activity.

23:4, 5 The enemy in this context would be another member of the Hebrew community.

23:6–8 no bribe: true justice cannot be bought.

23:9–12 In addition to the weekly Sabbath (20:8–11; 31:12–18), Israel was also to practice a Sabbath year after arriving in the land (Lev. 25:1–7). Let it rest and lie fallow: Letting the land rest allowed the poor to glean any produce that might grow during the fallow year. It also gave the land time to rejuvenate for greater productivity in subsequent years. Of course, the vineyard and olive grove would continue to produce, but the owners were not to harvest the fruit. The year of rest was also an act of faith, for the Israelites would have to trust God to meet their needs.

23:13–19 Here is instruction concerning three annual feasts. The people of God were given a number of instructions concerning what life would be like when they entered the Promised Land. Among the most important was the requirement to appear before Him three times each year. This requirement corresponds to the similar demand for vassals to appear each year before their suzerain in the international treaties of the period.

23:16 The Feast of Harvest is also called the Feast of Weeks (34:22). The Feast of Ingathering is also called the Feast of Tabernacles or Sukkoth (Ex. 34:22; Lev. 23).

"Lord GOD"

(Heb. adonay YHWH) (Ex. 23:17; Gen. 24:7) Strong's #113; 3068: This rare description of God links the title adonay, meaning "Lord" or "Master," with God's personal name Yahweh. The title Lord speaks of God's unlimited power and authority, just as a master had unlimited power over a slave. On the other hand, God's personal name Yahweh invokes His merciful and righteous character. Yahweh is spelled with four consonants in Hebrew. The Jews do not pronounce this sacred name and instead read adonay wherever the name occurs in the Scriptures. Its precise meaning and pronunciation is unknown. Most probably the name Yahweh is derived from the Hebrew verb for "to be," and means "I AM WHO I AM" (Ex. 3:14).

23:17 Lord GOD: Here two names for God, Adonai, translated as Lord, and Yahweh, translated as GOD, are used together. This expression emphasizes God's sovereignty.

23:18, 19 You shall not boil a young goat in its mother's milk is a command (Ex. 34:26; Deut. 14:21) that forbade the Israelites to imitate the cruel sacrifices of their pagan neighbors.

23:20–23 behold, I send: The Hebrew construction here may be rendered: "I am about to send," presenting a sense of excitement about the impending action. an Angel: In v. 23, this being is described as "My Angel," an equivalent to the expression "the Angel of the LORD." The Hebrew word translated "angel" (malak) can mean a supernatural angel or a human messenger (the prophet Malachi's name means "My Messenger"). Compare Ex. 3:2; 14:19; 32:34; 33:2. To keep you … to bring you: The Angel led and protected the Israelites just as the pillar of cloud did (Ex. 13:21, 22; 14:19, 20, 24; 16:10; 19:9, 16; 24:15–18; 33:9–11; 34:5; 40:34–38). My name is in Him: This is perhaps the strongest identification of the Angel with God. His voice … I speak: The interplay of these words also identifies the Angel with God.

23:24 The Canaanite gods, including Baal and his consorts, Anat and Asherah, were to be utterly destroyed. The sacred pillars, symbols of the overt sexuality of the Canaanite cult, were also to be destroyed.

23:25 Serve here means to worship as well as to obey (3:12). Bread and water, the necessities of life, would be in the care of Yahweh, not the supposed fertility gods of the Canaanite cults. The people of Israel were to have no reason to look to false gods (v. 24); the true God would meet their needs.

23:26 miscarriage … be barren: God's promises to make the Israelites fertile reminded the Israelites that there was no need to turn to the fertility cult that was so pervasive in Canaan.

23:27 This is one of several words in the Hebrew Bible for fear, "terror" (Heb. ema), but it is not one of the more common words. See its use in Gen. 15:12, as one of the words describing Abram's experience with the covenant-making Yahweh. This word can be used in a general sense, as when paired to another word for fear, as in Ex. 15:16. But it is possible that more is meant here (v. 28, notes). It is almost as though the term is personified here. We propose that the stronger reading for fear in this context would be My wrath.

23:28 Hornets: The Hebrew is in the singular, "the hornet," although the word may be translated in the plural, as here. Send: This is the third use of the verb meaning "to send" in this passage (vv. 20, 27) with Yahweh as the subject. The scheme seems to be as follows: (1) "Behold I am about to send [My] Angel before you … " (v. 20).

(2) "My Wrath I will send before you … " (v. 27).

(3) "And I will send the Hornet before you … " (v. 28).

It is possible that the first in the scheme, the Angel, is a direct reference to the pre-incarnate Savior (v. 20), but that the second and third terms are simply more general and abstract ideas. The structure of the passage, however, leads one to explore the idea that both Wrath and Hornet are words that also express ways in which the Angel will operate on behalf of the people of God. That is, He who is comfort and protection to the people of Israel (My Angel), is also an expression of the wrath of God (My Fear) against the wickedness of the peoples of the land of Canaan, whose iniquities are now complete (compare Gen. 15:16) and who are now about to feel His sting (the Hornet). It was the promise of Yahweh that it would be He who would judge these wicked people (Gen. 15:14). Is it not possible that the Wrath in v. 27 is a personification of God's righteous indignation against the wicked? If so, is it also possible that this is a hitherto unrecognized prophetic picture of the Christ? We know that one day the Savior will come as the avenging Judge (Rev. 19:11–21; compare Pss. 2; 110). Here, as the Wrath of God, He is presented as about to bring judgment on the peoples of Canaan.

Similarly, it is possible that He is also the Hornet. Since there is no record of God using any insects whatsoever in the conquest of the land of Canaan, as He had used insects and other natural phenomena in the plagues against Egypt (chs. 7—10), we conclude that the term the Hornet may be used here as a metaphor of God's power (Deut. 7:20; Josh. 24:12). Moreover, it is possible that both this word and Wrath in v. 27 are used in a similar manner to My Angel in v. 20 to speak of a preincarnation appearance of the living Savior Jesus. As a hornet has a frightful sting, so the Lord Himself would fight on behalf of His people, bringing a terrifying sting to the enemies of Israel.

This proposed use of the terms Wrath and Hornet as descriptive words for the work of Christ before His incarnation is similar to the suggestion in Ex. 12:23, that the Destroyer is also a term describing the Savior in acts of divine judgment.

23:29–31 not drive … in one year: This is the first description of God's plan for the gradual conquest of Canaan. your bounds: These boundaries concur with the original promise given to Abraham (Gen. 15:18–21). In biblical times these boundaries were never quite achieved.

23:32, 33 The word covenant here describes a binding agreement that recognizes the rights of each party. Israel was forbidden to make such treaties lest they be corrupted by the perverse customs of their neighbors. their gods: Principally, Baal and other fertility gods.

24:1, 2 Come up to the Lord speaks of God's grace and His holiness. God could be approached only on His terms. That any were invited to come near was because of His marvelous grace. Aaron and his sons Nadab and Abihu were allowed to join Moses, along with seventy of the elders. The later demise of Nadab and Abihu (Lev. 10:1, 2) was tragic, given their esteemed privilege before the Lord. The number seventy is applied for the first time to the number of elders Moses had appointed following his discussion with Jethro (Ex. 18:24–27; 24:9; Num. 11:16, 24, 25). Worship from afar was the command given to all except Moses. Here, worship meant literally "to bow down to the earth."

24:3 words … judgments: This is one of the places where we discover one of the ways that the word of the Lord came to Moses (Ex. 13:1).

24:4 Moses wrote: Some scholars of the Pentateuch believe that Israel's leaders invented or exaggerated the life of Moses to heroic proportions to unify the nation, and that the laws and stories found in Exodus were not written until centuries after his death. Yet Scripture attests that Moses wrote down everything that he had heard from the Lord (Ex. 17:14; 34:27, 28; Num. 33:2). The pillars here should not be confused with the sacred pillars of the Canaanite gods (23:24). Twelve tribes: The whole nation was to be represented in worship.

24:5 Young men offered the sacrifices because the priesthood had not yet been instituted.

24:5 Burnt offerings were incinerated in their entirety on the altar (Lev. 1). Peace offerings were the prelude to a great, celebratory meal before the Lord (Lev. 3).

24:6 The sprinkling of blood on the altar must have been an awe-inspiring ceremony. The blood of the OT sacrifice anticipated, of course, the death of the Lord Jesus Christ. The sacrifice of bulls and goats was an imperfect system that would be superseded by Christ's work (Ex. 12:7; Rom. 3:23–26; Heb. 10:4, 10).

24:7 The Book of the Covenant was likely the instructions and judgments of 20:22—23:33 that had been recorded by Moses (vv. 3, 4). Although the book (more precisely, the scroll) existed in written form, it was read to the people. Written documents were not widely available, and literacy was restricted to a few. Thus the Law was communicated orally. We will do: For the second time (v. 3), the people made a solemn oath of obedience to the Lord.

24:8 The sprinkling of blood on the people brought them into a covenant with the Lord. As their houses had been "under the blood" at the time of the Passover in Egypt (ch. 12), now the people themselves were under the blood of the covenant of the Lord. This resembles our own relationship to God, made possible by the blood of the Lamb of God (1 Pet. 1:2).

24:9–11 The people mentioned in v. 1 saw the God of Israel. The mention of His feet and His hand indicates that they saw a manifestation of God in some human form. Perhaps this was an appearance of Jesus before His Incarnation (23:20). The lack of details reminds us that any attempt to describe the glory of God is always inadequate. Nobles are the elders of vv. 1, 9. This passage could imply that the Lord did indeed lay His hand on Moses (vv. 12–18). So they saw God: The repetition of this indescribable reality is for emphasis. And they ate and drank: The festive covenant meal, likely including meat from the peace offerings as well as bread and wine, was a grand celebration of the presence of the living God. It was also a prophetic glimpse of the supper of the Lord Jesus and His disciples, in which He transformed the ancient symbols of deliverance from Egypt (bread and wine) into the new symbols of His impending death and resurrection (Matt. 26:17–30).

24:12 Come up to me: Only Moses could draw near to God at that time. Today, we are all called to draw near to God through Jesus (Heb. 4:14–16). Here also is the first mention of the tablets of stone on which the Lord had written His law and commandments. These are sometimes pictured with the first four commandments (concerning one's relationship to God) written on one tablet and the last six (concerning one's responsibility before others) written on the other tablet. It is more likely, however, that all ten commandments appeared on each tablet. Middle Eastern treaties were typically written in duplicate. One copy was placed in the temple of the god of each of the contracting parties. Therefore the gods of both peoples witnessed the agreement. But in this case, both copies were placed before the only living God. Teach here is the source for the noun translated "law" (Heb. tora).

The Book of the Covenant

The Book of the Covenant includes various judgments for the people of God (for the term "judgment," read Ex. 21:1). Again we have a misplaced chapter division; the new chapter should have begun at 20:22.

These three chapters (21—23) include varied judgments and instructions on the following topics: (1) instruction concerning the altar of the Lord (20:22–26); (2) judgments concerning servants and slaves (21:1–11); (3) judgments concerning violent actions (21:12–27); (4) judgments concerning animals (21:28–36); (5) judgments concerning property (22:1–15); (6) a variety of judgments concerning personal behavior (22:16–31); (7) judgments concerning even-handed justice (23:1–9); (8) a judgment concerning Sabbaths (23:10–13). After these judgments are two appended instructions: (9) instructions concerning three annual feasts (23:14–19) and (10) the promise of Yahweh's Angel and the conquest of the land (23:20–33).

Sometimes this section is called "The Book of the Covenant" (Ex. 24:7, 8). It is often alleged that this section is the most ancient law code in the Bible. When critical scholars state this assertion, they base their notion on the ideas that the laws in the Bible grew very gradually and did not come to their fullness until nearly a thousand years after the time of Moses. It would be better to describe this section as a collection of miscellaneous judgments that Moses arranged for the people early in their experience at Mount Sinai. With the passing of time in Moses' life, he would have added other sections to the Book of Exodus, some of which supplemented these early sections.

24:13, 14 Assistant here (Heb. misharet) is ordinarily rendered "minister." Joshua was first mentioned during Israel's battle with Amalek (Ex. 17:9–14; 32:17; 33:11). for us: The plural wording of these verses suggests that Joshua accompanied Moses at least partway up Mount Sinai. Perhaps Joshua aided Moses during the strenuous ascent up the mountain but was not allowed to come into the presence of the Lord with Moses (vv. 15, 18). Joshua was not with the people during this time, but he was able to hear their boisterous, debased worship of the golden calf and report that startling news to Moses. Hur: See 17:10.

24:15, 16 Moses then witnessed the appearance of the Lord in the midst of a cloud (19:9). The glory of the LORD is closely associated with the cloud, as in Ex. 33:9. It is possible that the seventh day of waiting was also the seventh day of the week, the Sabbath. “Glory” (Heb. kabod) refers to weight, significance, and importance (Ex. 16:7, 10; 33:18, 22; 40:34, 35).

24:17, 18 The sight of the glory of the LORD again is not described for us. All that the people could see was something like a consuming fire. Moses had seen such a fire in the burning bush (Ex. 3:2). The significance of the forty days and forty nights is not specified in Scripture. However, based on the response of the people (32:1), it was considered to be a very long period of time.

25:1, 2 bring me … willingly: God does not need the gifts of His people, but He receives their gifts as a part of their true worship of Him. Yet in this passage God asks His people for specific, voluntary gifts. This is because He wanted gifts that were given freely and gladly, not under compulsion. Also, he specified the gifts so that Moses could accomplish the plan that God was about to present to him.

25:3–7 Bronze was commonly used in this period. Widespread use of iron was still centuries away. The list contains items and materials of significant value. The people gave these valuables to the Lord to express their desire to worship Him in spirit and in truth.

25:8 Sanctuary means “holy place” (Heb. migdash). As the ground had become holy because of the presence of God in the burning bush (Ex. 3:5) so the sanctuary would be holy (migdash is related to the Hebrew for “to be holy,” qadash) because of the presence of God that overshadowed the structure and dwelled in its symbols. God, whose true dwelling place is beyond the heavens, desired a structure that would represent His holy presence among His people. Thus, the sanctuary is a remarkable condescension of God’s grace. He whose true dwelling place is in the heavenlies desired a structure to serve as the symbolic center for His presence among His people. That I may dwell is related to the Hebrew verb from which we derive the word Shekinah, which designates the radiance, glory, and presence of God dwelling among His people.

25:9 The pattern suggests that there is a heavenly reality that the earthly tabernacle was designed to resemble (v. 40; 26:30; 27:8; Acts 7:44; Heb. 8:5).

IN CONTEXT

Acacia Tree

The wood of the acacia tree, from which the ark and the tabernacle were constructed (Ex. 25:10; 36:20), was orange-brown in color, hard grained, and insect repellent. Many species of acacia grew in the desert of the Sinai Peninsula, as well as in southern Canaan and Egypt. The large, thorny tree had rough, gnarled bark and bore long, locust-like pods with seeds inside. It produced round, fragrant clusters of yellow blossoms. A site northeast of the Dead Sea where Israel camped prior to entering Canaan was apparently so thick with acacia trees that it was named Acacia Grove (Josh. 2:1).

25:10 The most important religious symbol associated with the tabernacle was the holy ark or box. In contrast to the idolatry of Israel's neighbors, the shrine of the living God had no likeness or idol of any sort (Ex. 20:2–6). The highly decorated, beautifully fashioned ark kept the charter of the nation's relationship with God—the two stone tablets of the Ten Commandments—along with other symbols of God's mercy to them. Acacia wood was durable and resistant to disease and insects, making it the most suitable material for constructing the ark. The cubit was a measurement taken from the length of a man's arm from elbow to extended middle finger. The measurement could vary, but the commonly accepted estimate for the cubit is eighteen inches. Therefore, the ark was about four feet long and two and one quarter feet wide and high.

25:11–15 The gold would have made the box resplendent and costly. In addition to the gold used to overlay the ark, within and without, a decorative molding of gold adorned the box. The rings of gold allowed the ark to be carried on poles. It was not to be picked up by hand or carted about (2 Sam. 6).

25:16 The Testimony was the two tablets of the Ten Commandments.

25:17 The mercy seat is a familiar English translation of a Hebrew noun (kapporet) derived from the verb meaning "atone for," "to cover over," or "to make propitiation." The noun means "the place of propitiation." The mercy seat was the lid for the ark as well as the base on which the cherubim were to be placed. In the old covenant, the mercy seat was a place of propitiation for sin, resulting in peace with God. For ancient Israelites, the mercy seat had a meaning similar to that of the Cross for Christians.

25:18–20 two cherubim: The only likenesses permitted in the holy worship of the Lord were these beautiful artistic representations of mysterious, angelic beings. The cherub (Heb. kerub) was likely a composite creature with the body of a lion, a human-like face, and the wings of a great bird. Other ancient cultures had similar devices. Embroidered patterns of cherubim were also woven into the tapestry of the curtains of the tabernacle (26:1). The cherubim's wings stretched out and faced inward, shading the mercy seat. Their faces gazed on the mercy seat itself.

25:21, 22 The LORD promised Moses that He would meet with him at the mercy seat. The verb carries a specific meaning, "to meet at an appointed place." The Lord would also meet with Moses at the tent of meeting (Ex. 29:42, 43; 30:36). Some have thought that the mercy seat and the cherubim were something of a throne for the Lord, with the extended wings of the cherubs forming an exquisite seat for Him, or perhaps a footstool (1 Chr. 28:2).

25:23 The table was used to display twelve loaves of bread in the presence of the Lord. It was approximately three feet long, eighteen inches wide, and twenty-seven inches high.

25:24, 25 Like the ark, the table was to be overlaid with gold and was to have a decorative molding of gold (v. 11). The frame was a decorative element that kept objects on the table from being disturbed.

25:26–28 The table was to have rings and poles so that it could be transported properly. The poles protected the holy object from being touched by human hands.

25:29 pure gold: All of the implements for making bread were also to be costly and wonderfully designed to physically represent their holiness. They were "set apart" to God.

Beauty in Worship

All of the design elements for the sanctuary and its contents (Ex. 25) suggest God's great love of beauty, of design, of loveliness. We have sometimes imagined that God enjoys plainness. This is hardly the case. God's love for beautiful things, for craftsmanship, for design and art, is displayed throughout His creation, and it is mirrored in the wonderfully designed elements of furnishings He commanded Israel to fashion for His holy worship.

The church has often struggled with the issue of beauty in places of worship. Some have argued that since Christians are God's temple today, places of worship should be austere, stark, plain. Others have argued that large expenditures on our places of worship are self-serving in view of the great and continuing needs of so many of the peoples of the world.

But in the biblical descriptions of both the tabernacle and the later temple, other Christians have found models of beauty, craftsmanship, and artistry that bring joy both to man and God. As one woman lavished exquisite ointment over the Savior's feet as a gift of her love for Him (Luke 7:37–50), many Christians believe that lovely spiritual symbols of divine worship in the places where the church gathers are legitimate expressions of love for God.

25:30 The showbread itself is described more fully in Lev. 24:5–9. Twelve loaves representing the twelve tribes were placed in two rows with six loaves in each row. It was called showbread (Heb. lehem panim, literally, "bread of the face") because it was placed symbolically before the "face" of God.

25:31 Perhaps the loveliest ornament in the tabernacle was the menorah, the golden lampstand. Lamps in biblical times were ordinarily oven-baked clay bowls that contained olive oil. A pinched edge or groove held the wick. These seven lamps, fashioned with much greater care and precision, were to be placed on a magnificent lampstand. Chapter 37 describes how the artisans made the lampstand (37:17–24). of one piece: All of the elements of the lampstand were to be hammered out of one solid piece of gold, requiring skill, knowledge of metalworking, and great artistry.

25:32 One of the seven lamps was to be placed in the center, flanked by three branches on either side. This became the basic design for the menorah of later Judaism. The symbolism of the number seven goes back to the creation account of Gen. 1 and represents completion.

25:33–36 The bowls, branches, and knobs were highly decorative. The lamp illuminated the interior of the holy place, but it also was a work of art in its own right, showing God's pleasure in artistry.

25:37 light in front: The wicks would all be on the same side of the lampstand so that the light would be shed principally in one direction. The lights would burn even when no priest was present.

25:38 The implements used in servicing the lamps were also to be made of gold.

25:39 A talent weighed about seventy-five pounds. It is very difficult to estimate the monetary value of the lampstand, since there were no coins or currency at this time. We can assume it was enormously valuable and exquisitely beautiful.

25:40 the pattern: Moses was not only told how to make the implements, he actually "saw" in some manner on Sinai a heavenly pattern for them (v. 9; 26:30; 27:8; Acts 7:44; Heb. 8:5).

IN CONTEXT

The Ark of the Covenant

The ark (Ex. 25:10–22), commonly known as the ark of the covenant, was the most sacred of all the furniture in the tabernacle. A chest that measured approximately 45 inches long, 27 inches wide, and 27 inches deep, it held three priceless items: a copy of the stone tablets on which the Ten Commandments were written (25:16, 21), a golden pot of manna from the wilderness journey (16:32–34), and Aaron's rod that budded (Num. 17:1–11).

During the latter years of the period of the judges, the Israelites suffered a major spiritual, political, and military defeat when they foolishly carried the ark into battle, where it was captured by the enemy (1 Sam. 5:1).

26:1 The English word tabernacle comes from the Latin tabernaculum, meaning "tent." The Hebrew word (mishkan) means literally "dwelling place." Sometimes it refers only to the tent. In other places, it means the tent with the surrounding courtyard. The same Hebrew word is used for the later shrine in Shiloh (Ps. 78:60) and for the worship shrines in Jerusalem before and after the temple was built (Pss. 26:8; 46:4; 74:7). In Exodus, the description of the tabernacle begins with the inside, according to "God's view," so to speak, and moves to the outside. Thus the ten curtains are described first. These ten curtains were divided into two sets. The inner curtains were made of delicate fabric with brilliant colors and exquisite design. All of this was hidden from public view.

26:1 These curtains formed the ceiling of the tabernacle.

26:2, 3 Each curtain was about forty-two feet long and six feet wide. The curtains were grouped in ten sections so they could be moved more easily.

26:4–6 Every detail of the curtains was specified, including directions for making the loops and clasps. With these the curtains were linked together to form the tent.

26:7 curtains of goat's hair: The coarse fabric of the outer curtains protected the delicate fabrics within from the elements. Goat's hair was a rich, black fabric highly prized in the ancient world. Eleven curtains: The outer curtains had to be larger than the inner curtains to assure complete coverage (vv. 1, 2). The extra outer curtain was used over the front of the tent (v. 9).

26:8 The approximate dimensions for each outer curtain was forty-five feet by six feet. This would allow an overage of one cubit on each side (vv. 12, 13).

26:9–25 There have been two principal views concerning the meaning of this section. One view pictures the frame as a solid wood structure that would be used to support the considerable weight of the four fabrics suspended above the wooden structure. But a solid wood building would have obscured completely the fabrics, particularly the inner fabric of fine linen, that seemed designed to be particularly fashioned for the "pleasure of the Lord." Thus the second view seems preferable. The frame was more of a lattice-work structure, through which the fabric of the inner covering would be clearly visible.

26:16–19 The boards were designed to be put together and taken apart easily, as befits a portable tent. As in the case of the design for the fabric, precise directions were given for making of the boards, their tenons (or tabs), and their sockets. Each board was about fifteen feet long and two and a half feet wide. Twenty boards were on the north side, twenty on the south, and six on the west. Corner posts stabilized the structure. The sockets of silver were costly and beautiful but functional. They were made from silver that was donated as redemption money by males over the age of twenty (Ex. 38:25–28).

26:20–30 The bars (or crossbars) were placed at right angles to the upright boards (vv. 15–25) to stabilize the lattice-work structure. Five bars … the middle bar: On each of the three paneled sides of the tabernacle (north, south, and west), five bars were added to make the frame strong and rigid. The considerable weight of the fabrics and the prospect of inclement weather necessitated additional supports.

26:29 The fine acacia wood used to form the boards and bars also was overlaid with gold. This step added considerable weight to the structure, yet increased its beauty and intrinsic worth.

26:30 according to its pattern: Again, Moses was reminded of the pattern he had seen (25:9, 40; 27:8; Acts 7:44; Heb. 8:5).

26:31–35 The veil separated the holy place from the Most Holy Place. (See the record of the completion of this veil in Ex. 36:35, 36.) Only the ark would stay in the Most Holy Place.

26:31–33 Perhaps the most beautiful and intricate of all the fabrics in the tabernacle, the veil (Heb. paroket, compare v. 36) was to hang from pillars by clasps, dividing the chamber into two separate rooms. The larger room would be called the holy place and the smaller room the Most Holy Place. The Hebrew expression can also be translated “the Holiest Place” or “the Holy of Holies” (compare Heb. 9:2, 3 for “the Holiest of All”).

26:34, 35 The ark with its mercy seat was the only object that would stay in the Most Holy Place. The lampstand and the table were to be in the holy place. Each object was purposely placed to reflect the pattern, order, and design given to Moses (v. 30).

26:36, 37 The same Hebrew word (masak) is used to describe the screen at the gate of the court (27:16; 35:17; 38:18; 39:40; 40:8, 33). At times, this word is used for the curtain separating the Holy Place from the Most Holy Place (35:12; 39:34; 40:21; compare the term “veil” in 26:31).

This screen was made of multicolored threads and fine artistry, and it was held in place by five pillars, overlaid with gold, and fitted with sockets. It would not be a flimsy fabric that the wind might blow open. Entrance into the inner Tabernacle was highly restricted by this heavy, ornamental barrier. The Christian is reminded here of the wonder of access to the living God because of Christ's completed work (Heb. 4:16).

27:1 The altar was about seven and a half feet square, with a height of four and a half feet. The cubit was approximately eighteen inches.

27:2 The horns were projections on each corner of the square altar. They could have been used to secure the sacrificial animal to the altar. They were also sprinkled with blood from the sacrifices (29:12).

27:3–7 Various implements were made of bronze, including the grate, which was to be suspended above the altar. The grate would allow the ashes to drop below.

27:8 A hollow altar would allow the ashes to fall down through its center. It is possible that the altar was partially filled with dirt to protect it from the intense heat of the sacrificial fires.

27:9–18 The courtyard of the tabernacle separated the ceremonies of worship from common areas. It was arranged to keep people and stray animals from wandering into the tabernacle. Entering the tent could only be a deliberate act. The construction of the court is described in 38:9–20.

27:16 The gate itself was made of a screen (26:36) thirty feet long. It was to be beautiful, like the screen inside the tabernacle.

27:17–19 utensils: These numerous tools and utensils were used only for the tabernacle. “Common” tools could not be used for holy tasks. The pegs made of bronze were used for ropes to hold the supporting pillars of the courtyard. Everything was designed for portability.

27:20 The fuel for the lamps, pure oil of pressed olives (Lev. 24:1–4), burned with little smoke. The purity of the oil was indicative of the standard God demanded for all sacrifices offered to Him.

27:21 shall tend it: The lamp was never to go out. This command was a perpetual statute throughout the period of the Aaronic priesthood. The priests were also to burn the sweet incense on the altar of incense (30:7, 8).

IN FOCUS

“Altar”

(Heb. mizbeach) (Ex. 27:1; 30:1). Strong’s #4196: This word depicts a “place of slaughtering” and is derived from the verb meaning “to slaughter for sacrifice” (Ex. 20:24; Deut. 16:2). Altars were the site of sacrificial worship (Gen. 8:20) and were made of earth (Ex. 20:24), stones (Josh 8:31; Judg 13:19), or even bronze (Ex. 38:1–7). The ritual slaughtering of animals to the Lord was central to Hebrew worship at the temple (Lev. 1:5). But throughout Scripture, the Lord warned that righteousness, justice, and a humble heart submitted to Himself were more important than bringing sacrificial gifts to the altar (Ps. 51:17; Prov. 21:3; Matt. 5:23, 24). The sacrifices on the altar in the temple were a sign that God had forgiven the Israelites’ sins. That sign pointed to the ultimate sacrifice: the sacrifice of His Son on the Cross for the sins of humanity (Heb. 9:11–15; 13:10–13).

28:1 Aaron and Aaron's sons: Aaron is first mentioned when he is reunited with his brother Moses after Moses' forty-year exile in Midian (Ex. 4:14, 27–31). Their family history and early experience is given in Ex. 6:14—7:7. from among the children of Israel: This is a significant phrase concerning the nature of a true priesthood. If the priest is to be a true representative of the people, he must come from the people (Heb. 5:1). In order for the Lord Jesus to serve properly as our High Priest, it was necessary first for Him to become a part of the people whom He would represent. Thus, the Incarnation was a necessity not only for His human life, His death, and His resurrection, but also for His priestly ministry in the heavenlies for His people (Book of Hebrews). minister to me as priest: The ministry of the priests was for the sake of the people, but its principal focus was toward the Lord. As the holy angels are God's attending spirits, so the holy priests are His attending priests.

28:2 The holy garments were made holy by their consecration to God's service, as the materials of the tabernacle had been. For glory and for beauty: It is likely that the magnificent clothing of the priests represented the concept of imputed righteousness before the Lord (Zech. 3:1–5).

28:3 gifted artisans: This is the first description of the craftsmen who would fashion the items for tabernacle worship. The expression literally means those "who are wise at heart" (in 35:25, the same expression is used of skillful women who did the weaving). These people possessed divinely given skills of craftsmanship. the spirit of wisdom: God added to this skill a special endowment of the Spirit to aid their work. The study of the "gifts of the Spirit" (Rom. 12:3–8; 1 Cor. 12:1–11) can begin with this record of the spiritually guided artisans.

28:4 The garments of the priest are specified: ephod (vv. 5–14), breastplate (vv. 15–30), robe (vv. 31–35), tunic (v. 39), turban (vv. 36–38), sash (v. 39). Other garments were prepared for Aaron's sons (vv. 40–43).

IN CONTEXT

The Priests' Holy Garments

The priests' garments (Ex. 28:2–4) represented their function as mediators between God and the people. Over his regular priestly garments, the high priest wore an ephod, a two-piece apron or vest that was ornamented. He also wore a breastplate of judgment to which were attached twelve precious stones engraved with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel (28:15–30). In the pocket of the breastplate, directly over the high priest's heart, were the Urim and Thummim (Ex. 28:30), a means by which God communicated His will to the people.

28:5–14 The ephod (it is a transliteration of the Heb word ephod) has been described variously as a cape or a vest made of fine linen with brilliant colors. Its two main sections covered the chest and back, with seams at the shoulders and a band at the waist. The shoulders were emblazoned with beautiful memorial stones.

28:5, 6 There are varied ideas concerning possible symbolic meanings for these varied colors. It is difficult, however, to discover in the text of Scripture the alleged symbolic values. It appears that a better approach is simply that the brilliant use of colors resulted in an exceedingly beautiful garment. For as the text says, it was artistcally worked.

28:7–12 The two onyx stones, engraved with the names of the tribes of Israel, were set in gold. They symbolized the intercessory work of the priest. He was to represent the people before the Lord. The names of the tribes were literally written on his shoulders, so that the priest would bear their names before the LORD on his two shoulders as a memorial.

28:13, 14 The use of gold enhanced the beauty and value of the garment. Everything about the garments of the priest was to speak of the wonder of his approach to the living God. Imagine what our garments may be like in heaven, when we shall behold Him!

28:15 The breastplate was a small pouch that hung from the neck of the priest. It was decorated with twelve stones, one for each of the tribes of Israel. Within the pouch were the Urim and Thummim (v. 30). The breastplate of judgment was used by the priest in seeking judgment; that is, a decision from the Lord on an issue presented for divine discernment.

The breastplate was made of the same fabric as the ephod, to which it would be securely tied.

28:16 a square: It measured nine inches on each side. The span was determined as the length from the tip of the thumb to the tip of the small finger on an outstretched hand.

28:17–28 Four rows of precious and semiprecious stones were fastened to the breastplate. These twelve stones bore the names of the twelve tribes. This was another symbol of the priest's representation of the people before the Lord. Not all of the stones can be identified precisely today.

28:29 Over his heart was a touching phrase that reminded the priest of his solemn responsibility. He represented the nation before the living God. Any lesser devotion merited divine judgment (see the sad fate of Aaron's sons, Nadab and Abihu, at Lev. 10:1, 2).

28:30 The breastplate held the mysterious stones called the Urim and the Thummim. These transliterated Hebrew words mean "Lights" and "Perfections" (both superlative plurals). Together their names may mean "perfect knowledge" or a similar idea. It is not known how Aaron and his successors used these stones (if indeed they were stones). We do know that God instructed his priests in many ways. It is possible that these stones were meant to assure the priest that God would reveal His true judgment to him. Hence, the expression "to consult with the Urim and the Thummim" might mean presenting a matter before the Lord with Urim and Thummim in the breastplate, a sign that the priest confidently expected the Lord to resolve the issue (compare Lev. 8:8; Num. 27:21; Deut. 33:8; 1 Sam. 28:6; Ezra 2:63; Neh. 7:65).

IN DEPTH

Guidance Through Urim and Thummin

The Urim and Thummim (meaning "lights and perfections," Ex. 28:30) were intended as a means of divine guidance for Israel. They involved gems or stones that were either attached to or carried inside the breastplate worn by the high priest when he consulted with God. For this reason, the breastplate is often called the breastplate of judgment or decision.

However, while we know that this decision-making system existed, no one knows for sure how it worked. The Urim and Thummim are mentioned only three other times in the Pentateuch (Lev. 8:8; Num. 27:21; Deut. 33:8), once during the early monarchy (1 Sam. 28:6), and twice after the Babylonian exile (Ezra 2:63; Neh. 7:65). Otherwise, there is no indication that the nation used them to make decisions.

Thus there is a great deal of speculation about how the Urim and Thummim delivered a verdict. Some believe that the gemstones were cast like dice. Others believe that the stones were engraved with symbols that signified yes or no, true or false.

The Jewish historian Josephus (A.D. 37–100?) believed that the Urim and Thummim had to do with the flashing of the precious stones in the breastplate. Other writers held that the letters in the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on the stones stood out or flashed in succession to spell out God's reply. Another theory is that by staring at the glow of the stones, the high priest would go into a trance during which God would speak to him.

These theories are pure guesswork. However, it is easy to see that in the days before much of the Scriptures were written or collected, there was a need for some kind of divine guidance. Today, of course, we have God's complete written revelation, and therefore have no need of devices such as the Urim and Thummim.

28:31, 32 The robe was a long, flowing garment made of blue. It may have been a seamless garment. An opening for the head is mentioned, but not for the arms. There must have been slits for the arms.

28:33–35 The pomegranates on the hem were decorative. The bells would tinkle as the priest moved about within the sacred places. This sound would assure those outside that the priest was interceding on their behalf.

28:36–38 The turban of the high priest was made of white linen on which was secured a gold plate engraved with the words HOLINESS TO THE LORD. The plate rested on the forehead of the priest. The meaning of the phrase bear the iniquity seems to indicate that the holy gifts of the people would be acceptable only when presented through mediations of a holy priest. These words anticipate the work of the Savior, who bore our iniquities in His own body (1 Pet. 2:24).

28:39 The record of the completion of these items is given in 39:27–29.

28:40, 41 put them on … anoint … consecrate … sanctify: The rites of consecrating the priests for their holy work are detailed more fully in ch. 29, in 40:13–15, and in Lev. 8–10.

28:42 This command to wear trousers protected the modesty of the priests. Given the sexually preoccupied worship of Israel's neighbors, this provision was decidedly countercultural.

28:43 that they do not incur iniquity and die: It is difficult for us to grasp the gravity of the priests' responsibility as they ministered before the living God. They had to serve God with a pure heart, to represent the people without guile, and to worship without deviating from the commands of God. To fail would invite judgment, even death. Sadly, priests did die because they failed to show respect for the holiness of God (Lev. 10:1, 2; 1 Sam. 4:17; 2 Sam. 6:7).

29:1–46 This section is devoted to instructions for the consecration of Aaron and his sons to the priesthood. It is not enough that the priests be correctly dressed.

29:1 The Hebrew word translated hallow describes actions that would mark the priests as distinct, holy, or set aside for God's purposes—as people who would approach Him in His service. The instruction to present animals without blemish reminds us that sacrifice was not an occasion to rid oneself of sick or defective livestock. Offering the best animals was an act of faith that expressed thanksgiving and confidence in God's provision. Blameless too was the death of the Savior Jesus, who was without fault in every particular.

29:2 unleavened bread: As it was at Passover (12:8), the use of leaven was prohibited in this rite also. Leaven was allowed for everyday baking.

29:3, 4 wash them: The bathing of the priests symbolized the necessity of cleanness before the Lord. Bathing was a rare luxury in the desert of Sinai.

29:5–7 The directions for mixing the anointing oil are given in 30:22–33. To pour it on his head was a lavish gesture, later celebrated by a psalmist (Ps. 133:2). And anoint him: As the priests of old were anointed for holy service, so would the Messiah (meaning "Anointed One") be anointed for His great service of sacrifice to the living God.

29:8, 9 The sons were to be dressed after their father was. The verb translated consecrate literally means "to fill one's hand." The idea seems to be that of "empowerment." A king was handed a rod as the symbol of his political power; so the hand of the priest was filled with spiritual power.

29:10, 11 The slaying of the bull would happen only after the priests had put their hands on its head. This gesture showed that the animal had been designated as their substitute. To kill the bull, the priests cut an artery in the bull's neck to cause a quick death.

29:12 blood: The application of the blood to the horns of the altar may have been to make the display of blood more prominent (12:7). The operation was not a tidy one. The sacrifice of a large animal, in the open air with a hot sun overhead and flies buzzing around, was a formidable task. The rest of the blood was poured at the base of the altar.

29:13, 14 sin offering: The burning of the fat and the kidneys on the altar would have produced an acrid odor. Yet because sin was consumed, these sacrifices are described at times as "sweet-smelling" to the Lord (v.

18). The rest of the animal was burned outside the camp, for it was unsuitable before the Lord (for more on the sin offering, read Lev. 4).

29:15–18 Burnt offering is a translation of a Hebrew term that can be rendered "that which goes up (in smoke)." Aaron and his sons needed to offer sacrifices for themselves as much as for their fellow Israelites (Heb. 5:1–4). However, no sacrifices were needed for the Savior, Jesus; He alone came as the sinless priest. Sweet aroma is an ironic use of language, for the odors of burning flesh, skin, hair, entrails would be an acrid smell. But because of the benefit that these odors bring to man (the forgiveness of sins), the Lord viewed them as a sweet aroma (notes at Num. 7).

29:19–28 One of the most obscure rites in the Book of Exodus is the use of the ram of consecration. The Hebrew expression can mean "the ram of the filling"; that is, the ram that results in the filling of the hands of the priests with their divine service (v. 9). Much of this section remains somewhat mysterious to us, but we can sense the priests carefully preparing for the worship of the Holy God with this sacrifice.

29:19 the other ram: That is, the second of the two rams mentioned in v. 1 (compare the first ram, vv. 15–18).

29:20, 21 The blood that was daubed on the priests signified that they were entirely "under the blood" that atoned for sin (12:7). It is possible that the anointing of the ear represented the hearing of the Word of God, that the anointing of the thumb represented the accomplishment of the will of God, and that the anointing of the toe represented the journey of the walk with God. Not only were the persons of the priests to be sprinkled with blood and anointed with oil, but so were their garments. In this way, the beautiful clothing of the priests would be made holy or hallowed. The substitution of the death of the animal pointed forward to the death of Christ (Heb. 10:1–14).

29:22–24 A wave offering was to be made of the fat of the ram and the unleavened bread (described first in v. 2). The elements would be held high and then waved back and forth before the altar. The offering made clear that everything was owed to God, but some was received back as God's gift. For more on the wave offering, read Lev. 7:30; 10:14.

29:25 After this symbolic act (vv. 22–24), the fat and the unleavened breads were burned as a burnt offering (v. 18). This is also called an offering made by fire.

29:26 The breast of the ram was waved as a symbol of giving and receiving, and was then kept by the priests as their portion to eat as a gift from the Lord.

29:27 Wave offering and heave offering are general terms that cover different kinds of sacrifices. The terms are used, as here, for parts of the peace offering (Lev. 7:29–34). But they are also used for a special grain offering (Num. 15:19–21) and for the tithe (Num. 18:24–29).

29:27, 28 The word translated heave offering (Heb. teruma) means "something held up (before the Lord)." Another meaning is "contribution."

29:29–34 The priests were to eat the meat of the ram of the consecration (vv. 19–28) in a meal of celebration, along with the bread (vv. 2, 23) that had not been burned. An outsider was not to eat this food, nor were any leftovers permitted. Anything not eaten as a part of the sacred feast had to be burned.

29:35–39 The rites of consecration (v. 9) lasted seven days. The repetition of these actions, day after day, dramatically emphasized the need for holiness and faithfulness in worship.

29:40, 41 One tenth of an ephah was about two quarts; one fourth of a hin was about one quart. The same offering was presented at twilight. This offering may actually have had a more sweet aroma than the burnt offering of v. 18 because of the addition of the wine and oil.

29:42, 43 The purpose of the tabernacle and its offering are reiterated. It was here that the Lord would meet with His people, speak with them, and display His glory.

29:44 consecrate: The same idea, to set apart for God's service, is expressed in v. 9 with the Hebrew idiom "to fill the hand."

29:45 The words they shall know take us back to Yahweh's intention in His redemptive work and glorious covenant with Israel (6:1–8).

29:46 I am the LORD their God: Using His personal name, God declared to the Israelites that He was their God. He had redeemed them and delivered them in order that they might become His people and He in turn their God (Ex. 15:2).

30:1, 2 This smaller altar was a stand used for burning the sweet-smelling incense. As with the ark of the covenant (25:10), the table of the showbread (25:23), and the altar of burnt offering (27:1), this altar was made of acacia wood (25:10). It was eighteen inches square and three feet high.

30:3 Like the larger altar, the smaller was overlaid with gold. The horns were a decorative copy of those on the altar of burnt offering (27:2).

30:4, 5 Rings and poles were used to carry the altar, signaling again the great respect that was demanded in the transportation of these holy furnishings.

30:6 The altar was situated within the holy place near the veil that divided it from the Most Holy Place. The mention of the ark of the Testimony reminds us of the most significant furnishing in the tabernacle.

30:7, 8 Aaron was directed to burn sweet incense each morning and at twilight, along with his tending of the lamps (27:20, 21).Why, we might ask, was the high priest charged with carrying out such a simple act? Burning incense actually was a privilege, for it was restricted to those who were allowed to approach God. The Hebrew expression for twilight may be rendered “between the two evenings.” Later rabbis sometimes defined twilight as the point when natural light was no longer enough to easily distinguish a black thread from a white thread.

30:9 Strange may mean “foreign” or perhaps “common” (that is, unsanctified) incense. No other kinds of offerings were to be made on this altar.

30:10, 11 Make atonement means “to cover,” “to make expiation.” Once a year: This Day of Atonement was later specified in Lev. 16. The “atoning” of objects such as this was a ritual cleansing to make these objects holy before the Lord. Since man was sinful, the things he came in contact with were associated with his sinfulness. Once a year, everything in the tabernacle that man touched had to be ceremonially cleansed. The phrase translated it is most holy is literally “holy of holies,” the same Hebrew construction used in 26:34. Here the phrase describes not the Most Holy Place, but the supreme holiness of the articles of worship before the Lord (v. 29).

The Altar of Incense

The altar of incense (Ex. 30:1–10) was located inside the tent of meeting in the tabernacle (40:26, 27). It was much smaller than the altar of burnt offering just inside the main entrance to the courtyard (27:1–8). Priests burned sweet-smelling incense on this altar every day.

30:12, 13 This text is not clear if a command is being given or a concession. That is, it is not clear whether they were to take a census and then were to do as follows, or whether they might take a census and would have to do as follows. The term ransom (Heb. kopher) is related to the words for atonement and propitiation (v. 10; 29:36, 37). The idea is to pay a price for one's life. The Israelites had to acknowledge that their lives were from God and governed by Him by giving Him an offering of money. A half-shekel was about one-fifth of an ounce (Ex. 21:32; 38:26).

30:14–17 Every male was to provide a half-shekel ransom. The sum was not based on the worth or wealth of the person. The collection supported the Levites who cared for the tabernacle.

"Washing"

(Heb. rachats) (Ex. 2:5; 30:18; Prov. 30:12). Strong's #7364: In the Bible, washing or bathing has important cultural and religious associations. The ancient custom of washing a guest's feet was an act of hospitality that lasted into NT period (Gen. 18:4; John 13:5). Ritual washing was an important step in the purification of the priests for service in the tabernacle (40:12). Washing with water symbolized spiritual cleansing, the preparation necessary for entering God's presence (Pss. 26:6; 73:13). The OT prophets continued to use this imagery of washing and applied it symbolically to the act of repentance (Is. 1:16; Ezek. 16:4). In the NT, Paul describes redemption in Christ as "the washing of regeneration" (Titus 3:5).

30:18 laver of bronze … its base: The shape of the laver is not specified, but it clearly had two parts, the laver itself and its base. Women provided the bronze mirrors that became the building materials for the laver (Ex. 38:8).

30:19–21 wash their hands and their feet: The constant need for cleansing the priests' hands is understandable. But the feet of the priests would also be readily soiled because they wore sandals. The continual washing was symbolic of the need to be cleansed from sin regularly. Lest they die emphasizes the seriousness of maintaining the priests' holiness before God (28:43).

30:22–25 The priests used the holy oil in rites of anointing (29:7). This costly and treasured mixture must have had an unforgettable, wonderful aroma. The holy anointing oil was declared holy because it was set aside for use only in religious rites specified by the law (vv. 32, 33). The perfumer, like his counterparts who worked with wood, fabric, and metal, was a highly skilled craftsman (v. 35).

30:26–29 Everything connected with divine worship had to be anointed with the special oils. In this way, the creations of the workmen became holy, set aside for special use in the worship of God.

30:30 Anointing initiated the priests into the privilege of God's service.

30:31–33 The oil was reserved exclusively for the consecration of the tabernacle and all its furnishings. Any other use would result in divine judgment. Cut off means put to death (Gen. 17:14).

Spices

Spices (Ex. 30:34) were important to trade and commerce. They were imported from Arabia and from as far away as India, which could be reached from Egypt by sea. Most spices came from plant products, such as gums and resins. Onycha (v. 34) was taken from a mollusk that lives in the Red Sea. Its exotic origins added to its perceived value.

30:34–38 As in the case of the anointing oil (vv. 22–25), the directions for making the incense are precise. The resulting mixture was a lavish, expensive, precious commodity.

30:36 before the testimony: A portion of the fragrant incense was to be taken into the Most Holy Place as a holy symbol for the people before the Lord.

30:37, 38 No incense was to be made for personal use nor was it to be used for any other purpose than that which God commanded. It shall be to you holy for the LORD was a succinct reminder of the importance of reserving holy things for worshiping God.

31:1–11 The importance of the tabernacle and its furnishings was such that the Lord sovereignly prepared gifted artisans to do the work of construction under the detailed instructions of Moses. Everything was to be done in accordance with the plan that the Lord had shown to Moses on the mountain (26:30).

31:2 called by name: The Lord now designated specifically the man who would be the principal artisan for the tabernacle. The name Bezalel (Heb. besalel) means "in the shadow of God." Hur, the grandfather of Bezalel, should not be confused with the more famous associate of Aaron and Moses (17:10; 24:14).

31:3–5 filled him with the Spirit of God: This wonderful phrase is indicative of the work of the Holy Spirit during OT times. We are familiar with the "filling of the Spirit" that came upon the disciples at Pentecost (Acts 2) and brought into being the new community of faith, the church. But we often neglect the work of the Spirit among the Israelites. Passages such as this one help us to see the continuity of God's work among His people through the ages. In this case, the Spirit empowered uniquely gifted people to design and build a tabernacle befitting a holy and magnificent God. The piling up of the words wisdom, understanding, knowledge, and all workmanship is similar to the seven-fold Spirit endowment of the coming King (Is. 11:2). It is done here to impress readers with the tremendous importance of the sheer artistry of the tabernacle, which demanded such gifted persons empowered uniquely by the Holy Spirit for their work (35:30, 31).

31:6 The name Aholiab, given to the principal assistant to Bezalel, means "Tent of the Father" (Heb. 'oholiab). It describes one who lives closely with God, the Father of His people (35:34; 36:1, 2; 38:23). The wisdom in the hearts was "the spirit of wisdom" spoken of in 28:3, or "the Spirit of God, in wisdom" of 31:3. Such wisdom was a divine gift that allowed these craftsmen to complete their holy work.

31:7–11 The bill of particulars is given concerning all the products that the two gifted men and their many associates were to produce. The wonderful thing to contemplate is that they were to do this work not only the basis of their own native talent (a gift from the Lord), but also by the indwelling presence of God's Spirit at work in them. Thus, the Spirit of God (v. 3) has concerns not only for the lives of people before the Lord, but also for the objects of holy worship of the living God. Craftsmen and craftswomen (35:25) were empowered by the Holy Spirit to produce the works commanded them by God.

31:12–18 This is one of the significant sections in Exodus that focuses on the meaning of Yahweh's covenant with Israel at Mount Sinai (19:5, 6; 24:1–8; 34:27, 28). The principal contribution of this section is on the role of the Sabbath as the special sign of the covenant.

31:13, 14 My Sabbaths reminds us that keeping the Sabbath is the Lord's idea, not a human invention. Such days of rest must be kept in righteousness before Him (Is. 1:10–15). a sign: a reminder, memorial, or symbol. The Sabbath distinguished Israel from its pagan neighbors, an idea reinforced by the last phrase, the LORD who sanctifies you. put to death: The Sabbath was not for casual recreation, but for worshiping God. Those who observed the Sabbath carelessly invited their own destruction.

31:15–17 Here the Sabbath is declared to be a sign between the Lord and Israel forever. The idea of Sabbath can be found in the pattern of six days of creation, followed by a seventh day of rest.

31:18 an end of speaking: This dramatic verse reminds the reader that the entire section beginning at 25:1 is a report of the divine encounter Moses experienced on the mountain (24:18; 25:1). When he returned to the people, he wrote down what he had seen and heard. The Spirit of God directed him to recall the amazing complex of details, ideas, and concepts of holy worship. The two tablets of Testimony, similar to ancient treaties, bore the Ten Commandments on each tablet. Both tablets were kept together before God in His holy tabernacle. The stone emphasized the permanence of the Word of God. The finger of God is a bold anthropomorphism (a quality of God expressed as a human characteristic) that underscores the divine origin of the Law. Scholars of religion have long spoken of Israel's religious ideas as its unique contribution to civilization, much as the Greeks developed philosophy and the Romans displayed a genius for organization and empire-building. Yet such a comparison misses the point of Scripture. The Bible speaks not of the genius of Israel, but of the finger of God. The Ten Commandments were not the product of man, but the revelation of the Lord.

32:1–35 The story of the Israelites' worship of the gold calf reveals both the unfaithfulness of the Israelites and God's great mercy. Even though the people had broken their promise to obey Him in such a short time, God forgives their sin and begins again with them.

32:1 This infamous story begins on a very human level. The people saw that Moses delayed coming down from the mountain: The extended absence of Moses (24:18) and the terrifying setting into which he had disappeared (24:9–17) led the people to think that he might never return. The people were the redeemed of Israel (ch. 12; 14:31), but in their discouragement they wandered to other gods. It is most shocking to discover the role that Aaron played in this debacle. It appears as though he also had given up hope for his brother's return. Moses was gone for forty days, yet we may conclude that the people ran out of patience before then. The preparation of the idol would have taken some time. make us gods that shall go before us: The people were asking not for the true God, but for other gods. This Moses is spoken of in scathing, sarcastic, and demeaning tones. What are we to make of this? Is it possible that the entire community had turned against Moses? Or is it possible that doubters and unbelievers in their midst took advantage of the situation to spread evil? We may also consider the possibility of spiritual warfare—that unseen and unrecognized forces worked to encourage evil among God's people. Stephen alluded to this event when he said that the fathers "turned back to Egypt" (Acts 7:39, 40).

32:2, 3 The golden earrings were part of the treasure from Egypt that should have been used for building the tabernacle (35:20–29).

32:4 A molded calf was an ominous worship symbol. Not only were the cow and the bull worshiped in Egypt, but the bull was a familiar embodiment of Baal seen in Canaan. This is your god can be rendered "these are your gods," suggesting that the worship of the Lord had been blended with the symbols of Baal and other fertility gods. Aaron thus had led the people in breaking the first three commandments: they had bowed to another god beside the Lord; they had made a graven image; and they used the Lord's name in false worship (v. 5). God had said repeatedly that it was He and only He who had brought the Israelites out of Egypt (Ex. 20:1, 2; 29:45, 46), an event they had all witnessed.

IN CONTEXT

"Divine" Calves, Cows, and Bulls

The stories of Aaron molding the golden calf (Ex. 32:1–4) and Jeroboam building golden calves for his new temples at Bethel and Dan (1 Kin. 12:28–31) are similar. For instance, both men broke God's commands soon after God had given the commands.

But why make calves? Cattle were common images for deities in that period. In Egypt, the popular goddess Hathor was represented as having various features of a cow, such as its horns and ears. Male deities in other cultures, such as Syria-Palestine and Babylon, were often depicted as having some cow features, usually horns. And Canaanite deities such as El and Baal are associated with bulls in the Ugaritic texts.

If the golden calf represents a Canaanite god, such worship was a blatant rejection of Israel's God.

32:5 a feast to the LORD: Apostasy blinds us to the fact that we have rejected God.

32:6 The worship expressed here involved sacrifices combined with possibly sexual acts of profane worship. The words and rose up to play suggest the latter idea. See 34:12–16 for an elaboration of such Canaanite practices that Israel was forbidden to follow.

32:7, 8 The Lord alerted Moses to the fact of Israel's sin. Have corrupted themselves: The Hebrew (shahat) means "to pervert," "to ruin." It is used also to describe the ruin of humankind that provoked the Flood (Gen. 6:12).

32:9 a stiff-necked people: This is the first occasion of this doleful phrase, which describes the stubbornness of the people who refused to follow the ways of God (Ex. 33:3, 5; 34:9; Deut. 9:6, 13; 10:16).

32:10 The words of God then turned very ominous. He threatened to destroy the nation entirely and begin anew with Moses (Num. 14:11, 12). This declaration prompted Moses to intercede on behalf of the people for God's mercy (vv. 11–13).

Watch Moses Grow

It's amazing that God offered to make a great nation of Moses and his descendants (Ex. 32:10). Failures and mistakes had plagued his life to that point. In fact, they would plague him again before his life was over. Perhaps God was merely testing His servant to find out what sort of man he really was.

Christians who have struggled with personal growth and spiritual development can take heart from a study of the life of Moses. He did not start out as a giant of the faith. Nor did he end his career in a blaze of glory. Nevertheless, God honored this man's lifelong quest for godliness. His life record shows a path like the ones to which all believers are called (Eph. 4:15; Col. 1:10; 2 Pet. 3:18).

32:11–13 Moses used three principal arguments in this great prayer to assuage the anger of the Lord. (1) The deliverance of Israel from Egypt was the work of the Lord. How could He abandon them now? (2) The Egyptians would hear of this judgment and would believe that they had triumphed after all. How could He destroy them now? (3) The covenant had been established long before by divine oath. How could He revoke this promise now? We see clearly Moses' own humility, his compassion for the Israelites, and his zeal for God's glory and honor.

32:14 so the Lord relented: Here is a wonderful example of the interaction of faithful intercessory prayer and the purpose of the Lord. God intended to spare Israel. But He drew Moses into the process by causing him to pray for the right outcome. He uses our prayer combined with His own determination to make His will come to pass.

32:15, 16 The two tablets of the Testimony are the tablets of the Ten Commandments (31:18).

32:17 It appears that Joshua had accompanied Moses on at least a part of the journey to Mount Sinai (24:13, 14). While Moses was alone with God, Joshua seems to have remained nearby. From his base, he was the first to hear the raucous worship of the golden calf and report that startling news to Moses.

32:18 Moses' response to the words of Joshua comes in a three-colon poem that is highly styled with twelve words (in Hebrew, perhaps reflective of the twelve tribes of Israel). In this poem, noise (twice) is also translated sound, and shout is also translated cry and sounds very much like the word translated singing. Moses knew that the sound of singing could only mean trouble. Since he had not left instructions on the worship of the Lord, the people must have been up to mischief with the worship of another god. How interesting, however, that the term singing was associated in Moses' mind with worship.

32:19, 20 In great rage, Moses destroyed the tablets. This gesture, highly symbolic, suggested that the law had been "broken" by the actions of the people. Then Moses destroyed the calf, finally making the people drink its residue mixed with water.

32:21–24 Moses then turned on Aaron, demanding to know how such wickedness had happened. Aaron's feeble response reminds us of Adam's weak reply to God in Gen. 3:12. Aaron passed the blame onto the people rather than admit his own complicity in this terrible sin.

32:25 Despite the return of Moses, some of the people were unrestrained, perhaps still conducting themselves in the unseemly behavior of worshipers of Baal (Num. 25).

32:26 whoever is on the Lord's side: The first to respond to Moses were men from the tribe of Levi, an act that drew them more fully into the Lord's service.

32:27, 28 Moses sent the Levites to kill the people engaged in evil (most likely sexual degeneracy, Num. 25). It was painful for a Levite to slay his brother … his companion … his neighbor. But the wicked, even if they were relatives, had to be destroyed lest the whole camp perish under God's judgment.

32:29 consecrate yourselves: The people needed to turn completely back to the living God in the hope that He would receive them in blessing again.

32:30, 31 The terrible sin of the people needed to be removed. Moses hoped to make atonement for the people.

32:32, 33 Blot me out of your book: This is the most touching moment in Moses' leadership of the Israelites. Like Paul many centuries later, he could almost wish himself to be cursed, if by being so he could secure the salvation of his people (Rom. 9:3). Moses' offer could not be accepted. But his selfless gesture also resembles the self-sacrifice of Jesus, which God accepted as the atonement for the sins of every generation of humanity (Mark 10:45). My book is the Book of Life (Ps. 87:6; Rev. 3:5).

32:34 God promises that His Angel (23:20–23) will still lead the people, but coupled with that promise is a solemn threat of punishment. The expression in the day may refer to the Day of the Lord, proclaimed by later prophets (Joel 2, Zeph. 1).

Pleading for Forgiveness

The incident with the golden calf brought the Israelites very close to being instantly consumed by the Lord's wrath. Only Moses' earnest intervention averted judgment (Ex. 32:31–35). This is one of numerous examples in Scripture of how important it is for sins to be brought before the Lord in order to seek His mercy and forgiveness.

32:35 It is not clear whether the Lord plagued the people after Moses' prayer or if this passage refers to the judgment God had already sent upon the people (vv. 26–28). It is possible that this refers both to the punishment of the Lord for this particular sin and to later plagues (punishments) that would befall the Israelites in the wilderness as they continued to disobey the Lord.

33:1–34:35 Following their debacle as described in ch. 32, God in great mercy renewed His commitment to His covenant with them. The principal issue in the Hebrew Bible is not the display of the wrath of God, as is so often supposed. It is His mercy that shines through the darkness of His people's disobedience, and it is His grace that overcomes the despair caused by the doubts of His people.

33:1 depart … go up: The time had come for the march into Canaan. Which I swore: For God's covenant with Abraham and Isaac, read Gen. 12:7; 15:13–21; 22:15–18.

33:2 And drive out is language similar to that used of the hornet(s) in Ex. 23:28.

33:3, 4 God announced that He would not go up among his people because they were stiff-necked. Thus the hope of reaching the Promised Land was darkened by God's withdrawal from their presence. This bad news, the command to move on without the presence of the Lord, was hardly a message that they wanted to hear.

33:5, 6 I could come suggested that the threat of judgment was still very real (32:35). The ornaments were associated with the idolatrous worship of the golden calf (32:2, 3). Their removal was a mark of genuine repentance and renewal.

33:7 his tent … the tabernacle of meeting: Moses moved his own tent outside the camp to symbolize the Lord's departure from His people. Moses called his tent the tabernacle of meeting, for here he met with the living God. The people who sought the LORD, that is, who needed a divine decision, would consult Moses at his tent far from the center of the camp.

33:8 all the people rose … stood: In contrast to their earlier wickedness, the people now responded reverently to the living God. Only Moses could approach God, but those who were nearby could respond from a distance in awe and worship.

33:9 This pillar of cloud is the same one that guided the Israelites out of Egypt (13:21, 22; 24:15, 16). Descended, stood and talked are verbs that indicate personality within the pillar.

33:10 saw … worshiped: The people could not approach the Lord as Moses did. Moses saw and spoke with the Lord as one would to a friend. From a distance, the people saw the pillar and recognized the presence of God, and they worshiped by bowing low to the ground. The text is careful to say that the people stayed off at some distance. Only Moses could come near the pillar, God's Presence.

33:11 the LORD: The identification of the pillar with the Lord is now unmistakable. His servant Joshua: Here we glimpse again (17:9; 24:13; 32:17) the bold man of God who would become Moses' successor. The word translated "servant" here does not mean slave, but rather a minister, one who does spiritual service.

33:12–33 Moses prays for an even closer experience with Yahweh. This section is in two units. (1) Moses demands the assurance of Yahweh's Presence with His people and with him personally (vv. 12–17). (2) Moses requests an unusually close encounter with the living God as a mark of His special relationship with His servant (vv. 18–23).

33:12 The message the Lord had given to Moses and the people, recorded at the beginning of the chapter (vv. 1–3), troubled Moses. Thus, he pressed the Lord to grant His presence in the adventure of faith that the people were to undertake. Whom you will send with me was Moses' indirect way of seeking assurance that the Lord Himself would accompany the people.

33:13 The words Your way refer in this context to the divine Presence among His people. Your people was Moses' reminder of God's promise that He would make the Israelites His people (6:1–8).

33:14–16 My Presence means literally in Hebrew "My Face." This extraordinary promise of God's Presence with His people was ultimately fulfilled in Jesus, God made man. Rest refers to the land of Canaan, when the conquest would be over and the land could be enjoyed by the Israelites. Moses even dared to say that the Presence of the Lord in the midst of His people was the only acceptable condition for further advance. Only the Lord's Presence would demonstrate to surrounding nations that Israel's deliverance was really the work of the true and merciful God.

33:17 God's grace was accompanied by his intimate knowledge of and care for Moses, represented in the expression I know you by name.

33:18 The word glory conveys the idea of weight, significance, and importance (16:7, 10; 24:16, 17; 40:34, 35). Here, astoundingly, Moses requested an even greater sense of God's Presence than up to then had been experienced by any person.

33:19 Amazingly, the Lord responded positively. My goodness speaks of the sense of the wonder of God, of His divine attributes, of His essential worth and majesty. Proclaim the name of the LORD: The name of God is the expression of His person, who He is. be gracious … have compassion: The Lord's sovereignty is paramount in His dealings with people. God can do anything He wants. Yet, in His mercy, He responded to Moses' plea. What a great gift this is: The Creator of the universe tenderly granting the audacious request of His servant (Ps. 40:1).

33:20 cannot see my face: We cannot begin to describe what Moses experienced in this dramatic encounter. God is Spirit (John 4:24). Any experience of the living God requires Him to enter our finite sphere of space and time. Whatever Moses experienced was only a glimpse of what is still to be experienced! Human language is simply too limited to express the mysteries these verses describe. "My face" was earlier translated "My Presence" (v. 14).

33:21 The place is generally assumed to be a cleft in the rock of Mount Sinai. How fitting that Moses would experience the Lord who is his Rock (Deut. 32:4) while standing on the rock.

33:22, 23 The use of words such as hand, back, and face is anthropomorphic, a way of describing God, who is Spirit, in terms familiar to humankind. The point of these verses is clear enough. Moses would see something wonderful, but not so much as would take his life. This great revelation is described in 34:5–.

The Glory of the Lord

God allowed Moses to experience something of His glory (Ex. 33:12–23). The Hebrew term most often translated “glory” (kabod) means “weight, importance, or significance” and does not connote something light and ephemeral as does the English “glory.” The word is sometimes applied to persons, indicating their excellence, or to things, describing their perfect functioning.

In Scripture, however, glory is most often used to indicate God’s presence and power (Deut. 5:24). Sometimes it occurs as a synonym of the Hebrew word qodesh, indicating holiness. Sometimes it is associated with fire, as when He revealed Himself on Sinai (Ex. 24:16, 17), or with cloud or smoke, as when the tabernacle was dedicated (Ex. 40:34) or when Isaiah had his vision (Is. 6:3, 4).

In these cases, the awful reality of God is being emphasized. Compared to this, humanity is but a wisp of smoke or a blade of grass. It is in this context that God’s determination to share His glory with us becomes the more astounding. In place of our frailty, He offers us His reality (John 1:14, 32, 34; Rom. 9:23; 2 Cor. 4:17).

34:1 The command to cut two tablets of stone is one of the great demonstrations of God's mercy. Despite the failure of the people at the very time that the Lord was instructing Moses on how they should worship, He was willing to begin again with them. Once more He would instruct them concerning His righteous ways.

34:2 The mercy of Yahweh is seen in His acquiescence to Moses' request for an even closer experience with the living God than he had ever had.

34:3, 4 As in the preparation of the people in ch. 19, the warning that no man shall come up with you was meant to protect the careless or the curious who would die if they trespassed on holy ground.

34:5 Like ch. 19, these verses describe an epiphany, the appearance of the Lord in His grand descent to encounter humans. As at other times (33:9–11) the people saw the cloud, which Moses knew as the visible symbol of the living God before him. The living God proclaimed His name to Moses by expressing His character, His awesome wonder, and His mercy.

34:6 The Hebrew verb translated passed (abar, "to cross over") is the same verb that describes Abram's journey through the land of Canaan (Gen. 12:6). The name Hebrew is probably derived from this verb. Here the word speaks of the "movement" of the Lord before Moses. As the Lord moved by Moses, He proclaimed the meaning of His name Yahweh (Ex. 3:14, 15), revealing His gracious character in an unforgettable manner. Indeed, this verse is the foundation for understanding the character of the Lord. The words merciful and gracious convey the idea of "overwhelmingly gracious." long-suffering: The idea of the Hebrew idiom is that God is very slow to anger. In our idiom, we would say He has "a very long fuse." The Hebrew word for goodness means "loyal love"; the word for truth means "faithfulness," "truth," and "constancy." When the Gospel of John introduces Jesus as the Word, there is celebration of the fact that He is "full of grace and truth" (John 1:14, 17). In this way John echoes the words of this passage. To see Jesus is to see the Father! (John 1:18).

“Goodness”

(Heb. chesed) (Ex. 15:13; 20:6; 34:6) Strong’s #2617: When God revealed Himself to Moses on Mount Sinai, He described Himself as overflowing with goodness. This is one of the most significant words that describes God’s character (Ps. 13:5). It is often translated as mercy (Ex. 20:6; Ps. 6:4) and sometimes as lovingkindness (Ps. 17:7). The basic meaning of the word is “loyal love” or “steadfast love.” It refers to God’s loyalty and faithfulness to His covenant. This love is very similar to marital love, a love that is obligatory because of the marriage contract, but still intimate and voluntary. Hosea’s actions toward his unfaithful wife are a striking picture of God’s “faithful love” for the people of Israel (Hos. 1:1–3, 2:19; 3:1–5). In the NT, this characteristic of God is described as His grace (Gk. charis; John 1:17).

34:7, 8 thousands … the third and the fourth: This phrase resembles the words of 20:5, 6, but the order is changed for emphasis here. The point is that God is more willing to show his mercy than His wrath. Yet His wrath is also real (32:34, 35; Ps. 90:11).

34:9 Go among us indicates that Moses was still praying for a reversal of God’s judgment announced in 33:1–3. The Lord responded to these pleasing words by restoring the covenant (vv. 10–28).

34:10, 11 I make a covenant: This verse introduces the renewal of covenant; the message is completed in vv. 27, 28. Concurrent with the announcement of the covenant is the promise that the people will experience an awesome thing (Heb. nora, from yare, a verb meaning “to fear”), namely the conquest of Canaan. The enormity of Israel’s refusal to obey God’s command and conquer the land (Num. 13; 14) is to be seen in the light of this extraordinary promise (Deut. 4:32–40).

34:12 covenant: Israel was forbidden to make treaties with nearby peoples. Instead, they were to destroy those nations, lest they be ruined by their perverted ideas and false religious affections. The next verses (vv. 13–26) repeat some of the salient features of the Lord’s covenant with Israel. We read these words with sadness in retrospect. They are the very commands Israel abandoned so quickly.

34:13 Pillars (Ex. 23:24) and wooden images were sexually centered images; the latter were representations of Asherah, the fertility goddess of the Canaanites. (Asherah was known to the Greeks as Astarte.)

INSIGHT

Forbidden Religious Objects

Altars, sacred pillars, and wooden images continually appear in the Bible as a group of banned religious objects (Ex. 34:13). All three were common in religions of Syria-Palestine, which included Canaan. Thus to allow these to remain would have breached the commands not to worship other gods (Ex. 20:30). Incorporating indigenous religious practices into the worship of God posed a continual danger. Only when devoted to God and restricted to certain locations were altars acceptable for Israel.

34:14 No other gods is a reiteration of the basic stipulation of the Ten Words (Ex. 20:3).

34:15 Unfortunately, the phrase to play the harlot was probably not just a figure of speech. Unfaithfulness to the Lord was often manifested in sexual rites with temple prostitutes (male and female), an act of supposed union with Baal, Asherah, and other pagan deities. To eat of his sacrifice alludes to the love feast that preceded the orgy, reminiscent of the episode with the golden calf (32:5, 6, 19, 25).

34:16 take of his daughters for your sons: God's prohibition against intermarriage was not a matter of prejudice. The influence of immoral religious practices was subtle, pervasive, and unrelenting. Intermarriage would be the quickest route to compromise with false religion and immoral behavior.

34:17 Israel had, in fact, already paid the price for fashioning molded gods.

34:18 The Feast of Unleavened Bread recalls the commands of Ex. 12:15–20; 23:15.

34:19, 20 The law of the firstborn is also found in Ex. 13:2; 22:29, 30.

34:21 The law of the Sabbath is repeated from Ex. 20:8–11; 31:12–18.

34:22–24 The commands of the three annual feasts are repeated from Ex. 23:14–17. Faithful participation in these feasts was linked to God's promise in v. 24 to preserve the people in the land.

34:25–27 In the Hebrew text, the grammar used in the command to Write these words has a strong personal directive (see notes at 17:14; 24:4). It might be paraphrased: "Write—that is you do it!" This is the covenant of Yahweh with Israel at Mount Sinai (sometimes called the Mosaic Covenant; see notes at 19:5, 6; 24:1–8; 31:12–18; 34:10). The writing of Moses here is a remarkable attestation of biblical truth.

34:28 The period of forty days and forty nights matched Moses' earlier pilgrimage to Sinai (24:18). bread … water: A person can survive without food for weeks. But no one can go without water for more than three or four days. If Moses drank no water for forty days, then we must view his continued existence as a miracle of the Lord. Is it possible that he was removed into a heavenly sphere for this long period of time? We simply do not know. We are confident that God was able to sustain His servant in any way He pleased! The Lord then wrote … the Ten Commandments, equated once again with the words of the covenant. The Writer was the Lord Himself (Ex. 31:18; 32:15, 16; 34:1, 4).

34:29–35 skin of his face shone: One of the Bible's most wonderful descriptions is that of Moses' shining face. His proximity to the Presence of God transformed his very appearance (2 Cor. 3:7–18).

34:30 The people were afraid to come near. With all they had seen and heard, they had reason to be cautious.

34:31, 32 Moses sought to allay their fear and to teach them the commandments the Lord had sent him to proclaim.

34:33–35 The veil Moses wore concealed the glow of his face. This supernatural glow was enhanced on each subsequent encounter with the Lord. Paul taught that Moses wore the veil because the glow faded, a sign of imperfect glory (2 Cor. 3:7, 13).

35:1—40:38 These chapters have little new material. They are highly repetitive of instructions concerning building the tabernacle, fashioning its furnishings, and fabricating the priests' garments for their holy service before the Lord. There is a sense of celebration in this recital. The importance of the tabernacle and all connected with it is made even stronger with these repeated instructions.

35:1–3 The principal teaching concerning the Sabbath is the fourth commandment (20:8–11), and this teaching is expanded in 31:12–18. Here is another repetition of the command for emphasis (34:21). To kindle … fire was considered a breach of the command. To some Jews today, turning on a light switch on the Sabbath is the equivalent of kindling a fire.

35:4–9 This section is based on the instructions of 25:1–8. Here we observe Moses doing as God commanded him when he was on the mountain of the Lord.

35:10–19 gifted artisans: The call now went out for artisans who would create the tabernacle furnishings and the garments for the priests, the details of which appeared in chs. 25—31.

35:20–29 The offerings for the tabernacle are perhaps the most impressive offering ever taken from God's people for any endeavor! The key was the stirring of the heart and the willingness of the spirit of those who gave. Both men and women gave. Even in this patriarchal time, women participated actively in God's work. All people came with gifts that were sumptuous, varied, and abundant. At last they had to be told to stop giving (36:2–7)!

35:25–30 women … gifted artisans: Here the artisans, usually referred to in the masculine (28:3), are distinctly identified as women.

35:31–33 filled him with the Spirit of God: See the parallel passage at 31:3. Compare the comments at 28:3. The special endowment of the Spirit of God in this artisan and in those who worked with him attested to the importance the Lord attached to the aesthetic beauty of the tabernacle. The preparations for building the tabernacle and later the temple foreshadowed the incarnation of the Savior. For it was both in the tabernacle and temple and in the Incarnation that "heaven came down," that God drew near to His people in saving wonder and divine fellowship.

35:34, 35 The ability to teach is similar to the gift of teaching mentioned by Paul (Rom. 12:7). The same Spirit was at work among His people in the OT period as in the NT.

36:1–7 What a problem! Has there ever been another time in history when God's people had to be restrained for giving too much? The pattern of the "cheerful giver" (2 Cor. 9:7) could have no better basis than here.

36:8 gifted artisans: This is a wonderful comment carried through from 35:30—36:4 (28:3; 31:6; 35:10, 25). The demands of God's design (ch. 26) called for careful, detailed, and artistic work. The skillful work was of high quality.

36:9–19 Here we read about the fashioning of the outer curtains (v. 14). See 26:7–14 for God's command concerning their design.

36:20–30 A discussion of the tabernacle frame. See 26:15–25 for its design.

36:31–34 The construction of the crossbars for the outer structure of the tabernacle. See 26:26–30 for the earlier instructions for their design.

36:35, 36 The description of the veil that divided the holy place and the Most Holy Place. See 26:31–35 for God's command concerning its design.

36:37, 38 The description of the screen for the door of the tabernacle. See 26:36, 37 for its design.

God's Spirit in the Workplace

God's Holy Spirit was actively involved with the workers as they built the tabernacle (Ex. 35:31–36:1). The Spirit was the source of the many skills and abilities required for the design and construction of the tabernacle —metalwork, jewelry making, carpentry, engraving, weaving, and other related talents. Notice some of the characteristics of these Spirit-led workers: • They were men and women (Ex. 35:20–22, 25).

• Their hearts were "willing" or "stirred" (35:5, 21, 22, 26), meaning that they were motivated to accomplish the task.

• They were skilled or "gifted" by God to carry out their various assignments (35:10, 25, 34, 35; 36:1, 2).

• They were generous with their skills, as well as their possessions, in order to get the job done (35:5, 22, 29; 36:3–7), which suggests that they were hard and loyal workers.

37:1–9 This section describes how Bezalel (31:2) constructed the holy ark, including the mercy seat and the cherubs, following the pattern that the Lord gave to Moses on the mountain (25:10–22). This text follows the earlier passage in every particular concerning its actual construction. The only detail not repeated here is the instruction to put the Testimony in the ark and the mercy seat on top (25:21). This is found again in 40:20.

37:10–16 The construction of the table for the showbread. This section corresponds in every detail to the instructions given to Moses by the Lord in 25:23–30. The only aspect not repeated here from the earlier text is the instruction to place the showbread on the table (40:4, 22, 23).

37:17–29 The creation of the golden lampstand. Again, this section corresponds in every detail to the instructions given to Moses in 25:31–40. The earlier text contains instruction for lighting the lamps, which Moses did when everything was completed (40:4, 25).

38:1–7 The construction of the altar of burnt offering. The corresponding instructions are found in 27:1–19. The details from the preceding section are presented again to demonstrate that all was done as the Lord had commanded. Throughout these sections, the pronoun he (v. 1) refers to Bezalel (37:1; compare 35:30–34), who was working according to the commands that the Lord had given Moses. Bezalel was the overseer. He would have had many artisans working under his leadership (36:8).

38:8 The crafting of the bronze laver. For the corresponding instructions, read 30:17–21.

38:9–23 The building of the court of the tabernacle. For the corresponding instructions, read 27:9–19.

38:24 The weight of all the gold used in the work may have been about a ton. The talent weighed about seventy pounds and equaled 3,000 shekels.

38:25 all the silver: The quantity of silver was simply enormous, about 7,000 pounds.

38:26 A bekah (half-shekel) of silver, required of each man over the age of twenty, came from 603,550 people, which corresponds with other estimates of the Exodus community (Num. 1). The number may be literal, but some contend that it is far too large for the time and the events of the Exodus.

38:27, 28 Enormous amounts of silver appeared in the most mundane elements of the tabernacle and its furnishings. Although the tabernacle was a tent, it was not a makeshift dwelling. It was a glorious shrine that symbolized the presence of the living God in the midst of His people.

38:29–31 The weight of the bronze was about 5,000 pounds.

39:1 This verse is a summary statement that confirms the completion of the priests' garments first described in 28:1–4.

39:2–7 This section details the crafting of Aaron's ephod, according to the explicit instructions given to Moses in 28:5–14.

INSIGHT

The Use of Gold

Gold is the most malleable and ductile of metals. It can be hammered into very thin sheets (Ex. 39:3), thinner than a piece of paper. It can therefore be easily worked into different shapes, and it does not corrode. These characteristics help account for its value.

39:8–21 Here we read about the breastplate, made according to the directions spelled out in 28:15–30. The only detail not repeated is the placement of the Urim and the Thummim within the breastplate (28:30). This is reported in Lev. 8:8.

39:22–26 The fashioning of the robe is described, following the divine commands given to Moses in 28:31–35.

39:27–29 The fashioning of the tunics, the turban, and the sash follow the commands given in 28:39. short trousers: These were provided for the priests for modesty as they ascended the steps (see the command in 28:42).

39:30, 31 The fashioning of the plate that was attached to the turban of the high priest followed precisely the commands that the Lord had given to Moses (28:36–38).

39:32–43 These verses list all the work that God had commanded through Moses. It was now completed. A mood of celebration pervades these verses. One can sense the pride of accomplishment coupled with the reverence for all of these holy objects.

39:42 according to all that LORD had commanded: The constant stress throughout these chapters is for Israel to construct the tabernacle and all of its furnishings in compliance with divine command. These projects would only have significance in their holy worship of God if they were done just as He had commanded.

39:43 The words Moses looked suggest that Moses conducted a final inspection. He was satisfied that everything was finished according to the pattern he had seen on the mountain. Then Moses blessed them, a magnanimous gesture of approval for the work accomplished.

40:1, 2 This first month was the month Abib, also called Nisan (Ex. 12:2; 13:4). The tabernacle was completed nine months after the arrival of the people at Mount Sinai (Ex. 19:1) and two weeks before the second celebration of the Passover (v.17).

"Tabernacle"

(Heb. mishkan) (Ex. 25:9; 26:1; 40:2). Strong's #4908: The word tabernacle signifies "a dwelling place" and is related to the verb meaning "to dwell," "to settle down," and "to live among" (Ex. 29:45; Gen. 14:13). In Exodus, the tabernacle is a temporary place to live—a tent (Song 1:8). God's tent, the tabernacle, functioned as an object lesson in God's holiness and a symbol of His divine presence among His people (Ex. 33:7–11). It was a sign that God wanted to live among His people and establish an intimate relationship with them (Ex. 5:8, 9). The ultimate outworking of that desire was that Jesus Christ, who was Himself God, became a man. As the Son of God, Jesus lived among us, walked with us, and revealed God the Father to us (John 1:14–18). This is why His name is Immanuel, meaning "God with us" (Matt. 1:23).

40:3–8 Moses now directed the placement of furnishings in the tabernacle, including the ark, the table of showbread, the altar for the incense, the altar of the burnt offering, the laver, and the court along with appropriate screens. The lamps were to be lit and water was to be placed in the laver. See ch. 25 for a list of the furnishings.

40:9–11 Following the placement of the furnishings, the Lord instructed Moses to anoint everything in the tabernacle so that it would be holy (separated to the Lord). For the anointing, Moses would have used the special olive oil that was mixed with spices (30:22–33). The altar shall be most holy, in Hebrew, is a superlative (qodesh qodashim) literally meaning "holy of holies."

40:12–15 The Lord's next command to Moses was to prepare the priests for their holy service. These verses recall the extensive commands in ch. 29. wash them: The priests had to be clean before they were dressed in their holy garments (see the description at 28:1–4). Moses, acting as God's representative, was then to anoint them as he had anointed the furnishings. The family of Aaron was to have an everlasting priesthood. The same declaration also appears in ch. 29 (28:1).

40:16–19 Moses scrupulously obeyed every detail of God's commands (Ex. 7:10). Since Israel's welfare depended on the obedience of its leaders, Moses' faithfulness allowed untold blessings to follow God's wandering people. as the LORD commanded Moses: The repetition of this phrase emphasizes that Moses precisely obeyed God.

Excellence Starts at the Top

Moses set an excellent example for his workforce by doing his own job "according to all that the Lord had commanded him" (Ex. 40:16). That kind of precision set the pace for everyone else and reaped invaluable rewards. The management team and the workers under them all carried out their tasks as the Lord wanted (Ex. 35:30–35; 36:1; 39:1–43).

40:20, 21 The Testimony is the stone tablets of the Ten Commandments (25:16). The mercy seat on top of the ark: See the description in 25:17–22.

40:22, 23 the table … the bread: See the description in 25:23–30.

40:24, 25 the lampstand … lamps: See the description in 25:31–40; 27:20, 21.

40:26, 27 the gold altar: See the description in 30:1–10. incense: See the description in 30:34–38.

40:28 the screen: See the description in 26:36, 37.

40:29 the altar of burnt offering: See the description in 27:1–8.

40:30–32 the laver (v. 30): See the description in 30:17–21.

40:33 the court: See the description in 27:9–19.

A model of the tabernacle, constructed in the wilderness at God's command. After its completion, it was filled with God's glory and covered by a cloud, signifying God's presence (Ex. 40:34, 35).

40:34 cloud … glory: When everything the Lord had commanded had been completed, He came near in an epiphany, a dramatic descent that manifested His glory among His people (19:20; 34:5). When the Lord came near in the event described at 19:20, the people were terrified. But in His coming near the tabernacle described here, the people were overjoyed. This was not a descent in judgment, but in mercy. The glory of the LORD filling the tabernacle demonstrated His Presence with the Israelites, His significance to them, and His awe-inspiring wonder. The words of John 1:1–18 are appropriate to recall here. In the Incarnation, the glory of God was manifest not in a tent, but in His Son.

40:35 Although Moses had been intimately involved in preparing the tabernacle, its completion meant that the glory of the Lord was present and that even Moses could not enter it. The cloud rested speaks of God living among His people (John 1:14). Throughout this section we encounter two attributes of God. One is His great grace and tender mercy. The King of glory was in the midst of His people! The second is His indescribable holiness. The Lord filled the tent and no one could draw near!

40:36, 37 the cloud: The glory of the Lord, which now was among His people also directed the Israelites' movement (Ex. 13:21, 22; Num. 9:15–23). The appearance of His glory is sometimes called the Shekinah or the Shekinah glory, from the Hebrew for "to dwell."

40:38 the cloud of the Lord: How wonderful that the Book of Exodus concludes with this image of the gracious God, hovering protectively over His people. Christians today emphasize the indwelling presence of the Holy Spirit in their lives (Acts 2). But God was also present with His people before Jesus came. A faithful Israelite follower of God could see the tabernacle and realize that God was there in His splendor and power. And with Him the people advanced to Canaan, the land He had promised to them.

The Third Book of Moses Called Leviticus

GOD'S CONCERN FOR HIS PEOPLE AND HIS DESIRE for fellowship with them becomes more and more clear to anyone who reads carefully through the Book of Leviticus. Every detailed regulation recorded in Leviticus is a revelation from God through Moses for His people. With these laws, God personally instructed the Israelites how to live before Him. Christian readers sometimes get lost in all the regulations governing various types of sacrifices, what was clean or unclean, who was eligible to be a priest, and so on. However, when these details are placed within the context of God's desire to have fellowship with the Israelites and live with them, the seemingly "dead" Law takes on a new life.

The name of the book is derived from the name of the tribe of Levi, the tribe that supplied the priests for Israel. Leviticus addresses many of the activities of the priests. It gives extensive instructions for the sacrificial system that atoned for both ceremonial and moral impurity. Yet Leviticus is not merely a manual for priests. It was intended for the entire Israelite community, with at least two purposes: (1) that people would know and value their privileges and responsibilities before God; and (2) that priests could not gain oppressive power over the people with any monopoly on the knowledge of how to approach God.

The purpose of Leviticus was to show the Israelites how they could live in ritual and moral purity. When they maintained their purity, God could live among them and they could approach Him in worship. Many of the required sacrifices described in Leviticus were for the atonement of sins. On the other hand, the voluntary sacrifices brought the people to fellowship and feast with God, their family, and others.

The instructions in Leviticus were not given to the Israelites in order to help them achieve their own salvation. Salvation can never be earned. It is always a gift of God's grace appropriated by faith. These instructions were given to a redeemed nation so that its members would know how to maintain their fellowship with God.

The distinctions between clean and unclean and the various laws for holy living promoted the Israelites' own welfare and marked them out as a people separated to God. Israel's witness to God's holiness and their visible well-being as a result of holy living before Him would vividly demonstrate to their neighbors God's power and His care for His people. The directive found first in Leviticus 11:44 and many times afterward clearly expresses this purpose for the laws: "You shall be holy, for I am holy." Holiness must be maintained before God, and holiness can only be attained through a proper atonement. Rightly seen, these concepts, sacrifices, and regulations picture in many ways the person and work of our Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ.

Modern Christians can learn much from Leviticus. The holiness of God, the necessity of holy living, the great cost of atonement and forgiveness, the privilege and responsibility of presenting only our best to God, the generosity of God that enables His people to be generous—these are only some of the lessons. Leviticus reveals the holiness of God and His love for His people in ways found nowhere else in the Bible. Ultimately, Leviticus calls God's people of all ages to the great adventure of patterning life after God's holy purposes.

Jewish and Christian tradition has regarded Moses as the author of Leviticus. After delivering Israel out of Egypt, God revealed His covenant to Moses at Mount Sinai. When God entered into a covenant with the Israelites, He transformed them from a band of refugee slaves into a nation. Leviticus records a large part of that covenant. If Moses or a scribe acting as his secretary wrote down the revelation as God gave it, Leviticus was composed shortly after 1440 B.C. or shortly after 1290 B.C., depending on the date assigned to the Exodus.

Critical biblical scholarship of the late nineteenth century challenged the traditional dating and authorship of Leviticus. According to that scholarship, which is still influential today, Leviticus was written much later, during the post-exilic period. This would be a date after 530 B.C. During the past century, however, our understanding of the history, languages, cultures, and religions of the ancient Middle East including Israel has advanced greatly. Many of the premises on which the late dating of Leviticus was based have been shown to be unreliable.

Although Leviticus does not itself claim to be written by Moses, twenty of the twenty-seven chapters begin, "And the LORD spoke to Moses," or a variation of that statement. The phrase occurs fourteen other places in the book as well. The intent is that this is the word of God given through Moses at Mount Sinai. As with the rest of the Pentateuch, later editorial activity may have occurred. The material could have been arranged by someone other than Moses, though Moses certainly was as capable of its arrangement as anyone. The important point is that Leviticus is what it says it is, a series of revelations from God about how God's people may approach Him through sacrifice and honor Him in holy living.

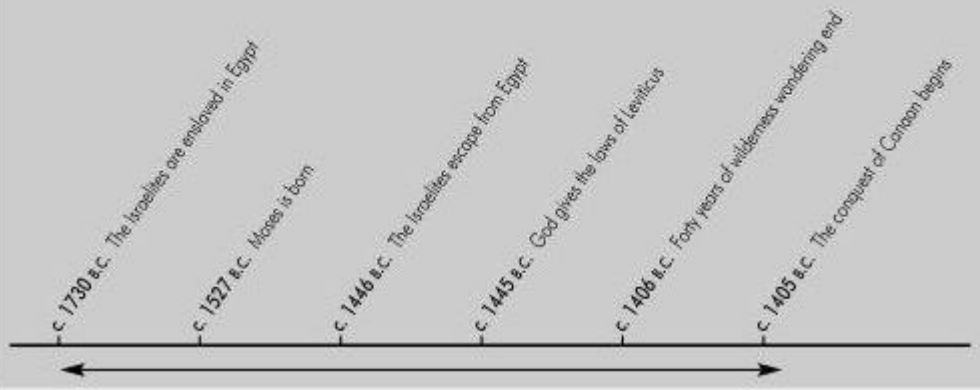
IN TIME

The Time of Leviticus



Outline

I. The system of sacrifices (1:1—7:38)
A. The burnt offering (1:1–17)
B. The grain offering (2:1–16)
C. The peace offering (3:1–17)
D. The sin offering (4:1—5:13)
E. The trespass or reparation offering (5:14—6:7)
F. Instructions about offerings (6:8—7:38)
II. Ordination of priests (8:1—10:20)
A. Ordination of Aaron as high priest and his sons as priests (8:1–36)
B. First sacrifices of the newly ordained priests (9:1–24)
C. The sin of Nadab and Abihu and consequent regulations for the priests (10:1–20)
III. Laws concerning what is clean or unclean (11:1—15:33)
A. Clean and unclean animals (11:1–47)
B. Purification following childbirth (12:1–8)
C. Uncleanness from skin diseases and uncleanness in garments (13:1–59)
D. Purification following skin diseases and purification of dwellings (14:1–57)
E. Uncleanness from bodily discharges (15:1–33)
IV. The Day of Atonement: purification from moral uncleanness (16:1–34)
V. The Holiness Code: laws for holy living (17:1—26:46)
A. Killing animals for food (17:1–16)
B. Purity n sexual relations and various life situations (18:1—19:37)
C. Penalties for violations (20:1–27)
D. Purity and wholeness in the lives of the priests and in sacrificial animals (21:1—22:33)
E. The seven holy convocations (23:1–44)
F. Pure oil and holy bread (24:1–9)
G. Punishment for blasphemy (24:10–23)
H. The Sabbath year, the Year of Jubilee, and redemption (25:1–55)
I. Blessings for obedience and curses for disobedience (26:1–46)
VI. Appendix: The redemption of gifts and tithes (27:1–34)

Commentary

1:1 Now connects Leviticus with Exodus. The last sections of Exodus describe the building of the tabernacle, the design of the priests' garments, and the coming of God's glory to dwell in the tabernacle. God was now ready to instruct Moses on how the Israelites should approach Him in the earthly dwelling they had built for Him. the LORD called to Moses, and spoke: This "call" is repeated dozens of times in Leviticus. The last verse, 27:34, restates the theme, "These are the commandments which the LORD { Yahweh} commanded Moses." Only two short narrative sections, 8:4—10:20 and 24:10–23, vary from this pattern, and even they both include directions from God on dealing with the situations they present. From first verse to last, therefore, the Book of Leviticus declares its divine origin. Nearly every word of the book is presented as a word from God, which Moses relayed to the people (Ex. 4:12). Moses had not created these instructions. They came from God, through Moses, God's prophet (Deut. 34:10). The tabernacle of meeting was the center of Israel's public worship until Solomon's temple was built in Jerusalem centuries later. The tabernacle's plan is revealed in Ex. 25—30 and its construction is described in Ex. 36—39.

"Offering"

(Heb. qorban) (Lev. 1:2; 2:1; Ezek. 20:28) Strong's #7133: This Hebrew word is derived from the verb "to bring near," and it literally means "that which one brings near to God." The fact that the Israelites had such an opportunity to present their gifts to God reveals His mercy. Even though they were sinful and rebellious, God instituted a sacrificial system in which they could reconcile themselves to Him. Jesus' death on the Cross was the ultimate offering, the offering that ended the need for any others. For through the sacrifice of His sinless life, we have once for all been reconciled to God (Heb. 10:10–18). An appropriate response to Jesus' death for us is to offer our lives as living sacrifices to God (Rom. 12:1).

1:2 The children of Israel means "the people of Israel." Now that God had entered into covenant with them, Israel was a people and no longer just a band of refugees (Ex. 6:2–8). Most of the occasions when God spoke to Moses (1:1), He directed Moses to deliver the instructions to all the people. Even when the word was just for Aaron, or just for the priests, it was delivered publicly. This was an important safeguard against the priests gaining control over the people by a monopoly of knowledge on the rituals of worship. An informed laity could check the priests, making sure they were performing the rituals correctly and were not enriching themselves unethically through improper appropriation of the sacrifices. An informed laity could not be intimidated through threats of excommunication or of God's wrath if they did not do as the priests said. History abundantly illustrates the abuses of priestly classes holding a monopoly of esoteric religious and ritualistic knowledge and using that knowledge to oppress and exploit people. Priestly duties and privileges in other cultures in the ancient Near East were closely guarded secrets, passed along hereditary lines within elite guilds. It was by their secret crafts that the priests of these other peoples could maintain their power. Israel was distinct from all these nations, as is her God distinct from all their gods. any one: This is a general term (Heb. dm; compare adam, "man") and specifically includes women. The term can refer to those who are not descendants of Abraham. Any person may come to faith in God and worship with God's people (Num. 15:14, 16, 29).

1:3 The burnt sacrifice (Heb. ola, meaning “rising up”) was the only sacrifice that was entirely consumed on the altar. It foreshadows the total sacrifice of Christ on the Cross. It also symbolizes that the worshiper must hold nothing in reserve when coming to God; everything is consumed in the relationship between God and the sincere worshiper. male without blemish: The use of males for sacrifice did not threaten the Israelites’ flocks and herds, which required no more than one male to every five females to continue breeding. Still, a male without blemish was of great value to the worshiper. It would have been prime breeding stock and was a potential source of wool and meat, or of money if sold. To offer it on the altar was a real sacrifice. The principle still holds: God’s people are to offer their best as a symbol that they are offering all that is theirs. A person should offer of his own free will. True sacrifice to the Lord is to be done with an attitude of joy—no half-hearted obedience. door of the tabernacle: A person’s sins had to be atoned for before he or she could come before God. before the LORD: God was present everywhere, but His presence was felt in an unusual manner at the site of His holy worship.

1:4 Each worshiper brought his or her own offering and then placed his or her own hand on the animal’s head. No one could send another person to offer sacrifices for his or her own sins. By the same token, no one today can send someone else to accept the atonement that Jesus Christ purchased with His sacrifice on Calvary. This key idea (from the Heb. verb kaphar, “to wipe clean,” “to ransom”) has the meaning here, “to expiate.” The life of the sacrificial animal, substituted for the life of the offender, expiated the offender’s sin, thus averting God’s wrath.

Taking Sin Seriously

The ancient Israelites took sin far more seriously that many people today do. Consider the impact of carrying out the instructions given for burnt-offering sacrifices (Lev. 1:3–5): • The psychological impact. If you were a Hebrew at the time of Moses, you had to do the killing of your animal sacrifice. You had to place your hand on the animal's head as you slit its throat and felt its life drain away, all the while knowing that the animal was symbolically dying in your place.

• The financial impact. The required sacrifice for the burnt offering was a bull, which was to be among the best of your herd. No doubt you had other animals for food and trade. Still, no rancher likes to lose even one animal, particularly a prize bull. So the sacrifice involved a financial burden, a tangible reminder of the penalty of sin. Even those who could not afford bulls had to make sacrifices in line with their means (Lev. 1:10, 14; 5:7, 8).

• The social impact. As you slaughtered your animal, you were accompanied by other worshipers slaughtering their animals. As you listened to the death cries of cattle, sheep, and birds, you realized that every person around you—your relatives, your neighbors, even your leaders—were sinners who needed God's forgiveness.

• The spiritual impact. Overall, the sacrificial system reminded you that sin stood between you and God, and that the penalty for sin was death. You were also reminded of God's mercy, in that He accepted the death of an animal instead of your own death.

In short, regular animal sacrifices made it difficult to regard sin lightly. We do well to remember the ultimate substitutionary sacrifice that the animals' deaths represented, one far more precious, the very body and blood of Jesus Christ.

1:5–9 This section details the procedures when the sacrifice was a bull. Both the worshiper and the priests had several tasks. The worshiper killed the sacrifice; the priests collected the blood and sprinkled it on the altar. The worshiper skinned and cut up the sacrifice; the priests laid the wood and the cleaner parts of the sacrifice upon the altar. The worshiper washed the entrails and the legs; the priests burned the entire sacrifice. True worship is active; the worshiper cannot be a passive observer. One of the terms for "worship" in the Hebrew Bible is drawn from the verb meaning "to serve" (Heb. abad). This is appropriate because a great deal of the procedures of biblical worship were actions of strong exertion and involvement.

1:5–8 the priests, Aaron's sons: Aaron was Moses' older brother and the one whom God had designated to be high priest of Israel (Ex. 28:1). Aaron's sons were Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar. They and their descendants would be priests in the tabernacle. For details concerning Nadab and Abihu's untimely end, read ch. 10. sprinkle the blood: The blood, the bearer of life, was the most important part of the sacrifice. The lifeblood of the sacrificial animal on the altar substituted for the life of the guilty worshiper.

1:9 sweet aroma to the LORD: Never, in this image or elsewhere, does Scripture represent God as eating the offerings brought to Him, as the pagan gods were thought to do. When sacrifice was done in faith and with a free will (v. 3), it was accepted by the Lord as desirable or "sweet." The same is true of the death of His Son. Because the death of Jesus provided our salvation, Isaiah said, "It pleased the LORD to bruise Him" (Is. 53:10).

1:10–13 The procedure for the burnt offering was the same when the animal was a sheep or a goat (Ex. 12:5).

1:14–17 While the richest Israelites offered bulls, most of the people offered sheep or goats. The poorest were allowed to bring turtledoves or young pigeons. All sacrifices required the active participation of the worshiper. The Israelite who brought a pair of birds was required to help prepare them for the altar. The different offerings were accepted by God without prejudice or favoritism. Economic standing is not a measure of acceptability before God (James 2:1–9).

2:1–16 This chapter outlines the procedures for the grain offering and what could and could not be included. The offerings from livestock emphasized the aspect of substitution in Israel's sacrificial worship, the life of the animal for the life of the worshiper. The grain offering emphasized Israel's dependence upon God for daily existence; bread was, then as now, the "staff of life." To present an offering from the most important daily food was to thank God for providing that food; it also was to declare one's trust that He would continue to provide it.

2:1 Anyone (Heb. nephesh, often translated "soul") is an inclusive term emphasizing that male or female, native Israelite or convert, could come to God with an offering (1:2). Fine flour was from the best grain and was free from impurities. This flour was fit for the king's table (1 Kin. 4:22; Ezek. 16:13) and was served to honored guests (Gen. 18:6). As with animal sacrifices, the offering was to be from the best the worshiper had. Olive oil, an important product of the Promised Land, was a primary part of the diet and a prominent symbol of blessing and prosperity, not just in Israel but around the Mediterranean. Frankincense was a costly incense from South Arabia and East Africa. Both its fragrance and value enhanced the grain offering. As an imported luxury, frankincense had to be bought with money. By including frankincense in this offering, every aspect of an Israelite's wealth was made a part of what he or she offered to God.

(Heb. azkarah) (Lev. 2:2, 9, 16; Num. 5:26) Strong’s #234: A memorial portion of a grain offering was a small portion burnt on the altar in place of the whole amount. The rest was a gift to the priest, to support him in his ministry. The word for memorial portion is related to the Hebrew verb zakar, which means “to remember.” It signifies the worshiper’s remembering of God’s gracious character and generosity, especially God’s remembering and blessing of the worshiper.

2:2 The handful of the offering burned on the altar included all the frankincense. This helped to make the offering a sweet aroma to the LORD.

2:3 Aaron’s and his sons’: A significant portion of the priests’ daily food came from this part of the grain offering. most holy: Only the consecrated priests were allowed to eat the offerings, and only within the tabernacle (6:16). What is holy must be used in a holy place, by holy people, in a holy manner.

2:4–7 These verses list three types of cooked grain offerings: (1) bread baked in the oven; (2) cakes baked or fried in a pan—that is, on a flat plate or griddle; and (3) cakes baked in a covered pan. All were made of fine flour mixed with oil. Since most of these offerings were eaten by the priests, frankincense was left out of them. Frankincense would have permeated a cake if baked into it.

2:8–10 The priests’ presentation of these cooked grain offerings on the altar was essentially the same as for the uncooked grain offerings.

2:9 The term memorial portion (Heb. azkaratah, from the verb zakar, “to remember”) occurs three times in the descriptions of the cereal offerings (2:2, 9, 16). It may well signify both the worshiper’s remembering of God’s gracious character and gracious acts toward the worshiper and God’s remembering and blessing of the worshiper, for which he or she prayed in the act of offering.

2:10, 11 Prohibiting leaven in grain offerings that were burned on the altar might have been based on the same principle that prohibited eating the blood of animals. As blood is the life force of animals, leaven represents the life force of the vegetable kingdom. It is also possible that leaven and honey were both prohibited because they cause fermentation, which represents corruption.

2:12 A separate offering of the firstfruits of the harvest is described later (23:9–21).

2:13 The salt of the covenant of your God was to be used in every grain offering. (Salt as a symbol of covenant was also known among the Greeks and the Arabs.) Every such offering was a reminder of the covenant God had made with Israel at Sinai and of the worshiper's obligation and privilege to remain faithful to God and God's covenant. Jesus may have had covenant faithfulness in mind when He told His followers, "You are the salt of the earth" (Matt. 5:13).

2:14–16 This grain offering was prepared and presented at the altar in the same way as those already described. As they had to be prepared from fine flour, so this one had to be prepared from the first of the year's grain harvest. The principle was reaffirmed: only the best of a person's resources is good enough to offer to God.

3:1–7 When sin had been atoned with the burnt offering, it was appropriate to bring the peace offering. After this sacrifice, the meat was returned to the worshiper and his family to be eaten as a festive meal. Birds were not among the species listed for the peace offering because they would not supply sufficient meat for such a meal. Also, that special provision for the poor was unnecessary, since this was a voluntary offering. The procedures for offering the sacrifice were the same, whether it was from the cattle, the sheep, or the goats. However, the chapter reviews the procedures for each separately, so it is essentially three repetitions of the same instructions, with minor variations.

3:1 peace offering: The Hebrew word for peace (shalo&$198;m) means "wholeness, completeness, soundness, health." When a person has this, in all its dimensions, that person is at peace. The peace offerings were times of feasting, drinking, talking, singing, and enjoying salvation as a great gift from God (7:11–21). Paul describes Jesus Christ as our perfect peace offering (Col. 1:20). Unlike the burnt sacrifice, the peace offering could be either male or female. Like the burnt sacrifice, it had to be without blemish because it was offered before the LORD.

3:2 As with the burnt sacrifice, the presenter was an active participant in the peace offering (vv. 8, 13). He brought the animal, laid his hand on its head, and killed it. Then the priests sprinkled the blood all around on the altar. The blood, representing life, was the first sacrifice to God.

3:3, 4 The fat, the two kidneys, and the fatty lobe attached to the liver (vv. 9, 10, 14, 15) specifically belonged to God. The fat was the most prized portion of the meat. The kidneys were viewed as the seat of the emotions. The liver was the essential organ for telling the future in the pagan cultures surrounding Israel (Ezek. 21:21); such fortune-telling was strictly forbidden in Israel (Deut. 18:10). These portions, burned on the altar, were given to God as the best of the sacrificial animal. In addition, the offering of the fatty lobe attached to the liver demonstrated reliance on God for the future rather than on pagan gods. Burning the liver, or even a portion of it, meant that it could not be used for fortune-telling.

3:5, 6 Upon the burnt sacrifice indicates that the peace offering normally followed the burnt offering, which was entirely consumed on the altar. Being reconciled to God through the burnt offering, the worshiper was in a position to fellowship with God and with his or her family by sharing in the feast of the peace offering. Repentance and reconciliation must come before genuine fellowship.

3:7 before the LORD: Not a redundancy, but a reminder of the Lamb of God and that all offerings are offered before God (1:3).

3:8, 9 the whole fat tail: The tail of the Palestinian broad-tailed sheep is almost entirely fat and can weigh more than 16 pounds. This explains its special mention in the regulations for offering the fat of the sheep.

3:10, 11 The mention of food does not mean that God desired, needed, or ate the sacrifice, as the pagan gods were thought to do.

3:12–15 In the regulations for offering a goat, the animal's sex is not mentioned as it is in the regulations for cattle and sheep. Otherwise, the regulations for the sacrifice of a goat are the same as those for the sacrifice of a sheep.

3:16 All the fat is the LORD's is a reminder that our gifts to God must be from the best that we have.

3:17 perpetual … dwellings: Some regulations in the Law of Moses could be observed only in the land that God was giving the Israelites. However, this prohibition of eating fat or blood applied wherever an Israelite might live. There were no exceptions. These sacrificial regulations consistently emphasize the theme of only the best for God. As it was in ancient Israel, so it is today. Only our best is good enough to give to God. The prohibition of blood is explained in 17:11–14. It is worth noting that this prohibition was laid on Noah as well (Gen. 9:4). The prohibition here in 3:17 was for the Hebrew people as a part of God's plan in making them distinct from the nations.

4:1—5:13 These are the offerings for purification from unintentional sin. Not only the purification of the sinner is in view here but also the purity of the tabernacle because of pollution from people's sin. The sin, or purification, offering was prescribed according to the position of the person(s) committing the offense. The sin of the high priest, or of the entire congregation, polluted more deeply, requiring a more serious remedy. A ruler of the people, likewise, incurred more serious pollution than an ordinary citizen, so the remedy was more radical. The same principle holds today; the more prominent and influential the sinner, the more widely harmful the sin.

4:1, 2 sins unintentionally: Sin that occurred without the sinner realizing it still offended the holiness of God and polluted His earthly dwelling place, just as clothing may be soiled without the wearer knowing it. To be used again, both the clothing and the tabernacle required cleansing.

4:3 anointed priest: Since the high priest represented the people before God, his sin brought guilt on the people. Until the sin was atoned for, the priest could not come before God, and the people's most important intermediary with God was set aside. A young bull was the most expensive sacrifice required for the purification offering, reflecting the importance of the high priest's office.

4:4, 5 The steps in offering different animals were similar, with small but important variations (vv. 14, 15, 22–24, 27–29, 33). Whether it was the bull for the anointed priest or the whole congregation, the male kid for the ruler, or the female kid or lamb for the common person, the worshiper brought the animal, laid a hand on its head, and killed it. These actions emphasized that the offering was to atone for the worshiper's sin. The most elaborate ritual was the blood ritual for the anointed priest. He himself did this, for there was no one higher to represent him before God. Since only the High Priest was allowed to enter the Most Holy Place, his was the only individual sin to pollute it.

“blood”

(Heb. dam) (Lev. 3:2; 4:5; Ex. 12:13; Is. 1:11). Strong’s #1818: This word is related to the Hebrew word adom, which means “red” (Gen. 25:30) and refers to the blood of animals (Ex. 23:18) or human beings (Gen. 4:10). In the Scriptures, blood may be a synonym for death (Judg. 9:24) or even murder (Jer. 19:4). The word blood may also represent a person’s guilt, as in the phrase “his blood shall be upon him”—that is, he is responsible for his own guilt (20:9). The OT equates life with blood (Gen. 9:4; Deut. 12:23), which vividly illustrates the sanctity of human life (Gen. 9:6). According to the NT, “without shedding of blood there is no remission” of sin (Heb. 9:22). Thus the emphasis on blood in the OT sacrifices pointed to the blood Christ would shed on our behalf (Rom. 5:9; 1 Cor. 11:25, 26).

4:6 Seven symbolizes completeness in the Bible, based on the seven days of creation in Gen. 1; 2. The veil was a heavy linen curtain that separated the Most Holy Place from the rest of the tabernacle (Ex. 26:31). Sprinkling the blood before, or on, the veil purified the Most Holy Place.

4:7 The altar of sweet incense was in the Holy Place (Ex. 30:1–6). Incense, not an animal sacrifice, was burned on this altar. Still, this part of the tabernacle also needed purification—through the application of blood—from the pollution of the priest’s sin.

4:8–10 The instructions concerning the fat were the same as for the fat of the peace offering.

4:11, 12 Burning the whole bull ensured that the priest did not profit in any way from his own sin or from the atonement for his sin. Carrying it outside the camp was another way of symbolizing the seriousness of the pollution of the tabernacle caused by the high priest’s sin. The part of the bull not burned on the altar could not be used for any other purpose. It needed to be disposed of entirely.

4:12 Even the ashes from the altar symbolized the atonement necessary for sin. Therefore, the ground outside the camp where they were poured out was considered clean.

4:13 whole congregation: All the people of Israel. hidden: A sin committed without anyone being aware of it, or without the one responsible knowing that it was sin.

4:14–21 Because the sin was the responsibility of the whole congregation, including the priests and the High Priest himself, the pollution of the sin reached into the innermost part of the tabernacle, as it did with the sin of the High Priest. Thus the ritual was the same, including the sprinkling of the blood of the sacrifice in front of the veil, and the placing of blood upon the horns of the altar.

4:15 The elders represented the whole congregation as they laid their hands on the head of the bull.

4:16–22 ruler: Literally, "one lifted up" (Heb. nasi), a leader or chief of the people. The leader of the whole nation (judge or king) or a group (such as the chiefs and representatives of all the tribes) could be called by this name.

4:23, 24 A kid of the goats was designated for a ruler of the people. Since he was a civil and not a religious leader, his sin polluted the sanctuary less seriously than did the sin of the high priest or the sin of the whole congregation.

4:25 The altar of burnt offering stood in the outer court of the tabernacle. The pollution of a ruler's sin did not penetrate to the holy place or to the Most Holy Place (where the ark of the covenant stood), as did the pollution due to the sin of the high priest or the congregation.

4:26 The priest was not guilty of sin in this case, so he was entitled to the meat from the sacrificial animal brought by the ruler.

4:27–35 common people: Literally, "the people of the land," those who held no religious, civil, or military office.

5:1 utterance of an oath: Anyone with information regarding the oath was obligated to come forward and give testimony. Regardless of whether the person's information was firsthand or secondhand, if he did not testify, he became guilty and had to bring a purification offering. It was not having the information, but withholding it that made the person guilty.

5:2 unclean: The difference between clean and unclean animals is carefully spelled out in ch. 11. beast: Larger wild animals. livestock: Domesticated animals. creeping things: Smaller wild animals, including reptiles, small mammals, and insects. unaware of it: Either by not noticing that he had touched the carcass or by forgetting before bringing the purification offering.

Ritual Uncleanness

The uncleanness treated in Leviticus is ritual uncleanness. Being unclean in this sense means to be excluded from normal participation in religious acts. For instance, a person could become unclean due to touching a corpse (Lev. 5:2), but this is not an immoral or a sinful act. The offerings were the means for removing such uncleanness.

5:3 human uncleanness: Primarily the body fluids that caused a person to become unclean (ch. 15). Contact with a corpse would also be included, as would contact with another person's waste. The ancient Israelites knew nothing about microbiology. But God, who knows everything, gave the Israelites certain laws that prevented disease and made them distinct from their neighbors.

5:4 thoughtlessly: Rashly, in the grip of strong emotion or without thinking the matter through. to do evil or to do good: A rash vow is rash, whether the intention is good or evil. In any case, the guilt brought on by a rash vow needed to be atoned for. unaware of it: Certainly a person would know when he was making a vow, but he might not realize its full implications. He could also forget a vow to do good and fail to fulfill it. when he realizes it: At that point, the person's guilt had to be atoned for by the purification offering. The rash vow of Jephthah should be considered in this light (Judg. 11). Jephthah should have considered the sin of his vow and confessed his folly, rather than to proceed with further evil by keeping a vow that never should have been made. It is not a light thing to fail to perform a vow that has been made to the living God. But neither is it a wise thing to act upon a vow when that vow itself was sinful from its inception.

5:5 in any of these matters: Any of the situations described in vv. 1–4. This was a reminder that these sins were to be taken seriously; they required atonement. confess: The rituals of sacrifice were not automatic in their effect. The worshiper had to recognize, acknowledge, and repent of the sin.

5:6 trespass offering: This offering is not the same as the trespass offering prescribed in the next section. This section still deals with purification offerings for inadvertent guilt.

5:7 If he is not able: If he cannot afford it. two turtledoves: Part of the purification offering was burned on the altar and part was not burned. To accomplish this when offering birds, the worshiper brought two.

5:8–10 The first bird for the sin offering was sacrificed for its blood. The second was burned, like the fat and vital organs of the larger animals.

5:11–13 The purification offering was for inadvertent sin. Since every person sins inadvertently, whether by commission or by omission, provision was made for those who could not even afford to bring two birds.

5:11 one-tenth of an ephah: Approximately two quarts. Oil and frankincense were not added as they were to the grain offering. This was a purification offering; it had to be pure flour.

5:12, 13 Part of the offering was burned on the altar, as was part of the animal sacrifices. The rest belonged to the priests, as did the remainder of the animal sacrifices (except the burnt offerings) brought by ordinary citizens.

5:14—6:7 This section deals with the trespass, or reparation, offering for a breach of faith against God. This could be with regard to the sanctuary, to its holy things, to one of the commandments, or to another person. In the Hebrew text this section is a part of ch. 5.

5:15 commits a trespass: This phrase refers both to the objective responsibility of a sinner for his or her actions and the subjective feeling of guilt experienced by the offender. The offering righted the wrong of the offense and cleared the conscience of the sinner. the holy things of the LORD: Anything separated from common use and dedicated to the sacred use of the Lord—the tabernacle, its furnishings and utensils, the sacrificial food reserved for the priests, the tithes, and any other gifts given to the sanctuary. the shekel of the sanctuary: Slightly heavier than the shekel used in ordinary transactions in the marketplace. The common shekel was about eleven and a half grams, or four-tenths of an ounce; the sanctuary shekel was about twelve and a half grams.

5:16 make restitution: A guiding principle of biblical law and ethics is that when a person has caused harm to another, whether to God or to another human being, the one offending is responsible to make good the loss. add one-fifth to it: As a fine, in addition to the ram and the full restitution. The restitution and fine were paid first, as evidence of the offender’s genuine repentance. Then the priest sacrificed the ram as atonement.

5:17 he does not know: Ignorance did not make an offense harmless. The offender was still guilty and bore responsibility for his iniquity. He might also be troubled in his conscience, though he might never learn the exact nature of his offense. People often experienced dread that they had committed unwitting offense against God, His sanctuary, or His holy things.

5:18 In such a situation, the offering of a ram (without restitution or fine, since the value of what had been taken or harmed could not be determined) brought atonement for the unknown offense. His ignorance in which he erred and did not know it: This was not a sin of rebellion, but one for which the offender earnestly desired to atone, though he did not know what it was.

Making Restitution

Some modern law-makers, educators, and others concerned with human behavior often make proposals based on the idea that people are basically good. In Leviticus, God held a more realistic view. For example, He knew that there would be cases of dishonesty among His people. So instead of excusing the offenses as the result of bad upbringing and proposing more education as a preventative, He instituted a system of sacrifices for the sin of the offender and restitution to the offended party (Lev. 6:1–7). It's easy to see why such laws were needed. Israel was a refugee nation traveling through a desert. Every day the people faced limited resources, so they may have found it easy to rationalize theft and deception. Temptations were many, and sooner or later people succumbed.

To address this problem, God called sin sin and devised a guide for forgiveness and restitution. If someone deceived another in a transaction, the perpetrator was required to sacrifice a ram and to repay the loss with 20 percent interest. The guiding law behind restitution was that of loving one's neighbor as oneself (Lev. 19:18). Centuries later, Christ reaffirmed this as the guiding principle for moral and social issues (Matt. 5:43, 44; 19:19).

5:19 he has certainly trespassed against the LORD: This could also be phrased as "He has certainly made reparation to the Lord." The emphasis on the worshiper's ignorance of his sin and his uneasy conscience was matched here by the statement that his offering had been accepted. He was forgiven, and his conscience could rest. Isaiah (53:10) used this verb (Heb. asham) to assure the believer that the Coming One would make reparation for all sin, even the sin the offender does not know of and cannot discover. Thus the Hebrew wording of this verse is nearly the opposite of the common translation. A guilty conscience need not torment the believer today; reparation has been made.

6:1–7 This section deals with the trespass/reparation offering as it applies to harm caused to other people.

6:2, 3 a trespass against the LORD: The offenses listed were against people. However, they also wronged God because the offender used God's name in vain in the oath he used to swear his innocence in court. lying to his neighbor: Saying the property was lost, stolen, or destroyed, when he had kept it for himself. delivered to him for safekeeping: In the absence of banks, people would leave valuables with trusted neighbors or business associates when they went on a long journey. a pledge: A security deposit or collateral on a loan. any one of these things: In all these cases, a person betrayed his neighbor's trust, taking or keeping property illegally and then lying about it under oath. Since in court it was one person's sworn word against another's, the wronged person had little recourse.

6:4 is guilty: Objectively, he had done wrong. Subjectively, he became conscience-stricken. Since his oath in court had placed him beyond the reach of punishment, only the offender's guilty conscience could bring him to justice. shall restore: Restitution was necessary before anything else when someone had wronged another by taking what was rightfully his. Zacchaeus recognized the principle of restitution when he encountered Jesus (Luke 19:8).

(Heb. kohen) (Lev. 1:5; 6:6; 27:21; 2 Chr. 35:2) Strong’s #3548: Priesthood was not unique to the Israelites. From the Egyptians to the Philistines, all the ancient Middle Eastern nations had a class of priests. At Mount Sinai, God consecrated Aaron and his descendants as priests (Ex. 28:1). They were to be representatives of the people before God, offering sacrifices and prayers on their behalf. Furthermore, they instructed the people about their religious duties and the character of God (Deut. 33:8–10). The NT describes Jesus Christ as our High Priest (Heb. 5:10). Through His death on the Cross, the formal priesthood was abolished (Heb. 10:11, 12). In its stead, all believers become priests—not to offer sacrifices but to pray, worship God, and witness to others about Jesus (Heb. 13:15, 16; 1 Pet. 2:5, 9; Rev. 1:5, 6).

6:5, 6 As with sin concerning the holy things (5:16), restitution and a one-fifth fine were evidence of genuine repentance. Then the offender could bring the ram for the trespass offering and be forgiven for the sin against God of swearing falsely in God’s name. Jesus preserved this order for the person who remembered at the altar that he had offended his brother (Matt. 5:23, 24).

6:7–9 Aaron and his sons, the priests, were responsible for the correct preparation and presentation of all offerings. shall be kept burning: The fire on the altar was never to go out. This was accomplished at night with a burnt offering that was not extinguished. It could have been stoked with wood through the night to keep it burning. After being renewed in the morning (v. 12), the fire was kept going throughout the day for the succession of burnt or whole offerings from various individuals (ch. 1), for the grain offerings burned on the altar (ch. 2), and for the fat of the peace offerings (ch. 3), the sin offerings (4:1—5:13), and the trespass offerings (5:14—6:7).

6:10 linen garment … linen trousers: The sacred clothing of the priests, worn only in the tabernacle (16:4; Ex. 28:40–43). The trousers were a linen undergarment that prevented immodest exposure as the priest ascended and descended the altar ramp. This modesty communicated to the Israelites that human sexuality could not influence God. That idea was a central feature of Baal worship, which continually tempted the Israelites.

The priests of Baal would use obscene gestures and actions in the pagan worship of their depraved god.

6:11 The linen garments were worn only within the tabernacle. They were not worn when carrying the ashes outside the camp.

6:12, 13 the fire … shall not be put out: Five times in this paragraph the priests are instructed to keep the fire burning. There are at least three reasons for this: (1) The original fire on the altar came from God (9:24). (2) Perpetual fire symbolized the perpetual worship of God. (3) Perpetual fire symbolized the continual need for atonement and reconciliation with God, which was the purpose of the offerings. If the ashes were cleaned off the altar every morning, the fire would have been at its lowest at that point. It was renewed with wood. Then the morning burnt offering was sacrificed, followed by other offerings through the day.

6:14–18 all the males … Aaron: This included all the priests, as well as descendants of Aaron who were disqualified from the priesthood for some reason (21:16–23). statute forever: "For all the age," or for as long as sacrifices are offered. must be holy: Only those who had been made holy or had been consecrated to God could touch or use the reserved sacrificial portions.

6:19–23 Because this was the daily grain offering of the high priest it was not included in the instructions for the sacrifices of the congregation.

6:20, 21 beginning … anointed: The high priest personally was to offer this sacrifice twice daily for as long as he was in office. one-tenth of an ephah: About two quarts. half of it … at night: The idea of a morning and an evening appointment with God is ancient. It is a precious privilege, open to every believer through the high priestly work of Christ. at night: More precisely, "in the evening"—at the time of the evening sacrifice.

6:22 The priest … in his place: Aaron's successors as high priest, beginning with his son Eleazar (Num. 20:25–28). statute forever: This grain offering and the burnt offering were sacrificed daily—with some interruptions, most notably during the Exile—until the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70. Even in the periods of Judah's worst apostasy, the evidence suggests that the daily offerings continued, though often for incorrect or inadequate reasons (Is. 1:10–17; Jer. 7:8–15; Mic. 6:6–8).

6:23 it shall not be eaten: The priests could eat most of the grain offerings brought by the people (2:3, 10). The principle here was that no one should profit from an offering which he himself had given.

6:24–30 Instructions for the priests about the sin, or purification, offering (4:1—5:13).

6:27 The blood of the sin offering was for the atonement of the one bringing the offering; as such, the blood was holy, intended for a specific, holy purpose. The blood could be washed from a garment only in a holy place.

6:28, 29 It here refers to the flesh of the sin offering. The breaking of the earthen vessel, a clay cooking pot, is a striking contrast to the scouring of the bronze pot. No reason is given for the different treatment. However, the answer may be that a clay vessel is permeable and the residue of cooking could never be removed completely from it, even by a thorough scrubbing. The ancients knew nothing about microbiology; but God knows all things! Broth would not permeate a bronze pot and could be removed completely from it. That which is holy must not be profaned. Sacrificing the clay vessel, as it were, prevented profaning even the smallest part of the flesh of the sin offering, which was most holy (vv. 25, 29).

6:30 The blood of the sin offering for the priest and of that for the entire congregation was brought into the tabernacle of meeting (4:5–7, 16–18). Because no one should profit from an offering given to atone for his own sin, the priests were forbidden to eat the flesh of these offerings.

Pottery

Pottery was a common product in ancient times. The objects made of clay were baked to make them hard and permanent. Quality was determined by the type of clay, the heat, and the evenness of firing. The firing process required experience and skill. Still, the whole process was cheap enough that even in ancient times some pottery vessels were intended to be disposed (Lev. 6:28).

7:1, 2 In the place: At the door of the tabernacle of meeting before the Lord (1:3).

7:3, 4 The burning of the fat was commanded as it was for the peace offering (3:9–11). The fat was considered the best part of the meat. As such, it was not to be eaten by the worshiper or the priest. Instead, it was offered to God. Our best is still the measure of what we should offer to God.

7:5–7 the priest who makes atonement: That is, the individual officiating priest. Since many individual Israelites would have brought both trespass and sin offerings, the priests would take turns officiating for them and would receive equal proportions of the sacrifices.

7:8 The skin was the only part of the burnt offering that was not burned (1:6). The officiating priest received it as part of his wages.

7:9 Each Israelite's baked grain offering belonged to the individual priest who offered it, as did the flesh of an animal offered as a sin or a trespass offering (v. 7).

7:10 By contrast, an offering of unbaked grain belonged to all the sons of Aaron, to one as much as the other. No priest was to be deprived of his rightful share in the sacrifices brought by the congregation. The priests were consecrated to the service of God, and their welfare and that of their families depended on the provisions from the sacrifices. The principle remains valid: No one called to serve the people of God as a vocation may be deprived of a fair living.

7:11–21 Instructions for the priests concerning the peace offering (commanded in Lev. 3). Three kinds of peace offering were possible: (1) thanksgiving, a confession of human dependence on God's grace and mercy, and a praise of the living God (v. 12); (2) marking the fulfillment of a vow (v. 16); (3) and voluntary, or free-will, offering (v. 16). A peace offering could be a male or female animal from the cattle, the sheep, or the goats.

7:12, 13 The sacrifice of thanksgiving (Heb. toda, "a public acknowledgement { in praise} ") was a public proclamation of who God is and what He does. The word is familiar from the Book of Psalms. A thanksgiving offering required three kinds of unleavened cakes and leavened bread.

7:14 The heave offering was a "present" or contribution to the officiating priest as his portion of the thanksgiving offering (Ex. 29:26–28; Lev. 7:29–34). The offering was waved before the Lord as an acknowledgment that He is the giver of all gifts.

7:15 the same day it is offered: The festive worshiper bringing his peace offering for a family feast at the tabernacle demonstrated trust in God for the next day's provision. He did not worry about saving food for the next day. When feasting and rejoicing in the presence of God, generosity is entirely appropriate.

7:16, 17 the next day … may be eaten: The vow and the voluntary peace offering were slightly less solemn than the thanksgiving (or confession) peace offering. Therefore, any leftovers from them could be eaten on the second day without jeopardizing the purity of the tabernacle.

7:18 it shall not be … imputed: The sacrifice would lose all its benefit to the worshiper. This was so even if the one eating the meat was not the one who had brought the offering. It shall be an abomination may be rephrased, "It shall be rotten or spoiled." This would be true first in the physical sense: Unrefrigerated two-day-old meat would spoil. But it also would be rotten in the sense of an unclean thing that contaminated the holy precincts.

7:19 touches any unclean thing: An unclean object pollutes a clean object. A similar principle applies to sterile objects in medicine. Touching a sterile object with a dirty object makes the sterile object unsterile.

7:20, 21 unclean: Chapters 11—15 and 22 detail various kinds of uncleanness in persons and things. shall be cut off: The person will be removed from membership in the covenant community. This meant either execution, banishment, or denial of citizenship privileges (worship, inheritance, and so on; Gen. 17:14). This concern for approaching God's presence in a state of ritual purity is reflected in Paul's instructions about the reverence and self-examination the Christian should use in approaching the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 11:27–29).

7:22, 23 The fat was considered the best portion of the sacrificial animal; as such, it belonged to God.

7:24 used in any other way: That is, for softening leather, for fuel, or in any other way but eating it.

7:25–29 The portions of the peace offering that belonged to the Lord included the fat, which was burned on the altar (v. 31), and the breast and thigh, which were the priests' portions (vv. 30–34).

7:30 His own hands: A worshiper could not delegate his worship, thanksgiving, or praise. Worship by proxy was impossible. The breast was one of the finer portions of the meat that was allowed to be eaten. The breast of the sacrificial animal was brought to the priest as a wave offering or an elevated offering—raised by the worshiper in the presence of God and the priest—symbolizing that the entire sacrifice was dedicated to God.

7:31 The breast (the elevated offering) was Aaron's and his sons'; it belonged to all the priests.

7:32, 33 heave offering: The right (front) thigh of the sacrificial animal belonged to the priest who performed the sacrifice. Thus the officiating priest received his individual portion the thigh (heave offering), and all the priests received a further portion the breast (wave offering).

7:34–36 So no one would begrudge the priests a share in the meat of the sacrificial animals, God reminded Israel that these portions really belonged to Him: I have taken. By this means, God provided for the livelihood of the priests and their families. Those who spend their lives in God's service deserve the support of God's people.

7:37, 38 A summary listing of the offerings of chs. 1—7, with the reminder that these sacrifices were prescribed by God Himself on Mount Sinai. What God commanded He made possible, by giving careful instruction (the law of the … offering) regarding the proper way to bring the offerings before Him. God does not leave His people to wonder how they may approach Him and please Him. All these offerings foreshadow, in one way or another, the perfect sacrifice of Christ upon Calvary.

8:1–10:20 The first of two narrative sections in Leviticus. This one describes the inauguration of Israel's priesthood. The ordination of Aaron and his sons (ch. 8) was followed by Aaron's first offering of sacrifices (ch. 9). Chapter 10 concerns the deaths of Nadab and Abihu and the aftermath.

8:1, 2 Aaron had presided over Israel's idolatry with the golden calf. Now God gave him a second chance by allowing him to be ordained as God's own high priest. His ministry would affect all Israelites by atoning for their sins and bringing them into fellowship with God. the garments: The high priestly clothing that Aaron wore, prescribed by God to Moses in Ex. 28:1–39. anointing oil: Made from myrrh, cinnamon, cane, cassia, and olive oil (Ex. 30:23–25).

8:3 the congregation: The ordination of the priests was so important that all the people needed to witness it.

8:4, 5 This is what the LORD commanded, or similar words, is noted nine times in this chapter (vv. 4, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 29, 34, 36). It was important that God's instructions for worship be carried out meticulously. Sloppy, careless, or thoughtless worship did not honor God.

8:6 Moses brought Aaron: As the prophet of God and the leader of God's people (Deut. 18:15–18; 34:1–12), Moses was the only person qualified to ordain Aaron and his sons as Israel's priests. Until Moses ordained them, they were not priests and could not lead Israel's worship. Moses' prophetic ministry took precedence over Aaron's priestly ministry. washed them with water: This symbolized moral purity.

8:7 The ephod was the magnificent outer garment of the high priest, made of gold thread; violet, purple, and scarlet woolen thread; and fine linen thread (Ex. 28:5, 6).

8:8 the Urim and the Thummim: Sacred lots used to determine the will of God. What they looked like and how they were used is not known. Apparently, the high priest phrased questions so the answers would be "yes" or "no," depending on how the lots came up.

8:9 The golden plate was also known as the holy crown of the high priest. On it was engraved HOLINESS TO THE LORD (Ex. 28:36).

8:10–12 The anointing of the tabernacle and all its furnishings, and of Aaron as High Priest, removed them from common use and consecrated them—set them apart, sanctified them to and made them fit for the service of God. The anointing of Aaron began the consecration of people for special service in and for the community of God which continues in the church to the present day.

8:11 Since the altar was the central furnishing of the tabernacle for the atonement for sin, sprinkling it seven times represented the complete consecration of the tabernacle and all its furnishings and utensils to God's service.

8:12 anointed: The high priests of Israel, beginning here with Aaron, were anointed, as were the kings of Israel (1 Sam. 10:1; 16:13) and at least some of the prophets (1 Kin. 19:16). Jesus combines in His person the offices of High Priest, King, and Prophet, so He is the Anointed One, which is the meaning of the names Messiah and Christ.

8:13 While Aaron's sons were set apart or ordained as priests, they were not anointed. Only the high priest was anointed.

IN CONTEXT

What Does It Take to Serve God?

Prospective priests had to be trained in the elaborate rituals detailed in the Law. But the text makes it plain that neither special ability nor the good fortune to be born into the tribe of Levi fully qualified a man to serve as a priest to the Lord. A man was fit for service only after his sins had been forgiven. For example, Moses prepared Aaron and his sons (Lev. 8:2, 3) by assembling them in front of the tabernacle and initiating their ministry with sacrifices to atone for their sins (8:14–36). Various qualifications might be mentioned for service in ministry today. But chief among them is still the requirement of being cleansed from sin (2 Tim. 2:1, 20).

8:14–29 These verses describe Moses' offering of three sacrifices for Aaron and his sons. The first was the sin, or purification, offering (vv. 14–17), the second was the burnt offering (vv. 18–21), and the third (vv. 22–29) followed basically the ritual of the peace offering. Because these were the very first sacrifices, some rituals were observed relating to the consecration of the altar and of Aaron and his sons which were not part of the "ordinary" sacrifices prescribed in Lev. 1—7. Because these sacrifices were part of the consecration service of the Aaronic priesthood (Aaron and his sons were not yet priests), Moses performed the priestly duties.

8:15–21 Moses' actions here were slightly different from the normal sin offering prescribed in ch. 4. The purpose is clear from the statement that he purified the altar … and consecrated it. The priests, the altar, and everything associated with the sacrificial system had to be pure and consecrated to God. Otherwise the sacrifices would not atone for the sins of Israel.

8:22–29 The manner of sacrificing the second ram with the unleavened bread most nearly resembled the peace offering (3:1–5) and the grain offering (2:4–6). But there were significant differences because this was the ram of consecration for Aaron and his sons as priests.

8:23, 24 The reason for applying the blood of the sacrifice to Aaron's ear, thumb, and big toe is unclear. They were his extremities, top to bottom, possibly to represent the total covering of his sins by the sacrificial blood. Blood offering had also been applied to the horns of the altar (v. 15), signaling the close connection between the altar and the priests who ministered before it.

8:25, 26 The right thigh normally was the individual officiating priest's portion of the peace offering (7:32). In this case, it was a consecration offering for all the priests, so it was burned on the altar.

8:27–29 God received the right thigh burned upon the altar; Moses received the breast. Since both these portions normally went to the priests 7:31, 32, this arrangement may symbolize God and Moses together acting as priests to consecrate Aaron and his sons to Israel's priesthood, in keeping with the idea that one must be consecrated (made holy) by one who is already consecrated (holy).

8:29 Moses' part: Moses, acting as priest in this first sacrifice, received the breast, which from that time on would go to Aaron and his sons.

8:30–32 Moses' act of consecration here, though it used anointing oil together with blood from the altar, was different from his anointing of Aaron alone in v. 12.

8:33, 34 seven days: Becoming intercessors between God and the people was an extremely important step for Aaron and his sons—and for Israel. This period of confinement to the tabernacle emphasized the significance of the event. consecrate you: Literally, "fill your hand." In the physical sense, this referred to the fact that the priests' hands often would be filled with sacrifices as they served God in the tabernacle. In a greater sense, their consecration meant that their hands always would be filled with God's service to the exclusion of everything else.

8:35 That you may not die was a reminder that it is dangerous to approach God carelessly, without reverence, ignoring His instructions. Two of Aaron's sons failed to heed this warning and died (ch. 10).

8:36 For now, all those involved obeyed all the LORD had commanded. Their ordination was complete; their priesthood was valid. God would accept their service and their intercession for the people.

9:1 the eighth day: After the seven days of Aaron and his sons' consecration (8:33–36) were completed.

9:2 A young bull was the prescribed sin offering for the high priest (4:3). Before he could offer the sacrifices of others, his own sin needed atonement. The bull of the sin offering and the ram of the burnt offering (1:4, 10) accomplished this.

9:3 you shall speak: To this point Moses had given all the directions. Now that Aaron had been anointed high priest, it was fitting that he begin to instruct Israel on how to bring sacrifices. A kid of the goats was prescribed as the sin offering for individuals, a male goat for leaders (4:22, 23), and a female for ordinary citizens (4:27, 28).

9:4 All four of the regular public offerings—the burnt offering, the sin offering, the peace offering, and the grain offering—were performed on this first day of Israel's sacrificial worship in the tabernacle. The first two were specifically to atone for sin; the second two were for a feast of fellowship with God. Only the trespass, or reparation, offering was missing because it was a private offering (5:14—6:7). the LORD will appear to you: The purpose of all worship is to fellowship with God. The sacrifices were not an end in themselves; they allowed the worshiper to meet with God without being destroyed. The Israelites looked forward; we look back to Christ's atonement, by which we are ushered into God's presence.

9:5, 6 So they brought … and … drew near: The immediate and total obedience of the people is emphasized, in contrast with the complaining and rebellion that marked their response to Moses and to God (Ex. 32; Num. 14).

“make atonement”

(Heb. kaphar) (Lev. 1:4; 9:7; 14:18; 2 Sam. 21:3) Strong’s #3722: In its various uses this word can mean “to cover,” “to appease,” or “to ransom.” It can refer to monetary transaction, but in the Scriptures it more commonly speaks of payment for sin. All of the various offerings in the Jewish sacrificial system are described as effecting atonement. The key idea is that these offerings gained the favor of God, and God removed the worshiper’s guilt. The sacrifice was presented as a substitute for the life of the offender. The sacrifice of an animal atoned for the offender’s sin and turned aside God’s wrath. Like the lambs offered to atone for the sins of the Israelites, Jesus’ life was offered as a substitute for ours. His death turned away God’s wrath and atoned for our sin (Rom. 3:25).

9:7 Before Aaron could make atonement for the people, he had to make atonement for himself.

9:8–21 Aaron offers the first sacrifices. The biblical narrators often took great pains to relate how people carried out the instructions. What to the modern reader seems like needless repetition of detail was to the ancients a satisfying reassurance that what had been commanded had been completed faithfully.

9:8 The high priest had to kill the calf of the sin offering himself, since the sacrifice was for him. In Aaron’s first attempt at being a priest for Israel, he had made a golden calf for the people to worship (Ex. 32). His first sacrifice as God’s anointed high priest was a calf for his own sin offering. Aaron undoubtedly recognized the irony and praised God for His mercy. God had given Aaron a second chance. Truly, God is the God of the second chance for any who will respond to Him in faith!

9:9–11 Aaron did not sprinkle the blood before the veil (4:6). Also, the altar here is the altar of burnt offering, not the altar of incense (4:7). This variation from the normal pattern of the sin offering for the high priest was probably due to the fact that Aaron had not yet committed any sin that polluted the inner sanctuary. Therefore, its cleansing was not necessary. For regulations concerning the fat, flesh, and hide, read 4:8–12.

9:12–14 Because there was no variation from the general procedure for the burnt offering, the record of Aaron’s performing this sacrifice is less detailed than the regulations for it (1:10–13). Aaron killed the ram himself (9:2), since it was a burnt offering for him and not for all the people.

9:15–17 The goat as the sin offering looked forward to the Day of Atonement (16:5, 9), rather than back to the normal sin offering for all the people, which required a bull (4:14).

9:18–21 The peace offerings for the people concluded the four offerings. Aaron had sacrificed a bull, a calf, and a ram for himself; and a kid, a calf, a lamb, a bull, a ram, and a grain offering for the people. On Aaron's first day as high priest, he offered all but one of the various sacrifices. The fact that God sent fire to consume these offerings signaled His future acceptance of all the sacrifices He had commanded the Israelites to bring—if they would bring them with a repentant and trusting spirit, as He had instructed.

9:22 Aaron … blessed them: The ultimate function of the priests was to bless the people. When God gave the priestly blessing, He said that the priests would put His name on the children of Israel, and He would bless them (Num. 6:27). The purpose of the priests' sacrifices was to cleanse the priests so they could bless the people (Deut. 10:8). The purpose of the people's sacrifices was to cleanse the people so they could receive God's blessing, and in turn be a blessing to all other peoples (Gen. 12:3; 22:18). came down: The altar of burnt offering was five by five by three cubits (about seven and a half feet square and four and a half feet high). The priest climbed a ramp to offer on it.

9:23 the tabernacle of meeting: Moses, Aaron, and Aaron's sons were in the courtyard in front of the altar of burnt offering. Moses and Aaron went into the tent itself where the altar of incense, the table of showbread, and the golden lampstand (the menorah) stood. blessed the people: This was the second time that day that the people had been blessed. The fact that Moses and Aaron could bless the people after they met with God signaled that God was pleased with the inaugural sacrifices Aaron had offered on behalf of himself and the people. glory of the LORD appeared: as God had promised through Moses (vv. 4, 6).

IN DEPTH

Purified by Fire

As Israel began offering sacrifices according to God's instructions, His presence was revealed through a fire that consumed the first burnt offering (Lev. 9:24). Not surprisingly, the people fell down in worship. They had instant respect for the fire of the presence of the One they served.

Elsewhere in Scripture fire signifes things that must be respected, beginning with God: • Moses described Him as "a consuming fire, a jealous God" (Deut. 4:24).

• God's deliverance of David was described in images of fire (Ps. 18:8–14).

• He appeared to Ezekiel in a cloud of fire (Ezek. 1:4).

• Malachi said that the Lord would act like a refiner's fire in the day of His coming (Mal. 3:2).

• John the Baptist said that Jesus would baptize people with the Holy Spirit and fire (Matt. 3:11; Acts 2:3, 4).

• The Lord's final evaluation of believers is described in terms of a smelter's fire (1 Cor. 3:13–15).

• John the apostle saw a vision of Jesus in which His eyes were like flames of fire (Rev. 1:14).

Peter reminds us that our trials and tribulations are "testings by fire" that help to purify our faith and make it genuine, like pure gold (1 Pet. 1:6, 7; 4:12, 13).

9:24 fire came out: The sacrifices were consumed, not by fire ignited by Aaron, but by fire from before the LORD. This is the first of only five times that the OT records fire from God as a sign that a sacrifice was accepted (Judg. 6:21; 1 Kin. 18:38; 1 Chr. 21:26; 2 Chr. 7:1). Since the fire on this altar was never to go out, all Israel's sacrifices from this time forward would be consumed by fire that originated from God. In the NT, the fire from God symbolized the coming of the Holy Spirit upon the believers in the Upper Room on the Day of Pentecost (Acts 2:3). That fire signaled, as had the ancient one, God's acceptance of the worship and dedication of His people, and His commitment to dwell among them. they shouted: The Hebrew verb (ranan) usually connotes a ringing cry of joy and exultation, not fearfulness and terror. The people understood that God's fire upon the altar meant God's presence in their midst. God's acceptance of their sacrifices meant His acceptance of them, and they could receive His dwelling with them with joy rather than fear. So it is today. Guilt makes people fearful of God's presence. God's forgiveness through Christ's perfect sacrifice upon Calvary allows people to dwell in God's presence without guilty fear. fell on their faces: This response to the glory of God's presence was called fear by previous generations. Today we call it reverence. The pattern of the Israelites' sacrifice established a valid pattern for approaching God today. Sin must be confessed, repented, and atoned for. When God accepted the sacrifice, He accepted the one who offered it into His presence.

10:1 Nadab and Abihu were Aaron's eldest sons. With Aaron and seventy elders of Israel, they had accompanied Moses partway up Mount Sinai and had seen God (Ex. 24:1, 9–11). They had participated with their father in the inaugural sacrifices recorded in ch. 9. They had obeyed, and God had accepted all that had been done on that day. profane fire: Nadab and Abihu violated God's holiness in some way the author does not spell out. Profane is literally "strange." Two ideas may be combined here. Leviticus 16:12 directs that, at least for the Day of Atonement, incense had to be burned with coals from the altar of burnt offering. If this was true for other times as well, "strange" may mean that the two priests took their fire not from the altar but from another, illicit, source. Second, "strange" often refers to foreigners, including their pagan, "strange," gods. Aaron (Nadab's and Abihu's father) had fashioned a strange god, the golden calf (Ex. 32:4). Possibly they were now attempting to follow in his footsteps and incorporate the worship of a pagan god here, just as Israel was beginning its worship of Yahweh according to the forms He had given them. Which He had not commanded them is in striking contrast with the careful obedience to God's commands recorded in chs. 8 and 9. Whatever the details, their act was clearly disobedient, and they knew it.

10:2 Fire went out from the LORD in punishment. Two verses earlier (9:24), fire had come from the Lord in acceptance of Israel and its worship. What is a blessing when it comes as a result of faithfulness can be deadly when provoked by disobedience. devoured them: killed them. Their cousins picked them up in their priestly tunics and carried them outside the camp for burial (v. 5). they died: Their deaths were a result of their own rebellious action. God is a jealous God, unwilling to allow His people to be unfaithful to Him.

10:3 those who come near Me: In this context, God referred to the priests, Aaron and his sons. Those who are closest to God—those who minister before Him and teach the people—have a greater responsibility to be careful about God's holiness. James stresses this principle in his letter (James 3:1). I must be glorified is still a good principle by which to measure our worship. Anything that does not glorify God is not truly worship and should not be allowed in our worship gatherings. Aaron held his peace: Though he certainly was grieving the sudden loss of his sons, Aaron recognized that their action was rebellion against God. If it had not been dealt with promptly, it would have spread and disrupted Israel's holy worship. Aaron's grief may have been intensified by the memory of his own rebellion against God in making the golden calf (Ex. 32), an act his sons certainly had witnessed.

10:4 carry: Though priests were forbidden to come into contact with the dead, a brother's corpse normally was an exception to this rule (21:1–4). However, Moses called Aaron's cousins to carry the bodies of Nadab and Abihu out of the camp because their rebellion had been the cause of their deaths, and because their father and brothers had only just begun their priestly duties. your brethren: The Hebrew word for brother can include cousins, as it does here.

10:5 as Moses had said: The pattern of obedience interrupted by Nadab and Abihu's sin was reestablished.

10:6, 7 Aaron and his surviving sons were forbidden to mourn the deaths because they needed to remain in a state of ritual purity; also, so they would not appear to condone the sin of Nadab and Abihu. If they were to die as well, Israel would have no priests to intercede with God. But Israel as a whole was allowed to mourn the two.

10:6 uncover your heads nor tear your clothes: These were conventional signs of mourning (Ezek. 24:16, 17).

10:7, 8 the LORD spoke to Aaron: This is the only place in Leviticus where God speaks to Aaron alone.

10:9–11 Whether intoxication contributed to their sin, the author does not say. But it certainly would in future cases, if the priests allowed themselves to drink while on duty, and would bring upon them the same punishment Nadab and Abihu had suffered. Ministering before the altar and teaching the Israelites all the statutes required clear thinking and memory. Alcohol must not be allowed to impair the priests' functioning as priests.

10:10 Holy and unholy had been the subject of the preceding instructions about sacrifices and their first implementation (chs. 1—9). Unclean and clean would be the subject of the following instructions about animals, diseases, bodily discharges, and so on (chs. 11—15).

10:11–13 you may teach … the statutes: In the OT era, the priests were primarily responsible for teaching the people of Israel the Law of God. Parents, in turn, were to teach their children (Deut. 6:6–9, 20–25). a holy place: within the tabernacle. For instructions about the grain offering, read 2:10.

10:12–15 Moses took care to see that God's instructions (about the priests' portions of the sacrifices) were carried out in spite of the tragedy that just had occurred. When a new order is inaugurated, the first time of doing something has great symbolic significance. The sacrifices had been offered; Moses wanted to be sure the priests had eaten their allotted portions this first time.

10:14 a clean place: a place that had not been defiled by (or had been ritually cleansed from) the kinds of uncleanness described in chs. 11—15. This place was not specifically near the tabernacle, where some of the priests' portions had to be eaten, but presumably in the priests' dwellings or any other clean place within the camp (before they reached the Promised Land) or within the land (after they reached it). your daughters: The right of the women in the priests' families to share in their portions of the offerings is described more fully in 22:10–13. For instructions on the wave and heave offerings, read 7:32, 33.

10:15 Moses reassured his brother that God would allow him to remain as high priest, in spite of the sin and death of two of his sons.

10:16 careful inquiry: Moses was responsible to see that Nadab and Abihu's sin did not cause further punishment to fall on Israel. burned up: The flesh of the sin offering, if it was not for the priest or the whole congregation, was not to be burned completely. Only its fat should have been burned (4:26, 31, 35). This sin offering was not for Aaron and his sons, even though it was for all the people, since Aaron was to offer a separate sin offering for himself (and presumably for his sons, too). Moses was angry. Much had gone wrong already. The worship rituals had been carried out improperly. What more might God do because of this further breach?

10:17, 18 The priests were to eat the flesh (except for the fat) of any sin offering whose blood was not brought inside the holy place—that is, of any sin offering that was not intended to atone for them (4:5–7, 16–18). Eleazar and Ithamar had not done this, but had burned up all the goat of the sin offering.

Learning from Aaron's Weaknesses

Aaron had reason to do some serious thinking. He realized that the misbehavior of his sons raised serious questions about his fitness for ministry (Lev. 10:19). Thus Aaron provides an instructive lesson in the painful fact that good people have weaknesses, shortcomings, and a sinful, dark side.

Aaron was not a worthless individual. He was a good speaker, which was one reason why God called him to assist his brother, Moses, in leading Israel out of Egypt (Ex. 4:14). He and his descendants were also appointed by God to be the priests over Israel's worship (28:1–4). But the biblical account shows that Aaron struggled with some things that led to serious problems on several occasions: • Even though he was aware of God's jealous love and holiness, he gave in to the people at Sinai and led them into idolatry (Ex. 32:1–4). Later, he avoided taking responsibility for his appalling lapse of leadership (32:21–25).

• He joined his sister, Miriam, in speaking against Moses because of Moses' possibly interracial marriage to an Ethiopian woman. God judged them harshly, so that Aaron pleaded for forgiveness (Num. 12:1–16).

• Though the text does not explicitly comment on Aaron as a parent, the back-to-back incidents involving all four of his sons raise serious questions about his effectiveness as a family leader (Lev. 10:1–3, 16–20).

No one can completely avoid failure and sin. Fortunately, God does not make us His children on the basis of our own ability not to commit sin, but on Christ's ability to deal with it. When the "greats" in the Bible fell short of God's holiness they could find forgiveness and restoration through repentance. Aaron is a good example.

10:19 Aaron said: Moses had spoken to Eleazar and Ithamar, perhaps out of respect for his older brother, since Aaron should have eaten the meat of the sin offering also. But Aaron replied, taking responsibility for his family, as was proper in Israel's patriarchal society. such things: Aaron was referring to the deaths of his two eldest sons. would it have been accepted: Aaron did not eat the sacrificial meat because he was afraid of what more God might do. He was not being rebellious, as his dead sons had been in burning the incense. Aaron was arguing that in circumstances such as the one he faced that day, God would prefer the priest to err on the side of caution rather than presumption. Aaron's reply to Moses illustrates that the interpretation of the Law was not static.

10:20 Moses … was content: Rebellion arises from a heart that is not right toward God. Moses recognized that Aaron's failure was not rebellion, that his argument had merit, and that Aaron could be forgiven. The first great crisis in establishing Israel's worship of God had passed.

11:1–47 Animals permissible for food (clean); animals not permissible for food (unclean). Various explanations of this division are proposed but most fail to explain it fully. One popular explanation is hygienic. Unclean animals were forbidden as food because they carried diseases (pork, trichinosis; hares and hyrax, tularemia), or because, as carrion eaters, they were more likely to transmit diseases to humans. True, but these are modern medical discoveries. If hygiene and health were the reason for forbidding them as food, it would have been as easy for God to reveal that pork needed thorough cooking, which prevents human infection with trichinosis. More importantly, some unclean animals do not necessarily transmit diseases and some clean animals do. Protection of health was an important result of declaring some of these animals unclean, but it cannot have been the main reason for doing so. Another explanation is that some animals were used in the pagan sacrifices of Israel's neighbors. But this would have required that the sheep and above all the bull—very prominent in Egyptian and Canaanite religion—be declared unclean, and they were not.

Some say clean and unclean were arbitrary distinctions that God used to test Israel's faithfulness and obedience. But Israel had plenty of other opportunities to demonstrate faith and obedience, just as the modern believer does. Some see the clean animals as representing righteous people of faith and the unclean as representing wicked, faithless persons. Such an allegorical approach has no controls; it is limited only by one's imagination, and for that reason ought not to be taken seriously.

A better explanation is that the clean animals were clean because their characteristics associated them with life and order in the culture of ancient Israel. The unclean animals were associated, by Israel's culture, with death and disorder because of their habits or their habitat. Ritual purity (cleanness), holiness, life, and order thus were associated concepts; ritual impurity (uncleanness), common or profane usage, death and disorder were associated concepts. This approach gives unity to the entire section on the distinction between the clean and the unclean (chs. 11—15).

11:1 the LORD spoke: Now that Aaron was high priest, he was responsible for teaching and administering the Law. So God spoke to Moses and Aaron together when He gave these further instructions (10:10, 11).

11:2 on the earth: As distinct from the sea and the air. A similar grouping of animal life is found in the creation account (Gen. 1:20–31).

11:3 chewing the cud: That is, the ruminants, like cows, sheep, goats, deer, and antelope. The ruminants eat only plants, mainly grasses and grains. No meat-eating animal chews the cud. The animals allowed for food are not mentioned by name (as they are in Deut. 14:4, 5). Cattle, sheep, and goats provided most of the meat for the ancient Israelites. They ate meat much less often than we do, usually only on special occasions such as the sacrificial feasts or to honor guests in the home.

11:4–7 Several species are specifically mentioned as unclean because they possessed one of the features of clean animals, but not both. One feature without the other was not enough to make an animal clean. While it might seem that this would be clear, God was gracious, providing examples and even rationales, so no one needed to be anxious about whether he was breaking the law. The believer today, seeking to avoid overt sin, will find God equally gracious.

11:4 The camel was eaten by some of Israel's neighbors, who considered it a delicacy. But the camel would not have been an important source of meat for Israel even if it had been permitted, for it never was as numerous in Israel or as important to Israel's economy as it was to their neighbors. The camel does have a split hoof, but its sole or pad is so thick that its imprint is like a single pad.

11:5 The rock hyrax lives in colonies among the rocks (Prov. 30:26). Though it is sometimes called a rock badger, it is not a badger. The rock hyrax is about the same size as a rabbit. Hyraxes appear to chew constantly while sitting outside their dens sunning themselves.

11:6 The hare is not a ruminant, although it does appear to chew constantly. It does not have a hoof.

11:7 The swine is the best known of the unclean animals and continues to be avoided by both Jews and Muslims. The swine was most commonly eaten by Israel's neighbors in both the OT and NT periods. All the reasons for labeling an animal as unclean fit the swine. (1) Inadequately cooked pork could transmit disease to humans. (2) Pigs were sacrificed to pagan deities. (3) Because pork tasted good, refusing it would be a suitable test of faithfulness and obedience.

11:8 In the case of these unclean animals, eating their meat or touching their dead carcasses caused an Israelite to be unclean or ritually impure. However, touching a live animal did not make a person unclean, and an Israelite could raise and use a donkey or camel as a beast of burden without becoming unclean.

11:9 A water creature had to possess both fins and scales in order to be eaten. Only true fish—and not all of them—fit this description. Oysters, clams, crabs, lobsters, and eels were unclean. Whether in the seas or in the rivers applied this command to both saltwater and freshwater species.

11:10–12 The phrasing is careful, deliberate, and repetitive to remove any possibility of finding any exception anywhere. Abomination is a stronger word than unclean. It implies not just avoidance, but active, fierce repulsion. Fins and scales are "appropriate" for water creatures. Fish that have them are clean. Water creatures that appear to mix categories—suggesting disorder—are not merely unclean; they are an abomination. There are good health reasons for being cautious in eating some of these creatures, but this was not the main reason for classifying them as unclean.

11:13–19 This listing differs from the previous two in that it did not establish criteria for judging which creatures were clean. Rather, it listed the birds that were an abomination; we may assume other birds were clean and edible. These birds were forbidden because they are birds of prey or carrion eaters. Also, many of them inhabit desert areas or ruins. The association with death and disorder made them unclean, as it did carnivorous mammals. Many names in this list are uncertain, for one of two reasons. Some refer not to a single species but to several similar species, such as eagles and vultures, or hawks, or members of the crow family. Others cannot be identified now with certainty, and many conflicting suggestions have been made. The effect of this lack of precision in naming would have been to consider all related species as being forbidden. That was the intent of the list, so no birds of prey or carrion eaters would be eaten in Israel. After its kind repeated four times, also suggests that several of these names each designated several similar species, perhaps not even recognized as different in an age before scientific classification became an important human endeavor.

11:19 The hoopoe is a migratory bird. It spends its winters in tropical Africa and its summers in Israel and farther north. The bat of course is not a bird. But in the prescientific age it was grouped with birds because it has wings and flies.

11:20 Creep on all fours is an idiom for crawling on the ground, as insects do on their six legs. Many insects move about in filth and eat refuse.

Their association with death, impurity, and disorder made them unclean.

11:21 Insects with jointed legs … with which to leap were permitted to be eaten. The joints are the enlarged third legs of locusts and grasshoppers that enable them to leap. Locusts and grasshoppers do not live in filth or eat dung. They eat only plants.

11:22, 23 Only the first name, the locust, is certain. The rest may be different kinds of locusts or grasshoppers. The second and third names, the destroying locust, the cricket, occur only here in the OT. After its kind suggests the possibility of several species, as in 11:14–19.

11:24 These refers to just the flying insects of the previous paragraph or possibly to all the unclean animals discussed so far. Merely to touch an unclean carcass caused a person to be unclean until evening, when the new day began for the Israelites.

11:25 If a person carried or picked up a carcass, or part of a carcass, that person's uncleanness was greater. Therefore, the remedy had to be more thorough.

11:26 The word carcass is not in the Hebrew text, but clearly that is what is meant here. A live unclean animal, such as a donkey or camel, could not make a person unclean simply by touching it. Otherwise, many people would have been unclean all the time.

11:27, 28 Whatever goes on its paws is unclean because it does not have a cloven hoof. As with the previous group, to touch a carcass was to be unclean and to carry a carcass was to be even more unclean, requiring a more thorough cleansing.

11:29, 30 Another group of animals is introduced here. Many of these animals could to be found in or around human dwellings. Since these animals were unclean, it was important to know how to deal with them and with objects and utensils they touched. These are small creatures that creep on the earth. This refers not only to their great numbers, but also to their quickness of movement. The group includes small rodents in general, such as mice, voles, shrews, and hamsters, as well as some kinds of lizard.

11:31 when they are dead: Literally, "in their death" or "in their dying." The Israelite farmer was more likely to kill a small rodent in the course of the day than any other creature named in this chapter. It was important to remember as they killed these pests that they themselves would be unclean until evening if they touched them.

11:32–38 These are regulations for household items touched by the carcass of a small unclean animal falling on or in them. Again, good hygiene is an important result of these regulations, but their underlying purpose was to avoid those things associated with death and disorder. A carcass, unless it was a clean animal killed for food in the proper way, always defiled anyone or anything touching it.

11:32 Expensive vessels of wood, fabric, leather, or fiber were to be put in water. Whether they were only to be washed, or soaked until evening, is unclear. But at evening, the start of the new Jewish day, they would be clean.

11:33 Any earthen vessel … you shall break: Pottery was plentiful, cheap, and easily replaced. Vessels made of pottery were also used for food preparation and eating. Again, hygiene was an important result of avoiding the unclean.

11:34 The contents of any vessel made unclean in this way became unclean also.

11:35 These ovens were made of clay and so had to be broken also.

11:36 A spring or a cistern could hardly be emptied. Only the person removing the carcass became unclean, probably until evening.

11:37, 38 Dry planting seed did not become unclean.

11:39, 40 if any animal … dies: This refers to animals that died of natural causes, and not those killed for food. The carcass caused the person who touched it to be unclean because its blood had not been drained. Eating from or carrying the carcass involved more than merely touching it and required a greater remedy—washing one's clothes as well as waiting until evening. Eating meat without draining its blood apparently was not as serious an offense as eating and drinking blood by itself (7:26, 27). Carrying the carcass would have been unavoidable in many situations—removing the animal for burial, for example. Uncleanness often was not a moral issue, at least in the way a person became unclean.

11:41–43 Crawls on its belly and has many feet are new descriptions. They were not mentioned in the previous ban on eating creeping things.

Not Like Others

People tend to put a lot of effort into being like those around them. But God challenges His people not to be like everybody else. In the OT, God instructed Israel not to pattern itself after the nations around it. Instead, He called the Israelites to consecrate themselves (set themselves apart from others) and be holy, for He, the Lord their God, was holy (Lev. 11:44, 45).

One of the main ways that Israel was to be different was in its worship. Worship in the surrounding cultures included many rituals that Israel was not to follow. These forbidden practices were based on values that were not holy or rooted in a high view of God, people, or creation. Among them were: • Divination or magic.

- Frenzied, chaotic dances.
- Self-mutilation.
- Ritual prostitution.
- Sensuality and orgiastic fertility rites.
- Human sacrifices.
- Sacrifices for the dead.

By contrast, Israel's worship was measured against God's holiness and defined the nation as God's people. There was no need to compete with other nations, cultures, or religions. The closing song at the end of Leviticus, Israel's manual for ritual and worship, says: "I will walk among you and be your God, and you shall be My people" (Lev. 26:12). This promise became a watchword for Israel (Hos. 1:9, 10; 2:23; Jer. 31:33; Ezek. 36:28). Later, the church also came to define itself as belonging to God first and foremost, with a responsibility for holy worship and living (1 Pet. 1:13–16; 2:9, 10).

11:44 I am the LORD your God: The word for LORD is Yahweh, the name by which God had revealed Himself to Moses (Ex. 3:14, 15; 6:2, 3). Consecrate yourselves means "make yourselves holy." You shall be holy; for I am holy: This is the foundation of the so-called Holiness Code of chs. 17—26. To be holy means to "be separate." God is holy as the transcendent Creator, above and apart from nature. To be separate to God is much more important than to be separate from other things. As God's people are separated to Him, we become more and more conformed to His image, to be the persons God intended us to be when He created the first man and the first woman in His image (Gen. 1:26, 27). Holiness in God's people involves grace, righteousness, integrity, peace, and mercy, because these are characteristics of the God who has redeemed us and whom we serve.

11:45 For emphasis, God reaffirmed His identity. Then He added an astounding commitment to Israel. His purpose in bringing them up out of the land of Egypt was to be their God. Because of God's holy nature, they too had to be holy.

11:46, 47 This statement summarizes the content and purpose of the chapter by listing again the four broad groupings of animals. To distinguish reminds the reader that these were instructions for the people as well as the priests. The priests were responsible for teaching the Israelites.

12:1, 2 The child did not cause the mother to be unclean. God had ordained and blessed childbirth from the beginning, even before the sin in the Garden (Gen. 1:28). Rather, it was the blood and other fluids in childbirth that made the mother ritually unclean for a period of time, just as other bodily fluids caused people to be unclean (ch. 15). This uncleanness was not necessarily a moral judgment on the mother. Seven days of uncleanness for a male child was the same length of time as the uncleanness for the woman's menstrual period or customary impurity (15:19–24).

12:3 Recent medical science has concluded that the eighth day is the best time for circumcision. Before the eighth day, blood does not clot as well, and after it, sensitivity to pain becomes greater. Circumcision was also practiced by groups such as the Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites. However, in Israel it was the outward symbol of God's covenant with Abraham (Gen. 17:9–14). The fact that the symbol involved the male reproductive organ was a reminder that God had promised Abraham many descendants.

12:4 The eighth day also marked the end of the mother's uncleanness with regard to everyday objects and activities; she no longer would make them unclean by touching them. But her personal uncleanness would continue for another thirty-three days. This corresponds with the medical characteristics of childbirth. After seven days, most discharges have ceased, but slight signs may continue for as long as six weeks. The phrase blood of her purification reminds us of this. Blood is the carrier of life in the body and the agent of purification from sin, both in the OT sacrificial system and Christ's sacrifice. At the same time, blood may become a source of pollution and death if it is taken lightly or not handled appropriately.

12:5 The birth of a female child doubled the period of ritual impurity. No reason is given.

12:6 The sacrifices required were the same for a son or a daughter, showing that God places equal value upon both sexes and that He intends His people to do the same. The burnt offering (ch. 1) and the sin offering (ch. 4) were two of the five regular offerings Israel had been instructed to bring before God. Following the birth of a child, these sacrifices were a woman's responsibility, though her husband normally would accompany her (Luke 2:22–24). The fact that the mother was to offer the sacrifices for herself reminds us that women were to be active participants in Israel's worship. A young pigeon or a turtledove was the least expensive offering. The poor could bring these birds when they could not afford a lamb (5:7).

12:7 The repetition here of the phrase a male or a female reemphasizes the equal worth of a girl and a boy.

12:8 If she is not able to bring a lamb is, literally, "If she cannot find in her hand enough for a lamb." Buying an animal for sacrifice was perhaps as common as raising one. Two points emphasized by this provision are: (1) the poor are not excluded from participation in the worship life of the community by reason of their poverty, and (2) the poor are not excused from participation by reason of their poverty. Mary, following the birth of Jesus and the days of her purification, went to the temple in Jerusalem in accordance with this regulation (Luke 2:22–24). Her offering was a pair of birds. Joseph and Mary obviously were poor; the Magi had not yet visited them with their expensive gifts for the newborn King.

13:1, 2 The Hebrew word for a man (adam) means a “human being”—anyone. A swelling, a scab, or a bright spot would often be a minor ailment that healed within a few days and caused no further concern. If a condition persisted, and became like a leprous sore, it required further attention. Any given sore might or might not be leprous; that was for the priest to determine by examination.

The Hebrew word tsaraat (translated “leprous” here) denotes many serious skin and scalp diseases; rabbinic discussions noted as many as seventy-two. Whether classic leprosy (Hansen’s disease) is included is a matter of vigorous debate; none of its typical symptoms is covered in the prescribed diagnoses of this chapter. While Hansen’s disease may be included, it is not the primary focus of the chapter. he shall be brought: The most serious result of the priest’s examination was to be declared unclean and banished from the camp. The natural tendency would be to put off seeing the priest about a condition. However, ritual uncleanness was a serious matter for all the people. It was important to diagnose skin problems immediately so that the whole camp did not become unclean. If the afflicted person did not come on his own initiative, his family and clan leaders were responsible for bringing him.

13:3–44 Seven cases of diseases involving the skin, the scalp, and the hair are in view. Basic cases are given with their diagnoses, followed by variations with their diagnoses. Several general principles emerge. (1) Often a second (even a third) examination after seven, and fourteen, days was required to make the diagnosis. (2) If the malady had not spread or deepened in the skin, or if discoloration had faded, the person was clean. (3) If the malady had spread, deepened, or become more raw or discolored, it was leprosy (13:2), and the person was unclean. (4) Between examinations, the patient could be isolated, or quarantined, for the protection of the community, in case the diagnosis should be “unlcean.”

13:3 The priest shall examine: The priest made the diagnosis. However, nothing is said about how to treat the ailments. The subject of the passage is not medical treatment but ritual impurity, and making sure that the community of Israel, and particularly the tabernacle, would not become unclean.

13:4–6 he shall wash his clothes: Personal hygiene was an important factor in identifying and preventing the spread of infectious diseases, even those that did not cause a person to be unclean.

13:7–11 shall not isolate him: Isolation, or quarantine, was for the purpose of protecting the community until a diagnosis was reached. In this case, the patient was already diagnosed as unclean, which meant he had to live outside the camp (v. 46).

IN DEPTH

Leprosy

Leprosy (Lev. 13:12) was one of the most feared diseases in the ancient world. Lepers suffered from a slowly progressing, ordinarily incurable skin disease that was believed to be highly contagious. As a result, anyone who appeared to have leprosy, even if the symptoms were caused by some other condition, was banished from the community.

True leprosy is caused by a bacterium that spreads across the skin, creating sores, scabs, and white shining spots. The most serious problem, however, is a loss of sensation. Without the ability to feel, lepers injure their tissue, leading to further infection, deformity, muscle loss, and eventual paralysis. Fortunately, modern medicine has all but eliminated the disease.

The Law was quite detailed in its instructions regarding recognition and quarantine of leprous persons. Priests became the central figures for diagnosis, care of patients, and taking sanitary precautions to protect the rest of the community. The Law required that a leper be isolated from the rest of society (Lev. 13:45, 46). Infected persons were required to wear mourning clothes, leave their hair in disorder, keep their beards covered, and cry 'Unclean! Unclean!' so that others could avoid them. Any contact would defile the person who touched a leper.

Sometimes lepers were miraculously cured, as in the case of Moses (Ex. 4:7), his sister Miriam (Num. 12:10), and Naaman (2 Kin. 5:1, 10), and Jesus healed lepers as a sign to vindicate His ministry. On one occasion He healed ten of them but only one returned to thank Him (Luke 17:11–15).

13:12–15 Raw flesh, here, is ulcerated, literally, "living," flesh. Flesh normally is hidden by the skin. If the skin is so damaged or eaten away by the disease that it can be seen, that disease is serious and dangerous and the person is unclean.

13:16–44 Some of these diseases were healed, either spontaneously or with treatment. After another examination, the priest would then pronounce the patient clean.

13:45, 46 his clothes … his mustache: These actions were signs of mourning because the afflictions were symbolic of death and decay. The afflicted person might as well have been dead as far as contact with the community or opportunity to worship in the sanctuary was concerned. ‘Unclean! Unclean!’: The afflicted person had to warn people away. Others would become unclean by coming into contact with him. All the days: Not every disease was incurable. Some people recovered and upon examination by the priest were allowed back into society and worship in the sanctuary. He shall dwell alone … outside the camp: This ensured that the rest of the community and the sanctuary did not become ritually impure. The community was also protected from the unchecked spread of the disease. The serious skin diseases became a metaphor for sin. Like them, sin is dangerous and ultimately fatal, often difficult to diagnose, and incurable without God’s intervention. Sin isolates its victims from God and His worship, and from the community of faith.

13:47–59 These are regulations about impurities in fabric and leather. They are grouped with human skin diseases and identified by the same Hebrew term (tsaraat; 13:2) because they also are impurities on the surface and tend to spread, decay, and destroy the garment, just as the skin diseases do the persons afflicted with them.

13:47 Leprous plague would include any mold, mildew, or other fungus growths on clothing.

13:48 Warp and woof is a difficult phrase, probably meaning the entirety of the garment through and through, though not necessarily throughout its length and breadth.

13:49–58 The procedures for diagnosing a problem with a garment were similar to those for diagnosing human skin ailments. A seven-day period of quarantine and a second examination were required. Infected garments had to be burned. If the plague had not spread, a garment could be salvaged.

13:56–59 The fact that a garment was considered worth saving even after a piece had been torn out of it indicates how valuable cloth was in the ancient world. Cloth was the product of many hours of hard work and was not lightly thrown away.

14:1–32 This passage details the ritual for cleansing a healed leper.

14:2 He shall be brought to the priest: The priest was responsible for diagnosing the uncleanness, so it was necessary for him to administer the sacrifices and other rituals that marked and celebrated the return of the person to the community of Israel.

14:3 The priest shall go out of the camp: Even if the person was healed, he still was unclean and could not come into the camp until the proper rituals had been carried out (v. 8). This does not contradict the instructions to bring the person to the priest; the priest came outside the camp and the person was brought to him there. if the leprosy is healed: These rites were not for healing. They were to confirm and celebrate the healing that already had occurred, to cleanse the recovered patient, and to readmit him or her into the community and its worship.

14:4 Cedar wood was used perhaps because of its durability and resistance to decay, symbolizing the patient's recovery from the decay that had threatened his life. Scarlet was probably a scarlet thread or cord. Scarlet symbolized blood, the agent in the sacrificial system that brought victory over sin and death. Hyssop was an aromatic herb used for food flavoring, fragrance, and medicine.

14:5 Running water is literally, "living water." This is water from a spring or stream, as opposed to water from a cistern, vessel, or pool. Stagnant water symbolized potential death; living water symbolized life. The blood of the bird ran into the water in the earthen vessel.

14:6, 7 It is likely that the sprigs of hyssop were tied to the cedar wood with the scarlet thread. With that in one hand and the living bird in the other hand, the priest would dip them all in the blood and water mixture in the pottery bowl and then shake them over the head of the one to be cleansed. This procedure was performed seven times. The dead bird represented the death the patient had escaped; the sprinkling began the process of ritual cleansing that allowed the person to reenter the community and its worship. After being dipped in the blood of the dead bird, the living bird was let loose in the open field. It symbolically took away from the camp and the tabernacle the uncleanness of the person who was returning to the camp.

14:8, 9 Two washings of clothes and body and two head shavings, seven days apart, completed the ritual cleansing. These certainly served a hygienic purpose, removing residual scales and flakes that might have passed on contagious diseases to others. Shaving was a drastic procedure for ancient Israel (2 Sam. 10:4, 5). New growing hair would have reassured everyone that the person truly was healed.

14:10–12 The eighth day was the day of circumcision for a newborn male. The symbolism of starting again, almost of being born again into the community of faith, was continued. three-tenths of an ephah: About nine pounds. one log of oil: About two-thirds of a pint.

14:13 in the place … holy place: These offerings were brought to the door of the tabernacle (1:3; 4:4, 14). The place where the lamb was killed is referred to as the holy place. Therefore, it must have been inside the door, in the court of the tabernacle, rather than outside.

14:14–18 These rites are similar to Moses' actions in consecrating Aaron and his sons as priests (8:23). They encompassed the entire body, symbolizing a reversal in the person's status before God, from unclean and outside the community to a full member of the community once again.

14:19, 20 With these three offerings and the trespass offering (v. 12), the formerly unclean person had brought all the mandatory sacrifices that it was impossible to bring during the time of uncleanness.

14:21–32 God's legislation for Israel showed special concern for the poor. In these sacrifices, the poor Israelite still had to bring a lamb for the trespass offering. But for the sin offering and the burnt offering, he was allowed to bring turtledoves or pigeons. In addition, the grain offering was reduced from three-tenths to one-tenth of an ephah of fine flour. The ritual for restoring a poor person to the community was essentially the same as it was for other Israelites.

IN DEPTH

Rituals Against Fungus

Israel's laws included regulations for dealing with a "leprous plague in the house" (Lev. 14:33–53). The Hebrew word translated "leprous plague" pertains to various infestations. When used to describe the deterioration of garments (Lev. 13:47) and houses, it probably refers to decay caused by fungus, mildew, mold, or dry rot.

Any house in Israel that was discolored with mildew caused by fungus-producing organisms was quarantined (14:36–38). The structure had to be cleansed physically and ritually, with effected areas of stone being scraped, or replaced and re-mortared (14:40–42). If efforts were successful, the priest pronounced the house clean and performed a purification ritual (14:48–53).

This Mosaic cleansing ritual can be compared with two Mesopotamian texts. One is a quotation from a Babylonian omen series, which prescribes a ritual to the gods Ea and Ishum. Another ritual is mentioned in a letter to Esarhaddon, the king of Assyria (680–B.C.).

The omen reads: "If there is a fungus in a man's house, on the outer north wall, the owner of the house will die and his house will be scattered." To avert evil, the owner is instructed to gather the fungus (in a particular manner) and burn it with a torch, placing mud and gypsum around it. The person must then recite an incantation to Ea (the god of wisdom) and sacrifice a sheep to the god Ishum. Holy water is then sprinkled on the person while another incantation is recited.

The letter to Esarhaddon confirms the existence of a prayer and a ritual for two types of fungus that had appeared on the inner courtyard of the temple of Nabu. The author of the letter states that a technician, meaning a priest, will perform the appropriate ritual several times the next morning.

14:33–53 Regulations about mildew and mold in houses. Like humans and clothing, the house had to be inspected by the priest. If the symptoms were present, the house was quarantined for a week, as garments and humans were. As with garments, an attempt was made to save the house by replacing only the infected portion. If the mildew or mold reappeared, the house was torn down. Israelite houses typically were built of mud brick on a stone foundation. The walls were plastered with a lime plaster. Mildew and other growths on the plaster, or coming through from the inside, were possible though probably not common. When they occurred and spread aggressively, they would have been a serious problem.

14:34–44 The land of Canaan, which I give you refers to the land God had promised Abraham He would give to his descendants (Gen. 15:18–21; Deut. 6:10, 11; 8:7–9). Leprous plague is the same Hebrew term used in 13:2 to indicate serious skin diseases that could come upon humans. All of these were harmful growths, whether on human skin, clothing, or the wall of a house.

14:45, 46 If every effort to save the house failed, it was destroyed and removed so the rest of the houses of the town would not become infected with the problem.

14:47 Lies down probably means to sleep overnight in the house.

14:48–53 The rite for cleansing a house of its uncleanness was the same as for cleansing a person.

14:54–57 This statement concludes the section 13:1—14:57. Again, the common characteristic of these problems, whether on persons, garments, or the walls of houses, was that they were harmful surface growths. Their uncleanness required action. If it could not be removed, the thing that carried the uncleanness had to be removed from among God’s people. Uncleanness today still requires action. But God has provided an infinitely stronger remedy for human uncleanness—the blood of Christ, which cleanses initially and then continues to cleanse the believer moment by moment.

15:1, 2 any man: Regulations about female discharges begin in v. 19. Discharge refers to any abnormal flow. Body, literally, “flesh,” is used here as a euphemism for the sexual organ.

15:3 A Hebrew verb for runs is used only here; a noun denotes a thick slimy substance. His body is stopped up may better be translated, “His body has stopped its discharge.” If the urinary tract were completely blocked, uncleanness would not be the concern, but life and death; the subject would die in about a day. This verse seems to mean that even if the abnormal discharge stopped temporarily, the man still was regarded as unclean. A remission of seven days was required for him to consider himself cleansed from his discharge (v. 13).

15:4–12 A man with a discharge was unclean, as was anyone who came into contact with him, his spit, or any object that he touched. The other person made unclean was required to wash his clothes and himself and would be unclean until evening. Whether Israel understood the hygienic principles or not, this practice of cleanliness promoted better health by reducing the transmission of disease. Its primary purpose remained, however, to teach Israel that God is holy and requires a holy people for His own. Disease and uncleanness tend toward disorder, decay, and death, the opposite of the holiness, wholeness, and health that God ultimately intends His people to enjoy in every dimension of their lives.

15:12 The vessel of earth … of wood: Here the purpose was to prevent the spread of the disease through food and food utensils.

15:13 Seven days was enough time to be sure the discharge really had ceased.

15:14, 15 Two turtledoves or two young pigeons was the smallest, least expensive sacrifice allowed. The degree of uncleanness caused by genital discharges was less than that caused by skin diseases. These sacrifices would have atoned for any sins he had committed while he was unclean and barred from the tabernacle.

15:16, 17 This passage concerns emissions of semen apart from sexual intercourse, which is the subject of v. 18.

15:18 Both the male and the female are involved in sexual intercourse. Both had to wash afterward, and both were ritually unclean until evening. Gen. 1 and 2 portray sexual intercourse as God’s plan from the beginning. Therefore, this uncleanness and requirement of washing does not mean that sexual intercourse is sinful. Here, too, hygiene is a limited consideration; washing promoted cleanliness and health. But the greater concern of this regulation was with ritual purity; sexual intercourse prevented access to the tabernacle until evening. Obviously, then, sexual intercourse was forbidden within the precincts of the tabernacle. By contrast, the Canaanites used sexual rites within their temples to remind Baal, the storm god, to "impregnate" the earth by bringing on the winter rainy season and thus ensure the fertility of field, flock, and family. God's removal of sex from the sanctuary through this regulation was intended to prevent Israel confusing Baal worship with the worship of Yahweh.

15:19–24 This passage provides regulations concerning a woman's menstrual period. Her ritual uncleanness lasted seven days. As was the case with a man's discharge, any person or object she touched became unclean.

15:24 This regulation did not forbid intercourse during menstruation; read, however, 18:19; 20:18. The man became ritually unclean for seven days, the same length of time as for the woman. No sacrifice was required; menstruation was not regarded as sinful.

15:25–27 If a woman had a flow of blood at any time other than her normal monthly period, or if her period lasted longer than usual, her uncleanness continued the whole time and passed to all she touched. Such was the case with the woman who touched Jesus secretly (Luke 8:43–48).

15:28–30 At the end of her abnormal discharge, a woman's obligation was the same as a man's. This is another indication of her standing before God, of her right and duty to offer sacrifice on her own behalf in the tabernacle. She was to bring the smallest allowable sacrifice for the atonement of sins she may have committed during the period of her uncleanness, when she was barred from the tabernacle.

15:31–33 Hygiene and health were important byproducts, but the focus of these regulations concerning uncleanness was on keeping God's tabernacle undefiled so that Israel would have a place to come for the atonement of sin and the privilege of meeting with God.

16:1–34 This chapter about the Day of Atonement stands at the center of Leviticus at the center of the Pentateuch. The Day of Atonement marked the most important, most comprehensive drawing near of all Israel to God in the entire year. The rabbis called it “the day,” or “the great day.” An entire tractate of the Mishnah is devoted to it, and it remains the most sacred day of the Jewish faith. Luke called it “the Fast” (Acts 27:9). Much of its symbolism relates to Christ’s atoning death.

16:1 The two sons of Aaron died because of how they offered profane fire, literally, “drew near,” before the LORD. If Aaron was to draw near to the Lord and be Israel’s intermediary, he had to know how to do it properly to avoid the fate his sons had suffered. This reference continues the narrative of ch. 10. Chapters 11—15 intervene not for chronological but for theological reasons. The physical uncleannesses of individuals, barring their access to the tabernacle until they were cleansed, stood as metaphors, object lessons, for the moral uncleannesses of all the people that needed expiation on the Day of Atonement.

16:2, 3 God’s command not to come at just any time refers to the arrogant attitude with which Aaron’s sons had approached to offer unauthorized sacrifice (10:1). the Holy Place inside the veil: The Most Holy Place, the inner sanctuary of the tabernacle, was separated from the larger room (the holy place) by a veil of fine blue, purple, and scarlet linen (Ex. 26:31). lest he die: Carelessly approaching the presence of God was dangerous.

16:4, 5 Holy garments are not the elaborate robe and accessories described in Ex. 28, but the simple linen garments the priests wore when on duty at the altar. On this day, the high priest went in simplicity and humility; he offered atonement for himself first, then for his family, and finally for all of Israel.

16:6, 7 After atoning for himself, the high priest could offer the sacrifice to atone for the people. The author of Hebrews places great emphasis on this point in discussing the superior priesthood of Jesus (Heb. 7:26–28; 9:11–28; 10:19–22).

16:8–10 For the scapegoat is literally, “for Azazel.” The meaning of the term is vigorously debated. Some take it to be an abstract noun, meaning “for complete removal.” Others see it as a place name, or the name of a wilderness demon. If the third position is correct, it is important to stress that this goat was not a sacrifice to a demon. Sending the goat to the wilderness demon then would signify sending the people's sins far away from them and back to their demonic source, where they never again could harm them.

16:11–14 Only on this day each year did the High Priest enter the Holy of Holies. He carried a container of bull's blood (his own sin offering) together with the censer of burning coals and two handfuls of sweet incense. It is not clear whether he placed the incense in the censer before or after entering the Holy of Holies. But it was the aroma of the burning incense that protected him (compare Num. 16:46–50).

16:12 beaten fine: That is, of the highest quality.

16:13, 14 on the east side: That is, at Yahweh's feet, since Yahweh was represented as sitting on the mercy seat, facing eastward.

16:15–19 Aaron offered the goat … for the people. The further actions involved in this sacrifice made it clear that the sins of the people had a defiling effect on the tabernacle. If not removed, the sins would have caused the ministry to be ineffective in atoning for the people.

“transgression”

(Heb. pesha) (Lev. 16:16, 21; Ps. 32:1, 5). Strong’s #6588: This Hebrew word is derived from the verb pasha, which can mean “to revolt” (2 Kin. 8:20), “to offend” (Prov. 18:19), or “to transgress” in the sense of crossing a boundary (Jer. 3:13). It refers to violations of God’s Law as revealed to Moses; in other words, someone crossing the limits that God had established. Although rebelling against God was a grave mistake, the Lord made provision for Israel’s “transgressions” in the Day of Atonement (Lev. 16:15–19). The priest could make atonement for Israel’s sin, and the nation could be reconciled to God. Like ancient Israel, we are in rebellion against God. In fact, it was “our transgressions” that wounded Jesus (Is. 53:5, 8; 1 Pet. 2:24).

16:17 Though on other days, other priests officiated in the tabernacle of meeting, on this day only the High Priest himself was to be within the entire sacred precinct, including both the Holy Place and the Holy of Holies.

16:18, 19 The altar is either the altar of incense within the Holy Place or the altar of sacrifice in the outer court of the tabernacle; both had horns. Since no other furniture is mentioned, it may be that the atonement for the Holy of Holies covered all the furnishings inside the tabernacle and that the atonement for the altar of sacrifice covered all the furnishings in the tabernacle’s outer court.

16:20 Aaron performed these actions out of the sight of the people.

16:21 Sending the goat into the wilderness was a public ceremony. Everyone could see Aaron symbolically place the sins of the people on the goat’s head. Iniquities … transgressions … sins cover all of the ways in which people could offend God. All of these offenses were placed on the head of the goat, which took them away from the camp, away from the people, and away from God. A suitable man was a man who was ready and waiting to perform this task.

16:22 shall bear on itself all their iniquities: This is the origin of the common expression “scapegoat.” This goat was not guilty of the sins he bore, but he bore them anyway, allowing the guilty to escape the consequences of their sins. In Jesus’ bearing the sins of the human race, and in His death outside the city (outside the camp), He fulfilled this annual ritual of the Day of Atonement. Not only was Jesus the perfect High Priest; He was the perfect Sacrifice.

16:23–28 With the tabernacle cleansed of the accumulated guilt of the people, Aaron could sacrifice the burnt offering for himself and the one for the people in the normal manner, as prescribed in Lev. 1.

16:25, 26 Aaron burned the fat of the sin offering as instructed in 4:8–10.

16:27, 28 The bull and goat of the two sin offerings were burned according to the instructions in 4:11, 12.

16:29–34 A summary of the rites of the Day of Atonement. Three times the phrase a statute forever occurs (vv. 29, 31, 34). This was to be the most important day of the year for Israel, and it was not to cease until the One came who would fulfill permanently all its provisions. The Hebrew word translated "forever" may mean "to the end of the age." The death of Christ, a permanently effectual sacrifice—by contrast with those of the Day of Atonement, that had to be repeated every year—brought to a close one age and ushered in the beginning of another. Even now, however, it would not be inappropriate to observe this as a day of remembrance for Christ's atonement. Some Jewish believers do observe the day in this way.

16:29, 30 In the seventh month: The Day of Atonement fell between mid-September and mid-October. afflict your souls: Examine yourselves, repent of wrong actions and attitudes, and seek God's forgiveness. The mere actions of the sacrifices, without genuine repentance, were useless.

16:31 A sabbath of solemn rest was more sacred and more strictly observed than the normal weekly Sabbath.

16:32, 33 In his father's place emphasizes that this day was to be observed throughout Israel's generations.

16:34 And he did as the LORD commanded Moses indicates that Aaron, as high priest, carried out everything God had commanded for this all-important day.

17:1–26:46 This section, mostly of laws for ethical and moral living, is often called the Holiness Code. After the first half of the book, dealing with sacrifices, ritual purity, and the Day of Atonement (how to become and remain clean and forgiven), this section gives instruction on how a clean and forgiven people, a holy people, are to live.

17:1–7 From the way this regulation begins, some have understood it to mean that every slaughtered animal had to be brought to the tabernacle, whether it was killed as a sacrifice or only for the private use of its owner. But its language, and the reasons given, indicate that this regulation covers only animals intended for, or used for, sacrifice. These were to be brought to the door of the tabernacle in accordance with the earlier sacrificial regulations. This was intended to prevent two abuses: (1) killing an animal for the private use, saying liturgical words over it, and imagining one had offered a legitimate sacrifice to Yahweh, and (2) offering a sacrifice to a demon of the field or other pagan deity.

17:3 Whatever man: There were to be no exceptions. Kills probably indicates a sacrifice, for only the sacrificial animals the ox, lamb, and goat are listed. Animals with defects that did not threaten human health were slaughtered for their meat, but were not acceptable for sacrifice

17:4 The guilt of bloodshed usually refers to killing a human being. However, the blood of the sacrifice was the only means of atonement for sin; to desecrate this provision from God was not a light offense.

17:5 Which they offer means “which they might offer.” Sacrifice in an open field was prohibited.

17:6, 7 Demons were pagan deities in the form of goats, like satyrs, who were thought to inhabit the wilderness. Israel probably came in contact with satyr worship when they settled in Goshen (Gen. 47:1–6). They have played the harlot indicates (1) Israel’s worship of other gods and (2) God’s attitude to this worship. Adultery was a serious sin; forsaking one’s faith in God was an even more serious sin. Apostasy hurts Him deeply. A statute forever is another clue that this regulation was not about slaughtering animals for meat, but about animals offered in sacrifice. When Israel’s worship was centralized in Jerusalem, some families lived more than a hundred miles from the temple. It would have been impossible for them to travel to Jerusalem each time they killed an animal for meat. However, they could travel to Jerusalem every time they offered a sacrifice.

A Place to Be Forgiven

For the Hebrews, there was only one place to worship God by offering sacrifices—at the tabernacle (Lev. 17:8, 9). This is not to say that one could not worship God elsewhere. But to make atonement for sin, one had to come to the altar, where a priest offered up a sacrifice according to the highly detailed instructions in the Law. Believers today are fortunate. Our high priest, Jesus, offered a sacrifice for our sins once and for all when He died on the Cross (Heb. 10:11–14). As a result, we can receive forgiveness for sins anytime, anyplace. We are not required to go to a specific location for this purpose or to perform a certain ritual. We need only draw near to God through Christ with a "true heart" and confess our sins (Heb. 10:19–22).

17:8, 9 This regulation specifically extends the command to strangers who dwell among you.

17:10 Eating blood was forbidden in the strongest possible terms. Any blood means blood in any form, including blood not drained from the animal when it was slaughtered.

17:11, 12 This verse explains the basis of blood atonement. The life of animals and of humans is in the blood. If a creature loses its blood, it loses its life. I have given emphasizes that blood has no intrinsic power to atone for sin. God appointed blood to have this power because it represents the life of the creature. A life may receive atonement only by the sacrifice of a life. The author of Hebrews emphasized the temporary nature of animal blood sacrifices. They required constant renewal. However, Jesus' one-time sacrifice of Himself is effective eternally (Heb. 9:12–14, 25–28).

17:13, 14 Wild animals and most birds were not eligible for sacrifice even if they were clean. Their blood poured out and covered with dust, however, acknowledged God's claim on all blood as the sustainer of the creature's life and the medium to effect atonement. Blood was not to be handled carelessly but reverently.

17:13 That may be eaten refers to animals that are clean according to the regulations in ch. 11. Cover it with dust is a token of burial.

17:14, 15 The reason for uncleanness in this context was contact with a carcass in which there was still blood that had not been drained. The Law forbade eating any animal that had died a natural death (Deut. 14:21). In such cases, a person became ritually unclean until evening, the mildest degree of uncleanness.

17:16 guilt: The mild degree of ritual uncleanness became a serious sin if the required cleansing was not done.

18:1, 2 The LORD here translates the divine name Yahweh, the name by which God revealed Himself to Moses in Ex. 6:2, 3. In using this name, God was basing His claim to the Israelites' devotion on His willingness to reveal Himself to them, to redeem them, and to be their God.

18:3 Israel had lived in Egypt for generations and had been dominated by the Egyptians. Canaan is the land God was going to give Israel. The Israelites would be tempted to imitate the Canaanites physically, culturally, and religiously.

Saved by Grace Or Effort?

God promised that whoever kept His statutes and judgments "shall live by them" (Lev. 18:5; compare Gal. 3:10–12), but the question remains exactly what is meant by the term "live." The context makes it doubtful that He was speaking of eternal salvation. More likely, He was indicating a quality of life that those who honor His ways will tend to experience. God wanted His people to live in purity, as distinct from the Egyptians, whose ordinances and customs He regarded as "abominable" (Lev. 18:3, 30). As for eternal life, Scripture is clear that salvation does not depend on human effort. It is always a gift of God's grace (Rom. 10:12, 13; Eph. 2:8, 9).

18:4, 5 ordinances … statutes: These are decrees, laws, and acts of a permanent nature. Judgments (Heb. mishpatim) refers to judicial decisions involving situations that might not be addressed in the statutes. Through the ordinances and the judgments of God, Israel would know how to live. he shall live by them: God gave the law as a means of life on all levels—physical, moral, spiritual, and relational. However, as Paul observed, when the law was violated, it became a cause of death (Rom. 7:10–12). At that point, a greater remedy than the law was needed. This remedy is in Christ.

18:6–18 Israel's laws against incest were more complete and more advanced than any others in the ancient world. Genetic consequences of inbreeding and harmony in domestic relations are practical reasons for observing these taboos. But these are not the reasons emphasized in this list of forbidden unions. The incentive to obey lay in the positive urge to be faithful to Yahweh and to avoid the entrapments of the pagan practices of Israel's neighbors.

18:6 Anyone who is near of kin covers cases such as incest between father and daughter and between brother and full sister, even though they are absent from the following list. All the cases that appear in the list are based on blood relationship or marriage. To uncover someone's nakedness is to have sexual intercourse with that person.

18:7 The nakedness of your father does not imply a homosexual act. Rather, it emphasizes that to commit incest with the wife of one's father is symbolically to uncover the father's nakedness also, because the two are one flesh through marriage.

18:8 Father's wife may refer to a father's marriage partner after the death or divorce of one's mother, or it may refer to a wife or concubine who is not one's mother.

18:9, 10 Your sister refers to a half sister, since she is defined either as the daughter of your father or the daughter of your mother. Elsewhere refers to cases in which a father maintained multiple households of wives or concubines. It may also refer to illegitimate half sisters.

18:11, 12 Here, begotten by your father is a legal and not a biological term to indicate adoption. Legally she would be a full sister.

18:13–17 a woman and her daughter: This might involve a widow who lived with her daughter and son-in-law. Nor shall you take is a different verb; usually it means "to marry" in a context like this. Perhaps to marry a woman's granddaughter after having sexual union with her was not technically incest but close enough to be labeled wickedness and to be unacceptable.

18:18 as a rival to her sister: An example of the problems this situation can cause is the family life of Jacob, who married the sisters Leah and Rachel. Jacob, of course, did not violate this restriction, since it had not yet been given.

18:19 Her customary impurity refers to a woman's menstrual period. Sexual intercourse during this time was forbidden because the woman was ritually impure, and intercourse would make the man ritually impure as well.

18:20 Adultery is forbidden in Ex. 20:14; its penalty is given in Lev. 20:10.

18:21 Any of your descendants is literally, "of your seed." This usage ties this prohibition to the rest of the section on misuse of one's seed. Little is known about the Canaanite deity Molech, whose worshipers sacrificed their children to him as a whole burnt offering. Late in the Monarchy period this was done at a location called Tophet in the Hinnom Valley on the west side of Jerusalem (Jer. 7:31). Of course this practice was abhorrent to Yahweh. Ezekiel 16, which portrays Judah as His faithless wife, depicts these children sacrificed to Molech as God's own sons and daughters, slain by their own mother (vv. 20, 21).

18:22 Homosexuality here is labeled an abomination, something detestable to God both ritually and morally. Ritually, it was detestable partly because it was practiced in Canaanite religion, which God had commanded Israel not to follow.

18:23 Bestiality is labeled perversion, something out of the natural order. It, too, was a feature of some of the religions of Israel's neighbors.

18:24–30 The land had become so defiled by the perverted practices of the Canaanites that it was vomiting them out. For that reason, the land would be available to Israel to settle. The Israelites, however, needed to be careful to live as God's holy people in the land or it would vomit them out as well.

19:1–37 These laws about holy living in the community of faith seem quite diverse and unorganized. But they reflect three principle themes: (1) faithfulness and love to Yahweh; (2) faithfulness and love in personal relationships; (3) faithfulness defined as justice in business and legal affairs. Together they represent most areas of daily living; all of life is to be lived holy unto God. We should notice also that these laws relate back to the Ten Commandments (Ex. 20:3–17). Many do so quite directly, some less so, but all find their foundation there.

19:1–3 Revere means to respect and to obey. Under normal circumstances, young children are to obey their parents. Adult children are to respect their parents and concern themselves with their parents' welfare. keep My Sabbaths: The weekly Sabbath was an acknowledgment that not everything depended on the Israelites' efforts. It was an acknowledgment of God's lordship and His grace. It was valuable for worship, for rest and healing, for building relationships with family, and for regaining or strengthening an eternal perspective (Mark 2:23—3:5).

19:4, 5 The peace offering was a free will offering. Just like the Israelites, when we have peace, or wholeness, in God through the peace offering of Christ (Col. 1:19, 20), we can offer freely everything we are, everything we have, and everything we do.

19:6–10 Providing for the poor and the stranger (the alien who could not own land) was a priority in ancient Israelite society. Reserving the gleanings of a harvest for the poor is a very effective way of providing food for them. I am the LORD your God: The generosity of God's people was rooted in God's generosity toward the Israelites.

19:11–13 wages … until morning: A day laborer needed his pay daily to provide food for himself and his family. To withhold it for one's own gain or convenience created a hardship for him and was forbidden (Deut. 24:14, 15; James 5:4).

19:14 Taking advantage of those with physical limitations is forbidden, whether for profit, for spite, for ridicule, or as a practical joke. Not only is it wrong, it is dangerous, for God himself is their Champion.

19:15 In court, neither the poor, nor the mighty, nor even a person's neighbor were to be given any special treatment.

What a Difference God Makes!

The commands of God always flow out of His character. The numerous commands in Lev. 19 are related to holiness because "I the LORD your God am holy" (Lev. 19:2). Here are several standards that a holy God enacted on His people: • Respect for parents (19:3).

- Keeping the Sabbath (19:3, 30).
- Forsaking idolatry (19:4).
- Concern for the poor (19:10).
- Honesty and integrity in business (19:11, 12, 35, 36).
- Protection of the physically challenged (19:14).
- Justice and truth in speech (19:16).
- Loving one's neighbor as oneself (19:18).
- Five years without harvesting a fruit tree for food (19:25).
- Dignified mourning (19:28).
- Forsaking magic and witchcraft (19:31).
- Respect for the elderly (19:32).
- Loving treatment of aliens (the "stranger," 19:34).
- Keeping the whole Law (19:37).

Notice the single reason given for all of the preceding statutes: "I am the LORD your God!"

19:16 A talebearer is not just a gossip, but a slanderer, actively seeking to destroy another's reputation. take a stand … neighbor: Probably several kinds of cases could be included. In the context of the court in this paragraph, probably false swearing causing the death of the defendant, or failing to give testimony that would exonerate the accused, are most prominently in view.

19:17 hate your brother in your heart: Jesus addressed this principle in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:21–24). rebuke your neighbor: The way to avoid letting hatred build up was to confront the person. Ideally this would involve resolving the issue face to face. However, it also could involve taking the issue to court to settle it legally rather than taking it into one's own hands or allowing it to fester in one's heart.

19:18 Vengeance belongs to God (Deut. 32:35), partly because human vengeance often is carried out too zealously. God's vengeance is entirely just. Bear any grudge means actively keeping a grudge alive with an eye toward vengeance. You shall love your neighbor as yourself: Jesus identified this as one of only two commandments that, if kept, would fulfill all of the Law (Matt. 22:37–40).

19:19 Holiness means purity, in three important areas: (1) animal husbandry, (2) agriculture, and (3) domestic life. This principle also reflects reverence for creation as God made it.

19:20 The concubine, a woman of low social standing and few rights, may not have had the freedom to cry out when approached sexually. Therefore, she remained guiltless. Because the woman was a slave, the man escaped death but remained guilty before God. Atonement was necessary for him to receive forgiveness. There shall be scourging may be rephrased as "damages must be paid." The woman's owner probably received the compensation, since the passage emphasizes that no money had yet been paid for her.

19:21–25 The most common reason suggested for this regulation is that young trees need to preserve their strength for themselves rather than putting it into fruit. In that case, the owner probably would have clipped off the blossoms in the first three years. The harvest of the fourth year was a kind of firstfruits (2:14). From the fifth year, the harvest belonged to the owner—after the firstfruits of each year's harvest had been given to God. that it may yield to you its increase: Faithfulness in observing this regulation was rewarded by increase in the production of fruit from the fifth year on.

19:26 Divination and soothsaying reveal a lack of trust in God to bring the best possible future. God, and not some demon or impersonal force, is all-powerful and directs the future.

19:27 Beards were standard among Israelite men. Shaving one's hair or beard often was a sign of mourning.

19:28 The human body was designed by God, who intended it to be whole and beautiful. Disfiguring the body dishonored God, in whose image the person was created. Cutting one's flesh for the dead and tattooing (or perhaps painting) one's body had religious significance among Israel's pagan neighbors. In Israel, such practices were signs of rebellion against God.

19:29 Fathers exercised total control over their daughters in Israel's patriarchal society. For a man in debt, facing the loss of his land, hiring out his daughter as a prostitute might have seemed like an attractive alternative. However, sexual relations are sacred. Forcing a daughter to violate that sanctity defiled her against her will.

“sanctuary”

(Heb. miqdash) (Lev. 19:30; Ex. 15:17; 25:8) Strong’s #4720: This noun means “holy place,” a place separated and dedicated to God. It was the place where God had chosen to meet the Israelites. There priests would atone for the people’s sin; in turn, the people would offer their worship and praise. Because it was God’s dwelling place, the priests were prohibited from defiling it by entering while they were ceremonially unclean (21:12). But most important, the Israelites had to respect the sanctuary by approaching it with a contrite heart and a determination to praise their Creator. Just as Moses had to respect the ground where God made His presence known (Ex. 3:5), so now the Israelites had to respect the place where God had chosen to meet them.

19:30 An important, if familiar reminder. Repetition indicates its great importance.

19:31 Mediums and familiar spirits are different from what is mentioned in v. 26. Both of these may involve consulting the spirits of the dead. All contact with these or other spirits was strictly forbidden in Israel. It demonstrated lack of faith in and rebellion against God.

19:32 To rise when an elder entered one’s presence was another way of showing reverence for God and submission to Him..

19:33, 34 Generous treatment of a stranger, or a resident alien, in the land was based on God’s generous treatment of the Israelites when they were strangers in the land of Egypt. What God had done for them they were to pass along to others. This is still a good principle for God’s people to follow. In v. 18, the Israelites were instructed, “Love your neighbor as yourself.” Verse 34 expands that standard to include strangers. Jesus gave the definitive illustration of this principle in His story of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:30–36).

19:35–37 Injustice in judgment is injustice in legal transactions (vv. 11, 12, 15–18). Injustice … in measurement is one kind of injustice in business transactions. ephah: About five gallons. hin: A little less than a gallon. Once again, the fact that God had brought the Israelites out of the land of Egypt is cited as reason to believe He would provide for all of their needs. God had treated the Israelites generously. They could afford to treat each other fairly in their business dealings.

20:1–27 Specific penalties for specific transgressions. Every offence dealt with in Lev. 20 had been touched on before, mostly in chs. 18 and 19. The laws of those two chapters are mostly apodictic; that is, they are absolute commands or prohibitions setting forth laws in the form of timeless principles. The laws of ch. 20 are mostly casuistic; that is, they present laws in the form of specific cases with specific penalties attached. In most of the cases presented in this chapter, the penalty was death; these are serious offences. In three cases, the manner of execution was prescribed, the first and the last (vv. 2, 27) by stoning, the other (v. 14) by fire. The offences dealt with were pagan worship practices and illicit sexual relationships, which were often found in Canaanite religious practices.

20:2–5 strangers: All of the people dwelling in the land, whether citizens or not, were required to abstain from religious practices that defiled God's sanctuary and profaned His holy name. I will … cut him off: Execution by stoning seems to have been the way God set His face against the offender. However, if those responsible did not carry out the sentence on a guilty person, God executed judgment Himself. prostitute themselves: God "wed" Israel to Himself at Sinai. The Israelites' betrayal of that sacred bond by going after other gods was often portrayed as prostitution.

20:6–8 Who sanctifies you means "who sets you apart (to Myself)." There is an aspect of the worshiper's being set apart to God for which the worshiper was responsible, and an aspect God took upon Himself. The worshiper accepted God's gifts and agreed to forsake all other allegiances. God gave the Law to show the worshiper how to live set apart to God and from all other allegiances.

20:9 One who curses his father or his mother was very far from honoring them (Lev. 19:3; Ex. 20:12). His blood shall be upon him signifies that capital punishment was deserved. This statement also reassured the executioners that they were not guilty of shedding the offenders' blood. This was important, since there was no professional justice system at this time in ancient Israel. Nearly all functions of the law were performed by private citizens.

20:10–16 The penalties for these illicit sexual unions are grouped in this chapter with worship of other gods partly because Canaanite worship involved numerous sexual aberrations, such as in the practice of sympathetic magic, which attempted to influence the gods to bless the land with fertility.

All these sexual offences carried the death penalty, explicitly pronounced. Death for sexual misconduct sounds harsh to the modern ear, especially to many who believe there is no such thing as sexual misconduct. These offences, however, were not merely sexual in nature; in many cases, they also represented rebellion against God and participation in the sexual worship of Canaan's fertility deities, primarily Baal and his sister-consort. And in most cases they also involve disruption of one or more families, a grave offence in and of itself.

20:10, 11 The adulterer and the adulteress both entered freely into the affair. Both were punished.

A Definitive Standard

Believe anything you want." "You've got your truth, I've got mine." The frightening thing about such modern viewpoints is that those who believe them become the definers of truth and reality. They leave no room for objective truth or absolutes. Yet if there are no absolutes determined by a Source above ourselves then we are all gods, or else no truth exists, and we have nothing to bind us together or define how we should treat each other. God did not leave His people Israel in such a philosophical morass. He clearly spelled out moral and spiritual absolutes and warned His people to seek ultimate truth from Him, not from other sources (Lev. 20:6–8).

20:12 Perversion literally means "mixing, confusion"—in this case, of the natural order.

20:13, 14 Marries (literally, takes) probably means to have as a common-law wife. burned … he and they: Perhaps this was done after the stoning to prevent burial, which was very important to the ancients. Not to be buried was thought to make a peaceful afterlife impossible.

20:15–17 In these two cases the death penalty is prescribed by the less direct phrase shall be cut off.

20:18 her sickness: That is, her menstrual flow (15:19–24; 18:19). exposed … her blood: In menstruation, the mysterious powers of blood and sex are drawn together. Casual disregard shows disrespect for God as the Creator as well as for the human role in procreation.

20:19, 20 They shall die childless may not seem to be a severe penalty, but it was greatly dreaded in the ancient world, where continuation of the family line was extremely important. If this situation were an extramarital affair, as implied by the verb lies with, the childlessness would affect two families. The man would have no heirs, and the woman would lose her status as a faithful wife.

20:21 takes: If a man died childless before his father's death and the division of the family property, his brother was to marry the widow. Their firstborn would be considered the dead brother's heir. Otherwise it was forbidden for a surviving brother to marry his dead brother's widow. It might seem that he was trying to gain the dead man's estate for himself.

They shall be childless: The Hebrew implies that if the man already had heirs, none would survive him, and that this marriage would not produce others.

20:22, 23 I am casting out: God took full responsibility for His judgment on the wickedness of the people of Canaan, for which He would use Israel as His instrument.

20:24–26 Flowing with milk and honey conveys the agricultural potential of the land. Abundant wildflowers were the source of the honey and point to the excellent grazing for flocks and herds that would provide the milk. Has separated you emphasizes that the people of Israel were distinct from the people of Canaan whom they would displace. Israel's God was different from the gods of Canaan. Israel needed to operate on a different, higher standard of morality to demonstrate that to the world.

Mediums and Spiritists

The medium or spiritist pretends to find out things, especially about the future, through contact with the dead or other kinds of spirits from the realm of the dead (Lev. 20:27). This common sort of magic appears with many variations and methods, in both ancient and modern times. The Bible subjects these practices to ridicule and forbids them.

20:27 This verse is not out of place; it is necessary to complete the chiastic arrangement of the chapter, a frequent and important literary stylistic device in the Hebrew Bible.

21:1–24 Here are regulations for the priests about mourning, marriage, and fitness for the priesthood.

21:1 defile himself: Contact with a dead body made a person unclean. Since the priests ministered before the altar of the Lord, the occasions on which they were allowed to be unclean were restricted. While they were unclean they could not perform their priestly duties. This was in marked contrast to much of the ancient world, where the dead often were regarded as holy and even worshiped. In the revelation of God to Israel, it was clear that death was the great defilement, the greatest perversion of God's purpose for the human race. Death could not be holy; the dead only could be rescued from the uncleanness of death through resurrection, a topic on which Israel received little revelation this early in her history.

21:2, 3 The only exceptions for the priest were his closest relatives. For them he could attend mourning rites. The wife is probably included in the term relatives who are nearest to him. The virgin sister still belonged to the priest's father's family. A married sister belonged to her husband's family; the priest could not attend mourning rites for her.

21:4, 5 These were pagan mourning customs. All Israel was forbidden to observe them (19:27, 28). Naturally, that prohibition began with the priests.

21:6 The bread belonged to God because it was sacrificed on His altar. There is no suggestion that God needed or ate this food, only that it belonged to Him. The priests received portions of it as one part of God's provision for them and their families (6:14—7:36).

21:7 A priest could marry a widow, but other women who had been with a man in any sexual relationship were forbidden to him. A priest's marriage symbolized his special, holy relationship to God.

21:8, 9 Prostitution, the ultimate promiscuity, was the opposite of holiness, the ultimate faithfulness. The priest's daughter was to reflect her father's holiness to God, especially in an age when everything one did reflected on one's family.

21:10–12 The high priest was not allowed to become ritually unclean, even at the death of his father or mother. Nor could he display any signs of mourning. His duties in the sanctuary could not be interrupted. For his exalted position before God, the high priest sometimes paid a high personal price.

21:13–15 The standard for the high priest's wife was higher than for the wife of an ordinary priest. The high priest could marry only a virgin. Of his own people could mean either another priest's daughter or an Israelite woman. His posterity had to be pure. By marrying a woman without sexual experience, the High Priest would ensure that his son truly was his. Alternatively, this verse could mean that the High Priest was not to defile his seed by lying with any woman other than his wife. Perhaps these two possible meanings are not mutually exclusive.

21:16–23 Prohibition of priestly service by those with physical imperfections. In the service of the sanctuary, physical wholeness was intended to model ritual and moral wholeness and perfection. Animals brought for sacrifice had to be without blemish; so, too, the priests who offered them upon the altar. This did not mean a priest with a physical deformity was immoral, only that he could not be the object lesson and model the priest was intended to be. Therefore, he could not serve as a priest.

21:18–20 Most of these physical conditions were permanent; a person afflicted by them could never serve as a priest. But some, like a broken limb or a skin condition, would heal with time. The priest suffering from them was barred from serving as a priest only so long as he was afflicted.

21:20, 21 Neither eczema nor scab is included in the list of things that made an ordinary Israelite unclean (13:1–46). As with mourning rites and marriage partners, the priests were held to a higher standard than the people because the priests had a more public role in modeling holiness to God. This was not because God had a double standard of moral behavior, one for the "religious" and one for the "non-religious." Rather, the priests had a more public role in the physical, outward modeling of holiness to God, which is both inward and outward, affecting and transforming all aspects of life.

21:22 He may eat: Physical defect did not imply a moral defect. The person afflicted still had access to the food of the altar by which the priests lived. He was not denied his provision, nor was he forced to leave the sanctuary.

21:23 My sanctuaries probably refers to the two divisions of the tabernacle: (1) the holy place, where the altar of incense stood; and (2) the Most Holy Place, where the ark of the covenant rested. This implies that the person with a physical defect had access to the outer court around the tabernacle as long as he did not come too close to the altar of burnt offering, which stood in the outer court.

21:24 These instructions were not given secretly to the priests, but publicly. Each Israelite was to know what God expected of him or her, and what God expected of the priests.

22:1, 2 separate … holy things: When the priests were ritually impure, they were not to come near the offerings the Israelites had brought to the tabernacle for dedication to God. profane My holy name by what they dedicate: If a ritually unclean priest officiated at a sacrifice, the value of sacrifice would be nullified.

22:3 All … your generations made the restriction as broad as possible in any one generation, and as broad as possible through all time. Cut off from My presence does not mean executed or banished from the community, but permanently denied the privilege of ministering as a priest.

22:4 leper: Regulations concerning leprosy are given in Lev. 13:1–46; 14:1–32. Regulations about discharge are found in 15:1–18.

22:5, 6 creeping thing … until evening: Clean and unclean animals are listed in ch. 11.

22:7 it is his food: The sacrifices brought by the Israelites were a major part of the daily provisions for the priests.

22:8, 9 Ordinary Israelites could eat this meat (17:15, 16). The priests were held to a higher standard.

22:10 Three groups of persons were denied access to the meat of the offerings: (1) the outsider (literally, any stranger), whether a foreigner or an Israelite not of Aaron's family line; (2) the one who dwells as a guest with the priest; and (3) a hired servant, who was not a member of the priest's household but worked in it on a daily basis.

22:11 Slaves, whether bought or born in the household, were allowed to eat of the priest's share of the consecrated food. They were part of his household.

22:12 A priest's daughter became a member of her husband's family when she married. If her husband was not a priest, she lost her right to eat consecrated food.

22:13 no outsider shall eat it: A repetition of the first injunction, marking the close of these prohibitions and strengthening the emphasis on this one.

22:14–17 Restitution plus one-fifth was the penalty here for an ineligible person who ate of the holy offering. In 5:14–16, the penalty was the sacrifice of a ram and restitution plus one-fifth. Both contexts are concerned with one who had eaten consecrated food without knowing it. The higher penalty (5:14–16) may have been for an Israelite, who never was eligible to eat such food; the lower penalty (22:14–16) was for a priest who usually could eat it, but on the occasion in question he should not have eaten because of ritual uncleanness.

22:18 strangers: Resident aliens in Israel were permitted to worship God with the Israelites. If a resident alien accepted the Israelites' God as his God, he was accepted at God's sanctuary under the same conditions as any Israelite was.

Give God Your Best

When it came to sacrifices, offerings, and the payment of vows, God required that the Israelites bring their best animals and goods to Him. Nothing with a defect was allowed (Lev. 22:20–23). This was because God is a holy, perfect God. He was worthy of the best that His people had to offer. In the end, all that they had belonged to Him anyway (compare Deut. 8:18; 1 Chr. 29:14, 15).

22:19–21 without blemish … no defect in it: This standard was addressed later by the prophet Malachi when some in his day were bringing defective animals to sacrifice on God's altar (Mal. 1:7–14). We are not to offer God less than our best.

22:22, 23 The prohibitions on sacrificial animals with bodily defects parallel many of the prohibitions on priests with bodily defects serving before the altar of God (21:17–23).

22:23 An exception was made for a freewill offering, since it was not required and was not made in fulfillment of a vow.

22:24, 25 cut: Castrated animals were not acceptable for sacrifice. from a foreigner's hand: Israel's sacrificial animals were to be raised by Israelites who worshiped God, not by foreigners who worshiped a multitude of pagan gods. This also removed the temptation for an Israelite to buy an inferior animal from a foreigner in an attempt to save money and avoid sacrificing an animal from his own flock or herd.

22:26, 27 The eighth day parallels the time of circumcision for the human male baby. This regulation probably was chiefly kindhearted. The mother, though an animal, was not to be deprived of her newborn in the first days after its birth, when both her maternal instincts and her milk supply were at their highest.

22:28–30 This also may have had a humanitarian aim, to avoid taking the life of a mother and her offspring on the same day. Economic care also may be reflected here; a man with a small flock who offered two animals on the same day was being perhaps foolish and wasteful, besides zealous. We do God no favors if we give all our substance to His worship place and then depend on charity for our own existence from that time on.

22:31–33 All of these elements had been expressed before, but not all together. God's person, His name, His present action in sanctifying His people, and His past action in rescuing them from slavery in Egypt all were given as the basis of Israel's worship.

23:1–44 The holy convocations of Israel. These are called “appointed times” and “sacred assemblies,” and most called for special sacrifices above the regular sacrifices. These assemblies all had religious significance, of course. Some were agricultural harvest festivals, having as their focus the successive stages of the harvest season; they were times of thanksgiving for God’s bounty to the nation. Others became associated with historical events of the nation. The celebrations, then, had a two-fold character, of thanks for God’s goodness in giving food and for His mighty acts in history on behalf of His people. Together, the sacred assemblies encompassed the agricultural and the religious aspects of the life of the nation, memorialized its history and marking the beginnings of both its religious and its civil calendars. All this emphasized that God and one’s faith in God cannot be compartmentalized and set aside from the affairs of daily life. Different in character as they were, these sacred assemblies served a common purpose of bringing the nation together to reflect on and rejoice in God’s goodness.

Each speech giving instructions for a sacred assembly includes: (1) the name or definition of the occasion; (2) most importantly, the time of its celebration; (3) some general indication, usually short and seldom with details, of how it was to be observed.

23:1 the LORD spoke to Moses: The instructions about each convocation are marked off in this chapter by the normal introduction for a speech in Leviticus. The instructions for each could be read separately, while still reminding the people that each had been ordained by God.

23:2 Speak to the children of Israel: These instructions were for all of the people, and not just for the priests. The feasts of the LORD literally means “appointed times of the Lord.” This phrase emphasizes that these were specifically appointed holy days. Here of means both “ordained by” and “consecrated to” or “honoring” the Lord. Holy convocations were sacred assemblies of all the people called together at the appointed times by the priests. The Feast of Unleavened Bread and the Feast of Tabernacles lasted seven and eight days, respectively. The first and the last day of each were holy meetings. The days between were part of the holiday, though there were no special meetings on them.

23:3, 4 Six days shall work be done: Perhaps as important to human well-being as the day of rest are the six days of work. Work was given to the human race in the Garden. Work is one of the ways humans bear the image of God. Work itself is not a curse on the race. Instead, it remains, even after the Fall, God's good gift. The regular seventh day of rest and other holidays from work are ordained for our refreshment and the chance to commune more closely with God and His people. A Sabbath of solemn rest may be restated as "a Sabbath that is all a Sabbath should be"—a day of rest and of solemn, joyful worship. In all your dwellings emphasized the universal nature of the Sabbath. It was not to be observed only in the sanctuary; it was to be celebrated in every household.

23:5 fourteenth day of the first month: This would fall between mid-March and mid-April. The Passover celebrated Israel's exodus from Egypt (Ex. 12:1–28).

23:6–9 The Feast of Unleavened Bread immediately followed Passover, beginning the fifteenth day of Nisan. Later in Israel's history, this and other festivals involved pilgrimages to the central sanctuary, first in Shiloh and later in Jerusalem. This feast marked the beginning of the barley harvest, the first important grain harvest of the year. In practice, the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread were observed together as an eight-day festival. In the instructions of Ex. 12:1–28 they are treated as one. Unleavened means without yeast. Customary work was work that could be left a day or two without problems. Essential or emergency tasks could be done. For example, animals could be milked. an offering: Instructions for this offering are given in Num. 28:16–25.

23:10 a sheaf of the firstfruits: This bundle of the first harvested barley belonged to God as a special offering, acknowledging God's provision of the harvest. Paul called Christ "the firstfruits of those who have fallen asleep"—the first of the dead to be resurrected (1 Cor. 15:20).

23:11, 12 To wave the sheaf was to elevate the offering before God. This Sabbath was either the first or the last day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread, or the seventh-day Sabbath during the week of the Feast, or the seventh-day Sabbath following the Feast. If one of the latter two, the day after the Sabbath would have been the first day of the week. The symbolism of Christ, the firstfruits of the Resurrection, rising on the first day of the week, the day of firstfruits, makes the last two alternatives attractive. But there is strong evidence also that this Sabbath was the first day of the Feast.

23:13 Two-tenths of an ephah was twice the grain offering for the regular morning and evening burnt offerings (Ex. 29:40). Exodus 29:38–42 specifies a drink offering to accompany the regular morning and evening offerings. Wine was the third major agricultural product of the land, along with grain and oil.

23:14 An Israelite could not eat the grain of a new harvest until he had brought the offering of the firstfruits to the sanctuary. Parched grain was a favorite food of those working in the harvest. Newly harvested heads of grain were roasted in a fire and eaten when cool (Ruth 2:14).

23:15–21 The Feast of Weeks (Pentecost). Though not named here, it is called the Feast of Weeks in Ex. 34:22. It received its name from its timing seven sabbaths (seven weeks) after the wave offering of the firstfruits during the Feast of Unleavened Bread, the week of Passover. The Christian celebration of Pentecost is fixed fifty days after Easter, the Passover on which Jesus became the Paschal Lamb.

23:17 Firstfruits refers to the firstfruits of wheat. The Feast of Weeks comes near the end of the wheat harvest in Palestine. Either the grain for baking these firstfruit loaves was set aside at the beginning of the harvest or the first grain used from the new harvest qualified as its firstfruits.

23:18–21 for the priest: Grain and meat from the sacrificial offerings were a large part of God's provision for the priests and their families (Lev. 7:1–14, 31–36).

23:22 The Israelites were to be generous when they reaped a plentiful harvest because God gave the harvest to them (19:9, 10). Grapes are not mentioned here because the Feast of Weeks came well before the grape harvest.

23:23–25 The Feast of Trumpets was the first of the fall festivals, marking the New Year according to the civil calendar (the religious year began in the spring).

23:24 The seventh month … first day falls in mid-September. a memorial: Israel remembered God's goodness, which was expressed in the covenant, and asked God to continue to remember that covenant. Blowing of trumpets marked solemn, joyful, and urgent occasions in ancient Israel.

23:25 an offering made by fire: The animals and amounts of grain for this offering are listed in Num. 29:2–5.

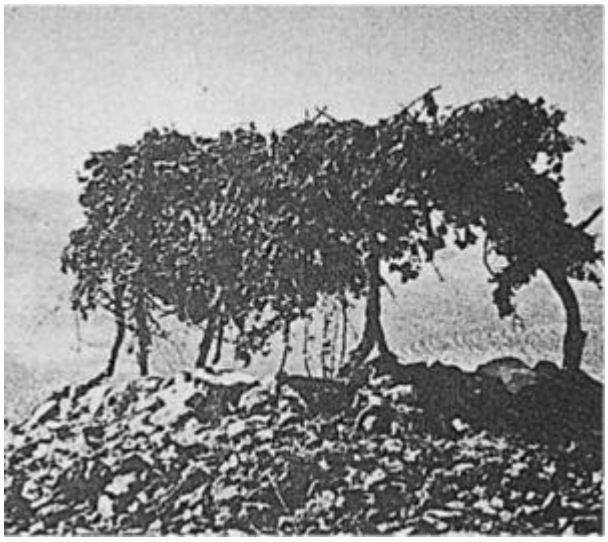
23:26–32 A fuller prescription for The Day of Atonement is given in Lev. 16.

23:27 Day of Atonement: The day was not given this name in ch. 16. Literally, it is the "Day of Atonements"; that is, the day above all days, when complete atonement was made for all Israel.

23:28 do no work: On the Day of Atonement, the most important work of all was done by the high priest in the Most Holy Place. To do any lesser work would have been sacrilegious.

23:29, 30 I will destroy: God Himself would see to it that the transgressor of this most holy day would be called to account.

23:31, 32 This is the third time in this passage that the Israelites were commanded to afflict their souls, indicating the importance of this duty for this day. from evening to evening: This is the only place in the regulations of Leviticus where the beginning time of a day of observance is noted.



A temporary booth, or shelter, near Jerusalem, set up to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles, also known as the Feast of Booths (Lev. 23:33–43).

23:33–36 The Feast of Tabernacles was the fall harvest festival to thank God for the success of the fruit crops, of which the most important were the grape and the olive. It also had a historical foundation, to remind Israel about their temporary dwellings in the Wilderness for the forty years. Thus, it also was a thanks to God for preserving Israel during that time and for bringing them safely into the land they would occupy when they began to observe this festival week.

23:36 A sacred assembly indicates the last day of a joyous eight-day celebration.

23:37, 38 Besides … which you give was a gentle warning not to bring an offering for a special festival day and then attempt to use it again for one of the regular offerings commanded in chs. 1—7. God is generous beyond measure with His people. God's people should be generous with their offerings to Him.

23:39, 40 the fruit of beautiful trees: In celebrating the Feast of Tabernacles today, people use the citron, a fruit like the lemon, but larger. Leafy trees is thought to be the myrtle.

23:41, 42 The implication is that the booths were made of the tree branches.

23:43 Dwelling in booths for seven days would remind the Israelites of God's goodness in preserving them through the hardships in the wilderness.

The Feast of Tabernacles was both a celebration of harvest and a thanksgiving for God's protection of His people.

23:44 A final notice that Moses had obeyed; the people had heard the instructions God had for them.

24:1–4 Pure oil was needed for the lampstand because it stood within the tabernacle. pressed olives: Oil for the sacred lampstand was extracted by pounding olives in a mortar by hand, a process that produced the finest, lightest olive oil. The veil of the Testimony separated the holy place from the Most Holy Place. Aaron: Aaron and his sons (Ex. 27:21). From evening until morning indicates tending the lamps twice a day, not tending them throughout the night.

24:5–9 twelve cakes: One for each of the tribes of Israel. The frankincense on each row was not poured on the loaves because the priests had to eat them. When the loaves were replaced, the frankincense was burned as a memorial, an offering made by fire to the LORD. Every Sabbath, new loaves replaced the ones that had been there for a week. eat it in a holy place: See Lev. 7:1–14, 31–36 for regulations concerning the priests' food. Jesus referred to the light of the menorah and the showbread when He called Himself the "light of the world" (John 8:12) and "the bread of life" (John 6:35). The showbread eaten by the priests foreshadowed the bread of the Lord's Supper eaten by Christians. David, even though he was not a priest, ate the showbread when he fled from Saul (1 Sam. 21:1–6). In a conversation with His opponents, Jesus approved of David's action (Luke 6:1–5). The Law could be set aside to meet genuine human needs.

24:10–12 Blaspheming the name of the LORD was forbidden (Ex. 22:28). The question in this case was whether Israel's law applied to those who were not full-blooded Israelites. Note the care in recording that the offender's father was an Egyptian, as well as his mother's name, her father's name, and their tribe.

24:13, 14 The offender was taken outside the camp as a sign that he had been cut off from the people of Israel, and so that his death would not defile the camp. Lay their hands on his head was a witness that they had heard the words of blasphemy and a sign that his sin was his own responsibility.

24:15 His God can refer to either the Creator or any pagan deities the person worshiped. Anyone who cursed the Creator bore the responsibility for the sin and was executed. If an Israelite worshiped a pagan deity, he was liable for the death penalty on those grounds. Foreigners were allowed to worship Israel's God, but if they did not, they were not to worship their own gods while living among the people of Israel (Lev. 17:8, 9). For such a person to curse his own god in Israel's presence was of no concern to Israel.

In that case, he shall bear his sin meant, “If his god desires to punish him, let him.” Of course, faithful Israelites would have understood that other gods do not exist, and could not punish anyone who curses them.

24:16 To blaspheme the name of the LORD was a different matter. God had rescued the Israelites from Egypt and bound them to Himself in covenant at Sinai. To blaspheme His name was rebellion. Rebellion, even against human governments, carried the death penalty. Stranger as well as him who is born in the land literally means “like stranger, like native.” The laws of Israel applied to resident aliens as well as to citizens.

24:17–22 The verb suggests murder not accidental homicide in the case of killing a human. Yet in the case of killing an animal, the penalty of restitution to its owner for its value anticipates and denies the claim that an animal’s life requires a human life in punishment. By arrangement and by repetition, this passage strongly teaches that animals are not equal to human beings.

24:19, 20 eye for eye: This law is also found in Ex. 21:23–25. Its purpose was not to require the injured party to inflict equal bodily harm on the one who had injured him, but to forbid him from inflicting greater bodily harm.

24:21, 22 One reason for these seemingly unrelated laws at this place in Leviticus was to anticipate the question of whether other laws would also apply to non-Israelites. The answer was yes, they would apply to the stranger.

24:23 If this closure to the narrative passage were missing, the readers would feel the incompleteness.

25:1 Mount Sinai was where God gave the covenant. Thus the following was part of the covenant and should be observed in order to keep faith with God.

25:2 The land which I give you is a reminder that the land belongs to God. The Israelites lived in it by His grace and under His direction. All of the laws of the Sabbath year and of the Jubilee were based on this premise. If Israel would follow God's direction while occupying the land, He would bless them abundantly. To that end, these instructions were aimed at restoring the social order that had become unbalanced as time passed. Unchecked, the rich would continue to get richer, and the poor would never have a chance to escape their poverty. A sabbath to the LORD is the same phrase used for the weekly Sabbath (23:3). The people rested weekly from their work; the land was to rest every seventh year from its work. The principle of the land needing rest has been rediscovered in recent years and is practiced in various ways by farmers of many nations. The prophets denounced Israel for many violations of this principle. The Chronicler interpreted Jeremiah to mean that one reason for the seventy-year Babylonian exile was that the land could enjoy all the sabbatical years it had missed because Judah had ignored them (2 Chr. 36:21). In the list of curses for disobedience in Lev. 26:34, 35, this is exactly what God threatened.

25:3–7 shall not reap: Reaping and gathering for storage and selling were not permitted in the Sabbath year. However, harvesting for daily needs was permitted. Since the purpose of these laws was to promote social equality in Israel, anyone, regardless of social standing, was permitted to use anything that grew, wherever it grew. Even the wild beasts of the field are mentioned here, to emphasize that God would provide for every creature. Of course, Israel's main provision during this time was the bumper crop produced the year before the Sabbath year (vv. 21, 22).

25:8–17 The institution of the Year of Jubilee. After seven cycles of sabbatical years came the fiftieth year, the year of Jubilee. The seventh month was the beginning of the civil year. Its tenth day, the Day of Atonement, was an annual day of liberty from sin and guilt. Appropriately, in the fiftieth year it was to be the day to proclaim liberty throughout all the land to all its inhabitants, a day of liberty from debt and bond-service and the end of separation from one's ancestral land. In keeping with the concept of God's ownership of the land, no Israelite was to sell the land allotted to him as his inheritance. If an Israelite fell on hard times, he might be forced, in effect, to lease his land, probably his creditor, but only until the Jubilee year, when all debts were to be forgiven. The “sale” (long-term lease) of land was negotiated according to the number of years left until the next Jubilee. More years meant a greater price; fewer years, a smaller price. This precept was intended to allow every Israelite family to begin again about once a generation, regardless of what had happened in the past. Thus, a few bad crop years in a row did not wipe out the family forever. Not even the laziness or moral lapses of the father could impoverish his descendants for more than one generation. Unfortunately, this wise provision, designed to give hope to individuals and social stability to the nation, was seldom, if ever, observed.

The Year of Jubilee

Israel's Jubilee year (Lev. 25:9) occurred every fiftieth year. It was like a Sabbath year (25:3–7) except that it had the additional purpose of returning property and lands to their owners and servants to their families (25:10). This meant that twice each century, the economy of Israel was somewhat leveled, though by no means redistributed. The point was that no family's lands should be permanently lost to creditors and no one's freedom permanently lost to servitude.

25:9, 10 To proclaim liberty meant specifically that all debts were canceled, all Israelites who had had to sell themselves into slavery were freed, and all land reverted to its original owner. The same phrase occurs in Is. 61:1, the passage Jesus read in the synagogue in Nazareth at the beginning of His earthly ministry. Jesus' mission on this earth was to proclaim liberty to all who have lost their inheritance and become servants of the Evil One.

25:11, 12 The fiftieth or Jubilee year was itself a Sabbath year (vv. 2–7). Observing the Jubilee year would have meant two years of rest in a row for the land.

25:13–17 To refrain from oppressing a fellow citizen is one way of showing fear, or reverence and respect, for God.

25:18, 19 If those who live in God's land follow His instructions, they will dwell there in safety, free from want and external threats.

25:18–22 Rather than waiting for the obvious question of provision for the year when harvest was forbidden, God raised and answered the question himself.

25:21, 22 I will command My blessing on you: If the Israelites would obey God's command to let the land rest, they could be sure that the land would provide for their needs. Parts of three years were involved. In the seventh year, no planting or harvesting for storage would be allowed. Some of the crops of the eighth year would not be harvested and ready for use until the ninth year had begun.

25:23, 24 The principle governing all of these laws was that the land did not belong to Israel; it belonged to God. you are strangers and sojourners with Me: God emphasized that the Israelites would live in a land that was not their own. Likewise, the Christian believer lives on this earth as a stranger and a sojourner, looking for a city "whose builder and maker is God" (Heb. 11:10).

25:25–28 Each family's land was the source of their food and income. For a family to be dispossessed meant, in most cases, becoming someone else's servants and dependents. Most people would have worked hard to avoid that, but illness, crop failure, or other misfortune could force a man into debt to the point that his only option was to sell (lease) his land. In that case, three options of increasing hardship came into play. (1) A redeeming relative could redeem (buy) the land of the man in difficulty (v. 25). From the proceeds he could pay off his creditors. The land stayed in the extended family, the poor family stayed on their land, and eventually the redeemer was repaid. The redeemer was the nearest male relative; if he could not fulfill this obligation, it passed down the kinship line until someone could. This is the scenario of Ruth 4, when Boaz acted as redeemer and bought Naomi's field. (2) A man might have no relative to redeem his land but be able in time to save enough to buy it back himself. The purchase price would be prorated according to the number of years left until the next Jubilee year, and the appropriate amount would be returned to the purchaser (vv. 26, 27). (3) A man might have to wait until the Jubilee year to return to the land of his inheritance (v. 28). But even in that most extreme situation, there was hope that the family would be able to return to their inheritance debt-free and make a fresh start. The law of redemption and the law of the Jubilee year are vivid symbols of what Jesus Christ did on the Cross for every person. What our first father and mother lost in the Garden, we could not by any means retrieve. Jesus Christ, our elder Brother, redeemed it for us. We have been evicted from our inheritance, but in the year of Jubilee we will be allowed to return. This is part of the already-but-not-yet tension of the kingdom of God. It has broken through already here on this earth, but its complete realization is not yet. For that we hope, just as the ancient Israelite family waited and hoped for the year of Jubilee.

25:29, 30 A walled city indicates one of the larger cities of the land. These provided more economic diversity than unwalled villages. A person's survival did not depend on owning a city house. Therefore, the time limit to redeem these houses was one year. They were bought and sold without regard to the Jubilee year.

25:31 An unwalled village in ancient Israel was tiny by today's standards. Many had only a handful of families. The basic economic activity was farming the land within a walking radius of the village. For people living in these villages, losing the family home would be nearly as great a disaster as the loss of their farmland. Therefore, village houses were included in the laws of redemption and Jubilee.

25:32–34 The Levites' houses, too, were protected under the basic law of redemption and Jubilee (vv. 25–28) because their homes were their only substantial assets.

25:35–38 Charging interest on a loan to a poor Israelite—your brother—would only hinder his financial progress. This law probably did not prohibit interest on commercial loans, which was another level of economic activity, one that did not threaten anyone's survival. Some might have been tempted to refuse to lend money to a poor fellow citizen, preferring to lend to non-Israelites in order to collect interest. This explains the command then you shall help him, like a stranger or a sojourner. Mercy and generosity were to be stronger motivations than financial gain. That remains a valid principle today.

25:37 Perhaps seed for planting, as well as food for eating, is meant here.

25:38 The motivation to be generous to the poor should have come from a person's gratitude to God for His generosity in bringing Israel out of Egypt, giving them the land of Canaan, and making a covenant to be their God. Serving a generous God, God's people can afford to be generous, too.

25:39–55 The treatment and redemption of bondservants. For more than one hundred years the world has been virtually free of that slavery defined as the ownership of one human being by another; any mention of slavery naturally raises serious questions. These Levitical laws deal not with true slavery but with the case of any Israelite indebted so deeply he could not clear his debt with money. He would pay his creditor instead with labor. Several principles are set forth here. (1) An Israelite was not to be reckoned or treated as a permanent possession; he and his children could not be inherited. (2) He was not to be put to the humiliating or severe treatment of a slave (severe treatment of a slave is discouraged elsewhere). (3) A kinsman could redeem him, or he could redeem himself if that became possible. (4) If not redeemed before it, he was to go out in the year of Jubilee. (5) These rules applied whether he was bonded to a fellow Israelite, to a resident alien, or to a temporary resident. These rules have the same foundation as redemption and Jubilee for the land. All Israel belonged to God; if they were God's servants, they could not become the possession of another human, whether fellow Israelite or alien. Reverence for God was a further basis for the humane treatment of any person coming under one's authority.

25:44–47 Foreign slaves could be bought, sold, and inherited like other property. This does not mean God approves of slavery. He made laws to ameliorate the practices of that time.

25:48–55 Though this order of kinship in redeeming is not mandatory, it was the natural progression from close relative to more distant relative. A brother, if he could, would be the one to redeem. If no brother could or if the man had no brother, an uncle would be next, and then a cousin.

26:1–46 Blessings for obedience and curses for disobedience are two important elements of the ancient Near Eastern covenant treaty form, after which God's covenant with Israel at Sinai was modeled. The blessings are set forth in a list, followed by a list of threatened disasters that would follow Israel's disobedience and rebellion. The list of curses typically was longer; this list follows that pattern.

26:1 A sacred pillar was a stone or wooden column erected to represent a pagan god or goddess. It was not a likeness, but a symbol. Together, the four terms used in this verse cover all the possibilities for pagan images. I am the LORD your God confronts the Israelites with a choice of allegiances. Would they love the living God or idols?

26:2–13 This section uses an if-then format. Verse 3 is the if section, the conditions under which God's blessings would be poured out on the land and the people.

Establish Ground Rules

God clearly defined rewards for obedience (Lev. 26:3–13) and punishments for disobedience (26:39). And He also promised to remember His people when they repented (26:40–45). In doing so, God modeled two important principles for the effective use of authority. (1) Leaders need to establish and clearly communicate what they expect others to do and to refrain from doing. (2) Leaders need to clarify the consequences for fulfilling or not fulfilling those expectations.

26:4, 5 The blessings were in three areas of Israel's life. First, God promised the resources for abundant supplies of food, including rain whenever it would be needed. threshing … sowing: The grain harvest was finished by early-to mid-June. The grape harvest began about two months later. Having two months to thresh the grain indicated a large harvest. Sowing could not occur until after the first rains softened the ground enough to plow, usually from mid-October on. A two-month grape harvest also would be a bumper crop. Dwell in your land safely hints at the next area of God's blessing on Israel.

26:6–10 Second, God promised security or peace in the land. Neither animal nor human adversaries would be successful against Israel. The bears and lions, which were dangerous to humans, would be neutralized. Any human enemy daring to attack Israel would be routed easily, even at odds of a hundred to one.

26:10 clear out the old: Israel would not finish eating the old harvest before the new one was brought in.

26:11–13 Third, God promised His presence in Israel's midst. He would set His tabernacle among them. Furthermore, He would actively walk among them, looking out for their welfare, helping and protecting them. I will be your God, and you shall be My people is the covenant by which God bound Himself to Israel and Israel to Him. Later prophets often reminded Israel of this when they called the nation back to faithfulness to God.

26:14–39 These are curses upon Israel for unfaithfulness to God and God's covenant. They contain many points of contact with the blessings, reversing specific blessings into correspondingly opposite curses. For instance, if Israel remained faithful, one hundred Israelites would rout 10,000 of their enemy in battle (v. 8), but if they rebelled against God, they would flee at the sound of a rattling leaf (v. 36). These curses are divided into five sections.

26:14, 15 As with the blessings, the curses are presented in an if-then format. These two verses are the if section, the conditions under which God would bring disaster on His people in an effort to turn their hearts back to Him. Commandments … statutes … judgments … covenant cover all of the legislation God had given at Sinai and the agreement Israel had entered into with God there.

26:16, 17 Terror, various diseases, and famine caused by military defeat would be God's first attempts to call Israel back to Himself.

26:18–20 This second series of curses would be fulfilled if the first failed to get Israel's attention. This was characterized as seven times more punishment. your heavens like iron and your earth like bronze: Rainfall was essential to the agriculture of ancient Israel. The summer heat baked the land. If the early rains of winter did not fall and soften the soil, the primitive plows of ancient agriculture could not break it up for planting. Of course, without rainfall, planting was futile anyway; the seeds would not grow.

26:21, 22 If drought did not bring the Israelites to their senses, God would visit them with seven times more plagues—this time wild beasts. When the human population was far below today's levels, a sharp increase in the number of large predators would have been a serious threat to the people and their domestic animals.

26:23–26 If Israel did not repent after the wild beasts, God would multiply their punishment another seven times with war, resulting in epidemics and famine. when you are gathered: When enemies invaded a land in the ancient world, the people living in unwalled villages fled to the walled cities for refuge, causing great overcrowding. If a city then was besieged for a long time, unsanitary conditions led to pestilence, epidemics of deadly communicable diseases. Another result of a long siege was famine. The flour ration allotted to ten women would be so small that they would bake it all together in one oven. The bread itself would be weighed to ensure equal distribution.

26:27–39 If siege did not cause Israel to repent, the warfare would continue seven times greater, as punishment from God. Cannibalism, the complete desolation of the land, and exile to foreign lands—the end of the nation—would be the final result.

26:29 Further disobedience would result in cannibalism. This occurred centuries later during a siege of Samaria, and later still during the Babylonian siege of Jerusalem (2 Kin. 6:28, 29; Lam. 2:20; 4:10).

26:30–32 High places and incense altars were dedicated to the worship of pagan gods. To defile them with human carcasses would make them permanently unfit for worship. There is mocking irony in this threat of human carcasses being tossed upon the carcasses (the lifeless forms) of pagan deities.

26:33–35 scatter: This threat was fulfilled in the Babylonian exile of 587–536 B.C.

26:36, 37 those of you who are left: Survivors would not enjoy relief or peace of mind after escaping the disasters. They would still be timid, even when no one pursued them.

26:38, 39 Having been exiled to foreign lands, the people were not to think they were beyond God's punitive reach. They would waste away, perhaps wishing they had not escaped the quick death that had overtaken so many others.

26:40–45 This is a promise not to abandon Israel forever. God's purpose in all these disasters would not be to destroy Israel but to bring them to repentance and restore them to their land.

26:41, 42 God's covenant with the patriarchs took precedence over the covenant at Sinai (Gal. 3:15–18). Even when Israel violated the Sinai covenant, God honored the patriarchal covenant.

God Bends but Does Not Break

Israel repeatedly broke God's commandments. For example, within a generation or two of entering the Promised Land, the people were worshiping idols (Judg. 2:10–13). Throughout their history, they failed to keep the Sabbatical and Jubilee years (Jer. 34:12–16). And they repeatedly dishonored the Lord's sanctuary and its implements (1 Sam. 4:3, 11; 13:7–13). These were direct violations of the covenant (Lev. 26:1, 2). And Israel broke almost every other law as well.

In every case, God responded with firm correction, just as He had warned (26:14–39; compare Judg. 2:14, 15; Jer. 34:17–22; 1 Sam. 7:2; 13:14). Finally He allowed foreigners to take His people into exile (2 Chr. 36:17–21). Nevertheless, God's relationship with his recalcitrant and rebellious people always included a place for forgiveness if they repented: • He would remember His covenant with Israel's ancestors, Jacob and Abraham (Lev. 26:42, 45).

• He would remember the Promised Land (26:42).

• He would not cast His people away completely, or "abhor" them (26:44).

• He would not utterly destroy them or break His covenant with them (26:44).

• He would remain their God (26:44, 45).

God shows that a leader must practice loyalty toward disobedient followers even when correcting them. Following His example, leaders can exercise discipline in a way that helps people rather than destroys them; they can "bend" under the pressure of disobedience but not break.

26:43–45 Ultimately, God's character is grace, mercy, love, and redemption. On that basis, God would remember the covenant. He would not utterly destroy them. God remembers and redeems because God is God.

26:46 This summary statement confirms the authority of Leviticus because its source is the LORD.

27:1–34 On vows and their redemption. People make vows to God for many reasons. Most vows are promises to give something to God, either a possession or a service. In any given situation, there may or may not be a valid reason why a vow should not (or cannot) be kept as it was spoken; then the redemption of the thing vowed becomes possible, and perhaps necessary. This chapter may seem strangely placed. Since it deals with redemption, and, like all of Leviticus, is concerned with the holy living of a redeemed people, it was regarded by the ancient author as a fitting conclusion to the book. A vow is a spoken word. James said that whoever can control his tongue can control his entire body (James 3:2). Careful consideration of vows and their proper disposition helps one keep the holy living of the redeemed constantly in view.

27:1–8 While people could dedicate themselves or their children (1 Sam. 1:11, 22) to God, only the Levites were allowed to serve God as priests. Therefore, those vowed in service to God had to be redeemed. The chief factor in determining value was relative physical strength. A man brought a higher price than a woman because he could do heavier work. Age also was a factor. By redeeming at a certain price the person dedicated to the sanctuary, the Israelite gave the value of the gift he had vowed.

27:8 A person might dedicate himself as God's possession and go redeem the vow—since he could not personally serve in the sanctuary—only to have the priest discover he was too poor to pay that value. At this time, fifty shekels (v. 3) might have represented about four years' earnings. In that case, the priest set a redemption value according to the ability to pay.

27:9, 10 Rash vows and afterthoughts about vows were discouraged. If one vowed or brought a clean animal for sacrifice, then regretted the decision, the animal could not be exchanged.

27:11–13 Unclean animals could not be sacrificed. Therefore, the priest set a value on any such animal brought as a gift so that the sanctuary would receive the monetary value of the gift.

27:14, 15 The priest also set the value of a house given to fulfill a vow. Obviously, the priests had to be knowledgeable in many kinds of commercial enterprises. A house in a walled city could be dedicated to God if it was not part of the inheritance that was to stay in the family perpetually (25:29, 30).

27:16–25 A field could be dedicated to the Lord. If it was part of a family's inheritance, it could be redeemed before the Jubilee. The price for a parcel requiring a homer of barley seed to sow it was fifty shekels. A homer was a donkey-load. Over the full 49-year inter-Jubilee period, the price to redeem the parcel was about a shekel a year, the cost of its seed each year. A person was encouraged to redeem the land as soon as he could so that his family would not be deprived of its support. The priests and Levites would not have had time to work land dedicated to the sanctuary; apparently the person dedicating it continued to work it, perhaps paying the homer of barley each year toward its redemption, though the text does not mention such an arrangement. To dedicate land to the sanctuary, then sell (lease) it to a another person until the following Jubilee, probably represented an attempt to realize a profit from that which had been dedicated. It resulted in forfeiture of the right to redeem the land in the year of Jubilee.

(Heb. yobel) (Lev. 25:10; 27:17; Ex. 19:13). Strong’s #3104: This word literally means “ram” or “ram’s horn” (Josh. 6:5), and in one instance it is rendered “trumpet” (Ex. 19:13). The term is associated with the Year of Jubilee in Leviticus (25:10) and in Numbers (36:4). The fiftieth year was a “jubilee” year for the Hebrews, marked by the blowing of a trumpet (Lev. 25:9). During this year, the Israelites experienced freedom and liberty: slaves were freed; debts were canceled; the land was left fallow; family property was redeemed (25:10–17). The fact that Jesus quoted Is. 48:8, 9 seems to indicate that Jesus equated his earthly ministry with the principles of the Year of Jubilee (Luke 4:18, 19).

27:22–25 A dedicated field not part of the family inheritance but bought from another was redeemable before the Jubilee under the same terms as a field belonging to the family inheritance. However, if it was not redeemed, it reverted to the original owner in the Year of Jubilee.

27:26, 27 Animal firstborns could not be dedicated to God, since they belonged to Him already (Ex. 13:2). One could not pay a vow with a firstborn animal, expecting to gain double credit with God from a single sacrifice. Clean animals could not be redeemed; they would have been sacrificed. Unclean animals could not be sacrificed, and they could be redeemed with money.

27:28, 29 Devoting a possession was a stronger act than dedication. Nothing devoted could be redeemed. Persons devoted (under the ban) were to be put to death. No private citizen would have had the power to put himself or anyone else under the ban.

27:30, 31 For a person living a distance from the sanctuary, it may have been easier to redeem the tithes of his crops than to bring the crops to the sanctuary.

27:32, 33 Sheep and goats were counted and inspected when they passed under the rod, which the shepherd placed across the entrance to the fold. Each year, the newborn animals were counted this way. Every tenth animal was part of the tithe that belonged to God. The owner was not allowed to adjust this procedure so that the animal for the tithe was small, weak, or sickly, nor could he substitute a poor animal for a better one.

27:34 Though it was given to an ancient people of another culture and is not binding on the modern believer in most of its details, the Book of Leviticus still has much to teach the follower of Christ. Holy living still should be our goal because we have been redeemed through the blood of Christ, which is infinitely more precious than the blood of any sacrificial animal.

The Fourth Book of Moses Called Numbers

THE BOOK OF NUMBERS DESCRIBES THE EVENTS right before the Israelites entered the Promised Land. Similar to the tension-filled days before a great battle or election day, these events reveal the Israelites' restlessness and impatience, but also the anticipation of what God would do. The Israelites made grave mistakes during this crucial period, and God disciplined them. But through His discipline and instruction God trained the Israelites not only to worship Him but also to trust in Him for the ultimate victory.

The long lists of numbers and names in Numbers discourage many readers. However, these must be viewed as the ancient Israelites viewed them. The lists were the final roll call before the battle. They prompted praise to God for His faithfulness to the Israelites. He had protected them and multiplied their numbers even in the middle of a barren wilderness.

Numbers has two basic sections. Each of them begins with a census. The first census (chs. 1—4) numbered the men of war of the first generation of those who had left Egypt. This census and the triumphal march into the Promised Land quickly turned into disaster. The first generation of Israelites did not trust God and did not thank Him for His provision. Instead, they doubted God, accused Him, and rebelled against His gracious instructions. This demanded discipline: the first generation would not inherit the land because they had been faithless.

But while the Lord would not let them enter the land, He still had not abandoned His people. He allowed these rebellious people to live out their lives in the wilderness. Further, He graciously continued to instruct them in His ways and how they could prepare their sons and daughters to enter the land. The faithless first generation had not altered God's purposes or discouraged God from fulfilling His promises. One day, the Israelites would obey God and would conquer the Promised Land.

After forty years of wandering in the wilderness, the second census (ch. 26) numbered the men of war of the second generation. Finally, they were prepared to do what their parents had failed to do. But underlying the narrative of chs. 26—36 is the nagging question: “Will the second generation be successful, or will they repeat the errors of their fathers?” The book ends with a positive expectation. The second generation would succeed; the people of God would inherit the promise of the land of Canaan —at last!

The Book of Numbers is the fourth of the first five books of the Old Testament, the Pentateuch. The English name “Numbers” comes from the title that the translators of the Septuagint (a Greek translation of the Old Testament completed around 150 B.C.) gave the book, a name that refers to the two prominent census lists contained within.

Until the nineteenth century, Jewish and Christian scholars had unanimously agreed that Moses wrote the entire Pentateuch. Educated by the Egyptians, he certainly had the credentials to compose the five books, and he was a primary character in Exodus through Deuteronomy.

However, many nineteenth-and twentieth-century scholars have doubted that the historical Moses composed the first five books of the Old Testament. Instead, they have suggested that these books, including Genesis, were compiled at a later date. According to this analysis, anonymous editors used at least four documents to piece together the Pentateuch. These four documents were identified by tracing the divine names, such as Elohim and Yahweh, through the Pentateuch, and by tracing certain variations in subject matter, phrasing, and word choice. The four documents are the called J document, which uses the name Yahweh for God; the E document, which uses the name Elohim for God; the P or Priestly document; and the D or Deuteronomic document. More recently, this dissection of the Pentateuch has been challenged, and no real consensus has emerged from the ensuing scholarly debate.

On the other hand, most evangelical writers have insisted on Moses’ authorship and compilation of the Pentateuch. Given the long sojourn of the Israelites in the wilderness, Moses would certainly have had the time to compile the materials and write most of the books. However, he may have overseen some additions to the books, and certain later editors under the leading of the Spirit may have added other materials. For example, the remarkable story of Balaam (chs. 22—24) may have been written by someone other than Moses, for Moses was neither a participant in nor an observer of these events.

At the same time, there are many positive indications in Numbers that Moses did write the principal narrative. For example, Numbers 33:2 speaks specifically of Moses writing the itinerary. Also, 3:40 certainly implies that Moses wrote down the number and names of Israel's firstborn. Moreover, the constant refrain "then the LORD spoke to Moses," found at the beginning of nearly every major section of the book, testifies not only to its divine origin but also to Moses' significant role in communicating these divine instructions to the Israelites.

G. Words of warning and encouragement (33:1–56)

H. An anticipation of the Promised Land (34:1—36:13)

Commentary

1:1 The phrase now the LORD spoke to Moses sets the tone for the book. God's act of revelation to His servant Moses is mentioned over 150 times (in more than twenty different ways) in Numbers. Wilderness of Sinai: The geographical setting of Numbers is the wilderness. This setting serves as a powerful spiritual metaphor: Not only did the Israelites live in the wilderness, but they as a nation were spiritually traveling through a wasteland. God had already delivered them from slavery, but He hadn't yet brought them to the Promised Land. They had to endure physical hardships and other experiences that tested their faith (Num. 21:4–9). The place of revelation was the tabernacle of meeting, also called "the tabernacle of the Testimony" (1:50, 53). The time reference, on the first day of the second month, in the second year, is dated from the pivotal event in Israel's history, the deliverance of the people from slavery in Egypt. The Exodus was to the OT Israelites what the death and resurrection of Jesus is to Christians. The Exodus constituted the birth of the nation Israel. The second month corresponds roughly to April, a time that would be known later in Canaan as the month of the general harvest between Firstfruits and Pentecost. The census of Numbers is, in a sense, "God's harvest" of His people. The events of Numbers cover a period of thirty-eight years, most likely in the second half of the fifteenth century B.C.

God Has Spoken—to You!

Imagine hearing God's voice! Moses did (Num. 1:1). Scripture gives little indication of what that experience was like, but it does say that the Lord spoke to Moses "face to face, as a man speaks to his friend" (Ex. 33:11). For those who wish that God would speak to them directly, He has: through the Bible.

The Bible claims to be from God. Though its words were written down by people, they are words that God has spoken. Throughout the first five books of the Bible, Moses states again and again that he is presenting what God said to him (Ex. 24:4). Likewise, Moses declares that the Law was revealed to him by God (Ex. 25:1, Lev. 1:1; Num. 1:1; Deut. 1:6). In fact, the phrase "the Lord spoke to Moses" is repeated thirty-three times in Leviticus alone. And the NT affirms Moses' insistence that his commandments came from God: • Jesus used the words "God spoke" in citing the incident of the burning bush (Mark 12:26).

• Both Jesus and the Pharisees acknowledged the authority of the Law as coming from God (Matt. 19:4–7; John 9:29).

• Peter indicated that Moses and the other prophets "spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit" (2 Pet. 1:21; compare Heb. 1:1).

God spoke clearly to Moses. He has likewise spoken clearly to us, through His written Word, the Bible. Countless Jews and Christians down through history have preserved His message since it was given. Many have spent their careers and even their lives to make it available to us today. The Bible has been banned, burned, and, to some, supposedly "debunked," yet still its truth stands. It remains the test of orthodoxy for all who claim to be of God or speak of God's ways.

1:2, 3 The stated purpose of this census was to be a military roster. It was not a census for social, political, or taxation purposes. Instead, the census would help Israel to prepare its armies for the war of conquest against the peoples of Canaan. Therefore, those who were numbered were able-bodied males over the age of twenty. Just as He promised Abraham long ago (Gen. 15:16–21), God was preparing the Israelites to occupy Canaan. God was in the process of giving the Promised Land to them! Furthermore, the census demonstrated to the Israelites God's faithfulness in fulfilling another promise to Abraham, the multiplication of his descendants (Gen. 12:2; 15:5; 17:4–6; 22:17). Read ch. 26 for the second census.

1:4 A man from every tribe would aid Moses and Aaron in the immense task of numbering the nation. The participation of one person from each tribe would ensure that the numbering was done fairly and that each tribe was represented accurately.

1:5–15 the names: This listing has a certain poignancy to it. It was to have been a list of heroic persons, for they would have been the tribal leaders immortalized in the story of conquest. Because of the actions of unbelief of the nation at Kadesh (chs. 13 and 14), these men and all numbered with them perished in the wilderness. Many of these names are formed with compounds of terms for God. We call such names "theophoric," speaking of faith in the presence and provision of God in the lives of His people: Elizur (My God is a Rock) son of Shedeur (Shaddai is a Flame), chief of Reuben (v. 5); Shelumiel (My Peace is God) son of Zurishaddai (My Rock is Shaddai), chief of Simeon (v. 6); Nahshon (Serpentine—significance not known) son of Amminadab (My Kinsman [God] is Noble), chief of Judah (v. 7); Nethaneel (God has given) son of Zuar (Little one), chief of Issachar (v. 8); Eliab (My God is Father) son of Helon (perhaps "Rampart-like"), chief of Zebulun (v. 9); Elishama (My God has heard) son of Ammihud (My Kinsman [God] is Majesty), chief of Ephraim (v. 10); Gamaliel (Reward of God) son of Pedahzur (The Rock [God] has ransomed), chief of Manasseh (v. 10); Abidan (My Father [God] is Judge) son of Gideoni ([God is] My hewer), chief of Benjamin (v. 11); Ahiezar (My Brother [God] is Help) son of Ammishaddai (My Kinsman [God] is Shaddai), chief of Dan (v. 12); Pagiel (Encountered by God) son of Ocran (Troubled), chief of Asher (v. 13); Eliasaph (God has Added) son of Deuel (Know God!), chief of Gad (v. 14); Ahira (My Brother [God] is Calamity—perhaps a statement of warning to enemies) son of Enan (Seeing), chief of Naphtali (v. 15).

1:16–18 leaders: The leaders (Heb. nasi) were "lifted up" or "selected" for their positions of leadership.

1:19 As the LORD commanded: The tone in chs. 1–10 is one of compliance on the part of Moses and the people to the revealed will of God. When God commanded, Moses and his agents responded.

1:20–43 Now the children of Reuben: Each of the twelve mini-paragraphs in vv. 20–43 follows the same pattern, giving the name of the tribe, the particulars of the family houses, the stipulation that the ones numbered were able-bodied males over the age of twenty, the name of the tribe again, and then the number in that tribe. The only variation is in vv. 32–35, where it is explained that Ephraim and Manasseh are sons of Joseph (as in v. 10). This notice reminds the reader that Joseph received a double share among the tribes of Israel. His two sons had equal shares with their uncles in Israel's posterity. See vv. 47–50 regarding the tribe of Levi. This entire section has an aura of celebration about it. The details may appear repetitive and tedious to us, but they would stir the passions of the respective tribal units: "This is our family! Here are our numbers among the thousands of Israel."

1:44–46 These are the ones who were numbered: The total number of able-bodied men (who were at least twenty years old) was 603,550. The likely number of women, children, and older or infirm men not counted in this census would indicate a total population between of two and five million.

1:47, 48 The Levites were not to be included among the "lay" tribes. The tribe of Levi was sacred. It belonged to the Lord alone. (Chapter 3 records the families, numbers, and duties of the Levites.) In order to maintain the twelve separate tribes even though the Levites were not counted as a tribe, the tribe of Joseph was given two portions, one to each of Joseph's sons, Ephraim and Manasseh (1:10, 32–35). In this way, the tribe of Joseph received a double share (Gen. 49:22–26).

1:49, 50 The tabernacle of the Testimony is called "the tabernacle of meeting" in v. 1 and "the tabernacle" in v. 51. The term tabernacle by itself points to the temporary and portable nature of the tent; it was a movable shrine, specially designed for the worship of God by a people on the march. Testimony suggests the covenantal significance of the tent. Within that tent were the symbols of the presence of God among His people, His signs of a continuing relationship with the Israelites.

1:51–53 The outsider refers not to a person of foreign birth but to a non-Levite (Ex. 12:43). The punishment of death is reiterated in 3:10, 38; 18:7 and was imposed in 16:31–33 (1 Sam. 6:19). God's presence was both a blessing and a curse in the camp, a blessing for those who had a proper sense of awe and respect of the nearness of the Deity and a curse for those who had no respect for the Divine Presence.

1:54 So they did sets the tone of obedience for the first part of Numbers. The later rebellion (ch. 11) surprises the reader after phrases such as this.

2:1, 2 The chapter begins, as do most of the chapters in Numbers, with the notice of revelation from God to Moses. by his own standard: This chapter is one of consummate design and order; it speaks of the joy of knowing one's place in relation to the living and holy God. Late Jewish tradition suggests that each tribe had its own standard corresponding in color to the twelve stones in the high priest's breastplate (Ex. 28:15–21). In addition, each triad of tribes had its own emblem. The designs, or motifs, of these emblems are not known to us today. Late Jewish tradition suggests that the standard of the triad led by Judah had the figure of a lion, of Reuben the figure of a man, of Ephraim the figure of an ox, and of Dan the figure of an eagle (see the four living creatures described in Ezek. 1:10; compare Rev. 4:7). These traditions are difficult to substantiate historically. Further, whereas we today think of the beauty and order of God's work in creation (Gen. 1; Prov. 8:22–31; Ps. 104) and of His work in the coming new heavens and new earth (Rev. 21; 22), Num. 2 presents the notion of the beauty and order of God's work in the formation of His people Israel, a concept akin to the beauty of the church as the body of Christ (Eph. 2:19-22). God Himself placed each tribe in a specific place around His tabernacle. A person's identity was not only derived from his or her tribe, but also from his or her place in relation to the tabernacle. This is an OT portrait of God's dwelling among His people. The beauty and order of this chapter points ultimately to the beauty of being in the presence of the risen King. some distance (Heb. minneged, "some way off," "from a distance"): None dared draw too close to the tabernacle, so that God's holiness might be maintained (Is. 6:1–5). In contrast, a person may come very close to Jesus. This is not because Jesus as God is any less holy, but because He has come so very near to us in order to save us.

2:3–9 The three tribes on the east side had pride of place. The ancient people of Israel were not seafaring; in effect they turned their backs to the sea, so the word for back could mean "west" or "the sea." The west was the place of the setting sun. On the other hand, the east faced the rising sun, a picture of promise and power (Ps. 19:4–6). In the line of march, Judah, with its allied tribes Issachar and Zebulun, set out first. The names of the worthies of each tribe and the numbers of the men of war are the same as in ch. 1.

2:10–16 Positioned on the south side were the tribe of Reuben and its allied tribes Simeon and Gad. The subtotal of the men of war in these three tribes was 151,450. They set out second, after the tribes allied with Judah.

2:14–16 There is a well-known textual difficulty in v. 14 respecting the name Reuel. The Hebrew text in our standard edition actually reads "Reuel" in this place but "Deuel" in 1:14. The Hebrew letters d and r were easily confused by scribes because of their similarity in form in certain stages of the formation of the written alphabet symbols. (A similar problem is found in Gen. 10:4, where the name "Dodanim" is "Rodanim" in the Samaritan Pentateuch and in 1 Chr. 1:7.) Many other Hebrew manuscripts, along with the versions, read Deuel in Num. 2:14, which we suspect is the superior reading. Incidentally, most of the textual critical problems of the Book of Numbers are similar to this spelling issue of an ancient name (but read 21:14, 15). Wholesale textual corruption that would make the numbers of chs. 1 and 2 entirely suspect is simply not evident.

2:17 Levites in the middle: Only the consecrated people were allowed to move with the tabernacle of meeting. In the line of march, the tabernacle was in the central position—a symbol of not only Israel's protection of the holy objects, but also of the presence of God among His people.

2:18–24 Positioned on the west side were the tribe of Ephraim and its allied tribes Manasseh and Benjamin. The subtotal of the men of war in these three tribes was 108,100. In the line of march, they were the third group to move out from their encampments.

2:25–31 The tribe of Dan and its allied tribes Asher and Naphtali were positioned on the north side. The subtotal of the men of war in these three tribes was 157,600. In the line of march, they were the last group to move out of the camp.

2:32–34 These verses summarize this stately chapter. The four sets of triads yielded the same total as the sum of the twelve individual units: 603,550 (1:46). There is a studied consistency in the use of these numbers. Chapter 2 presents an almost idealized picture of the tribes of Israel as they are prepared for their triumphal march toward the land of promise. The greater sorrow of their subsequent rebellion is a warning to us all.

3:1 the records of Aaron: The focus of ch. 3 is on the priests and the families of the tribes of Levi.

3:2–4 the sons of Aaron: When we read Nadab, the firstborn, it must be with a sense of parental grief. Aaron's expected heir would prove to be such a disappointment. With his brother Abihu, Nadab offered profane fire before God, an offense that cost them their lives (Lev. 10:1, 2). Two of Aaron's other sons were still living. Eleazar and Ithamar continued to minister as priests before God. However, the supervision of their father was even more necessary, given the errors of their older, deceased brothers. The words of 2:2, "some distance," become more poignant in the context of the punishment of Nadab and Abihu. If priests who were given permission to draw near the holiest places were subject to violent judgment because of an improper approach, what would be the fate of the intrusive layperson?

3:5–10 Twice the narrator distinguished the tribe of Levi from the "lay" tribes (1:47–50; 2:33). Here the Levites were given their sphere of work in the care of the tabernacle. The Levites, however, were not the priests; only Aaron and his sons could be priests. The Levites, who assisted in the care of the holy things, drew near to the Divine Presence. Yet the priests, who ministered in the tabernacle, drew even nearer. But only the high priest, on whose ministry the hope of the community was based, entered the Most Holy Place where the Divine Presence resided. God is holy. Only the high priest, separated from the community for this holy purpose, could approach God in order to intercede for the people before Him. In contrast, Christians can approach the Divine Presence on an even footing with one another. Jesus' death has covered our sins and made us holy in God's sight.

3:11–13 I Myself points to God's direct involvement in redemption. When God redeemed and saved His people, it was by His own person (Ex. 12:29; 13:3, 17, 21; 14:19, 30, 31). Similarly, when God selected the Levites to be a special tribe in the ministry of His presence, it was His personal work, not something He delegated to a created being. Likewise, God would later select Jesus to be a perfect High Priest for all those who would believe in Him (Ps. 110:4; Heb. 6:20—8:6). The firstborn are Mine: When God passed over the homes of the Hebrew families who had obeyed His commands in the Passover (Ex. 12:29–51), He declared the surviving firstborn Hebrew children—and also the firstborn of animals—to be His own (Ex. 13:1, 2). Now the firstborn children needed to be redeemed. An exchange was made. God took the entire tribe of Levi as His special possession, instead of the firstborn child of each family (3:40–51). I am the LORD emphasizes the authority of the speaker and the importance of His words.

3:14–20 the children of Levi: The three families of the Levites were Gershon, Kohath, and Merari. The Levites were distinguished from the other, non-priestly, tribes in several ways. (1) They were numbered separately from those numbered for war. (2) They were appointed as ministers in the worship of God rather than as soldiers in His army. (3) They were given certain restrictions for the conduct of their life. (4) They represented the gift of the firstborn of each family to the Lord (3:40–51). (5) They would live in cities amidst the various tribes instead of living together in a single region (35:1–8).

3:21–37 In the listing of the tribes' placement around the central sanctuary, there is a movement from the most favored tribe, Judah, to the lesser tribes (2:3–31). In the listing of the placement of the Levitical families, there is a different movement, from west to east. The Levitical families that were assigned the most important tasks were the families of Kohath in the south. The families of Gershon and Merari were assigned subsidiary tasks. The priests in the east were in leadership positions. The order was: Gershon to the west; Kohath to the south; Merari to the north; Moses, Aaron, and Aaron's sons to the east.

3:22–26 The family of Gershon cared for and handled the elements of the tabernacle. Males over the age of one month in this family numbered 7,500. screen: There were three curtains, coverings, or screens for the tabernacle: one at the gate of the court (4:26), a second at the entrance of the tent (v. 31; 4:25), and a third separating the Most Holy Place within the tent (4:5).

3:27–32 The work of the family of Kohath concerned the sacred implements and furnishings within the tabernacle. Aaron's son Eleazar supervised their work as the chief over the leaders, likely because the holy furnishings could only be carried in certain prescribed ways. The Amramites were the family of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam (Ex. 6:20). Males over the age of one month in Kohath's family numbered 8,600.

3:33–37 The work of the family of Merari concerned the structural elements of the tabernacle along with its utensils. In this family, males over the age of one month numbered 6,200.

3:38, 39 The placement of Moses, Aaron, and Aaron's sons on the east indicated a most-favored status. Their responsibility was to guard against improper approach to God's holy tabernacle. The total of the families of the Levites is given as 22,000.

3:40–42 Number all the firstborn: The firstborn of the families of the Exodus belonged to the Lord because He saved them. The firstborn of the Israelites' animals were to be offered as a sacrifice to the Lord. But the firstborn sons of the Israelites were not to be killed (as were the firstborn sons of the Egyptians; Ex. 13). The Israelites' firstborn sons were redeemed by the dedication of the Levites to the Lord's service. Now, in the wilderness in the second year of their deliverance, the actual exchange of the Levites for the firstborn was made. The phrase instead of strongly emphasizes the substitution of the Levites for the firstborn. This ancient substitution reminds us of the substitution of Jesus for sinners. We all deserved death because of our sins; but He died on the Cross in our place.

3:43–48 The number of the firstborn, 22,273, seems small for a population of two million. Some argue that this figure suggests that the strength of the Israelites was 250,000 people. Others suggest that the number reflects the number of Israelite firstborn at the time of the first Passover. The payment of five shekels was as much a lesson to the Israelites on the importance of the individual as it was an act of substitution for those involved. Each individual's redemption had to be covered. The payment of the shekels to Aaron and his sons was appropriate. Just as the Levites were given to the Lord in order to assist Aaron in his duties at the holy tabernacle, the redemption money was also given to Aaron to further this same holy work.

3:49–51 The weight of the collected money (1,365 shekels) indicates the impressive nature of the transaction . The number is five times 273, since there was one Levite for each firstborn and five shekels for each firstborn beyond the number of Levites. In this way, each of the firstborn was accounted for in God's plan of redemption.

4:1, 2 The Book of Numbers moves in an orderly, planned manner, following the pattern of Hebrew thought, which moves from the general to the specific, from the whole to the parts. The numbering of the tribes in ch. 1 is followed by the order of the camps in ch. 2. The general explanation of the duties of the priests and the Levitical families, and the issue of the redemption of the firstborn are the subjects of ch. 3. Now ch. 4 deals more specifically with the functions of the Levitical families. The fact that Kohath took precedence over Gershon, who was probably his older brother (see the order in 3:17), was one of the recurring marks of God's sovereignty in elevating younger brothers over their seniors (see Cain and Abel, Ishmael and Isaac, Esau and Jacob, Joseph among his brothers, David among his brothers, and so on). This census was distinct from the one in ch. 3. This census numbered those between the ages of thirty and fifty, those who were specifically able to work in the service of the Lord in the holy things of worship.

4:3 According to 8:24, the Levites were to be twenty-five years old, which seems to contradict the thirty years here. The work of the Levites and that of the priests whom they served was complex and demanding. It is possible that the extra five years of 8:24 includes a period of apprenticeship to prepare these servants of the Lord for the tasks that lay before them.

4:4 The care and preservation of the most holy things were given to the Kohathites (3:29–31). The details are spelled out in vv. 4–20. The Kohathites were not to touch the holy items nor even look casually on them, lest they die. Holy means "separate," "removed," or "distinct." Holy things are items and utensils that have been taken out of common use and given over to the service of the Lord. At the same time, describing God as holy draws attention to His transcendence, the fact that He is altogether separate from His creation, not bound to it, and never to be confused with it.

4:5–20 The section presents a complex picture of service, in which order and structure are important elements, in which colors, textures, and layers are aesthetic aspects, in which care for detail is planned, in which a hierarchy of person and responsibility is well in place, and in which seriousness of purpose is inescapable. Overall, we are impressed with the sheer volume of material things that were parts of ancient Israel's worship services. This is not "primitive" but highly sophisticated, not simple but highly demanding. These duties must have been unusually fatiguing for the participants. How we are drawn to the image of the High Priest, who is finally able to sit down because His work finally is done (Heb. 8:1).

4:6 The various materials used in the tabernacle and its furnishings may have had symbolic meanings to the ancients which have not been preserved for us. We do get a sense that the materials were costly and dear.

4:7–13 Colors—including blue, scarlet, and purple—played a significant role in Israel's worship.

4:14, 15 The means of transporting the holy things of the tabernacle was to carry them by poles on foot. The sad story of Uzzah, who attempted to steady the ark as it was being carried on a cart (2 Sam. 6:6, 7), is a vivid reminder of the seriousness of obeying God's commands.

4:16–20 duty of Eleazar: The priest had functions that were reserved only for him. Any other approach to God would result in death. This was both a gracious gift and a warning. On one hand, God mercifully granted that a priest could serve Him and approach Him. On the other hand, if the priest were faithless, no person could substitute for him. The Israelites had to approach God in the way He prescribed.

4:21–28 In wording that is similar to the description of the Kohathites' responsibilities (vv. 4–15), the men of Gershon were given their responsibilities in more detail than the instructions found in 3:21–26. The men of Gershon were responsible for the curtains and for numerous parts of the tabernacle worship system. These men were allowed to touch the holy things they dealt with, but they could not be casual in their work. Ithamar, the other surviving son of Aaron, was made their chief.

4:29–33 The tasks of Merari first mentioned in 3:33–37 are reiterated here. The men of Merari cared for tabernacle posts and pegs, boards and sockets, and so on. There was no unimportant work in the care and maintenance of the tabernacle. Each individual son of Merari was given by name the items he had to carry. Ithamar was given the responsibility to oversee the work of Merari as well as the work of Gershon.

4:34–49 According to the commandment of the Lord: According to Hebrew prose style, a summary of Moses' compliance with God's commands is given. The numbers for each of the Levitical families can be viewed two ways. It is possible that since these numbers are smaller than those of ch. 1, they are rounded off to the nearest ten. A core of Levites of about 8,500 would seem quite suitable for a population of 250,000 persons. It is also possible that these numbers (as perhaps in the case of the numbers of the tribal census in ch. 1) have been inflated by a factor of ten, in which the total number would be 858, and the Levites considerably busier!

5:1—10:10 The principal issue in this section is the development of purity within the camp and preparations for the triumphal entry of the Israelites into the land of Canaan. At 10:11 they begin the long-anticipated march.

5:1–4 defile: Ritual purity was an outward sign of an inward reality. God's principal concern was the purity of the heart of an individual (Deut. 10:12–20) and not just skin problems (Lev. 15:2, 25). The observable signs of disease and decay were opportunities to implement rules of purity within the camp. With these rules, the Israelites could maintain a camp free from disease and learn about the importance of purity, moral as well as physical. Contact with a dead body was included because of the clearly visible process of decomposition (6:6). However, the central issue in these restrictions was not disease; it was the fact of God's presence in the camp. God was holy, and hence the people had to maintain their purity and holiness. Jesus seems to have reached out particularly to those who were excluded by this section. He healed and brought back into the community those with skin diseases (Matt. 8:1–4; Luke 5:12–16; 17:11–19) and one who had a bleeding condition (Luke 8:43–48). He even touched the dead (Luke 8:54). In each of these cases, there was the danger of Jesus Himself becoming "unclean"; but by His healing touch the unclean were made clean, a fulfillment of His prophetic ministry (Is. 61:1, 2).

5:5–10 This section moves from the physical signs of uncleanness (vv. 1–4) to those that are no less severe but harder to detect. To keep the camp pure and holy, no one could mistreat another.

5:7–10 restitution: As in Lev. 6:1–7, it was not sufficient merely to confess a wrongdoing. One had to repay in full and add a penalty of one-fifth of the value to the one wronged (Lev. 22:14; 27:11–13, 31). Such rules emphasize the seriousness with which God held the people of the camp responsible to one another. If the one who was defrauded was no longer alive and had no relative surviving either, then the debt had to be paid to the priest. Relative is a translation of the Hebrew word goel (Ruth 3:3), which often depicts the protector of family rights. If the one who is defrauded is no longer alive and has no goel surviving either, then the debt must be made to the priest.

5:11–31 Infidelity is a third class of actions that brought defilement to the camp. Two considerations factor in the focus of this text on the woman. (1) A wife was regarded as a possession of her husband. Therefore, her infidelity was an offense against her husband (the Hebrew word “husband” is baal, “master”). (2) Paternity is harder to establish than maternity. Hence, there was a somewhat greater burden on the woman to be faithful to her husband so that reliable family lines would be maintained. This text can be read as an exceptionally harsh judgment on an unfaithful wife. But there is a sense in which this law ameliorated the harsh realities for a woman in this time period. A woman could be divorced in the ancient world on the mere suspicion of unfaithfulness. Without the limitation of laws such as this, a woman might even have been murdered by a jealous husband just on the suspicion of unfaithfulness. Here at least there was an opportunity for the woman to prove her innocence before an enraged husband.

5:12–15 Determining impurity in marital relations (when not detected “in the act”) was more difficult than noting skin disorders, but the issue was similar. God was in the camp (v. 3). Therefore, the issue had to be resolved by the priest in the presence of God.

5:16–18 Bitter water that brings a curse was not a “magic potion,” nor was there some hidden ingredient in the water. The addition of dust from the floor of the tabernacle to a vessel of holy water and the scrapings from the bill of indictment (v. 23) were signs of a spiritual reality. Holy water and dust from the holy place symbolized that God was the One who determined the innocence or guilt of the woman who had come before the priest.

5:19–21 Your thigh rot and your belly swell symbolically speaks of a miscarriage (of an illicit child) if the woman was pregnant, and an inability to conceive subsequently (v. 28). In the biblical world, a woman who was unable to bear children was regarded as being under a curse; in this case it would have been true.

5:22 Amen is the woman’s strong agreement to the terms of the ritual. If she were innocent, this ritual was the means of her protection. If she were guilty, she would be bringing judgment upon herself.

5:23–31 her guilt: The gravity of the ritual demonstrates that marital infidelity was regarded as a serious matter in Israel. However, the burden was largely on the woman, probably due to the possible conception of an illegitimate child. Yet the very provision of this law was a means of limiting unjust accusations made against a faithful wife.

“anointed”

(Heb. mashach) (Num. 7:1; Ex. 30:26) Strong’s #4886: This verb means to wet or daub a person with olive oil. This ritual designated a person or object as set apart for God’s special purposes. Kings, priests, and prophets were anointed at the beginning of their service (Lev. 8:12, 16:32, 2 Sam. 2:4, 5:3; 1 Kin. 19:15, 16). During the Exodus, many holy things were anointed, including the tabernacle itself. In 7:1, the olive oil is an exquisite and expensive blend of oil and spices. This special oil symbolized the significance of the consecration of the tabernacle and its furnishings to God.

6:1–8 Not to be confused with Nazarene (one from Nazareth; Matt. 2:23), the Nazirite (Heb. pala, meaning "difficult") was one who made a special vow to the Lord for a time of unusual devotion to God. Ordinarily this public vow was for a limited time (v. 13). There were three prohibitions: (1) total abstinence from everything associated with wine; (2) no trimming of the hair; and (3) no contact with a dead body. In all of this, the Nazirite was to regard himself or herself as holy to the LORD. After the vow was complete, the Nazirite would return to normal daily life (v. 20).

6:3, 4 wine and similar drink: The Hebrew term translated "drink" (shekar) is now understood to be "beer" (Prov. 31:6). Wine is made from fermented fruit, usually grapes; beer is produced from fermented grains. The Nazirite, for the period of the vow, renounced this part of ordinary life as a mark of his or her special devotion to God. The modern reader should resist associating unsavory ideas with wine and beer in this passage. Verse 20 demonstrates the drinking of wine was an expected part of life in biblical times (note on 28:7), and vv. 5–8 describe normal, everyday events as well, the cutting of one's hair and attending to the body of a deceased relative. Further, the sacrifices at the end of the period of the vow included the drink offerings, the pouring of wine on the altar in worship to the Lord (v. 15). The mandated abstinence of drinking wine and beer was a part of the voluntary action of taking a special vow to the Lord, not a judgment on the nature of wine itself.

6:5, 6 no razor: The male Nazirite over a period of time would have had unusually long hair, a sign of his special vow of devotion to the Lord (Judg. 16:17). It is more difficult to understand how this provision might have applied to a female Nazirite, who—presumably—would have been expected to have longer hair than her male counterpart. Perhaps in the case of a female Nazirite, as well as not cutting her hair she would not take ordinary care of it—a visible sign of her special vow of devotion to the Lord.

6:7 The extent of the prohibition concerning contact with a dead body is profoundly moving when it extends to the unexpected death of a father, mother, brother, or sister. In such a case, the Nazirite could not even fulfill the normal obligations that would be expected of a grieving relative. Such was the nature of the Nazirite vow of separation to God.

6:8, 9 So important was the concept of separation from contact with a dead body that the law included a provision for unexpected contact with the body of a person who dies very suddenly in one's proximity. In this case, the hair of the Nazirite was to be shaved, certain offerings presented, and the provisions of the vow continued, with allowance for the time inadvertently lost.

6:10–13 days of his separation are fulfilled: A vow as serious as the Nazirite's needed to have not only a process for initiation, but a solemn ritual for its culmination. The focus is on the hair, a visible symbol of the temporary vow. Therefore, in addition to presenting the required sacrifices (vv. 14–17), the man or woman who completed a Nazirite vow had to shave his or her head and burn the hair along with the peace offering (v. 18).

6:14–21 law of the Nazirite: The summary in this verse not only adds detail but also serves to solemnize the nature of the Nazirite vow. There is no indication in the NT that Jesus took the vow of a Nazirite. Yet it is likely that John the Baptist, who presumably did practice abstinence, was a Nazirite from birth.

6:22, 23 you shall bless: This famous Aaronic benediction is a blessing on all of the people. This blessing follows the section describing the special blessing that would result in the life of the man or woman who took on the Nazirite vow. God's blessing on the people was not gained by outstanding acts of devotion on their part. Rather, God freely blessed His people as a mark of His outstanding grace and mercy.

6:24 The word bless is the operative term in this passage. It is a general word indicating God's desire to bring good and significance to His people, to make their lives worthwhile and their relationship to Him remarkable. As God reached out to Abram and Sarai with His blessing (Gen. 12:1–3), so now He reaches out to the whole nation. There are those who seem to think that God's intent in the "Old" Testament was to make the lives of His people difficult, and that only in the NT does God reach out to people in grace. Such misconceptions fly in the face of texts such as this.

6:25 The idea of the phrase make His face shine is that of pleasure in the presence of God, of an intimate experience that is not unlike that experienced by Moses when he talked with God on Mount Sinai (Ex. 34:29–35). The people as a whole would have some sense of the God's glorious presence in their lives.

6:26 The idea of the phrase lift up His countenance is that of sensing God's smile. When a person was given an audience in an ancient Middle Eastern court, the monarch might not even look in that person's direction. The monarch might look at the claimant, but with an expression of wrath. How pleasant it was, however, when the monarch looked with pleasure on the one who had come before his throne. How wondrous when that smiling monarch is the King of kings and Lord of lords, and when He grants His peace!

6:27 Perhaps the most impressive element of the passage is this conclusion. God intended to place His name on the people. They would bear the benediction of His name as a spiritual brand, a mark of identification that they were a people peculiarly related to God Himself.

7:1 when Moses had finished: This phrasing places the events of this chapter before the taking of the census in chs. 1—4. The tabernacle was completed on the first day of the first month of the second year (Ex. 40:2). The census began on the first day of the second month of that year (1:1). Moses anointed and consecrated the tabernacle, its furnishings, the altar, and its utensils.

7:2–9 Covered carts would have been especially appropriate for the transportation of the elements of the tabernacle. The carts were distributed according to their use: two to the sons of Gershon for the transportation of the curtains (4:24–28) and four to the sons of Merari for the transportation of the heavier frames and support elements (4:29–33). None of the carts went to the Kohathites, for they had to carry the most holy things on poles on their shoulders (4:1–20).

7:10 Each of the leaders of the twelve tribes brought a special gift from his tribe to the Lord for the altar.

7:11–83 The paragraph for each tribe is almost exactly the same as for the other tribes, with the exception of the day of the presentation, the name of the leader, and the name of the tribe. The passage was designed to be read aloud in a slow and stately manner. As each tribal leader and his tribe was mentioned, members of that tribe would take special pleasure. Each would sense, “These were our gifts. This was our moment to give to the Lord.” Chapter 7 presents a scene of pageantry, pomp, ceremony, and ritual.

“sacrifice”

(Heb. zebach) (Num. 7:17; Ex. 10:25; Zeph. 1:7) Strong’s #2077: The Hebrew word comes from a verb meaning “to slaughter for an offering.” In accordance with the Law of Moses, a priest would offer sacrifices on behalf of a worshiper by burning them on the altar (Ex. 20:24). Sacrifices could either be grain offerings (the firstfruits of the harvest) or animal sacrifices. Which animals could be sacrificed at the tabernacle (and later the temple) was clearly stipulated by the Law; they had to be the best one had, with “no defect” (Lev. 22:21). Animal sacrifices under the Law served one primary function: to cover or atone for sin (Heb. 9:22). The sin of an individual was symbolically transferred to the animal to be sacrificed, thereby providing a substitutionary atonement. The sacrifices had to be repeated each year because they only partially dealt with sin (Heb. 10:4). Ultimately, all sacrifices in the OT point forward to and are types of the final, all-sufficient sacrifice made by Christ (Is. 53; 1 Cor. 5:7; Heb. 9:10).

7:84–88 This was the dedication offering: The totals of the twelve gifts are enumerated, demonstrating again the sense of order and control in the Book of Numbers.

7:89 More stunning than the gifts and their totals is this last verse of the chapter. When all was done, Moses heard the voice of God speaking from the innermost sanctuary. This was a mark of God’s approval. The Israelites’ gifts had been received with pleasure.

8:1–4 The seven lamps must have been exquisite, the finest work possible by artisans of the day. But the placement of these oil lamps was as important as their craftsmanship.

8:5–19 This section concerns the cleansing of the Levites in order to make them fit for their special service of the Lord in His holy worship. The Levites belonged to the Lord in exchange for the firstborn of Israel whom He spared during the tenth plague in Egypt (3:40, 41; 8:16–19).

8:7–9 To shave the entire body of the Levites was, in a sense, a physical symbol of a return to innocence. This act of devotion initiated the Levites into the service of the Lord. In addition to shaving their bodies, the Levites were also sprinkled with the water of purification and their clothing was washed.

8:10–12 lay their hands on: This ancient symbol of dedication (1) specified with a physical gesture the ones being dedicated, (2) expressed identification with the ones on whom the hands were placed, and (3) called for a divine sanction of this public and physical act. Aaron then presented the Levites to the Lord, perhaps with his hands swaying back and forth as though they were being waved before the Lord. Then those on whom hands had been placed reached out their own hands to the sacrificial bulls as a mark of identification.

8:13–16 The Hebrew words for wholly given to Me are an emphatic doubling: “given, given.” The story of the Exodus—in this case, the Passover—was always just under the surface of OT theology, for this saving event shaped the nation of Israel.

8:17–19 no plague: With their service in the tabernacle, the Levites functioned as a protective hedge between the people and the symbols of the Divine Presence. Here God’s mercy complements His holiness. His holiness would not bear an improper approach. But in His mercy, He provided a protective hedge in the Levites. They both warned others not to draw too close and instructed them on how to approach the living God appropriately.

8:20–26 This concluding paragraph serves to summarize the material of the chapter as well as to report on the actions of the priests and the people in obedience to the word of the Lord. Throughout the first ten chapters there is a regular pattern: (1) an announcement of the coming of the word of the Lord, (2) the details of that word, and (3) a report of compliance. With this pattern, we are conditioned to expect that obedience will regularly follow

God’s commands as the people make their way in triumphal procession to the Promised Land.

8:24–26 From twenty-five years old seems to disagree with the lower limit of thirty years given in 4:3. The difference is not easily resolved, but there is the possibility that the five years in dispute may have served as some sort of apprenticeship. Later in Israel’s history, David reduced the lower age for the Levites to twenty (1 Chr. 23:24, 27).

9:1 The first month of the second year indicates that the material of this chapter precedes the command to take a census in 1:1. With the tabernacle completed, the camp ritually purified, the religious functionaries cleansed and in place, the hovering symbols of God being experienced in the camp, and the Passover celebrated anew; all was ready for the triumphal march of God's citizen army to the Promised Land.

9:2–5 When the first Passover was celebrated in Egypt, the command was given to commemorate it throughout Israel's generations (Ex. 12:14). It was time now at the base of Mount Sinai to celebrate the Passover anew before the people began their march to Canaan.

9:6–10 Because of their defilement from touching the body of a dead person (5:2), there were some who could not keep the Passover at its appointed time. These people came willingly to ask Moses what they might do. God's intent was that the Passover would be celebrated by all of His people. Reasons of ritual impurity should not prevent a person from enjoying the night. Neither should one think that the celebration was unnecessary. Thus the ritually impure would celebrate the Passover a month later.

9:11 The specification of bitter herbs indicates that those who celebrated the Passover a month later would celebrate the exact details of it. They were not to rush through the ceremony, but were to take part in it fully, eating the lamb, the unleavened bread, and the bitter herbs.

9:12 nor break one of its bones: The Passover was not an ordinary meal. The food commemorated the great saving event of God in Israel's history. The meal was to be eaten with extraordinary attention to the lamb itself. It is fitting to remember that when the Savior was crucified as our Lamb," none of His bones was broken (John 19:36)—a fulfillment of the typology of this verse (Ex. 12:46; Ps. 34:20).

9:13 ceases to keep the Passover: Some people would simply refuse to celebrate the Passover, not for legitimate reasons, but because of ingratitude and insolence. Such persons would be cut off from among the people and would bear the responsibility for their sins.

9:14 Those who lived with the Hebrew people could be included in the celebration of Passover, but they first had to be circumcised (Ex. 12:48). This was a rite that applied to the citizen as well as to the alien. As a stranger heard the story of God's gracious, powerful actions in the salvation of His people, that person would naturally question the Israelites on how he or she could participate in Israel's blessing.

9:15–23 The cloud (Ex. 13:21) was a dramatic symbol of the active presence of God with His people, hovering over them in protection, moving ahead of them for direction, coming near at night as fire for comfort in the darkness. The rest of this paragraph serves as a summary of the activities of the cloud and the fire throughout Israel's experience in the wilderness.

9:23 at the command of the LORD: The cloud and the fire were manifestations of God's will. When the cloud rose, the people were to set out. When the cloud settled, the people were to encamp. There was nothing predictable in the movement or settling of the cloud; all was dependent on God's sovereignty. The people saw the glory and the will of God in the cloud's actions.

IN CONTEXT

The Congregation

The "congregation" which Moses was to call by blowing the silver trumpets (Num. 10:2, 3) included the entire population of Israel as God's chosen people. Often this group was referred to as the "assembly" (Heb., edah or qahal), especially when it gathered at an appointed time (for example, on the Sabbath or a feast day) and place (such as at the "tabernacle of meeting," Num. 10:3) for religious purposes.

Centuries later, when the synagogue was developed (Mark 1:21), the group that gathered there was referred to as the "assembly." The Greeks also described gatherings of their citizens as "assemblies" (ekklesia). When the OT was translated into Greek, the Hebrew word for "assembly" was often rendered ekklesia, a term that early Christians adopted. Eventually ekklesia was translated into English as "church."

10:1, 2 The two silver trumpets were different from the curved ram's horn trumpets (Lev. 25:9; Ps. 81:3). Made of hammered silver, these instruments were straight with a flaring bell, like the post horns of medieval Europe. Since they did not have valves, they were played like a bugle. The pattern was as follows: The cloud would begin to move, the trumpets would sound, and the people would begin to break camp and move out within their ordered ranks. When the ark, the symbol of the Divine Presence, was moved, Moses recited the words of the song of triumph (v. 35).

10:3, 4 but if they blow only one: The number of trumpets that sounded and the notes they played were signals for various groups within the encampments as well as for the people as a whole.

10:5–8 begin their journey: Even when the trumpets sounded, there was never to be a pell-mell rush of the people. The tone throughout this section is one of discipline and order. God is a God of order, and this would be reflected in the conduct of the Israelites' camp (1 Cor. 14:40; Eph. 4).

10:9 The trumpets were not signals for the movement of the camp in the wilderness; later they functioned as signals for the army in Canaan. The sounding of the trumpets would be a part of Israel's war against the inhabitants of the land. In addition to functioning as signals at certain occasions, trumpet-blowing also became a symbol of calling on the Lord and a reminder that God was at work among the Israelites. In all symbols such as this, there is the danger of degenerating into magic, of substituting the symbol for the reality it represents. But the biblical world is filled with similar symbols of divine sanction. The abuse of symbols by some people is not an argument against their proper use, any more than the abuse of prayer (Is. 1:15) is a mandate for all prayer to cease.

10:10 day of your gladness: The trumpets were also played in the context of worship, particularly on days of feasting and the celebrations of the beginning of the month. I am the LORD your God indicates that the preceding was a divine revelation of the will of God. Furthermore, these words serve as a benediction on the people at the beginning of their march.

10:11 At long last, the time had come for the people to set out on the triumphal journey for which God had been preparing them. When the cloud was taken up by the Lord Himself, the Israelites packed up their camp and left. The cloud was a symbol of God's presence, His protection, and His guidance. The people could fearlessly march into the unknown.

10:12, 13 This verse is a summary statement of the initial march. The Wilderness of Paran was not actually reached until 12:16. The Wilderness of Paran is in the northeastern Sinai peninsula, south of the Negev, the desert area below Judah. Paran was a good staging area for the conquest of the land, away from the more fortified cities toward Egypt in the west.

10:14–28 This section, like so many others in Numbers, conveys a sense of pageantry, drama, and ordered design. The section was designed to be read aloud as a narrative of God's faithfulness to all of His people and of their proper response to His guidance. The repetition of the names from each tribe (chs. 1; 7) must have been an eloquent statement at the time. One would expect these names to be memorialized as the leaders of the first generation who led their tribes into Canaan. Because of the events that follow (chs. 11–14), however, these names take on a certain sadness. These people did not achieve their destiny in the land. Rather, they were buried in the desert.

A Combination of Divine and Human Guidance

The way that Moses led Israel through the wilderness serves as an instructive model for Christians seeking guidance in today's complex world. On the one hand, Moses invited a relative, Hobab, to act as a guide (Num. 10:29–31). On the other, he continued to follow the fiery cloud of the Lord's presence (10:34; 9:15–23). Moses used a combination of human and divine guidance to lead Israel to the Promised Land.

The fiery cloud, the tablets of stone, the Law, and other direct communications from God were the primary means of guidance, to be sure. But for many if not most day-to-day decisions, human judgment and wisdom—such as Hobab's knowledge of the wilderness—were required. The appearance of Hobab at this point is interesting. Earlier, Moses' father-in-law had counseled him to appoint judges to assist him in leading the people (Ex. 18:17–23). Now Moses appealed strongly to Hobab to "be our eyes" (Num. 10:31). So in both cases Moses realized the value of human resources.

Actually, the text doesn't say whether Hobab gave in to Moses' insistent appeals. It may be that Hobab returned to his own land and people as he had intended (10:30). Yet even if he left, the combination of human and divine leadership remained, as Moses, Aaron, Miriam, and the leaders appointed earlier continued to make decisions. This takes nothing away from God's leadership. Rather it demonstrates that God uses a variety of ways to lead His people. As we seek guidance today, we need to pay attention to divine revelation—particularly to the Bible, God's written Word—but we also need to recruit, listen to, and follow those whom God has gifted with insight and leadership.

10:29–32 Reuel (perhaps to be identified with Jethro) is mentioned in Ex. 2:18–21 as the priest of Midian who befriended Moses and gave his daughter Zipporah to him as his wife. Moses invited Hobab the son of Reuel to join Israel on their triumphal journey. At first Hobab declined. But at Moses' insistence, Hobab continued with the Israelites (Judg. 1:16), serving as the eyes of the people in the wilderness. In this example of OT evangelism, Hobab joined in the destiny of Israel just as Ruth the Moabitess would later (Ruth 2). Joining Israel was not just a change of location; it involved a radical transformation of one's life and purpose so that it was centered around the living God.

10:33, 34 So they departed: These summary words are all of grace, all of mercy. As we read them, we fully expect that the journey will proceed with similar guidance and compliance until the victory is fully won.

10:35, 36 Rise up, O LORD and Return, O LORD are words of a triumphant song. These are not magical incantations, but poetic affirmations of God's presence among His people and prayers that His presence would have its effect in the lives and destiny of the people. The expression many thousands means the same as "untold thousands" or "teeming millions."

11:1–3 Now when the people complained: After the Israelites had traveled just three days following their deliverance from Egypt, they murmured against the Lord because of a lack of water (Ex. 15:22–24). Here again, after a journey of only three days, they murmured against the Lord for unspecified reasons. This was not the "good-natured complaining" of people doing a difficult task. Murmuring demonstrated unfaithfulness and was an act of rebellion that demanded God's judgment. The fire of the LORD seems to have come both as a warning and as a purifying agent, since it hit only the outskirts of the camps. In the midst of wrath, the Lord remained merciful. He had long-standing patience with a people who continuously rebelled.

11:4 The mixed multitude indicates the presence of others who had escaped from slavery or poverty in Egypt, but were not Israelites (Ex. 12:38). These people were an encouragement to the continual murmuring that characterized the Israelites in the wilderness. It was understandable that those who did not share Israel's faith in God would make every discomfort an excuse to agitate rebellion against Him and His appointed leadership in Moses.

11:5, 6 The tone of the words this manna is one of contempt (an attitude that would peak years later; 21:5). The foods of Egypt were plentiful and varied, even for slaves and the poor. The provision of manna was regarded by the Israelites as monotonous, something that caused the inner being to be dried up.

11:7–9 The clear implication of these verses is that the provision of manna was something that later generations would not know about or understand without an explanation. Its daily appearance, with a double measure on the day before the Sabbath and none at all on the Sabbath, is clearly miraculous. One pot of manna was kept in the ark of the covenant for generations (Ex. 16:33). God provided manna throughout the forty-year experience in the wilderness. Then it ceased to appear as mysteriously as it had begun (Ex. 16:35). Jesus described Himself as the bread of life, better than the manna in the wilderness (John 6:48–58).

11:10, 11 In this instance, the fact that Moses also was displeased caused him to pray for help in dealing with the complaints of the people and their many needs (vv. 12–15). On another occasion, Moses' displeasure would lead to his own sin and would cost him the opportunity to enter the land of Canaan (20:1–13).

11:12–15 Did I conceive all these people? God was the “mother” of the Israelites; Moses was their “wet nurse.” The people were like whining children who cannot be satisfied. In a flourish of rhetoric, Moses asked the Lord to kill him (1 Kin. 19:4) rather than force him to continue in this sorry situation.

(Heb. zaqen) (Num. 11:24; Ex. 24:1; Josh. 24:1) Strong’s #2205: The word elder means “aged” or “old” (Gen. 18:12, 13). In the OT, the word elder refers to either an aged, decrepit person (Gen. 44:20; Job 42:17) or to a mature person who had authority within the Israelite community (Ex. 3:16; Josh. 8:33). Elders could serve as judges (Ex. 18:12), advisors (Ezek. 7:26), and ruling officials (Deut. 19:12; Ruth 4:2). Their duties were carried out at the city gate (Lam. 5:14), and their position was one of great honor (Prov. 31:23; Is. 9:15). At certain times in Israel’s history, elders played a significant part in selecting Israel’s king (1 Sam. 30:26; 2 Sam. 17:4) and establishing the correct worship of God (1 Kin. 8:1). In addition to age (Hebrew tradition states that an elder had to be a man at least fifty years of age), an elder had demonstrate his maturity by fearing God, being truthful, and not coveting (Ex. 18:21).

11:16, 17 Moses’ provocation led to the appointment of seventy men to assist him in the administration of the camp. These men would have been in addition to the leaders of each tribe. Presumably they formed a body of administrative assistants for Moses to reduce the burden he felt in attempting to meet the needs of the vast population by himself. These elders were Spirit-empowered (v. 25).

11:18–20 you shall eat meat: The complaint of the people had so angered the Lord that He determined to cause them to have an overabundance of meat. The Israelites had rejected the manna, describing it as something that dried their being (v. 6). God was going to give them so much meat that it would become sickening to them, causing them to realize what a great gift manna really was. The issue here was not really meat and manna, but whether the people would serve God as their God. To reject the provision was, in essence, to reject the Provider.

11:21–24 The idea of such plentiful meat in the wilderness was something even Moses balked at, wondering how even God could provide food for a company so large. God’s response to Moses, has the LORD’s arm been shortened? is a challenge to all people of faith. There is simply no limiting the power of God. Jesus’ feedings of the multitudes are NT examples of God’s continuing ability to provide food for thousands (Matt. 14:13–21; 15:32–39).

11:25 The Spirit rested upon them (Acts 2) is a divine empowerment of the seventy elders who would aid Moses in the administration of the camp. The prophesying they did on that occasion was a mark of the divine presence, much like the extraordinary speaking in other languages by the Spirit-empowered disciples of the risen Christ (Acts 2:6–12). We may describe this OT event as a "sign gift," marking the men as specially empowered by God's Spirit. We note as well in this verse the association of Yahweh with the cloud of His presence (10:11).

11:25–30 For reasons that were not recorded, Eldad and Medad did not join the other elders at the tabernacle of meeting (v. 16). Nonetheless, the Spirit of God came upon them and empowered them in their own camp. When the word came to Moses that these men were prophesying even though they were not where they were supposed to be, Joshua was afraid that their possible influence in the community would detract from the authority of Moses. Here Joshua showed his loyalty to Moses by deferring to Moses' leadership and authority. Moses responded by wishing that all of God's people were Spirit-empowered. (This is the first time Joshua is mentioned.)

A quail trapped in a net. This bird is probably similar to those provided miraculously to sustain the Israelites in the wilderness (Num. 11:31, 32).

11:31–33 True to His promise (vv. 18–20), the Lord provided meat in the form of quail from the sea. He sent a strong wind that brought vast numbers of quail fluttering about three feet off the ground. The people fell into a frenzy, killing the birds and gathering them all through the night and on into the next day.

11:34 Kibroth Hattaavah ("Graves of Craving") was a vast graveyard of needlessly craving, ungrateful people.

11:35 Hazeroth ("Enclosures") allowed the people a respite from the journey and its judgments.

12:1 The order of the names Miriam and Aaron suggests that Miriam was the instigator of the attack against Moses. Note also that the principal punishment falls on Miriam (v. 10). Pointing at the Ethiopian woman whom Moses married seems to have been merely a pretext for attacking Moses. Miriam and Aaron might have had a disagreement with Zipporah, Moses' wife (Ex. 2:21), or they might have been referring to a second wife who Moses married without their approval. In any event, the real issue dividing Miriam and Aaron from their brother was the special relationship Moses had with God.

12:2 only through Moses: The prophetess Miriam (Ex. 15:20) had very high status in the camp. Certainly Aaron, through whom God also spoke and who ministered before God as the high priest (2:1; 3:1; 4:1), was also in a most privileged position. Nonetheless, neither Miriam nor Aaron had the same proximity to God that Moses had. This must have galled Miriam and her brother. The verse ends ominously with the words And the LORD heard it. God was going to act on what He had heard.

12:3 Some people argue that a very humble man would hardly write about his unparalleled humility. Others contend that a humble man who was writing through God's inspiration might speak of his own humility. Still others have suggested that the verse comes from a later period and is a comment inserted to place the challenge against Moses in perspective. Another possibility is that the Hebrew word anaw, translated as humble, may mean "miserable" in this context. The events described in ch. 11 may have taken an enormous toll on Moses. This verse may be a description of Moses' utter sense of brokenness as he experienced his brother and sister's betrayal.

(Heb. anan) (Num. 11:25; 12:5; Ex. 24:16; Deut. 31:15) Strong’s #6051: The OT word for cloud is derived from a verb that means “to cover” or “to intervene as an obstacle” (Gen. 9:14). In the OT, clouds often accompanied appearances of God (Ex. 16:10; 1 Kin. 8:10, 11). In fact, God demonstrated His presence and guided the Israelites through the Sinai desert with a cloud (Num. 9:15–23). Sometimes the OT describes God as the One who “rides” on the clouds (Pss. 68:4; 104:3; Is. 19:1). In ancient Palestine, this was often a description of Baal’s power over the wind and rain. But with these words, the prophets and psalmists proclaimed that only God was truly in control of the elements. Other OT passages use clouds as symbols of the divine judgments associated with the day of the Lord (Joel 2:2; Zeph. 1:15).

12:4, 5 Then the LORD came down: Suddenly God spoke to Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, and then descended dramatically in the midst of the cloud. This theophany (appearance of God) was ominous. The language of this verse is more directly physical than usual. God came down, stood, and then called Aaron and Miriam forward.

12:6–8 The framework of this section is poetry, making the pronouncement of the Lord more vivid and memorable. The language conveys that God was in control. He spoke to whomever He wished and in the manner of His choosing. God is Spirit (John 4:24). Language about His “face” is a concession to our way of thinking of a person. Hence, face to face speaks of the most intimate relationship that God had with Moses.

12:9, 10 The singling out of Miriam suggests that she was the instigator in this challenge to Moses (v. 1). Leprous refers to a serious skin disorder that made her unclean (5:1–4).

12:11 Aaron’s words of confession—we have done foolishly—on behalf of his sister and himself are touching, and a sure sign of his deference to the leadership of his brother.

12:12–14 Moses’ appeal to God on behalf of his sister was met with stern words from God that speak of a public humiliation. We are not told what might provoke a father to spit in the face of his daughter, but it would have had to be something quite shameful. The incident at hand was not trivial, but God’s grace was abundant.

12:15 The delay in moving the camp for the seven days of Miriam's isolation indicates the high regard that Moses and the people held for Miriam. It is sad that, as in the case of Eve, the thing that Miriam is most noted for is her sin. Nevertheless, biblical writers continued to hold her in high esteem (Mic. 6:4).

12:16 The Wilderness of Paran had been the destination of the people since they set out from Mount Sinai (10:12). Sadly, the character of the people had changed en route. The people had murmured and rebelled against God and Moses, God's anointed.

13:1–3 According to Deut. 1:21–23, the sending of men to spy was the idea of the people. They might have urged Moses to send spies to the land to discover the best approach for conquest. Moses was then instructed by the Lord to proceed with the plan. The staging position in the Wilderness of Paran (12:16), southeast of the land of Canaan, was ideal for a northward sweep of the spies and then of the armies of Israel.

13:4–15 The list of names of the men from each of the twelve tribes was not a mere duplicate of earlier lists (ch. 1). Presumably, these men were regarded not only as leaders in their tribal units, but also as men who were physically and spiritually capable of great exploits.

13:16 Changing Hoshea's name to Joshua probably indicated great esteem on Moses' part. As God often changed the names of people who had a special relationship with Him, so Moses changed the name of the one who would eventually become his spiritual heir. This was an act of ritual adoption. Hoshea means "Salvation"; Joshua means "the Lord Saves." Joshua and Jesus are two forms of the same name.

The Valley of Eshcol, where the twelve spies sent out by Moses picked a huge cluster of grapes (Num. 13:17, 23).

13:17–20 Moses' commands to the spies were broad but definite. They were to spy out the land, determine what they could about the people and their cities, and observe the produce and forests. Then they were to bring back some of the fruit of the land, because it was the season of the first grape harvest. After more than a year in the wilderness since the time of the Exodus, the mere sight of fresh fruit from the land would be sign enough that God's word was about to be fulfilled. That they brought back grapes is so appropriate, as "eshkol" is the Jewish symbol of joy and is used frequently to decorate the place of joyous events. It is no coincidence that the Israeli tourist bureau of today has as its symbol the two men carrying a great cluster of grapes.

13:21–25 Although the spies went all the way north to the region of Syria—near the entrance of Hamath—few details are recorded of their journey. Emphasis is given to Hebron, where descendants of Anak were found (v. 28), and to the Valley of Eshcol, where an enormous cluster of grapes was discovered.

13:26 The report of the spies came as a grievous surprise. The spies went to the people at Kadesh in the Wilderness of Paran. The name Kadesh is associated with the Hebrew word that means "holy." Had the story turned out differently, this name would have been associated with positive memories. It would have been here that they would have sanctified themselves for their campaign of conquest of the land.

13:27 The phrase flows with milk and honey is a slogan of redemption, a slogan expressing God's goodness in His promise of the land of Canaan (Num. 14:8; 16:13, 14; Ex. 3:8, 17; 13:5; 33:3; Lev. 20:24; Deut. 6:3; 11:9; 26:9, 15; 27:3; 31:20). Milk probably refers to goats' milk; honey refers to bees, which were especially associated with the propagation of fruitful pastures and fields in Canaan. The phrase evoked visions of pleasure and plenty for the Israelites. Canaan was a good land, and enjoyment of the land would follow faithfulness to God.

13:28 The spies quickly focused on the troubles of the land—the strength of its inhabitants, the fortification of its cities, and the immense size of the descendants of Anak in Hebron (v. 22). Apparently, this was a family whose hereditary stature was legendary in the ancient Middle East (v. 33).

13:29 The spies listed the Amalekites and the other peoples to support their claim that the land was not empty, that people had settled throughout its borders (Gen. 15:18–21). God did not promise Israel virgin territory, but a place that was inhabited by those whom God wished to displace because of their iniquity.

13:30 Only Caleb spoke out against the flow of negative reports. He urged immediate attack based on his confidence in the armies of Israel, and, we may presume, on his underlying faith in God, who would fight for His people (10:35, 36).

13:31–33 The other spies were steadfast in their bad report, which included their exaggerations. They described the land as evil and its inhabitants as giants. Their contentious description was ultimately an attack on God, the giver of the land. Such scandalous language could not be tolerated (14:36, 37).

IN DEPTH

Kadesh

• A site in northeastern Sinai that probably included a well or spring and a settlement; located between the Wilderness of Zin and the Wilderness of Paran, seventy miles southwest of Hebron and fifty miles from Beersheba.

• Also referred to as Kadesh Barnea (Num. 32:8; Deut. 1:2).

• Known as En Mishpat (“spring of judgment”) in Abraham’s day, when warring kings marched through (Gen. 14:7).

• Base camp from which Moses sent out twelve spies to spy out Canaan (Num. 13:3, 26) and the scene of the people’s refusal to go up and possess the land.

• The site at which Moses dishonored God by striking a rock to produce water, rather than speaking to it as the Lord commanded; thus the waters were called Meribah Kadesh (“quarreling” or “strife” at Kadesh, Deut. 32:51; compare Num. 20:1–13; 27:14).

• Marker for the southern border with Edom (Num. 34:3, 4), whose king refused the Israelites direct access to the Promised Land (20:14–21).

14:1 Following the scandalous report of the spies, the people wept that night. They wept not because of the sinful attitude of the spies, but because of their own loss of dream, their own sense that they had made a mistake in leaving Egypt.

14:2–4 Following the night of weeping, the people conspired together in despair. They complained against Moses and Aaron. They speculated that they would have been better off dying in Egypt or in the desert. They plotted to select a leader to take them back to Egypt. But they did a worse thing by slandering God, in saying that He would bring them to a place where they would die along with their wives and children.

14:5–10 The response of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and Caleb contrasted remarkably with the foolish terror of the people. They also wept, but for the sins of the people against the Lord and His mercy. The two faithful spies, Caleb and Joshua, gave a good report of the land in the context of robust faith in God. They knew that the living and faithful God would give it to His people. They repeated the slogan of redemption concerning the land: a land which flows with milk and honey (13:27). They reasoned, if the LORD delights in us, then He will bring us into this land. These words of encouragement were followed by words of strong warning. To speak as the people had done was an act of rebellion and cowardice. The people were not trusting God. They are our bread was a boastful manner of speaking of the victory envisioned by the good spies, approximating the exaggerated language of the rebellious spies (13:33). The words their protection has departed from them speaks of God's forbearance; for 400 years He had endured the wickedness of the people of Canaan. Now the cup of iniquity was full (Gen. 15:16).

IN FOCUS

“rebel”

(Heb. marad) (Num. 14:9; Josh. 22:18, 19; Dan. 9:5) Strong’s #4775: The word translated rebel means to “revolt” or “flagrantly disobey a recognized authority.” God regards rebellion as a serious matter. He does not take it lightly when His people, whom He loves, reject His words. The OT compares rebellion with the terrible sins of witchcraft and sorcery (1 Sam. 15:23). Israel, who had seen the Lord deliver them from bondage in Egypt, often rebelled despite God’s frequent warnings against doing so (Deut. 1:26, 43; 9:23, 24). The one who rebels against God departs from His precepts and refuses to heed His warnings (Dan. 9:5, 6). Scripture gives many examples of rebellion that illustrate its consequences—divine chastisement (Is. 1:20). These should serve as warnings to the believer (1 Cor. 10:1–12).

14:10 The bold words of the good spies elicited two responses: rejection by the congregation, who attempted to stone them, and the sudden appearance of the glory of God to save the lives of His faithful servants.

14:11, 12 Not unlike the leaders of Israel in Jesus’ day, the people rejected God’s miraculous signs. God’s preliminary judgment was to utterly reject the nation. They clearly had rejected Him, dismissing the signs that He had done among them. In response, God again offered to use Moses to begin a new people.

14:13–19 As Gen. 22 records the divine testing of Abraham, this chapter records the divine testing of Moses. Moses might have accepted the Lord’s offer and stood aside while the Lord swept the desert clean of this rebellious people. Instead, Moses protested that this drastic act of judgment would taint the reputation of God among the nations. Moses argued that the Egyptians would hear it, and that the great victory of God over their gods would be dismissed by their reinterpretation of events, if God were not able to bring His people into their new home. Then Moses quoted the Lord concerning His great mercy (v. 18 cites Ex. 34:6, 7) and begged Him to pardon the iniquity of the people.

14:20–25 Moses’ dramatic recitation led to God’s pardon of the rebels. The passion of God was seen in the exclamation of the words as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the LORD. This is an oath of deity that one day there will be the fullness of His glory throughout the earth, repeated by the Seraphim in Isaiah 6. The Christian thinks of the portraits of Jesus as the manifested glory of God (John 1:14) and in the coming age when His glory will illumine the earth (Rev. 21:23). God scolded the people who had ignored the many evidences of His glory in their midst, and who had put Him to the test now these ten times. It is possible that the expression "ten times" is a rounded number that speaks of the people's complete rejection of the Lord. This is another example of the ways numbers are used in the Book of Numbers. It is also possible (with some caution) to enumerate ten instances of rejection: (1) at the Red Sea where it seemed that Pharaoh's army would destroy them (Ex. 14:10–12); (2) at Marah where they found bitter water (Ex. 15:22–24); (3) in the Desert of Sin as they hungered (Ex. 19:1–3); (4) in the Desert of Sin as they paid no attention to Moses concerning storing manna until morning (Ex. 16:19, 20); (5) in the Desert of Sin as they disregarded Moses concerning gathering manna on the seventh day (Ex. 16:27–30); (6) at Rephadim as they complained for water (Ex. 17:1–4); (7) at Mount Sinai as Aaron led the people to make a golden calf (Ex. 32:1–35); (8) at Taberah where the people raged against the Lord (Num 11:1–3); (9) at Kibroth Hattaavah in the grumbling provoked by the rabble for quail (Num 11:4–34); (10) at Kadesh in the Desert of Paran when the people refused to receive the good report of Joshua and Caleb and wished themselves dead (Num 14:1–3). God's judgment was that the people who rejected Him would not see the land. Everyone was included except Caleb, whom God called My servant, and Joshua (v. 38). God then warned the people to bypass the region of the Amalekites. This was no longer a time for war, but for retreating into the wilderness.

14:26–38 This section forms what seems to be God's second response to the prayer of Moses (vv. 13–19). This second response contains some new elements. First, the little ones would be the only survivors of the wilderness wanderings. All over the age of twenty would die in the wilderness over the period of the next forty years. The forty days of the spies' journey would correspond to forty years of aimless wandering in the wilderness. For forty days the people had the opportunity to move with purpose; now for forty years there would be no purpose in their wandering. Finally, a distinction was made between the cowardly spies and the two faithful ones. Only Joshua and Caleb lived. The evil spies died immediately by a plague from the Lord. In the preservation of Joshua and Caleb from the fate of the others, we sense again the justice of the Lord. In His wrath He remembered to be merciful.

14:39–45 An abortive attempt at an invasion of the land by a still-rebellious people concludes this sad narrative. The people shouted their acknowledgment that they had sinned, but they had not taken to heart the seriousness of God's judgment on them. Heedless of Moses' warning that the LORD was not among them, the people went into battle. The result was disastrous. They go apart from the symbols of the divine presence and, indeed, apart from the presence of Yahweh. The Amalekites and the Canaanites route the disobedient armies of Israel, driving them deep into the wilderness. This is a classic example of way too little, very much too late. Only a disheartening, disastrous defeat could convince the armies that all was lost for themselves. The name Hormah means "Utter Destruction." At this point, the focus of Numbers shifts to the younger generation, who would enter the land.

15:1, 2 The words when you have come into the land may seem inappropriate following the events of chs. 13; 14. Yet God had not rejected the Israelites entirely. Their children would enter the land that their parents had rejected. Chapter 15, which concentrates on offerings and sacrifices, not only instructs the people about the worship of God, it is also is a sign of God's continuing promise: the people would eventually enter the land.

15:3–16 This section presents instructions on special offerings (the Hebrew word is lepalle, "to make a special offering," from the verb pale, "to be special," "extraordinary," "wondrous"; it is a verb used of the person and work of the Lord himself). These offerings were to be presented to the Lord by the people when they entered Canaan. There is a sense in which this chapter is a supplement to the teaching on sacrifices in Lev. 1—7.

15:4 a grain offering: The use of grain was as important in the sacrificial system of ancient Israel as was the offering of animals. Fine flour (Heb. solet) was luxurious, rather than ordinary. The mixing of certain proportions of fine flour with olive oil indicated that only the very best could be used in the celebratory worship of God.

15:5–12 a drink offering: Wine was used in drink offerings (vv. 7, 10) as an accompaniment to the burnt offerings of the goat, lamb, ram, and bull. In the pouring out of this wine on the altar, the worshiper poured out something of great value. As was the case with most of the other offerings, this represented the self-deprivation of the worshipers before God.

15:13–16 The words all who are native-born seem to point to a time after the wilderness experience, when the Israelites had already entered the land. As in the celebration of the Passover, the presentation of these offerings was to be done in the same way, whether the worshiper was born in the land or a stranger.

15:17–21 The heave offering is also known as the wave offering. Right at the beginning of the harvest, the harvester had to acknowledge that his produce was a gift from God. By holding up the very first produce from a harvest or of the first cake made from the first grain of the season, the worshiper thanked God as the giver of all good gifts.

15:22–29 If you sin unintentionally: Some sacrifices were offered on behalf of the nation as a whole, for there was always the possibility of an unintentional or unknown sin in the life of the people. Such sins may have been committed by the people as a whole (vv. 24–26) or by an individual (vv. 27, 28).

15:30, 31 The Hebrew phrase translated presumptuously means “with a high hand,” with open disdain for the will and work of God. This is a sin that is done, as it were, while looking God in the eye and shaking one’s fist at Him.

15:32–36 It is quite possible that gathering sticks on the Sabbath day is a specific example of the kind of thing mentioned in vv. 30, 31. One who flagrantly went out gathering sticks on the Sabbath was clearly in breach of the command to honor the Sabbath day (Ex. 20:8–11). This individual was caught and then brought to Moses for judgment.

15:37–41 The wearing of tassels (Heb. sisit) on the corners of garments was a beautiful sign of great significance. The tassels were memory devices to keep the wearer focused on the commandments of God. To which your own heart and your own eyes are inclined speaks vividly of the believer’s old sin nature. The tendency to sin is always present, as the psalmist observes (Ps. 119:11). Harlotry of the heart is unfaithfulness to God. Each of us needs to have reminders to keep us thinking rightly about God and ourselves.

15:41 I am the LORD your God: God identified Himself as the One who gave these commands. He declared that He had a relationship with the Israelites. He was their God, and He had saved them from slavery. The Israelites had every reason to obey His directives, for He was their Lord and their Savior.

16:1 Yet another rebellion against Moses was led by Korah, a Kohathite (1 Chr. 6:22, 23). Korah and his allies challenged Aaron and Moses in much the same way that Miriam and Aaron had challenged Moses earlier (ch. 12). Korah and his allies were not satisfied with the role God had given them in the service of the tabernacle, so they decided to press for the priesthood (v. 10). This rebellion, then, was against Aaron as well as Moses (v. 11).

16:2, 3 Korah and the 250 leaders argued that the entire nation was holy to the Lord (Ex. 6:7) and that Moses and Aaron had presumptuously taken leadership positions. The root of their complaint was that God had not elevated them sufficiently.

16:4–8 Moses' response was complex. First, he submitted to the will of God, as seen in his action of falling on his face. Then he issued a challenge based on an expectation of an overt display of the will of God. He instructed each of the dissenters to take a censer, a metal holder for incense used in worship, and place incense on it as a sign of approach to God. Then each would await God's decision. Finally Moses tossed their own words back to them. Earlier they had said to him and to Aaron that they had gone too far (v. 3, "You take too much upon yourselves"); now Moses says that they have gone too far (v. 7, "You take too much upon yourselves"). The words are precisely the same in the Hebrew text.

16:9–11 The men who were seeking a higher position were in fact being contemptuous of the place to which God had appointed them. Moses' response was condescending and scathing: Is it a small thing to you? The dissenters should have realized how gracious God had been in giving them the life work He had provided. They were not unlike people who complain about the gifts God has given them.

16:12–17 Dathan and Abiram, two allies of Korah, were so arrogant that they would not even come to stand before Moses. They attacked Moses, claiming he acted like a prince. These two approached absurdity when they charged Moses with leading them away from the land that flows with milk and honey. Possibly they were blaming Moses for the fact that the people had to turn away from the land after the rebellion at Kadesh (chs. 13; 14). In addition, they charged Moses with brutality: Will you put out the eyes of these men? Nothing in the story of the Exodus leads us to think that Moses might have done such a thing.

16:18, 19 The next day, each man lit incense in his censer. Korah brought the people near because he wanted witnesses to the events. Then the glory of the LORD appeared is a somber reminder of the words of 12:5, a similar setting of impending judgment.

16:20–22 The announcement of judgment begins with God's warning to Moses and Aaron that they should back away so that He might destroy the entire congregation. The very leaders who were under assault intervened for the people, asking God to spare them even if He had to judge the guilty. The expression the God of the spirits of all flesh suggests the comprehensive rule of God. He is sovereign over all.

16:23–27 God demanded that the people back away from the tents of the rebels, and the people withdrew. Korah, Dathan, and Abiram were isolated at their tents with their families. It appears that Korah had left the 250 other rebels and was now standing beside Dathan and Abiram in wicked solidarity.

16:28–30 Moses called for a sign from God because he did not want anyone to think that what was about to happen was merely coincidence. Indeed, he asks for a new thing from God. This word describes the call for a new phenomenon (Heb. beria, a word related to the verb bara, "to create," as in Gen. 1:1), something unmistakably the work of God.

Why Earthquakes?

Did God use an earthquake to judge Korah and his family (Num. 16:31, 32)? The text does not say, but the phenomena described resemble those of an earthquake. Certainly the geology of Palestine predisposed it to earthquake activity. In fact, to this day, between 200 and 300 tremors a day are recorded in Israel, most of them minor.

Modern geological studies have shown why. The Jordan River valley and the Dead Sea lie on top of a major north-south fault line which is actually part of a massive trans-continental system known as the Afro-Arabian Rift Valley. The two parallel faults that make up this rift probably indicate the overlap of two of the earth's underlying tectonic plates. Numerous secondary faults fan out east and west from the Palestinian portion of this fault.

As a result of these features, the Middle East has experienced numerous earthquakes down through the centuries, some of which have been catastrophic. A few are mentioned in the Bible: • In the days of Saul during a campaign against the Philistines (1 Sam. 14:15) • On Mount Horeb where Elijah hid (1 Kin. 19:11) • In the days of King Uzziah (Amos 1:1; Zech. 14:5) • At the crucifixion of Jesus (Matt. 27:51) • In Philippi when Paul and Silas were in jail (Acts 16:26) 16:31–35 In answer to Moses' prayer, God's judgment was sudden, dramatic, and memorable. He caused the earth to swallow the rebels alive. The words the earth opened its mouth and swallowed them up suggest a sudden action, like that of a sinkhole that opens with great speed. The families of Dathan and Abiram died with those two men. But the family of Korah was spared (26:11). In fact, Korah's descendants contributed a considerable number of psalms for temple worship (Ps. 42); yet another example of God displaying His mercy even as He justly punished rebels. The judgment was so sudden and severe that the people rushed back in fear, thinking that they might suffer the same fate. The 250 would-be priests were destroyed by fire from the LORD.

16:36–40 the censers … are holy: An amazing thing about this chapter is the Lord's concern that the censers be reused. Since these elements had been presented to Him, they were holy, despite the wickedness of those who presented them to God. The censers were gathered and hammered together for a covering for the altar. Henceforth, anyone who saw the altar would see its covering. This would be a warning not to wander too near for any reason. Only the true priests of the line of Aaron had that privilege.

16:41–45 Israel complained: Unbelievably, the people attacked Moses and Aaron as being the ones who caused the deaths of the popular leaders, the people of the LORD. In calling them this, the people asserted that they recognized Korah and the rest as spiritual leaders. Their affection for Korah and his associates had caused them to miss the greater reality, the leadership roles God had given to Moses and Aaron and God's judgment on those rebellious men. Again, there was a sudden appearance of the glory of the LORD—a symbol of further judgment. Again the Lord threatened to destroy the congregation, and again Moses and Aaron fell on their faces, interceding for the people's wickedness.

16:46–50 Moses' command to Aaron to take a censer is a fitting end to this chapter. Aaron and his sons were the divinely appointed priests. Only they could minister at the altar of God. Aaron rushed to the sacred tasks to make atonement for the sinning congregation because a plague had fallen on them. The picture of this aged priest running to save the people who had spoken against him is quite remarkable. The words of v. 48 are quite dramatic. Aaron stood between the living and the dead to stop the plague—a symbol of the Savior, who takes a similar stand in the gap between life and death.

17:1–5 The rebellion of Korah and its aftermath (ch. 16) left a level of uncertainty among the people concerning the divine appointment of Aaron and his sons as the true priests of God. The point of Aaron's rod budding was to eliminate the continuing complaint of the people against Moses and Aaron by another divine sign. One rod was presented from each tribe with the name of the tribal leader inscribed on it. Then the twelve rods were placed in the Most Holy Place. God would signal His choice of priestly leadership by causing the rod of one tribe and its leader to blossom—life from a dead stick.

17:6, 7 The text focuses on the rod of Aaron among the twelve. Aaron was near the end of his life. He and his wife, Elisheba, had four sons. Two, Nadab and Abihu, had died because of their own improper approach to God (3:2–4). Two, Eleazar and Ithamar, lived. On the impending death of Aaron, there had to be no question as to which family was divinely ordered to continue in the priestly office.

17:8, 9 When the rods were examined the next day, not only had the rod of Aaron sprouted, it had even yielded ripe almonds. This was a complete vindication of Aaron as the true priest of God. Each of the other rods was still a dead stick. But the rod of Aaron had sent forth such a sprout of life that the entire process of almond production had occurred in a single evening—all from a dead stick! Moses made each of the other tribal representatives take his own rod back, a physical symbol of agreement to the divine will.

IN CONTEXT

Third-Party Assistance

When a relationship has broken down, what can be done? It helps if a third party can be found to mediate a settlement, and that was a function of the priests in ancient Israel. By favoring Aaron's rod over those of others, God made it clear who should stand between Him and the people (Num. 17:10, 11).

God's relationship with Israel repeatedly broke down as a result of the violated commandments and rebellious complaints of the Israelites. Sometimes the offenses were so substantial that God immediately punished the offenders (Num. 14:40–45; 15:32–36; 16:31–35). Yet even when His character was violated and the people deserved judgment, God listened to Moses and Aaron as they intervened on the people's behalf (16:22, 46–48).

After Korah was taken away, the situation continued to deteriorate (16:41). Apparently the people had already forgotten whom God had placed in charge and whom He had made priests. So the Lord devised a plan to again make it clear that one group—the sons of Aaron—were to serve as intermediaries or priests between Him and the rebellious nation (17:1–11).

The Lord Jesus Christ is the intermediary between God and sinful people. All who depend on Christ's atoning work on their behalf have direct access to God (Heb. 10:19–25). Christ has become our High Priest (Heb. 8:1–6; 9:11–15), a permanent third-party Advocate who is fully worthy to intercede for our sin and rebellion (1 John 2:1).

17:10, 11 as a sign: Just as the stone tablets of the Law (Ex. 25:16) and a pot of manna were placed in the ark as signs of the enduring testimony of God's mercy to His people (Ex. 16:34), so now the rod of Aaron that budded and produced ripe almonds was placed there as well. Since the ark was in the Most Holy Place, only God would ordinarily look at this rod. Hence, Aaron's rod was a sign to God of His mercy. He had chosen the Levites to minister before Him. There would be one other besides God who would see these sacred items, the high priest of God's own choosing.

17:12, 13 Surely we die: Finally, the people realized that God had revealed His will through His miraculous actions among them. None of them except the one whom God had designated could approach God in His Holy Place. Any person who approached without heeding God's clear instructions could only expect death. The fact that God allowed anyone to approach Him demonstrated His mercy. Indeed, He not only allowed the high priest to approach, but He instructed him how he could atone for the sins of the people. Today, the same merciful God provides a more perfect way to find His forgiveness—through Jesus' death. With Jesus acting as our High Priest, we can boldly approach the Holy One and not fear death (Heb. 4:14–16).

18:1 Chapters 18 and 19 deal with the duties of priests and Levites, matters that flow quite naturally from the vindication of the true priesthood in ch. 17 and the crisis concerning the priesthood in ch. 16. The expression bear the iniquity speaks of the formidable work that was demanded of the priests of God. The word iniquity (Heb. awon) relates to the whole sphere of sin, guilt, and responsibility for an offense. If the people had no advocate before the Lord, they would die in their offenses. The priests stood as the intermediaries between God and man. Ultimately, all such priestly work points forward to the work of Jesus, our High Priest.

18:2–4 The Levites were the servants of the priests, but were limited in what they were able to do. This was what had bothered Korah (ch. 16); he was a Levite who wanted to function as a priest.

18:5–7 Only the priests were allowed to attend to the duties of the sanctuary and the altar. The outsider was not a foreigner but a non-authorized Israelite. When one who was not authorized approached the holy places, that person was inviting punishment. Always in these contexts there is the sense of the priest standing between the dead and the living, between grace and mercy, between sin and forgiveness, the Christian reader thinks of the Savior.

18:8–20 The priests earned their livelihood in their work of the ministry of God (Lev. 6:14—7:36). Offerings that were not burned on the altars, although made to the Lord, became the food for the priests. I am your portion: The priests had no inheritance in the land itself. They lived off the produce of the land as God provided for them through the gifts of His people. Hence, the priests had a special relationship with God. He was their inheritance. Like the priests, believers today have no promise of an inheritance in this world. Nevertheless, believers are promised an inheritance in the future kingdom (Rom. 8:17).

18:21–24 all the tithes in Israel: The Levites also were the beneficiaries of the Lord’s service. Like the priests, the Levites would not inherit land inheritances, but would be provided for in a manner suitable for their service to God.

18:25–32 The Levites who lived from the tithes of the people were themselves under obligation to make offerings to the Lord, a tenth of the tithe. Those who lived from the tithes were to give tithes so that they also might thank God for what He had given them. In all their work, the Levites were to remember the sense of the holy. Though they served God in mercy, they might be subject to His wrath if they behaved in a careless manner.

19:1, 2 The phrasing this is the ordinance of the law is somewhat awkward and unexpected. It is likely that we have a textual problem in the word "law" in this verse. The issue in this section is the sacrifice of the red heifer. The preferred Hebrew reading of the opening words of v. 2 is: "This is the ordinance of the heifer" (reading hapara for hatora, a copyist error). The red heifer was to be sacrificed in a special ritual outside the camp. Everything about this sacrifice was unusual. Ordinarily, the sacrificial animal was male; this one was female. The mention of the color of the animal is also unusual; in no other animal sacrifice was the color of the animal specified.

19:3 The naming of Eleazar the priest was a logical sequel to the test of the true priestly family in ch. 17. Before his father Aaron died, Eleazar had to start functioning in a prominent position before the congregation to ensure a smooth transition to his leadership. Ordinarily animals were sacrificed on or near the altar; in this case the animal was slaughtered outside the camp.

19:4–8 The total burning of the animal was also unusual, particularly since this animal was burned away from the altar. Symbolic items associated with cleansing—cedar wood and hyssop and scarlet (Lev. 14:4)—were then added to the fire. All were burned to ashes. The ritual made both the priest and those who helped him unclean.

19:9, 10 The ashes of the heifer were used in sacrificial rituals. The ashes were added to water, and the resultant mixture was used in certain rites of purification. for purifying from sin: What might be regarded as magical in a pagan context is here a visible symbol of God's inner work of purifying a person or object from sin.

19:11–13 The ashes and water had particular meaning for a person who had touched a dead body. Again, the sprinkling of the water of purification was more than a physical cleansing; it signified a submission to spiritual cleansing as well. It may be that contact with a dead body came under such strong sanction in ancient Israel due to that which death represented, the end result of sin. Death entered the world through sin (Rom. 5:12); death then is a grim reminder of the effects of sin. To touch a dead body was to make one in some spiritual manner "unclean" for participation in the ritual of the worship of God.

19:14–19 Various instances of death and uncleanness are listed in these verses. This passage may have been a response to practical questions posed by the people. For example, if a man died in a tent, the people would certainly want to know what was required of them and how far the uncleanness extended. And what would happen if a person touched the body of a dead man in the field or in a grave?

19:20–22 One who did not purify himself rejected God's grace and consequently incurred His wrath. The issues were so serious that the one who applied the waters of purification to another became unclean also. These rituals were not given to make the lives of the people difficult. They were given to graciously instruct the people about the nature of true holiness.

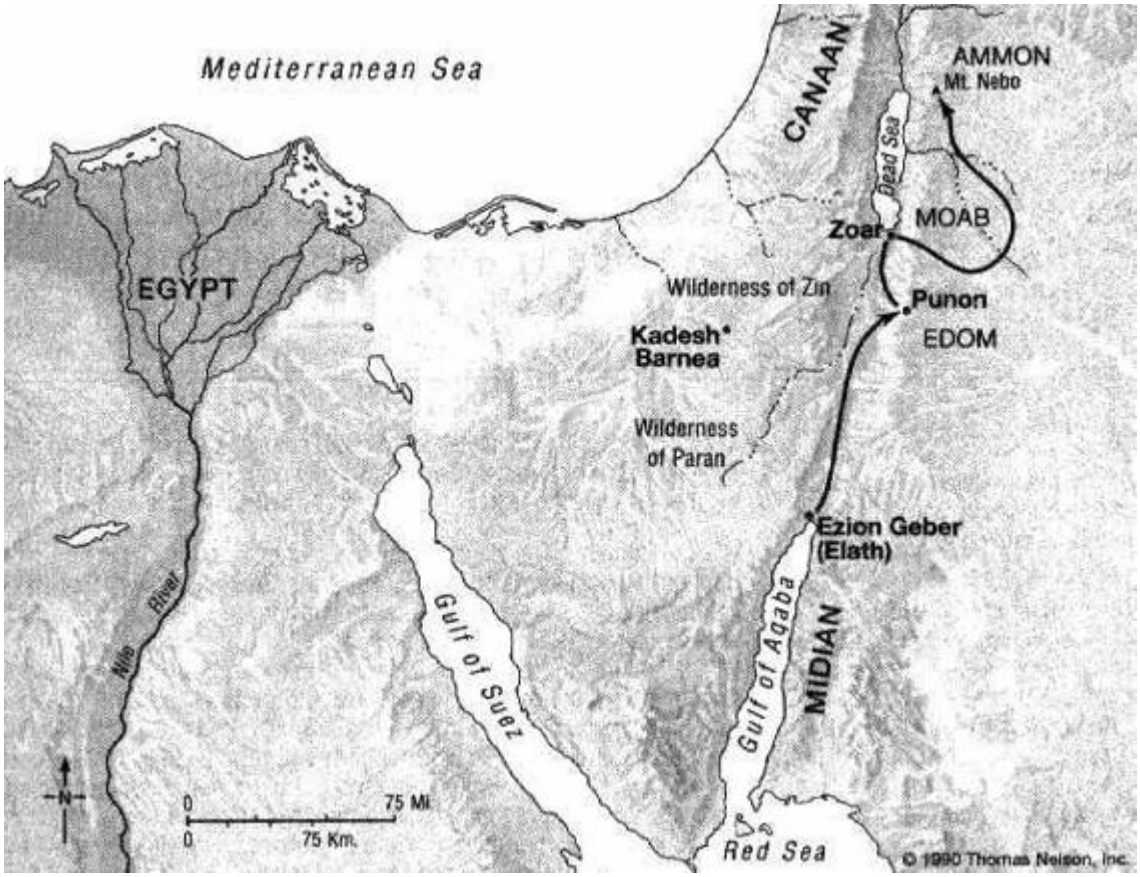
20:1 The expression the first month lacks the notice of a year. Most likely, this was the fortieth year, the end of the sojourn in the wilderness. This chapter begins with the report of the Miriam's death, concludes with the report of Aaron's death (vv. 22–29), and records the major failure of Moses (vv. 1–13) and the resistance of Edom to the movement of the nation (vv. 14–21). It is a most dismal record. There is a sense that the deaths of Miriam and Aaron, as recorded in this chapter, are acts of mercy. The Lord has allowed them to live as long as possible before the first generation is utterly replaced by the second.

20:2–7 The words no water convey a sense of déjà vu. Having no water was the subject of the first crisis that the Israelites had in their journey out of Egypt (Ex. 17). Here, in the fortieth year since the Exodus, the same problem arose, provoking the same ingratitude and anger from the people.

20:8, 9 Moses was to take his rod, but was only to speak to the rock. A generation earlier, God's words were equally specific. At that time, Moses was told to take his rod and "strike the rock" (Ex. 17:6). On the first occasion, Moses did exactly what God had commanded; on the second occasion, he did not. Some have imagined what these differences in commands might mean. Since the text does not interpret them, here or elsewhere, it seems better just to observe the language and then to watch Moses' behavior. God is jealous for His word. We are not to change it but obey it explicitly (Rev. 22:18, 19).

20:10 The words of Moses are shocking: Hear now, you rebels! These words are understandable to be sure. But they are the words of one who had crossed the line, whose patience had been tried to the breaking point.

20:11 In his rage, Moses did not speak to the rock as God had commanded. Instead he raised his rod and struck the rock twice. When he disobeyed, Moses violated all that he had stood for over the last forty years! God was not displaying anger, but Moses fell into deliberate, unrighteous anger. And in his anger, Moses lost his own stake in the Promised Land. What a huge loss for just a moment of disobedience! In the scheme of things, Moses did more than strike against the rock. He struck out against God. In some mysterious way, that rock was a symbol of the divine presence; the water that gushed out so abundantly was a marker of His grace. The rock was miracle. It was Christ (1 Cor. 10:4).



From the Wilderness to Canaan

The attempt forty years earlier to move from Kadesh Barnea north into Canaan had been rebuffed. This time Moses wanted to go east through Edom and north through Moab toward Canaan. However, the Hebrews were refused passage through both territories despite kinship with the peoples. Instead, Moses went south to Elath, then north and east, bypassing Edom and Moab. North of the Arnon River, they defeated the Amorites and were poised to cross the Jordan from the east to enter Canaan.

20:12 God's judgment comes in expected severity, given the nature of Moses' offense. Moses is charged with the double sin of not believing in God and not hallowing Him before the people. Hallow means to "treat as holy." God saw Moses' action as a lack of respect and awe for His holiness. God's instructions were not honored. Moses, who for so long had been concerned with the reputation of God (14:13–19), slighted the Lord by not following His clear instructions in the presence of the congregation. Aaron also was indicted and sentenced by the Lord. For both brothers, the sentence was to join the death march of the older generation. Neither of them would enter Canaan.

20:13 Meribah, or "Contention," is the name given to the place of Moses' sin. This is the same name that was given forty years earlier to the location of the first water crisis (Ex. 17:7).

20:14–21 Moses used diplomacy in his appeal to the king of Edom, testifying to the saving work of the Lord in delivering the people of Israel from Egypt. He also made what appears to be a most reasonable request: let us pass through your country. When Edom refused passage, Moses countered with an even more gentle request and reassured the Edomites that the Israelites had not come to conquer. This request was refused with a show of force.

Transfer of Authority

The transfer of authority is always a delicate task. Changing leaders can be a time of great stress for an organization, as old alliances and political forces vie with new ones to determine who will shape the future.

Aaron's death (Num. 20:22–29) was a major event in Israel. He was not only high priest for the nation but also the nation's first high priest. Furthermore, he had been Moses' primary spokesman (Ex. 4:16; 7:1) and was also Moses' brother. Aaron's successor, Eleazar, was his third son. Nadab and Abihu, Aaron's two older sons, had been consumed in the Lord's anger after offering "profane fire" before the Lord (Lev. 10:1–3). Thus Eleazar was, in a sense, the "third choice" for the position of high priest.

Despite these and other factors, the transition from Aaron to Eleazar went smoothly. Perhaps it was because God Himself oversaw the transfer of power. Scripture tells of several other transitions, not all of which went as smoothly.

20:22–29 Mount Hor is possibly Jebel Madurah, a mountain about fifteen miles northeast of Kadesh, on the northwest border of Edom. The mountain is on the direct route from Kadesh to Moab. It was here that the sad news came that Aaron was going to die. Eleazar received the duties of Aaron's priesthood. Soon the body of Moses would be left on another mountain, and Joshua would join Eleazar as a spiritual leader of the new generation. The thirty days of mourning for Aaron indicates the high esteem in which he was held by his brother and the people.

21:1–3 The first of Israel's military victories against the Canaanites came as the result of an attack by the king of Arad. Arad is located in the Negev, some twenty miles south of Hebron. However, it is likely that here the word "Arad" refers to a region even more south, as there is no sign of a city on the site of Arad from this period. It is not unusual for names of biblical places to "float" from one place to another over the centuries. The text emphasizes that the attackers were Canaanites and that the attack was unprovoked. Israel made a vow of herem, devotion to the ban, should Yahweh give them victory. The people of Arad were distinct from peoples such as Edom and Moab. They were under the interdict of Yahweh. The Israelites fought valiantly and God fought for them. The Israelites triumphed over the army of Arad and destroyed its cities. This victory was the beginning of Israel's triumphant march into the Promised Land. But, as expected, even this turnabout will not be without troubles. The name Hormah is built on the word herem, something completely destroyed. It is possible that the name "Hormah" in 14:45 is based on this passage. That is, the region of Israel's earlier defeat only receives its proper name in this context. For the convenience of the reader, this name was inserted in the earlier story.

21:4, 5 The long journey around the land of Edom was necessary because the king of Edom refused to grant Moses' request for passage through his territory (20:14–21). After the first flush of victory (21:1–3), this circuitous route was particularly unpleasant to the people of Israel. Once again, they started complaining against Moses and God. The people again (11:6) protested God's provision of manna, calling it this worthless bread. As the psalmist later observed: "How often they provoked Him in the wilderness, And grieved Him in the desert!" (Ps. 78:40). In their contempt of the "bread of heaven" (Ps. 78:23, 24), the people were actually spurning God, who had given them this miraculous food.

21:6 God's discipline came upon the people in the form of fiery serpents. Snakes with poisonous venom for which there was no antidote caused raging fevers and agonizing deaths.

21:7–9 The pain of the venomous bites drove the people to repent, and they begged Moses to intervene on their behalf. God instructed Moses to make an image of one of the serpents and to set it on a pole. Anyone who had been bitten and looked at the image lived. The raising of such a contemptible symbol on a pole ordinarily would have caused the people to shrink away in revulsion. But in this case the Israelites had to look at the serpent's image in order to live. Jesus pointed to this stunning image in His dialogue with Nicodemus (John 3:14, 15) as an analogy to His own execution. To the Jews, crucifixion was a sign of a curse. Therefore, just as the Israelites had to look on the repugnant, uplifted image of a serpent to be saved, we today have to look at the uplifted image of Jesus on a cross in order to be saved from our sins. So it is that this shameful account of Israel's rebellion becomes an incident that Jesus uses to explain the significance of His death. Hence we have the converging of a double symbol, a double type of the Savior. (1) The bread is a picture of Jesus the blessed; as bread of heaven, He is the proper nourisher of His people. (2) The snake is a picture of Jesus the cursed, who became sin for us as He hung on that awful tree.

21:10–13 The Israelites went around the region of Edom and entered the territory of Moab, which was just east of Jericho. It became the new staging area for the conquest of the land.

21:14, 15 The Book of the Wars of the LORD refers to an early collection of songs and writings known today only from this citation. The fact that Numbers draws upon other early Hebrew writings shows that the ancient Hebrew peoples had other literature in addition to Scripture. The song is difficult to translate today. The words Waheb in Suphah, if place names, are unknown.

21:16–20 Beer means "Well." At last the people had come to a place where they could dig a well and find adequate water. God had graciously provided for them and had given them a taste of the Promised Land that they would soon occupy. The song of vv. 17, 18 may be called "The Song of the Well." Mattanah, Nahaliel, Bamoth, and the tableland of Pisgah are not known to us today; they were merely stopping places of the nation along the route to the land of promise.

21:21–26 The defeat of Sihon king of the Amorites began with his rejection of a request for safe passage, not unlike a similar rejection from the king of Edom (20:14–21). In the case of Edom, Israel was not permitted by God to engage in a war of conquest. The territory of Edom was protected by the Lord in an ancient covenant (Gen. 36; Deut. 2:4, 5). No such protection was given to the Amorites, however; they were among the peoples whom Israel was commissioned to destroy (Ex. 33:2; 34:11). Sihon not only rejected the request of Israel, but gathered for war against Israel at Jahaz. Israel completely defeated Sihon. This was the first of her victories east of the Jordan River. Israel conquered all of the cities that had belonged to the Amorites. This was part of the plan of God: Israel would live in the cities of her vanquished foes (Deut. 2:26–37).

Heshbon, capital city of Sihon, king of the Amorites, was captured by the Israelites during the wilderness wandering years (Num. 21:27–32).

21:27–32 The song of victory in these verses may also have come from "the Book of the Wars of the LORD" (v. 14). In any event, this chapter is notable in its use of lyrics from ancient songs of victory. Here again, this is a taunt song that celebrates the victory of Israel over a formidable force. Those who speak in proverbs refers not to wisdom sayings as in the Book of Proverbs but to taunt songs, as seen elsewhere in this chapter. The song begins with a recital of the earlier victory of the Amorites over the people of Moab and their god Chemosh. After defeating Sihon and the Amorites, Israel became a formidable threat to Moab (22:3). Verses 31, 32 refer to further encroachments of Israel in the land of the Amorites.

21:33–35 The defeat of Og king of Bashan immediately followed the defeat of the Amorites. The people of Israel had gained the control of all the land east of the Jordan River and north of the Arnon River. These early victories were part of the holy war of God and were celebrated by Israel as a part of her worship tradition (Deut. 3:1–11; Pss. 135:8–12; 136:17–22). God righteously and faithfully fulfilled His promise to Abraham (Gen. 15:7–21) that one day the sins of the Amorites would be judged and the people of promise would inherit their land.

22:1 the plains of Moab: With these words we come to the end of the travels of Israel described in the Book of Numbers. Not until the Book of Joshua does the story line of travel and conquest resume. On the side of the Jordan across from Jericho refers to the area they had conquered so far, territory that would be settled by two and a half tribes (ch. 32). However, the heart of the land was west of the Jordan River. The first city there that the Israelites would need to conquer was the oldest walled city in the world, ancient Jericho.

22:2–4 Remarkably, chs. 22—24 take the reader away from the camp of Israel and into hostile territory. These chapters focus on Balak, the king of Moab, and Balaam, whom Balak hired to destroy Israel by spiritual means. Moab was not yet facing Israel's threatening armies. But Balak knew that his enemy Sihon of Heshbon had been defeated by Israel (21:21–32), and he had reason to fear that he and his kingdom would be next. God had forbidden Israel to attack Moab (Deut. 2:1–9), but Balak either did not know this or did not believe it. He and the people of Moab were exceedingly afraid and sick with dread. Balak believed that he could not fight Israel on the field of battle and win. So he decided to fight them on another level, that of spiritual warfare. The elders of Midian with whom Balak consulted were the leaders of a mobile people with whom Balak may have had a mutual agreement of protection.

22:5 Balak sought out a pagan prophet who might engage Israel in spiritual warfare by causing her "gods," as they thought, to cease protecting them. Only then would Balak and Moab be safe from this formidable foe. The Moabites believed that blessings and cursings from the gods could be manipulated by skilled agents, who presumed to be able to traffic with the gods. At the time, the most famous of these agents was Balaam of Mesopotamia. In 1967, a discovery was made in Jordan of an eighth-century B.C. inscription of prophecies of Balaam. This discovery in what was ancient Moab is stunning evidence of the renown of this prophet even hundreds of years after his death. Yet the Balaam of Scripture is thoroughly reprehensible. In Scripture he becomes a paradigm of evil, a nearly satanic figure (Num. 31:8, 16; Deut. 23:4, 5; Josh. 13:22; 24:9, 10; Neh. 13:2; Mic. 6:5; 2 Pet. 2:15; Jude 11; Rev. 2:14). Balaam was a baru prophet, one who specialized in animal divination. He would inspect the liver of a ritually slain animal to ascertain from its shape and markings the will of the gods. Such prophets also observed the movements of animals and birds in order to ascertain certain signs from the gods. It was thought that such prophets could in some mysterious manner influence the gods by various rites. If Balaam could influence the "god" of Israel (as Balak supposed), then he might reverse their blessing, bring them under a curse, and destroy them. Yet this pagan prophet became an unwilling agent of some of the most sublime prophecies of the glorious future of Israel (chs. 23, 24). Balaam himself remained an enemy of Israel and sought to destroy them. He died in the camp of the people of Midian (ch. 31), enemies of Israel in their holy war.

22:6–8 The strong reputation of Balaam, who was believed to be able to influence the gods, is indicated in the phrasing he whom you bless is blessed, and he whom you curse is cursed. Behind all of this, of course, is the reality of God's irrevocable blessing on Israel and His standing curse on all who attempted to curse them (Gen. 12:2, 3). From the vantage of biblical theology, the story of Balaam is a test of the Abrahamic Covenant (Gen. 12:1–3; 15). Since Israel's experience in the wilderness was so dissolute, with repeated murmurings and rebellions, extending from the mixed rabble to her finest leaders, one might well wonder: is Israel still under Yahweh's blessing? Behind the story of paganism and magic, therefore, is a theological issue of the deepest significance for the future of God's people. In v. 8, Balaam speaks of the LORD as though he were intimate with Him. Because he was an internationally known soothsayer, it's likely that he had heard enough about Israel from emissaries of Moab and Midian to have learned the name of the God of Israel. Indeed, the story of God's deliverance of Israel from Egypt would have been widely known throughout the Middle East (Deut. 2:25).

22:9–14 The first encounter of the servants of Moab and Midian with Balaam ended in failure. God mercifully instructed Balaam, in what may have been a night vision, that he was not to go with the men to curse Israel, because they were blessed. Since Israel was under the blessing of God, any attempt to curse that nation would have been an attack on the word of God that would have brought the one who cursed Israel under God's curse (Gen. 12:3).

22:15–21 The second encounter of the emissaries of Moab and Midian with Balaam seemed to reverse things. The emissaries came with more noble persons and with grander gifts, bribes, and promises. Again, Balaam spoke of God in a familiar manner: the word of the LORD my God. This was not a confession of faith in God. Rather, it was a sly manipulation on the part of Balaam, a bold and false claim to be a medium of Israel's "god" just as he was the agent for many other gods. The duplicity of Balaam is seen in the way that God came to him the second time, reversing the clear orders He had given before (v. 12). Had Balaam been a true prophet, the words of God in v. 12 would have been definitive. But motivated by greed (2 Pet. 2:15; Jude 11), Balaam went to get a "new" word from God.

22:22–30 God's anger was aroused against Balaam, apparently because Balaam intended to do what Balak had hired him to do, to curse Israel. God could not have been angry at his going, for He had given Balaam permission (v. 20). But He had also given Balaam orders to speak "only the word which I speak to you" (v. 20). Apparently, Balaam planned to say whatever brought the highest amount of money. The Angel of the LORD refers to the presence of God (Gen. 22:11, 15). God was an adversary to Balaam. The donkey saw the Angel of the LORD: Balaam was supposed to have been able to communicate with the gods through animals. However, in this situation, the "seer" was blind to the presence of the true God. It was the animal who was the seer, perceiving the true will of God in the angel that blocked the path. In this context we read the stunning words the LORD opened the mouth of the donkey. While this sentence has been the subject of considerable ridicule, it hardly presents a significant challenge to a person of biblical faith. Anyone who has an adequate view of God can hardly balk at the concept of God's ability to give an animal a momentary ability to mimic human speech. After all, what is this compared to the Incarnation? The only issue in respect to miracles in the Bible is their import. That is, what would it mean were God to do such a thing? As C. S. Lewis has argued, every miracle in the Bible should be compared to the Grand Miracle of God becoming man. If we may believe that God became man, died, and was resurrected from the dead, what is hard to accept about the possibility of a man once hearing a sentence or two from a dumb animal? But if the Incarnation is not true, if Christ is not risen from the dead, then the speaking of all the animals of God's creation will do nothing to assuage our grief. But neither should we make more of this miracle than the Bible does. The donkey does not preach. The donkey does not give the word of God. Balaam will do that. All the donkey says is what an abused animal might say, were God to give it the opportunity: What have I done to you? The more amusing thing is that Balaam answers without surprise.

And all the while there is the foreboding presence of the Angel of Yahweh (could this be Christ?) with sword drawn to eviscerate the pagan rogue.

22:31–35 Then the LORD opened Balaam's eyes: The spiritually blind seer finally saw the majesty of the One whom the donkey saw all along. Now the pagan prophet was brought to his knees. His sin was the sin of willfulness: he had wanted to curse those whom God had blessed. In the strongest manner, the Angel of the Lord instructed Balaam to speak only what God spoke to him.

22:36–40 Balaam's statement, the word that God puts in my mouth, that I must speak, must have been puzzling to Balak (23:11, 25; 24:10, 25). The sacrifices of v. 40 were not to God, of course. These were pagan sacrifices to idols. That which Balak sent to Balaam included the livers, which Balaam used in divination (24:1).

22:41 The high places of Baal were selected not only because of the view they afforded. They were places of pagan worship.

23:1–6 The use of seven altars and the offering of a bull and a ram on each one was a part of Balaam's pagan ritual. Afterward, God in His mercy gave Balaam a true message to speak. The expression the LORD put a word in Balaam's mouth is the same type of language used of true prophets (Jer. 1:9). God used this pagan to bless His people.

23:7–10 The first oracle of Balaam set the pace for the rest. There were seven oracles in all. Each is introduced with the words he took up his oracle and said (23:7, 18; 24:3, 15, 20, 21, 23). The word translated oracle is the word usually translated proverb. In this case, it means "prophetic speeches." In the first oracle, Balaam described the purpose for which he was called, to curse Israel. However, he was unable to curse Israel because God would not allow it. From the worship site of pagan idolatry (22:41), he viewed Israel from a distance and saw that they were a people distinct from all other nations. Who can count the dust of Jacob suggests his attempt at ascertaining their number by divination. The numbers were vast, and he had no handle on them. my end: This is a reference to Balaam's destiny. He would not share Israel's glorious life in heaven.

23:11, 12 The response of Balak was one of stunned horror. He had brought Balaam to curse Israel, but Balaam had blessed them bountifully!

23:13–17 Balak foolishly thought that going to another place would influence God to allow a curse to be placed on His people. Then the LORD met Balaam: The language implies that Balaam was still attempting to be the channel for a curse. Perhaps he was looking for a stronger force that would override the power of God that had made him bless Israel. But it was not to be. Again Balaam's words came from the only living God.

23:18–24 The second oracle was addressed to Balak, an unwilling listener. Balaam confessed a wondrous truth about the God of Israel: He is unable to change; He cannot lie. Because God had blessed Israel, Balaam was powerless to change this to a curse. God had seen many examples of evil in His people during the wilderness years. Nevertheless, there simply was no means of sorcery or divination that Balaam could use to destroy their blessing. We who live in Christ can be encouraged by these words today. God cannot lie, nor can He renege on His promise of life for His people (Rom. 8:31–39).

23:25–30 Neither curse them at all, nor bless them at all! Balak nearly said, "I will pay you just to be quiet!" But again he thought all that was needed was a better location.

24:1, 2 it pleased the LORD to bless Israel: God was determined to bless His own people. The words the Spirit of God came upon him refer to the empowerment that gave Balaam his message and its direction. Dramatically, God controlled Balaam and spoke clearly through a person who was His enemy.

24:3–9 The third oracle is marked by a lengthy introduction that speaks of the powerful things that had taken place within Balaam. The heart of the third oracle is a blessing on the tribes of Israel as they were about to enter the land of Canaan. Their tents were beautiful in their placement, but soon they would fill the land in great prosperity. Their king would be prodigious, for God would empower them to destroy all enemies. Israel is pictured as a lion, not to be trifled with. Finally in v. 9, Balaam quoted Gen. 12:3. Those who bless Israel will be blessed. Those who curse Israel will be cursed.

24:10–14 In the aftermath of the third oracle, Balak wanted to dismiss Balaam entirely. But Balaam was not to be stopped.

24:15–19 The fourth oracle has the longest introduction, which builds on the introduction to the third oracle (vv. 3, 4). I see Him, but not now … A Star shall come out of Jacob: This poetic language clearly refers to the Messiah. The pagan Balaam had a vision of the coming of the Hebrew Messiah, the Lord Jesus Christ! He was visible from afar. He was like a Star, radiant and beautiful. He was like a Scepter, majestic and powerful. And He is the victor over His enemies, including Moab—the nation that hired Balaam to curse Israel! All nations who resisted Israel and God's work would come under the curse they unwittingly embraced. Among them was Edom, who rejected the request of Moses for safe passage (20:14–21). The One out of Jacob, the Messiah, will be victor over all His foes (Pss. 2; 110; Rev. 19:11–21).

“scepter”

(Heb. shebet) (Num. 24:17; Gen. 49:28; Lev. 27:32) Strong’s #7626: The word can vary in meaning depending upon its context. Potential meanings include “tribe” (Gen. 49:28), “staff” (1 Chr. 11:23), and “rod” (Ps. 23:4). Because a king would often hold a scepter, it became a symbol of a king, especially the kingship of the Messiah: He would rule God’s people (24:17; Gen. 49:10; 1 Cor. 15:24–28). Yet when this Hebrew word is translated staff, it symbolizes the concern and care of a shepherd for his sheep, the kind of care the Lord has for His people (Mic. 7:14). When the word is translated rod it symbolizes judgment (Ps 2:9).

24:20 The fifth oracle is brief, coming without a pause. It is a curse on Amalek, the first people to fight with Israel in their wilderness experience, and the first to bring defeat upon themselves (Ex. 17:8–16). A requital was coming.

24:21, 22 The Kenites were a Midianite tribe (Num. 10:29; Judg. 1:16). This oracle makes a wordplay between the word Kenite and the similar Hebrew word for nest. Asshur is Assyria here.

24:23–25 In this last oracle the identification of the nations is difficult, but the general sense is clear enough: One nation would rise against another, only to face its own doom. The Hebrew word translated Cyprus was used later in reference to Rome (Dan. 11:30).

25:1, 2 Acacia Grove (Heb. shittim) is another name for the staging area of Israel in the Transjordan across from Jericho. With these words, the focus of Numbers returns to the camp of Israel. At the end of their long wilderness wanderings, the Israelites had their first encounter with the false religion of Canaan. The phrase the women of Moab is the connecting link between this chapter and chs. 22—24. What the men of Moab could not do, the women were able to accomplish. They trapped the Israelite men in sexual immorality and false worship. For this God punished them. In 31:16, we learn that the principal instigator of this sorry affair was none other than Balaam.

25:3 Baal of Peor: Balaam had taken his stance at this high place for pagan worship (23:28) in preparation for his last set of oracles. It is grimly fitting that the near destruction of the people of Israel should be associated with the debased sexual and idolatrous practices of this site.

25:4, 5 God's anger flashed yet again toward His errant people. But this was not just another time of trouble, this was the most serious challenge yet. The people had been seduced into joining the worship of Baal. And it was Baal worship that they had been sent to Canaan to eliminate!

25:6–9 The most egregious sort of pagan worship and debased sexual expression comes in these verses, although the language here is somewhat reserved. It may be that the narrator was not willing to be as candid as he might have been because the incident was so distasteful. This is much the same as the reserved expression in Gen. 6:1–4. Zimri (v. 14), a Hebrew man, became involved with a Midianite woman named Cozbi (v. 15), who may have been a priestess of Baal. Although the nature of the offense isn't made clear in the text, it could be that their sinful actions were performed at the door of the tabernacle, in full view of the congregation. Phinehas the son of Eleazar, zealous for God's honor, killed both Zimri and Cozbi with a javelin, thus ending the plague that resulted from this offense.

25:10–15 zealous with My zeal: God's response is one of praise for Phinehas. The Hebrew word translated zealous can also be translated jealous. Phinehas did not want the Israelite camp to be defiled with immorality connected to Baal worship. God honored Phinehas for his zeal with what He called My covenant of peace.

25:16–18 Harass the Midianites: God commanded Moses to institute a holy war against Midian in retaliation for the unholy and immoral war waged against Israel by that nation. The war was engaged in shortly, but this is not reported until ch. 31. The repetition of the names and the place of the debacle in v. 18 serves to memorialize the event.

26:1 after the plague: These words are a turning point in Numbers. The plague was the end of the first generation. Under God’s grace, their sons and daughters were ready to begin anew. They would inherit the Promised Land.

A Second Census

Just as Israel's wilderness wanderings began with a census (Num. 1:2–19), so they ended with one (26:2). As before, the census counted only men of military age and probably functioned much like a draft. This second registration was required because some forty years had elapsed since the previous census. During that period, an entire generation of males had died, those who had been twenty years of age and older at the incident at Kadesh Barnea. The only survivors, aside from Moses, were Joshua and Caleb (14:29, 30; 26:64, 65). This was the second census recorded in Numbers, but actually the third for Israel that we know about. Scripture tells about seven major censuses.

26:2–4 The words take a census remind us of the beginning of the Book of Numbers (1:2). This is a new beginning and a new census. The numbers compare favorably with the numbers of the first generation. Despite all the people who had died in the wilderness, the total population was not markedly different. Again, this was a sign of God's blessing on the Israelites.

26:5–50 The children of Reuben: This chapter focuses specifically on the tribal units, with considerable attention paid to the family groupings and the notable persons. It is fitting that this census is considerably more complete than the one in ch. 1. These were the people who would actually enter and inherit the Promised Land.

26:51 who were numbered: The totals of the twelve tribes are very similar in the two census listings. Reuben decreased from 46,500 to 43,730; Simeon decreased from 59,300 to 22,200; Gad decreased from 45,650 to 40,500; Judah increased from 74,600 to 76,500; Issachar increased from 54,400 to 64,300; Zebulun increased from 57,400 to 60,500; Manasseh increased from 32,200 to 52,700; Ephraim decreased from 40,500 to 32,500; Benjamin increased from 35,400 to 45,600; Dan increased from 62,700 to 64,400; Asher increased from 41,500 to 53,400; Naphtali decreased from 53,400 to 45,400. The total decreased slightly, from 603,550 to 601,730.

26:52–56 The land of Canaan was the inheritance of the people from the Lord. It was His gift to them, prompted by His love. Two principles were to be used in dividing the land: large tribes were to get large portions, but the determinations were to be made by lot.

26:57–62 The numbering of the Levites follows that of the other tribes, just as in the first census. In this case more names and families are given, for this was the list that would be used once the people were in the land. The total number of Levite males had increased to 23,000, which was quite close to the earlier total of 22,000 (3:39).

26:63–65 not a man of those: The persons numbered in the second census did not include any who were numbered in the first census. Of the survivors, only Caleb and Joshua had been over the age of twenty at the time of the debacle at Kadesh (chs. 13; 14).

27:1–5 Five sisters—the daughters of Zelophehad—approached Moses and Eleazar to make a claim for their inheritance in the land. Their father had died in the wilderness, as had his entire generation. Since he had no sons, there was no inheritance for him. On the basis of their father's memory, the daughters asked Moses for a possession among our father's brothers. In doing this, they were cutting across the social mores of the day. In ancient Israel, women did not inherit land. Yet because their case made sense, Moses took the issue to the Lord. This situation gives us some insight as to how law worked in Israel. Decisions were made on the basis of need and request. If a decision was difficult, the leaders would go the Lord for direction.

27:6–11 speak what is right: God's decision was that the daughters of Zelophehad had presented a just cause. They would inherit land in the name of their father. The case would become a precedent for other families in which there were no sons, only daughters. If there were no daughters, the inheritance would go to the nearest surviving relative. This was a significant departure from the custom of the day. See ch. 36 for complications that arose from this issue.

27:12–14 The time for the beginning of the conquest was near, which meant that the end of Moses' life was also near. Although God would not allow Moses to enter the land, He would, by His grace, allow Moses to see the land from afar.

27:15–17 set a man over the congregation: Moses' concern was for the well-being of the community, not for himself. Who would lead Israel after his death?

27:18–23 It appears that there were two candidates to succeed Moses: Caleb and Joshua, the two spies who had honored the Lord when the entire nation would not (ch. 14). God's choice was Joshua. One of the qualifications for the job was the presence of the Holy Spirit, a mark not unlike the qualification for spiritual leadership in the NT (Acts 6:3). The Lord instructed Moses to present Joshua to the congregation so that there would not be a power struggle after his death. Further, Moses began to delegate work to Joshua so that the transition would begin while Moses was still alive. Moses laid his hands on Joshua, a symbol of the transfer of power. He invested Joshua with the authority to lead Israel (Acts 13:1–3).

28:1–6 My offerings made by fire: Numbers frequently inserts various materials into the flow of the narrative. Among such materials are the sections on sacrifice in chs. 28 and 29. The following chapters focus on the nature of the offerings God required on a seasonal and festival basis.

28:7, 8 In this case, the drink offering was beer; usually it was wine. Beer is made from fermented grains; wine is made from fruit, usually grapes. Both were used in the worship of God, to be poured on the altar in required measure.

“sabbath”

(Heb. shabbath) (Num. 28:9; Ex. 20:8; Lev. 19:3; 23:3; Deut. 5:12; Jer. 17:22) Strong’s #7676: The word derives from the verb meaning “to cease” or “to rest” (Gen. 2:3; Ex. 31:17). The Sabbath is the seventh day in the Hebrew calendar, or Saturday (Ex. 16:26; 20:10). God established this day as a time to rest because He had created all things in six days and had rested on the seventh day (Ex. 20:11). The Sabbath not only mirrored His own actions at creation, but it also was designed as a day to remember God, specifically His covenant with Israel (Ex. 31:12–18). In addition to this special day, the principle of a Sabbath rest was also applied to the land every seventh year (Lev. 25:1–7).

28:9, 10 The offerings on the Sabbath day were in addition to the offerings made every day.

28:11–15 The offerings at the beginnings of your months were in addition to daily and weekly offerings.

28:16–25 The celebration of Passover (9:1–14) included special sacrifices at the altar. On the first and seventh day of the period, no work was done. The entire period was marked by the eating of unleavened bread.

28:26–31 The Feast of Weeks occurred fifty days after Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread.

29:1–6 The celebration of the Feast of Trumpets involved blowing ram's horns (contrast the silver trumpets in 10:2). Later, this festival became identified with the new year festival.

29:7–11 The Day of Atonement, or Yom Kippur, was regarded as the most holy day of all. Lev. 16 describes this as a day of fasting rather than feasting, of solemnity rather than rejoicing.

29:12–38 The celebration of the Feast of Tabernacles, or Succoth, was complex. There was an order to be followed over a period of eight days, and the eighth day had its own distinct ceremony. As in ch. 7, the mini-paragraphs for the days of the festival make use of deliberate repetition in order to evoke the pageantry and solemn ritual of these occasions.

29:39, 40 These verses conclude the summary of sacrifices of chs. 28 and 29. The sacrifices and offerings listed in these two chapters are the bare minimum the people had to present to the Lord throughout the year.

30:1, 2 The key issue is clear: one who makes a vow shall not break his word. Vows that are made to the Lord must be carried out (Deut. 23:21–23; Eccl. 5:1–7).

“vow”

(Heb. neder) (Num. 6:2, 5; 21:2; 30:2; 1 Sam. 1:11; Nah. 1:15) Strong’s #5088: A vow to God is a voluntary commitment to do something that pleases Him or to abstain from certain practices to demonstrate devotion to Him. A vivid example is the OT Nazirite vow (6:1–21). Scripture admonishes the believer against making rash vows, since they are made before God, the righteous and holy Judge (Eccl. 5:4). The reason for the warning is that a vow made to Him is binding and must be fulfilled. The Hebrew word can also refer to a thank offering (Deut. 12:6), as the psalmists often speak of paying their vows as an act of praise to God (Pss. 66:13; 116:14).

30:3–5 if a woman makes a vow to the LORD: In Israelite culture, an unmarried young woman was under the protection of her father. If she entered into a vow, that vow might have brought her father into an obligation he did not want to fulfill or could not fulfill. For that reason, the father could overrule the vow. If he did not, then all her vows would stand, including any complications that they might bring.

30:6–8 The preexisting vows of a newly married woman could have brought her husband under some obligation. Therefore, the husband had the opportunity to overrule vows his wife may have made before she came under his protection. In such a case, God would release the woman from her vow. If the husband heard the vow but did not overrule it, then the vow with all its possible complications would stand. A comparison with vv. 10–15 suggests that this woman is newly married.

30:9 The vow of a widow or a divorced woman would stand, because it did not complicate the obligations of either father or husband.

30:10–15 In the case of a woman who entered into a vow to the Lord after marriage, the husband could overrule the vow. His silence would allow it to remain in force. Many of these situations may have been decided in much the same manner as the case of the daughters of Zelophehad (ch. 27); that is, on the basis of particular cases that were brought before God for a decision.

30:16 This summary statement speaks of God’s authority and the decisions He gave to Moses respecting the complications of vows where women were involved in the culture of ancient Israel.

31:1, 2 Chapter 31 refers back to ch. 25, the debacle of Israel's sin at Baal Peor and the role that the Midianites played in orchestrating the event.

“vengeance”

(Heb. naqam) (Num. 31:2; 1 Sam. 24:12; Is. 1:24) Strong’s #5358: The Hebrew verb translated take vengeance can have a negative or a positive connotation. On the one hand, the Israelites were forbidden to take revenge because such actions were ultimately self-serving (Lev. 19:18). On the other hand, the Scriptures speak of a righteous vengeance that involves the pursuit of justice, virtue, and the defense of God’s majesty. God declared that only He can seek this type of vengeance: “Vengeance is Mine” (Deut. 32:35). But He often uses people, as in 31:2, to carry out His revenge.

31:3–6 The preparations for battle included setting apart a thousand from each tribe, a way of ensuring the sense of participation of the whole people in the war. Phinehas, the heroic figure who stemmed a plague with his bold action (25:7, 8), was commander in the field. As a priest, he led the armies of Israel with holy articles and the signal trumpets. This was not an ordinary conflict; it was a holy war, done in the name and power of God.

31:7–11 Victory was assured, given the blessing of God on the armies of Israel. The Israelites killed all the males and the kings, and took the women and their little ones as captives.

31:12–24 When the victors made their way back to the encampments of Israel, they found not praise but anger. Have you kept all the women alive: The key to Moses’ anger is the sinfulness of the women. These women had caused Israel to sin, as they had been counseled by Balaam. Balaam had been slain, along with the kings and notables of the people (v. 8). Now the women and their male children needed to be killed as well. Only the young girls who were still virgins were to be kept alive, for only they were provably innocent of the sexual sins of their mothers. Since this was a holy war, the soldiers and their possessions needed to go through extraordinary purification rites. This purification demanded both cleansing fire and water.

31:25–47 The balance of the chapter details the division of the plunder. The numbers are huge, suggesting a great victory. The division among those who had gone to war and those who had not set a standard for future battles. The portion that was to be regarded as the Lord’s also became a standard.

31:48–54 While the record of the destruction of the people of Midian is distressing, the report from the officers of Israel that not a man of us is missing is awe-inspiring. None of their soldiers, not one, was lost in the battle. In praise and gratitude to God, the officers made a special offering, which Moses brought into the tabernacle as a memorial. The size of the officers' gift was extraordinary: a total of over 400 pounds of gold.

32:1–5 The tribes of Reuben and Gad wanted the land east of the Jordan which Israel had taken from Sihon and Og (ch. 21). The flocks and herds of Reuben and Gad were large, and the people of these tribes believed that the conquered area east of the Jordan would be good for them. Therefore, they came to Moses to request this land as their tribal inheritance.

32:6–15 And Moses said: Moses' initial response was one of outrage and dismay. It appears that he was concerned that these tribes were going to shirk their duty to help the other tribes conquer the territory west of the Jordan. Moses was afraid they were going to drop out of the battle before it was fully joined. The encounter with these men gave Moses an opportunity to rehearse the story of God's redemption of Israel and Israel's subsequent history and to use that story as a warning for these people.

32:16–19 The men of Reuben and Gad attempted to reassure Moses that they were not opting out of the battle at all. They simply wanted to build some provision for their wives and families while they were gone, and then they would join Israel's army until the entire Promised Land was secured. We will not return: Their promise of faithfulness to the Israelite army is couched in strong words. They would return to their wives only when every tribe had received its inheritance.

32:20–27 Moses and the men of Reuben and Gad negotiated. Plans were made for the fighting men of these tribes to join the armies of Israel for the period of the conquest. But first they wanted time to prepare for their families, flocks, and herds. Their confident promise of faithfulness to the battle, even when separated so far from their families, is couched in strong words (32:18). For the Jewish people to live in the land, it was considered a mitzvah, a holy act.

32:28–32 Finally the deal is struck between Moses and the leaders of Reuben and Gad. If the people would do as they had promised, if they would fight alongside the others until the conquest was complete, they could certainly live in the land they chose—the land east of the Jordan. If not, they would lose all choice in the land at all.

32:33–42 It is not until the end of the narrative that we learn that one-half of the tribe of Manasseh had joined Reuben and Gad in their proposal. Moses agreed to their plan and led them in the distribution of the land east of the Jordan. The villages and cities are listed, praising God for victory over them. Naming them shows how God had led His people to the Promised Land and enabled them to build cities and villages.

IN PLACE

The Journeys of Israel

No one knows the exact route that Israel took from Egypt to Canaan (Num. 33:1). However, it was not a direct journey. After the people left Egypt, they traveled south to Mount Sinai, where they received the Law. Then they eventually made their way north to Kadesh (Num. 13:26), from which they sent spies to survey the Promised Land. There they lost faith in the Lord's promises and as a result spent the next forty years "wandering" through the wilderness while an entire generation died off (14:34, 35). The term "wandering" is a misnomer, for the multitude was led by God Himself, who gave His people a cloud to follow by day and a fiery cloud by night (Ex. 13:21, 22).

The next major leg in the journey was the attempt to pass through Edom (Num. 20:14–21). Because the king of Edom refused access to the King's Highway, Israel was forced to take a route around Edom in order to travel north for the Transjordan valley east of Canaan. It was from this area that they eventually began the conquest of the land.

The list in Num. 33 includes many of the sites that the Israelites visited. However, not many have been positively identified by modern-day archaeologists.

33:1 These are the journeys: Chapter 33 records the journey of the people of Israel from Rameses in Egypt (v. 3) to the plains of Moab (v. 49). The chapter is marked by significant difficulties. Most of the places cited are not known today. This is because for the most part they were not cities but merely encampments in the wilderness of the Sinai.

33:2 Moses wrote down: These remarkable words indicate that Moses himself wrote down the following passage. Curiously, on the basis of prior decisions against the writing activity of Moses, some critical scholars dismiss this phrase as not even worthy of consideration. The critical stance respecting Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch is so deeply entrenched that even when the text says he did write, that is denied! That so many of the places mentioned in this chapter are not known to us or are even found elsewhere in the Bible are marks of the antiquity of the chapter, and, we may aver, its authenticity. Whereas Christians tend to describe Moses' profession as being that of a shepherd, Jewish people tend to regard his profession as either a teacher or a scribe.

33:3–5 Rameses is usually identified with Tanis (Gen. 47:11; Ex. 1:11). There is a certain structural symmetry to the listing of these place names in this chapter. In essence, this list of place names is a song of praise to God's faithfulness. With every step and with every encampment, God led them triumphantly to the Promised Land. Significantly, there are forty places mentioned between Rameses and the plains of Moab. Some of the sites recorded here (including many of the ones in vv. 5–18) are mentioned elsewhere in Exodus and Numbers; some are recorded only here (including most of those listed in vv. 19–29). In addition, some of the places mentioned in Exodus and Numbers are not recorded here (including Taberah, in 11:3).

33:6–37 Succoth, Etham, and Pi Hahiroth were west of the Sea of Reeds. The rest of the sites were in the Sinai Desert.

33:38–49 Mount Hor: With the mention of this place, a quick memorial is given of Aaron, the high priest. fortieth year: The journey from Rameses to Mt. Hor completed the forty-year cycle. Aaron died on the last year of the Israelites' wanderings in the desert.

33:50–56 On the staging area for the invasion of the Promised Land, God gave Moses instructions for the people about the conquest of Canaan. Israel was to exterminate the Canaanites and take full possession of their land. For over 400 years, from the time of God's covenant with Abram in

Gen. 15:17–21, God had warned that a time would come when He would punish the sinfulness of the Canaanites. The Canaanites, by their continual wicked acts, had no right to live in the land of Canaan. God, whose land it really was, transferred the right of possession to Israel. Therefore, the words come as a legal transfer: for I have given you the land to possess. It was to be divided by lot, with the larger tracts going to the larger tribes, as already described in 26:52–56.

33:55, 56 if you do not drive out the inhabitants of the land: God's commands to Israel to eradicate the Canaanites from the land were ultimately expressions of His mercy to Israel. If the idolatrous Canaanites were allowed to live among God's people, they would have been a constant source of trouble for the Israelites, like an irritant in the eye or a thorn in the side. Indeed, if the Canaanites were allowed to remain, Israel would become like them. The result would necessitate the expulsion of Israel from the land. Sadly, the experience of Israel in the land led to this very result. This chapter serves as the emotional and logical conclusion of Numbers. The recital of places and the commission for conquest provide the reader a sense of closure for this phase of Israel's life, as well as an anticipation of the future. The last three chapters serve as appendices.

34:1–12 the land of Canaan to its boundaries: Chapter 34 serves as a detailed display of the grandeur of the land that God was about to give to His people (33:53). The information in this chapter is based on an intimate knowledge of the contours of the land, something that one might not expect Moses to have had. The information, however, may have been part of that gathered by the spies (ch. 13), and Caleb and Joshua might have assisted Moses in this list.

34:13–15 To the nine tribes and to the half-tribe is a reminder that Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh would have their settlements east of the Jordan (32:33). The land of Canaan proper would be inhabited by the remaining nine tribes and the other half-tribe of Manasseh.

34:16–29 The listing of the names of the men serves several purposes: (1) to give authenticity to the record; (2) to memorialize these individuals in the history of Israel; (3) to serve as a legal arrangement so that the transfer of the land to the tribes would be done in order.

34:29 There is a sense in the words these are the ones that the second generation was now the fully accredited substitute for the rebellious first generation.

35:1–8 give the Levites cities: The Levites were separated from the rest of the population for the holy service of God (1:47–53). They were not to have an allotment of land along with the other tribes (18:24). Nonetheless, the Levites needed places to live and to manage their herds and flocks. The decision of the Lord was that they would be distributed throughout the land in forty-eight cities. In this way, the Levites were distributed among the people as a symbol of the holy service of God (Josh. 20; 21).

35:9–29 Six Levitical cities were to be stationed strategically in the land —three in Transjordan and three in Canaan proper—as cities of refuge, or asylum cities, where a person guilty of unintentional manslaughter might escape blood revenge. Joshua 20 describes the sites that were eventually chosen.

Refuge, or "asylum" (Heb. ha-miqlat), speaks of a place of escape from the "avenger" (Heb., goel) for the one who has committed manslaughter. The avenger is the protector of the family rights; the same word is used of the "kinsman redeemer" in Ruth 2:1 (Lev. 25:48). The avenger is more the "rectifier," the one who makes things right. Again, this is an institution that is highly culturalized, much like the making of vows by a woman in ch. 30.

IN DEPTH

Cities of Refuge

In the ancient Middle East, custom dictated that the taking of a life, even by accident, had to be avenged by a member of the victim's family. In response to this ancient practice, God ordered six Levitical cities to be stationed in the land as cities of refuge. A person guilty of unintentional manslaughter could escape blood revenge by fleeing to one of these cities (Josh. 20). No matter where a person lived, there would be a city of refuge within a reasonable distance, because they were strategically spread all over the land—three to the east of the Jordan and three to the west. The Hebrew term translated refuge or asylum designates a place of escape from the avenger, who was the protector of the family's rights, the one who made things right. (The Hebrew word for avenger is the same word used for Boaz, translated relative in Ruth 2:1.) Seeking refuge was not a private act, however. Certain regulations governed whether it was applicable to a specific situation, and judgments would be made about each case (Num. 35:22–25). The provisions for seeking refuge in one of the designated cities were spelled out in some detail. (1) The slaying had to have been accidental and not premeditated (Num. 35:16–21). (2) The person had to flee immediately to the city of refuge. The person was safe from the avenger only when he or she was within the city. (3) The person was not safe from vengeance if he or she decided to leave the city. Basically, the unintentional murderer was a virtual prisoner within the city's walls (Num. 35:26–28). (4) The statute of limitations was based on the death of the high priest. When the high priest died, the avenger could no longer pursue the offender. The latter was free to return home (Num. 35:25, 28). (5) The law of asylum pertained to the alien as well as the citizen (Num. 35:15). (6) The manslayer could not pay a ransom instead of fleeing to or staying in a city of refuge. Otherwise a poor person would have been at a great disadvantage (Num. 35:31).

With all these specific regulations, God demonstrated His gracious concern for the innocent. He provided a place for an innocent person to find mercy and safety from the harsh ancient practice of avenging for family deaths.

35:30–34 Whoever kills a person: The people were not to confuse accidental manslaughter with premeditated murder. One who had committed homicide was not permitted to flee to a city of refuge. His crime was to be punished by death.

36:1–4 Chapter 36 presents the interest of the relatives of Zelophehad, who were worried about possible complications of the decision to allow Zelophehad's daughters to inherit their father's possession in the land (ch. 27). If the daughters were to marry outside their tribe and family, then the tribal allowances would be hopelessly confused and perhaps even lost.

36:5–13 they may marry only within the family: Moses decided that the family's concern was legitimate. He did not overrule the earlier decision to allow the women to inherit the portion that would have gone to their father, but he regulated their marriage choices to maintain the integrity of the tribal allotments. In this account, we see the way case law worked in ancient Israel. Specific instances that were not covered clearly in the general legislation would be brought to Moses for disposition. He would seek the word of the Lord on that specific issue and then would pronounce the decision.

The Fifth Book of Moses Called Deuteronomy

———— WITH THE NATION OF ISRAEL POISED AT THE entrance of Canaan, Moses seized one last opportunity to prepare the people for their new life in the land of their inheritance. Since Moses would not be entering the land with the people, he wanted to make sure that the nation did not forget its covenant with God. Moses' careful review of the laws of God is recorded in the Book of Deuteronomy.

The speeches in this book are set against the historical background of all the events of Israel's history until the time they were spoken, including the Exodus from Egypt, the revelation of God at Mount Sinai, the rebellious responses of Israel to the Lord's goodness, and God's constant protection of them. Yet there are a few pivotal events that the book particularly addresses.

The idolatry at Baal Peor was one of those significant moments (Num. 25). It was there that Israel first experienced the attraction of Baal worship, which would plague its existence for centuries. The people whom Moses addressed in Deuteronomy were those who had survived the plague that the Lord brought in punishment for the sins of the people (Deut. 4:3). In light of this experience, Moses pleaded with this new generation to be faithful to God's laws. He frequently used the word today in order to emphasize that this new generation could start anew (1:10, 39; 4:4, 40; 5:1, 3; 6:6; 7:11); they did not have to focus on their rebellious past.

Moses concluded his exhortations with a description of the covenant renewal ceremony that would take place between Mount Ebal and Mount Gerizim. He instructed the Levites to recite on the barren mountaintop of Ebal the curses for those who rejected God's Law. On the lush slopes of Gerizim, the rich blessings for those who obeyed God's Law would be recited. With these instructions, Moses anticipated the renewal of the covenant on the other side of the Jordan River. There, the people would gather for the grand moment when they would renew the covenant once again, but this time as inhabitants of the Promised Land (11:29, 30; 27:1–8, 12, 13; Josh. 8:30–35). After describing this future covenantal renewal, Moses himself challenged the people to renew their commitment to God (30:11–20).

Finally, the expectation of Moses' imminent death explains why he gave the book as a testimony to God's Law. The Lord had commanded him to leave the words of the Law as a testimony to Israel. In response, Moses wrote the words down, gave them to the priests for safekeeping, and commanded the priests to read the word of God every seven years. In this way, Moses not only prepared the new generation for the coming conquest of the land, but also insured that every generation after that would hear God's laws (31:9–13).

Moses' emphasis on the covenant throughout Deuteronomy is remarkable. He testified to its importance by repeatedly calling the new generation of Israelites to follow its provisions (30:11–20).

In fact, Deuteronomy as a whole reflects the pattern of an ancient Middle Eastern treaty between a lord and a servant. The typical pattern of such a treaty with its approximate corresponding sections in Deuteronomy is as follows: (1) A preamble or introduction (1:1–5) (2) A review of the past relationship between the parties (1:6—4:49) (3) Basic stipulations that ensured fidelity to the treaty (5:1—26:19) (4) Sanctions in the form of blessings and curses (27:1—30:20) (5) Witnesses to the treaty (32:1) (6) A provision for the storage and reading of the treaty (31:1—34:12) While these similarities exist, the Book of Deuteronomy does not slavishly follow the typical treaty structure, but we can conclude that it was written with a basic treaty pattern in mind. Moses impressed on his readers the importance of the covenant not only with his repeated exhortations but also with the structure of the book itself. With Moses' warnings and their renewed commitment to God's covenant, the people were finally ready to enter the Promised Land.

The English title of the fifth book of the Pentateuch is derived from the Septuagint, the ancient Greek translation of the Old Testament, which interprets the words in 17:18, "a copy of this law," as "the second law." The name "Deuteronomy" means "the second law." The name is somewhat of a misnomer because Deuteronomy does not contain a second law. However, it does explain God's Law revealed at Mount Sinai to a second generation of Israelites.

Throughout the centuries, Jews and Christians have believed that Moses wrote Deuteronomy. But during the last 200 years, some have challenged this position. They have argued that the theology of the book is too advanced for the primitive Israelites at this early stage in their history. But others have maintained that Moses compiled Deuteronomy and wrote most of it. They argue that Mosaic authorship is supported by the book's consistent covenantal theology, its claims of Mosaic authorship, and the witness of NT writers.

Deuteronomy is basically the last will of Moses. In this will, he challenged Israel to remain faithful to the covenant, reminded them of their past history, and pointed to their future of blessings or cursings in the land of Canaan, depending upon their belief and behavior. Moses' speeches (31:24), the recitation of the Song of Moses (31:30—32:43), and Moses' blessing on the tribes (33:1–29) largely constitute the Book of Deuteronomy. To this, another author was led by the Spirit of God to add the account of the death of Moses and the tribute to his legacy (34:1–12). Some have argued that Moses himself might have written the account of his death and succession, having foreseen them by divine inspiration. This is certainly possible, but it is not a necessary conclusion for those who hold to Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch as a whole.

Commentary

1:1–5 These preliminary verses connect Deuteronomy with Numbers (Num. 36:13) and give the setting.

1:1 words which Moses spoke: Most of Deuteronomy consists of Moses' explanation of God's Law and His exhortation to follow it. The reference to Moses and to all Israel is repeated in the final verse (34:12). This side of the Jordan is literally, "across the Jordan." This is the land east of the Jordan, or across it from the perspective of the land of Canaan (3:8, 20, 25; 4:41; 11:30). The plain is probably the region north of Moab.

1:2 eleven days: A journey that might have taken Israel less than two weeks to complete lasted forty years because of unbelief and disobedience (Num. 13; 14). Horeb is a name for Mount Sinai (4:10, 15; Ex. 3:1), where the Lord revealed His glory, gave His law, and made a covenant with Israel. Kadesh Barnea, an oasis in the Negev, fifty miles southwest of Beersheba, figured prominently in the story of the wilderness wandering (Num. 13; 14).

1:3 fortieth year: In early Israel, dates were given with reference to the Exodus from Egypt. Hence, this is forty years after the Exodus. It had taken Israel about a year to arrive at Kadesh Barnea from Mt. Horeb and another year to reach the place where Moses was addressing them in this passage. The thirty-eight years between had been spent wandering in the desert, God's punishment for their disobedience. The eleventh month would correspond to January-February. Moses spoke … commandments: The Law (Torah) of God was mediated through His servant Moses.

1:4 These victories under Moses' leadership (2:26–37; 21:21–35) opened up the conquest of the land from the east. They were a foretaste of the victories God would give the Israelites under Joshua's leadership. The Israelites celebrated these initial victories as having great significance in the history of redemption (2:26–36; 3:1–11; 4:46–49; Josh. 2:10; 9:10; 12:2–6; 13:10–12; Pss. 135:11; 136:19, 20).

The snow-capped Lebanon Mountains formed the northwestern boundary of the land promised by the Lord to Abraham and his descendants (Deut. 1:5–8).

1:5 The Hebrew word translated law (tora) basically means "instruction." It is God's gracious teaching to the Israelites on the right way for them to live (6:1–3; Ps. 19). Deuteronomy is the exposition and application of the Law of God revealed at Mount Sinai.

1:6—4:43 This is a review of Israel's history. The section is reminiscent of the historical prologue so common in ancient Near Eastern treaties. Its focus is in God's promises to the patriarchs, God's ability to fulfill His promises, and Israel's stubborn resistance in not trusting Him.

1:6–18 God's promises and the need for leadership. God promised Abraham that His people would be living in the land and receive the blessing from the Lord (Gen. 15:13–21). This was now about to happen (vv. 6–8). But as Israel had increased in numbers, so had the need for a vital leadership (vv. 9–18).

1:6 The LORD our God is an emphatic reference to the divine revelation at Mount Sinai. Moses reminded Israel that God had revealed His glory, made His covenant with them, and assured them of His presence.

(Heb. shaba) (Deut. 1:8; Gen. 24:7; Ex. 13:5; 1 Sam. 20:3; Ps. 95:11) Strong’s #7650: In Hebrew, the verb translated swore is related to the word used for the number seven. In effect, the verb means “to bind oneself fully,”—that is, “seven times.” In ancient times, oaths were considered sacred. People who made oaths to God or to others were accepting the greatest accountability. They were promising to be faithful to their word no matter what the personal cost. The OT describes God as taking an oath (Gen. 24:7; Ex. 13:5). He was not forced to do this; He did not have to swear in order to insure His own compliance with His word. Instead, He made an oath so that His people would be assured that His promises were completely trustworthy.

1:7, 8 Turn … and go refers to the departure for the Promised Land. The extent of God’s gift was enormous, even as the people were numerous. Moses emphasized God’s faithfulness to His promises. The Promised Land extended from the Negev, the South (Gen. 12:9) to the River Euphrates (Gen. 15:18–21). swore to your fathers: God had promised this land to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob long ago (Gen. 15:18–21; 26:2–4; 35:10–12). The verb “to swear” (Heb. shaba in the Niphal formation) is similar in sound to the numeral “seven” (Heb. sheba). The basic meaning of the verb may mean to bind oneself fully; that is, seven times. What a wonder that the sovereign Lord would “bind Himself” to meet the needs of His people (Heb. 6:13–18). Contrast another oath by Yahweh in 1:35.

1:9 I alone: Moses felt inadequate to take care of all aspects of leadership himself because the people were so numerous (Ex. 18:13–26).

1:10, 11 multiplied … stars of heaven Moses’ rhetoric celebrates God’s faithfulness in fulfilling His word to Abraham (Gen. 15:5; 22:17). your God … the LORD God of your fathers: God is the God of the patriarchs, but also the God of their descendants. This language indicates that the patriarchs still live; it is not that He was their God, but that He is their God! bless you: Moses prayed that God’s promises would be even more dramatically fulfilled. a thousand times: The Lord had greatly blessed Israel in numbers (Ex. 1:1–7); His blessing in their past was to be a measure of His blessing in their future.

1:12, 13 wise … knowledgeable: The qualities of the leaders reflect attributes of God. Wisdom refers to the ability to bring harmony even when great differences exist. Understanding refers to the ability to penetrate the realities of life from God's perspective and to deal fairly with all parties in a dispute. Knowledge is the broad experience gained by living life, by watching people, and by making correct choices based on God's word.

1:14–16 Agreement with the counsel of the Lord is truly a good thing! heads: A number of men were charged with the administrative, judicial, and military tasks of creating unity among the people. Some of them were also called judges.

1:17, 18 not show partiality: God demanded absolute fairness regardless of age or social status. all the things: God's instruction was comprehensive. It covered all aspects of life.

1:19 Great and terrible wilderness describes the Israelites' journey by using two words for one idea, that of "a truly horrible wilderness."

1:20 The Amorites were one of the groups Israel encountered in their approach to the Promised Land. The term is often a general designation for the Canaanites, particularly those who lived in mountainous regions (Num. 13:29).

1:21 do not fear or be discouraged: Even though the future seemed uncertain, Moses exhorted the Israelites to have faith that God would take care of their needs (1:29; 3:22; 20:1, 3; 31:6, 8).

1:22, 23 every one of you: The initiative for sending the spies out came from the people, but it was something the Lord agreed to as well (Num. 13:2).

1:24, 25 The Valley of Eshcol was a region near Hebron (Num. 13:23); it is remembered for the huge clusters of grapes the spies found there.

1:26 you would not go up, but rebelled: The present generation was not directly involved in this rebellion, but as the descendants of the rebellious generation they shared in the guilt of the disobedience of their forebears (Ps. 78:5–8). On the other hand, they were also the inheritors of God's promises to those who had gone before.

1:27 hates us … to destroy us: The rebels refused to acknowledge God's clear expressions of saving love to them. They did not trust the God who had saved them from slavery and provided for their needs on numerous occasions. Instead, they charged Him with hating them.

1:28 The Anakim were an ancient people known for their great size (Num. 13:28).

1:29, 30 goes before you … fight for you: The Lord would fight for His people and give them victory. in Egypt: Moses especially seems to have had the victory over the Egyptians at the Red Sea in mind (Ex. 14:1–15:19).

1:31 carried: God cared for His people and loved them as an adoring parent cares for a child (Ex. 19:4). his son: The Israelites were God's children by covenant (Is. 63:16; 64:8, 9). This image was well known in the OT period, but only rarely was God actually called "Father."

1:32 you did not believe: The people did not walk by faith, despite all that God had done in their lives. The language indicates that God could hardly believe the ingratitude and lack of obedience on the part of those to whom He had demonstrated such lavish love.

1:33 to search out: The Lord had always explored the next step for the Israelites, since He was leading them Himself. The cloud over the Most Holy Place symbolized God's presence. Whenever the cloud moved, Israel had followed the Lord (Num. 10:33–36).

1:34, 35 one … of this evil generation: Because of their rebellion, God excluded adults age twenty and older at that time from the blessing of the land (Num. 14:29).

1:36 Caleb was faithful (Num. 13:30—14:28). God permitted him to enter the land and receive the area of Hebron as his family estate (Josh. 15:13). He wholly followed the Lord by not wavering in his faith.

1:37 also angry with me: Even Moses, the leader of the people, was the object of God's wrath. He could not enter the land because he disobeyed God by striking the rock at Meribah (Num. 20:10–13).

1:38 God allowed Joshua to lead the Israelites into the land because of his trust in God (Num. 13:30–14:28). Before his death, Moses exhorted Joshua, encouraged him, and transferred to him the authority to lead the people into the Promised Land (3:28; 31:1–29; 34:9).

1:39 your little ones and your children: The most outrageous of Israel's complaints against God was that He had wanted their children to die (Num. 14:31). But the Lord demonstrated His love and faithfulness to His people by protecting those younger than twenty so that they could inherit the land. you say will be victims: This phrase reminds the people of the false accusations of the previous generation. no knowledge of good and evil: At that time, children less than a few years old were considered to be not yet fully responsible (Is. 7:15). By extending the age limit to twenty, the Lord again showed His compassion (Num. 14:18).

1:40 The Way of the Red Sea probably means the way toward Elath by the Red Sea (the Gulf of Aqaba).

1:41 In their statement, we have sinned, the Israelites showed regret but not true repentance. we will go up and fight: Their confidence was in themselves. They still would not follow God's commands.

1:42, 43 I am not among you: The Lord would not protect them. Therefore, victory was out of the question. presumptuously: The people were arrogant. They did not submit to the Lord.

1:44–46 As bees do is an expression that signifies alarming pursuit by a swarm of menacing enemies (Ex. 23:28; Ps. 118:12; Is. 7:18). Hormah, a name meaning "Destruction," probably refers to a site south of the Amorite hill country by Kadesh Barnea that came to be called subsequently by that name. wept: The tears were of regret, not repentance.

2:1–25 Israel's journey into Transjordan. The precise itinerary is difficult to reconstruct, and several proposals have been made. According to some critics, the biblical accounts record different migrations and project the facts into one account, the details of which make it difficult to reconstruct what really happened. Conservatives are in no agreement. Some hold that the Israelites returned from Kadesh to Elath by the Red Sea by a direct route and from there they took the Way of the Wilderness of Edom, around Edom and Moab. Others posit a journey through the Wilderness of Zin to Punon in the 'Arabah, from where Israel turned either northward to cross through Edom or descended further south to Ezion Geber before turning northward.

2:1–3 the Lord spoke to me: We see regularly in Genesis through Deuteronomy that Moses reported God's very words to him.

2:4 The descendants of Esau are the Edomites (Gen. 36:1–8).

2:5 I have given … to Esau: God had extended His blessing to the Edomites by giving them land, just as He was about to give Israel the Promised Land. All lands are His to give and to take (Ex. 19:5; Ps. 50:12).

2:6, 7 The Israelites could not take food or water by force, beg for it, or steal it. God demanded that they pay the expenses of their journey through Edom. The term money indicates not coinage but silver that was weighed out.

2:8 Away from Elath and Ezion Geber refers to turning away from the way of the Red Sea, on which these cities were located. The Wilderness of Moab was the area east of Moab (Num. 33:44).

2:9–11 The Moabites were related to the Israelites through Lot (Gen. 19:37). Ar is a synonym for the region of Moab. The Lord had given land to both Edom and Moab. However, His principal gift of land was to Israel. (God had also made provision for the people of Ammon, v. 19.) 2:12, 13 The Valley of the Zered was east of the Dead Sea at the border between Edom and Moab.

2:14 men of war: The generation that had rebelled at Kadesh were of age to make war but rarely fought. Instead they made war against the Lord by their bitter words.

2:15–19 When God saved His people, it was by His hand (Ex. 15:6). Sadly, it was by His hand that He brought judgment on them as well. The term hand suggests God's personal involvement in both acts of deliverance and chastening. until they were consumed: The Lord is a consuming fire (Heb. 12:29), by whom the generation perished (Jude 5).

2:20 The Zamzummin were a people who lived in the Ammonite territory, possibly the Zuzim (Gen. 14:5).

2:21–23 The Avim lived in villages between the Jordan and the Mediterranean coast. Gaza was a Philistine city on the Mediterranean coast. The Caphtorim were a group of the tribes that came by sea to the coasts of Canaan and Egypt. Caphtor is possibly the same as Crete (Gen. 10:14).

2:24 The River Arnon was the traditional border between Moab and Ammon. Heshbon refers both to the city and the territory ruled by Sihon.

2:25 The mighty acts of God through Israel would fill the nations with dread and fear (Ex. 15:14–16; Josh. 2:9). The deliverance of Israel from Egypt and God's subsequent acts of protection were known abroad. The fear of the nations would soften them for the time of conquest. But the dissemination of knowledge about God's works would glorify Him (4:6).

2:26–29 The Wilderness of Kedemoth was a desert within the territory of Sihon, located on its eastern border, east of the Dead Sea. words of peace: Israel made an offer of peaceful passage (vv. 27–29).

2:30 Sihon was responsible for his refusal to permit Israel to pass through his land. God hardened his spirit and made his heart obstinate: God is sovereign over human hearts (Ex. 3:19, 21, for God's hardening of the Pharaoh's heart). This is a great mystery, as we can never understand the inner working of human responsibility and of divine sovereignty. In and through it all God was working out His plan of redemption.

2:31, 32 Jahaz was located north of Kedemoth (Is. 15:4).

2:33 our God delivered … we defeated him: God gave Israel the victory, but the Israelites still had to fight courageously.

2:34, 35 By the law of the ban, every living thing, human and animal, was to be utterly destroyed—that is, put to death (7:1, 2; 20:17). Exceptions could be made, but only when permitted by the Lord. In this case, the Israelites took livestock and property as spoil. The ban included fighting men and civilians, males and females, adults and children. God used the people of Israel to punish the Canaanites for their continual wickedness through the generations. Further, the destruction of the Canaanites was designed to protect Israel from following the Canaanites' evil practices. Israel's failure to destroy all of the Canaanites in the subsequent conquests led finally to their own undoing.

2:36, 37 Aroer was a city on the northern bank of the River Arnon at the border between Sihon's territory and the Moabite kingdom. Gilead was the northern boundary of Sihon's kingdom. Jabbok was the river Jacob crossed on his way back to Canaan (Gen. 32:22).

3:1–3 Bashan was the region east of the Sea of Galilee. Og: The territory of Og may have extended south of the River Yarmuk into Gilead. The account of the victory over Og is similar to that of Sihon (2:26–37), but significantly shorter.

3:4–7 The Argob was an unidentified region in Bashan. All these cities: The Hebrew text is ambiguous here. Some understand that not all of the sixty cities were fortresses; others, also being called "cities" in the Hebrew text, were "rural towns." Others interpret "sixty" to refer to the fortified cities, exclusive of rural towns. utterly destroyed: See note at 2:34. The reasons for the ban (Heb. herem) may never be fully known by us.

3:8 The territory of Sihon and Og extended from the River Arnon to Mount Hermon (2:24–3:7). Mount Hermon is the mountain range in the north between Canaan and Lebanon.

3:9–13 The Sidonians were the Phoenicians. Salach was a city located at the eastern border of Bashan. Bedstead could also be translated "sarcophagus," that is, stone coffin. Rabbah was on the site of the capital of modern Jordan, Amman. Nine cubits is about thirteen feet, and four cubits is about six feet, according to the standard cubit (about eighteen inches).

3:14 Jair had captured these settlements (Num. 32:41). The Geshurites lived east of the Sea of Galilee and south of Mount Hermon. The Maachathites were descended from Abraham's brother Nahor (Gen. 22:24) and lived north of the Geshurites.

3:15–17 The northernmost section of Gilead was given to Machir (Num. 32:39), son of Manasseh (Gen. 50:23). The southern section was given to Reuben and Gad. Chinnereth is another name for the Sea of Galilee.

3:18, 19 The Lord … has given: The text regularly emphasizes that the land was God's gift (1:39). men of valor: Women, children, and animals were not to be put in danger during the conquest. The battle would be fought by armed men under the command of God (Ex. 15:3).

3:20, 21 Joshua, as one of the original spies (Num. 13; 14), had a great advantage. Along with Caleb, he had seen the land, had spied it out, and would be able to use his knowledge to prepare his military strategy. Joshua also had witnessed the victories the Lord had given east of the Jordan.

Those experiences encouraged him when he led the Israelites across the river.

3:22 your God Himself fights: The Lord is the Divine Warrior who delivers and fights for His faithful people (Ex. 15:3).

3:23 Moses pleaded (Heb. hanan, "to implore favor") with God. But God refused to answer Moses' prayer, not because Moses lacked faith, but because Moses had disobeyed God and had not treated Him as holy (Num. 20:12).

3:24 O Lord GOD: The Hebrew has the word for "Lord" or "Master" followed by the personal name of God, Yahweh. This phrase indicates the depth of Moses' relationship with the Lord (9:26). what god is there … mighty deeds: Moses began his prayer with praise for God's holiness and power (Ex. 15:11). God is incomparable; there was none like Him (Is. 40:25, 26).

3:25 let me cross over: The verb is charged with energy expressing Moses' deep emotion. Moses did not ask that Joshua be removed as leader of the nation. He merely requested to see the land that God had promised. The good land is a lovely expression for the land that God had promised His people (4:21). It is not that the soil, land, topography, setting, or geography were magical; rather, this land was God's good gift to His people. One day it will be the "holy land," when the King of Righteousness reigns there!

3:26–28 angry: The Lord responded with great irritation and agitation. There is a play on words between the verb used in Moses' request, "let me cross over" (v. 25) and the verb translated "was angry" (v. 26). But verbs are spelled with the same letters (abar), but whereas the former is a common enough translation the latter is from an uncommon root meaning "to infuriate oneself," (compare Ps. 78:21, 59, 62). Enough: God ordered Moses not to ask Him about it again. But God showed His mercy to Moses by showing him the land from a distance (34:1–3). Moses was not to wallow in self-pity, but was to encourage Joshua as his replacement in leading the Israelites.

3:29 Beth Peor was a pagan site dedicated to Baal of Peor (Num. 25:3, 5) and was the scene of Israel's first disastrous encounter with the sexually-centered worship of Baal (4:3).

4:1 The exhortation to listen includes an encouragement to obey (5:1; 6:3, 4; 9:1; 20:3; 27:9). you may live: In contrast, Moses could not enter the land (v. 22). But for the people, God's gift of His law was designed for their good. By obeying the Law, the people could experience a fruitful life (6:1–3).

4:2 not add … nor take from it: The Israelites had to learn to live by God's word without trying to justify their disobedience or explaining away God's clear commands (Rev. 22:18, 19).

4:3, 4 Baal Peor: See 3:29. Twenty-four thousand were executed there by plague (Num. 25:9). That name reminded the Israelites of the terror of God's judgment.

4:5–8 Those who live by God's revelation will direct others to the Lord, the giver of every good gift.

4:5 Moses was the mediator of God's word, not its originator (compare 2 Pet. 1:20, 21). my God commanded me: Throughout Deuteronomy, Moses always deferred to the Lord as the source of his message.

4:6–8 in the sight of the peoples: By living in obedience to God, Israel would become a countercultural force by its manner of life, government, and society (Rom. 12:2). God's blessings on Israel would cause the nations to seek to learn about Him. Since God was so near and had promised to respond to their prayers, the Israelites could approach the Lord with all kinds of requests. statutes … judgments: Living so close to God meant that the Israelites were especially obligated to live for Him, in the way revealed in His covenant with them.

4:9–14 At Horeb Yahweh had impressed His awesome glory upon Israel, made a covenant with them, and given them the moral law through Moses.

4:9 Moses warned against the sin of presumption. your eyes have seen: The people had witnessed God's redemption, His revelation, and the giving of His gracious covenant. Now, they had to adhere to the covenantal regulations and teach their children the story of God's saving acts and His promises to Israel. Heart refers to the center of one's being, the source of direction for one's thoughts, actions, and speech (Matt. 12:34; 15:18, 19).

INSIGHT

Leaving a Legacy

Some of the Israelites who listened to Moses as he addressed Israel in the plain of Moab had stood as children and teenagers at Mount Sinai four decades earlier. Now they had a responsibility to teach both their children and grandchildren what they had seen, heard, and experienced on that occasion and in the years afterward (Deut. 4:9, 10). That way the faith would be passed down through the generations. So, too, parents and grandparents today are to instruct young people in the ways of the Lord.

4:10 My words are the Ten Commandments (v. 13).

4:11 The appearance of God is often described as accompanied by darkness and fire (Ex. 19:18). The fire speaks of His holiness, majesty, and transcendence, but also of His judgment against evil (v. 24). The darkness speaks of His unapproachable nature, of our sin, and of the possibility of impending judgment. One scholar says that this language presents "the elusive presence" of Yahweh. That God is perceived at all is a mark of His great condescending grace. That He is perceived remotely is a reminder of the gulf that exists between the Divine One and His fallen creatures.

4:12 heard … but saw no form: The Lord revealed His glory to the Israelites, but they saw no visual image other than darkness and fire. They did hear God's voice, however (v. 15). This verse reminds us that God is Spirit (John 4:24).

4:13 Obedience to God's commandments was an expression of loyalty to and love for the Lord who had initiated a covenant with Israel. The Ten Commandments were given in the form of two tablets of stone (Ex. 31:18), each containing a full and complete copy of the commandments. The older view, popularized in art, is that part of the commands were on one tablet (perhaps those relating to one's duty to God, and the other commands (one's duty to others) were written on the second.

4:14 teach: Moses mediated God's revelation to the people. As their teacher, he applied the Law (Ex. 20:19).

4:15–24 Faith in the Lord excludes idolatry of any kind (compare 12:1–4). The revelation at Mt. Horeb was attended by stunning phenomena. Since God did not reveal any images or representations of Himself, He rejected any form of worship in which the divine is represented by anything that is created. He alone will be worshiped, not His works.

4:15, 16 There was no way of describing or of giving shape with any image to the experience of God's presence at Sinai (Ex. 20:18). Since Israel had not seen the form of God, they could not represent Him in any way. likeness of male or female: Although people were created in the likeness of God, no image created in human likeness could represent God (Gen. 1:26, 27).

4:17–19 likeness of any animal: Animals were created by God (Gen. 1:20–25). They cannot serve as a medium for spiritual awareness or as a representation for God. sun … host of heaven: Furthermore, heavenly bodies were created by God. They could not serve as representation of the Creator (Gen. 1:14–19; Ps. 19:1).

4:20 This verse forms a "slogan of redemption." taken you and brought you: God chose Israel to be His people and to have a covenant with Him. Iron furnace refers to the period of affliction in Egypt (Is. 48:10; Jer. 11:4). inheritance: The people redeemed by the Lord belonged to Him and had a glorious future with Him.

4:21, 22 I must die: How hard these words must have been to Moses! He had to encourage the people to enter the same land which he himself would not enter.

4:23, 24 God is a consuming fire. He is free to destroy disobedient and rebellious people. Israel had witnessed His righteous anger during the wilderness journey as well as in Canaan (Heb. 12:29). Jealous (Heb. ganna) may also be translated as "zealous." God is zealous for His holiness. Both in His wrath and in His love, the Lord remains holy. The emphasis here on God's wrath should be balanced with the emphasis on His mercy (4:31).

4:25–31 God will severely judge idolaters but will have compassion on those who seek Him. Moses anticipates the future when a generation departs from the Lord. They will be judged and exiled from the country. Yet even in exile they must return to the Lord, for He is gracious and compassionate. This teaching is the basis of the prophetic proclamation of the remnant and of the apostolic teaching on God's grace for unregenerate Israel (Rom. 9—11).

4:25 Children and grandchildren is a reference to a future rebellion, when a generation would disobey the Lord.

4:26 Heaven and earth signifies all creation. witness against you: Creation would act as God's witness against a rebellious and obstinate people (Deut. 30:19; Is. 1:2). utterly perish … be utterly destroyed: The curses of the covenant would overtake the Israelites (Ps. 1:6). The Lord would discipline them and exile them from the land.

4:27 Scatter you among the peoples is a prophetic warning of the exiles that would take place in 722 and 586 B.C.

4:28, 29 Moses warned against the folly of idolatry. Neither see … nor smell declares the impotence of idols (Ps. 115:6; Is. 40:19, 20; 41:7, 22–24). These "gods" were not merely lesser gods. They did not exist at all; they were dead. Hence turning from the living God to false, nonexistent "gods" was in effect moving from life to death (1 Thess. 1:9, 10). But seeking the living God and Him alone brought life. There are times when one still hears people say that only in the NT does one come to inner reality; that in the "Old" Testament everything was external and merely symbolic. Words such as seek Him with all your heart and with all your soul, here, dispel that notion.

4:30 All these things refers to the curses of the covenant. The latter days simply means "in the future." But the prophets developed this phrase into a more technical designation for a new era characterized by God's blessings, the age of Messiah. turn to the LORD: God would bless the nation when they returned to Him.

4:31 merciful God: The future of God's people depends on God's love. The emphasis on God's mercy (Heb. rahum, related to the Hebrew for "womb," and so suggesting here "maternal affection" and "deep compassion") is a necessary balance to the emphasis that Moses placed on God's refining wrath (v. 24). not forsake … nor forget: The Lord was free to scatter His people. But after His discipline, He would re-gather them and show them His favor. God was and is faithful to His promises. The covenant of your fathers is God's solemn commitment to fulfill the promises He made to the patriarchs (Gen. 17:6–8; 22:16, 17; Ex. 3:15–17).

4:32–40 The revelation of Yahweh is a unique expression of His commitment to His covenant. Moses speaks with remarkable eloquence again on the uniqueness of God's revelation. Yahweh is incomparable (3:24; Is. 40:25, 26). This is unique because paganism cannot lay claim on revelation, and unique because God has demonstrated His love for Israel in redeeming them from Egypt, and unique because Israel lived to witness the revelation from heaven.

4:32–34 The Creator of all the earth is the same God who spoke to the Israelites at Mount Sinai. By trials … and by great terrors, the Creator had demonstrated His power in Egypt and had used it to save the Israelites.

There Is No Other God

The declaration that the Lord is uniquely God, that "there is none other besides Him" (Deut. 4:35), was a remarkable statement given the land that the Hebrews had just left, and the lands through which they had just traveled, and the land they were about to inhabit. The Egyptians, Moabites, Edomites, and Canaanites worshiped numerous gods, and in that context Israel's monotheism was unique (Deut. 32:39). Monotheism also addresses the popular view today that "all religions are basically the same" and that Christianity has no right to make claims of exclusivity.

4:35 there is none other besides Him: Moses emphasizes the theme that the living God is the only one there is (4:39; 5:7; 6:4; 32:39).

4:36 God's revelation to the Israelites was intended to graciously instruct, guide, and discipline the Israelites in the way of righteousness (compare 2 Tim. 3:16, 17).

4:37 He loved … He chose: Moses brings together the greatness of God in relation to Israel's election. These words also define the NT concept of "foreknowledge" (Rom. 8:29). God's love for the fathers continues. The verb can be translated in the present tense: "He loves your fathers."

4:38 nations greater and mightier: The Scriptures have two different ways of regarding the size of the nation of Israel at the time of the Exodus. God is praised for the miraculous growth of Israel's family during their sojourn in Egypt (Ex. 1:7, 9, 10). On the other hand, the nation of Israel is described as small in number compared to the other nations around her. Hence, God deserves the glory for Israel's victories.

4:39 God in heaven … there is no other: Since no other God was Creator, Lord of history, Teacher, and the Lover of His people, Israel had to respond to God alone. This is a major theme of Deuteronomy and of the prophets. The incomparability of Yahweh is also the heart of the basic creed of Israel, the "Shema" (6:4).

4:40 keep … that it may go well with you: How wonderful that the basic meaning in the Torah was that God would bring good into the lives of His people by means of His Law. your children: Parents are responsible for the well-being of their children. None has such a treasure to give to their children as does the believer in the living God. The promise of blessing in the land was conditional; it required obedience (5:29; 6:24; 14:23; 19:9; 28:29, 33).

4:41–43 The regulations concerning the cities to which a person guilty of manslaughter could flee are further developed in 19:1–13. The narrative concerning the division of the land (3:12–20) resumes with the appointment of the three cities of refuge in the Transjordan (Num. 35:9–28; Josh. 20). Ramoth was located between the Yarmuk and the Jabbok in Gilead. The locations of Bezer and Golan are uncertain.

4:44—11:32 The central revelation of Yahweh: the Law, the promises, and the covenant community. Moses expounds the nature of the moral law of God and its related statutes and ordinances.

4:44–49 An historical prologue. These verses form a transition between the review of Israel's history (1:6—4:43) and the revelation of God: the Law, the promises, and the covenant community (5:1—11:32). Again we have an example of a misplaced chapter division. These verses should have begun ch. 5.

4:44 The law refers to the commandments detailed in chs. 5—26. Law basically means "instruction." God points out the path of righteousness for His covenant people.

4:45 These are … the judgments: This Law is the same as that given to the previous generation at Mount Sinai. Deuteronomy is a second delivery of the Law to those who would occupy the land.

4:46–49 in the land of Sihon … of Og: Israel had recently acquired this land east of the Jordan and was now preparing to cross the river and enter Canaan.

“statutes”

(Heb. choq) (Deut. 5:1; Ex. 18:16) Strong’s #2706: The word conveys a variety of meanings in the OT, including: a “portion” or “ration” of food (Gen. 47:22); the “boundary” or “limit” of the sea (Prov. 8:29); and an “allotment” of the sacrifices for the priests (Lev. 10:13). This term is derived from a verb that means “to decree,” or “to inscribe” (Prov. 8:15; Is. 10:1; 49:16). The term often refers to commands, civil enactments, legal prescriptions, and ritual laws decreed by someone in authority, whether by humans (Mic. 6:16) or by God Himself (Deut. 6:1). The Law of Moses includes commandments (miswah), judgments (mispat), and statutes (hoq) (Deut. 4:1–2). Israel was charged to obey God’s statutes, and they pledged to do so (Deut 26:16–17). Accordingly, God’s judgment was meted out against the Israelites when they disobeyed them (Amos 2:4; Ezek. 11:12; Mal. 3:7).

5:1–5 The Lord's covenant. The good news is that God has been faithful to the covenant, in that the present generation, whom Moses was addressing, are heirs of the covenant. The fact that God speaks to His people is a mark of His grace. The provision of His Torah is one of the great demonstrations of His mercy. It is a misreading of the Torah to regard it as a manifestation of God's anger. There was a time when some teachers of Scripture represented the giving of the Law as a punishment by God because His people had rejected His grace. The Law of God is a manifestation of His grace in this period of Hebrew history.

5:2 a covenant with us in Horeb: The Mosaic covenant is a divine administration of grace and promise by which the Lord consecrated Israel to Himself under the sanctions (curse and blessing) of His revealed will. It was from the Lord, and therefore not properly "the Law of Moses." It was the Law (Torah) of Yahweh, mediated through Moses.

5:3, 4 Did not make this covenant with our fathers, but with us emphasizes the privileged position of the present generation as they were preparing to enter Canaan. Face to face indicates intimacy. Moses stressed the special relationship the people had with the living God.

5:5 I stood between the LORD and you reflects Moses' role as mediator of the covenant (Ex. 20:18–21).

5:6–22 The Ten Commandments (4:13) encapsulate God's will for His people, teaching them how to love Him and how to love their neighbor as themselves. These Ten Words (as they are known in Hebrew) form a concentrated summary of the basic elements of the Torah. They have come to us in two versions, one given at Mt. Sinai (Ex. 20:3–17) and one coming shortly before Moses' death (5:6–21). The differences must be explained in terms of the new era, as Israel is about to enter the land. Jesus confirmed the validity of the moral law (Matt. 5:17, 18; Mark 12:31). The authority of the Law in the new covenant administration lies in Jesus' teaching, interpretation, and application of the Law.

5:6 I am the LORD your God: In the pattern of the Hittite treaties, these words speak of the identification of the covenant party of the first part. Instead of a grandiose listing of titles and descriptions, the basic elements are stated in just a few words. He is the living God who has acted in great grace to His people. He has the right as their redeemer to speak to them with His Ten Words.

5:7 no other gods: Many ancient Middle Eastern cultures absorbed other gods into their own belief systems, modifying and using these new gods for their own purposes. But the Israelites were unique: They served only one God, who would not allow any rivals.

5:8–10 Even when an image functioned as a symbol for deity, it led worshipers away from the true worship of the living God. visiting the iniquity: God would discipline the sinner. to the third and fourth generations: Even as God would bless generation upon generation for their true worship of Him, He would also punish generation upon generation for faithlessness to Him. Mercy to thousands refers to thousands of generations in contrast to the three and four generations that would be punished. The comparison between four and thousands is a proportional measurement of God's mercy. His grace is far more expansive than His wrath.

5:11 Take … in vain refers to the abuse, misuse, blasphemy, cursing, or manipulation of the Lord's name. No wonder the ancient Israelites developed the practice of not pronouncing the sacred name aloud. Yet God delights in those who love and respect His name.

The Blessing of the Sabbath

The commandment to keep the Sabbath holy (Deut. 5:12) did not mean that the other days of the week and their activities were unholy. The Sabbath was to remind Israel that human beings were dependent on God, and that they have strong tendencies to exalt themselves and their accomplishments, to turn them into gods even—to borrow an OT expression. In today's terms, we might say that our pursuits become addictions. The Sabbath enforced a day of rest and worship in the weekly cycle to keep their focus on the Lord rather than on themselves and their accomplishments. Sunday, as the Lord's Day, can help Christians set boundaries on who and what we worship and make the god of our lives.

5:12–15 These verses contain the positive command to regard the Sabbath as holy—separated for God's purposes. as … commanded you: The Lord did so at Mount Sinai (Ex. 20:8–11). the Sabbath of the LORD: The primary significance of the Sabbath was that it belonged to the Lord. you shall do no work … rest: On this Lord's day, the Israelites were to rest from work and celebrate God's good gifts. remember that you were a slave: The Israelites were to remember Israel's past oppression and celebrate their current freedom. Christians differ as to how this commandment relates to believers in Jesus Christ. The Sabbath was Saturday, the seventh day of the week. Christians generally worship God on Sunday, the first day of the week, because it was on a Sunday that the Lord rose from the dead. Even so, Christians follow the principle of this command. They dedicate time to the Lord by resting, by praising Him for His blessings, and by remembering His saving acts written in the Bible.

5:16 Honor your father and your mother: Respect for parents would build strong families. Strong, godly families, in turn, would teach children the ways of God, and the covenant community dedicated to serving and worshiping God would remain intact. The benefits of respecting one's parents would be long life and success.

5:17 Premeditated murder was the concern of this law. For commands concerning other forms of homicide (chs. 19—21). The basis of respect for life lay in God's act of creating humans in His image (Gen. 9:6).

5:18 Adultery was a betrayal not only of a commitment, but of a relationship. Anyone who treated marriage lightly would also treat his or her relationship with God lightly.

5:19 not steal: Stealing could take many forms: illegitimate removal of property, kidnaping, manipulation of a person and his property to one's advantage, and so on.

5:20 not bear false witness: This included any testimony that falsely incriminated someone or negatively affected someone's reputation, such as gossip and slander.

5:21 You shall not covet: The only command that specifically prohibited an attitude. Desiring what someone else possessed was self-interestedness. This attitude was the opposite of a concern for the other person's welfare. The Law can be summed up in the last and first commandments: a person must truly love God and truly be concerned for his or her neighbor (Mark 12:28–31).

5:22 He wrote them on two tablets: The two tablets were two complete copies of the Law. Usually, two copies were made of ancient Near Eastern treaties. One was retained by each of the two contracting parties as a witness to the agreement. But with the Ten Commandments, both copies were placed before God. Not only did the Lord covenant with the Israelites, He also witnessed the agreement.

5:23–31 Because of their rebellious and sinful nature, the Israelites feared God's holy presence and were unprepared to face Him. Subsequently, they asked Moses to serve as their spokesman before the Lord, and God approved their request. Moses became the mediator of the covenant between God and His people. He not only communicated God's ways to the people, but he begged God to show His mercy to them.

5:24 His glory and His greatness: The awe-inspiring revelation of God's presence. What glory this is!

5:25, 26 why should we die … living God: The Israelites' fear was necessary. The people needed to realize that the living God was powerful, great, and demanded perfection, so that they as sinners would recognize their need for His mercy.

5:27, 28 we will hear and do it: God's awe-inspiring revelation of Himself prompted the people to express their willingness to comply with the Lord's commands. However, their steadfastness to their promise would be tested.

5:29–31 The people were impressed with what they saw and heard, but their heart was unchanged.

5:32–6:25 A challenge to love Yahweh. Moses persuades the people to love Yahweh as the source of all goodness, in the present and in the future. God is good and faithful, but He expects His people to be responsible. Since the future also depends on the faithfulness of each generation, the family unit is vital. The godly family is God's appointed institution in which instruction in godliness takes place.

5:32, 33 in all the ways … God has commanded you: Out of all the nations, God had chosen Israel to be instructed in His law. But the real test of the distinctiveness of these people was their response to God's revelation. and that it may be well with you, and that you may prolong your days: These promises, attached to the fifth commandment, were applicable to all of the commandments.

6:1–9 The fear of God begins with an expression of love for God. Indeed, love for God and fear of God are inter-related responses to the wonders of His being.

6:1 The commandment refers to the instruction to love the Lord (v. 5). commanded to teach you: Moses was God's instrument in giving His Law to Israel (5:22, 23). It was not really "the Law of Moses" but the Law of God.

6:2 The fear of the Lord includes awe for His greatness and holiness, love for Him, and submission to His will. Initially, the fear of God may involve fright. Yet it leads to a sense of wonder, a commitment to worship, and delight in knowing God. you … and your grandson: Since God promised to bless generation after generation (Gen. 17:7, 8), He expected His people to follow His ways from generation to generation as well. all the days of your life: The Lord presented Israel with blessedness in the land as a covenantal benefit (4:40; 5:29; 6:24; 14:23; 18:5; 30:15), conditioned on loyalty (4:26). It was the point of God's gift of His Law to bring fullness of life under His grace (4:1). Disobedience would lead to forfeiture of the land and of the covenant privileges (4:26; 30:15–19; Pss. 1:6; 112:10). Thus, God taught them that He alone is life and that the abandonment of God is the rejection of life in favor of death (30:20; John 3:16–20).

6:3 that it may be well with you: God instructed His people so they might live good lives full of meaning and peace. They would live in His glorious presence. A land flowing with milk and honey indicates a fruitful and blessed land (11:9; 26:9, 15; 27:3; 31:20). The land promised to the Israelites was better than the land of Egypt to which they had wanted to return (Num. 16:12–14).

6:4 This verse is the celebrated Shema, the basic confession of faith in Judaism (Matt. 22:37, 38; Mark 12:29, 30; Luke 10:27). Hear: The Hebrew word is shema. The verse starts with a command for the people to respond properly to God. They must listen and obey. The LORD our God indicates the people's relationship with the living God. He had come into the lives of His people; it was not that they had ascended to Him. He had saved them from slavery in Egypt, guided them through the wilderness, and given them His instructions. Further, He was about to give them His land. The LORD is one means "the Lord alone." There is only one God.

6:5, 6 Moses repeatedly exhorted the Israelites to respond to God's love with devotion. In this context, the word translated as love may mean "to make one's choice in." God commanded His people to choose Him with all their being, and in the process to deny all other supposed deities.

6:7 talk of them when you sit … and when you rise up: God's revelation should be so central to a godly family that they should naturally talk about Him while they perform other activities.

6:8, 9 a sign … frontlets: In later years the Jews interpreted these instructions in a physical way. They instructed men to wear phylacteries, boxes containing passages of Scripture, when they prayed (Matt. 23:5). In any case the idea is that God's laws should be close to the mind and hands of His people at all times (compare Ex. 13:9, 16; Prov. 3:3; 6:21). write them on the doorposts: Jewish custom is to attach a small vessel called a mezuzah to the doorpost. In it is placed a small scroll containing the text of Deut. 6:4–9; 11:13–21 and God's name Shaddai.

6:10–25 The blessings of God point to Giver of every good gift. The fear of the Lord expresses itself in gratitude to and in contentment with God. Moses warns Israel not to be ungrateful and not to develop a self-sufficient life-style. Instruction in redemptive history is an antidote against self-sufficiency because it teaches each generation to see what God has done in the past.

6:10–12 Moses warned the people not to forget that their possessions were God's gifts. God had not only saved their ancestors from slavery, but He had also given them a good land. The Israelites needed continually to praise and thank God for His mercy toward them.

6:13–15 serve: The Lord demanded absolute commitment to Himself. Out of gratitude, the people were to do this willingly. oaths in His name: The fact that God had revealed His name assures the people of God's goodness to them. He wanted them to look to Him alone for refuge and sustenance. Jesus quoted this text when Satan was tempting Him (Matt. 4:10).

6:16–19 God may test His children, but they may never test or tempt Him by their rebelliousness or sin (Matt. 4:7; Luke 4:12). For the incident at Massah, read Ex. 17:1–7. keep … do what is right and good: Moses applied a lesson from the past and exhorted the new generation to be faithful to God (4:1, 5; 5:29; 6:1). to cast out all your enemies: Canaan's false worship and its immorality could no longer influence the Israelites if the Canaanites were entirely thrown out of the land.

6:20–24 your son asks: Moses commanded the Israelites to teach their children the significance of their ritual. In the same way, Christians should make sure their children know the meaning of their practices. The answer to the Israelite child's question would include four components. (1) We were slaves … in Egypt; (2) the LORD brought us out … with a mighty hand; (3) to give us the land; and (4) we have a challenge to responsible action. Clearly, the redemption and the privileges are the Lord's, but the responsibility belongs to His children. The rabbis interpreted this section in a wonderful way. They observed that it was not the present generation that had been delivered from Egypt, nor was it the children who would now hear the story. Yet each, the parents and their children, were to regard themselves as though they had personally been brought forth from Egypt. In each generation, each believing Hebrew was to regard himself or herself as a principal receiver of God's mercy.

6:25 Moses did not offer the people a works-righteousness by keeping the Law. Righteousness is a right relationship with God. God initiates this relationship, and His children respond to it as an expression of love.

7:1–26 The conquest of the land. Moses challenges the people to be responsible agents in God's judgment on the seven nations of Canaan. Israel has no inherent merit by which they are blessed, whereas the people of Canaan are cursed. Whatever Israel received and will receive is because of God's love and grace. God will be present with Israel in the conquest. He expects them to act responsibly in eradicating every trace of the pagan religion, in not adapting to the pagan culture, and in waiting patiently for Him to give them the land little by little.

7:1 The Hittites came originally from Asia Minor (Gen. 23:10). The Girgashites are an unknown people mentioned also in Gen. 10:16 and 1 Chr. 1:14. The Amorites were the native population of Canaan that had settled in the mountains. The Canaanites were the native population that had settled in the coastlands. The Perizzites were the native population that had settled in the hill country. The Hivites were the native population settled south of the Lebanon mountains. The Jebusites (perhaps an offshoot of the Hittites) were the native population settled near what later became Jerusalem.

7:2 Covenant refers to any treaty with the Canaanite nations that might undermine God's covenant with Israel.

7:3, 4 Intermarriage with the Canaanite population would have tempted the Israelites to adopt Canaanite culture. This would have threatened Israel's ability to be a countercultural force. They were not to "blend in." Similarly, the Christian church is called to demonstrate God's love to the world like sheep in the midst of wolves (Matt. 10:6; Rom. 12:2; Phil. 2:14–16; 1 Pet. 2:9).

7:5 destroy … break down: The destruction of idolatrous sites was meant to keep the Israelites from imitating and borrowing false pagan practices (12:2; 16:21, 22).

7:6–16 Israel has no inherent merit by which they are blessed. Neither are members of Christ's church. If one is ever puzzled by the question of why God chose Israel to be His special people, let that person first answer satisfactorily why God has chosen him or her.

7:7 The Israelites had no reason for pride, for they were the least of all peoples. Whatever privileges or possessions they enjoyed were due to God's grace.

7:8 The biblical authors verbally paint a wonderful picture of God: the powerful God extending His mighty hand to save His people.

7:9, 10 faithful God … for a thousand generations: Throughout all time, God has remained true to His commitment made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. He is a faithful God (Ex. 20:6; Heb. 13:5). love Him and keep His commandments: Loving God always finds expression in doing His will. The Lord is a God of justice. He will repay those who rebel against Him.

7:11, 12 Moses clearly affirms human responsibility and divine sovereignty. The positive or negative response of God's people is related to the manner of fulfillment of the promises (Is. 48:18, 19).

7:13–16 bless the fruit … increase: God's blessings extended to the quality of life, with the assurance of children, health, food, drink, and peace.

7:16 The people's immediate responsibility was to destroy the Canaanites' wicked presence and influence in the land (2:34).

7:17–19 you shall remember: The past saving acts of God demonstrated His nature and power. The people were to remember the details of His actions so that they could face the present moment in the light of eternity.

7:20, 21 The hornet (Ex. 23:28; Josh. 24:12) may refer to a dramatic act of God, such as a violent storm or a plague of insects. It may refer to campaigns by other armies that weakened the Canaanites before the Israelites arrived. Since the great and awesome God made the nations fear, why then should His own people be terrified (Ex. 15:14; Josh. 2:10, 11)? God was on their side and was even among them!

7:22 little by little: The conquest of the land was in two stages: (1) a rapid, broad conquest under Joshua; (2) a gradual, area-by-area, city-by-city conquest that followed. God's plan was that not all of the Promised Land would fall to Israel at once. Indeed, much of the land remained to be conquered after Joshua (Josh. 13:1–6).

7:23–26 lest you be doomed … like it: The lot of the Canaanites (2:34) could befall Israel, who must be resolute in avoiding any attachment to the gods of the host cities. The evil was not something inherent in the material object, as though it were something magical. Rather, the danger was in the thoughts that these things might bring upon one's mind. Thus David said, "I will set nothing wicked before my eyes" (Ps. 101:3).

8:1–20 Yahweh alone is the source of blessing, whether in the wilderness or in the land. Moses exhorts Israel to remember what God has done for them, in Egypt and in the wilderness, and to remain grateful for His blessings that they will receive in the Promised Land, lest they forget and abandon the Lord.

8:1 Live, in this context, has the same meaning as saving one's soul in James 1:21; 5:20.

8:2 remember: Reflecting on the past acts of God encouraged loyalty and devotion to Him. forty years … to humble you and test: The Lord taught Israel to rely on Him alone during the wilderness journey. know what was in your heart: The response to God's testings helped determine the people's inner nature.

8:3 God supplied His people with food in the wilderness (Ex. 16) so that they would learn that man shall not live by bread alone. Humans have a spiritual nature that can be satisfied only by the spiritual nutrients of God's Word. man lives by every word … from the mouth of the LORD: Jesus affirmed this truth by using these words to resist Satan (Matt. 4:4; Luke 4:1–4).

8:4 In addition to providing manna and water, the Lord made the clothing and shoes of the people last for forty years!

8:5, 6 That the LORD … chastens is still true today (Heb. 12:5–11).

8:7–9 The land had everything necessary to sustain life and develop an economy: water, crops, and metals for industry (11:8–12). The various water sources contrasted with the Nile, the only source of water the people knew in Egypt (11:10). The varied forms of plant life were surprising to the people who came from the wilderness.

8:10–14 bless the LORD: The proper response to plenty is thanksgiving and worship. It is Jewish custom to pray after certain festive meals because of the phrase when you have eaten and are full. In the absence of proper worship, people would forget, become complacent and greedy, and even deny that God provided for them (v. 17). your heart is lifted up: In the enjoyment of God's blessings, the people to their own detriment might think that they were self-sufficient.

8:14–16 God who brought … who led you … who brought water … who fed: These four historical allusions recall (1) the redemption from Egypt, (2) the presence of God in the wilderness, (3) the provision of water, and (4) the provision of manna. humble … test: Through the whole experience in Egypt and the wilderness, the Lord was leading His children into decisions that would bring out their true nature. to do you good in the end: Difficult as the tests were, the Lord was a good teacher because He had the future of His people in mind.

8:17 Moses warned the people that prosperity and wealth often leads to an exaltation of self and a rejection of God.

The God Who Gives Wealth

There are two extremes today about the connection between God and wealth. One is that wealth and money are inherently evil and therefore God is opposed to them. The other is that God is just waiting to shower wealth on those who satisfy certain conditions or expectations that He has.

Moses' word to the Israelites that "God … gives you power to get wealth" (Deut. 8:18) helps to clear up both misunderstandings. On the one hand, it shows that ultimately wealth is a gift of God; therefore, it cannot be evil as such, or else God would not provide it (compare James 1:17). Numerous other passages reinforce the fact that whatever one possesses, one has God to thank for it (1 Sam. 3:7; Hos. 2:8).

On the other hand, Moses' statement shows that God is not a celestial Santa Claus. In the first place, no one today can claim this passage as a direct promise from God. These words were spoken to Israel because, as the text plainly states, the nation was involved in a covenant relationship with God. The terms of that covenant called for blessing on the nation (but not necessarily on individuals within the nation) if it kept the Law (Lev. 26:3–5). Moses was concerned that in the face of abundance, the people would forget the source of their wealth. For people today, who live outside that special covenant that God had with ancient Israel, Moses' words imply only the general truth that all that we have ultimately comes from God.

8:18 God's power is different from human manipulation, power politics, competition, and other ways of getting ahead. God gives grace.

8:19, 20 The threat was that the people would perish in the same manner as the nations whom they had come to drive out.

9:1–3 Hear, O Israel: Moses called on the people to see the future occupation of the land as a gift of divine grace, not the result of any righteousness of their own. The future was open to them if only they could learn from the past. understand today: wisdom from above begins with a confession of dependence on the Lord.

9:4–6 possess their land: The reasons for the conquest of the Promised Land were (1) the immorality of its inhabitants and (2) the promises God made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Gen. 15:18–21). stiff-necked people: Israel's history demonstrated how often the people grumbled, complained, and disobeyed. Moses hoped they would not forget their unworthiness before God, or think that they deserved His gracious gifts (vv. 7–14).

9:7–29 Moses reminds the people of their past disobedience and rebelliousness, lest they be tempted to believe that they deserve the land and God's goodness.

9:7, 8 In addition to remembering the grace of God, the people also had to remember how vulnerable they were to apostasy (1:6—3:29). rebellious: The people were characteristically stubborn. They continued to test the Lord (v. 27).

9:9 A person cannot go more than about three days without water and survive. God supernaturally preserved Moses during the forty days.

9:10–13 the LORD delivered to me … finger of God: God initiated the covenant with His people and gave Moses His laws. With God's approval, Moses taught the Law to the people.

9:14–19 destroy: The threat of destruction was real, even as the future threat always remained an imminent possibility.

9:19–21 the LORD listened to me: For Moses' prayer, read vv. 26–29. Daniel's prayer for the nation resembles Moses' intercession (Dan. 9:3–23).

9:22, 23 See Num. 11; 13.

9:24–29 Moses took God's judgment seriously. Nevertheless, he did not resign himself to God's justice but appealed to God's faithfulness, mercy, and honor. He reminded God of (1) His redemption of the Israelites from slavery, (2) His promises, (3) His reputation among all the nations, and (4) His election of Israel.

10:1–11 God's gracious renewal of the covenant. The new tablets of the Law symbolized God's promise to be present with His people, knowing that they were rebellious in their hearts (5:29).

10:1 at that time: Subsequent to prayer (9:25–29).

10:2 I will write: The condescension of the Lord is almost beyond belief. He prepared the tablets a second time, even after the first set was broken.

10:3 The acacia tree is still found in the Sinai Peninsula, but in smaller numbers than when the Israelites passed through.

10:4, 5 He wrote … according to the first writing: The Lord did not add to or take away from the commandments.

10:6–11 Levi: The responsibilities of the Levites included: (1) care for the ark (Num. 3); (2) service in offering, worship, teaching, and legal matters (18:1–8); and (3) blessing Israel (Num. 6:22–27). The phrase to this day suggests that this explanation was written after Moses' death.

10:12–11:32 Moses challenges Israel to seek Yahweh, to love Him, and to keep His covenant, lest they fall subject to His judgment. This lovely and moving section has four challenges: (1) to love Yahweh, the source of all good, with one's whole being (10:12–22); (2) to remember what Yahweh has done in His judgment both on Egypt and on rebellious Israelites (11:1–7); (3) to practice the Law of God and receive His blessings (11:8–25); and (4) to remember that God is free in His blessing and in His curse (11:26–32).

10:13–15 Heaven and the highest heavens: The sky and the whole universe belong to God. love … chose: The Creator sovereignly and graciously involved Himself with Abraham and his descendants.

10:16 circumcise the foreskin of your heart: Circumcision was a physical sign of the covenant; faith and repentance were spiritual signs. Since the Canaanite worship system involved sexual excess, the distinctive sign on the body of the male Hebrew would be a significant reminder not to participate in the rituals of the Canaanites. But circumcision was to be done within as well as without. Marking the body as a sign of dedication to the Lord is unimportant unless there is a change of heart. The covenant administered by Moses required a spiritual change (30:6).

10:17, 18 Moses proclaims that the God of Israel alone is God, the sovereign Lord, the just and great King of all. The proper response to this God is awe, love, and service. fatherless … stranger: God uses His power to uphold justice—especially for those have no powerful ally (1:16; 24:17–22). food and clothing: God freely gives to all who are needy, even as He did to Israel in the wilderness (8:3, 4).

10:19 God's good provision for their own needs should have motivated the Israelites to love the stranger among them. To love and provide for the disadvantaged was in fact following God's example.

10:20 fear … hold fast: True faith expresses itself in awe, submission, and deep commitment to God.

10:21 He is your praise: Reflecting on the Creator-Redeemer—whose love, justice, and power extended beyond the covenant people—leads to worship, love, and obedience.

10:22 stars of heaven: God faithfully fulfilled His promise to Abraham (Gen. 15:5, 6).

11:1–7 Moses traced the mighty acts of God in order to encourage his hearers to respond to God's revelation. Acts and words go together, as do obedience and love.

11:6, 7 Dathan and Abiram rebelled against Aaron's priesthood and lost their lives (Num. 16).

11:8–25 This is a call to practice the God's Law and receive His blessings. Moses exhorts the people to respond to the Lord because He will give them a land so much better than Egypt. He exhorts them to love the Lord because He provides for them.

11:9–12 not like the land of Egypt: Agriculture in Egypt depended on irrigation, the annual flooding of the Nile (8:7–9). land for which the LORD your God cares: God would sovereignly control the seasons and rains to provide for His people (vv. 14, 15).

11:13–17 The early rain encouraged the sprouting of seed and new growth. The latter rain brought the crops to maturity. Lord's anger: God is gracious and loving, but also just when provoked by arrogant people. To shut up the heavens means "to withhold rain," as God did to Ahab (1 Kin. 17:1; 18:1).

11:18–25 This is an exhortation to treasure God's Word in the heart and to teach it to children.

11:26–32 Moses challenges the people to respond lovingly to the Lord because He is the source of life (blessing) and of death (curse).

11:26–28 The opposite of a blessing is a curse. As God's blessing brings vitality, so His curse takes it away. People become sick, suffer, and die (1 Cor. 11:30; James 1:13–15).

11:29–32 Gerizim … Ebal: See Josh. 8:30–35.

12:1—26:19 The development of the covenant fellowship is the concern of the Law of God (the statutes and judgments). The Law is God's revelation to Israel by which the great King teaches His people to develop a counter-culture, God's antidote against the autonomy of mankind.

12:1—16:17 This section surrounds the worship of God and a holy people. The distinctiveness of Israel is in her absolute allegiance to the one God, and this comes to expression in her worship, legal system, economics, society, family life, and individual and communal ethics.

12:1–31 One central place of worship would help them to maintain a certain faith. Moses stresses that God expects His people to focus on the one place chosen by God and to resist the attractiveness of the many pagan places and forms of worship. Israel in the land would receive many benefits from the Lord, and He in turn expected them to live responsibly.

12:1 giving you to possess: God was about to give the people the land. Yet He demanded their obedience as a condition for occupancy and enjoyment of it (chs. 28; 29).

12:2 mountains: The Canaanites built their temples on high places, believing that their gods resided in palaces on the mountains. These mountaintop shrines were considered gateways between heaven and earth. The Canaanites would worship at a green tree because they believed this would bring them success and prosperity.

12:3, 4 Sacred pillars were monuments dedicated to one of the gods. They represented the power of fertility. Archaeologists have found such pillars in excavations at Gezer and Hazor. Wooden images refers to the poles or trees dedicated to the goddess Asherah. The worship of the true God with any pagan ritual or reminder of paganism violated the Ten Commandments (5:8–10).

12:5 seek: Whatever one seeks is the object of one's desire and devotion (Ps. 122:9). place where the LORD your God chooses: The central place of worship was God's to choose (Ps. 132:13, 14). God blessed His people with His presence in the tabernacle in the wilderness and later at Shiloh, in the temple in Jerusalem, and finally through Jesus Christ (John 2:18–). out of all your tribes: The presence of God was for the benefit of all of the people without preference for any one tribe. God's name signifies His ownership. dwelling place: The Lord graciously agreed to live among His people.

A New Culture

Israel was on the verge of a momentous occasion. Not only were they preparing to enter the Promised Land and conquer its inhabitants, they were also preparing to establish a brand new culture. The primary focus of this new culture would be on the living God. Every part of it would reflect His nature.

God's commandments gave the Israelites a concrete expression of how God wanted the people to live. In short, He wanted a people that loved and worshiped Him alone. By keeping a number of purity laws, the Israelites were to demonstrate their commitment to Him by keeping ritually clean. Ideally, this outward purity would reflect inward purity. Since God was perfect, He wanted His people to resist the immoral practices of the neighboring nations. But He not only wanted them to resist evil, He also wanted them to reflect His loving and compassionate nature by helping strangers, widows, orphans, and the poor. By following God's extensive instructions, the Israelites could establish their society on the just laws of the living God.

Many parts of the Israelite culture were distinctive in the ancient world, such as prohibitions against eating pork. These outward distinctions were a sign that the Israelites were set apart to God's holy purposes. However, the most prominent distinction was Israel's absolute allegiance to one God. Israel's entire society—its legal system, economic structure, family life, and individual and communal ethics—reflected this allegiance. While the nations that surrounded Israel worshiped a variety of gods at numerous shrines located all over the landscape, the Israelites (ideally) worshiped one God in one way at one place, the place He would choose. In the Promised Land, God planned to bless the Israelites abundantly. In turn, He expected the Israelites to live responsibly, in a culture unlike any that had preceded it.

12:6 The Hebrew word for sacrifices (zebah) always designates an offering of an animal. Often the word is used to describe a sacrifice offered to the Lord but eaten by the people. The heave offering was a communal offering, which the priest lifted up to signify that it was a gift to the Lord (Ex. 29:27, 28; Lev. 7:34). The priest took his due (Lev. 7:14, 32, 34), while the worshiper and his family ate the rest of the offering. A vowed offering was made in fulfillment of a vow (Lev. 7:16, 17; 22:21; Num. 6:21; 15:3–16; 30:11). A freewill offering was voluntary (Deut. 23:23; Ex. 35:27–29; 36:3; Lev. 7:16; Ezek. 46:12).

12:7 eat … rejoice: The communal offerings were to be eaten and enjoyed by those who offered them. It was a time of celebration before the Lord. blessed: God favored His people by giving them children, flocks, and the crops of the land. His blessing brought vitality, enrichment of life, and happiness to His people.

Do-It-Yourself Religion

In a world in which the motto often is "do your own thing," people frequently develop self-styled religious beliefs and practices. For some this means a pick-and-choose, take-it-or-leave-it approach to established Christianity. For others it means coming up with outlandish ideas about God and eccentric ways of living. Either way, the ultimate authority becomes the individual, who assumes the prerogative of ignoring any demand or discipline that feels too limiting or imposing.

A somewhat similar attitude seems to have characterized the Israelites as they prepared to enter the Promised Land. Apparently they were doing whatever was right in their own eyes when it came to religious observance (Deut. 12:8). Not that they were necessarily turning away from God, but the lack of a permanently located worship center seems to have brought about a degree of laxness in regard to the ritual obligations of the Law. Moses warned them that that must change once they entered the land and God designated a site for worship (12:13, 14). They were to follow the detailed instructions of the Law concerning sacrifices, holy days, tithes and offerings, and other elements of religious life.

Is the same true for Christians today? In answering that, it is important to note that NT instructions and descriptions of worship are not nearly as detailed as those given to Israel in the OT Law. There seems to be a great deal more freedom given to individual believers and to their communities of faith. But that does not mean a do-it-yourself approach to religion. Scripture gives us an objective set of truths to be believed and behaviors to be lived. There may be latitude within those boundaries for cultural, ethnic, and geographic applications, but all believers fall into sin when they move outside the clear teaching of Scripture. In whatever manner we worship God, He still calls us to worship Him "in spirit and truth" (John 4:23).

12:8 every man … own eyes: In the wilderness, the people did not develop a common focus on the Lord and become a body of believers. Moses challenged the new generation to repent and return to the Lord.

12:9, 10 Moses envisioned a future state of rest for the people. Rest would mean that God's people would enjoy His blessings and live together in unity, free from fear of assault (Ps. 133; Jer. 31:2; Heb. 4:8–11).

12:11 The focus and guarantee of the promised rest are found in God dwelling with His people. In like fashion, God still has a "place" today (Heb. 10:24, 25).

12:12–14 You … and the Levite includes all Israelites—women and men, slaves and free, Levites and tribes with land. The Hebrew word for rejoice (smah) describes a deep enjoyment by the entire community of God's good gifts. God gave the Law to the people for their good, even for their enjoyment.

12:15 slaughter … meat: Butchering and eating meat was permitted wherever the Israelites settled. gazelle … deer: Many animals not suited for sacrifice to the Lord were still permitted for food.

12:16 The prohibition of eating or drinking blood in any form was an important restriction. Since blood represented life, the Israelites were to show respect for the vital fluids of animals (Gen. 9:4; Lev. 17:11).

12:17, 18 within your gates: Aspects of God's worship that were designed for community celebration were not to be done in the privacy of the home. Instead, God would designate the place where He would be worshiped. In a similar way, the NT places a strong emphasis on the community of believers. rejoice: God's prohibitions were designed for the mutual pleasure of God and the people.

12:19 The Levite received no tribal inheritance in the land and was dependent on the people for food.

12:20–27 enlarges your border: Moses emphasized the potential greatness of God's blessings on the people. The land might become so large that for many people frequent journeys to the central sanctuary would be impossible. In this case, provisions were made for the enjoyment of meat at home.

12:28 that it may go well: The Lord promised His blessing to all those who responded to His benevolent instructions. and your children: God's blessing extended to the succeeding generations (Gen. 1:27, 28; 9:1, 7; 17:19). Yet the Israelites did not gain their salvation through obedience, instead they found favor with God because of His mercy. He had chosen them to be His people.

12:29–31 The Lord would remove the temptation of the Canaanite nations, but the Israelites were responsible for not imitating their practices (Rom. 12:2; Phil. 2:14–16).

12:29, 30 God cuts off: The conquest was God's, but the Israelites were His responsible agents (v. 2). take heed: Unfortunately, Israel did follow pagan religious ways.

12:31 God hated the Canaanite practices and was concerned that His children would be enticed by them (Lev. 18:21; 20:2–5). Abomination (Heb. to1ba) indicates the strongest form of revulsion and distaste. burn … sons and daughters: This is an example of one of the worst Canaanite practices, in which the Israelites later joined (2 Kin. 21:1–9; 2 Chr. 28:1–4).

12:32—13:18 Regulations guarding God's special revelation.

12:32 not add to it nor take away from it: The Word of God is not subject to whim, taste, or passing fancy.

13:1–5 The dangers of false prophets. The people of God had to be on the alert because false prophets would claim to be true. Thus the Israelites had to discern the intent of the message and the fulfillment of the prophetic words to understand whether it was a true prophet (18:21, 22). In the NT there are also warnings to "test the spirits" (1 John 4:1; compare Acts 20:28–31).

13:1, 2 a prophet or a dreamer: Both prophecy and dreams were legitimate forms of revelation. The fulfillment of a prophecy, a sign, or a wonder ordinarily validated the entire message of the prophet (18:22). let us serve them: Even if a wonder accompanied the message, a prophet who led the people away from the living God was a false prophet. Just like the Israelites, Christians today need to discern false teaching (Acts 20:28–31; Gal. 1:8; 1 John 4:1).

13:3, 4 The revelation of God through Moses was the test of any sign or message. When the message deviated from God's prior revelation, Israel had to discern the false teaching. testing: Just as the Lord had tested the people in the wilderness, He would continue to see whether they believed Him (8:2). love … heart and … soul: True faith is a commitment of one's whole being to the true God.

13:5 The offense was serious and so was the punishment, death. It was better for a false prophet to be executed than for one to escape judgment and mislead the people. So you shall put away the evil from your midst: Discipline, punishment, and testing were God's means of keeping His people pure. Having withstood the test, they could more easily resist the temptations of other evildoers.

13:6–11 The dangers of family pressures. Even when a close relative exerted pressure to leading one astray, the individual had the responsibility to not give in, and to bring it to public trial even if that meant the execution of the offender.

13:6–8 your brothers: Jesus speaks of unnatural hatreds that would pit brother against brother (Matt. 10:21). And He also said that He did not come only for peace. The believer must love Christ more than the members of the family, if there is a conflict within that family that would tend to drive one from Christ (Matt. 10:34–39).

13:9, 10 your hand shall be first: The relative who brought the charge would lead in the capital punishment of the relative who suggested the idolatrous practices. to entice you away: With unforgettable words, Jesus emphasized the severity of this offense. Such a person should not have been born. He would be better off if he were thrown into the sea with a millstone around his neck (Matt. 18:6, 7).

13:11–13 The term translated corrupt men denotes wicked, depraved people who oppose the will and work of God.

13:14 inquire … ask diligently: Proper investigation before a public trial guaranteed justice for everyone.

13:15, 16 strike the inhabitants: The people of the city, who were responsible for letting evil get out of hand, became subject to punishment. They were no better than the immoral Canaanites who were under God's present judgment (7:2; 12:2, 3).

13:17, 18 compassion … to keep all His commandments: The seemingly harsh judgment of evil was an act of obedience. God required the harsh punishment of evildoers so that immoral practices would not spread throughout the land. Then the Israelites could be completely devoted to Him, and He could remain among them and bless them. Sin disrupted this relationship with the Holy God.

14:1 children of the LORD: The motivation for Israel's distinct ethics and practices lay in the nation's special relationship to the Lord (1:31; 8:5). cut … nor shave: Pagan mourning rituals encouraged physical abuse. These practices were a form of magic by which people sought to exercise control over their well-being and over the gods (1 Kin. 18:28).

(Heb. bachar) (Deut. 7:6, 7; 14:2; Neh. 9:7; Is. 14:1; Hag. 2:23) Strong’s #977: The Hebrew word translated chosen implies a decision made after close inspection. In the OT, the word is used to describe the careful action of “selecting” or “accepting.” Sometimes the word is used for the choice of an object (1 Sam. 17:40) or of doing good (Is. 7:15, 16). In the OT, it is often God who chooses. The Lord chose Abraham (Neh. 9:7), the nation of Israel (Deut. 4:37), and finally David’s family (2 Sam. 6:21). He chose, or elected, these people so that He could accomplish His will, the salvation of the world, through them (Is. 49:6). This choice was founded on His own love (Deut. 4:37).

14:2 As a holy people, the Israelites were set apart to the Lord, separated from the nations, and chosen to practice the will of God on earth. The Hebrew word translated holy (qdosh) means “to be separate” or “to be distinct.” chosen … special treasure: Compare 1 Pet. 2:9.

14:3 not eat: The dietary regulations set Israel apart from the nations (Lev. 11). Most likely, God prohibited certain animals from being eaten in order to distinguish the practices of Israel from those of neighboring nations. With this physical sign, God symbolized Israel’s holiness. Israel was dedicated to His purposes, not the world’s. God usually referred to pagan practice as detestable, a word indicating strong repugnance.

14:4–11 Animals prohibited for food either did not have cloven hooves or did not chew the cud (Lev. 11).

14:12–18 These unclean birds were mainly birds of prey and scavengers. They were associated with dead flesh and were likely carriers of disease.

14:19 Creeping thing that flies refers to insects that could not be eaten.

14:20 may eat: Some of God’s laws prohibit, while others permit.

14:21 not boil … in its mother’s milk: Unlike the Canaanites who boiled young goats alive in the milk of their mothers as a sacrifice to fertility gods, Israel was to practice a more humane method of animal sacrifice. Israel was to be different from its neighbors—that is holy.

14:22—15:18 Concrete expressions of various concern for the poor.

14:22–29 The laws of the tithe covered all agricultural products. In giving a tithe (the gift of one tenth to the Lord), the Israelites acknowledged that the land was the Lord's and that the benefits of the land were theirs only because of God's blessing. The tithe was to be enjoyed in the presence of the Lord, unless the people had come from a great distance. Then they could exchange it for silver and purchase food and drink with it in Jerusalem.

14:25–27 Money refers to uncoined silver. Coins were not struck until the Persian period.

14:28, 29 Every third year the tithe was given to the Levites and the poor.

15:1 every seven years: God taught His people to think in cycles of holy time: six days of work and the seventh of rest; six years of business and the seventh of giving freedom to the poor; six years of agricultural cultivation and the seventh of rest (Ex. 23:10, 11; Lev. 25:1–7). Debts were suspended as described in vv. 2–6. All of this shows a humane treatment of people regarding business relations.

15:2, 3 creditor … release it: The debtor could not repay in the seventh year because the fields could not be cultivated (Lev. 25:1–7). If creditors demanded repayment, the poor would sink even further into debt. In this, God showed His care and concern for the poor.

15:4, 5 no poor among you: God promised to bless every individual among His people. only: This promise was conditional. The Israelites had to obey.

15:6 lend … not borrow: God's blessing would bring a surplus. Israel's wealth and prominence among the nations would grow. This occurred during the reign of Solomon. reign over many nations: Instead of being subject to other nations, Israel's position would be that of leader among the nations (Is. 55:4, 5).

15:7, 8 not harden: The people's attitude toward the poor should have been a reflection of their gratitude for God's gifts to them.

15:9, 10 The creditor might have been wary of lending anything to the poor because the seventh year was approaching, the year that all debts were erased. Even though the creditor would not benefit from the loan, he was encouraged to lend to those in need.

15:11 The poor will never cease is a realistic statement compared with the ideal expressed in v. 4 (Matt. 26:11).

15:12, 13 When a poor man lost all his property, he could sell himself for work for six years. let him go free: The year of release canceled debts and freed the debtor (Ex. 21:2).

15:14 supply him liberally: The debtor-slave had been an instrument by which God had blessed the master. Upon the slave's departure, the slave would receive his or her due. In this way, the master acknowledged both the work of the slave and the sovereignty of the Lord.

15:15–18 remember that you were a slave: God's grace to the Israelites in freeing them from Egyptian slavery was a model for all Israelites to follow in relation to the poor. Only when the Israelites remembered their former poverty, thanked God for their riches, and assisted the poor would they be able to enjoy God's gifts to them.

15:19—16:17 Regulations concerning firstborn animals and the three annual pilgrimages. Moses explains how Israel was to be different in their celebrations from the nations around them. These celebrations were reminders of what God had done for them in the past, and they were ways of teaching children the history of redemption. Naturally children asked questions, such as, "Why are we doing this?" And the parents would have a wonderful opportunity to explain God's dealings and goodness toward them.

15:20–23 if there is a defect in it: God expected the best from the Israelites. He was their King, their Father, and their God (Mal. 1:8). To sacrifice one's best to the Lord was a leap of faith. One had to believe that God would bless one's flock despite the absence of its very best.

16:1–17 The requirement of three annual pilgrimages: the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread (vv. 1–8), the Feast of Weeks (vv. 9–12), and the Feast of Tabernacles (vv. 13–15). Read Ex. 23:14–19; 34:18–26; Lev. 23:4–44; Num. 28:16—29:40.

16:1–5 Passover was observed on the fourteenth day (Ex. 12:18) of Abib or Nisan, which corresponds to our March-April. Read Ex. 12:1–28; 13:1–16; Lev. 23:5–8; Num. 28:16–25.

16:6, 7 The twilight sacrifice was in commemoration of the Exodus, which had occurred at that time (Ex. 12:29).

16:8–12 The last day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread was marked by a final sacred assembly of God's people. Putting the sickle to the grain took place on the second day of the Feast of Passover.

16:13–15 The Feast of Tabernacles was a harvest festival (Ex. 23:16; 34:22). During this pilgrimage, God's people joined together to celebrate God's goodness and to remember how they had once lived in tents (tabernacles or booths) during the wilderness wanderings. Today this festival is known as Succoth, from the Hebrew word translated booths. The feast lasted seven days, with a closing ceremony on the eighth (Lev. 23:36).

16:14, 15 rejoice: Sometimes modern people perceive the Israelites' worship as excessively burdened with details, ritual, and regulations, and imagine that the Israelites' worship experience must have been unpleasant. But sincere worshipers rejoiced in God's detailed instructions and enjoyed the symbols and ritual which reminded them of God's delightful characteristics. Then as now, worshiping God was a celebration.

16:16, 17 These verses summarize the regulations for the three annual pilgrimages to the central place of worship (Ex. 23:17; 34:23).

16:18—17:13 The administration of justice, the counter-culture, and the revelation of God. This section has several connected and loosely connected threads that bind it together: (1) justice, (2) leadership, and (3) the worship of God.

16:18 in all your gates: The areas framed by the towers in the gateways of ancient cities were the centers of community life and the places where the judges of the city would sit. just judgment: The Lord loves justice and hates discrimination.

16:19 Justice is the quality of dealing with people fairly. Judges particularly were expected to reflect God's just nature (32:4) by not dealing with the accused on the basis of discrimination, false witness, or hearsay. A bribe is any gift that might change the balance in favor of the giver, thus tipping the scales of justice (Ex. 23:8).

16:20 follow: Godliness is to imitate God in a love for what is just and true. Altogether just in the Hebrew is sedeq sedeq, repeated twice to stress its importance here. live and inherit: God's intention in all His instructions was for the good of His people.

16:21, 22 The Canaanites used certain trees and wooden images as representations of fertility gods. The Hebrew word translated wooden image is the Hebrew name for the Canaanite goddess of fertility, Asherah.

17:1 Sacrifice in Israel was never to be regarded as a means of dumping the unwanted or the unneeded. It showed faith that as one gave one's best to the Lord, He would make what remained suitable and plentiful for one's needs.

17:2, 3 The Hebrew verb for transgressing (abar) is used elsewhere to indicate the crossing of a border or a stream. Here the word is used to indicate "crossing over" the boundaries that God had set for His people. Someone who served other gods had crossed over the boundary set by the first commandment.

17:4–6 inquire diligently: An investigation, rather than gossip, determined the truth of any report of idolatry. The guilty was condemned to death only after guilt was established by two or three witnesses (compare Matt. 18:16; 2 Cor. 13:1; 1 Tim. 5:19; Heb. 10:28). The First Commandment was not limited by gender. Either a man or woman could be executed for this crime against God.

17:7 hands … first: The witnesses participated in the stoning of the guilty because they were responsible for the person's condemnation. Jesus' words about throwing the "first stone" referred to this practice (John 8:7).

17:8 The more complex cases were sent to a higher court. Degrees of guilt refers to cases of manslaughter or murder—that is, accidental or intentional homicide.

17:9–11 The descendants of the family of Aaron were the priests of Israel. The Levites were the other descendants of Levi, who served in the tabernacle.

17:12 The man who acts presumptuously is one who knows, but turns away from priestly instructions.

17:13 To hear God is to acknowledge Him, to respond to Him, and to obey Him (6:4). To fear God is to reverence Him and to worship Him (6:2). The idea here is responsible reverence (13:11; 19:20; 21:21).

17:14—18:22 Leadership and the revelation of God. In these various laws, Moses defines the place of the community officers, judges, priest-levites, kings, and prophets in the covenant fellowship. He foresees potential problems in the people's willingness to submit to the Lord. The laws provide a broad framework within which the community could develop under good leadership.

17:14 The regulations that follow anticipate the request that the Israelites would make for a king. At the time of Moses, Israel was privileged in being different from the nations because God was their King (Ex. 15:18; Num. 23:21). As problems arose during the period of the judges, some attempted to establish a kingship (Judg. 9:1–6). Gideon refused such an offer (Judg. 8:23). With Saul's kingship, God finally granted Israel's request for a national king (1 Sam. 8:4–9). Although Saul's reign ended in disaster, the Lord chose to anoint David and promise him a lasting kingship (2 Sam. 7:16; Ps. 89:3, 4).

17:15–17 These regulations limited the power and splendor of the future king. He would not be dependent on military power and riches. He was exhorted not to entangle the nation in political alliances that would expose Israel to pagan worship. Instead, he was exhorted to guide the nation into obedience to God's Law.

“write”

(Heb. katab) (Deut. 6:9; 11:20; 17:18; 27:8) Strong’s #3789. This verb literally means “to engrave or inscribe.” Many different types of writing are mentioned in the OT. Stone tablets were inscribed on by God Himself (Ex. 34:1), scrolls were written (Jer. 36:2), stone and wood monuments often had writing carved on their surfaces (Josh. 8:32; Ezek. 37:20), even metals and gemstones were engraved (Ex. 28:11; 39:30). Since writing was a way to preserve the memory of historical events (Esth. 6:2; 10:2) and to give authority to human speech (2 Sam 11:14, 15), writing also suggests permanence. Thus the fact that Moses was commanded to write down God’s words implies that those words are unalterable and fixed (Ex. 17:14; 34:27). The writings of Moses and the prophets were to be lasting reminders of God’s revelation to both Israel’s kings (as in 17:18) and all of God’s people throughout the centuries.

17:18 a copy of this law: The true king of Israel would be bound to God’s instructions. He would not be a tyrant, but a king who ruled in accordance with God’s revealed will.

17:19, 20 fear: Only if the king lived in proper reverence of God would the people follow suit. If the king were impious, the people’s decline into evil practices would be accelerated. heart may not be lifted: By reading and obeying God’s law, the king would be reminded that he was to be a man of the people. He was no different than anyone else, except that God had chosen Him to guide the nation in righteousness.

18:1 A portion of the dedication offerings was taken by the priests for their sustenance.

18:2–4 Unlike the other tribes, the Levites did not have a land inheritance in Canaan. They were to regard God as their inheritance. In other words, they had a special relationship with God that would be better than any grant of property. (Obviously, the Levites enjoyed the benefits of the lands surrounding the Levitical villages, v. 8.) 18:5 to minister: The priests were God's servants mediating between Him and the people (10:8; 21:5).

18:6 All the desire of his mind indicates wholehearted devotion. The suggestion is that there might have been people from the tribe of Levi who were not worthy to minister before the Lord. Their ancestry alone could not qualify them.

18:7 To serve in the name Yahweh was to experience more of the fullness of deity, His nearness, His goodness, His grace, and to be more aware of His holiness.

18:8 equal portions: The priests and Levites, who served before the Lord, were honored for that noble work.

18:9–14 False forms of revelation can come in the form of mantic and magic practices. Mantic (the use of animal divination) is an attempt to control the future by inquiring about the meaning of a particular sign, object, or dream. Mantic divination is an attempt to control people or events by special powers or rituals. All forms of mantic and magic were rejected as abominable because they sought guidance apart from God's revelation and manipulated people, and because in the end they encouraged an independent lifestyle with little regard for God. The most notable of the mantics of the ancient world was Balaam (Num. 22—25; 31).

18:10, 11 Some ancient pagan customs demanded that a son or daughter be offered as a sacrifice in order to learn about the future or to seek favor from a supposed deity. calls up the dead: Apart from His revelation, God prohibited any attempts to know the future. Saul's attempt to seek guidance apart from God's Word resulted in God's judgment of him (1 Sam. 28).

Seduction by Spirits sIt is often said that "curiosity killed the cat." One curiosity not worth risking one's life over is the mystery of magic and the spirit world. God's Law spoke very clearly about the attraction of divination, witchcraft, mediums, oracles, and soothsayers: it called them "abominations" (Deut. 18:9–12].

18:12 The pagan practices were an abomination to the LORD because they were based on an attempt to circumvent His revelation. The Lord is never a god among others; He alone is God!

18:13 Blameless indicates integrity and dependence on the Lord alone. Blamelessness characterized Abraham's life (Gen. 17:1) and is still the standard for Christians today (Eph. 1:4; 5:27).

18:14 Israel was to be distinct among the nations, a holy people, not only in what they ate but also in their faith toward God.

18:15–22 Regulations pertaining to the prophets. The Lord promises Israel that He will send them another prophet like Moses. This applies to all true prophets in that they were all God's spokespersons. The prophets were characterized by seven qualities: he or she was (1) an Israelite; (2) called by the Lord; (3) empowered by the Holy Spirit; (4) God's spokesperson; (5) authorized to speak in the name of the Lord; (6) a good shepherd over God's people; and (7) authenticated by signs. Yet, Jesus Christ was the true fulfillment of this prophecy. Jesus like Moses was the mediator between God and man (vv. 16, 17; Heb. 9:15; 12:24). But Jesus was unlike Moses, being the Son of God (John 1:21, 25, 45; 5:46; 6:14; 7:40; Acts 3:22, 23; 7:37). When Moses died, there was the hope for another like him, yet greater than him (34:9–12).

18:15 All true prophets among the Hebrew people were raised up by the Lord. None could become a true prophet by self-will or desire.

18:16–22 does not happen: The test of a true prophet was the fulfillment of his words. However, there was one type of prophecy announced by a true prophet that might not occur. A prophecy of divine judgment might be averted because of the people's repentance in response to the proclamation. Both Jonah and Micah experienced this.

19:1—21:14 The administration of justice and the rules of war. God teaches His people to reflect justice in all situations, private, communal, and national.

19:1 Deuteronomy was written in anticipation of the conquest of Canaan, God's gift to His people. The cities of the land would become the possession of the people of Israel. The Israelites were not to destroy the cities in conquest, but to destroy the people who lived in them by waging war on the battlefield. Only Jericho and Hazor were to be burned. The burning of Ai was a consequence of sin.

19:2 Three cities of refuge would be selected in Canaan, to be added to the three that were east of the Jordan.

19:3, 4 The cities of refuge were intertribal cities. Anyone from any tribe could flee to the city that was closest to him. manslayer: Use of these cities for refuge was restricted to cases of unintentional homicide.

19:5 goes to the woods: An example is given of a situation that might lead to unintentional homicide.

19:6, 7 The avenger of blood was possibly a relative commissioned by the elders of the city to execute justice. This Hebrew word sometimes translated kinsman redeemer and here translated avenger means "protector of family rights." This was the individual who stood up for the family, either to redeem property and persons or to obtain vengeance. The glory of Israel was that its Avenger and Kinsman Redeemer was God Himself (Is. 41:14).

19:8, 9 enlarges your territory: God placed before the people not only the immediate prospect of the conquest of Canaan, but also the expansion of territory beyond the initial borders (12:20).

19:10 The shedding of innocent blood brought the guilt of bloodshed on the land. As in the case of Abel, whose innocent blood cried out to the Lord from the ground (Gen. 4:10), a nation of murderers would come under the judgment of God.

19:11, 12 For a person guilty of premeditated murder, there was no provision for refuge in the cities. He would be delivered over to the avenger of blood.

19:13 That it may go well with you indicates that God's concern was for the good of the community.

19:14 Removing a landmark was far more than moving a stone. It was changing a property line and in effect cheating some family out of the inheritance of land that God had given them.

19:15 Requiring two or three witnesses was a safeguard against the dangerous lies of an individual.

19:16, 17 The prospect of a false witness was chilling, particularly if it was a matter of one person's word against another's. before the LORD: At the tabernacle, the place of the higher court, the God of all truth would reveal the liar (17:8–13).

19:18–21 life … for life … foot for foot: The law of retribution established the principle that the punishment should fit the crime (Ex. 21:23–25; Lev. 24:17–20). The greater the crime, the harsher the penalty.

20:1–9 The exemptions indicate God's compassion for people whose minds are somewhere else (home, vineyard, wife) or whose hearts are not with Him (fear). This is a principle of understanding.

20:1–3 The Lord's presence is much greater than the enemy's military advantage of horses and chariots (Ps. 20:7). God the Divine Warrior would fight for His people (Ex. 15:3).

20:4 The use of the covenantal name for God, the LORD, Yahweh, along with the relational phrasing, your God, is designed to give the people confidence and assurance.

20:5 The owner of a new house was exempt from battle duty. dedicate it: This was not a formal ceremony, but the act of occupying a house.

20:6 The vinedresser was exempt from battle. It took as many as five years for a vineyard to begin to produce. A man who had waited for several years for the first produce from his vines was allowed to oversee the vines until they produced grapes.

20:7 betrothed: Betrothal was a commitment to be married; it was more binding than an engagement today. The betrothed man was exempt from battle. This exemption also applied to the newly married (24:5).

20:8, 9 fearful and fainthearted: The man who was nervous or who did not trust the Lord (v. 3) was exempt from battle. Since the battle was God's, the number of warriors was not nearly as important as the army's belief that God was fighting for them.

20:10–15 Policy for cities far away. These laws detail the process of negotiations, subjugation, war, and spoils.

20:10, 11 This offer of peace specified that the people surrender, open up the city, and accept whatever conditions were laid down. serve you: The people of the city would become second-class citizens, on whom the Israelites could impose taxes and labor requirements.

20:12 not make peace: Some cities would refuse the terms of the treaty and come out in battle, as Sihon did.

20:13, 14 The reprisals for refusal were severe. strike every male: The men of war of the city were to be killed, for they posed a threat as long as they were able to bear arms. Women and little ones were to be spared, though they would become the property of the victors.

20:15, 16 The rules of the spoil (vv. 13, 14) applied only to distant cities. Different rules applied to the cities of Canaan (vv. 17, 18). They were to destroy the people of Canaan as part of God's judgment on those immoral peoples. But of the cities of these peoples: The people who lived in Canaan had practiced disgusting religious and social perversions for centuries. God had given them time to repent, but their judgment had come.

20:17, 18 utterly destroy: The Hebrew text uses two forms of the same verb to emphasize complete destruction of the Canaanites. This was not just a symbolic war; the entire Canaanite population was to be destroyed.

20:18 lest they teach you: The principal concern of the Lord was for the welfare of His people. The Canaanite population in the land was like a deadly tumor that eats away at the body. If the tumor was cut out, the body could live. So it was with the Canaanites. If the Canaanites were cut out of the land, the Israelites could thrive in the land by obeying God. Otherwise, the immoral Canaanite practices might slowly spread throughout the land.

20:19, 20 Trees, a part of God's creation, were useful for food, shade, and building material. In a long siege, the armies of Israel were not to cut down the trees and destroy the land. Only non-fruit-bearing trees were to be used for making siege machines.

21:1, 2 killed: The death may have been due to accidental or intentional homicide. This is a case of unsolved murder. measure the distance: As in our own day, the question of jurisdiction was important in criminal cases.

21:3, 4 heifer: The people of the nearest city were responsible for initiating a rite that established the people's innocence of the murder.

21:5–7 The elders of the city bore the responsibility for the murder, even though they were not personally guilty. It was up to them to seek atonement for the murder.

21:8 Breaking the heifer's neck did not provide atonement. It was symbolic of the horrendous crime. God Himself graciously forgave.

21:9 Killing an innocent person was an extremely serious offense in ancient Israel. Unless the crime was solved or the rite was performed, there would be no real rest for the community.

21:10–14 Taking wives from among captive peoples was a common practice the world over. But in Israel God regulated the practice, working toward a principle of human dignity.

21:10, 11 Presumably the enemies were from distant cities (20:13–15), since the Israelites took captives. God had commanded the utter destruction of enemies within the Promised Land.

21:12 shave her head: This ritual was intended to give the woman time to adjust to the new culture and to mourn over the forceful separation from her family. It was also a symbol of cleansing. She was preparing to become part of a new community.

21:13 Since a foreign woman's distinctive clothes might have associations with the idolatrous practices of her former family, these clothes were taken from her. The woman was about to become part of God's covenant community. She was not allowed to keep anything that she might use to tempt the Israelites to worship false gods. your wife: After these precautions, the captive woman was given the status of any other married woman in Israel.

21:14 if you have no delight in her: The reason is not stated. The man might have experienced rejection in the marriage relationship. Perhaps the woman would not convert to the true worship of the Lord. Perhaps she was unable to conceive a child. In any event, the man was given permission to divorce her or set her free. you have humbled her: The woman had been dishonored by removal from her country and compulsory marriage. She was to be treated with some dignity in the event of an incompatible marriage.

21:15—25:19 In these regulations Moses summarizes and develops the place of the individual in relation to the community. The individual is responsible for the preservation of purity, justice, and compassion of the community.

21:15 two wives: Polygamy was commonly practiced in the cultures of the ancient Middle East and was assumed in the Law of Moses. In some cases, polygamy may have been a necessity in ancient Israel (25:5–10).

21:16 A father was expected to show consideration for the firstborn child, regardless of his attitude toward the child's mother.

21:17 Ancient Middle Eastern custom approved preferential treatment of the firstborn son. The double portion was a mark of the father's blessing. Among the sons of Jacob, it was actually Joseph who received the double portion (Gen. 48:8–22; 49:22–26). Reuben had forfeited his right as the firstborn by his disreputable behavior (Gen. 49:3, 4).

21:18 The stubborn and rebellious son was not an "ordinary" rebellious youth, but one who had been immoral over a long period of time.

21:19 his father and his mother: The parents were responsible to the community for their children. The elders bore the responsibility for the actions of the community as a whole.

21:20 they shall say: The parents presented the charge, though the behavior of the child would undoubtedly have been widely known. A glutton and a drunkard is an expression for "a good-for-nothing."

21:21 All the men of the community shared in the responsibility for executing the rebellious youth. Capital punishment seems harsh to the modern reader. Yet the community could not allow the rebellious youth to spread his immoral practices. They were God's holy people.

21:22, 23 hang: The guilty person was not hanged by the neck; this form of execution was not practiced in ancient Israel. The hanging was actually an impaling of the corpse for public viewing after death by stoning. Everyone would know that individual had brought guilt on the community. The exposure of the corpse was limited to one day. For that day, it reminded people of God's judgment on the sinner.

22:1–4 Love is shown in taking care of a neighbor's property and providing help.

22:1 hide yourself from them: Israelites could not ignore problems or misfortunes of their neighbors. Every individual in the community bore a responsibility to uphold justice within that community (compare Gal. 6:2).

22:2, 3 it shall remain with you: Community responsibility included taking care of lost property, whether animals or objects. Hide yourself means to ignore the problem or turn away.

22:4 Rendering assistance demonstrated a concrete expression of covenant life. The verbal construction translated surely help is emphatic in the original.

22:5 Cross-dressing was forbidden by God in ancient Israel. In the ancient Middle East, dressing in the clothing of the opposite sex was a magical practice intended to bring harm to people. For example, a transvestite male would predict that the soldiers of another army would be as weak as females.

22:6, 7 The eggs or young of a nest could be eaten for food. But the mother had to be freed because she perpetuated the species.

22:8 A parapet was a barrier erected on a roof to keep people from stepping or falling off. The roof of an ancient Israelite house was used like another room, particularly during warm weather.

22:9–12 Most likely, these regulations were based on the same principle as that of dietary restrictions. The Israelites were to be different from their neighbors in all aspects of life in order to show their separation to the living God.

22:13 Detests indicates a loathing following the consummation of the marriage because the husband found out that his new bride was not a virgin.

22:14 Charges her indicates a public accusation. In ancient times, virginity was highly regarded. The indisputable legitimacy of children was vital to ancient society and inheritance rights. Joseph's actions when he learned of Mary's pregnancy can be explained by these laws (Matt. 1:18–25). Because of Joseph's love for Mary, he did not want to make a public accusation. At the same time, he was not prepared to marry a woman who he thought had been immoral.

22:15–17 The father and mother would come to defend the girl and protect their name.

22:18, 19 A false accusation would be punished. A man was not permitted to bring a frivolous charge against his wife. Compare the penalty for a false accusation with the penalty recorded in v. 29.

22:20, 21 If the woman was not a virgin, she would be punished for her immorality. the door of her father's house: The parents also shared in her punishment. They were publicly disgraced because they did not dissuade her from such actions.

22:22 Both the man and the woman had to die (Lev. 18:20; 20:10).

22:23, 24 bring them both out: Both parties were presumed guilty in this instance. In this situation, the woman could have screamed for help since she was in a city. The gate of the city was the place for legal proceedings and executions.

22:25–27 no sin deserving of death: The woman was presumed innocent by virtue of the isolated place where she could not receive help no matter how much she resisted.

22:28, 29 This law warned young men that they would be made responsible for their actions. A young woman was not freely available merely because she was not betrothed.

22:30 Uncover his father's bed is a euphemism for sexual relations (Lev. 18:8). This was the sin of Reuben, who slept with the mother of his brothers (Gen. 35:22).

23:1 Emasculated means that all or part of the sexual organs had been removed. This was done to men who were put in charge of harems to prevent intercourse with the women. It was also a pagan religious practice. Genital mutilation was prohibited in Israel. Assembly of the LORD indicates the people on whom the Lord had bestowed His special grace, with whom He had made a covenant, and to whom He had given the promises. In Deuteronomy, the word often refers to those gathered before Sinai (5:22; 9:10; 18:16). Exclusion from the assembly means restriction from full participation in religious rites.

23:2 Illegitimate birth may refer to the offspring of an illicit cultic union, such as the child of a temple prostitute (vv. 17, 18). The tenth generation most likely means "forever."

23:3–5 Since the Ammonites and Moabites showed hostility to the Israelites, they were not allowed to become citizens and participate in the worship of the Lord (Num. 22—24). curse you: God's loyalty to His people would not allow Him to listen to Balaam. Instead, the Lord turned Balaam's curse into His own blessing on the Israelites. Here, the Lord excluded those who had sought to curse the Israelites from full participation in the community of faith.

23:6, 7 You shall not seek their peace is a prohibition against making any treaty with these nations. Moab and Ammon were persistent enemies of Israel.

23:8 third generation: While the people of Moab and Ammon were excluded from the congregation, the people of Edom and Egypt had an opportunity to join the true worshipers of the living God. The provision for the Egyptians might have been due to their initial kindness to Jacob's family in letting them move to Goshen (Gen. 47). The provision for the Edomites was based on the close ties they had with the Israelites. They were descendants of Jacob's brother, Esau.

23:9–11 A wicked thing was a cause for individual and communal uncleanness. Soldiers had to maintain their purity, for the Holy One was in their camp. Unclean by some occurrence in the night possibly refers to an involuntary emission (Lev. 15:16) or urination. Even though God's standards for purity were high, He provided a way for an unclean person to become clean. The person could go outside the camp until the next evening and wash.

23:12, 13 Digging latrines was a part of military life. Such attention to cleanliness not only promoted ritual purity, but also proper hygiene to prevent disease from spreading through the camp.

23:14 your God walks in the midst of your camp: The Holy One was present with Israel's soldiers whenever they went to war. It would never do for His soldiers to tolerate unhealthy living conditions in camp.

23:15, 16 The slave presumably entered Israel's territory from another country.

23:17 The Hebrew word translated here as ritual harlot (qedsha) is a form of the word meaning "holy" or "separate" (qdash).The ritual harlot was regarded by the Canaanites as one "set apart" for the worship of gods and goddesses of fertility. In Canaanite religious fertility rites, men lay with cultic prostitutes. The Canaanites believed that this act would bring fertility to their families, fruitful fields, and growth of their herds. This debased system of worship was evidently one of the reasons God brought such strong judgment against the Canaanites. The perverted one was a male prostitute.

23:18 Harlot here (Heb. zona) describes a common prostitute.

23:19, 20 Interest in the ancient Middle East was very high. Borrowing inevitably led to greater debt and sometimes to the enslavement of the debtor (Ex. 22:25–27; Lev. 25:36). Your brother refers to a fellow Israelite.

23:21, 22 A vow was a commitment to show one's love for the Lord in a particular way. Though a vow was voluntary, one was obligated to fulfill it once it was made. God expected His people to keep their commitments (compare Matt. 5:37). A failure to fulfill a vow was regarded as sin (Eccl. 5:4–6). But vowing was purely voluntary and not necessary for the development of godliness.

23:23–25 A traveler was permitted to eat grapes or grain while passing a field, but harvesting or storing the food for use at a later time was clearly prohibited. When Jesus and His disciples picked grain in open fields, they were following the common practice allowed by this regulation. However, the Pharisees challenged Jesus because they did it on the Sabbath (Mark 2:23–28).

“divorce”

(Heb. kerithuth) (Deut. 24:1, 3; Is. 50:1; Jer. 3:8) Strong’s #3748: This legal term signifies “a bill of divorce” and is related to the verb karat which means “to cut down” or “to cut off.” The OT teaches that God hates divorce because it severs the oneness of the marriage relationship and the covenant between the husband and wife (Mal. 2:14–16). Jesus indicates that God permitted divorce in OT times only because the people were stubborn and sinful (Matt. 19:8). The divorce regulations in the OT protected the divorced woman. They allowed her to return to her parents with dignity or to seek a legal remarriage, instead of resorting to slavery or prostitution for her livelihood.

24:1–4 The case involves a divorcee's return to her first husband after she had been married to a second man.

24:1, 2 uncleanness: The nature of the problem is not specified, though it would have been clear in the original context. It could have been a physical problem, such as the inability to bear children. The certificate of divorce was a legal document that provided rights to the divorcee (Lev. 21:7, 14; 22:13; Num. 30:9; Matt. 19:3–9). Such a certificate allowed the woman to remarry.

24:3, 4 defiled: Returning to her first husband after an intervening marriage might have placed the woman in the same position as an unfaithful wife.

24:5, 6 A millstone was a stone used for grinding grain into flour. The combination of the two stones constituted an essential household instrument for the daily provision of food. The principle is clear: A family was not to be deprived of the necessities of daily life.

24:7–9 Leprosy refers to a variety of infectious skin diseases. The disease known today as leprosy, Hansen's disease, is different from the diseases referred to here.

24:10–13 A pledge was a token that a debt would be repaid. Since this involved the poor within the covenant community, the regulations protected the debtor's privacy (vv. 10, 11) and ability to provide for his family (vv. 12, 13).

24:14, 15 The following laws allowed property owners and laborers to receive a due profit from their properties and their labor. At the same time, both the owners and the laborers were to resist any greedy actions that would prevent a reasonable provision for the disadvantaged people in their communities. For instance, the poor needed daily payment of wages for daily subsistence. To be able to pay their wages and not do so was a sin against the Lord.

24:14–22 These regulations concerning these people—the stranger, the fatherless, the widow—are the three classic cases of the disadvantaged in the OT period. Each needed a defender. The righteous person should regard himself as an agent of God to protect the disadvantaged.

24:16, 17 Ezekiel applied this principle to the exilic community (Ezek. 18:4).

24:18–22 The passage exhorts the Israelites to remember their people's own slavery in Egypt (v. 22). Just as God showed compassion on them when they were oppressed (15:15), they were to show compassion on those who were now disadvantaged. God may bless: Ultimately, it is in one's own best interest to have a concern for the interest of others.

25:1–3 A rod was probably used for the beating (Ex. 21:20). Forty blows: Later Jewish law restricted the number to forty minus one (2 Cor. 11:24) to make sure that the authorities remained within the set limits. brother be humiliated: The offender was still a brother whose dignity in the community was to be preserved.

25:4 not muzzle an ox: Muzzling kept the animal from eating while it worked. This law encouraged kindness and consideration for animals. Later the apostle Paul used this law as an analogy to the principle of supporting ministers of the gospel (1 Cor. 9:9, 10; 1 Tim. 5:17, 18).

25:5–10 This law assured the perpetuity of the family name and of family property. This is an example of a custom in ancient Near Eastern law that was adapted for Israel and incorporated into the divine instructions for Israel.

25:5 The ancients greatly feared having no heirs to carry on the family's name. Furthermore, a widow with no children to take care of her would quickly become a beggar. Taking a brother's widow as a second wife protected her and preserved the name, memory, and interests of the deceased brother. The dead brother would be acknowledged as the legal father of the firstborn son of that marriage. This practice is called levirate marriage, from the Latin word for brother-in-law.

25:6 The deceased brother would be acknowledged as the "official" father of the child. The preservation of one's name was of utmost importance in ancient Israel. Ultimately, the preservation of one's name was a part of the grand, over-arching Messianic hope that threads its way through all aspects of Israel's history.

25:7–10 For his own reasons, a man might decide not to fulfill these obligations (Gen. 38:8–10). he will not perform: Legally, the brother-in-law was bound to keep the family name alive. His refusal was not merely a private matter, but also a public issue. For his insistence on his rights over the widow's rights he deserved to be publicly disgraced.

25:8 The accusation of the widow had to be validated by the elders of the city.

25:9, 10 To remove one's sandal was a sign of the loss of one's rights in the community; perhaps it was also a loss of the right to walk on one's own land (Ruth 4:7). To spit in someone's face was an act of strong, public contempt. Such a public disgrace discouraged men from shrinking from their duty as a brother-in-law. Since the living brother refused to maintain the name of his deceased brother, he was in danger of losing the memory of his own name in the community.

25:11–14 A merchant could defraud a customer by using different-sized weights, depending on whether he was selling or buying, to tilt the scales to his advantage (Amos 8:5).

25:15 Perfect and just refers to weights that were exact.

25:16 The opposite of conforming to a standard is “unrighteousness.”

25:17, 18 Israel was to tell the story of what Amalek had done and never forget it (Ex. 17:8–16; Num. 14:39–45). He did not fear God is a way of saying that he had no regard for the special status of God’s people.

25:19 blot out the remembrance of Amalek: The Amalekites would in effect come under the ban which God had placed over the people of Canaan (Lev. 27:29; Josh. 6:17, 18).

26:1 into the land: The author of Deuteronomy is always anticipating God's gift of Canaan to the Israelites (19:1).

26:2 The Israelites were to offer to God the fruit that ripened first, even though there was always a possibility that the rest of the crop would not ripen or be harvested because of some unforeseen circumstance. By offering the first of the produce to the Lord, the people expressed their trust in God's provision and their gratitude for His good gifts.

26:3 I have come: During the years that the people were in Egypt, whatever they raised was on soil that did not belong to them. During the years that they were in the wilderness, they were away from fertile land on which to grow things. But in the land that God planned to give them, crops, orchards, and vineyards would be theirs to enjoy. God had exceedingly blessed them, and they were to express their thanks.

26:4 Even before the temple was built, there was always an altar for sacrifices.

26:5–8 These words became part of the litany of the Passover Seder service, the Haggadah (recitation). The recital of these words formed a wonderful celebration of God's great deliverance of Israel from Egypt, not unlike the Christian recital of a creed or confession of faith.

26:5 My father was a Syrian (Aramean) is a reference to Jacob, whose parents' ancestral home was in Aram (Gen. 24:1–10). about to perish: Jacob's family suffered from the famine that struck Canaan, and they survived by fleeing to Egypt (Gen. 46:3–7). few in number: Jacob's family numbered seventy when they moved to Egypt (Gen. 46:8–27; Ex. 1:1–5). A nation, great, mighty, and populous is a reference to the great increase God gave His people while they were in Egypt (Ex. 1:5, 7).

26:6, 7 the LORD heard: God's response to His people was one of the great manifestations of His grace, mercy, and care (Ex. 2:23–25). He cared enough to answer their cries.

26:8 mighty hand … outstretched arm: This phrasing celebrates the direct involvement of the Lord in the salvation of the Israelites from slavery. terror … signs and wonders: This phrasing is regularly repeated to describe God's miraculous works during the Exodus (4:34; 34:11, 12). God with His own hand demonstrated His power to the Egyptians and delivered the Israelites.

“worship”

(Heb. shachah) (Deut. 26:10; Gen. 23:7; 37:7, Lev. 26:1) Strong’s #7812: The most common Hebrew word for worship literally means “to cause oneself to lie prostrate.” In ancient times, a person would fall down before someone who possessed a higher status. People would bow before a king to express complete submission to his rule. Joseph’s brothers recognized the cultural significance of “bowing down” when they reacted so vehemently against Joseph’s dream (Gen. 37:5–8). Bowing down to Joseph meant they were submitting to his authority. Following the example of the ancient people of faith, true Christian worship must express more than love for God, it must also express submission to His will.

26:9, 10 I have brought the firstfruits: The worshiper needed to say aloud what he was doing as he did it. Doing this added solemnity and dignity to the offering.

26:11, 12 and the stranger: When people came to live with Israel in the land, they were instructed in the worship of God.

26:13, 14 you shall say: As in the case of the firstfruits (vv. 1–11), the spoken word accompanied the act to reinforce the significance and purpose of the offering. I have not: The worshiper was to acknowledge that nothing had been held back or used for selfish reasons.

26:15 Your holy habitation: People direct their prayers to heaven, acknowledging at the same time that God is everywhere (Is. 66:1, 2).

26:16–19 The final exhortation of Moses. These verses conclude the legal corpus of Deuteronomy (12:1—26:19) in which Moses developed and applied the laws of the Book of the Covenant to a new situation, as Israel was about to enter the land. It is also an appropriate anticipation of the next section with its focus on covenant renewal (27:1—30:20).

26:16 The demands of obedience are found throughout Deuteronomy. To observe or do the will of God was not meant to be the means by which a person would be made righteous before God. Instead it would be part of a loving response to God’s gracious covenant. all your heart and … soul: This is also a regular emphasis in Deuteronomy, a command to the whole person to respond fully to God.

26:17 The first generation had declared their loyalty to God at Mount Sinai (Ex. 24:7). In this covenant renewal ceremony, the new generation confirmed their commitment to God. To confess that the Lord was their God implied a commitment to live by His revelation.

26:18 The Hebrew word for special people speaks of God's great delight and pleasure in His people. They are like a very special jewel, an adornment that He treasures. The word denotes an elect people, set apart by the Lord to Himself, committed to the Lord and His revelation, and exalted above the nations (Ex. 19:5; Mal. 3:17).

26:19 Closeness to the Lord meant separation from the nations. in praise … in honor: The future of God's people was in His hands. He had promised to bestow honor on them (compare Gen. 12:2, 3; Is. 60; Rom. 8:18, 19). In a similar manner, the Lord has lifted up the people of His church, separating them from the nations and regarding them as a holy people (1 Pet. 2:9).

27:1–26 The renewal of the covenant in Canaan under Joshua.

27:1 The elders of Israel joined Moses at this point. This joint declaration demonstrated the validity of God's revelation through Moses, even after Moses' death.

27:2, 3 The large stones were memorial stones on which the Law of God was to be written (v. 8). whitewash them with lime: These stones were coated with a plaster background so that the writing would be more visible.

27:4 Mount Ebal was north of Mount Gerizim (vv. 12, 13). Between the two mountains was the city of Shechem (Gen. 12:6, 7; 33:18–20). Shechem and its two mountains are roughly in the center of the land of Canaan.

27:5 altar of stones: The Lord gave the Israelites specific instructions on how they could approach Him. Forging iron was not a skill as characteristic of Israel as of some other Middle Eastern peoples. The Lord rejected an impressive altar for a humble altar of whole stones, that is, uncut stones. Perhaps an impressive altar would have diverted the worshipers' attention from God (Ex. 20:25).

“burnt offering”

(Heb. olah) (12:6; 27:6) Strong’s #5930: In Hebrew, this word means “holocaust,” an offering that is completely destroyed by fire. By burning the best of their offerings on God’s altar, the Israelites expressed their dedication and gratitude to God, who had supplied all their needs. Many different types of burnt offerings were offered: bulls (Lev. 1:3–5), sheep or goats (Lev. 1:10), and birds (Lev. 1:14). If the burnt offering was presented as a sin offering, the worshiper would place his hands on the animal’s head to show the transfer of sin to the animal. The animal was then killed by the priest. The priest collected the animal’s blood and presented it to the Lord by sprinkling it on the altar. Pieces of the sacrifice were then placed on the alter and completely burned. These sacrifices were necessary until Christ offered Himself as a sacrifice for the sins of all.

27:6–10 Whole stones refers to stones not cut by tools.

Mount Ebal, where threatened curses were pronounced against the Israelites at Moses' command if they failed to obey the Lord (Deut. 27:11–26).

27:11–14 During the covenant renewal ceremony with the second generation of Israel, the Lord used the topography of the land for dramatic visual effect. Mount Ebal, because of topographical and climatic conditions, is normally a barren peak, while Mount Gerizim is usually covered with vegetation. Consequently, Mount Ebal was an ideal place for the curses to be recited, and Mount Gerizim was suitable for the blessings. The association of the place and the word would have been unforgettable. Furthermore, the two mountains are quite close, so they would serve as a natural amphitheater for the recitation of the curses and blessings by the Levites.

27:15, 16 The first curse pertained to idolatry. A carved or molded image defied the first or second commandment or both (5:7–9). Amen was an expression of approval and submission to God's Word. This Hebrew word, from a root meaning "to be established," likely has gone into all languages where the gospel has gone. The reader will observe that the people of Israel said "Amen" to each of the twelve curses (and, presumably, to each of the subsequent twelve blessings). This gives a biblical pattern for the use of "Amen" in our own public worship. At times we may hear people saying “Amen” frivolously, but the biblical use was a formal statement of assent to the living God.

27:17 The third curse pertained to justice and greed. landmark: Moving the stone with the intent of extending the boundary of one’s land enhanced one’s own personal prosperity at the expense of someone else (19:14).

27:18 The fourth curse required the humane treatment of disabled people. blind: The underlying assumption is that only a person of great cruelty and no love for God would take advantage of a disabled person.

27:19 The fifth curse had to do with compassion to those who were defenseless. The stranger, the fatherless, and widow did not have the legal and social resources to defend themselves.

27:20–23 The sixth through the ninth curses covered sexual morality. Sexual relations with animals (bestiality) and incest were strictly prohibited (Ex. 22:19; Lev. 18:23; 20:15, 16).

27:24, 25 The tenth and eleventh curses addressed justice when a homicide occurred. secretly: The murderer might have escaped detection, but God saw his vile act. bribe … innocent person: Both a hired assassin and the person who did the hiring would have been guilty.

27:26 The twelfth curse was an all-encompassing one. A curse was on anyone who broke any part of the law. The Lord expected not only full submission to the law, but also a love for Him. Paul quoted this verse to emphasize the impossibility of keeping the law (Gal. 3:10). The blessings that would have corresponded to these twelve curses are not recorded here.

28:1–9 This passage repeatedly emphasizes the Israelites' responsibility to obey. if you diligently obey: Israel could never earn salvation through obedience. God had already chosen to save them from slavery and make them His people. He had already promised to be their God and give them the Promised Land. Yet God demanded diligent obedience from the Israelites in order for them to receive all of God's rich blessings in the land (Is. 48:17–19). overtake you: The Lord's blessings would be the source of the people's joy (Ps. 23:6). blessed: The vitality of the Lord comes to expression in all areas of life: city and country (v. 3), offspring of man and animals (v. 4), preparation of food (v. 5), and in travel (v. 6). Further, the Lord assures them of a restful future: protection from enemies (v. 7) and secure storehouses (v. 8).

28:10, 11 afraid: The nations would see God's presence and His blessing on His people and would stand in awe of the greatness of the Lord. name of the LORD: Here the name Yahweh is used for God. This indicates God's unique relationship with the Israelites. He had revealed to them His glorious name.

28:12 God gave graciously to the Israelites from the good treasure that He had stored up for them. The people received God's blessings solely because of His grace. rain … season: The Canaanites believed that Baal was the giver of dew and rain (1 Kin. 17:1). But God assured Israel that He controlled the heavens and would make their lands fruitful (Ps. 104:3, 13). lend … borrow: God's blessing on Israel would be so great that Israel would become the leader of the nations.

28:13 The phrase the head and not the tail indicates that Israel will rise to a place of honor among the nations.

28:14 not turn … to the right or the left: Since the Lord alone was the source of blessing, the Israelites had to follow Him alone in the pursuit of their happiness. They could not look in any other direction for insight.

28:15–19 if you do not obey: God's promises of the fullness of His blessing were dependent upon the obedience of His people. His curses were His reluctant—but certain—punishment for disobedience.

“cursed”

(Heb. arar) (Deut. 27:15; 28:16; Jer. 17:5) Strong’s #779: The word literally means “to bind with a curse.” A curse is the opposite of a blessing. It wishes or prays for ill or injury on a person or an object. God cursed the serpent and the ground after the sin of Adam and Eve (Gen. 3:14, 17). Jeremiah, in despair, cursed the man who brought news of his birth (Jer 20:14, 15). The seriousness of God’s covenant with His people is illustrated by the threat of a curse on any who violate it (Deut. 28:60, 61). In the NT, Paul taught that Jesus Christ became a “curse” for us, so that we might be freed from the curses of the Law (Gal. 3:13).

28:20 cursing, confusion, and rebuke: The coming of God’s curse would lead to despair. hand: The curse would affect all human activities so that they would come to nothing (Ps. 112:10). The fruitfulness that came with God’s overabundant blessings would disappear.

28:21, 22 Plague refers to devastations from pestilence and contagious diseases. consumption … burning fever: The diseases cannot easily be identified, but they have in common a fever or inflammation of body organs.

28:23, 24 Bronze and iron represent the harshness of God’s wrath in withholding rain from His people (Lev. 26:19).

28:25, 26 carcasses: The idea of birds eating the flesh of the dead was particularly repugnant in ancient times. The lack of proper burial was a mark of terrible disregard for the person who had died (1 Sam. 31:11–13).

28:27, 28 boils of Egypt: The disease inflicted on the Egyptians (Ex. 9:10) would now be visited on the people of God for their disobedience. If the people obeyed God’s laws, He promised to deliver them from such diseases (Ex. 15:26). Tumors may refer to hemorrhoids (1 Sam. 5:6, 12). scab: These skin diseases not only brought great distress, but also rendered a person unclean, unfit for the worship of God (Num. 5:1–4). madness … confusion of heart: These symptoms may indicate an advanced case of syphilis.

28:29–34 betroth a wife … build a house … plant a vineyard: The momentous events of life could not be enjoyed because of disasters and wars. Your ox … Your sons: Property and children alike would be taken from the people, and there would be no strength to recover what was lost.

28:36 Severe boils refers to skin diseases, such as Job experienced (Job 2:7).

28:37–43 The curses on the Israelites for disobedience were the direct opposite of the blessings the Israelites would receive for obedience. an astonishment, a proverb, and a byword: Contrast this repugnance of the Israelites with the honor promised in v. 13. lower and lower: Contrast this with the promise of v. 13; where the people of Israel would once be exalted, they would now be debased.

28:44–47 The disasters would be a sign that would remind the people of their disobedience. serve … with joy … for the abundance: The expected response to God's goodness was joy and a heartfelt willingness to do His will. The absence of these responses incurred God's wrath.

28:48 Yoke of iron is an expression of servitude and enslavement.

28:49–51 The enemy nation is compared to a soaring eagle that swoops down on its prey (Jer. 48:40; Hos. 8:1). The enemy would show no compassion on the people whether old or young.

28:52–57 besiege you: Moses forewarned the people of the terrible stresses of sieges (2 Kin. 6:24–31; Lam. 2:20; 4:10). The horrors of siege, hunger, and deprivation would lead people to behave in ways that they otherwise could never imagine. she will eat them: Nothing could compare to the horror of a mother eating her own children.

28:58 The Hebrew words translated glorious and awesome together mean "overwhelmingly awesome." The name of the Lord inspired awe and fear because He had abundantly demonstrated His power in both Egypt and the wilderness. The phrase THE LORD YOUR GOD brought together God's awesome majesty and His personal care for His people.

28:59–68 The following verses are a summary of all the curses that would fall upon disobedient Israel. Many are reversals of the blessing list in vv. 1–14. Other curses are plagues that the Israelites had been spared from during the Exodus (vv. 60, 61). back to Egypt: This would be a tragic reversal of God's redemptive plan for Israel. God had saved the Israelites from slavery, but now God would send them back into Egyptian servitude.

29:1 The Hebrew phrase translated as these are the words of the covenant can be interpreted as a conclusion to the previous chapters or as an introduction to chs. 29—32. In the land of Moab is a reference to the beginning of Deuteronomy (1:1–5).

29:2–8 Once again, Moses reviewed the history of God's merciful acts to the people of Israel. For a more complete history read 1:30; 2:32—3:6; 4:34; 5:1; 7:18, 19; 8:2–4; 11:2–7.

29:2–5 Great trials … great wonders refers to the miraculous acts of God in Egypt, the wilderness, and the land east of the Jordan. Moses pointed out that God had supported the Israelites even in less dramatic ways, such as seeing that their clothes and sandals were not worn out.

29:6 Although the people did not eat bread in the wilderness, God had supplied them with bread from heaven, manna.

29:7, 8 The winning of the area east of the Jordan (2:26—3:22) was the glorious beginning of the conquest of the land. But there was still greater glory to come, the winning of the territory west of the river.

29:9–13 the words of this covenant: The members of the covenant community included all adults, children, and strangers who had joined the Israelites, as well as those yet to be born. a people for Himself: The central purpose of the covenant was to bind two parties, God and His people, together.

29:14, 15 not with you alone, but with: The covenant of Yahweh with Israel was not for one generation of people but for the nation through time. Thus, God's promises to Israel continue to our own day, and beyond, until the kingdom of the living Messiah is established on earth.

29:16–29 Moses warns Israel against apostasy and self-confidence and of God's judgment on all unrighteousness.

29:16, 17 for you know: Moses reminds them of the loathsome pagan practices.

29:18 Every individual man and woman was responsible to the community as a whole for his or her relationship to God. Since the entire community was covenanted to God Himself, every individual had to follow Him. bitterness or wormwood: Tolerance for idolatry and pagan practices would always corrupt the community, and therefore the covenant relationship with God.

29:19 he blesses himself: The self-absorbed person would consider himself worthy of the blessings of God; the righteous person would live by God's grace and gratefully obey His commands.

29:20, 21 For the memory of a person's name to be lost was considered a terrible fate in the ancient Middle Eastern culture. For God to record and remember their names was a glorious hope for the ancient Israelites (Ps. 87).

29:22, 23 God's judgments on a disobedient Israel would be a sign of His holiness for the future generation and for other nations. Brimstone, salt, and burning are images reminiscent of God's judgment of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19:24–29), with which Admah and Zeboiim were also destroyed (Gen. 10:19; 14:2, 8; Hos. 11:8).

29:24–27 The lesson of the faithless Israel would become known among the nations, even as the deliverance of Israel was to be known by them (2:25). The nations were supposed to learn about God's grace from Israel's example; what a shame if they were to learn of His wrath instead!

29:28 This day refers to the day of God's judgment on His people.

29:29 The secret things refers to the future, as well as the way in which the curses would come to pass. The will of God had been revealed in the Law. If these revelations were acted upon, the people would receive God's great blessing. To ignore the express commandments of God would be folly. Similarly, the Christian has God's revealed will in the Bible. To ignore that while chasing after the things God has left secret is pure folly.

30:1–20 Choose life or death, blessing or curse, God or self. In this last address, Moses challenges the people with a prophetic perspective on Israel's nature (rebelliousness), God's compassion and new act of grace, and Israel's responsibility.

30:1 When all these things come upon you refers to the blessings and curses detailed in ch. 28, particularly the curses. God allowed Moses to foresee Israel's future apostasy and God's dispersal of the people among the nations. These words should have been terribly upsetting to the people because they were spoken on the eve of their conquest of the land.

30:2–6 Not only did Moses foresee the future apostasy and captivity of Israel, he also saw Israel's future repentance and return to the land (Ezra). This passage could also await a future fulfillment.

30:6 circumcise your heart: God Himself would work in the hearts of His people so that they would love Him (10:16). God would extend the benefits of His work to the descendants of these people. He would create a community of faith that would worship Him from generation to generation. all your heart and … soul: God's intentions for His people have always been for the whole person to respond to Him. Outward symbols such as circumcision were always intended by God to be marks of inner realities.

30:7 God did not abandon His principle of reward and punishment for the nations (and for the individuals) based on their treatment of His covenant people (compare Gen. 12:3; 2 Thess. 1:5–10). He would repay Israel's enemies.

30:8, 9 The OT tends to focus on the disobedience of God's people to His revelation. But there were periods of national faithfulness to God, and there were always individuals who were faithful.

30:10 This Book of the Law is the Book of Deuteronomy (31:24, 26). God's blessing would come to those who obeyed the Law.

30:11–14 Mysterious means "difficult." Moses reminded the Israelites that obedience to God was not a complicated issue. not in heaven … Nor is it beyond the sea: Obedience to the Law did not require a superhuman effort, because God had revealed the Law to the Israelites (Rom. 10:6–10). the word is very near you: When God's Law was internalized by the working of the Holy Spirit, the believer loved God's instructions and sought to carry them out (Ps. 119:97–104). The believer would obey God's Law in response to God's love, not as a way of earning God's love or of deserving His forgiveness.

30:15–17 Moses challenged the people to determine what path they would follow. One way led to life (Ps. 1:6; John 14:6) because God's blessings rested on it (Ps. 23:6). The other way led to death and evil because God's curses rested on it. Likewise, Jesus in His ministry challenged the people to determine what path they would take (Matt. 7:13, 14).

30:18 The emphasis on today is remarkable in this passage. Moses establishes here the best pattern for the preaching of the Word of God. Responses to God should not be delayed. Assuming that there will be a later day to respond to Him is dangerous thinking.

30:19 heaven and earth as witnesses: All of creation witnessed Moses' instruction, his challenge to the Israelites to love and obey God, and the people's response (32:1). choose … that both you and your descendants may live: The present generation's choice would determine the direction of future generations.

30:20 If the people loved God they would find true life, because God is the source of all life. By rejecting God and His ways, the Israelites would by default choose the way of death. The people were on the verge of entering the land that had been promised them for so long. Before they made their way across the Jordan to begin their holy campaign of conquest, they needed to know what the stakes were and what was necessary not just to enter the land, but to remain in the land with God's enduring blessing.

31:1–3 Again Moses regretfully spoke of God's refusal to permit him to enter the Promised Land (1:37, 38; 3:23–29). Yet he encouraged the people that God Himself would still protect them and fight for them. Instead of Moses, Joshua would lead the people into battle.

31:4–6 The Lord was the Divine Warrior, the commander-in-chief of Israel's forces. He will not leave you nor forsake you: Moses reminded the people that God had promised to remain with them, to protect them, bless them, and fight for them (Josh. 1:5; 1 Kin. 8:57). Joshua used the same language to assure the people of the continuity of God's Presence and of godly leadership (Josh. 1:6, 7, 9). Jesus made the same promise to His church (Matt. 28:20).

31:7, 8 With encouraging and challenging words, Moses publicly transferred his authority to Joshua (1:38; 31:14, 23; 32:44; 34:9). He is the One who goes before you: Moses applied the promise given to Israel (v. 6) to Joshua.

31:9 Moses wrote this law and delivered it: In accordance with ancient Middle Eastern practices concerning international treaties, Moses made provisions for the future reading of the Law and instruction in it. The ark was called the ark of the covenant because it was the depository for the tablets of the Law.

“feast”

(Heb. chag) (Deut. 16:10, 13; 31:10; Ex. 12:14). Strong’s #2282: The word feast, or “festival-gathering,” is related to the verb that means “to make a pilgrimage” or “to keep a pilgrim feast” (Ps. 84:5). The Hebrews were commanded to observe three pilgrim feasts a year (16:16; Ex. 23:14). These sacred feasts were celebrated by all people and were joyous expressions of gratitude to God (2 Chr. 30:21). They included processions, dancing, and the enjoyment of food and drink (Lev. 23:40, 41; Judg. 21:19–21). God intended that Israel’s religious feasts be worship events, a celebration of the joy God had given them (Lev. 23:7, 21, 24, 36). The OT prophets, however, condemned the feasts because the Hebrews were desecrating these holy convocations with sacrilegious behavior (Is. 1:12–15; Amos 5:21). Zechariah prophesied of a time in the future when all nations would keep the “pilgrim-feast” before the Lord (Zech. 14:16).

31:10–13 you shall read this law: Specifically, the priests were given the responsibility of reading the Law and instructing the people (Neh. 8:1–6; Mal. 2:4–9). men and women and little ones, and the stranger: The Word of God was for all to hear.

31:14 The words the days approach must have brought a renewed heaviness to Moses. He was ready to die, but his heart yearned to see the Promised Land. I may inaugurate him: The Lord’s words to Joshua are recorded in v. 23 (compare Num. 27:18–23).

31:15 The pillar of cloud was the symbol of the presence of God during the wilderness journey (Ex. 13:21, 22).

31:16 The phrase rest with your fathers suggests that the body of the person would be laid to rest in a tomb. After the flesh had decayed, the bones would be placed with the bones of one’s ancestors. Thus, the person’s remains were “with his fathers.” But the phrase may also refer to the intermediate state of the soul between death and resurrection. The Lord predicted Israel’s future rebelliousness, apostasy, and breach of the covenant. The expression play the harlot speaks both of spiritual adultery and physical acts of sexual immorality that were performed in association with the worship of Baal and Asherah, the gods of Canaan (12:1–5).

31:17, 18 I will forsake them: Should the worst occur, the anger of God would be aroused as was described in chs. 28 and 29. to other gods:

The principal reason for God's judgment on His people was their continual idolatry. They abandoned His grace and willingly embraced the evil religious practices of the Canaanites.

31:19–21 This song is the Song of Moses recorded in 31:30—32:43. God commanded Moses and Joshua to teach this song to the Israelites.

31:22 Moses wrote … and taught it: These words create an anticipation of v. 30. Psalm 90 is attributed to Moses as well.

31:23 Be strong and of good courage: God encouraged Joshua with the same words that Moses used to encourage the people (v. 6). I will be with you: God assured Joshua of His presence during the conquest (Josh. 1:5; Hag. 2:4).

31:24, 25 when Moses had completed writing: These words continue the subject of v. 9. Those who deny that Moses wrote the Torah do so in the face of verses such as this (vv. 9, 22).

31:26–28 This Book of the Law is the Book of Deuteronomy. This book would be a witness against Israel when they turned from the living God to worship other gods. Then the book that originally had been a book of God's loving instructions to His people would unfortunately become a charter of His wrath.

31:29, 30 For I know: It is unclear whether Moses' words here were based on his own experience with the people or on a revelation from the Lord. Perhaps both were at work.

32:1 O heavens … O earth: Isaiah similarly called on heaven and earth to witness (Is. 1:2).

32:2 my teaching: The song is an expression of wisdom (Prov. 1:5; 4:2; 9:9). rain … dew … raindrops … showers: These four similes express the refreshing and invigorating nature of the instruction.

32:3 Ascribe greatness to our God: True wisdom and obedience always lead to the praise of God (Pss. 145:3; 150:2).

32:4 Unlike the powerless gods of the nations (v. 37), God gives life, stability, and happiness to His people (vv. 15, 18, 30, 31). The joyful life that He gives is based on His perfect works. Like a firm Rock that stands against the raging waters of a stormy sea, God and His works stand firm against the chaos produced by sinful lives. He is the sure foundation for all truth in a world of deception. Thus He will never let lies pervert justice (Zeph. 3:5). Instead, as a righteous Judge, He will protect those who have been oppressed. Right before the Israelites entered the land of Canaan in order to establish a new nation, Moses extolled the God who is the perfect foundation for any society.

32:5 perverse and crooked generation: Moses contrasted the Israelites with their faithful God. Compared to the perfect God of truth, they were corrupt, blemished, and deceptive (v. 20).

32:6 The ancient Israelites knew God was their Father (Is. 63:16; 64:8), but they rarely confessed this great truth. Thus these words are unusually striking because they express the Israelites' close relationship with God while at the same time castigating the people for abandoning their Father. God had chosen them, loved them, and cared for them. He had brought them out of Egypt and had even established them as a nation by giving them detailed instructions.

32:7 Remember … they will tell you: Here the song uses the language of wisdom literature to exhort the Israelites to search out God's ways. The Scriptures repeatedly emphasize that wisdom is based on the God of all truth.

32:8, 9 Most High: This designation for God's supremacy is unique to Deuteronomy. He is the sovereign God over all, even the boundaries of the nations. the LORD's portion: While it is the Lord's will for many nations to exist, He has favored Israel with His special grace, promises, and covenant.

32:10 In a desert land is a poetic reference to Egypt. He instructed him: God gave Israel His revelation and His laws in order to lead them in all truth. Kept him as the apple (or pupil) of His eye is a symbol of tender loving care for a precious object in need of protection.

32:11 The eagle is a bird of prey commonly found in desert regions. The song compares God's actions towards Israel with the care a mother bird showers on her young. God not only protected His children, He provided for them, got them moving, watched over them, and guided them to the Promised Land (Ex. 19:4). In all these actions He proved Himself to be a loving Father to the Israelites (v. 6).

32:12 the LORD alone … no foreign god: Deuteronomy is an extended argument against idolatry and paganism. Clearly the Israelites had no reason to abandon the God of grace and love who had given them all they needed.

32:13, 14 He made him ride in the heights of the earth: The Lord had great plans for His people (Is. 48:17–19). produce … honey … oil: The Lord had promised to supply His people with crops, rich food, olive oil, and even dairy products in the Promised Land, all of which the people lacked in the wilderness. wheat … the blood of the grapes: Grain and wine were also promised, symbols of God's mercy.

32:15, 16 Jeshurun, a pet name for Israel, means "Uprightness." This part of the song contrasts what Israel should have been and what they became. Since the nation had received God's revelation and His instruction, it should have become upright (v. 4). Instead, the nation would grow fat and rebel. scornfully esteemed the Rock of his salvation: Even though the Israelites would grow rich off God's blessing, they would reject the source not only of those blessings, but also of their salvation. Instead, they would embrace foreign gods that had done nothing for Israel (v. 12).

32:17 Rarely in the OT (Ps. 106:37; Amos 2:1) are references made to demons and demonic powers. Although the Scriptures make it clear that the false gods do not exist as such, this passage identifies the power behind these gods: demons.

32:18, 19 Fathered literally means "gave birth." This is one of several places where God is portrayed in terms that liken His role to that of a nurturing, life-giving mother (compare Is. 66:13).

32:20, 21 I will see what their end will be: Even though Israel would reject Him, God would be patient with His rebellious children.

32:22, 23 The expression lowest hell combines the word "Sheol" with a term meaning "lowest," suggesting gradations in perdition, even as there may be gradations in glory ("the third heaven," 2 Cor. 12:2).

32:24 hunger … pestilence … destruction: Instead of blessing His chosen people, God would send curses on them in order to discipline them. teeth of beasts … poison of serpents: Creation would also turn against the people.

32:25, 26 young man … virgin: The pairings of opposites in this verse indicate that God's judgment would be comprehensive. It would affect all of society. Similar pairings in Joel 2:28, 29 speak of the comprehensiveness of God's blessing.

32:27 Had I not feared: God will not completely destroy His people, lest the arrogant and autonomous nations boast in their prowess and abilities.

32:28 This verse anticipates God's judgment of Israel and Judah in the days of Isaiah (Is. 1:3; 6:9, 10).

32:29, 30 Often the phrase latter end is understood as "glorious future"; here it speaks of "ruinous future" for the rebellious Israelites. Unless their Rock had sold them: God's protection of His people was so certain that their conquest by enemies could occur only if it were He who gave them over.

32:31–33 The enemy nations were like the people of Sodom and Gomorrah—cruel, immoral, and oppressive.

32:34–36 laid up in store … Sealed: God's sure plan and purposes are hidden. Vengeance is Mine … judge His people: Only the God who is completely just can judge and make right all the wrongs committed (Rom. 12:19; Heb. 10:30). There will be a time for God's vindication. compassion on His servants: God would discern one day between the righteous and the wicked (Mal. 3:16). He would deal kindly with the remnant that loved and followed Him. This is the basis for all of the prophetic messages about the remnant of Israel.

32:37, 38 Where are their gods: The song mocks those who follow false gods. They abandoned the Rock of truth for a rock that was not even a pebble. When the fat was burned and the wine was poured out on the altars of the false gods, the gods were believed to eat and drink these offerings. Yet these gods did not even exist, so they neither ate nor drank.

IN COMPARISON

The Gods of the Canaanites

The Lord declared that "there is no God besides Me" (Deut. 32:39), a claim repeatedly made elsewhere in Scripture (Ex. 8:10; Deut. 4:35; 6:4; Mark 12:32). Yet the Hebrews were unique among the peoples of the ancient world in preserving their belief in one God (with certain lapses). Nearly all the other peoples believed in numerous gods.

The Canaanites, whom Israel was to dispossess, worshiped more than seventy deities. The ones shown below were the principal ones.

El	Highest of the gods, but remained in the background; conferred power and authority on lesser gods.
Baal	Name means "master," "possessor," or "husband"; a god over nature; often designated Hadad, the storm god; but also a name for other local gods such as Baal-Berith ("lord of the covenant," Judg. 8:33) and Baal of Peor (Num. 25:3).
Dagon	Exact nature unknown, but important to the Philistines (1 Sam. 5), who paraded blind, chained Samson in one of their temples to Dagon (Judg. 16:21–24).
Asherah	Wife of El (and sometimes of Baal) and mother to the other gods; goddess of the sea; often a favorite deity of women (probably Jezebel, 1 Kin. 18:19); often depicted by a wooden pole or cult pillar (1 Kin. 15:13).
Astarte or Ashtoreth	A goddess of the moon, sexuality, and fertility; sometimes worshiped as an idol by the Hebrews (Judg. 2:13; 1 Sam. 7:3, 4; 1 Kin. 11:5).
Anath	Baal's mistress; goddess of war, love, and fertility; may be the "queen of heaven" to whom Jews offered incense in Jeremiah's day (Jer. 7:18).

32:39 I, even I, am He is a glorious affirmation of the incomparability of God (Ps. 113:4–6). God alone controls human existence. Because He is totally free to do what He wants, only He can either curse or bless, wound or heal, kill or give life.

32:40–42 I raise My hand to heaven: God made an oath to Himself that He would avenge His people (Gen. 22:16; Heb. 6:13–18). He would make right all wrongs.

32:43–45 Rejoice, O Gentiles, with His people: God in this song given to Moses invited all nations to join in the worship of the living God, to praise Him for promising to restore justice.

32:46 Law here may signify the Song of Moses or Deuteronomy as a whole (compare 31:26).

32:47 prolong your days: The intention of God's instruction was to show the Israelites the path that leads to fullness of life and rich blessing.

32:48—33:29 As Moses is about to die, the aged patriarch leaves a blessing for the tribes, framed by a testimony to God's kingship. The blessing particularly extends to Levi and to Joseph. The tribe of Judah gained prominence at a later time, after the tribe of Joseph (Ephraim and Manasseh) had in the period of the Judges failed God time and again. Then He chose Judah and rejected Joseph (Ps. 78:67, 68).

32:48, 49 Mount Nebo is a mountain peak near Heshbon about ten miles east of the northern end of the Dead Sea.

32:50–52 you did not hallow Me: Moses did not completely obey God's instructions at Kadesh. Because of this, Moses could not enter the Promised Land (1:37; 3:23–26; 4:21, 22; 31:2; Num. 20:10–13). Yet God would graciously allow Moses to see the land (34:1–8).

33:1 Moses is to be remembered for his faithfulness in spite of his failure (Heb. 3:1–6). Scriptures describe him as a servant of God (Num. 12:6–8), a friend of God (Ex. 33:11), and a man of God.

33:2 came from … dawned … shone forth: These verbs reminded the Israelites of the awe-inspiring revelation of God in all of His glory. God came down to Israel and revealed His covenant and Law to them at Mt. Sinai. Poetically, Moses referred to Seir and Paran , located northeast of Mt. Sinai. With these references, Moses implied that God's revelation took place throughout the whole wilderness journey (Judg. 5:4, 5). ten thousands of saints: Angelic beings attended the giving of the Law (compare Acts 7:53; Gal. 3:19; Heb. 2:2).

33:3 Saints could refer to Israel. It is also possible that the words beginning in the second line of v. 3 and concluding in v. 5 are Israel's response to Moses' opening words. If so, the Israelites confess that angelic beings were attending to Moses while he received the Law of God and instructed Israel in that revelation. This explains the reference to Moses and the use of the first person plural ("for us," v. 4).

33:4, 5 heritage: What made Israel unique was its reception of the Law of God mediated through Moses. God had chosen Israel alone to receive His instructions. The Lord alone was the King over His people. At the same time, He as the Creator ruled over all He had made.

33:6 Let Reuben live … men be few: Moses predicted that the Reubenites would have a future, but not a glorious one. Settled east of the Dead Sea, the Reubenites would eventually isolate themselves from the other tribes (Judg. 5:15, 16).

33:7 Moses prayed that the LORD would be present with Judah in its military leadership and would give it success in battle. hands be sufficient: Moses prayed that God would give adequate strength to the tribe.

33:8, 9 Moses prayed for God's guidance to rest on the Levites, who were responsible for judging cases. The Urim and Thummim (Ex. 28:30) were God's appointed instruments for deciding innocence or guilt and for guiding His people. holy one: A term for the Levites, who were separated from the other tribes to serve in the tabernacle. Massah … Meribah: The Levites passed the test when the other tribes failed to believe in the Lord's ability to provide and care for His people (6:16; 9:22). Moses commended the Levites for their loyalty to God's word and covenant.

33:10, 11 teach: The Levites were charged with the responsibility of instructing the Israelites. They had modeled loyalty (v. 9). Now they had to help Israel understand how to live by God's revelation. In this way, they continued the ministry of Moses. incense: The Levites were also responsible for the worship of God at the tabernacle (Ex. 30:7).

33:12–16 As the beloved son of Jacob, Benjamin was also the beloved of the LORD (Gen. 44:20). The Lord would give the tribe of Benjamin peace and safety. shelters … dwell between His shoulders: The Lord would provide Benjamin with His personal protection.

33:17, 18 glory … horns: God would give Ephraim and Manasseh prowess in battle and victory in warfare. Like oxen, these two tribes would push their enemies away from them. ten thousands of Ephraim … thousands of Manasseh: In keeping with Jacob's blessing of Joseph's younger son Ephraim, Moses exalted him above Manasseh (Gen. 48:8–20).

33:19 The tribe of Zebulun would be located by the seas. The seas and their shores were God's appointed place for the tribe's prosperity.

33:20, 21 Moses compared Gad's military role to the power of a ravenous lion and predicted that this tribe would readily join the others in the conquest of Canaan (Josh. 22:1–6).

33:22 Lion's whelp may refer to the small size of the tribe of Dan. Though Dan's land inheritance was close to Judah by the coastal plains, the tribe would not be able keep their inheritance because of the hostility of the Philistines. Therefore, the Danites would one day migrate to the region of the Bashan, south of Mount Hermon (Judg. 18).

33:23 Moses' blessing on Naphtali indicates that this tribe would enjoy God's blessings of abundance. The tribe would inherit the land west and south of the Sea of Galilee.

33:24, 25 Dip his foot in oil is an image of God's rich blessing to Asher (Ps. 133:2). Your sandals shall be iron and bronze: Others read "your bolts shall be iron and bronze," referring to the mighty fortresses. (For Jacob's blessing, read Gen. 49:20). For reasons unknown to us, there is no blessing for the tribe of Simeon, as the text now stands (but compare the blessing of Jacob on Simeon, Gen. 49:5–7). Simeon seems to be absorbed early into the tribe of Judah in the time of the kings of Israel.

33:26, 27 There is no one like: This negative phrase is a Hebraic way of expressing a strong positive: "The God of Jeshurun alone will help." rides the heavens … the clouds: Like a soldier, the Lord is constantly on the lookout for ways to defend His people from attack. The Divine Warrior is always providing protection because He is eternal. God is a refuge or fortress for the people to flee to in times of distress (Ps. 90:1; 91:9). everlasting arms: The God who redeemed Israel with His strong arm will always be with His people in love and power.

33:28 Then Israel will dwell in safety: Moses affirmed the truth of the promise God gave through the pagan prophet Balaam (Num. 23:9).

33:29 Who is like you: The question is actually a declaration: "There is no people like you." shield … sword: These military images point to God, the source of all human protection. He would fight Israel's battles. tread down their high places: God would break down with His own feet the places of idolatrous worship, the pagan sites that defiled the nations (Mic. 1:3).

Michelangelo's statue of Moses, great lawgiver and leader of the Hebrew people. Moses died in the land of Moab before the Israelites entered the Promised Land (Deut. 34:1–8).

34:1 Moab was where Moses had given Israel an explanation of the Law (1:5) and had led them in a covenant renewal ceremony (29:1–28). Jericho was the first city in Canaan to be conquered. And the LORD showed him: Though he was still in Moab, Moses was granted by God a close-up view of the land. How sad that his feet were not able to walk where his eyes danced! Dan was the territory below Mt. Hermon that was later conquered by the tribe of Dan (Judg. 18).

34:2 Judah refers to the highlands west of Jericho and of the Dead Sea. The Western Sea is the Mediterranean.

34:3, 4 South refers to the Negev, the dry county south of Judah. The plain is the region around the Dead Sea, from the valley of Jericho to Zoar, the city in the southern plain where Lot escaped with his daughters (Gen. 19:22). I swore: God had promised this territory to Abraham long ago (Gen. 15:18–21; 17:1–8; Ex. 33:1).

34:5 Moses remained God's faithful servant. A servant of God is a person who has a close and trusted relationship with God, such as Abraham (Gen. 26:24) and David (2 Sam. 7:5).

34:6, 7 no one knows his grave: God took care of Moses' funeral. If his burial place had been known, some people most likely would have made it a shrine and begun to worship there. God graciously concealed the burial site of Moses. not dim … diminished: Moses died because it was God's will and not because of normal physical deterioration associated with old age (31:2).

34:8 Thirty days was the customary period of mourning. Though Moses was buried alone, he was not forgotten by his people.

34:9 Joshua was recognized for his wisdom as he followed the call of the Lord in his life.

34:10–12 a prophet like Moses: As important as Joshua was, he should not be confused with the One who would fulfill God's promise of a prophet who would have an even greater status than Moses (18:15). Face to face describes the unusual intimacy between Moses and the Lord (Ex. 33:11; Num. 12). Like Moses, Jesus of Nazareth performed signs and wonders when He began His ministry on earth (Matt. 4:23–25; John 5:46). Moses performed: The miraculous works accomplished by Moses were God's works through Moses' hand. In these engaging words of testimony to the significance of Moses as the servant of God, Deuteronomy comes to its grand conclusion.

The Book of Joshua

——————— THE BOOK OF JOSHUA DESCRIBES THE ISRAELITES' conquest of Canaan, from the initial invasion across the Jordan River to the final division of the land. Like most military histories, the Book of Joshua focuses on the commander. Yet for this unique war, the commander was God Himself (5:15). The book repeatedly emphasizes that the Israelites' victories were due to God's intervention (chs. 10; 11). The extraordinary victory over Jericho dramatically demonstrated this (ch. 6). Now God was decisively acting on the promises that He had made to Abraham: He was giving the land of Canaan to His people! The Book of Joshua describes a God who faithfully fulfills His promises.

The events in Joshua occurred within a time span of less than a decade, forty years after the Exodus, probably around 1406 B.C. Caleb stated (14:7–10) that it had been forty-five years since he had been sent out from Kadesh Barnea to spy out the land (Num. 13). Since the Israelites spent thirty-eight years wandering in the wilderness (Deut. 2:14), the time from when they crossed the Jordan River till the time of Caleb's speech was seven years. Most of the events in the book probably occurred within that period.

Many scholars have suggested that the conquest of Canaan took place between 1250 and 1150 B.C. because there is archaeological evidence of the destruction of Canaanite cities around that time. However, there are problems with this view, the most significant of which is that the Israelites destroyed only three cities—Jericho, Ai, and Hazor—during their conquest. God had promised that they would live in cities they had not built, enjoy fields they had not planted, and harvest fruit they had not tended (Deut. 6:10, 11). Therefore, the Israelites fought most of their battles in the fields outside the cities. The widespread destruction of Canaanite cities found by archaeologists may date to the time of the judges. During this period, God allowed many foreign invasions to devastate the countryside and the cities in order to discipline His rebellious people.

Brief summaries contained in Joshua often give the impression that the campaign of conquest was one in which the Israelites overwhelmed the Canaanites with a superior force, inflicting a series of total defeats. Chapter 10 is an example. But the Book of Joshua as a whole does not describe Israel as winning a frontal offensive attack by means of a superior force. Rather, under God's direction, Israel used various means such as ambushes and diversionary tactics to defeat its enemies. Furthermore, Joshua 16:10 and Judges 1 suggest that Israel's victory over the Canaanites was incomplete. There were Canaanites still living in the land. Nevertheless, God did give the greater part of the land of Canaan into the Israelites' hands through a series of dramatic battles in a relatively short period of time. God was faithful to His promises.

The two most prominent themes in Joshua are the possession of the land and the covenant. God had repeatedly promised the land of Canaan to Abraham (Gen. 12:7; 13:14, 15, 17; 15:18–21; 17:8; 22:17), to Isaac (Gen. 26:3, 4), to Jacob (Gen. 28:4, 13; 35:12), and to the succeeding generations (Gen. 48:4–22; 50:24). The Book of Joshua emphasizes that the conquest of Canaan was a direct fulfillment of that promise. God was fighting for the Israelites and giving them the land in the process. Since God was demonstrating His faithfulness to Israel, He expected Israel to be faithful to His covenant with them. Possessing the land was based on their obedience to His Law (23:9–13, 15, 16; Deut. 4:1, 25–27, 40; 6:17, 18). In fact, the Book of Joshua portrays the complete possession of the land as the result of Joshua's obedience to God's commands (10:40; 11:20, 23; 23:9–13).

Conquering the land enabled Israel to experience God's rest, which He had promised to the Israelites from the beginning (1:13, 15; 11:23; 14:15; 21:44; 22:4; 23:1). "The LORD gave them rest all around, according to all that He had sworn to their fathers" (21:44). The author of Hebrews equates this Old Testament concept of rest with entering into Christ's rest, that is, His kingdom (Heb. 3; 4).

In addition to emphasizing the importance of faithfulness to the covenant (1:7, 8; 22:5; 23:6, 16; 24:15), Joshua records two ceremonies dedicated to the renewal of the covenant. The first was at Mount Ebal. There Joshua built an altar to the Lord, offered sacrifices, and copied and read the Law of Moses (8:30–35). The second was at Shechem (ch. 24), where Joshua wrote the words of Israel's covenant renewal in "the Book of the Law of God" and erected a large stone as a witness and memorial to the agreement (24:25–27). Both ceremonies impressed on the people's minds and hearts their responsibility to follow God alone and to keep His instructions. At the end of the conquest, the Israelites had a new challenge before them. The intensity of the battle was gone. Now the Israelites had to demonstrate their faithfulness to God in the ordinary activities of everyday life.

This book is named for the man who figures most prominently in it, Moses' successor and Israel's leader during the conquest of Canaan. Appropriately, Joshua's name in Hebrew means "The Lord Saves" or "May the Lord Save."

The Book of Joshua does not state who wrote it. Joshua himself undoubtedly wrote portions of the book, since 24:26 states, "Then Joshua wrote these words in the Book of the Law of God." But it is uncertain how much of the rest of the book he wrote. As for the date of composition, 6:25 reports that Rahab was living in Israel "to this day." This may indicate that portions of the book (if not all of it) were written shortly after the events recorded. But it could also mean that Rahab's descendants were still living in Israel at the time of writing.

Commentary

1:1 Joshua begins where Deuteronomy ends, after the death of Moses. Moses is the central figure in the narrative spanning Exodus through Deuteronomy. He is called the servant of the LORD, a title that was first given to him at the end of his life (Deut. 34:5). In Joshua, Moses is called by this title fifteen times. In the Hebrew Scriptures it is a special title given only to Moses, Joshua (24:29; Judg. 2:8), David (Pss. 18:1; 36:1), and the Messiah (Is. 42:19). Joshua the son of Nun: Identifying someone by adding the name of his father was the Hebrew equivalent of a last name. Joshua was Moses' assistant (Ex. 24:13; Num. 11:28). The Hebrew word used for assistant usually refers to service in worship, but it can also mean service to an individual, as it does here (1 Kin. 19:21 for Elijah's assistant). Joshua is not identified as the "servant of the Lord" here, probably to show that he had not yet "filled Moses' shoes." He needed to grow into the job. Yet Deut. 34:9 hints that Joshua would do just that: "Now Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom, for Moses had laid his hands on him; so the children of Israel heeded him, and did as the LORD had commanded Moses."

1:2–9 God's speech encouraging Joshua is a warmhearted, tender speech, assuring Joshua of His care, protection, and presence, and urging him to obey His Law. It is a model of God graciously encouraging His servants, and its exhortations are still of value today; true success in life cannot occur apart from knowing and doing the will of God.

1:2 the land which I am giving: The land of Canaan had first been promised to Abraham hundreds of years before (Gen. 12:7; 13:14, 15, 17; 15:18–21; 17:8; 22:17). Even though God would allow Abraham's descendants to be slaves in a foreign land (Gen. 15:13), He nevertheless promised to bring them back to their own land (Gen. 15:16). This promise was never rescinded. In fact, it was repeated many times (Ex. 6:4, 8; Deut. 1:6–8; 4:38, 40; 5:31; 7:13; 8:1–10; 9:4–6; 11:8–12, 17; 26:1, 9; 32:49, 52; 34:4).

1:3 You here is plural, referring to all Israel. Sometimes (as in v. 2), the land is pictured as in the process of being given to Israel ("I am giving to them"). In other places, as here, it is pictured as already having been given. This manner of speaking reflects the notion that Israel already had legal title to the land, even if the people had not yet actually taken possession of it. This is also the language of Gen. 15:18. as I said to Moses: God keeps His promises.

1:4 This description of the land gives its southern and northern extremities, and its western border; the eastern border is not mentioned, probably because it extended to where Joshua was standing on the plains of Moab, east of the Jordan River. The land of Canaan here is designated by one of its prominent ethnic groups, the Hittites (Deut. 7:1). A great Hittite kingdom in Asia Minor (modern Turkey), dating to around 1800–1200 B.C., has been identified. The relationship between the Hittites in Canaan and the ones in Asia Minor is unclear. The Great Sea is the Mediterranean Sea.

1:5 God's great promise to Moses I will be with you (Ex. 3:12) is now given to Joshua (1:9; 3:7). Of special comfort to Joshua would have been the fact that God would be with him in the same way He had been with Moses. Joshua had been present during the many demonstrations of God's presence in Moses' life and would have known how significant this promise was.

1:6 The command to be strong and of good courage was for Joshua's encouragement, and God repeated these words three times (vv. 6, 7, 9). The people later affirmed Joshua using these precise words (v. 18). David would later encourage his son Solomon with these words (1 Chr. 22:13; 28:20). you shall divide: This is the first notation of what Joshua's actual duties would be, that of giving the land to Israel on God's behalf.

1:7 very courageous: The instructions to Joshua here do not address military matters at all. This might seem surprising given the battles ahead. But his success depended more on his spiritual state and his degree of obedience to God than on any military strategy. The spiritual demands preceded the martial ones. the law which Moses … commanded you: Some scholars have questioned whether Moses gave the Law to Israel, arguing that the laws found in the Pentateuch come from a much later time. This passage, along with many others (Josh. 8:31–35; Deut. 31:24–26), states that Moses did indeed give the Law to Israel. The term translated prosper means much more than mere financial success. It includes spiritual well-being.

“meditate”

(Heb. hagah) (Josh. 1:8; Ps 1:2; 77:12) Strong’s #1897: The Hebrew verb for meditate conveys a variety of meanings in the OT. For example, it may refer to the “growl” of an animal (Is. 31:4) or the “moan” of a person in distress (Is. 59:11). It may also refer to “speaking” (Job 27:4), “muttering” (Is. 59:3), “planning deception” (Ps. 38:12), “studying” (Prov. 15:28), or “meditating” (Ps. 1:2). The word is related to a term meaning “to muse over.” Thus God was commanding Joshua to remember His Law by “muttering” it to himself, “pondering” it, or “musing over” it. The Scriptures command people of faith to mediate on God’s Law (1:8) and His works (Ps 143:5).

1:8, 9 To meditate means much more than just contemplation. The idea here is that one should reflect upon God’s Word in a thoughtful way, appropriating its truths personally and applying them to life (Ps. 1:2, 3).

1:10 The officers were officials who helped in the organization of Israel’s affairs. The Egyptian pharaoh had appointed similar officials over Israel (Ex. 5:14, 15).

1:11 Provisions referred to the food needed for the next several days as the Israelites prepared themselves to cross the Jordan. within three days: During these three days, the Israelites prepared themselves to enter the land. These were the same three days that the spies hid in the hills outside of Jericho (mentioned in 2:16, 22). After the spies returned, the Israelites waited another three days before crossing the Jordan (3:2).

1:12–15 Joshua reminded the two and one half-tribes that were settling east of the Jordan that they had promised to fight with the rest of the Israelites for the land across the river. Here Joshua quotes Moses’ words to these tribes almost verbatim (compare vv. 13–15 with Deut. 3:18–20). A change in v. 14, from Deuteronomy’s “cities” to Joshua’s “land,” serves to highlight Joshua’s special interest in the land. These tribes were granted the right to settle east of Jordan if they maintained covenant solidarity with their brethren by fighting beside them (Num. 32:1–42; Deut. 2:26—3:20). The account in Joshua indicates that they kept their promise. In fact, at the end of the book Joshua blesses them for their faithfulness in this matter (22:1–9). The story recounted in 22:10–34 illustrates their good faith in this matter.

1:13, 15 The promise of rest echoes Num. 32:20–22; Deut. 3:18–20. Read about the promises of rest in Ex. 33:14; Deut. 12:9, 10. This rest was God's gift to Israel. In Joshua, it primarily means rest from conflict with enemies. Other accounts in Joshua make mention of Israel or the land having rest (11:23; 14:15; 21:44; 22:4; 23:1).

1:14, 15 The Hebrew word for armed is related to the numbers five and fifty; it probably means "lined up in battle array in groups of fifty." Mighty men of valor were the elite of the military. Joshua chose 30,000 of these men to lie in ambush against Ai (8:3) and also took them into battle at Gilgal (10:7). Groups of mighty men of 400 (1 Sam. 22:2) and later 600 (27:2) accompanied David, and later we read of an elite group of thirty or more who were his special warriors (2 Sam. 23:8–39).

The Promised Land

From their camp in Moab, the Israelites prepared to enter "the land which the Lord your God is giving you to possess" (Josh. 1:11). This was the land that God promised to give to Abraham's descendants (Gen. 13:14–17). Its borders were carefully defined by Moses (Num. 34:1–12). Now under Joshua, the people were to go in and take possession.

1:16–18 The people affirmed Joshua warmly and enthusiastically, echoing elements of God's charge to Joshua in vv. 1–9. Compare v. 5 with v. 17 and note the fourth occurrence of the exhortation to be strong and of good courage (vv. 6, 7, 9). The pledges of obedience and loyalty to Joshua certainly must have been encouraging to this new leader.

1:16 The text does not say clearly who answered Joshua, the officers of the people (v. 10) or the tribes from east of the Jordan (v. 12). From vv. 10, 12 it appears that Joshua's words to the officers in v. 11 and to the tribes in vv. 13–15 are part of one event. The response in vv. 16–18 is therefore probably that of all Israel. In this way, the entire nation affirmed Joshua's leadership at the beginning of his duties as leader.

1:17, 18 the LORD your God be with you: The Israelites affirmed Joshua in the same terms that God Himself used in promising to be with him.

2:1–7 Joshua sent out two spies to explore the land, especially Jericho. They went to a place where news would be easily available, a prostitute's house (v. 1). News reached the local king, and he sent men to apprehend the spies (vv. 2, 3). Yet Rahab protected the spies by sending the king's men on a futile chase (vv. 4–7).

2:1 The Acacia Grove was the place east of the Jordan River where the Israelites had been encamped for some time (Num. 25:1). In some translations of the Bible this place is called by its transliterated Hebrew name Shittim, which means "The Acacia Trees." Acacia Grove was probably some distance from the Jordan because it took a few days to get there. Rahab was a Canaanite prostitute, and yet her story is one of the most inspiring stories in the Bible. Her actions in caring for the Israelite spies in enemy territory demonstrated a faith in Israel's God that is praised in the NT (Heb. 11:31; James 2:25). The term translated harlot (Heb. zona) is the word for a common prostitute, not the word for a cultic prostitute (qedesha). It is possible that Rahab had been reduced to prostitution by the death of her husband and by the needs of her impoverished family (6:23 does not mention her husband). In any case, out of all the populace of Jericho, only she reached out to the living God, and He in turn saved her (6:25). The name "Rahab," here, is to be distinguished from the term that looks the same in English, "Rahab," the name of the dragon, occasionally used as a disparaging term for Egypt.

2:2, 3 it was told: Despite the secrecy of the spies (v. 1), news of their arrival in Jericho traveled fast. The king of Jericho ruled over a small kingdom that included his city and the territory around it. As is often the case in the ancient world, his "kingdom" was actually a city-state. Compare the reference to "Jabin king of Hazor" in 11:1.

2:4–6 Rahab lied to the men searching for the Israelite spies, but this does not constitute an endorsement for lying as such. The Scriptures clearly condemn lying (Lev. 19:11; Prov. 12:22). Rahab did the best she could to save the men sent by Joshua.

2:5 All major cities in Canaan were walled and had a large gate for protection. Excavations at Jericho have uncovered strong walls from different periods of the city's existence.

2:6 Like most houses, Rahab's had a flat roof. She hid the men there where she had laid out stalks of flax for drying. Flax is the oldest textile fiber known. It was used to make linen fabric for clothes.

2:7, 8 The River Jordan was nearly a hundred feet wide near Jericho, and from five to twelve feet deep. There were no bridges, and shallow fords were used for crossing.

lying

The Bible clearly condemns lying. Its commands forbid it, prophets condemn it, and godly people avoid doing it (Ex. 20:16; Jer. 9:4–9; Zech. 8:16; Eph. 4:25). Behind all these is God Himself, who cannot lie (Num. 23:19).

But what about Rahab? She lied to protect the spies of Israel who had come to scout out the city of Jericho. The story of her heroics paint her in a very positive light; Joshua praised her efforts, and both testaments of the Bible praise and honor Rahab for doing this (Josh. 6:22–25; Heb. 11:31; James 2:25). Her action made her part of God's people, ultimately placing her in the line of ancestry to David and Jesus. Her lie was also part of the conquest of Canaan, a task that God commissioned and blessed. Does her example mean that lying can sometimes be an acceptable course of action?

In Rahab's case, there are three possibilities. Either her lie was not a sin, or it was a sin but excusable, or it was a sin and inexcusable. Those who say her lie was not a sin will sometimes say they believe that "the loving thing" is all that matters; a "little lie" told in the name of love is no sin. In fact, it is the right thing to do.

Others have said that Rahab's sin was excusable because of a greater value, the lives of the spies. Those who hold this view believe that some sins are worse than others, and sometimes a person has to choose among them. In Rahab's case, the necessity of preserving the lives of the spies had a higher value than the truth. She did the right thing in misdirecting the king's men because it was more important to save their lives than to tell the king's men where they were.

The third possibility is that a lie is a lie, and that even Rahab's action was wrong. In this view, Rahab sinned no matter how noble her intentions. Of course, in her case, her sin is understandable because she lacked a complete knowledge of the living God. That is, what she did was wrong, but she did not know any better. We must be careful to make a distinction between Rahab's faith and the way Rahab expressed it. The Bible praises Rahab because of her faith in God, not because of her lying. That is, her actions would have been more noble had she protected the spies in some other fashion; as it is, she did the best she could.

Further, though the Bible calls Rahab a prostitute, we are not meant to take that as an endorsement for immorality. Rahab, like the rest of us, had a mixed character, but she believed in God and strove to honor Him and His people. That is what draws her praise. We should honor Rahab the way the Bible does. She was a great heroine of the faith, who came from the most surprising place. In time, her name would be honored not only for what she did for Israel, but for what she became: a mother in the line of Jesus (Ruth 4:18–22; Matt. 1:5).

2:9–11 Rahab's faith is visible in her words in these verses. She is a good example of a foreigner responding to Israel's God, and she was included with other women—Tamar, Ruth, and Bathsheba—in Jesus' genealogy in Matthew who were foreigners but who became part of Israel. This reflects the inclusiveness intended in the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 12:2, 3).

2:9, 10 Rahab's use of God's personal name Yahweh, translated here as LORD, indicates that she had come to faith in the living God (v. 11). God had graciously opened the heart and mind of a foreign prostitute to accept Him as Lord. the terror of you has fallen on us: Israel's reputation went before them. God already had dramatically delivered the Israelites in many ways, and the report had been spread throughout the nations. Rahab mentioned two miraculous deliverances: the crossing of the Red Sea and the victories over two kings east of the Jordan, Sihon and Og (v. 10; Ex. 14; Num. 21:21–35).

2:11 Here Rahab made a dramatic statement of her faith in the LORD. He is God in heaven: She affirmed God's sovereignty over heaven and earth in language reminiscent of the Psalms (Ps. 113:5, 6) and not unlike the confession of Melchizedek to Abram (Gen. 14:19, 20). The fact that non-Israelites came to true faith indicates that God's great mercy reached other nations. neither did there remain any more courage: The phrase suggests of their breath was taken away; the people of Jericho were left breathless, and their hearts melted from fear of the Israelites!

2:12–14 Rahab asked the spies to swear to her. Even though to swear in God's name was a serious matter, the spies agreed to Rahab's request (vv. 14, 17, 20).

2:15 The Hebrew phrase translated her house was on the city wall suggests that Rahab's house was in the city wall rather than on top of it. The phrase might be rendered "in the double walls." This refers to a kind of defensive wall found around many cities in biblical times. The walls were built double and connected by cross-walls between them. The resulting spaces could be used for storage or as living quarters. Rahab's family may have lived in one of these residences. A dwelling in the wall would be a humble dwelling, just the spot for a poor prostitute … and for God's grace.

2:16, 17 Get to the mountain: The only hills near Jericho are to the west. This is the opposite direction from the route the pursuers had taken: they had gone east, down to the Jordan (v. 7).

2:18–21 The spies gave Rahab a line of scarlet cord to hang out the window as a sign of the agreement they had made. This is probably not the same rope she used to let the spies down, since the words are different. The cord's color is undoubtedly significant; it represents the color of the blood of atonement (Ex. 12:7, 13). It also alludes to the story of Tamar, since a scarlet thread was tied to the wrist of her first son (Gen. 38:28, 30). Both of these women were non-Israelite ancestors of Jesus (Matt. 1:3, 5).

2:22, 23 A "day" for the ancient Israelites could mean any portion of a day. Thus three days would refer to parts of three days, as in "part of today, tomorrow, and part of the next day."

2:24 faint-hearted: The spies reported to Joshua exactly what Rahab had said to them (v. 9).

3:1 The location of Acacia Grove is unknown today, but it was where Israel had been camped for some time after arriving at the plains of Moab, at the northern end of the Dead Sea (Num. 22:1; 25:1). It was where Israel was when Balaam came with the intent of cursing Israel (Num. 22—24), and where many Israelites had gone after prostitutes among the Moabite women (Num. 25:1–3). The day after the spies returned from Jericho, Joshua led the people from this place to the Jordan.

3:2 After three days, the officers went through the camp with instructions about the crossing itself. These instructions (v. 3) were different from the instructions given in 1:11, and this three-day period started on the day after the spies returned from Jericho. The previous three-day period in 1:11 (and 2:22) began when the spies went into Jericho to begin with. After these two three-day periods, the Israelites crossed the Jordan on the next day, the seventh day after the book's action begins (3:5). This seven-day period immediately precedes the dedication of Israelite males in ch. 5. It is then followed by another seven-day period of marching around Jericho.

3:3 Chapter 3 emphasizes the significance of the ark of the covenant, mentioning it more than eleven times. The priests were responsible for carrying it (v. 3) in accordance with the rules given to Moses (Deut. 10:8; 31:9). They were to carry the ark with poles and not to touch it (Ex. 25:12, 13; 37:3–5; Num. 4:4–15). The ark symbolized God's presence. Everyone had to be careful to keep a healthy distance from it (3:4). The chapter refers to the ark in various ways, most commonly as "the ark of the covenant." The priesthood was restricted to Levites in general, and more specifically to Aaron's family (Num. 25:7–13; Deut. 18:1, 5). All priests were Levites, but not all Levites were priests. In later times Zadok, who was descended from Aaron through his third son, Eleazar (1 Chr. 6:1–8, 50–53), became a prominent priest. From that time on, Zadok's descendants became responsible for the temple service (Ezek. 44:15–31).

3:4 The Hebrew word for yet is emphatic and might be translated "be very sure." This emphasizes the importance of the command to keep one's distance from the ark. Two thousand cubits was more than half a mile. that you may know: The miraculous events are a source of emphasis in chs. 3 and 4, and their value in making the people "know" is important (compare v. 7).

3:5, 6 Sanctify yourselves: The Book of Joshua emphasizes the idea of holiness. The basic meaning of holiness (Heb. qadash) is "separation" from things that are unclean or common. Wonders translates the Hebrew word (niphlaot) for what today are called miracles. These mighty acts of God astonished people and prompted them to praise Him (Pss. 9:1; 96:3). In ch. 3, God performs the miracle of stopping the waters of the Jordan (vv. 14–17).

3:7, 8 With the words I will begin to exalt you, God reaffirmed Joshua's place as successor to Moses (1:5, 9). that they may know: God performed miracles not only to bring about certain events but to reveal Himself to His people.

3:9 Here, Joshua functions as a prophet of God, even though he is never specifically called a prophet, because he stood before the people as spokesman for God.

3:10, 11 The miraculous events that follow not only brought the Israelites across the Jordan; they also attested to the fact that the living God was with them (4:24). These wonderful acts testified to God's glorious presence among His people; God Himself was working on their behalf. Canaanites … Jebusites: This text mentions seven people groups. Canaanites sometimes denoted anyone living in Canaan, regardless of their ethnic identity (Gen. 36:2, 3; Judg. 5:19). Yet the present text distinguishes a specific group as Canaanites. In this case the Canaanites were probably the peoples living near the sea (5:1) who were known later as the Phoenicians. Their largest cities were Tyre and Sidon. As for the Perizzites, we know little about them. They appear to have lived in the forested areas of central Palestine (Gen. 13:7). Amorites is sometimes a synonym for Canaanites in its broader usage (Gen. 15:16; Judg. 1:34, 35). Sometimes the name refers to the peoples living in the cities in the central hill country of Canaan (Num. 13:29; Deut. 1:7), or to kingdoms east of the Jordan (13:10, 21). Here the name probably refers to inhabitants of the central hill country. The Jebusites lived in Jerusalem (15:8; 18:28).

3:12 twelve men: One man from each tribe was selected. The Hebrew emphasizes that it was to be only one from each tribe; it literally states "one man, one man per tribe."

3:13 The reference to the ark here parallels the phrase in v. 11. The reference to the LORD, the Lord of all the earth uses both His name and His title. Much as "Baal" was the name of the Canaanites' most important god, "the LORD" (Yahweh) is God's personal name. This was the name God revealed to Moses at the burning bush (Ex. 3:13–15; 6:2, 3). The term translated Lord means “master.” It refers to God’s status as sovereign of the universe.

Parting the Jordan

The miracle of the Jordan River parting so that the people could enter Canaan on dry land (Josh. 3:14–17) recalled the miracle of the parting of the Red Sea (Ex. 14:21–31). It also helped to confirm Joshua as the successor to Moses. Centuries later, a similar miracle would confirm Elisha as the successor to the prophet Elijah (2 Kin. 2:14).

3:14 The Hebrew reads “the ark, the covenant” here.

3:15 The parenthetical statement for the Jordan overflows is significant because it makes the point that a great miracle was involved. God did not merely slow the Jordan to a trickle during a time of drought; rather, He stopped the waters when the river was high. during the whole time of harvest: This phrase refers to the early summer harvest. At this time, the river was still swollen from the spring melting and rains. The Israelites crossed on the tenth day of the first month (4:19), which corresponds to March-April.

3:16 Adam: A city about eighteen miles north of Jericho, near where the Jordan and Jabbok Rivers converge. The Jordan flows between high limestone cliffs near Jericho. Sometimes parts of these cliffs collapse into the river causing the waters to back up. God could have miraculously caused such a slide to occur at precisely the moment when the Israelites needed to cross over. The Sea of the Arabah is the Dead Sea, into which the Jordan flows from the north. The Arabah itself is the region of the Jordan valley, running from the Sea of Galilee in the north to the Dead Sea in the south. The Dead Sea is the lowest place on earth, 1,286 feet below sea level. The phrase Salt Sea is added to the name because the sea has no outlet; it loses its water by evaporation. The concentration of salt and other minerals is so high that nothing can live in it.

3:17 A synonym for the term translated dry ground is found in 4:22, as well as in Ex. 14:16, 22, 29 where it refers to the dry ground of the bottom of the Red Sea. This crossing of the Jordan was similar to the crossing of the Red Sea. The miracle was so effective in both cases that the Israelites crossed on dry ground, not mud or shallow water.

4:1–9 This section is demarcated on either side by the references in 3:17 and 4:10 to the priests carrying the ark standing in the middle of the Jordan River until the crossing was completed. It introduces the important idea of making and observing memorials to what God has done.

4:1–3 The twelve stones (one stone per tribe) would mark the spot where God performed His wonderful miracle in stopping the waters of the Jordan so the Israelites could cross. The stones would remind the people of the great event and serve as conversation starters with their children, who would ask what they symbolized (vv. 6, 21).

“stone”

(Heb. eben). (Gen. 35:14; Josh. 4:2; 1 Kin. 5:17; 2 Kin. 12:12) Strong’s #68: The stones that littered the landscape of the ancient Middle East were used in numerous ways. They were the building material for houses, city walls, and fortifications (1 Kin. 5:17; 2 Kin. 12:12). Stones were also used for religious purposes, to build sacred pillars (Gen. 35:14) and altars (Deut. 27:5). Sometimes, stones were piled up as a memorial that marked the site of a divine revelation (Gen. 28:18, 22) or a significant event in the life of an individual (Gen. 31:46) or a nation (4:6). Because a stone was commonly used as a foundation for a structure, God Himself was called the “Stone of Israel” (Gen. 49:24). But Isaiah also described the Lord as a “stone of stumbling” for those Israelites who rejected Him (Is. 8:14). These same images are applied to Jesus Christ (Is. 28:16; 1 Pet. 2:4–8).

4:4–6 The Hebrew term for sign (ot) can mean “miracle” (Ex. 7:3), but here it means “memorial marker.” The same idea is found in Ex. 12:13, 14; 13:8, 9, where there are instructions for celebrating the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread. These observances were signs to the Israelites and their children that God had miraculously delivered them out of Egypt. when your children ask: The stones would inevitably stimulate a child’s questions in the same way that the Passover and Feast of Unleavened Bread would. These questions would be opportunities for instruction (Ex. 12:26, 27; 13:8). An important principle is revealed here. In addition to remembering God’s gracious work in our lives, we need to tell our children about it also (Deut. 6:20–24).

4:7 a memorial: The same word (Heb. zikkaron) along with the word “sign” is found in connection with the Passover and Festival of Unleavened Bread (Ex. 12:14; 13:9).

4:8 the children of Israel did so: A standard feature of Hebrew narratives is repetition. This verse repeats almost verbatim the instructions given in v. 5. Far from being an unimaginative feature of a primitive storytelling style, such repetitions are a sophisticated literary device. Often they show that instructions, usually God’s or those of His representatives, were carried out exactly, “to the letter.” The pattern is for a character in the story to give the instructions and then for the narrator to confirm, using the same words, that the instructions were carried out. The phrase as the LORD had spoken to Joshua confirms the obedience of the Israelites even further. This literary device is used to highlight the importance of obedience to the words of God.

4:9 Joshua set up twelve stones: It is possible that there were two piles of memorial stones, one set up by the people on the banks of the Jordan River (v. 8) and one set up by Joshua in the middle of the river (v. 9), which would have been visible at low water levels. However, the Hebrew of the first part of v. 9 suggests that the activity described here took place earlier and could better be translated, "Joshua had set up twelve stones." Thus, he would have set up the stones in the Jordan itself before the people crossed, and then after the crossing the people would have taken the stones out of the river (vv. 5, 8) and erected them on the banks. Verse 8 states that the people took the stones from the midst of the Jordan, which suggests that these are the stones that Joshua had erected there (v. 9).

4:10–14 These verses begin and end with references to Moses as he related to Joshua, picking up on the theme of Joshua as Moses' worthy successor. Their emphasis is on everyone's obedience to the words of God and to Israel's leaders.

4:10 the people hurried and crossed over: This paragraph represents something of a flashback, since 3:17 and 4:1 have already stated that the crossing was completed. The purpose is to look back and reflect upon the people's obedience.

4:11 The priests who were standing on dry ground in the middle of the river (3:17) were finally able to cross over themselves with the ark. This foreshadows the more detailed account of the priests' coming out of the water in v. 18.

4:12 The men of the Transjordan tribes acted exactly as Moses had spoken, that is, in direct obedience to the instructions Moses gave when Israel was still on the Plains of Moab (Num. 32:20–22; Deut. 3:18–20).

4:13 The number of warriors from Reuben, Gad, and half of Manasseh is forty thousand, much smaller than that listed in Num. 26. There the warriors from Reuben alone number 43,730 (Num. 26:7). The number here was most likely a portion of the warriors from the three tribes; the rest probably stayed with the women, children, and elderly to protect them. The reference to Jericho (the first in the book) foreshadows the dramatic events to follow in ch. 6. Jericho was six miles west of the Jordan, ten miles northwest of the northern end of the Dead Sea. It was near a large freshwater spring 825 feet below sea level.

4:14, 15 the Lord exalted Joshua: Once again, God affirmed Joshua's place as Moses' successor (1:5, 17; 3:7). In this context, they feared him indicates respect, reverence, or awe, not terror. The Israelites obeyed Joshua in the same way they had obeyed Moses.

4:16, 17 The Hebrew word for Testimony also means "reminder," and it is used in Ex. 31:18 to refer to the tablets on which the Ten Commandments were written, "the two tablets of the Testimony." "The tablets of the covenant" are mentioned in Deut. 9:11, which shows that "testimony" and "covenant" are closely related ideas. The ark is called "the ark of the Testimony" because it contained the two stone tablets on which were written the Ten Commandments (Ex. 40:20; Deut. 10:1–5).

4:18 This verse is a mirror image of 3:15. This neatly concludes the miraculous episode, showing the forces of nature resuming their natural course and reminding us of the marvelous nature of the miracle of God stopping the waters.

4:19 The crossing of the Jordan was on the tenth day of the first month, that is, the month of Nisan (Abib), corresponding to March-April. This was an important day because it coincides with the day that the Passover lamb was selected (Ex. 12:3). It foreshadows the keeping of the Passover in 5:10, on the fourteenth day of the month, when the lamb is actually killed (Ex. 12:6, 18). The location of Gilgal is uncertain; it was somewhere east of Jericho in the Jordan valley. At Gilgal, the Israelites celebrated several religious rituals, including circumcision and Passover (ch. 5). There also a sanctuary and an altar were built for God (9:23, 27).

4:20 The stones which the Israelites had brought up out of the Jordan River (v. 8) were now set up permanently at Gilgal.

4:21–24 The twelve stones were a memorial for them and their children, as had been stated earlier (vv. 6, 7). The crossing of the Jordan has many similarities to the crossing of the Red Sea. The text makes this explicit in 4:23. that all the peoples … may know: The miracle was performed for a greater purpose than merely getting the Israelites across the Jordan River. It also was a sign to all peoples that God was powerful. Indeed the inhabitants of Jericho had heard about how great Israel's God was (2:10, 11).

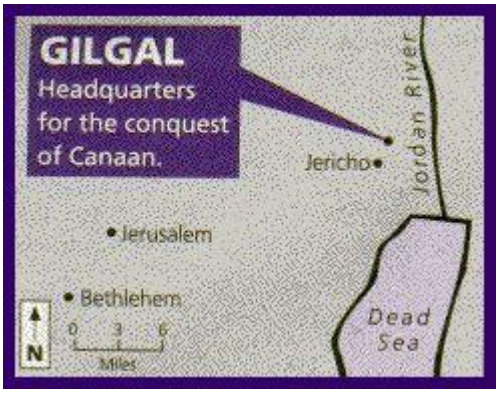
5:1 God’s drying up the waters of the Jordan caused the inhabitants of Canaan to fear Israel greatly. Such reactions of fear or opposition were common as Israel entered the land (9:1–4; 10:1, 2; 11:1–5). The language here especially recalls the same thought expressed earlier by Rahab (2:10, 11). This verse forms a transition between the Jordan crossing in chs. 3 and 4 and the adversaries to be encountered later in chs. 6—12. we: Most early translations and editions of the text read “they” here, including the earliest extant Hebrew manuscripts of Joshua (from Qumran), the earliest translations into Aramaic and Greek, and the marginal notations of the early Jewish scribes, the Masoretes.

5:2–5 Flint is a rock found in abundance in biblical lands, and its use is known from almost all periods of ancient history; many flint knives have been found in excavations. Flint was gradually replaced by metals, such as copper, bronze, and iron. Only in two places in the OT is the Hebrew word flint found, here and in Ex. 4:26, both in connection with circumcision. This they had to do again the second time (vv. 4, 5). The males of the generation that left Egypt in the Exodus had all been circumcised. However, that generation died in the wilderness and the practice had been neglected. Thus it was necessary to perform it again, especially before the important celebration of Passover. The original instructions for Passover had emphasized the importance of circumcising all participants before the ceremony (Ex. 12:44, 48).

“milk and honey”

(Heb. chalab vedebash) (Josh. 5:6). Strong’s #2461#2461; 1706: This phrase is frequently used in the OT to describe the land of Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey (Ex. 3:8; Lev. 20:24; Num. 14:8; Deut. 6:3). The phrase depicts both the fertility of the land and its bounty (Num. 13:23–27). The land could support plenty of cows to supply an abundance of milk, and a variety of plants for bees to frequent. The expression also represents the two distinct lifestyles that the land of Canaan supported: the shepherd life of pastoral nomads (symbolized by milk) and the agricultural life of a more settled population (pictured by honey).

5:6, 7 God would deny covenant benefits (Gen. 12:1–3; 15:18–21; 17:1–8) to individuals who did not obey Him. Anyone who was not circumcised was to be cut off from enjoying the blessings of God’s people (Gen. 17:14). God’s promises to Abraham’s descendants would be fulfilled to the nation as a whole, but not every individual would automatically participate: faith and obedience were required. This truth is emphasized in 5:7 with the statement that God raised up another generation to replace the one He had consigned to perish in the wilderness. The land God had promised to Israel was no wilderness, but a land flowing with milk and honey, a fertile land ready to supply all the Israelites’ needs. God had described the land this way to Moses decades before (Ex. 3:8); the phrase appears fifteen times in the Pentateuch.



Gilgal was a site possibly located one mile northeast of Jericho where Israel first camped after crossing the Jordan (Josh. 4:19). The name meant "circle of stones" or "rolling," both of which fit two important events that took place there: the establishment of a monument from stones taken out of the Jordan (4:20), and the circumcision of uncircumcised Hebrews which "rolled away the reproach of Egypt" (5:8, 9). It was used by Israel as a base of military operations during the conquest of Canaan.

5:8, 9 Gilgal is related to the Hebrew word galal, which means "to roll." The name, therefore, was an apt reminder that the reproach of Egypt was now being rolled away. This reproach is to be understood as the reproach that was heaped upon Israel by Egypt (Egypt's scorn), in the same way as the "reproach of Moab" (Is. 51:7; Ezek. 16:57) is the reproach heaped upon Israel by Moab.

5:10 The Israelites celebrated the Passover on the fourteenth day of the month, four days after they crossed the Jordan River (4:19), at twilight. The Israelites scrupulously kept the instructions concerning the Passover (Ex. 12:6).

5:11, 12 The celebration of the Passover marked a significant turning point in Israel's life: right after this they began to live from the land they were about to possess. The miraculous provision of manna in the wilderness stopped.

5:13 The capitalization of Man, here, indicates the translators' judgment that this was God Himself, or perhaps Christ. Hebrew has no capitalization scheme, so such decisions are left to scholars to make on other grounds. Many scholars connect the appearance here of this man, the commander of the Yahweh's army, with the Angel of the Lord spoken of elsewhere. Joshua's question Are you for us reflects a natural human concern with the immediate battles ahead and whether he could count on this man.

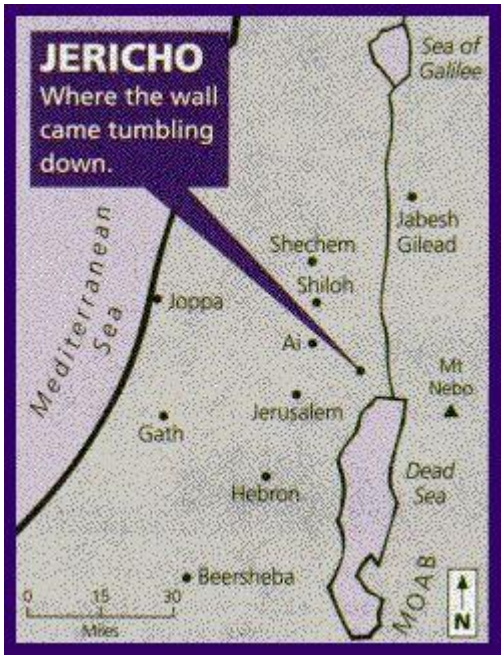
5:14 The stranger did not respond to Joshua's question, but instead identified Himself. He was the Commander of the army of the LORD. This elicited a response of humble worship from Joshua. Rather than any further questions about this Man's loyalties, Joshua asked how he could serve this One greater than him: What does my Lord say to His servant? The Book of Job ends in a similar manner. God did not answer Job's questions either. There as here it was the encounter with God that mattered most (Job 42:5, 6). Questions were silenced, and humble worship was evoked.

5:15 The command given to Joshua to take your sandal off your foot is virtually identical with the one given to Moses at the burning bush (Ex. 3:5). This reinforces the theme developed in the Book of Joshua about Joshua's filling of Moses' role as leader of Israel. Joshua was confronted with the living God, just as Moses had been (Ex. 33:9–11). John 1:18 strongly implies that appearances such as this were preincarnate appearances of the Savior Jesus, and not of God the Father, who cannot be seen (John 6:46).

6:1—8:29 The conquest of the first two cities is described in great detail, in contrast to the remainder of their conquests, which are described quickly and in a formulaic manner in chs. 10 and 11. Jericho was the gateway into Canaan from the east, a strong, powerful city just across the Jordan River, and its collapse via a miraculous intervention by God was a dramatic first step in taking the land (ch. 6). A crucial part taking Jericho was that the Israelites were to destroy everything in the city except for Rahab and her family. However, one man, Achan, disobeyed in this matter and as a result the entire nation suffered a defeat in their next encounter, at Ai. Israel's leaders were forced to discover and deal with this sin (ch. 7). After this, the Israelites successfully took Ai (ch. 8).

6:1, 2 The verb have given communicates that something has already happened, emphasizing the role of God in Israel's victories (2:24).

6:3 The site of Jericho measured less than half a mile in circumference, only about seven acres, so the march around the city would have been completed quickly. The phrase men of war (also found in 5:4, 6; 10:24) is essentially synonymous with "mighty men of valor" (v. 2). It is used several times in the Pentateuch to refer to the adult males who came out of Egypt but who were not allowed to enter the Promised Land (Num. 31:28, 49; Deut. 2:14, 16). Now a new generation of warriors, ready to fight the Lord's battles, was called by this phrase.



Jericho was one of the oldest cities in Palestine, located on the west bank of the Jordan River almost ten miles north of the Dead Sea. The site of a perennial spring which has attracted settlers since prehistoric times, it was the first Canaanite city taken by the Israelites after they crossed the Jordan (Josh. 6:1–21). It was virtually abandoned until the time of King Ahab, when Hiel the Bethelite rebuilt it at the cost of his two sons, fulfilling Joshua's curse (6:26; 1 Kin. 16:34).

6:4 The number seven figures prominently in this passage: seven priests, seven trumpets, seven days, and seven trips around the city. Seven is a significant number in the Scriptures, beginning with the seven days of creation. It is a number that signifies completion. Its use here helps to demonstrate that the conquest of Jericho was part of a larger spiritual exercise that sanctified the people and the land for God. Another reminder of the spiritual significance of the event is the presence of the ark with the people. See ch. 3 for the importance of the ark in the crossing of the Jordan River.

6:5 The terms ram's horn and trumpet refer to the same kind of instrument. These terms refer to a horn that could produce only a few notes; it was used mainly as a signal. Here it both signaled God's presence and announced Jericho's impending doom. It is the most commonly mentioned instrument in the OT.

6:6, 7 Joshua's instructions here repeat God's instructions to him in vv. 2–5. The repetition highlights the importance of the solemn ceremony of marching around the city.

6:8, 9 Armed men is another military term. It means "men equipped for war," emphasizing their strength as they prepared for battle. The term rear guard is rare, found only in vv. 9, 13, in Num. 10:25, and figuratively of God in Is. 52:12. The contingent of warriors assigned to the ark is indeed impressive: first the armed men (vv. 7, 9), next the priests blowing horns, then the ark itself carried by priests (v. 8), and finally the rear guard (v. 9).

6:10, 11 he had the ark … circle the city: The narrative continues placing the ark in a prominent position. The people circled the city as well, but the focus is on the ark.

The mound of ancient Jericho, a walled city in southern Canaan captured by Joshua and the Israelites (Josh. 6:12–21).

6:12 The phrase rose early in the morning is found in 3:1; 6:15; 7:16; 8:10; 8:14, as well as several times in Judges. “Rose early” (Heb. shakam) is related to the word “shoulder” (Heb. shekem). This thought here is that one would rise early and shoulder his burden for the day and then set off. It indicates a good start to a day. In this case, the task at hand would not consume much time, but it was of such spiritual significance that Joshua in his eagerness made an early start.

6:13–16 On the seventh day the Israelites marched around the city seven times, symbolizing completion of the task.

6:17, 18 The important Hebrew word translated as doomed to destruction, accursed, or curse occurs in these two verses five times. This word indicates that the city of Jericho, along with its inhabitants and everything in it, was to be completely destroyed as an offering to the Lord. This idea appears especially in the Book of Joshua. The concept was related to warfare; things would be offered to the Lord by being utterly destroyed. This was not limited to Jericho, however; it could happen anywhere, with respect to material wealth (7:1, 11), people (10:28, 35, 39, 40; 11:11, 20), or even entire cities (8:26; 10:1, 37; 11:12, 21). This practice, while referred to extensively in the OT, was not common in surrounding cultures. God wanted Israel to keep itself undefiled in order to reflect His holiness. In this particular circumstance, it was vitally important that the Israelites not be tempted by the pagan worship practices of the Canaanites. God's command that they devote the city of Jericho to Him was similar to His command to give Him the firstfruits of the harvest. Whenever Israel disobeyed this command, the effects were disastrous (ch. 7). The word trouble foreshadows the problems Achan would bring on the community (7:16–24).

6:19 The word translated consecrated means "holy." The valuable metal objects were not to be destroyed but set apart for the Lord. The word treasury is also used of the treasuries in Solomon's temple (1 Kin. 7:51). However, no temple stood in Joshua's day, so the exact nature and location of this treasury is unknown. The "treasury of the house of the LORD" is mentioned in v. 24; it may have been associated with the "house of God" at Gilgal mentioned in 9:23.

6:20 With a great blast of the horns and a great shout from the people, God miraculously delivered Jericho into their hands: the wall fell down flat ("under itself"). The account of the taking of Jericho in vv. 8–20 is related in a slow, climax-building style. This first great obstacle to Israel's possession of the land fell merely at a shout of the people. The fact that it was utterly destroyed in a moment illustrates God's complete and effortless mastery over all His people's opponents.

6:21–23 The two spies who had visited Rahab's house went into her home and rescued her and her entire family. These two men rescued her so that there would be no mistake about whom they were to rescue. Remarkably, this prostitute, who was saved from utter destruction, became a member of the family line of Jesus (Ruth 4:18–22; Matt. 1:5).

6:24, 25 she dwells in Israel to this day: This may indicate that this portion of the Book of Joshua, if not the entire book, was written within the lifetime of Rahab. The reason the author of the book included such a phrase was to authenticate his narrative; people could go and see Rahab living there, if they did not believe the story. This is true also with the account of the stone altar in 4:9, and the account of the stones that covered the cave where the Canaanite kings were buried in 10:27. These were tangible evidence that people could use to confirm what happened. These were not stories made up out of thin air to give Israel a "glorified" (but fictional) past; they told of real events, and the witnesses to these events still were living.

6:26 Joshua charged them: Literally “caused them to take an oath.” The word cursed is one of the common Hebrew words for cursing; it is the opposite of blessed. Joshua cursed any attempts at rebuilding Jericho. The city was occupied sporadically after that (18:21; Judg. 3:13; 2 Sam. 10:5), but never to the previous extent. Joshua’s curse found a dramatic fulfillment many centuries later when Hiel of Bethel laid its foundation and rebuilt its gates at great personal cost (1 Kin. 16:34). The language of the 1 Kings account consciously echoes that of this passage.

6:27 As a result of this first dramatic conquest in the land of Canaan, it was apparent that the LORD was with Joshua, and news of this spread far and wide.

“trumpet”

(Heb. shophar) (Josh. 6:4, 5, 20; Ex. 19:16; Lev. 25:9) Strong’s #7782: The shophar is an animal horn (typically from a ram or a goat) used as a trumpet (Josh. 6:6; Judg. 7:8). The word can also refer to a metal trumpet (Num. 10:2–10; 1 Chr. 15:28; 2 Chr. 15:14). The shophar was a signaling instrument used in warfare (Judg. 3:27) and for assembling the people at religious festivals, such as the Day of Atonement (Lev. 25:9; 2 Sam. 6:5; Joel 2:1). A trumpet blast announced God’s descent to Mount Sinai to reveal His Law (Ex. 19:20). Both the OT and NT mention a trumpet announcing the day of the Lord, when He will come in judgment (Zeph. 1:16; Matt. 24:31).

7:1 This verse is a transition between the story of the conquest of Jericho and that of the defeat at Ai. It sets up the next chapter (especially vv. 20, 21). The phrase committed a trespass means "committed a treacherous violation." The names of Achan and his forebears in this verse are found again in 1 Chr. 2:6, 7. Usually whenever the anger of the LORD burned against Israel; He raised up an adversary against the nation to threaten and overpower it. Here God used the small army of Ai. The Lord's anger did not subside until Achan and his family had been punished (7:26).

7:2, 3 Ai, which is beside Beth Aven, on the east side of Bethel: That is, Ai was a small city west of Jericho. Ai means "ruin," and some have wondered if the name here may play some role in its interpretation in this text. spy out: The Hebrew word for spies (2:1) and spying is related to the word for "feet." The spies investigated the land by going through it on foot 7:4 Israel's force of three thousand men was a very small contingent indeed compared to the totals that they had available. According to 4:13, the number of warriors from east of the Jordan alone was 40,000.

7:5 Israel suffered thirty-six casualties before retreating. Although minor, this was Israel's first defeat in the land and a great surprise, especially after the inspiring events of the siege of Jericho. the descent: The topography west of Jericho rises sharply up out of the Jordan Valley. It appears that the men of Ai chased the Israelites eastward, down the steep hills, toward Jericho, from where they had come. the hearts of the people melted: In an ironic twist, the very words that Rahab used to describe the inhabitants of Jericho's fears in the face of the Israelites (2:11) are now used of the Israelites' fears of the men of tiny Ai. The effects of sin are often very demoralizing.

7:6 tore his clothes, and fell to the earth … put dust on their heads: The actions of mourning here are much more dramatic than typical mourning customs in the modern world. However, these were common actions in Israel and the ancient Middle East. Other mourning customs in Israel included weeping (Ps. 6:6), beating the chest (Is. 32:12), lifting up of the hands (Ezra 9:5; Ps. 141:2), lying or sitting in silence (Judg. 20:26; 2 Sam. 12:16), bowing the head (Lam. 2:10), fasting (2 Sam. 3:35), wearing sackcloth (Gen. 37:34), and sprinkling ashes, dust, or dirt (2 Sam. 15:32). However, the Israelites were strictly prohibited from practicing some pagan mourning rites, such as cutting the body or shaving the beard (Lev. 19:28; Deut. 14:1; Jer. 16:6).

IN DEPTH

Ai

• Canaanite city probably located east of Bethel (Gen. 12:8) near Beth Aven (Josh. 7:2), and north of Michmash (Is. 10:28).

• Name meant “heap” or “ruin.”

• Near where Abraham pitched his tent before journeying to Egypt (Gen. 12:8).

• Probably a small city at the time of the conquest, and thus said by Joshua’s spies to be no match for Israel (Josh. 7:3). After a humiliating defeat caused by Achan’s sin, 30,000 men tricked Ai’s warriors into an ambush and took the city, burned it to the ground, and hanged its king (8:28, 29).

• Possibly the place later inhabited by the Ephraimites (1 Chr. 7:28, Ayyah).

• Exact location still a subject of some dispute.

7:7, 8 Joshua’s bitter words echoed various complaints by the Israelites in the wilderness (Ex. 16:3; 17:3; Num. 11:4–6; 14:2, 3; 20:3–5). The certainty of the past was often preferable to the difficulties of the present and the uncertainty of the future. Joshua’s desire to have remained on the other (east) side of the Jordan demonstrated his selective memory, since that spot had problems of its own. Indeed the Israelites had at times wanted to return to Egyptian slavery (Num. 11:4–6).

7:9 Despite Joshua’s shortsightedness in v. 7, here he showed that he was aware of the larger issue at stake: God’s great name—His reputation.

7:10–15 God’s response to Joshua and the elders’ mourning reinforced the importance of holiness. Israel—not just Achan—had sinned, and God would not tolerate it. This passage also shows that God had consistent standards for both Israel and the Canaanites. He had ordered Israel to exterminate the Canaanites because of their sin; He could not allow Israel to accommodate corruption, even that of one man, especially when the instructions concerning the infraction were so clear (v. 11; Deut. 7:26).

7:11 Hebrew has several words for sin. Sinned here means "missing the mark" of a standard set by God; transgressed means "crossing a boundary" set by God. This verse highlights the seriousness of Achan's offense, attributed here to the nation Israel, by referring to the sin in various ways: Israel had (1) sinned, (2) transgressed the Lord's covenant, (3) taken some of the accursed things, (4) stolen, (5) deceived, and (6) put the things among their own stuff. The quick, staccato accumulation of these verbs accentuates the severity of the action, since it was essentially one act. My covenant: The word covenant refers to many different dealings of God with His people at different times. Here the specific reference appears to be to the portion of the covenant that referred to the annihilation of the Canaanites (Deut. 20:10–20).

7:12 That God would declare the people of Israel doomed to destruction, as Jericho had been, because of their sin was a serious statement. It meant God would no longer be with Israel until the sin was removed from the camp. God had specifically promised to be with His people (1:5, 9). This threat to withdraw His presence emphasizes once again God's absolute standards and His demand for holiness.

7:13, 14 The relationship between obedience and blessing and disobedience and cursing is well illustrated here: Israel would have no further successes until the sin had been uncovered.

7:15, 16 The Hebrew word translated a disgraceful thing denotes a blatant and senseless disregard for God's will. The text does not say by what method God indicated that the tribe of Judah was taken and the guilty party found out.

7:17–19 give glory to the LORD … and make confession … and tell me: These three actions commanded by Joshua are aspects of one event. By telling Joshua his sin, Achan was confessing to God, and by his confession, he was indeed glorifying God. We too dishonor God when we hide our sins from Him, and we honor Him when we confess them.

7:20, 21 a beautiful Babylonian garment: Literally, "one beautiful garment of Shinar." The land of Shinar is mentioned in Gen. 11:2 as the place where men built the Tower of Babel. two hundred shekels of silver: The shekel was the basic unit of weight for silver, and it was slightly more than fourtenths of an ounce. The total weight of the silver was considerable, more than eighty ounces. The gold Achan took weighed fifty shekels, or about twenty ounces. coveted: Achan's actions, besides violating God's instructions, also were a violation of the tenth commandment (Ex. 20:17). Achan had made fruitless attempts to hide his sin from God, from whom nothing can be hidden (Ps. 139:7–12).

7:22–24 Achan was brought out to be stoned, not only with each of the items he had stolen, but also with all that he had and his entire household. This was a severe punishment, but it illustrated God's firm insistence on holiness. Achan's sin had infected all Israel (7:1), and ridding Israel of the stain of this sin required the annihilation of everything with which Achan had intimate contact. Ironically for Achan, God allowed the Israelites to take the spoil in the next victory, at the second battle of Ai (8:2). Achan's greed was his own downfall.

7:25, 26 Achor is literally "trouble."

8:1–29 The victory over Ai was Israel's first true military victory in the land. God was no longer angry with Israel, since atonement had been made for its sin, and the task now was to get on with the conquest. Thus, He gave the city of Ai into the Israelites' hands, which they captured via an elaborate ambush.

8:1 The words Do not be afraid, nor be dismayed echo the words God used to encourage Joshua in 1:9. The sins of Achan had broken the special relationship God had established with His people, and so God reiterated His encouragement to Joshua. These words reinforce the statement of 7:26 that God had forgiven Israel, that He had "turned from the fierceness of His anger." people of war: The usual term is "men of war" (5:4, 6). This phrase seems to emphasize the unity of the entire nation in doing battle, even though it was most likely only the men who actually engaged in the battles. I have given: The conquest of the city was certain because God had willed it.

8:2 booty for yourselves: In contrast to the instructions concerning Jericho (6:17–19), this time the Israelites were allowed to take and keep spoils of war for themselves. Had Achan been less greedy, he could have participated in this as well. However, the Israelites were still to kill the inhabitants of Ai.

8:3–13 On the face of it, this section seems to describe two ambush forces sent out on two different days (vv. 3–9 and 10–13; especially vv. 3, 12). However, this is not according to God's instructions in v. 2, and it presents the particular difficulty of a first (improbably large) ambush force of 30,000 men (v. 3) being forced to spend two nights and a day in hiding near Ai without being detected by its inhabitants (vv. 3, 9, 13). Note also that the entire population of Ai, according to v. 25, is only 12,000. More probably, there was one ambush force. If so, the best way of understanding the section sees vv. 11–13 as a parenthetical aside, recapitulating the events already described in vv. 3–9. Thus the sequence of events would be as follows. Joshua commissioned a group of perhaps 5000 men to lie in ambush west of Ai, as Yahweh had instructed (vv. 2–4, 12, 13). He sent them out (v. 9), along with another fighting force ("the people of war") to be stationed north of the city (v. 11), and he himself spent the night with them (vv. 9, 13). He and the people went up to Ai the next morning (v. 10).

8:4–6 A select group of men was to lie in ambush … behind the city, that is, to the west. The main group of people would then be stationed north of the city (vv. 12, 13).

8:7 the LORD your God will deliver it into your hand: Here as elsewhere in the historical books, military victories are attributed to God. Israel was to depend completely upon Him for its successes.

8:8 commandment: After the disobedience in ch. 7, strict obedience was important here. Joshua urged obedience to God's commands, and the people complied (vv. 2, 8, 27).

8:9–13 The phrase its rear guard refers to the ambush forces stationed to the west of the city (vv. 3, 12). The largest contingent of warriors was stationed to the north. It appears that Joshua spent the night with the people, across the valley from Ai (v. 11), but late in the night he got up and went into the valley in preparation for the day's events (v. 13).

8:14, 15 the way of the wilderness: This may indicate merely that the men of Ai fled in disarray into the wilderness. The same phrase is found again in a similar context, where a coalition of Israelites set an ambush for the Benjamites at Gibeah (Judg. 20:42). The phrase occurs one other place, at Ex. 13:18, referring to the route that Israel took from Egypt through the desert.

8:16, 17 Bethel is an important city in the Bible. It has a fine pedigree that goes back to patriarchal times, when Abraham offered a sacrifice to God there (Gen. 13:3) and Jacob had a dream from God there (Gen. 28:10–22). Bethel was near Ai to the west (7:2), although its exact site is disputed. The inhabitants of Bethel came out of their city to help the men of Ai. Since the Israelite ambush was stationed between Bethel and Ai, they may have felt threatened by the Israelites. Or it may be that Ai was a small outpost for the larger city of Bethel (7:3) and an attack on Ai was understood to be an attack on Bethel. The text does not record Bethel's defeat, although its king is listed among those conquered by Joshua (12:16). It may be that in the defeat of Ai, Bethel was also defeated and no further reference was needed.

8:18 God told Joshua to stretch out the spear toward the city to begin the attack. Evidently this signal was relayed in some way to those lying in ambush (v. 19).

8:19 set the city on fire: Among all the cities that the Israelites captured, only three are said to have been burned: Jericho (6:24), Ai (8:19), and Hazor (11:11). The people of Israel were to live in and enjoy the cities of the land. Most of Israel's battles were in the field; they generally did not have to destroy the cities.

8:20–23 The Israelites were to treat the king of Ai exactly as they had the king of Jericho (v. 2). Chapter 6 does not specify what they did to the king of Jericho, but we can infer from 8:29 that they killed him and exposed his body in a humiliating way.

8:24–26 Joshua did not draw back his hand: This verse shows Joshua maintaining his arm outstretched, with his spear in hand, until the defeat of Ai was completed. The upraised spear was more than a signal to start the battle; it was also a symbol of God's presence and help in the battle (v. 1). This episode closely parallels that in Ex. 17:8–16, where the Israelites battled the Amalekites, and Moses stretched out his hand with "the rod of God" in it (Ex. 17:9). In that account, Moses' outstretched arm stood for God's presence, because the battle went in Israel's favor when Moses' hands were up, and against Israel when he tired and dropped his hands. This episode in Joshua shows yet another way in which Joshua was the worthy successor to Moses (1:1, 5; 24:29). Note that Joshua was the military leader when Moses stretched out his hand, and now Joshua was in Moses' position while others carried on the battle.

8:27 according to the word of the LORD: God had specified that the Israelites could take the city's possessions and livestock, but nothing else (v. 2), and this verse indicates that they carried out His instructions. This undoubtedly includes their treatment of the king of Ai (v. 29).

8:28 The word heap refers to a mound of ruins. Ancient cities were usually built on high points of land near water supplies, and when a city was destroyed a new city was built on the same site atop the packed and settled debris from the former city. Thus, over time, cities came to be on top of high mounds of compacted ruins. Ai was not rebuilt; therefore it remained a heap of ruins. The Hebrew word (tel) for heap is found in only a few places in the Bible (8:28; Deut. 13:16; 11:13; Jer. 30:18; 49:2), and in such place names in the Bible as Tel Melah and Tel Harsha (Ezra 2:59) or Tel Abib (Ezek. 3:15). The equivalent Arabic word tell is used today as part of the names of many sites in Israel. Ai's very name means "The Ruin," so the judgment implicit in its name is now made explicit in this wordplay.

8:29 As God instructed (v. 27), Joshua executed the king of Ai and exposed his body on a tree (see the similar action in 10:26). But he took down the body at sundown in accordance with the injunction in Deuteronomy that a body could not remain exposed overnight (Deut. 21:22, 23). In these texts, hanged means exposing the dead body on a sharpened stake as a mark of shame and horror, not hanging by the neck. a great heap of stones: A different Hebrew word for "heap" is used here from the one in v. 28, but the connection is clear. The king's fate here is exactly the same as Achan's fate in 7:26. God would not favor His own people when they blatantly disobeyed, any more than He would favor wicked Canaanites; for his sin Achan was expelled from Israel and treated like a Canaanite.

8:30–35 The victory at Jericho and the defeat and subsequent victory at Ai were significant events in taking the land, since they were "firsts." Later victories, while certainly just as dramatic, receive little individual attention in the telling (chs. 10; 11).

8:30 Mount Ebal is mentioned only here and in Deut. 11:29; 27:4, 13. It and Mount Gerizim, directly south of it, were the sites to be used for proclaiming blessings and curses when the Israelites came into the land; specifically, Ebal was to be the site of the curses (Deut. 11:29). Here it was the site of an altar. Ebal and Gerizim are two important peaks in central Canaan flanking an east-west pass through the north-central hill country. Almost the entire Promised Land is visible from the top of Mount Ebal.

8:31 Moses … had commanded this in Deut. 27:2–10. This is another example of the explicit fulfillment of God's words; the Israelites had disobeyed enough that they wanted to make doubly sure they did it right this time. An altar of whole stones refers to unfinished stones (Deut. 27:4), which was in accord with God's earlier instructions about making altars (Ex. 20:25). The unfinished stones would have contrasted with the finished stones found in many Canaanite altars. This was a reminder that, even in such rituals as offering sacrifices, the Israelites were to be different or distinct from their neighbors. Burnt offerings were sacrifices in which the animals were entirely consumed (7:1–10; Ex. 29:18; Lev. 1:1–17). Peace offerings were offerings in which portions of the sacrificial animals were to be joyfully eaten by the ones presenting them (7:11–21; Lev. 3:1–17).

8:32 Joshua publicly wrote a copy of the law on stones, which echoed the instructions for a king in Deut. 17:18. While Joshua was not a king, several indications in the book show him in a kingly light, acting with the authority of a king and in ways in which kings were supposed to act (1:5–9; Deut. 17:14–20).

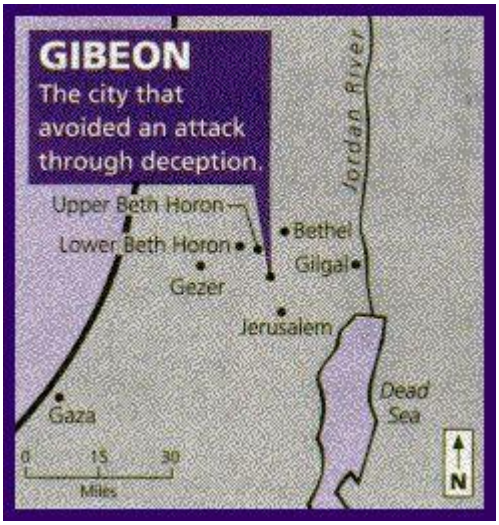
8:33 This Hebrew word for stranger could more precisely be translated "resident alien." It refers to those foreigners who lived as permanent residents within Israel. These were different from foreigners or outsiders who had incidental contact with Israel, such as travelers or traders, who had few rights within Israel (Ex. 12:43; Lev. 22:10, 25). Resident aliens enjoyed certain rights even though they were not Israelites by birth. They were allowed to take gleanings from the fields (Lev. 19:10; 23:22), and the Israelites were repeatedly instructed to give special care to them, along with the poor, the widow, and the orphan (Ex. 22:21; 23:9; Deut. 10:17–22). This special concern for aliens within Israel's borders was rooted in Israel's own alien status in Egypt, which God wanted them to remember (Ex. 22:21; 23:9; Deut. 10:17–22; 23:7). This is part of the missionary message of the OT: Israel was to treat aliens within its own borders in such a way that they would want a relationship with Israel's God. This is certainly a worthy model for Christians today, as well, in their contacts with friends, neighbors, and business associates; they are to conduct themselves in a manner that points people to their Lord (Matt. 5:16). In this passage we see aliens participating right along with the rest of the Israelites in the covenant affirmation ceremony.



Gibeon was a major Canaanite city located about six miles northwest of Jerusalem. Its name means “pertaining to a hill.” In league with three other cities—Chephirah, Beeroth, and Kirjath Jearim—Gibeon used a deceptive strategy to make lasting peace with the Israelites (Josh. 9:3–27), though the Gibeonites were forced to work at menial tasks.

8:34, 35 This was the first public reading of the Book of the Law, the entire body of the Law given by Moses, mentioned after Moses’ death.

9:1, 2 Though a coalition of Canaanite kings banded together to oppose Israel, the text does not say whether this coalition ever actually fought Israel. It disappears from the scene after v. 2. Six ethnic groups in Canaan, who often are mentioned together (3:10), are listed here. God told Israel to destroy these nations, and He did not want Israel to become allies with them under any circumstances (Ex. 23:28–33; Deut. 7:1–5; 20:16–18).

9:3 Gibeon was relatively close to Ai and about five miles northwest of Jerusalem. It is known mainly for the deceit of its inhabitants described in this chapter.

9:4–6 The Gibeonites went to great lengths to make it look as though they had come from a far country. Israel was allowed to make treaties with cities that were far from them (Ex. 34:11, 12; Deut. 20:10–18). Thus, if the Gibeonites' claim of v. 6 had been truthful, the treaty that the Israelites made with them would have been permissible. A covenant was a legal treaty. The literal wording in Hebrew is "cut a covenant," which may have referred to the ancient custom of sacrificing an animal to ratify it (Gen. 15:10).

9:7 The people of Gibeon are called Hivites, and were among the groups slated for destruction (Ex. 34:11; Deut. 20:17). Israel should not have made a treaty with them. This verse shows that the Israelites were initially suspicious of the Gibeonites.

9:8 Where do you come from is literally, "From where are you coming?" A subtle interplay between the Gibeonites' words in v. 6 and Joshua's in v. 8 reveals their differing perceptions of the situation. The Gibeonites state that they have "come from a far country," and the verb form makes it clear that, in their minds, they have reached their destination, that is, they have "arrived from a far country." When Joshua questions them, the verb form he uses makes it clear that he believes that they are merely passing by. We might paraphrase his words as, "From where are you coming as you pass by here?" The Gibeonites' deception was working; their own (secret) goal was the Israelite camp, but Joshua believed that they were on their way to someplace else.

9:9, 10 The fame of the Israelites' victories had preceded them among the Gibeonites, in the same way that it did among the inhabitants of Jericho earlier (2:9, 10).

9:11–14 The Israelites took some of the Gibeonites' provisions in order to inspect them, to confirm the Gibeonites' words. Significantly, the Israelites did not ask counsel of the LORD, contrary to God's explicit instructions to Joshua (Num. 27:21). The Israelites' confirmation of the Gibeonites' claim was purely in their own strength and on their own initiative. The mistake on Israel's part was not so much that they were deceived, but that they did not ask for the Lord's counsel. Similarly, many Christians have found themselves in difficult or disastrous circumstances because they rushed to a decision without properly consulting the Lord, His Scriptures, and His people for guidance.

9:15 Joshua made peace with them: The treaty made in this chapter has much in common with typical ancient Middle Eastern treaties of the times. A subordinate group makes the agreement with a more powerful party in order to receive protection. Its binding nature (v. 18) forms the basis for the actions taken in 10:1–27, where the Gibeonites found themselves threatened by a Canaanite coalition and appealed to the Israelites for help.

9:16–21 The deceit is discovered and the Gibeonites are confronted. Despite the Gibeonite trickery, Israel was nevertheless bound by the oath, the seriousness of which is underscored by the fact that all of vv. 18–21a are devoted to it. The congregation was angry with its leaders for having done this, but their hands were tied by the oath the leaders had taken. This is stated explicitly and in repetitive detail.

9:17–19 Chephirah, Beeroth, and Kirjath Jearim were all towns near Gibeon. The first two were in Benjamite territory (18:25, 26), and the third was on its border (18:14, 15).

9:20–23 the oath which we swore: Oath taking and swearing were solemn affairs (the Hebrew words for "to swear" and "oath" are from the same root, shaba). To take an oath was to give a sacred and unbreakable word to follow through on what was promised. From time to time, even God swore by Himself or His holiness or His great name to take certain actions (Gen. 22:16–18; Ps. 89:35; Jer. 44:26). Swearing falsely was a grave sin (Ezek. 17:16–21; Zech. 5:3, 4; Mal. 3:5). Because of the sacred, unbreakable nature of an oath, this covenant the Israelites made with the Gibeonites could not be revoked, even though it was obtained under false pretenses.

9:24–26 The report that reached the Gibeonites concerning the Israelites (v. 3) frightened them so much that they conjured up this deception. Their words your servants were clearly told bear witness to the great events of the Exodus that were not forgotten even forty years after the event (Deut. 1—3).

9:27 The phrase the place which He would choose is particularly important in Deuteronomy. It indicates that the Gibeonites were to serve only at sanctioned Israelite worship centers and not Canaanite ones. Until the Jerusalem temple was built, these centers included Shiloh (18:1) and Gibeon itself (1 Chr. 16:39). That they did so to this day (a phrase also found in 4:9; 5:9; 7:26; 8:29) shows that the Gibeonites did indeed continue this service for some time, although it is not specifically mentioned again in the OT. We may observe that in the deceit of this treaty, a people were brought into proximity with the true worship of the living God, who is able to bring good out of the worst of situations. Doubtless through this many Gibeonites came to faith in Him and became His worshipers.

10:1—11:23 These two chapters relate the accounts of Israel's conquest of northern and southern Canaan after it had gained a foothold in central Canaan. Several striking parallels can be seen between the two chapters. Both open with accounts of a coalition of kings who oppose Israel's invasion (10:1–27; 11:1–9). Both mention God's help in repelling the attacks (ch. 10 more than ch. 11, but see 11:8). Both open with descriptions of decisive battles (10:1–15; 11:1–9), and are followed by further military activity related to these (10:16–27; 11:10–15). Each shows one main instigator of the coalition. In ch. 10 it is Adoni-Zedek, king of Jerusalem; in ch. 11 it is Jabin, king of Hazor. And each chapter ends with a summary of the consolidation of power in each area (10:28–; 11:16–23).

10:1–4 Once again Israel's reputation and victories had spread among the Canaanites, striking fear into their hearts. In contrast to Rahab, who turned to Israel's God in faith, and to the Gibeonites, who entered (by trickery) into a treaty with the Israelites, this coalition decided to resist Israel.

10:1, 2 Political and military calculations led the five Canaanite kings to conclude that if such a great city as Gibeon had to make peace with the seemingly invincible Israelites, their only option was to band together and attack (v. 5). Ai was a strong city, a fact to which Israel closed their eyes when they became overconfident in themselves (7:3).

10:3–5 The name Amorites probably refers to the inhabitants of the central mountain region of Palestine, although only Jerusalem and Hebron are really in the hill country. The king of Jerusalem was leader of a coalition of five kings against Gibeon. The events at Ai had struck fear into the kings' hearts, especially now that Gibeon, a prominent city, had made a treaty with Israel (ch. 9). Gibeon's treaty with Israel may have been a renunciation of one with Jerusalem. This could explain the special concern of the king of Jerusalem.

10:6, 7 Joshua ascended from Gilgal because Gilgal and Jericho were in the deep Jordan valley; he would have had to go up into the hill country in the central portion of Canaan to help the Gibeonites.

10:8 See 1:5, 9 for similar words of encouragement.

10:9 For Joshua's men to have marched all night from Gilgal and then attacked speaks well of their stamina. Their night march covered about twenty miles up steep terrain, with gear, under stress, in the middle of the night, and with a battle still before them.

10:10, 11 This verse summarizes the victory; vv. 11–13 give the details. the LORD routed them: Despite Joshua's presence with his warriors (v. 7), it was God who gave the victory and God who received the credit. the road that goes to Beth Horon: One escape route for the Canaanite kings went northwest, down from the hill country toward the coast. Azekah was a town over the hills to the southwest of Gibeon, some distance away. That some were fleeing in this direction while others were fleeing toward Beth Horon indicates the completeness of the rout. The location of Makkedah is unknown, but presumably it was somewhere near Azekah.

10:12–15 The second section describing the battle is introduced with a Hebrew word for Then (az) which reveals that important action took place at the same time as (not subsequent to) that of vv. 6–11. This means that somehow the hailstorm of v. 11 and the phenomena of vv. 12 and 13 either describe the same thing or (more probably) happened at the same time as part of the same miracle. The author's emphasis comes in v. 14. He marvels not so much at the miracle of v. 13 but that God heard and responded to the voice of a man (v. 14) who had been interceding miraculously for Israel (v. 12). The two previous miracles on Israel's behalf—stopping the waters of the Jordan and the victory over Jericho—had been God's initiative; this time, He moved in response to a man's petition. This again highlights Joshua's importance in the book, and it underscores God's faithfulness to His people.

10:12 In the sight of Israel, Joshua commanded the Sun and the Moon to stand still over Gibeon until the Israelites completed their task. The words of this verse form a two-part section of well-balanced poetry, and the words in v. 13 comment on them with a three-part echo.

IN DEPTH

Miracles

Open the Bible wherever you like; you will soon find the mention of an event that only God could do. These stories of God's intervention in nature occur without apology throughout the Bible, and often only with the barest of details. The reader may be left wondering exactly what happened.

The account of Israel's victory over the five kings of the Amorites is a perfect example. Joshua 10:13 says that in response to Joshua's prayer, "the sun stood still, and the moon stopped." This miraculous event played a key role in Israel's victory that day. Even accepting this as a miracle, which the narrative surely bids us to do, leaves some questions unanswered. We know that the sun does not move around the earth, so it was not the sun that literally stopped, but what took place that day? And how did it help Israel?

Some take the text to mean that God stopped the earth's rotation. "The sun stood still" means that the position of the sun in the sky remained constant. Since the sun's position is determined by the earth's rotation, the earth's rotation must have stopped. This delay gave the Israelites the daylight they needed to finish routing their enemies rather than letting them escape.

Others suggest that God caused an unusual refraction of light in the earth's atmosphere that caused the sun to remain visible for a very lengthy period of time. The sun appeared to stop, but without any change in the rate of the earth's rotation. Again, this gave Israel time to finish their rout.

Others reinterpret the miracle. The verb translated "stand still" in vv. 12, 13 can also be translated "cease, stop." Some scholars therefore say that Joshua was asking that the sun stop shining, not that it stop moving. The long night's march, largely uphill and with full battle gear, left his troops tired. Joshua asked God to stop the sun from beating down on his troops before exhaustion overcame them. Joshua was seeking a cooler day, not a longer one.

Of course, we do not know exactly what happened. What we know for sure is that God intervened in the normal course of nature at exactly the right moment to give the Israelites victory over their enemies. As the writer of Joshua points out, the greatest marvel lies not in the occurrence of the miracle itself but that "the Lord heeded the voice of a man" (Josh. 10:14).

10:13 The Book of Jasher (2 Sam. 1:18) confirms what the Book of Joshua reports here. It is not part of the Bible, and no part of it has survived.

10:14 the LORD heeded: This is the climax of the section. The author of Joshua marvels (perhaps quoting from the Book of Jasher), not that a miracle happened, but that God listened to the voice of one man and fought on Israel's behalf so grandly. This is plain proof that one person can gain God's attention in prayer.

10:15–18 This verse is identical to v. 43 and appears to be out of place chronologically. It probably is part of the quote from the Book of Jasher, which omits the material intervening in vv. 16–42, between the account of the miracle involving the sun and the moon and Joshua's return. Some scholars see v. 15 as a scribal duplication, since the ends of vv. 14 and 42 are very similar. This too is possible, although perhaps not as plausible as the first option.

10:19 delivered them into your hand: Again Joshua gave God credit for the Israelites' victory. enter their cities: The fortified cities of Canaan offered some protection to their people. That is why the ambush at Ai was designed to draw the people out of the city (8:17). In v. 20, we see that some people escaped into the fortified cities.

10:20, 21 The slaughter of the Canaanites was great, but some escaped. This explains why there were still people in these towns later (vv. 31–37). No one moved his tongue: Literally, "sharpened his tongue." It means "to criticize" or "to slander."

10:22–24 Joshua told the captains to put their feet on the necks of these kings as a clear declaration of victory. See Ps. 110:1: "I [will] make Your enemies Your footstool"; and 1 Cor. 15:25–27, where God places Jesus' enemies "under His feet" (Ps. 8:6). Ancient sculptural reliefs show Assyrian kings doing this to their vanquished enemies.

10:25 be strong and of good courage: Joshua encouraged the people in the same terms God had used to encourage him (1:6, 9; 10:8). Now Joshua had the authority to give this exhortation to others.

10:26, 27 hanged them on five trees … until evening: Joshua did to these five kings what he had earlier done to the king of Ai (8:29). As before, he took the bodies down before sundown in accordance with Mosaic legislation (8:29).

10:28–43 After the in-depth account of the battle in 10:1–27, the narrative now moves quickly to summarize the Israelites' southern campaign in Canaan. The kings and people of seven southern cities are mentioned in a series of similar accounts. The Israelites had entered Canaan in the middle, at Jericho. Subsequently their campaigns went through the middle first, turning south (ch. 10) and then north (ch. 11). The fact that exactly seven cities are listed suggests that this may be a summarizing account, describing the destruction of representative cities. Only bare details of their destructions are given, and the successive accounts contain many repeated phrases. Three of the cities (Lachish, Eglon, and Hebron) are ones whose kings had already opposed the Israelites (v. 3). The picture in this section is unequivocally one of complete and swift annihilation of the people throughout the entire region. However, the work was not complete.

10:28, 29 The first city mentioned is the one toward which the Canaanite coalition had fled, Makkedah (vv. 10, 16). The five kings had fled and hidden themselves in a cave.

10:30–32 Here and in vv. 32, 42, we are reminded that the LORD was Israel's warrior.

10:33–39 The account of the capture of Gezer is mentioned only incidentally to the account of the capture of Lachish. According to 16:10, Canaanites were still (or again) living in Gezer some time later.

10:40 This verse presents the first conclusion to the accounts that had begun in 9:1, 2. Here we see that Joshua was victorious over all who lived in the mountain country (the word is the same as "hills" in 9:1) and the South and the lowland and the wilderness slopes. The word for South is "Negev," which refers to the desert in the southern part of the land. The wilderness slopes are either the western slopes leading down to the lowland near the Mediterranean Sea or else the steep slopes going down to the Dead Sea to the east of the central mountainous area. This summary statement covers the central and southern portions of the land of Canaan, but it does not include the coastlands (13:2–).

10:41–43 Neither Kadesh Barnea nor Gaza has been mentioned previously in Joshua; their inclusion here marks the southernmost limits of the land conquered. Gaza was a Philistine city, unconquered in 13:3. Goshen, even as far as Gibeon marks the southern and northern limits of this conquest. Goshen here is not the area in the northeastern Nile delta where the Israelites had lived before (Gen. 45:10; 46:28; Ex. 8:22; 9:26), but rather the city in the southern hill country of Canaan mentioned in 11:16; 15:51.

11:1–23 After conquering the southern coalition arrayed against them, Israel now faced a hostile coalition in the north as well, which it defeated (vv. 1–15).

11:1 Hazor was a large and strategic city in northern Israel; it is called "the head of all those kingdoms" in v. 10.

11:2 The geographical description here names areas rather than cities. Chinneroth is another name for the Sea of Galilee (12:3). There was also a town called Chinnereth on the northwest side of the sea (19:35). the heights of Dor on the west: Dor was a seaport on the Mediterranean, and no hills are nearby; some commentators understand this to mean "the dunes of Dor."

11:3 The inclusion of the Jebusite, that is, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, is striking because Jerusalem was south of Jericho. Evidently, the Canaanites so feared the Israelite threat that they sought help from far and wide. Mount Hermon in the land of Mizpah was in the far north, the highest point in northern Palestine. Mizpah was a name of several cities in Israel's history, including one near Lachish (15:38), one in Benjamin in the south (18:26), and another one in Gilead east of the Jordan (Judg. 10:17).

11:4 Horses at this time were for pulling chariots. These vehicles accompanied the infantry and carried a rider with a bow or a supply of spears. The Canaanite armies did not use mounted warriors. These armies came well-armed to fight the Israelites, but it did not matter. God still defeated them (vv. 6–9). Only in the battles of Jericho and Ai did the Israelites initiate the action. Here, as in the other battles described in Joshua, the enemy—usually well-armed and in great numbers—attacked the Israelites. God limited the size of the Israelite army so that the Israelites would not trust their military power. Similarly, the instructions for a king in Deut. 17:14–20 explicitly state that the king was not "to multiply horses for himself" (17:16); that is, not to depend on his military might, but rather on God.

11:5 The site of the waters of Mero is not known with certainty. Earlier scholars identified it with Lake Huleh, the small lake that was situated north of the Sea of Galilee until it was drained in modern times. But most scholars today believe the better site was somewhere between the Sea of Galilee and the Mediterranean coast.

11:6, 7 God promised to deliver Israel's enemies into their hands by tomorrow about this time. This is especially significant in light of the impressive numbers arrayed against Israel. These are the same words used many years later by Elisha to predict the escape of Samaria from a siege imposed by the Syrians (2 Kin. 7:1). In both cases God's promise came true.

11:8 Greater Sidon was a Phoenician city on the Mediterranean coast, and the Brook Misrephoth was south of it. The defeat of the Canaanites described here shows them fleeing in all directions in a total rout.

11:9 as the LORD had told him: Joshua was careful to do exactly as instructed (v. 6).

In their push into northern Canaan, Joshua and his warriors destroyed the city of Hazor (Josh. 11:10, 11). This mound (center) marks the site of the city.

11:10 Hazor was formerly the head: This is probably why Joshua struck at Hazor first, and why the text details its destruction. Excavation of Hazor has shown several destructions in the Late Bronze Age, one from about 1400 B.C. that could easily be attributed to Joshua.

11:11–13 Jericho and Ai were the only other cities burned. Most of the cities of Canaan were taken without being destroyed; their armies were defeated on the battlefield. In this way, most of the cities could be inhabited by Israel without rebuilding.

11:14, 15 Here, as with Ai, the Israelites were allowed to take all the spoil for themselves (8:2, 27). Their treatment of the inhabitants was the pattern for all their Canaanite targets: They left none breathing, but killed everyone (6:21; 8:22; 10:28, 30, 32, 33, 35, 37, 39, 40; 11:8, 11, 12). This complete annihilation of a population group has posed a significant problem for some people, who have felt that Joshua showed unjustified bloodthirstiness. Yet God had told Moses why Israel was to carry out this destruction in Canaan (Deut. 7:2–11; 20:16–18): the Canaanites were being judged by God for their wickedness.

11:16, 17 These verses summarize both the northern campaign and this entire section of the book (chs. 9—11). Verse 16 mentions many of the same territories as does 10:40, 41. The southern limit of the conquest is given here; Mount Halak is near Kadesh Barnea (10:41), and Seir is the hill country of Edom, southeast of the Dead Sea. Baal Gad … Mount

Hermon: This is the northern limit of the conquest. Baal Gad was in the Lebanon valley, northwest of Mount Hermon.

11:18–20 to harden their hearts: The persons whose hearts God hardened were not good people, but were people already committed to doing evil (Ps. 14:1–3; Rom. 3:10–18). The marvel is that God has reached out to so many in order to graciously make them His children. See Rom. 9:14–24 concerning God's hardening of Pharaoh's heart.

11:21, 22 The destruction of the Anakim from the hill country was especially significant. Their fearsome presence had caused the Israelites to rebel against God's command to enter Canaan many years before (Num. 13:22, 28, 32, 33). But as this generation learned, their size did not matter.

11:23 This verse ends this section (chs. 9—11). It is a transitional verse, looking back to summarize the conquests and looking forward to anticipate the inheritance of the land. The statement the land rested from war draws the first section of the book to a close. The next section before the distribution of Israel's inheritance is the list of defeated Canaanite kings (ch. 12). The idea of rest for the entire nation is found in such passages as Deut. 12:10; 25:19, and it is echoed in the summarizing passages of Josh. 21:44; 23:1.

12:1–6 The Israelites' earlier conquests east of the Jordan are mentioned here, their victories over Sihon, king of Heshbon, and Og, king of Bashan. The Israelites defeated them under Moses' leadership and took possession of their land at that time (Num. 21:21–35). The detailed description of the territory they ruled makes more impressive the victory Israel had won. Verse 6 confirms that this indeed had been given as an inheritance to the two and one-half tribes who settled there.

12:6, 7 The language of these verses makes it plain that Joshua succeeded Moses in his various roles, first as conqueror and second as giver of the land. The two men are described in the same way: As conquerors, Joshua and the children of Israel (v. 7), follow Moses … and the children of Israel (v. 6). As land-giver, Joshua gave (v. 7), as Moses … had given (v. 6).

12:7–24 The first major section of Joshua is now complete. The Israelites have been given the land, with God's help, and they have destroyed their enemies. The stage is set for parceling out the land and Israel settling into it, hundreds of years after it was first promised to Israel's ancestors.

13:1—21:45 The second half of the Book of Joshua is concerned with the distribution of the land. With its sedentary pace and relative lack of action, it is a sharp contrast to the action-filled first half. A major emphasis is Yahweh, the God of Israel, as the great land-owner and land-giver.

13:1–12 Despite the picture of complete victory in chs. 10; 11, God told Joshua that there remains very much land yet to be possessed. This included territories of the Philistines and their neighbors to the south, the Phoenician coastland to the north, and the northern, mountainous territories of Lebanon. The famous five cities of the Philistines are mentioned (Gaza, Ashdod, Ashkelon, Gath, and Ekron). A hint that their territory remained to be taken appears already in 11:22, in the references to Gaza, Gath, and Ashdod. But Joshua was too old to command the remaining struggle for the land. God Himself would drive out the remaining inhabitants; Joshua merely had to apportion the land to the nine and one-half tribes west of the Jordan.

13:2, 3 the five lords of the Philistines: The word lords here translates a Philistine word, not a Hebrew word; it is the only clearly Philistine word recorded in the Bible. It is related to the Greek word that means “tyrant.”

“inheritance”

(Heb. nachalah) (Josh. 13:7; Deut. 4:20; Pss. 16:5, 94:14) Strong’s #5159: The word inheritance, meaning “possession” or “property,” is linked to the promises of God, particularly those involving the Promised Land (Gen. 13:14–17). When this word is used of the Promised Land, it does not merely refer to what a person wills to his children. Rather God, the Owner of the entire world, had granted His people a specific parcel of ground. He had fixed its boundaries and promised to deliver it to them. However, the concept of Israel’s inheritance transcends a simple association with the land. David and Jeremiah both affirm that God Himself is the real inheritance of His people (Ps. 16:5; Jer. 10:16). God’s people can find joy and fulfillment in their relationship with God. Nothing this world can offer as an inheritance compares with God Himself (1 Pet. 1:4).

13:13 This verse shows that the comprehensive picture of the conquest in chs. 10 and 11 has another side to it, and that Israel had not driven out some peoples (the Geshurites and the Maacathites) and that these peoples would remain (as a contaminating presence) within Israel for many years.

13:14–21 to the tribe of Levi He had given no inheritance: This is an important concept in the Book of Joshua. Here, previous directives about the Levites’ inheritance were obeyed (Num. 18:20–24; Deut. 10:8, 9; 18:1–5). Originally, the tribe of Levi was sentenced to be landless for its violent behavior (Gen. 49:5–7), but later the Levites redeemed themselves (Ex. 32:25–28) and were promised a blessing (Deut. 33:8–11). Of the original twelve sons of Jacob, Joseph’s inheritance was divided between his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh. This would make thirteen tribes, but excluding Levi from land inheritance kept the number to twelve (14:3, 4). The Levites did have cities in the territories of each tribe (21:1–42). Instead of a land inheritance, the sacrifices of God would be their privileged inheritance.

13:22 Balaam was the pagan fortune-teller who had been hired by Balak, king of Moab, to curse the Israelites in the wilderness (Num. 22—24). He found that he could speak only what God told him to, yet he sinned by inciting the Moabite women to seduce the Israelite men (Num. 25:1–9; 31:16). Hence, the children of Israel also killed … Balaam. This record of Balaam’s death echoes the notice found at Num. 31:8. The story of how God turned Balaam's desire to curse Israel into a blessing instead is celebrated in several passages (Josh. 24:9, 10; Deut. 23:4, 5; Neh. 13:2; Mic. 6:5).

13:23–32 Large Canaanite cities such as Jericho were typically protected by walls. But there were many smaller villages around the cities. Thus, the cities and their villages made up the small city-states typical of Canaan at this time. The villages were permanent settlements without walls, outlying farming villages.

13:33 Levi … as He had said to them: This verse reiterates the information about the Levites' landless inheritance (v. 14); here, however, the inheritance is said to be God Himself and not the sacrifices. Because of their unique position, the Levites' relationship with God would be special.

14:1–5 The introduction to the land distribution emphasizes the Levites, who have just been mentioned (13:33). It also emphasizes God as the One who gives the land to Israel. It does this by mentioning His commands to Moses and by mentioning Eleazar, the priestassistant in the land distribution. This shows that the inheritance of the land was a religious matter and not merely a real estate transaction.

14:2–5 God's place as the giver of the land is also highlighted by mention of the lot. God had commanded the casting of lots to determine Israel's inheritance (Num. 26:55). Thus, that their inheritance was by lot does not mean that it was by chance, but that God Himself determined who got what land (18:6, 8, 10; Prov. 16:33). The lot is also mentioned in 15:1; 16:1; 17:1.

14:6 Caleb is described here and elsewhere as the Kenizzite (v. 14; Num. 32:12). The Kenizzites were a non-Israelite group descended from Esau through Kenaz (Gen. 15:19; 36:11, 15, 42). Some of this group had apparently associated themselves with Judah at an early stage (Num. 13:6). It seems that Caleb, one of the most faithful to God of his time, was just a generation removed from a non-Israelite family.

14:7–9 These verses review events recorded in Num. 13; 14. The promise of Caleb's inheritance mentioned in v. 9 refers to God's words in Num. 14:24.

14:10, 11 The span of eighty-five years indicates the period of time covered by most of the Book of Joshua. According to v. 7, Caleb was forty when he was sent in to spy out the land. Now it was forty-five years later. Since forty years were spent in the wilderness, the conquest occupied five years.

14:12 It was the Anakim who had frightened ten of the Israelite spies forty-five years before, triggering Israel's rebellion against God (Num. 13). Caleb was no more afraid of them now than he had been then, even though he was now considerably older. As he says, it may be that the LORD will be with me—a use of understatement to express certainty.

14:13 Joshua blessed him: To bless others in the name of the Lord expresses the desire for them to experience God's best (Gen. 27:27–29; 47:10; 49:1–28; Judg. 5:24; Neh. 11:2). It is more than wishful thinking, because blessing in the name of God taps into the power and resources of God. In the Bible, blessings include children (Gen. 1:28; 28:3), land (Gen. 26:3; 28:4), wealth (Gen. 28:12–14), and a good reputation among others

(Gen. 12:3; 22:18). When people are said to bless God, it means they are worshiping Him, ascribing worth to Him and His name (Ps. 104:1), and identifying Him as the source of their good (Ps. 103:1, 2).

14:14 Caleb's wholehearted devotion to God was never in question, even in the wilderness: He wholly followed the LORD (v. 8). As a result, he received the land that he requested. In the Bible, people are sometimes rewarded in this life for their faithfulness to God, but not always (Heb. 11:32–40). The believer's ultimate blessing will come in eternity. Those who set their hope on that promise will lose nothing, no matter what they suffer in this life.

“rest”

(Heb. shaqat) (Josh. 14:15) Strong’s #8252: This Hebrew word translated rest means “to be at peace.” It implies a freedom from anxiety and conflict. God had promised the Israelites rest in the Promised Land (Ex. 33:14; Deut. 3:1–20; 12:9, 10). For the nomadic Israelites, this meant freedom from wandering and fighting. In the Book of Joshua, the idea of rest is related specifically to the conflicts and hostilities Israel had with their neighbors. God promised His people a peaceful place to settle. Obtaining this rest depended on Israel’s complete obedience to God’s command to drive out the Canaanites (11:23; 14:15). The NT also speaks of the concept of rest. Christians are told that heaven will bring them rest from death, pain, sin, and all other earthly struggles (Heb. 4:1, Rev. 21:4).

14:15 Kirjath Arba: This was the former name of the city of Hebron (Gen. 23:2); it means “city of Arba.” Arba was the founding ancestor of the Anakim and is mentioned only here and in 15:13; 21:11. the land had rest from war: This comment echoes 11:23, which concludes the account of the southern and northern campaigns.

15:1–12 The boundaries of Judah in southern Canaan are now described in detail. This reinforces the importance of the inheritance and the exact location that each tribe received.

15:13–19 This second passage about Caleb's inheritance (14:6–15) explains how he also took Debir, another city that originally had been taken by Joshua (10:38, 39) but which had evidently fallen back into Canaanite hands. This section closely parallels Judg. 1:12–.

15:20–63 The cities that Judah inherited number more than a hundred and include their surrounding villages. The list has four parts: (1) cities in the south (vv. 21–32); (2) cities in the lowland (vv. 33–47); (3) cities in the mountain country (vv. 48–60); and (4) cities in the wilderness near the Dead Sea (vv. 61, 62).

15:63 The Jebusites, who inhabited Jerusalem before the Israelites arrived, stubbornly held on to Jerusalem because the tribe of Judah did not follow through on its obligation to destroy them completely. God did not want Israel to make peace with the inhabitants of the land, but instead to drive them out and utterly destroy them (Num. 33:52–55; Deut. 7:1–5; 20:16–18). Judg. 1:21 repeats this verse almost verbatim, except that it states that Benjamin (not Judah) failed to drive out the Jebusites. This is because Jerusalem sat astride the boundary between Benjamin and Judah. In the early period, Jerusalem did not strictly belong to either tribe. The tribe of Judah did capture Jerusalem later (Judg. 1:8), but Benjamin did not drive out the Jebusites in their portion (Judg 1:21). Apparently Judah took the unfortified southwestern hill, while the tribe of Benjamin failed to take the walled city on the eastern hill. The details are not entirely clear, but it is stated that Jebusites and Israelites lived together (15:63; Judg. 1:21). The city effectively belonged to the Jebusites until the time of David (2 Sam. 5:5–10). Indeed, in Judg. 19:11, 12, the Levite from the hill country of Ephraim called Jebus (Jerusalem) an "alien city."

16:1–4 A single lot determined the inheritance of both of the tribes of Joseph—Ephraim and Manasseh. That these two tribes together received only one lot caused them later to complain (17:14–18).

16:5–9 The separate cities: Some of Ephraim's cities were actually part of Manasseh's inheritance (17:9). The reason for this is not clear, but it may have its basis in the greater blessing extended to Ephraim by Jacob (Gen. 48). Manasseh also inherited towns from the territories of two other tribes, Issachar and Asher (17:11).

16:10 they did not drive out the Canaanites: This previews the many statements about incomplete conquests in Judg. 1. forced laborers: The status of the Canaanites in Gezer was somewhat similar to that of the Gibeonites (9:27), except that there was no treaty involved here, so the status of these Canaanites was somewhat lower.

17:1, 2 Manasseh’s firstborn child Machir (Gen. 50:23; Num. 26:29) had already received a separate portion, Gilead and Bashan—that is, Manasseh’s portion east of the Jordan (13:29–31). The rest of Manasseh’s portion was west of the Jordan (vv. 2–13).

Division of Land Among the Twelve Tribes

17:3–13 Here Joshua faithfully carried out the commands of God through Moses in the matter of the inheritance of Zelophehad, who had no sons (Num. 26:33; 27:1–11). Joshua made sure that the daughters received their inheritance as promised. This brief narrative emphasizes once again how God keeps His promises, a persistent theme throughout the Book of Joshua. The faith of the daughters of Zelophehad in claiming the land recalls that of Caleb, who also claimed land on the basis of God's promise (14:6–15).

17:14–18 The episode here revives the complaint of the two tribes of Joseph that they together had received only one lot. Joshua encouraged them to take land in the hill country despite their fears of the Canaanites there (vv. 15, 17, 18; Num. 13:28–33). The episode presents a sharp contrast to Caleb's willingness to take the initiative in claiming his land (14:6–15). It also reminds us that plenty of land remained to be taken (13:1).

18:1, 2 Up to this point, Israel's central encampment in the land had been at Gilgal, near Jericho, where they had observed several religious ceremonies (4:19, 20; 5:2–12; 9:6). Now the entire congregation moved to Shiloh, about fifteen miles northwest of Jericho, where they set up the tent of meeting. This would remain an important Israelite religious center for several hundred years (19:51; 21:2; Judg. 18:31; 21:12; 1 Sam. 1:9) until the taking of Jerusalem in David's day. The ark was kept there (1 Sam. 3:3), and it was brought into battle against the Philistines, who captured it when Samuel was judge (1 Sam. 4). Soon after this, Shiloh was destroyed (Ps. 78:60; Jer. 7:14). tabernacle of meeting: This is the first of two references to the tabernacle in this book; the other reference is in 19:51. The tabernacle was an elaborate portable tent that served as God's "home" when the Israelites were in the wilderness. In it were the ark of the covenant and other holy items. It was made of wooden boards covered with layers of rich fabric (Ex. 26). The name tabernacle or tent of meeting usually means this tabernacle. However, there was another, different tent also called the tabernacle of meeting (Ex. 33:7). This was a tent that Moses used to pitch outside the camp, where he and the people could meet God. It was a temporary tent during the Israelites' days in the wilderness, and it was not used later in Israel's history.

18:3, 4 How long will you neglect to go: Joshua's rebuke of the seven tribes shows that it was not enough to defeat the inhabitants of the land; they also had to take possession of it. The Israelites had easily defeated the Canaanites (chs. 9—11) but they did not diligently follow up on their victories and occupy all of the land. This laziness disobeyed God's instructions in 13:1 and showed a lack of faith in His promises.

18:5–28 wrote the survey in a book: See 18:11—19:51.

19:1–46 Simeon did not get an independent inheritance, but rather inherited scattered lands within Judah's allotment. Their father Jacob had predicted this (Gen. 49:5–7). Later Simeon and Judah acted together (Judg. 1:3). In 1 Chr. 4:24–27 Simeon is described as a much smaller tribe than Judah.

19:47, 48 Dan's capture of Leshem is recounted also in Judg. 18, which gives more detail (in that account the city is called Laish). The Danites were forced out of their territory in the south (Judg. 1:34) and migrated north (Judg. 18:27–31), where they captured Leshem and renamed it Dan.

19:49, 50 The section ends, appropriately enough, with Joshua receiving his inheritance in Ephraim. According to the word of the LORD: The Bible does not record the command granting Joshua this particular inheritance, though the promise to Caleb and Joshua in Num. 14:30 did guarantee both of these faithful spies an inheritance in the land.

19:51 This is a summary statement about the allotments for each tribe, echoing elements from 14:1; 17:4; 18:6, 10. It is a fitting summary to the entire section of chs. 13—19. The involvement of Eleazar the priest, Joshua, … and the heads of the … tribes, as well as the mention of the tabernacle at Shiloh, all lend an air of importance and solemnity. The entire distribution of the land had taken place under God's watchful eye, decently and in order. The land was God's to give, and He had now given it.

20:1–9 The cities of refuge were to come from the Levitical cities, in fulfillment of the Mosaic legislation of Num. 35:9–28 (Deut. 4:41–43; 19:1–10). This legislation, the essence of which is repeated here, provided sanctuary zones where someone who had killed a person unintentionally could flee to live in safety.

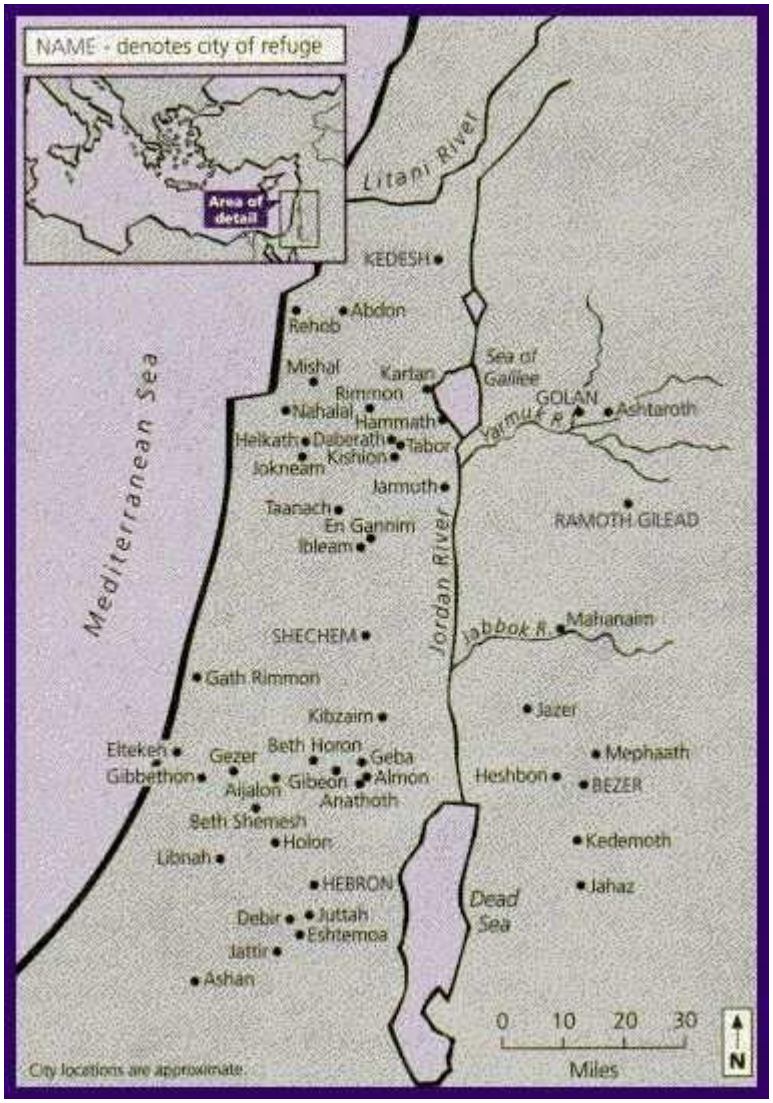
20:1–6 accidentally or unintentionally: Literally, “through error and without knowing.” God’s Law made allowance for motives and intent just as modern criminal codes distinguish unintentional killing from murder. The word translated avenger (Heb. goel) in avenger of blood is translated close relative in Ruth 3:13; 4:1. The basic meaning of the word is “protector of family rights.” Num. 35 gives the demands and limitations on the avenger of blood, but it does not give license to take revenge. God clearly reserved that task for Himself alone (Deut. 32:35; Is. 34:8; Rom. 12:19). God’s provision of the cities of refuge put a limit on private acts of vengeance.

20:7–9 The cities of refuge were evenly distributed so that none was more than a day’s journey from any part of Israel’s land. Golan, Ramoth Gilead, and Bezer were on the east side of the Jordan River, and Kedesh, Shechem, and Kirjath Arba (Hebron) were on the west. Despite their importance here and in the Pentateuch, cities of refuge as such are not mentioned again in the Bible.

Levitical Cities

In some Western nations today, religious institutions enjoy certain privileges such as tax exemption for church property and tax advantages for ordained clergy. Levites in ancient Israel enjoyed even greater benefits. One of the main ones was the use of forty-eight cities which are referred to as Levitical cities (Josh. 21:1–3).

Unlike the other eleven tribes, the tribe of Levi was not allotted any land in Canaan. Instead, God designated Himself as the Levites' "portion" (Num. 18:20–24). But because God considered the Levites a "gift" to the people to attend to the tasks of worship and sacrifice (Num. 18:5, 6), He commanded that each tribe set aside a proportionate number of cities and their surrounding pasture land for the use of the Levites (35:1–8).



Rights and Privileges

Levites were probably not the only people who lived in the Levitical cities, but they enjoyed special status as they lived alongside the other citizens. For example, Levites were allowed to graze their livestock on lands near their cities. Likewise, much of their support came from a ten percent tax of the people collected every three years (Deut. 26:12–15).

In addition, the Mosaic Law protected Levites from dispossession (Lev. 25:32–34), and they were granted an unlimited right of redemption, unlike other tribes. Still, as they were somewhat dependent on their communities for sustenance and protection, the Levites were accountable to local residents.

Strategically Located The location of the Levitical cities, which tended to be on the borders between the tribes rather than at their centers, had the result of distributing the Levites throughout the country. This made the cities: Mission stations for teaching. The Levites had a special ministry of teaching among the tribes (Deut. 33:8–10; 2 Chr. 35:3–6). Their cities were not to be places for shrines but bases from which the Levites helped all the cities and tribes know and follow the Law.

Centers of justice and political influence. The Levitical teaching was more than just religious; it had significance for civil and political policy as well, as is evident in the reforms of King Jehoshaphat. He sent Levites along with governmental officials to teach the Law, so that peace might prevail over rebellion (2 Chr. 17:7–10).

One of the most important roles delegated to six of the Levitical cities was to be "cities of refuge" (Num. 35:11). Strategically located for accessibility, they provided protection from revenge for a person accused of manslaughter until the elders of the city could look into the matter and render a judgment. This placed the Levites in direct contact with matters of justice.

As a result of these influential responsibilities, some of the Levitical cities became major centers for Israel's civic and religious life, especially Gibeon, Bethel, and Gilgal.

21:1–42 Forty-eight cities were designated as the ones in which the Levites could live and graze their cattle nearby. These cities would remain the possession of the other tribes, but the Levites would have living and grazing rights therein, since they were to have no other land portion (13:14, 33; 14:3; 18:7). As teachers of the Law (Deut. 33:10; 2 Chr. 17:7–9; 35:3; Mal. 2:6–9), the Levites could more easily teach all the people if they lived throughout the land.

21:1–3 The Levites came to Joshua to claim their rightful share of territory, which included cities throughout the territories God had promised (Num. 35:1–8). The common-lands refers to land that surrounded each city.

21:4–8 Here the Levitical cities are determined by the lot. The word lot occurs five times in these five verses; in this case it was a God-directed method of choosing the cities. God was in control of every aspect of the inheritance process.

21:4, 9–42 The priestly branch of the Kohathites, descended through Aaron, received thirteen cities from Judah, Simeon, and Benjamin. Thus the Aaronic priests were strategically located to serve in the temple and in the territory that remained in the hands of descendants of Judah through the years before and following the Babylonian Exile. Some of the cities were not actually in Israel's possession at this time (for example, Gezer, v. 21), and some appear never to have been in Israel's control for any length of time (for example, the Philistine cities of Eltekeh and Gibbethon, v. 23). These names may simply reflect the actual allotments in Joshua's day. Much land remained to be taken even after it had been allotted (13:1; 15:63; 16:10; 17:12, 13).

21:43–45 This glorious conclusion to these two chapters and to the entire section (chs. 13—21) celebrates the fact that all came to pass exactly as God promised. What has been visible all along is now said plainly: the God of Israel is a promise-keeping God, who gave Israel the land in accordance with the promises He had made with its ancestors, including Moses and the patriarchs. And in addition to giving them the land, He also granted them rest.

22:1–34 The chapter contains warm-hearted displays of spiritual devotion to God on the part of all the tribes. A central concern is the people's relationship with God and the unity of Israel's worship.

22:2, 3 The obedience to Moses and Joshua of the tribes settled east of the Jordan is commended here. The issue of the unity of the nation had arisen at the beginning, and these tribes had proven faithful.

22:4 rest … as He promised: This idea of rest as a gift from God is part of the fabric of the Book of Joshua. It had been promised by God (1:13, 15), and once again God fulfilled His promises.

22:5 The passionate exhortation to take careful heed captures the heart of this chapter. The words echo the call to faithfulness in Deut. 4:29; 6:5; 10:12, 13; 11:13. The verbs in this verse give a comprehensive picture of what a proper relationship to God includes: to love God, to walk in His ways, to hold fast (or cling) to Him, and to serve Him. This is the essence of the "first and great commandment," to love God wholeheartedly (Deut. 6:5; Matt. 22:37). Loving God is much more than an affirmation or a feeling; it is obedience, loyalty, and service to God above all else.

22:6–9 Joshua blessed them: The blessing here involves many riches from the spoils of the land (v. 7).

22:10–20 A crisis that tested Israel's unity now arose.

22:11 have built an altar: The account does not reveal why this altar was built until after the events have developed into a full-blown crisis (vv. 21–29).

22:12 God had commanded Israel not to offer burnt offerings or sacrifices at any location except the tabernacle (Lev. 17:8, 9) and not to worship other gods (Deut. 13:12–15). The punishment for violating both laws was death, and this is why Israel gathered … to go to war against their brethren.

22:13, 14 Everything was done "by the book." First, the nine and one-half tribes west of the Jordan acted in perfect unity, carefully choosing one representative each, the highest ranking ruler from each tribe. Second, they sent the priest Phinehas to head up the delegation, reflecting their concern that true worship and ritual be maintained. All present probably remembered the tragedy at Baal Peor (Num. 25), when drastic actions had to be taken to stop the plague (v. 17).

22:15, 16 We know how serious Phinehas and his companions considered the offense—if it were indeed such an offense—from the term he used for it, treachery. This is the same Hebrew word used of Achan's sin in v. 20 (7:1).

22:17 The iniquity of Peor included the fact that the Israelites worshiped the Moabite gods and committed immoral acts with the women of Moab. The tribes west of the Jordan feared that this could happen again. The phrase not cleansed till this day implies that Israel had never completely rid itself of this sin, that it always flirted with, and at times participated in, the idolatry and attractions of neighboring pagan religious systems.

22:18–20 He will be angry with the whole congregation: No one can sin alone. If the tribes east of the Jordan were indeed sinning, then the entire nation would feel the effects, as in the case of Achan's sin (v. 20; 7:1).

22:21–29 The Transjordan tribes respond passionately that they are innocent of any rebellion or breach of faith. The section shows them innocent of anything malicious; they never intended to use this altar for sacrifices to God Himself, let along to other gods. Rather, they intended it only as a memorial or witness for their children, and their concern is the same as that of the tribes west of the Jordan: that the unity of Israel be maintained.

22:22 The repetition of the LORD God of gods reveals the deep emotion in the response of the tribes east of the Jordan. In an agitated state of mind, their words came out somewhat awkward, yet completely sincere. They firmly maintained their innocence and tried to convince their fellow countrymen of it.

22:23–25 The tribes from east of the Jordan were afraid that geographical distance would isolate them and in time cause the Israelites west of the Jordan to reject them. Thus they built the altar to prevent the existing unity from being lost.

22:26–29 Here is the replica: The eastern tribes chose their words carefully; the word replica clearly shows that they never intended this altar to be a substitute for the true altar at the tabernacle. Rather, they intended it only to serve as a witness. The same Hebrew word is used elsewhere for the pattern for the tabernacle given to Moses (Ex. 25:9, 40) and the "plans" of the temple that David gave to Solomon (1 Chr. 28:11).

22:30–34 The eastern tribes' impassioned defense quickly defused the crisis, satisfying the people's representatives. The representatives' response occupies only one verse, an abrupt ending to a crisis that is described in twenty preceding verses (vv. 10–29). The western tribes accepted the words of the Transjordan tribes on this matter, and the altar remained.

22:34 The climax of the chapter asserts that the altar was a witness … that the LORD is God. Previously, the chapter indicated only that it was to be a witness (vv. 27, 28), without saying what it would be a witness of. In a similar vein, Jesus told His disciples that people would know they were His disciples by seeing their love for each other; that is, their love would point people to Christ (John 13:35).

23:1–16 This speech is reminiscent of the last speeches of Jacob (Gen. 49), Moses (Deut. 32, 33), and David (2 Sam. 23:1–7). In it, Joshua sums up all of the important motifs introduced throughout the book, passionately urging Israel to be steadfast in loving God, in obeying His Law, and in keeping itself uncontaminated by the religious practices of any of its neighbors. And he promises that Yahweh will be with Israel in the as-yet-unfinished task of driving out its enemies.

23:1, 2 a long time: The exact time intended here is impossible to know with certainty. The verse clearly echoes 13:1 (with its reference to Joshua's advanced age) and 21:44 (with its reference to rest). Some scholars believe that this "long time" is calculated from the beginning of the book (when God began to give rest to the land). However, more plausibly, it refers to the completion of the process. If this took place at the end of Joshua's life (he died at age 110: 24:29), and if he was anywhere near Caleb's age of eighty-five when the land was distributed (14:10), then his farewell speeches would have come some twenty-five years after the main events in the book.

23:3–5 He who has fought for you: A reminder that the land belonged to the Lord and that He gave it to Israel, even to the extent of fighting on their behalf (1:3; 8:7; 10:14, 19, 42).

23:6 be very courageous: Again, Joshua used the same words that God had spoken to him years earlier when He commissioned him (1:7–9). See also Joshua's words to the eastern tribes in 22:5.

23:7–9 That no one has been able to stand against the tribes of Israel was a fulfillment of God's promise in 1:5.

“hold fast”

(Heb. dabaq) (Josh. 22:5; 23:8; 2 Kin. 18:5, 6; Is. 41:7) Strong’s #1692: The Hebrew word translated hold fast means “to cling tightly.” Related Hebrew words mean “soldering” and “glue.” The same Hebrew word is used to describe the intimacy between a husband and wife (Gen. 2:24) and Ruth’s loyalty to Naomi (Ruth 1:14). When we are commanded to hold fast to God in the Scriptures (23:8), it means we must resolve to remain faithful to Him no matter what the circumstances. In other words, our devotion to Him must be stronger than any other loyalty.

23:10 One man … shall chase a thousand: These words are similar to the promises in Lev. 26:7, 8. The power God’s people had over their enemies was so dramatic it had to be miraculous.

23:11 The exhortation to love the LORD your God comes from Deut. 6:5.

23:12 The word translated cling is the same word translated hold fast in v. 8, bringing the different instances of clinging into sharp contrast. God wanted His people to cling to Him, not to the Canaanites they were driving out. This required, among other things, that they not make marriages with unbelieving foreigners under any circumstances (Ex. 34:11–16; Deut. 7:1–4). Years later Solomon ignored this command and proved how destructive the sin of intermarriage could be (1 Kin. 3:1; 11:1–8; 2 Cor. 6:14).

23:13, 14 they shall be snares and traps: See Ex. 23:33; Num. 33:55; Deut. 7:16. not one thing has failed: A strong affirmation of God’s faithfulness, one of the book’s main themes.

23:15, 16 you shall perish quickly from the good land: This indeed happened to Israel in its later history. This warning saw its most dramatic fulfillment when Judah was carried into Babylonian captivity because of its repeated rebellion against God (2 Kin. 25). But Israel’s rebellion began almost immediately, during the period of the judges, when Israel began to do precisely what was warned against here (Judg. 2:16–23; 3:1–6).

24:1–13 This section reviews the past in terms of God's gracious provisions for His people. Verses 1 and 2 suggest the more formal nature of this chapter, since the leaders presented themselves before God and since the historical review is introduced with the traditional prophetic speech formula, Thus says the LORD God of Israel.

24:1 Shechem is a site with an ancient tradition of religious significance and covenant making in Israel, going back to Abraham's day (8:30–35; Gen. 12:6; 33:18–20; 34:1–31; 37:12–17; Deut. 11:26–32; 27:1–26; Judg. 9:31–57). Archaeological excavation has uncovered a series of temples, sanctuaries, and ceremonial standing stones from almost every period of its existence.

24:2–4 Israel's ancestors did not worship the true God at first; until God called them, Abraham and his relatives had served other gods (Gen. 31:1–4, 19, 34, 35). The words of this verse are used in the Passover celebration of the Jews all over the world today. When they recite these words, those who celebrate confess that the Lord's choice of their fathers was not because of an innate superiority in Abraham. Abraham and others were mere idolaters. But God chose Abraham and Sarah to be His special people for reasons known only to Him. Likewise in our case, it is not because of something wonderful in ourselves that God has reached out to us, but because of His loving, sovereign, gracious choice.

24:5–9 Afterward I brought you out: God's review of His gracious actions on behalf of His people (vv. 2–5) included Joshua's generation. God did not just make Himself known in ages past; He also worked mightily and graciously for the people of Joshua's day. Christians today are part of a long lineage of the people of faith (Heb. 11).

24:10 I would not listen to Balaam: For the full story on Balaam, see Num. 22—24.

24:11, 12 God's use of the hornet to aid Israel fulfilled the promise of Ex. 23:28. The hornet may be: (1) symbolic of the pharaoh of Egypt, whose symbols were a bee or hornet; (2) symbolic of God's terror or panic among the Canaanites (2:9–11, 24; 5:1; 6:27; Ex. 15:14–16); or (3) actual hornets. Whatever the case, the point is that God fought for Israel. The phrase two kings refers to Sihon and Og, whom Israel had defeated in the wilderness (Num. 21:21–35). These victories were God's, not dependent upon Israel's military power. The sword and bow are mentioned in connection with the first Israelite capture of Shechem by Jacob (Gen. 48:22).

24:13 A land for which you did not labor fulfills the promises given by Moses in Deut. 6:10, 11. The land was God's gracious gift to His people.

24:14–28 The proper response to these gracious dealings of Yahweh was for Israel to forsake other gods and follow Him, and Joshua himself would lead the way by example. The people's response was one of commitment, after which Joshua warned them about the consequences of this commitment, which the people then willingly accepted. The people ratified the covenant and were dismissed to their inheritances.

24:14, 15 Joshua's words in these verses contain a rare appeal to Israel to choose between God and the many false substitutes. If Israel would not choose to serve the Lord, they would have to choose between the gods that their ancestors worshiped and the gods of the Amorites (that is, the Canaanites). Of course, the appeal is rhetorical; from God's perspective there is only one option. With his famous words, Joshua clearly and unambiguously took his stand on the side of the living God. Joshua modeled a perfect leader's actions. A leader must be willing to move ahead and commit himself to the truth regardless of the people's inclinations. Joshua's bold example undoubtedly encouraged many to follow with the affirmations of vv. 16–18.

24:16–18 In their response to Joshua's challenge, the people acknowledged their debt to God for all their good fortune. This was a crucial point. As long as they remembered what God had done for them, they would be inclined to serve Him. Moses had said this many years before (Deut. 8:11–17).

24:19–21 Immediately after Joshua exhorted the Israelites to serve God (v. 14), he stated you cannot serve the LORD! This use of exaggeration emphasizes the gravity of the obligation to which the people committed themselves. Theirs was not to be a nominal, superficial faith. Subsequent history shows that Israel's record was poor in this regard. Joshua's challenge is also for Christians. Although salvation is God's free gift through Jesus Christ to those who believe, truly following Christ is the difficult way of the Cross (Matt. 16:24; John 1:12; 1 Cor. 15:1–5).

24:22–27 Joshua and the people sealed their covenant to serve the Lord by writing these words in the Book of the Law of God and by the erecting a large stone under an oak tree, the same tree that Jacob had encountered when he came to Shechem. This tree was near the Lord's sanctuary, which was probably not a formal building or temple but the “holy place” created at Shechem by the act of bringing of the tabernacle there. The reference to the people presenting themselves “before God” (v. 1) may indicate that the tabernacle was there. The stone under the oak tree functioned as a legal reminder or witness of the covenant just entered into by the people. Now the stone and the people were both witnesses. This echoes the function of the altar built by the tribes that settled east of the Jordan, which also was a witness (22:34). A large standing stone that dates to the Late Bronze Age (that is, roughly the time represented in this story) has been found at Shechem, and is possibly the stone mentioned here.

24:28 When Joshua dismissed the people, it was each to his own inheritance, fittingly closing this section with a reminder of one of the book’s major themes.

24:29–33 The three burials signified the ends of eras: Joshua and Eleazar, the leader and priest of the people and the last recent links with Egypt, and Joseph, a distant link with Egypt and with the promises to the patriarchs.

24:29 This first reference to Joshua as the servant of the LORD shows clearly how Joshua had “grown into the job” that Moses had vacated. Now the book comes full circle, recalling the references in 1:1 to Moses as the servant of the Lord and to Joshua as merely Moses’ assistant.

24:30, 31 Joshua was buried on his own land, in the city he had asked for and built, Timnath Serah (19:50). The Old Greek versions have a lengthy and fascinating addition in v. 30, stating that Joshua was buried in the tomb with the flint knives with which he had circumcised the Israelites years earlier, and that they were still there “to this day.”

24:32 The brief account of the transfer of Joseph’s body to Canaan from Egypt notes the fulfillment of Joseph’s prophecy given hundreds of years earlier (Gen. 50:24, 25).

24:33 Eleazar the high priest had figured significantly in the land distribution, and now he too received a decent burial in his own land.

The Book of Judges

———— THE BOOK OF JUDGES IS A HISTORICAL NARRATIVE that contrasts God's faithfulness with Israel's apostasy. Despite the repeated falling away of His people, God provided deliverers—the judges—time and again. He did not do this unthinkingly or mechanically, nor was He manipulated by Israel's cries for help (3:9, 15; 4:3; 6:6; 10:10). He did not spare Israel from the consequences of its actions, as its constant trouble with foreign oppressors indicates. Rather, God delivered Israel from oppression because of His promises to Abraham and his descendants. He remembered His vow to give the land of Canaan to Israel. Thus, the preservation of God's people was not due to their merit or goodness, nor even to their willingness to repent. Rather, God demonstrated His compassion and pity on a wayward people who grieved Him continually (2:16, 18) by providing bold leaders to rescue them. In fact, the real hero of Judges is God Himself, who alone remains faithful despite the failings of His people—and even of the judges.

The book was written to show the consequences of disobedience to God and the necessity of summoning a righteous king who would lead the people to God. In contrast to the serene way in which the Book of Joshua ends, with Israel in harmony with God's commands, Judges reveals that Israel began to disobey God even in the time of Joshua, and that this disobedience grew more serious—and more debased—over time. Judges 2:16–23 establishes the cyclical pattern of sin, slavery, and salvation that would dominate the time of the judges. However, the book makes clear that the cycle had a downward spiral. Each new outbreak of disobedience and idolatry took Israel further away from God and deeper into sin and misery. By the end of the book, it is clear that Israel had violated its covenant with God in almost every imaginable way.

The purpose of the message is supported by the structure of the book itself. A close examination of chs. 17—21 leads to the conclusion that they are out of sequence with the events in the earlier chapters. Clues within the text support the theory that the events described in these latter chapters actually took place early in the period of the judges. For instance, we see the near unanimous action of Israel's tribal convocation, which successfully unites to take punitive action against Benjamin in ch. 20. This tribal league was clearly active during the time of Phinehas and in Joshua's day (Josh. 22:9–34). In these chapters, the Philistines are not mentioned as a military threat; the military campaigns described in chs. 20 and 21 would have been unlikely in later times, when the Philistines dominated much of Israel's territory. Furthermore, Bethel and Mizpah are both named as sites of a major religious sanctuary (20:1, 18, 31; 21:1) rather than Shiloh, which was a more prominent religious center in the Philistine period (1 Sam. 1:3, 9; 3:21; 4:4).

This arrangement of the narrative, while not strictly chronological, reinforces the theme that the period of the judges was one of steep decline. The sordid events in these last chapters, while they may have occurred early in the period, are purposely placed at the end of the book as a fitting epitaph to a degenerate time.

The author of this collection of historical writings about the judges, who ruled Israel during a span of several centuries, is never identified. Neither are there any clues elsewhere in Scripture. Late Jewish tradition ascribed its authorship to Samuel. This is certainly possible, but there is no way of knowing for sure.

Certainly the book was written after the last events recorded in it (about 1050 B.C.). The reference in 18:30 to "the day of the captivity of the land" refers most likely to the Babylonian exile (sixth century B.C.). This suggests that a later version of the book may have been compiled during the Exile or afterward. However, the reference to Jebusites living in Jerusalem "to this day" (1:21) suggests that a portion of the book may have been written prior to David's capture of Jerusalem around 1000 B.C. It would seem likely that Jebusites who survived the battle would have left voluntarily or been expelled. Yet a few scriptural references suggest that some Jebusites remained in Jerusalem after David's conquest (2 Sam. 24:16), so this is not a conclusive argument. If one believes that Judges was written sometime late in the eleventh century B.C., then it becomes more credible to suggest that Samuel wrote most or all the book. Yet, like the question of authorship, the approximate date of the composition of Judges remains cloaked in uncertainty.

Commentary

1:1—2:5 The introductory passage of Judges shows continuing military activity (1:1–26), which indicates that all military conquests had not been completed during Joshua's day. It then explicitly details the incomplete conquests of several tribes (1:27–36). That Israel had disobeyed God's directions for conquest is evident in 2:1–5, where the Angel of the Lord makes such an accusation. In sharp contrast to the peaceful and unified picture of Israel at the end of the Book of Joshua, the breakdown of Israelite society is already evident. In Judg. 1, the conquest was somewhat incomplete (vv. 21, 27–36 give detailed accounts of land that various tribes had left unsubdued). This contrasts with the picture of the conquest in Joshua, especially Josh. 10. For example, Josh. 10:40 states, "Joshua subdued the whole region, including the hill country, the Negev, the western foothills and the mountain slopes, together with their kings. He left no survivors. He totally destroyed all who breathed." The contrast, however, is not merely between Josh. 10 and Judg. 1. Even in the book of Joshua, we have indications that the conquest was not complete. This is especially evident in Josh. 11:22; 13:2–6; 15:63; 16:10; 17:12, 13, all of which speak of people in the land who survived and who were not driven out. Also in contrast to the picture in Josh. 10 about a quick sweep, Josh. 11:18 states, "Joshua waged war against all these kings for a long time."

1:1–21 Judges begins with a record of conquests in southern Palestine. The tribe of Judah assumed leadership and allied with Simeon in campaigns against the Canaanites who had not been driven out of their respective territories. They fought a series of successful campaigns, "going up" against Bezek and Jerusalem, "going down" against Hebron, Debir, and Zephath, and concluding with an invasion of Philistine territory. They had mixed success against the Canaanites, but their successes (vv. 4–18, 20) outweighed their failures (vv. 19, 21).

1:1 Now after the death of Joshua it came to pass that: Judges begins as the Book of Joshua does, with reference to the death of the previous leader—Moses in Josh. 1:1, Joshua here. Yet no new leader was commissioned to lead Israel after Joshua; rather, the tribe of Judah was designated to lead in the fight against the Canaanites (1:1–4). The choice of Judah was the first hint that Jacob's prediction for Judah (Gen. 49:8–12) was coming to pass. The prophecy would come to fruition with the establishment of the monarchy under David and his descendants; David was from the tribe of Judah.

1:2 Judah shall go up: Judah's leadership had been anticipated as early as Jacob's blessing, in which he promised that kings would come from the line of Judah (Gen. 49:8–12).

1:3 History bound the tribes of Judah and Simeon together. They were both descended from the same mother (Gen. 29:33, 35), and Simeon had inherited land in Judah's territory (Josh. 19:1, 9). Theirs was a natural alliance.

IN CONTEXT

From Conquest to Chaos

Periods just after great national victories can be times of great vulnerability. When people have overcome huge obstacles, survived grave threats, or defeated dangerous enemies, they tend to let down their guard and relax. That puts them at great risk, not just for external attack but also for internal decay.

This was the experience of Israel during the period of the judges. Having achieved impressive military victories under Joshua, the Israelites succumbed to moral and civil anarchy after Joshua's death. The root of their troubles was chronic disobedience in regard to the Law, and repeated departure from the Lord.

Judges makes for troubling reading because it shows a nation in moral and spiritual decline. This period has been called Israel's Dark Age.

1:4, 5 the Canaanites and the Perizzites: See Josh. 3:10. The site of the battle of Bezek between Israelites and Canaanites is unknown. Many scholars believe that it took place near present-day Khirbet Bezqa, about three miles northeast of Gezer, northwest of Jerusalem. However, 1 Sam. 11:8–11 mentions a town called Bezek northeast of Shechem in the territory of Manasseh, where Saul took a census of the people. Considering that Judah was leading a campaign on behalf of all Israel (vv. 1, 2), a battle in Manasseh's territory is quite possible. Later, Judah spearheaded a campaign in its own territory (vv. 8–19).

1:6, 7 Adoni-Bezek: The name of this minor king means "Lord of Bezek." To cut off his thumbs and big toes would prevent Adoni-Bezek from ever engaging in battle again, since a thumb was needed to hold a sword and the big toes were necessary for running. The practice of mutilating vanquished enemies is recorded in ancient sources found in Mesopotamia and Greece and was practiced by Adoni-Bezek himself. As a result of his wounds, however, Adoni-Bezek died.

1:8, 9 After the battle at Bezek, Judah pressed the campaign against the Canaanites elsewhere in Jerusalem and the mountains, the southland, and the lowland. Jerusalem was captured and burned, but not settled. Verse 21 states that Benjamin did not drive out the Jebusites from the city. For more on this differing account, read Josh. 15:63. The complete conquest and settlement of Jerusalem was not accomplished until David's day (2 Sam. 5:6–10).

1:10–15 The capture of Hebron and Debir appears as a new conquest, but these victories had already been recounted in Josh. 15. This passage is probably a reference to the earlier victory (or else the passage in Joshua is anticipating the victories to come). The account in vv. 11–15 is taken almost verbatim from Josh. 15:15–19, and it is the third account of Caleb's inheritance (the other account is found in Josh. 14:6–15).

1:10 The name Hebron means "Confederacy." This city's name was formerly Kirjath Arba (literally "city of four"). Arba was also the name of a leader of the Anakim (Josh. 14:15). From the names it is conjectured that Hebron was originally a close-knit alliance of four cities. Hebron, about twenty miles southwest of Jerusalem, was where Abraham settled and built an altar (Gen. 13:18). they killed Sheshai, Ahiman, and Talmai: Caleb drove these three men out of Hebron (v. 20; Josh. 15:14).

1:11 Debir was the next city captured by the Israelites. Its former name Kirjath Sepher means "City of the Book"; it may have been an administrative center where records were kept. However, the modern archaeological site, Tell Beit Mirsim, has not yielded any great library or records. Nevertheless, archaeologists have uncovered a strongly fortified city, which was destroyed close to 1200 B.C.

1:12, 13 Caleb offering his daughter in marriage as a prize is similar to Saul requiring one hundred Philistine foreskins of David as the price for his daughter Michal (1 Sam. 18:25).

1:14, 15 As a dowry, Caleb's daughter asked for springs of water in addition to the land he had given her. Land without fresh water was almost worthless, so her request was an astute one.

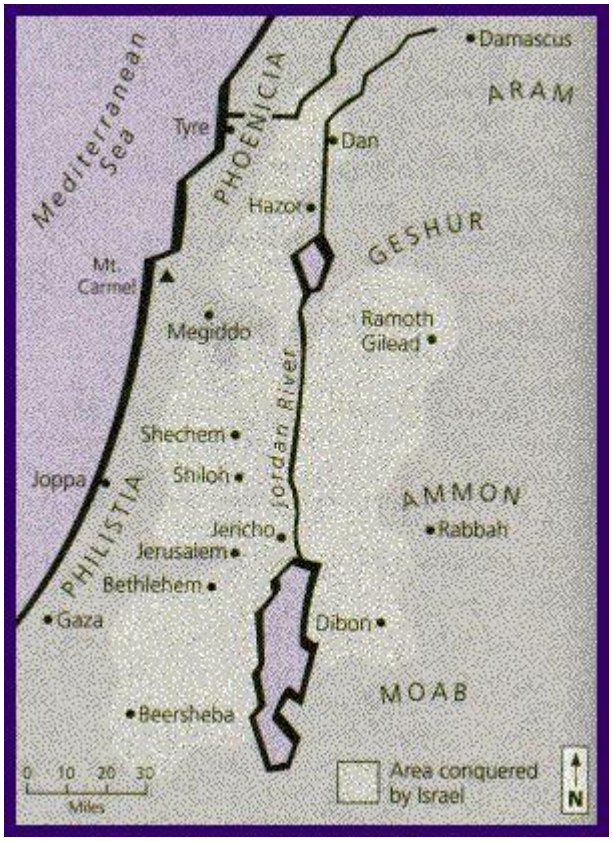
1:16, 17 References to the South (that is, the Negev) in vv. 9; 15 included mention of the descendants of the Kenite, Moses' father-in-law, Jethro (Ex. 3:1). This family connection had led to friendly relations between the Israelites and the Kenites, who were Midianites, in the wilderness (Num. 10:29–32). Their harmonious settling with Judah fulfilled Moses' words of Num. 10:29. City of Palms is a reference to Jericho (Deut. 34:3; 2 Chr. 28:15), nestled deep in the Jordan Valley, northeast of Jerusalem.

Unfulfilled Expectations

The Israelites departed from Egypt with high hopes. They had set out on a journey that would bring them into a land "flowing with milk and honey" (Ex. 13:3–5). Their first exposure to Canaan went badly (Num. 13; 14), but a new generation under Joshua finally crossed the Jordan to take possession of Canaan (Josh. 1:11).

Yet by the end of Joshua's life, major portions of the Promised Land remained unconquered, and many of the Canaanite and Amorite inhabitants, whom Israel was supposed to displace, remained in the cities (Judg. 1:27–36). This failure meant that Israel would go through several generations of civil, political, and spiritual unrest (2:11–23).

It was not until God raised up David as a unifying king that the extent of Israel's borders would begin to match the expectations originally laid out by God (Num. 34:1–12).



1:18 Gaza … Ashkelon … Ekron were three of five major cities in the Philistine kingdom (the other two were Ashdod and Gath, Josh. 13:2, 3). Israel was not able to hold these cities for very long. By Samson's day, all three cities were in Philistine hands again (Judg. 14:19; 16:1; 1 Sam. 5:10).

1:19, 20 they could not drive out the inhabitants of the lowland: Since the three Philistine cities mentioned in v. 18 were in the lowlands, this verse must mean that the Israelites had no success beyond these three cities, and perhaps even means that they lost control of them very quickly. Chariots of iron were effective on the flat coastal plains but not in the hill country of Canaan. Thus the Israelites, who did not have chariots, were better matched against the mountaineers.

1:21 Benjamin did not drive out the Jebusites: This verse duplicates Josh. 15:63 almost exactly, except that the tribe of Judah is held responsible there for not driving out the Jebusites from Jerusalem. Note also that, in 1:8, the account states that Judah did capture Jerusalem (Josh. 15:63).

1:22–36 In contrast to their successes in the south (vv. 1–21), the Israelites suffered more failures in the north. They initially seized Bethel (formerly Luz), a major city in Ephraimite territory (vv. 22–26), but advanced little after that. Six tribes—Manasseh, Ephraim, Zebulun, Asher, Naphtali, and Dan—failed to drive the Canaanites from their territories.

1:22 The house of Joseph was Ephraim and Manasseh (Gen. 48:5, 6; Deut. 33:17), who had split the inheritance of their father. They are the next two tribes mentioned in this passage in Judges (vv. 27, 29). Bethel means "The House of God." It was a site with an honored history, beginning with Abraham's first sacrifice to God (Gen. 13:3, 4) and Jacob's revelation from God there (Gen. 31:13). Joshua had captured the city (Josh. 12:16), perhaps as part of the defeat of Ai (Josh. 8:17).

1:23–25 Luz means "Deceit" or "Perversion," but Jacob had changed its name to Bethel many years earlier after his encounter with God there.

1:26 land of the Hittites: Archaeologists have unearthed a great Hittite kingdom in Asia Minor (present-day Turkey), dating from about 1800 to 1200 B.C. However, the relationship between the Hittites of Canaan and the Hittites of this discovery is unclear.

1:27 Manasseh did not drive out: Here begins a long record of disobedience that began when the Israelites failed to uproot the Canaanites (Josh. 10:28–43). That failure resulted in much grief in the years following. Besides the tribe of Manasseh, Benjamin (v. 21), Ephraim (v. 29), Zebulun (v. 30), Asher (v. 31), Naphtali (v. 33), and Dan (v. 34) also did not do as God had commanded. We then see in ch. 2—and indeed throughout the rest of the book—the effects this had on Israel's life: the people turned to the gods of the Canaanites and abandoned the Lord. Moreover, the Canaanites were determined to dwell in that land and relied on their superior weaponry (v. 19) to intimidate the Israelites. Yet that difficulty could have been removed had the Israelites exercised their faith more completely.

1:28–33 They put the Canaanites under tribute means they forced their captives to work as involuntary, unpaid laborers. David, Solomon, and other kings continued this practice (2 Sam. 20:24). The Israelites enslaved the Canaanites in many areas (vv. 30, 33, 35; Josh. 16:10; 17:13).

1:34–36 Amorites were Canaanite peoples living in the central hill country of Canaan, and they blocked Dan's entry into this region. Eventually, the Danites were forced to migrate northward (18:1; Josh. 19:47). For more on the Amorites, see Josh. 3:10.

2:1 The Angel of the LORD appears as God's representative here, speaking authoritatively to the people about their covenant disobedience. This Angel appears several other places in Judges (2:1, 4; 5:23; 6:11–22; 13:3–21). In each case, the Angel makes a sudden appearance as the representative of the Lord. In all cases, Yahweh and His Angel seem to be closely identified with each other, such as in Judg. 6, where the Angel of Yahweh alternates with Yahweh Himself in speaking with Gideon, and in Judg. 13, where, in Manoah's judgment, in seeing the Angel, he and his wife had seen God. Gilgal was the site where Israel had first encamped west of the Jordan (Josh. 4:19). Bochim was possibly near Bethel. I led you up from Egypt: See Ex. 23:20–23. The reference to you is plural, indicating that the Angel is addressing the entire nation.

Thorns and Tears at Bochim

God commanded the Israelites to dispossess the Canaanites by taking over their cities, destroying their idols and altars, and refusing to enter into agreements with them (Judg. 2:2). Apparently the citizens of Bochim failed to carry out those instructions. No one knows the exact circumstances, but the offenses were serious enough for the Angel of the Lord to come up from Gilgal to this village near Bethel and cry against it (2:1).

The timing of the sermon was important. The days of Israel's conquest of Canaan were drawing to a close, yet many cities remained in the hands of, or at least were still influenced by, the Canaanites (1:27–35). Joshua's life was over (2:8), and a new generation was coming into power (2:10). So Bochim's spiritual failures were a serious matter. They set a dangerous precedent of idolatry that persisted from that day forward (2:3), as the Book of Judges shows. Apparently the people of Bochim tearfully repented of their wrongs and, in the presence of Joshua, offered a sacrifice to atone for their sins (2:5–6). But the pattern of spiritual adultery was established.

God's people cannot worship whatever gods they will. Like Israel, believers today may need to limit their neighborliness if necessary to preserve their own faith and godliness. They must allow nothing to distract them from unswerving allegiance to the Lord, lest they unwittingly invite a host of thorny issues and a legacy of tears.

2:2–5 you shall make no covenant: God's commands to make no covenants with pagan nations and to tear down their altars are found in Ex. 23:32; 34:13; Deut. 12:3. Verses 1 and 2 here contain a string of commands that God had given Israel under Moses, but Israel's disobedience meant that these nations would become snares to them, just as God had warned (Ex. 23:33; Num. 33:55; Josh. 23:13). An example of a pagan ritual that ensnared Israel is given in Judg. 8:27.

2:6—3:6 This section constitutes a second introduction to the book after the prologue in 1:1—2:5. It depicts the political and spiritual conflicts of the period and elaborates on the moral breakdown presented in ch. 1. The recurring pattern presented in 2:16–23 owed much to the disobedience chronicled in ch. 1; each time the nation lapsed, it found itself oppressed by enemies. The final section (3:1–6) emphasizes God's purposes in testing Israel (2:22; 3:1, 4).

2:6–10 The author identifies the death of Joshua as a starting point for the trouble to come. This passage closely follows Josh. 24:28–30, in some places word for word, which suggests that the proper paragraph break here should be between vv. 5 and 6. Joshua's death is mentioned in v. 8, although according to 1:1 it has already occurred. The grammatical construction in 1:1 is a common one, and it is clear that the events of ch. 1 are events that followed Joshua's death. Most likely the reference to Joshua's death in 1:1 is correctly placed and this subsequent passage has been inserted by the author out of sequence. It is a "flashback" that leads into the second major section of the book (2:6—3:6). Its resemblance to Josh. 24:28–30 is meant to tie the events of Joshua's era to the those of the next generation.

2:10 Another generation arose … who did not know the LORD: The peaceful resolution that characterized the end of the Book of Joshua gave way to an ominous future. The meaning of did not know is that the people deliberately refused to acknowledge God's authority. It is not simply that they were ignorant, but that they were in unbelief.

2:11, 12 The children of Israel did evil in the sight of the LORD is a statement also found in 3:7, 12; 4:1; 6:1; 10:6; 13:1 and in 1 and 2 Kings. Israel would stray frequently from the Lord. Only God's grace and the leadership of a few godly men and women spared the nation from complete corruption. served the Baals: See 3:7.

2:13 This verse is almost identical to the second half of 3:7. the Ashtoreths: Ashtoreth (Astarte) was a female fertility goddess and a goddess of love and war, closely associated with Baal (10:6; 1 Sam. 7:4; 12:10). She is not mentioned very often in Canaanite texts, but she appears by the name of Ishtar in Mesopotamian texts. The Ashtoreths mentioned here were local shrines of this far-flung cult (3:7).

2:14 the anger of the LORD was hot: When God's anger burned against the Israelites, His pattern in Judges was to hand them over to their enemies.

2:15 As the LORD had sworn refers to God's promise to deliver Israel into their enemies' hands if they forsook Him (Deut. 28:25; Josh. 23:13).

"judge"

(Heb. shaphat) (Judg. 2:16; 15:20; 1 Sam 7:15) Strong's #8199: The Hebrew word for judge means "to deliver" or "to rule." The judges of Israel had a wide range of responsibilities. Like their modern counterparts, OT judges could decide controversies and hand down verdicts (Ex. 18:16). These judges were also involved in the execution of their judgment in both vindicating the righteous (Ps. 26:1) and destroying the wicked (Ex. 7:3). Many judges were God's appointed military leaders who, empowered by God's Spirit (6:34, 15:14), fought Israel's oppressors and thereby delivered the people. Later, Israel's king functioned as the national judge (1 Sam. 8:5). Ultimately, Israel's perfect Judge is God. He alone is capable of perfectly judging the wicked and delivering the righteous (Is. 11:4).

2:16 The LORD raised up judges: The judges of Israel did not normally hold court, listen to complaints, or make legal decisions (except for Deborah, Judg. 4:4, 5). Rather, they were political leaders who delivered Israel from foreign threat or oppression. Yet the message conveyed is that the Lord alone is the true Judge of His people (11:27), and He hands out blessing and punishment. Six of the judges (Shamgar, Tola, Jair, Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon) are known as "minor" judges because of the few details given about them in the narrative. The "major" judges—Othniel, Ehud, Deborah, Gideon, Jephthah, and Samson—were distinguished by their military prowess or heroic deeds. Many scholars have suggested that the major judges rescued Israel from enemies, while the minor judges worked in the court as magistrates. However, this judgment is misleading. For instance, the two minor judges Shamgar (3:31) and Tola (10:1, 2) clearly were military heroes. Deborah, a major judge, was a war leader but settled disputes between the Israelites as well.

2:17 Played the harlot is a powerful and familiar metaphor used to describe Israel's unfaithfulness to God. Ezekiel and Hosea, in particular, would later use this comparison to describe Israel's unfaithfulness.

2:18 The Hebrew verb translated moved to pity is elsewhere translated relent (1 Sam. 15:29; Jon. 3:10). Here, the idea is that God changed His course (that is, relented) because of His compassion for the suffering Israelites (10:16).

2:19 Their fathers refers to those of the preceding generation, whereas in v. 17 fathers refers to those of Joshua's day.

2:20 this nation: Hebrew writers rarely used the word nation to refer to Israel. The phrase here has a contemptuous ring. Usually the word (Heb. goy) was used for Israel's neighbors, while Israel itself was called the people. The choice of the impersonal word nation reflects the distance between God and His people.

2:21–23 I also will no longer drive out … any of the nations: This fulfilled a promise that God had made to the Israelites through Joshua (vv. 15, 23).

3:1–6 This concluding passage demonstrates that God intended to test Israel (2:22; 3:1, 4). The ultimate result of being approved after testing (2 Tim. 2:15) is the reward of His kingdom (2 Tim. 2:12; James 1:12). The stage is now set for the accounts of the judges who would deliver Israel.

3:1, 2 that He might test Israel: This trial was a testing by fire, so to speak. The idea of testing implies difficulty and adversity; elsewhere the same word refers to God's testing of Abraham (Gen. 22:1) and Hezekiah (2 Chr. 32:31). Here God was testing Israel to refine it.

3:3 five lords of the Philistines: See Josh. 13:3. Sidonians: Sidon was a port city northwest of Israel, in what today is Lebanon. These people were part of the broader Canaanite culture and worshiped the same gods. Little is known about the Hivites. From the geographical description in this verse, it appears that they lived in northern Palestine (Josh. 9:7). Mount Lebanon was beyond the northern borders of Israel. Evidently, hostile nations surrounded Israel on every side.

“Problem” People

The Israelites shared the Promised Land with entire nations with whom they were in constant conflict (Judg. 3:1–4). Israel was supposed to displace these groups as it took possession of Canaan (Deut. 7). But for various reasons, many Canaanites were left. During the period of the judges, God used them to challenge His people, to punish them for violating His laws, and to turn them back toward Him.

3:4–6 Canaanites: On the various peoples in this verse, read Josh. 3:10.

3:7—16:31 The main part of the Book of Judges concerns twelve people whom God appointed to deliver Israel from various crises.

3:7–11 The first judge was Othniel, who delivered Israel from Cushan-Rishathaim, king of Mesopotamia. Verses 7 and 8 repeat much of the material from 2:11–14. Because of the Israelites’ sin, God allowed them to slip under foreign control for eight years.

3:7 the Baals and Asherahs: The plural is used for both gods because each was worshiped in different forms in the different local communities. In Num. 25:5, the Baal of Peor is mentioned. Place names such as Mount Baal Hermon (3:3); Baal Gad (Josh. 11:17), Baal Hazor (2 Sam. 13:23), and Baal Hamon (Song 8:11) occur with some frequency. Baal-Berith (that is, “The Baal of the Covenant”) was another Baal manifestation worshiped by the Israelites (8:33). On Ashtoreth, another Canaanite goddess, see 2:13.

3:8 Cushan-Rishathaim was from much farther away than Israel’s other enemies. It is remarkable that Othniel, who was from Judah, a region far to the south, was chosen to lead in this campaign. Cushan-Rishathaim’s name means “Cushan of Double Wickedness”; this may not have been his actual name, but instead a name pinned on him by the author of Judges for ridicule. Note that this name is found four times in two verses (vv. 8, 10), which may support the point that the author was mocking the king.

3:9, 10 Othniel was the hero who captured the city of Kirjath Sepher (1:13; Josh. 15:17). He was from Judah and was Caleb’s near kinsman and son-in-law. The Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he prevailed against Cushan-Rishathaim.

3:11 The land had rest for forty years is the first of several references to forty-year or eighty-year periods of peace in the Book of Judges (3:30; 5:31; 8:28).

3:12–30 The second judge was Ehud, who delivered Israel from Eglon king of Moab. Verses 12–14 give us the familiar background, beginning with Israel's apostasy and the resulting conquest by Eglon, lasting eighteen years (v. 14 echoes v. 8). The story of Eglon's death is both graphic and hair-raising, reflecting the violence and chaos of this period in Israel's history. Yet it is also a literary masterpiece, skillfully weaving details together in a compelling narrative.

3:12 Moab was a plateau southeast of the Dead Sea. It was populated by nomadic herders and farmers in small agrarian settlements but had no large cities. It sat on either side of the King's Highway, an important north-south trade route. The ancestor of the Moabites was the offspring of Lot's incestuous relationship with his older daughter (Gen. 19:37), so the Moabites and Israelites were distantly related. The Bible frequently mentions conflict between the two peoples, except for the Book of Ruth, the events of which occurred during a time of stable relations between Moab and Israel. The Moabites worshiped Chemosh and his consort Ashtar, as well as Baal.

3:13–18 The City of Palms was Jericho (1:16). It is the only city on record that Eglon captured, although he ruled the Israelites eighteen years (v. 14). The reference to Jericho is surprising since one might assume the city had been completely destroyed by Joshua. However, the Israelites may have rebuilt the site because of its plentiful water supply and strategic location, advantages that Eglon certainly would have noticed.

3:19 The Hebrew word for images is used many times to refer to idols made of wood, stone, or metal (Deut. 7:5, 25; Is. 10:10; Hos. 11:2). These images were clearly important in this passage—and prominent enough to be landmarks—since they appear again in v. 26, bracketing the account of Ehud's murder of Eglon. Gilgal had been the site of the Israelites' first encampment in Canaan and was an important religious center (Josh. 4:19).

3:20–23 upstairs in his cool private chamber: In ancient cities, the coolest place in the house was on the roof (compare the small upper room that a Shunammite woman and her husband made for the prophet Elisha, 2 Kin. 4:10).

3:24, 25 Attending to his needs is a euphemism for defecating (1 Sam. 24:3).

3:26 Seirah is mentioned only here in the Bible, and its location is unknown.

3:27–30 The trumpet described here is the ram's horn, which could sound only a few notes. Ram's horns were used to signal others (Josh. 6:5).

3:31 Shamgar is mentioned only here and in 5:6. This short passage does not fit the pattern usually associated with the rise of the judges. Missing is the customary prelude of apostasy and sin. Chronologically this verse may be out of place. The next chapter begins with the death of Ehud, the previous judge. Moreover, Shamgar delivered Israel but did not judge it. Even the name Shamgar is not Hebrew. Yet he was the son of Anath—clearly a Semitic name. This may mean that he was from the town of Beth-Anath in Galilee; more probably, however, Anath is derived from the name of the Canaanite warrior goddess. If so, then it is ironic that God used a foreign warrior to deliver Israel.

4:1—5:31 The fourth judge was Deborah, whose triumphs—along with Barak's—make up the first extended account in the Book of Judges. Unique to this episode is the poetic victory hymn (ch. 5) that follows the narration of the Israelite victory.

4:1–3 This new chapter follows the pattern of the Book of Judges by echoing the events of ch. 3. Again the people sinned and suffered oppression, this time enduring twenty years of Canaanite rule.

4:2, 3 Jabin king of Canaan, who reigned in Hazor: Years earlier Joshua had defeated a king of Hazor named Jabin (Josh. 11:1–15). Probably Jabin was a title rather than a proper name, resembling the use of the title Abimelech among the Philistines (Gen. 20:2; 26:1) or Ben-Hadad among the kings of Damascus. The name Jabin has been found in a text from Mari, an archaeological site on the Euphrates River. The system of small rival kingdoms prominent in Joshua's day still prevailed during the period of the judges (Josh. 2:2), but Jabin was clearly more powerful than most. Hazor, having been destroyed earlier (Josh. 11:11), had now been rebuilt. The site of Sisera's headquarters, Harosheth Hagoyim, is unknown, but the ensuing battle was played out in northern Israel around Mt. Tabor (v. 6) and the River Kishon (v. 7).

4:4–10 The campaign of the Israelite tribes began with the introduction of Deborah. This episode also demonstrated widespread cooperation between the tribes. In response to the threat in the north, Deborah, who lived in the south of Ephraim near the territory of Judah (v. 5), ordered the Israelites to send troops against Sisera. At least six tribes contributed soldiers: Naphtali, Zebulun, Ephraim, Benjamin, western Manasseh (Machir), and Issachar (v. 6; 5:14, 15).

4:4 Deborah is one of five women to be called a prophetess in the OT. The others are Miriam (Ex. 15:20), Huldah (2 Kin. 22:14; 2 Chr. 34:22), Isaiah's wife (Is. 8:3), and Noadiah, a false prophetess (Neh. 6:14). She also judged Israel (vv. 4, 5) by deciding cases under a palm tree, which shows the judicial dimensions of her judgeship.

4:5 Ramah and Bethel were in the southern part of the land, near Judah. Ramah was in the territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:25), and Bethel was near the border between Benjamin and Ephraim (Josh. 8:17; 18:13).

4:6, 7 Deborah summoned Barak from Kedesh in Naphtali, a settlement southwest of the Sea of Galilee. The soldiers were to gather at Mt. Tabor, where the territories of Issachar, Naphtali, and Zebulun met (v.

6). The battle would be fought along the River Kishon, which flows northwest into the Mediterranean, south of Mt. Tabor.

4:8–10 Barak hesitated to lead the Israelites in battle. His lack of nerve forced Deborah to go with him, and subsequently the glory for the victory would go to a woman. We naturally assume that Deborah would be this woman, but we discover later that Jael, a Kenite woman, killed the notorious Sisera (vv. 17–22). Both women were heroines in a time when Israel's leadership was mostly bankrupt. In fact, Deborah is shown in the best light of all the judges in the book. She is called a prophetess (v. 4), and many sought out her decisions (v. 5). For this reason, she is called "a mother in Israel" (5:7). She is probably included among the "leaders" in Israel (5:2), and she instructed Barak in the strategy of the battle (4:9, 14). She also was a prominent author of the victory song (5:1) and gave her name to a place in Israel, the palm tree of Deborah (v. 5).

4:11–16 The details of the victory are now recounted. Verse 11 anticipates the narrative in vv. 17–22 by introducing Heber, Jael's husband, who lived near Kedesh and who was distantly related to the Israelites. The emphasis in vv. 12–16 is on God's power and His work.

4:12–16 The centerpiece of Sisera's impressive army was nine hundred chariots of iron; they were swift, maneuverable weapons of war. However, the chariots seem to have become mired in the waters of the River Kishon (5:19–22).

Willing Leaders

While it is always easy to find people who want to be "in charge," it is difficult to find people of character and ability who are willing to step into roles of leadership. Israel faced a chronic crisis of leadership during the days of the judges, when "everyone did what was right in his own eyes" (Judg. 21:25). Few could be found who were willing and able to offer moral and spiritual direction.

Perhaps that's why Deborah, in her song of praise composed after Israel's victory over Jabin and Sisera, celebrated willing leaders followed by willing people (5:2, 9). Apparently the people were willing to follow if they could find leaders who would lead rather than despots who would dominate, such as Abimelech (ch. 9).

Deborah and Balak were good models of leaders willing to lead. Their stand for God and integrity before the people were profoundly inspiring, so much so that even common people such as the woman Jael were emboldened to grab whatever was at hand to strike down the enemy (4:17–22; 5:24–27).

4:17–24 The details of Sisera's death are told in the slow, suspenseful manner that characterized the story of Eglon's death (3:12–30). The story's conclusion is that God Himself subdued Jabin.

5:1–31 This chapter contains the victory song of Deborah and Barak. The hymn praises God for His triumph over the Canaanites and bears the hallmarks of very archaic Hebrew. Its vivid descriptions of the events seem as if they might have come from eyewitnesses to them, which Deborah and Barak were. It is reminiscent of the victory song of Moses and Miriam in Ex. 15.

5:1 The verb sang here is in a feminine singular form, which supports the point made earlier about Deborah's prominence over Barak (4:8, 9).

5:2–9 The introduction to the hymn is set off by calls to worship at the beginning and end—Bless the LORD! (vv. 2, 9). Verse 3 also contains a call to worship similar to that found in many psalms.

5:2, 3 When leaders lead: The phrase literally means "the long-haired ones who let their hair hang loose." The precise meaning of the phrase is obscure, but it may mean that loosed locks or flowing hair were signs of great strength or leadership. People willingly offer themselves tells of the glad cooperation of the Israelites. The Hebrew term is related to the noun for "freewill offerings" (Lev. 7:16; 22:23). The spirit of willing involvement here is reminiscent of Ex. 36, where the people volunteered to give so much for the building of the tabernacle that Moses told them to stop giving, or Ezra 1, where a similar outpouring is found. Note also the NT churches of Macedonia who freely and willingly gave liberally out of their poverty (2 Cor. 8:1–4).

“sing praise”

(Heb. zamar) (Judg. 5:3; 2 Sam. 22:50; 1 Chr. 16:9; Pss. 47:6, 7; 147:1) Strong’s #2167: This Hebrew word usually refers to singing which exalts God, sometimes to singing accompanied with a musical instrument (Pss. 98:5; 149:3). In the Scripture, such singing is frequently addressed to the Lord and is an expression of gratitude for something He has done for the worshiper (Pss. 9:11; 105:2) or for His mercy and justice (Ps. 101:1). This word often is used as a summons for God’s people to praise Him (5:3; Is. 12:5). The English word psalm is derived from the Greek translation of this Hebrew word.

5:4, 5 A brief historical review now follows the calls to worship in vv. 2, 3. These verses refer to the Lord’s marching from Seir and Edom, which likely refers to God’s transferring His “abode” from the wilderness (Mt. Sinai, v. 5) into Canaan, by way of the land of Edom. This corresponds to the movement of His people from Sinai (Kadesh) northward into Canaan (Num. 10:12; 20:22).

5:6–8 Another historical review now follows the first one, detailing the bleak state of affairs before the battle until Deborah arose as a deliverer (vv. 6, 7). Israel had even chosen new gods, resulting in divine judgment (v. 8; 10:14).

5:7–9 The phrase a mother in Israel occurs twice in the OT, here and 2 Sam. 20:19. The title is given to Deborah as one of honor, respect, and prominence.

5:10–18 This section begins again with calls to worship in vv. 10–12. Verse 13 describes the battle in very general terms. Verses 14, 15, 18 praise the tribes who heeded Deborah’s call. Ten of the twelve tribes are mentioned here, five and a half favorably, because they responded to Deborah and Barak’s summons. Four and a half tribes are criticized because they did not join their countrymen: Reuben (vv. 15, 16), Gad and eastern Manasseh (Gilead), Dan, and Asher (v. 17). Judah and Simeon are not mentioned in the song or in ch. 4.

5:10–13 This verse calls all classes of society to bear witness to the mighty acts of God, from the ruling classes, those riding on white donkeys, to the lowest classes, those who walk along the road.

5:14–16 Machir is identified here with western Manasseh, in whose territory the battle took place. Elsewhere Machir is identified with eastern Manasseh (Josh. 13:30, 31). Machir was a noted warrior (Josh. 17:1).

5:17, 18 The reference to Dan remaining on ships probably reflects the location of their original inheritance, which was along the south-central coastal plain where they would have had access to the sea (Josh. 19:40–46). Later they migrated northward, having been forced out of their territory (1:34; 18:1; Josh. 19:47). Some scholars connect this tribe with the Danunians, a sea people who invaded the eastern Mediterranean shortly after 1200 B.C. However, the Bible clearly establishes the existence of the tribe of Dan many years earlier (Gen. 30:6; 49:16–18).

Remains of the city walls on the mound of Taanach, where Deborah and Barak defeated the Canaanites under Sisera (Judg. 5:1, 19–23).

5:19–23 The victory proper is now described in vivid terms, and a curse is pronounced on Meroz, a site otherwise unknown (v. 23). The stars themselves were fighting against Sisera (v. 20), a vivid metaphor of God's intervention. The prose account says, "And the LORD routed Sisera and all his chariots and all his army with the edge of the sword before Barak" (4:15). The frantic pounding of the horses' hooves, their galloping, galloping, suggests the chaos caused by the waters of the River Kishon (vv. 21, 22; 4:7).

5:24–30 The poem now contrasts the two women who waited on Sisera: Jael, who killed him (vv. 24–27), and his mother, who longed for his return (vv. 28–30). Sisera's mother appears for the first time; in her futile waiting, she and her companions delude themselves as they dream up imagined glories that he was taking part in.

5:25–27 The poem speaks of Sisera sinking and falling at Jael's feet as she strikes his head, while the prose account tells us he was already lying down when she struck him (4:21). The poem is using graphic, emotive language, which it repeats several times to make the point. Sisera's death probably was a bloodier affair than the prose account indicates.

5:28–30 The point of this pathetic story of Sisera's mother is not to elicit sympathy for her, but rather to remind us of Jael's stunning accomplishment. Sisera's mother expected her son to shower his people with great plunder; instead, Sisera lay dead at Jael's feet. Three times in the OT we read of women who looked through the window: Sisera's mother, Saul's daughter Michal (2 Sam. 6:16), and Jezebel (2 Kin. 9:30). All three opposed God's will and suffered accordingly.

5:31 The hymn concludes with praise to the Lord, as many psalms do. The prose account resumes with another period of forty years of rest (3:11).

6:1–8, 32 The fifth judge was Gideon, who twice fought the Midianites, first under God's instructions and later on his own initiative. Gideon's story is the second major account in the Book of Judges. In this narrative—along with the subsequent tragedy of Abimelech that follows in ch. 9—we can see, in ways not evident previously, the continuing deterioration of Israel's spiritual state. First, God now rebuked Israel when it called upon Him (6:7–10). Second, the judge himself contributed to the spiritual decline (8:24–27). Third, Israel's tribes fought among themselves for the first time (8:16, 17; 9:23–54), prior to an even worse dissension later (12:1–6; 20:1–48). Despite God's continued intervention and Gideon's flashes of righteousness, Israel eroded spiritually and politically.

6:1–10 The pattern of continuing apostasy is resumed, with Israel sinning and falling under foreign oppression and then crying out to God for deliverance. However, rather than automatically sending a deliverer-judge, as previously, God this time sends a prophet, who condemns Israel. God would indeed deliver Israel through Gideon, but it is clear He would not respond mechanistically to any and all Israelite appeals, regardless of circumstances.

6:1 Midian was located in the Arabian peninsula, southeast of Israel and east of the Sinai peninsula. The Midianites were descendants of Abraham through his wife Keturah (Gen. 25:1, 2), so they were distantly related to the Israelites. Midianites bought Joseph from his brothers (Gen. 37:25–36), welcomed Moses in the wilderness (Ex. 2:15–21), and hired Balaam to curse Israel (Num. 22:7). Generally speaking, Israel counted Midian among its foes. In this account, the Midianites were menacing Israel, burning, looting, and leaving many near starvation (6:4, 5).

6:2 the dens, the caves: Caves were not used for permanent dwellings in OT times. That the Israelites were forced to abandon their homes and live in caves indicates the desperate straits they were in.

6:3, 4 The Amalekites were a nomadic people who lived in the Sinai desert and the Negev, the desert south of Israel. They were descendants of Esau (Gen. 36:12) and here joined the Midianites against Israel. People of the East were unspecified nomads who also plundered Israel. These easterners are also mentioned in several prophetic contexts (Is. 11:14; Jer. 49:28; Ezek. 25:4).

6:5–7 as numerous as locusts: Locust plagues were—and still are—a fairly common occurrence in the Middle East. In the prophet Joel's day, such an attack would be prophesied as a punishment upon the land (Joel 1:4, 15–17; 2:1–11).

6:8–10 the LORD sent a prophet: This prophet reminded the Israelites of God's faithfulness and how the people had nevertheless rejected Him (vv. 8–10).

6:11–40 Gideon's call is the centerpiece of ch. 6. It begins with the appearance of the Angel of the Lord to Gideon (vv. 11–24), followed by an account of Gideon's destruction of an altar of Baal (vv. 25–35), after which we see Gideon's wavering faith (vv. 36–40). Through it all, Gideon was ambivalent about being called to deliver Israel, much as Moses had been years earlier.

6:11, 12 The Palestinian terebinth tree is a large tree with a thick trunk and heavy branches, sometimes confused with the oak. It can grow as high as twenty-five feet. The terebinth figures in the stories of Abraham, who pitched his tent near the terebinth trees of Mamre (Gen. 13:18; 18:1), and of Jacob, who hid a treasure beneath a terebinth tree (Gen. 35:4). The exact location of Ophrah is unknown, but it was a city somewhere in the territory of Manasseh. It is not the same as the Benjamite city of the same name (Josh. 18:23; 1 Sam. 13:17). Abiezrite: See v. 24. A winepress was a square or circular pit carved into rock in which grapes were crushed (Is. 16:10; Jer. 48:33). Wheat was usually separated on open threshing floors so the wind could carry away the chaff in the winnowing process (2 Sam. 24:18). The fact that Gideon was forced to thresh wheat hidden inside a winepress—despite the fact that he had access to a threshing floor (v. 37)—shows again the desperate state the Israelites were in.

6:13, 14 My lord was a polite form of address, but the LORD is the personal name of God (Yahweh), the full meaning of which was revealed to Moses at Mt. Sinai (Ex. 3:13–16). The Hebrew word for miracles means "wonderful things," and it is translated elsewhere as wonders (Ex. 3:20; Josh. 3:5).

“clan”

(Heb. eleph) (Judg. 6:15, 1 Sam. 10:19) Strong’s #504: The word eleph has several distinct meanings in Hebrew. It may represent the number 1,000 (Num. 35:4, 1 Chr. 18:4), or it may be rendered tribe or clan (6:15, 1 Sam. 10:19). Occasionally it designates a “region” or “district” (1 Sam. 23:23). This ambiguity has led to differing opinions over the number of people involved in certain OT events, whether they involved literally “thousands” or simply “units” composed of an unspecified number of people (Num. 1; Josh. 7:3–5).

6:15 I am the least in my father’s house: Gideon’s objection is reminiscent of the words spoken by Moses (Ex. 3:11) and Jeremiah (Jer. 1:6).

6:16 I will be with you was God’s great promise of His presence that He had given to Moses and Joshua previously (Ex. 3:12; Josh. 1:5, 9). This should have greatly encouraged Gideon, but he still expressed doubts (vv. 17, 36–40). Often we are quick to judge those who doubt God even when they have firsthand evidence of His mighty works. But we all fail to trust God fully at times. God accomplished His will despite Gideon’s weakness, and He can do the same through us.

6:17, 18 Gideon’s faith needed such bolstering that he asked God for a sign. Here as elsewhere, Gideon was slow to respond to God (vv. 39, 40).

6:19–21 An ephah of flour was two-thirds of a bushel, or about twenty pounds of flour.

6:22, 23 Gideon perceived: When the Angel of the Lord vanished, then Gideon realized (literally, “saw”) who it was and feared for his life. This reaction of fear appears to have been rooted in the knowledge that anyone who gazed upon God would die. In Ex. 33:20, God, speaking to Moses, says, “You cannot see My face; for no man shall see Me, and live.” The context of Ex. 33:18–23 suggests that it was the fullness of God’s glory that Moses could not see, since Moses did speak with God and know Him “face to face” (Ex. 33:11; Num. 12:8; Deut. 34:10), and he even beheld the form of God Himself (Num. 12:8). Yet Gideon’s fear was a proper response for those who found themselves in the presence of God’s Angel. This was also Manoah’s reaction when the Angel visited him (13:21, 22).

6:24 To this day: This expression, especially common in the books of Joshua and Judges (Judg. 1:21, 26; 15:19; Josh. 4:9; 5:9; 6:25; 7:26), lends authenticity to the account. It is the author's way of declaring to later generations that they could verify the story by going and seeing this altar themselves. Abiezrites were descendants of Joseph through his son Manasseh. They were part of the tribe of Manasseh that settled west of the Jordan River (Num. 26:30 [Jeezer]; Josh. 17:1, 2).

6:25–35 Gideon's first test was to topple the local shrines to Baal and Asherah, replacing them with an altar to the Lord. Gideon obeyed, but his fearfulness caused him to do this by night (v. 27). His forthcoming military tests are foreshadowed in the text (vv. 33–35). The battle he would lead would take place in the central highlands of northern Israel (Ophrah, Gideon's hometown, was in the Jezreel Valley, southwest of the Sea of Galilee).

6:25 The Hebrew word for wooden image here is Asherah, the name of the Canaanite goddess. Sacred wooden poles were erected at places where she was worshiped. The widespread worship of this goddess is attested to in 3:7 and elsewhere (1 Kin. 15:13; 18:19). The second bull is not a second animal, but a phrase by which the Lord was specifying more clearly to Gideon which bull should be sacrificed. The need to specify the bull underscores Gideon's continued reluctance (v. 17).

6:26, 27 The wood of the image means literally "the wood of the Asherah" (vv. 28, 30). The proper sacrifice that Gideon was to offer would be burnt with the wood of the destroyed idol.

6:28 The phrase early in the morning occurs in Judges at 6:28, 38; 7:1; 9:33; 19:5, 8, 9; 21:4.

6:29–31 Would you plead for Baal: Joash's questions are rhetorical. He refused to put his son to death, arguing that Baal should be able to take care of himself if he were indeed a god. Other examples of rhetorical questions in Judges are found at 9:2, 28; 11:25; 18:3; 20:28.

6:32–34 Gideon's father called him Jerubbaal to deride those who would put their trust in Baal. The name means "Let Baal Plead," and it echoes the question of v. 31. Thus Gideon became a living reminder of Baal's impotence. Second Samuel 11:21 refers to him as "Jerubbesheth," substituting the word "besheth," meaning "shame," for "Baal." Such changes also occur with other names that incorporate Baal's name, such as "Eshbaal," whose name means "man of Baal" (1 Chr. 8:33; 9:39), by the name of “Ishbosheth,” which means “man of shame” (2 Sam. 2:8), and “Meribbaal,” whose name means “Baal contends” (1 Chr. 8:34; 9:40), by the name “Mephibosheth,” which means “utterance of shame” (2 Sam. 9:6). Thus is any sanction, or even any appearance of, an endorsement of Baal worship avoided in the text.

6:35 Gideon sent messengers through the territories of four northern tribes adjacent to each other: Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali.

Determining God's Will

The example of Gideon is frequently cited as a model for godly decision-making. Before acting, Gideon carefully considered whether the Lord wanted him to rally an army and attack the Midianites. Twice he set out a fleece (a clump of wool) to make sure of God's intentions (Judg. 6:36–40). On this basis, some have argued that before Christians make major decisions with long-range consequences, they should "put out a fleece before the Lord," seeking some tangible sign that indicates His will with certainty.

Is that an appropriate way to know God's will? In considering the question, it is important to note that this is the only occasion in the Bible when God revealed His will through a fleece. It is also worth noting Gideon's extreme hesitation, doubt, and fear. The Lord had already told him what to do through the Angel of the Lord (6:11–16). In fact, the Angel had already given Gideon a confirming sign (6:17–22). In light of these facts, Gideon's use of the fleece would appear to demonstrate a lack of faith more than any zeal to be certain of God's will. Fortunately, God was patient with him and granted his request for a confirming sign. But it seems that using a fleece to determine God's will was the exception rather than the rule, and thus does not serve as the best pattern for how we can depend on God for guidance.

Is there a more reliable way? Yes, God has clearly and objectively told us what He wants throughout the Bible. For example, the Ten Commandments give straightforward instructions to guide our behavior in numerous areas. Likewise, Thessalonians says plainly, "This is the will of God" (1 Thess. 4:3) in regard to sexuality. Thus when it comes to making choices in life, God calls us to clear thinking, thinking based on our relationship with Him and our allegiance to His values, which are clearly spelled out in Scripture.

God has made us to be thinking, discerning, analytical persons who assume responsibility for working our way through life in accordance with His general plans and purposes. He challenges us to learn all that we can about any situation, relationship, responsibility, or opportunity that we have, weigh it in light of His precepts and principles, and only then to act. And as we act, we can take comfort from the fact that He is at work within us, "both to will and to do for His good pleasure" (Phil. 2:13).

6:36–40 Before the fight itself, Gideon asked for signs to "test" God's guidance once more.

6:39 Let me test: The word translated test is the same one used when God tested Israel (2:22; 3:1). Gideon's desire to test God's sign could have been a violation of the law which prohibited people from testing God (Deut. 6:16; the Hebrew word translated tempt is the same word translated test here). Gideon himself was aware that he was doing something unwise, if not sinful, since he asked God not to be angry with him.

6:40 Despite Gideon's lack of faith, God did so that night. That is, He accommodated both of his requests. Many people have relied on Gideon's example as a way seeking guidance from the Lord, "putting out a fleece" in some way. Occasionally God has chosen to answer such requests, even as He did for Gideon. Nevertheless, Gideon already knew God's will for his life (vv. 14–16, 36). His requests only made evident his weak faith. Isaiah modeled a proper response to God's clearly revealed will: he said "Here am I! Send me" (Is. 6:8). So too did the disciples, who dropped their nets immediately and followed Jesus (Mark 1:18–20).

7:1—8:3 God figures prominently in Gideon's victory over the Midianites, especially in the amazing story of the 300 men who would subdue their numerically superior foes. The reassurances from God that Gideon had received before the encounter were now reinforced by a dream (7:9–15). The battle itself did not involve any significant combat, for God Himself provided the victory (7:16–25). The Israelites blew horns, broke jars, and shouted, causing the enemy to kill each other in their confusion. The survivors fled across the Jordan with the Israelites in pursuit.

7:1, 2 lest Israel claim glory for itself: Right from the beginning, God made it clear that the glory for this victory was to be His. This makes even more incredible the Israelites' request that Gideon rule over them because he had "delivered us from the hand of Midian" (8:22, 23).

7:3 When Gideon allowed those who were fearful to leave, more than two-thirds departed, leaving only 10,000. Mosaic law allowed military exemptions for several classes of people, including those who had just built a home, those who had just planted a vineyard, those engaged to be married, and those who were fearful (Deut. 20:5–8).

7:4–9 Gideon thinned his army even more by employing a strange distinction, namely, how his men drank water from a brook. Some commentators have suggested that the men who did not get down on their knees were maintaining a higher degree of military readiness by drinking out of their hands. However, they may be reading too much into the account, for the text does not indicate any reason for Gideon's preference. The reference to the way a dog laps might even be derogatory since dogs were despised creatures in the ancient world (1 Sam. 17:43; 2 Kin. 8:13; Matt. 7:6). If so, God's role in the victory becomes even more apparent, since the 300 who were left were the ones who did not even have the common sense to drink in a normal fashion. God's comment in v. 7 seems to reinforce this suggestion.

7:10, 11 Ironically, Gideon himself was afraid, but he had not been dismissed to go home as had the other men (v. 3).

7:12 This verse notes again the strength of Israel's enemies, including their intimidating numbers and their innumerable camels (6:3–5).

7:13 Tumbled in this context literally means "overturned." The word is also used in Genesis to describe the sword "which turned every way" at the entrance to the Garden of Eden (Gen. 3:24) and the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19:25, 29). Here, the loaf "overturned" the Midianite camp.

7:14, 15 The sword of Gideon is the key to the interpretation of the dream. Coming from the mouth of one of Israel's enemies, it provided the confirmation that Gideon needed, in light of his earlier fear (v. 10). As a result, he worshiped God for being so patient with his wavering faith (v. 15).

7:16–18 The ram's-horn trumpet was used as a signal call (3:27; Josh. 6:5).

7:19 middle watch: According to Jewish tradition the nighttime hours were divided into three watches, which would put the time of this attack at roughly 10:00 P.M.

7:20–22 The sword of the LORD and of Gideon: Here the full version of the war cry is given. A more literal rendering of the Hebrew is "A sword for the Lord and for Gideon!"

7:23 The same tribes mentioned in 6:35 now pursued the Midianites, with the exception of Zebulun, which is not mentioned. Ephraim also joined in the pursuit (v. 24).

7:24, 25 The watering places probably refer to small tributaries that flowed into the Jordan River. Seizing them would seal off the enemy's escape routes. The other side of the Jordan is the east side of the Jordan, where the Israelites caught the enemy (Josh. 13:32; 18:7).

8:1–3 The men of Ephraim complained to Gideon that they had been called out late (v. 1). Gideon’s flattering response had a calming effect on these men.

A Shrewd Politician

Whatever fear Gideon may have felt prior to the battle with the Midianites, he displayed shrewd political instincts when he dealt with the men of Ephraim. His allusion to gleaning after a quality harvest (Judg. 8:2) was designed to soothe the Ephraimites' resentment that they had not been mustered for the main battle but only given the mop-up operation (7:24—8:1).

Gleaning was a custom of Israelite law that required landowners to leave a portion of their harvests in the fields or on the vines for the benefit of the poor. After the harvesters had completed their work, the poor were allowed to go through the fields and vineyards to gather what was left (Lev. 19:9, 10).

Thus Gideon praised the men of Ephraim by saying that the gleanings, or leftovers, of their vineyards was superior to the firstfruits of his own clan of Abiezer. This was quite a compliment, since the Valley of Jezreel, where the Abiezrites lived, was one of the most productive vineyard regions in all of Israel.

8:4–28 Gideon followed up the victory with a second military campaign, one which contrasts dramatically with the first. He pursued the two Midianite kings until he caught and killed them, and he punished the towns of Succoth and Penuel. In this account, there is no indication of God's involvement as there had been previously; rather, Gideon is merely settling a private score (vv. 18, 19).

8:5–10 Succoth was east of the Jordan, near the Jabbok River. Zebah and Zalmunna are unflattering names meaning "Victim" and "Protection Refused." They may be wordplays on the real names of these kings, much like the name Cusha-Rishathaim (3:8). Yet the author of Judges may have had more sympathy for these two kings than for Cushan-Rishathaim, since Gideon is cast in a poor light in this chapter.

8:11, 12 Gideon's aggression contrasts sharply with the caution and fear so evident in ch. 6.

8:13, 14 he wrote down for him the leaders: Literacy in early civilizations was at first limited to an educated elite, as in Mesopotamia and Egypt. Their writing systems were complex and only a tiny portion of the population could read and write. However, the spread of alphabetic systems vastly simplified the task of reading and writing. Hundreds of potsherds from throughout Palestine have simple inscriptions on them, indicating that some degree of literacy had become widely accessible by Gideon's day. Even a youth whom Gideon happened upon wrote down for Gideon the names of seventy-seven men.

8:15–17 Gideon's actions here fulfill his pledges in vv. 7 and 9.

8:18 The killings to which Gideon refers do not appear anywhere else in the text. The answer from the two kings was flattering: As you are, so were they; they compared Gideon to the son of a king. Gideon, despite his refusal of a kingship, was not immune to the vanity that royalty encouraged. By naming one of his sons Abimelech, which means "My Father Is King" (v. 31), he may have succumbed to the temptation of exalting himself as a king over Israel.

8:19–21 As a man is, so is his strength was a challenge to Gideon's manhood, and Gideon responded by killing the two kings himself. Crescent ornaments have been found at many sites in Palestine, but they are mentioned again only one other time in the Bible (Is. 3:18).

8:22 Immediately following his execution of the two kings, Gideon's men asked him to rule over them. This request, while understandable from a human perspective (v. 18), failed to acknowledge that it was God, not Gideon, who had delivered His people.

8:23 Gideon's answer was theologically correct: the LORD shall rule over you. The word order of the Hebrew makes it clear that God's claim was exclusive; it might be paraphrased, "It is the Lord, and no one else, who shall rule over you." This statement is widely assumed to indicate that God intended that Israel should never have a king, but that He would be their only King. However, God had promised Abraham and his descendants that they would count kings among their descendants (Gen. 17:6, 16; 35:11; 49:10). When the people of Israel asked Gideon to rule because of his military success, Gideon could only refuse, since their motivation was flawed and shortsighted. A king's true role was to lead people to God; he would leave the issues of warfare to God. This was the critical mistake of the people when they asked for a king in Samuel's day: they asked for a king to "judge us and go out before us and fight our battles" (1 Sam. 8:20).

They wanted a king to do what the judges had done: lead them in battles. Yet the period of the judges was one of failure.

The Man Who Would Be King

After Gideon defeated the Midianites, the people of Israel wanted to make him their king, but he refused the title (Judg. 8:22, 23). Apparently his son, Abimelech, was not so humble. Even though it meant the brutal murder of his seventy half-brothers, he arranged to have himself crowned king of Shechem.

Abimelech's glory was as limited in scope as it was in duration. His influence probably never extended more than ten miles, even though he was said to have reigned over Israel (9:22). And after three years he was driven from Shechem by troubles with the very people who had aided his rise to power. He sought safer quarters several miles south at Arumah (9:39–41).

As Abimelech's grasp on the region slipped, he resorted to more violence in a desperate bid to retain control (9:42–52). In the end, having been rejected by Gideon's family, by his mother's family, and by the citizens of his "kingdom," he died in shame. True to form, he made one last request. To preserve what little reputation he had left, he compelled one of his men to run him through with a sword (9:53, 54).

8:24–28 Despite Gideon's theologically correct answer in v. 23, these verses show that he was not careful to lead Israel in true worship of the Lord. By making the ephod, he encouraged idolatry. The total weight of the offerings brought for making the ephod—one thousand seven hundred shekels—was impressive. Assuming the unit of weight here to be the shekel (it is not specified in the Hebrew text), the total weight was more than forty-two pounds of gold (a shekel was about two-fifths of an ounce). The original ephod was an ornate ceremonial garment worn by the high priest (Ex. 28; 39). Some scholars believe that the ephod made by Gideon resembled an idol, but there is no clear indication here that this was the case. By placing the ephod in his own city, Gideon might have been "playing" at being judge. Perhaps tellingly, nowhere are we told that he "judged" Israel, whereas we read this of several of the other judges. After Gideon another man also made an ephod, with equally dismal results (17:5). It became a snare recalls the narrator's introductory comment in 2:3.

8:29–32 This transitional section tells of Gideon's death, but also introduces Gideon's fateful legacy: his son Abimelech, whose violent story is told in ch. 9.

8:31, 32 Although Gideon had seventy sons (v. 30), only Abimelech is mentioned by name. The name means "My Father Is King." Some scholars argue that Gideon did, in fact, become king, at least in practice if not in name, for he gave his son a royal name and acted as the people's leader (vv. 24–27).

8:33–35 Baal-Berith means "Baal of the Covenant," an ironic contrast to the covenant God of Israel whom the Israelites should have been worshiping. This god is also called "El-Berith" (9:46).

9:1–57 Abimelech's violent grab for power is the theme of ch. 9. The seeds of his offense were sown in Israel's persistent infidelity to God, which led to another rejection of the Lord (8:22, 24–27, 33–35).

9:1–6 Abimelech killed his own brothers to strengthen his royal claims. He began by traveling to Shechem, where ironically, Israel had reaffirmed the covenant years earlier (Josh. 24). He earned the trust of the Shechemites (v. 2) and hired men to kill all his brothers but one. Abimelech was then made king at Shechem (v. 6).

9:4, 5 The temple of Baal-Berith was a pagan sanctuary, a vivid sign of Israel's continuing apostasy (8:33). worthless and reckless men: Abimelech's character can certainly be judged by the company that he kept. The same can be said of Jephthah (11:3).

9:6 Sadly, the coronation took place at the terebinth tree where Jacob had put away his foreign gods many years before (Gen. 35:4). Here too, Joshua had commemorated his covenant with God (Josh. 24:26).

9:7–21 Jotham, the only brother of Abimelech who escaped, condemned Abimelech's treachery publicly by telling a fable—a story in which creatures take on human characteristics. In this fable, the noble trees of the forest reject a call to kingship, which is finally conferred on the lowly bramble bush (vv. 8–15). The fable indicts the Shechemites for choosing the ignoble Abimelech as king. The story is not an indictment of kings in general (8:23).

“sincerity”

(Heb. tamim) (Judg. 9:16, 19; Gen. 6:9; Deut. 18:13) Strong’s #8549: This word means “unblemished,” “blameless,” or “perfect.” The Lord required that offerings dedicated to Him be unblemished (Lev. 22:21; Num. 6:14). The term can also be used to describe a people (2 Sam. 22:24; Ps. 119:80) or a course of action (Prov. 11:20; 28:18) that is blameless. The Bible describes Noah this way (Gen. 6:9), although he was not completely without fault (see Gen. 9:21). In declaring His covenant to Abraham, the Lord commanded His servant to be blameless (Gen. 17:1). In his farewell discourse, Moses gave the charge to the children of Israel to be blameless (Deut. 18:13). Many years later Joshua did likewise, exhorting the people to serve the Lord in sincerity and in truth (Josh. 24:14).

9:20, 21 let fire come: Jotham issued a warning to the people of Shechem—fire would devour them and Abimelech too if they had not acted properly. The threat was fulfilled when fire devoured a large number of Shechemites and Abimelech was killed by a Shechemite woman (vv. 49, 54).

9:22–55 Very quickly the harmony between the Shechemites and Abimelech disintegrated. Abimelech, who relied on the Shechemites to rise to power, now became the target of their lawlessness (vv. 22–25). This discord spread into open revolt under Gaal son of Ebed (vv. 26–33). Abimelech quelled the revolt and leveled Shechem in the process (vv. 34–45). He also burned Shechem’s stronghold, its tower (vv. 46–49). Abimelech himself came to a violent end at nearby Thebez (vv. 50–55).

9:22 The Hebrew root for reigned here is one whose noun is usually translated “prince” or “commander.” It is undoubtedly significant that the narrator does not use the normal Hebrew word for “ruled,” which had been used in 8:22, 23, or for “reigned.” The ignoble Abimelech, who had been king” by the people (v. 6), could only rule in reality as a secondary “commander,” not as a true king.

9:23–27 A spirit of ill will can be translated literally “an evil spirit.” The only other person in Scripture whose affliction is described with these words is Saul (1 Sam. 16:14, 15, 16, 23; 18:10; 19:9). Here, the spirit causes dissension between Abimelech and the Shechemites. Some scholars think God sent a demon to possess Saul and to afflict Abimelech and the Shechemites, but this goes against our understanding of God's nature. The most probable explanation is that God was responsible for the estrangement between the two sides, because both parties had sinned (9:1–6) and merited judgment. It is noteworthy that evil spirits afflicted Israel's first two kings, who were both unworthy candidates for the office. Abimelech had made himself king through a treacherous act, and he exercised authority poorly when in power. Saul, too, came to power because of the ill-advised wishes of the people of Israel, and he quickly demonstrated his unsuitability for the office despite his clear anointing. Significantly, it is the next king, David, who holds up the standard for Israel's future rulers. He is the first king who heeded the Lord's wisdom and was favored by the special presence of God's Spirit from the day of his anointing onward (1 Sam. 16:13).

9:28–36 Gaal asks a series of scornful rhetorical questions about Abimelech.

9:37, 38 the Diviners' Terebinth Tree: On trees as landmarks, read 6:11. Where indeed is your mouth now is Zebul's challenge to Gaal, taunting him to back up the boastful words he had uttered earlier (v. 28).

9:39–43 Interestingly, Abimelech divided his forces into three companies to attack Shechem, perhaps in conscious imitation of his father's success with three companies of men (7:16).

9:44, 45 Sowing Shechem with salt turned it into a barren, uninhabitable desert. See the association of salt and barrenness in Jer. 17:6.

9:46, 47 The Hebrew word from stronghold here is a rare one and may mean "fortified room" or something such as underground chamber. It occurs again only in v. 49 ("stronghold") and 1 Sam. 13:6 ("holes"). the temple of the god Berith: In Hebrew, the last phrase reads "El-Berith." El can be translated "god," but it was also the name of a well-known Canaanite god, the father of Baal. The "god Berith" means El-Berith, the Baal-Berith named in 8:33.

9:48–52 The location of Mount Zalmon is uncertain. Some scholars identify it with Mount Ebal, just northwest of Shechem. Others identify it with Mount Gerizim, also near Shechem. The snow-covered Mount Zalmon mentioned in Ps. 68:14 appears to be a different place.

9:53 an upper millstone: Mills used for grinding grain were typically made with two large stones. The upper one was moved back and forth or rotated on the lower one, and the grain was ground between them. An upper millstone would have easily crushed Abimelech's skull, as this verse asserts.

9:54, 55 kill me: Being killed by a woman was a disgrace to a warrior.

9:56, 57 The key to understanding Abimelech's fate may be found in the comments in vv. 23, 24, 56, 57. He was not a true king; he had established his reign through murder. God actively intervened against Abimelech, repaying his evil act of murdering his brothers. Note that his sin was murder (v. 56), not declaring himself king. Jotham's use of the fable proved to be prophetic: The fire that devoured the cedars (vv. 15, 20) would burn up both Shechem and Abimelech (vv. 49, 53).

10:1, 2 Tola was the sixth judge, the second of the minor judges (Shamgar was the first). He arose to save Israel, perhaps a necessary deed after the reign of Abimelech. This brief account echoes the time of Deborah in several ways (4:4, 5; 5:7).

10:3–5 Jair was the seventh judge, the third minor judge, and he judged Israel for twenty-two years. He was rather well off (v. 4), and he lived in Gilead, east of the Jordan, as would the next judge, Jephthah (11:1). Jair's abundance of children forms a sharp contrast with Jephthah's childlessness in the next chapter and in 12:8–10.

10:4, 5 thirty donkeys … thirty towns: Literally, the Hebrew has "thirty donkeys … thirty donkeys." However, the word (ayarim) used here for donkeys is an unusual one that resembles the Hebrew word (arim) for towns. A later scribe mistakenly repeated the word for donkey.

10:6—12:7 Jephthah was the eighth judge. Like those of Deborah and Gideon, his story is relatively detailed. Jephthah freed Israel from Ammonite oppression, but suffered a personal tragedy of his own making in the process.

10:6–18 A lengthy introduction precedes the story of Jephthah. These verses repeat the themes of apostasy and God's unfailing mercy. A new theme here is the emphasis on Israel's confession and repentance (vv. 10, 15, 16).

10:6 The gods of Syria … Sidon … Moab … Ammon … the Philistines demonstrate the extent of Israel's idolatry. Not only did the people worship the major Canaanite gods (Baal, Asherah, Ashtoreth), but they also absorbed the religions of other groups. The more extensive list here indicates the depths of Israel's decline. The lists earlier in the book merely mention the Baals, Asthoreths, and Asherahs (2:13; 3:7). Seven gods are mentioned here, a symbolic number that forms a counterpoint to the seven nations mentioned in vv. 11, 12.

10:7–10 The Philistines and the people of Ammon were the Israelites' principal adversaries at this time. The next two major judges—Jephthah and Samson—were God's instruments against these two groups, Jephthah against the Ammonites and Samson against the Philistines.

10:11, 12 In these two verses, we find seven peoples from whom God had already delivered the Israelites: Egyptians: God had dramatically saved Israel from Egyptian oppression (Ex. 14; 15); Amorites: God had rescued His people from Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites (Josh. 2:10);

Ammon: The Ammonites had been part of a coalition under Eglon, whom Ehud defeated (3:13); Philistines: Shamgar had already won a victory over the Philistines (3:31); Sidonians: There is no record of a previous triumph, but these people were among Israel's oppressors (3:3), and they might well have been part of the Canaanite coalition mentioned in 4:2. Amalekites: They had already opposed the Israelites in the time of the judges (3:13; 6:3), and their enmity with Israel went back much further (Ex. 17:8–16). God had given relief in each case. The Maonites appear later in Israel's history as adversaries (2 Chr. 20:1; 26:7, Meunites), but they are not mentioned earlier. Possibly what is meant is the Midianites, a people who had been defeated by Gideon (chs. 7; 8). This list of seven is probably not intended to be exhaustive, since neither the Moabites nor the Canaanites are mentioned. The symbolic number seven, representing completeness, is probably the most important element here, especially when we note that seven groups of gods are mentioned in v. 6.

The Judges of Israel

The Book of Judges lists a total of twelve judges who served in a variety of roles during a three-century era. (Barak served as a military leader under the judgeship of Deborah and was not technically a judge himself.) While some of them are major figures about whom much is known, others are only minor figures, mentioned briefly without a geographical or tribal affiliation. The significance of the era of the judges is that no one tribe or region seemed to dominate in producing these leaders. God called and equipped the necessary persons from throughout the land to lead Israel during this turbulent period.

10:13, 14 The gods which you have chosen is a response of confrontation. The Israelites "chose new gods" at the time of Deborah (5:8). When Israel cried out to God, He reminded them again of their faithless ways. Other examples in Judges of confrontation include the Angel's indictment (2:1–5) and the prophet's message (6:7–10).

10:15–18 Not only is God a God of great justice; He is a God of great mercy, as the phrase His soul could no longer endure the misery of Israel reminds us. Despite their constant sinning and backsliding, God still loved the Israelites and shared their misery, much as parents are moved by their children's suffering.

11:1–3 Jephthah, like Jair before him (10:3), was from Gilead. He was a "mighty man of valor," but he was illegitimate, which caused his half brothers to expel him from his father's house. Like Abimelech before him (9:4), he attracted "worthless men" (v. 3), which did not bode well for his future. The territory of Gilead was in northern Transjordan (Josh. 17:1, 3; 5:17). The Gileadites were descended from a man named Gilead (Num. 26:29, 30; 27:1; 36:1), as was Jephthah himself. In this passage and in Josh. 17:1, 3, the term refers both to a region and a person. mighty man of valor: See Josh. 1:14. The land of Tob is probably an area east of Gilead. Ironically, its name means "Good," a quality that Jephthah frequently lacked.

11:1, 2 The territory of Gilead was in northern Transjordan (Josh. 17:1, 3; Judg. 5:17). The people in this region were descended from a man named Gilead (Num. 26:29, 30; 27:1; 36:1). Jephthah himself was the son of a man named Gilead. In this passage and in Josh. 17:1, 3, the term refers both to a region and a person.

11:3 Tob is probably east of Gilead. Its name means "good," a quality that Jephthah certainly lacked.

11:4–7 After negotiations and consultation with God, Jephthah was commissioned as head and commander over Israel. after a time: We return to the narrative left off in 10:17, 18 (11:1–3). Come and be our commander: Here we see a leader for Israel being commissioned by the people. God is given little place in the proceedings other than to confirm the choice (v. 10), another sign of spiritual deterioration. A commander was someone who performed some of the functions of a judge, but it is perhaps significant that the word judge is not used here since God was the only One who raised up judges.

11:8, 9 That you may go with us and fight is almost the same phrase that the Israelites used when they asked Samuel for a king in 1 Sam. 8:20: "that our king may … go out before us and fight." In both cases, even though God gave them the permission they sought, the request was improper.

11:10 The LORD will be a witness: Literally, "The Lord will be listening." This is not the normal Hebrew word for "witness" used in covenant-making ceremonies (Deut. 30:19; Josh. 24:22), but the sense is the same. God is called to be a witness to the covenant agreement (1 Sam. 20:12).

Overcoming a Tough Start

Societies tend to have low expectations, sometimes downright hostility, for children born out of wedlock. Such was the case for Jephthah (Judg. 11:1). The product of his father's dalliance with a prostitute, Jephthah was not only excluded but also expelled from his more "respectable" family (11:2). He led the life of a criminal (11:3), though he and his gang of raiders may have harassed the Ammonites more than the Israelites.

The irony of Jephthah's life was that when Israel faced war with Ammon, the leaders of his hometown came looking for Jephthah to deliver them. They offered no apology; they merely appealed for help. Jephthah agreed to help them after negotiating his terms (11:9–11), and God gave him the victory (11:33).

Jephthah's life illustrates that God can overcome any background and use any set of circumstances to accomplish His purposes.

11:11 The people made Jephthah head and commander because he had demanded somewhat opportunistically to be their "head" as the price for helping them as "commander," so in the end he was made both. Jephthah's words before the LORD are a strange mixture of faith and foolishness. While Jephthah did acknowledge God here and later (11:21, 23, 27, 30, 31; 12:3), his self-interest and foolishness often overruled his faith. The Book of Hebrews has a more positive view of Jephthah than does Judges: Gideon, Barak, Samson, and Jephthah, along with others, are listed as examples of those "who through faith subdued kingdoms, worked righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions" (Heb. 11:32, 33). Undoubtedly they demonstrated faith that allowed God to "subdue kingdoms" through them, but just as clearly the Book of Judges reveals some of their less-than-admirable characteristics.

11:12–28 A lengthy account now covers diplomatic negotiations between Jephthah and the Ammonites, consisting largely of an impressive speech from Jephthah through messengers to the king of Ammon, answering the king's charges against Israel. In this speech, Jephthah's verbal gifts are readily apparent. Interestingly enough, Jephthah's name means "He Opens." Israel took away my land: The Ammonites claimed that Israel had taken their land. Jephthah responded with a careful rebuttal. He declared that the LORD God of Israel Himself had dispossessed these peoples (vv. 21, 23, 24) and that Israel was not an aggressor but merely a recipient of the Lord's generosity. The Ammonites had brought their misfortune upon themselves by hindering Israel's advance into the Promised Land. Israel would not have taken Ammonite land, since God had expressly commanded them not to (Deut. 2:19). Later, Sihon king of the Amorites had taken some Ammonite territory (Num. 21:26), and then Israel had taken Sihon's land (Num. 21:25). Thus the Ammonites were only indirectly affected by Israel's expansion. In addition, the Ammonites never really had true claim to the land to begin with; it was in fact the land of the Amorites (vv. 19–22). The limits of the Amorite land in v. 22 are precisely what the Ammonites claimed as theirs in v. 13 (Num. 21:24 also rebuts the Ammonites' claim). Also, Israel had occupied the land in dispute for at least 300 years, long enough to make a legitimate claim on it (v. 26). Jephthah ended his speech with an appeal to God to judge the opposing claims (v. 27).

11:13–17 The review of the past in this and the following verses recalls the events in the wilderness described in Num. 20:14–21.

11:18–24 Whatever Chemosh your god gives you was a derisive jab at the Ammonites' deity. Jephthah's point was that Israel's God had given His people much territory, whereas Chemosh, the god of the Ammonites, had done very little for them. The reference to Chemosh as an Ammonite god is unexpected, since elsewhere the Ammonites' god is named Molech (1 Kin. 11:7) or Milcom (1 Kin. 11:5, 33; 2 Kin. 23:13). Chemosh is customarily associated with the Moabites (1 Kin. 11:7, 33). However, Ammon and Moab lived side by side and shared a common heritage, both nations having descended from Lot (Gen. 19:37, 38). The two are often mentioned together (3:12, 13; 11:15; Deut. 2:18, 19; 23:3–5). It is likely that the two nations shared cultural and religious ideas, including the worship of Chemosh.

11:25, 26 Three hundred years may be an approximation, but it still gives us an important clue for determining the date of the Exodus and understanding how long the period of the judges lasted.

11:27, 28 the LORD, the Judge: This is the only place in Judges where a single individual is specifically called a judge. Significantly, it is a name of God. He ultimately was—and is—the source of all justice. He has the right to judge every man and woman. With His divine authority and power,

God always judges with justice, while at the same time He is loving, compassionate, and perfect.

INSIGHT

Following the King's Highway

As Jephthah prepared to battle the Ammonites, he traveled from the northern territory of Manasseh in Gilead south to Mizpah of Gilead (Judg. 11:29). Mizpah was probably the Levitical city of Ramoth Gilead, an important commercial center. It was located on a well-traveled highway called the Road to Bashan, which was the northern extension of the major north-south route known as the King's Highway (Num. 20:17).

11:29–40 The conflict with the Ammonites escalated, ending with Jephthah's victory aided by the Spirit of the Lord (vv. 29, 32, 33). However, the narrative focuses on his rash vow (vv. 30, 31, 34–40). To induce God to help him, Jephthah promised to sacrifice to the Lord whatever came out of his house to meet him upon his victorious return. This misguided pledge demonstrated a clear lack of faith, since earlier Jephthah had indicated that he believed God would intervene on his behalf (vv. 9, 27). Note that the Spirit of the Lord had come upon him before he made his vow (v. 29). The tragic result of Jephthah's vow was the sacrifice of his only child—his daughter.

11:31–34 Some have interpreted Jephthah's vow whatever comes out of the doors as a clear intention to offer a human sacrifice. His surprise then is not that he had to sacrifice a human being, but that the unfortunate person was his daughter. The phrase to meet me seems to refer more appropriately to a human than to an animal, and it is difficult to see why Jephthah would try to persuade God by offering a common animal sacrifice. Undoubtedly, Jephthah knew that human sacrifice was strictly forbidden in Israel (Lev. 18:21; 20:2; Deut. 12:31; 18:10; Jer. 19:5; Ezek. 20:30, 31; 23:37, 39), but his foolishness and lack of faith impelled him to make a reckless vow in order to try to manipulate God (11:39).

11:35 I have given my word is literally "I have opened my mouth." In light of his eloquent speech to the Ammonites (vv. 15–27), it is ironic that he "opened his mouth" once too often in making this vow. But did Jephthah have to follow through on his vow? Ordinarily the answer would be yes. Vows were made only to God, and they were solemn pledges that had to be kept. People were not forced to take them, but if they did, they had to be honored (Deut. 23:21–23; Ps. 15:4; Eccl. 5:4, 5). But Jephthah had vowed something sinful in itself if his intent was to make a human sacrifice in the literal sense.

11:36–40 Those who believe that Jephthah intended to sacrifice a human being must also ponder whether Jephthah carried out his vow. The text does not explicitly say that he killed his daughter, only that he carried out his vow. When the verse goes on to say that she knew no man, some take this to mean that she was "sacrificed" by being dedicated to a life of perpetual virginity. Several arguments can be made for this interpretation. First, human sacrifice was contrary to the Law of Moses (Lev. 18:21; 20:2–5; Deut. 12:31; 18:10). Until the wicked reigns of Ahaz and Manasseh centuries later (2 Kin. 16:3; 21:6), there is no record of human sacrifice in Israel, even by those who followed Baal. Second, the great respect that Jephthah had for God surely would have prevented him from making such a perverse offering. Third, the fact that Jephthah permitted his daughter to bewail her virginity (vv. 37, 38) for two months fits an explanation of perpetual virginity better than human sacrifice. Fourth, the indication that his daughter "knew no man" also seems to be a detail that would support the idea of celibacy. Fifth, the Bible provides evidence that such devoted service for women did exist at the central sanctuary (Ex. 38:8; 1 Sam. 2:22; Luke 2:36, 37). In ancient Israelite society, the father had the power to prohibit a daughter to marry. Sixth, the conjunction in Jephthah's pivotal statement in v. 31, that whatever or whoever came out of the door "shall be the LORD's, and I will offer it" could be translated or. Thus, if a person came out first, he would dedicate that person to the Lord, or if an animal came out first, he would offer the animal as a burnt sacrifice.

12:1–7 A final episode, in which the tribe of Ephraim sulks because they were left out of the battle, is similar to an incident when the same tribe challenged Gideon (8:1–3). However in the first incident, Gideon placated Ephraim, whereas in the second, Jephthah did not, and a civil war erupted. The Ephraimites were defeated, and that tribe does not play an important role in Israel's subsequent history.

12:2–4 You Gileadites are fugitives of Ephraim is the taunt that triggers the civil war. The insult may have its roots in the division of the nation into eastern and western groups (5:17; Josh. 1:12–15). Despite the emphasis in Joshua on the unity of all the tribes (Josh. 1:12–15; 22:1–34), the practical reality in the period of the judges was dramatically different. As in so many other ways, the life of the tribes deteriorated here also.

12:5 The fords of the Jordan were crossing points of strategic military value. Earlier on, the Israelites under Ehud had seized the fords and held them against the Moabites (3:28, 29). Under Gideon they had seized the "watering places," another name for the same place (7:24).

12:6, 7 Shibboleth … Sibboleth: This test devised by the Gileadites to catch the Ephraimites is the most famous example in the Bible of linguistic differences between the tribes. Today the English word shibboleth means an otherwise minor difference that becomes a sticking point because it distinguishes one side from another. The Gileadites chose this word because the "s" sound at the beginning was pronounced "sh" by one side and "s" by the other.

12:8–10 Ibzan was Israel's ninth judge. He allowed his thirty sons and thirty daughters to marry foreigners (v. 9). It is interesting to note that the judges who immediately preceded and followed the childless Jephthah both had thirty sons.

12:11, 12 Elon was the tenth judge.

12:13–15 Abdon was the eleventh judge, and like Jair and Ibzan had many children. He too possessed some wealth (vv. 13–15).

IN PLACE

The Philistines

The conflict between the Israelites and the Philistines that preceded the birth of Samson (Judg. 13:1) was one of many between the two peoples throughout biblical history. Probably no other group was as much a thorn in the side of the Israelites as their neighbors along the southwestern Mediterranean Coast in the land known as Philistia.

It is hard to say for sure where the Philistines originated. They were descendants of Noah's son Ham through his son Mizraim and grandson Casluhim (Gen. 10:13, 14). The name "Philistines" was used by the Egyptian pharaoh Ramses III to describe one of the peoples," a coalition of invaders that he repelled in a naval battle in about 1188 B.C.

The Bible regularly associates the Philistines with the land of Caphtor, believed to be Crete, and its inhabitants, the Caphtorim (1 Chr. 1:12; Jer. 47:4; Amos 9:7). This is consistent with the view that as the Greeks moved into the Aegean area beginning in about 1500 B.C., the Philistines and other "sea peoples" migrated south and east. Some eventually settled on the southwestern coast of Canaan. Apparently this migration occurred in two waves. An early Philistine king, Abimilech of Gerar, was known to Abraham and Isaac (Gen. 20; 21; 26). By the time of the Exodus, a second wave had arrived and established five principal city-states that made up Philistia: Ekron, Ashdod, Gath, and Ashkelon, and Gaza.

Possessing weapons of iron, which were superior to those of the Israelites, the Philistines hacked away at Israelite territory after the conquest under Joshua. In fact, God used these attacks to discipline His people and to attempt to return them to the covenant (Judg. 3:1–3). But the revivals were usually short-lived. In the days of Eli the judge, the Israelites foolishly carried the ark of the covenant into battle, and the Philistines captured it (1 Sam. 4). The ark was eventually recovered, but the Philistine threat continued for centuries, right up to the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

13:1—16:31 Samson, the last of the judges, lived at the beginning of the eleventh century B.C. He was unusual among the judges in many ways. He did not lead an army, but carried on his campaign against the Philistines single-handed. He is mentioned in Heb. 11:32 in the list of judges who accomplished great things through faith. The Book of Judges, in contrast, paints a darker picture of a man who violates a number of the Ten Commandments as well as his Nazirite vow (13:5). Samson's story brings the accounts of the judges to an end. His checkered history of heroism and moral failure resembles Israeltroubles during the time of the judges. Although we can find instances of obedience and humility in his life (15:18; 16:28, 30), for the most part his life was a string of careless adventures, with no true concern for following the Lord.

13:1–25 The story of Samson opens typically with a statement about sinful conditions in Israel, but the rest of ch. 13 continues with a long introduction to the life of Samson. The chapter details the encounter between Samson's parents and the Angel of the Lord, who announces Samson's birth and mission. The Angel emphasizes the requirements of the Nazirite vow that Samson is to observe in his life. It is as if the narrator wants to make sure the reader understands that Samson's life and accomplishments were under God's protection, provision, and guidance.

13:1, 2 Zorah was in the foothills west of Jerusalem, near Philistine territory, in the lowlands that separated the Philistine plain from the hill country of Judah. Manoah, Samson's father, was from the tribe of Dan, in whose territory Zorah lay (Josh. 19:41). Zorah is also mentioned among the inheritance of Judah (Josh. 15:33), indicating that it was along the border between the two tribes.

13:3 The Angel of the LORD made a supernatural appearance, described here as "very awesome" (v. 6). Manoah's wife recognized Him as "a Man of God" (v. 6). However, His essential character, embodied in His Name, was not to be revealed to them (vv. 6, 17, 18). This could mean that the Angel was God Himself (Ex. 3:14, 15) or His divine representative (2:1).

13:4, 5 The Angel declared that the woman's son should be a Nazirite from birth and for the rest of his life. The regulations of the Nazirite vows are found in Num. 6:1–21. Any man or woman could take a vow of separation to God. The vow was voluntary (Num. 6:2), had limited duration (Num. 6:5, 8, 13, 20), and included three provisions: (1) abstinence from wine, strong drink, and the fruit of the vine; (2) not cutting the hair; and (3) no contact with the dead (Num. 6:3–8). A Nazirite who became unclean went through elaborate cleansing rituals (Num. 6:9–21). Note that both Samson's mother and Samson himself were to follow the regulations (13:4, 5, 7). Samson's Nazirite service was remarkable in three ways. First, he did not take his vow voluntarily; it was his before birth (vv. 5, 7). Second, his service was to be lifelong, not temporary (vv. 5, 7). Third, he eventually broke every one of its stipulations: his head was sheared (16:17, 19); he associated with the dead (14:6–9; 15:15); and he drank at his wedding feast (14:10–20). (The Hebrew word for feast in 14:10 is related to the word that means "drink," and it refers to a great drinking banquet.) The announcement that he shall begin to deliver Israel was welcome news. The Philistines had been a thorn in Israel's side for many years. Yet Samson's successes would prove to be temporary, since the Philistines remained Israel's adversaries during the days of Samuel, Saul, and David (1 Sam.).

13:6–13 Man of God was a term used for prophets elsewhere in the OT, including Moses (Deut. 33:1; Josh. 14:6), an anonymous prophet who spoke to Eli about his sons (1 Sam. 2:27), Samuel (1 Sam. 9:6–10), Elijah (1 Kin. 17:18, 24), Elisha (about thirty-five times), and others. At first, Samson's mother may have thought she was talking to a prophet, but His radiant appearance convinced her otherwise. Throughout this entire episode the Man of God did not tell … His name (vv. 16–18).

13:14, 15 The requirements for Samson's Nazirite vow were somewhat irregular (v. 5). Samson's mother was also required to observe a strict ritual (v. 4).

13:16 An editorial comment here tells us more than the story's characters knew (14:4; 16:21).

13:17, 18 it is wonderful: The word used here is related to the word for "wonders" (6:13). The Angel's name is too wonderful to comprehend, and so He does not reveal it to Samson's parents. Immediately afterward, the Angel did a "wondrous thing" by ascending into the heavens in a flame (vv. 19, 20).

13:19–22 When Manoah discovered that it was the Angel of the LORD, he feared for their lives because he and his wife had seen God. Gideon expressed a similar fear when he recognized the Angel of the Lord (6:22).

13:23, 24 The name Samson is related to the Hebrew word (shemesh) for sun. The story makes no comment on the meaning of his name. The choice of name may have been influenced by the fact that there was a town named Beth-Shemesh near Samson's hometown of Zorah, or the name may be related to the name of a sun-god, Shamash. The LORD blessed him is one of the few editorial comments by the narrator of Samson's story. For the most part, the narrator is content to tell the story without comment, letting the details speak for themselves.

13:25 the Spirit of the LORD began to move upon him: The Hebrew verb translated move can also be translated impel. The Spirit of the Lord was pushing Samson toward doing the work that God wanted him to do (14:4). The verb here is different from the one in 14:6 that is translated came mightily.

14:1—16:31 The actual exploits of Samson fall into two parts (14:1—15:20 and 16:1–31), each climaxing with a mass destruction of Philistines. In the first part, the Spirit of the Lord comes “mightily upon him” three times. Significantly, this fails to happen in ch. 16, when Samson was acting more on his own and falling out of favor with God. We find ten specific feats of strength and heroism: (1) killing the lion (14:5–9); (2) killing thirty Philistines (14:19); (3) burning the fields (15:4–6); (4) another slaughter of the Philistines (15:7, 8); (5) escape from ropes and killing 1,000 Philistines (15:14–17); (6) the Gaza gate incident (16:3); (7) escapes the bowstrings (16:9); (8) escapes the new ropes (16:12); (9) escapes the loom (16:14); (10) destruction of 3,000 Philistines (16:28–30).

14:1—15:20 The episodes in this first section concern Samson’s marriage to a Philistine woman and the cycle of offense and retaliation that surrounds it. Such marriages with foreigners were prohibited for Israelites (Ex. 34:16; Deut. 7:3). Samson’s request for a wife defied the tradition that allowed the parents to arrange the marriage (14:2, 3). Despite Samson’s disobedient and careless life, God intended to use him for His own purposes against the Philistines (v. 4), who were ruling over Israel at that time. It was the LORD (and no other) who ultimately was to rule over Israel.

14:1 Timnah was a town on the northwest border of Judah (Josh. 15:10) and was counted in the allotment of the tribe of Dan (Josh. 19:43). By Samson’s day it was occupied by the Philistines. Samson’s saga unfolds on the coastal plain where the Philistines lived, and in the lowlands and foothills near Jerusalem.

14:2 Such foreign marriages were against the Law.

God's Gifts Without God's Blessing

The Book of Hebrews lists Samson as a hero of the faith (Heb. 11:32), an honor that seems to conflict with the image of Samson in Judges. For example, he was notorious for his involvement with Delilah that led to his downfall. Likewise, as a Nazirite he was obligated to refrain from touching a dead body, to abstain from alcohol and other products of the vine, and to avoid the use of a razor. He clearly violated the first commitment (Judg. 14:8, 9, 19; 15:8, 15); in all likelihood violated the second, and ended up betraying the third (16:13–17).

Yet these failures must be put in perspective with the appallingly low moral and spiritual tide of Samson's day (13:1; 21:25). In the first place, he did act in faith at his death by praying to God for the strength to pull down the roof on his enemies (16:28–30). Thus he not only destroyed a temple of Dagon, he killed more Philistines than ever, most of which were probably members of the ruling class.

Samson also demonstrated that it is possible to experience the gifts and power of God without the blessing of God. God gives people abilities to accomplish His purposes, but that in no way guarantees that they will seek to know Him or follow His ways. Balaam, for example, was empowered by God to bless Israel, yet his own life remained spiritually bankrupt. For that matter, God could even speak through Balaam's donkey (Num. 22:28), but that hardly enabled the donkey to enjoy God's presence.

Samson is a sobering reminder that great abilities are not the same as great faith. As Paul pointed out, one can "speak with the tongues of men and of angels" yet live a life of loveless emptiness (1 Cor. 13:1).

14:3 The Philistines were Israel's neighbors but were almost always at war with them. They did not practice the ceremony of circumcision. Being uncircumcised appears as a cause for disdain or derision several times in Scripture (Judg. 15:18; 1 Sam. 14:6; 17:26, 36; 18:25; 31:4; 2 Sam. 1:20; 1 Chr. 10:4). She pleases me well is literally "she is right in my eyes." The phrase is usually used to describe a person or action that is right in the Lord's eyes (Deut. 6:18; 12:25). Samson's words revealed his self-centered attitude. Instead of seeking to serve God, he was seeking to please himself.

Samson's comment here foreshadows the author's summary of the entire period of the judges in 17:6; 18:1; 19:1; 21:25.

14:4 The narrator adds that Samson's parents did not know that it was of the LORD. God would use Samson's defiant wish as a way of defeating the Philistines and providing relief for His people. For the five major cities of the Philistines and their rulers, see Josh. 13:3.

14:5–20 At his wedding feast, Samson challenged his 30 companions with a riddle. The riddle was based upon his astounding feat of killing a lion with his bare hands. When the guests could not solve it, they enlisted the help of Samson's wife, and she extracted the answer. In a rage, Samson killed thirty Philistines in Ashkelon to obtain the garments he needed to pay his companions. But in his absence, his wife was given to his best man.

14:6, 7 the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him: In the OT, there are thirty-nine references to "the Spirit of the LORD" or "the Spirit of God," as well as various other references such as "His Spirit" or "Your Spirit" or "the Spirit." The OT speaks numerous times of God's Spirit coming mightily upon individuals, usually to empower them physically for great feats of strength. Other judges received this power: Othniel (3:10), Gideon (6:34), and Jephthah (11:29). Yet the Spirit empowered others for the important task of speaking God's word (Gen. 41:38; Num. 24:2; 1 Sam. 10:6, 10; 19:20, 23; 2 Sam. 23:2). Probably the most important manifestation of the Spirit in the OT was the Spirit's ongoing presence. First Samuel 16:13 states that the Spirit lived with David from that day forward, and this is confirmed by David's statement in Ps. 51:11: "Do not cast me away from Your presence, and do not take Your Holy Spirit from me." This type of ongoing presence of the Spirit is something the NT emphasizes.

14:8, 9 Touching the dead lion violated Samson's Nazirite vow (13:5).

14:10, 11 The word translated feast denotes a banquet with considerable drinking, another violation of Samson's Nazirite vow (13:5).

14:12, 13 The Hebrew phrase let me pose a riddle to you literally reads "let me riddle you a riddle," using repetition to grab the reader's attention. The Hebrew word for linen garments is not the usual word for clothes, but appears only three times in the Bible, here and two others. In Prov. 31:24; Is. 3:23, it refers to fine linens worn or sold by women. Samson's offer was extravagant given the value of such finery. The Hebrew for changes of clothing is used in Gen. 45:22; 2 Kin. 5:22 in reference to valuable gifts.

14:14 This is the best example of a riddle in the Scriptures. The Hebrew word for riddle occurs twenty-one times in the OT, eleven of them in Judg. 14. The queen of Sheba posed riddles to Solomon (1 Kin. 10:1), and Daniel had skill in “interpreting dreams, solving riddles, and explaining enigmas” (Dan. 5:12).

14:15 the seventh day: Some other translations have “fourth day.” The difference is only one letter in Hebrew, which could easily have happened as a scribe copied an early manuscript. “Fourth” fits better with the immediate context (v. 14 mentions three days of futile guessing about the riddle).

14:16, 17 Samson’s wife pleaded with him for seven days to get the secret of the riddle, knowing the threat she faced from the young men.

14:18 The Hebrew word for sun is not the one commonly used. Perhaps the unusual word was chosen in order to avoid confusion with Samson’s name, which resembles the common Hebrew word for sun (13:24). Samson’s statement expresses his outrage that the men had not played fairly with him but had consulted his wife.

“riddle”

(Heb. chidah) (Judg. 14:12, 19; Prov. 1:6; Hab. 2:6) Strong’s #2420: The core meaning of this word is “an enigmatic saying.” In Samson’s story, the riddle is used in a contest of wits. Proverbs attributes enigmatic sayings to the wise (1:6). When the queen of Sheba tested Solomon’s wisdom, her questions are described by this same Hebrew word (1 Kin. 10:1; 2 Chr. 9:1). In the Lord’s confrontation with Miriam and Aaron, God describes Himself as speaking in “dark sayings” (the same Hebrew word) to the prophets, but to Moses face-to-face (Num. 12:6–8). Perhaps Paul had this last concept in mind when he admonished the Corinthians that even someone with the ability to understand all mysteries would not amount to anything if that person did not possess the love of God (1 Cor. 13:2).

14:19 Ashkelon was one of the five main cities of the Philistines.

14:20 his companion … his best man: The Hebrew words here are the same, meaning “friend.” The same man is referred to in 15:2.

15:1–20 When Samson could not gain access to his wife, he retaliated by burning the Philistines' fields, using 300 foxes (vv. 1–5). In response, the Philistines burned to death his wife and father-in-law. Then Samson killed more Philistines (vv. 6–8). The cycle of retaliation escalated, with the Philistines raiding Judah (vv. 9, 10). The men of Judah, not wanting to be involved in what they saw as a private dispute, delivered Samson to the Philistines (vv. 11–13). The first section ends with the Spirit of the Lord coming upon Samson, empowering him to break his bonds and kill 1,000 Philistines (vv. 14–17). After this, Samson called upon the Lord for the first time, and the Lord answered his call, giving him water to drink (vv. 18, 19).

15:1–3 The time of wheat harvest was late May or early June. The wheat harvest was associated with the second of the three great festivals in Israel, the Feast of Weeks, also known as Pentecost (Lev. 23:15–22; Deut. 16:9–12). Samson came to visit his wife with a young goat, meant as a gift. Tamar also received such a gift before she had sexual relations with Judah (Gen. 38:17).

15:4 The three hundred foxes were probably jackals. The two animals are similar, and the same Hebrew word is used for both. Foxes are solitary animals, but jackals travel in packs and large numbers of them could be caught more easily.

15:5 the shocks and the standing grain: Shocks are bundles of wheat stacked together in the fields. Samson's jackals burned whole crops of grain, grapes, and olives. This damage naturally outraged the Philistines. According to the Law, anyone who burned someone else's fields had to pay restitution (Ex. 22:6). At another time, Absalom set fire to Joab's fields in order to attract his attention and gain an audience with the king; Joab reacted with anger (2 Sam. 14:28–32).

15:6 the Philistines … burned her: The Philistines held Samson's wife and father-in-law responsible for the deed and killed them both. Samson's wife had earlier escaped such a death by telling Samson's companions the answer to a riddle (14:15).

15:7, 8 The exact meaning of the phrase he attacked them hip and thigh is obscure. The following phrase—with a great slaughter—perhaps gets us closer to the meaning, suggesting that he not only killed but dismembered them. It may be that the expression hip and thigh originated in the art of wrestling, where brute strength like Samson's would have been a great help. Etam is otherwise unknown, but Samson obviously found a secure place to hide, perhaps a cave that was accessible only through a narrow fissure in the rocky crags near Zorah.

15:9 Lehi means “jawbone,” a name that the place received after Samson killed 1,000 Philistines with the jawbone of a donkey (vv. 15, 17).

15:10–13 two new ropes: Ropes were made of leather, hair, or plant fibers; one common fiber was flax (Josh. 2:6). The reference in v. 14 to the ropes becoming like burned flax suggests that this was the fiber. Being new, these ropes were the strongest possible.

15:14, 15 A fresh jawbone would have been tough, resilient, and virtually unbreakable.

15:16–18 Heaps upon heaps is a wordplay, since the Hebrew word for heaps resembles the word for donkey. A double expression similar to the one used here is found in Ex. 8:14, where the frogs of the second plague were piled in heaps.

“deliverance”

(Heb. teshuah) (Judg. 15:18; 1 Sam. 19:5; 2 Kin. 13:17; Prov. 21:31) Strong’s #8668: The basic meaning of this term is “victory” or “safety.” In the Scriptures, deliverance is almost always credited to God, who is frequently praised by the psalmists for His miraculous accomplishments (Pss. 51:14, 15; 71:14, 15). Elsewhere God’s people are reminded that deliverance is not found in horses (Ps. 33:17) or in the capabilities of people (Pss. 108:12; 146:3); salvation is found only in the Lord (Lam. 3:26; Jer. 3:23). A day is coming when the Lord will provide everlasting salvation for His people (Is. 45:17). Placing our hope in the Lord and in that final day of justice is never inappropriate, for He will provide deliverance for His people.

15:19, 20 En Hakkore means “Spring of the Caller,” a reference to Samson “calling out” to the Lord in v. 18 (“cried out” in v. 18 is literally “called out,” and is the same word as is used in the name here).

16:1–31 Chapter 16 presents the conclusion of the Samson stories. Samson's involvement with two more Philistine women is detailed here. Verses 1–3 tell of a dalliance with a prostitute in Gaza, followed by another display of strength. Verses 4–22 chronicle his foolish affair with Delilah, which led to his downfall. Yet the story ends with Samson's destruction of the Philistines in their pagan temple.

16:1 Gaza is one of the five major Philistine cities, three miles inland from the Mediterranean coast. a harlot: Two Hebrew words are commonly used for prostitutes. One refers to priests and priestesses who performed sexual acts in the service of pagan gods (1 Kin. 14:24; Hos. 4:14). The other word refers to a common prostitute, such as the one Samson was consorting with.

16:2 At the gate reads literally "in the gate." The gates of the Early Iron Age were at least two stories high, with guard rooms on either side of a narrow opening. The Philistines waited in the recesses of the gate, hoping to trap Samson. He evidently slipped through unnoticed while they waited in one of the rooms.

16:3 Given the large size of city gates, Samson's feat was astounding. Hebron is forty miles east of Gaza. Samson's trip to the top of a hill that faces Hebron would have taken the better part of a day.

16:4–22 The account of Samson's downfall shows Delilah acting in cooperation with the leaders of the Philistines who were seeking to capture him. After three unsuccessful efforts, she succeeded in persuading him to reveal the source of his strength: his uncut hair. When he broke the final stipulation of the Nazirite vow by allowing his hair to be cut, the Lord left him (v. 20), and he was captured.

16:4 Delilah was the third Philistine woman that Samson entangled himself with (14:1; 16:1).

16:5, 6 Eleven hundred pieces of silver was a large sum of money; the same price would be paid to make two idols (17:2). This price was multiplied by five (each of the five lords offered the same amount). The total reward probably weighed more than a hundred pounds.

16:7, 8 The first test of Samson's strength was breaking seven fresh bowstrings of animal gut. Newer animal strings would be stronger than old ones. Samson was showing contempt for his adversaries, who wanted to capture him quickly.

16:9–11 In this second test, Samson toyed with the Philistines, suggesting they use the new ropes that had proven worthless on an earlier occasion (15:13).

16:12, 13 The third test involving the web of the loom got closer to revealing Samson's secret, since his hair was involved. The loom that held Samson's hair was likely an upright one, supported by two posts that were firmly anchored in the ground. This was a more difficult test of strength for Samson, but he passed this one easily, too.

16:14, 15 she wove it tightly Samson was about to be fastened with a household implement, just as Jael had earlier "fastened" Sisera with a tent peg (4:21). Samson was able to free himself in this case, but like Sisera he eventually would fall victim to a woman's plot.

16:16 Delilah pestered him, just as Samson's wife had done earlier (14:17). Samson's foolishness prevented him from learning the lesson of his earlier experience.

16:17, 18 A razor in Samson's day would have been like a bronze knife with a handle of wood or bone. a Nazirite to God: See 13:5. he had told her all his heart: Delilah knew that Samson was finally telling the truth. This reference contrasts with the one in v. 15, where he withheld his heart from Delilah.

16:19–22 He did not know is another editorial comment by the narrator. See similar comments in 13:16; 14:4. the LORD had departed from him: See 14:6. They shackled Samson's hands or feet with a pair of bronze fetters. Samson became a grinder, forced to grind grain, most likely with a hand mill. Larger, animal-driven mills were not used until several centuries later. Grinding was typically a woman's job (9:53), so this only added to Samson's humiliation.

16:23–31 Samson's story ends with a measure of vindication: the Philistines and their gods were toppled at the hands of God. Samson's hair had begun to grow again (v. 22), and his second prayer to the Lord—his first was in 15:18—resulted in a great slaughter of his enemies, some 3,000 people, more than he had killed during his entire life. His call to the Lord is somewhat ambiguous; it appears to be more earnest than his first, but his motive—revenge for his blindness—is less than exemplary. Samson was buried with his father, following his twenty years of judging Israel (15:20). Samson's life is ultimately a story about God's faithfulness in spite of human weakness. God's hand can be seen throughout the story—in Samson's empowerment by God's Spirit and in God's professed desire to subdue the Philistines (14:4). It also can be seen in this last contest between the true God and the Philistine god Dagon. When the Philistines captured Samson, they attributed this to their god and celebrated his victory (16:23, 24). We know, however, that it was God who had allowed it (v. 20), and that it was God who gained the ultimate triumph against Dagon and the Philistine rulers (vv. 27, 30).

16:23–25 Dagon was the principal Philistine god. He is known as Dagan in Syrian and Mesopotamian inscriptions. Temples dedicated to him have been unearthed at Ugarit in northern Syria, dating to the centuries just before Samson, and at Mari on the Euphrates River in Syria, dating to the eighteenth century B.C. A Philistine temple for Dagon was at Beth Shan, in northern Israel, in the days of Saul (1 Sam. 31:9, 10; 1 Chr. 10:10), and it was in another such temple that the Philistines stored the ark of the covenant for a time (1 Sam. 5:1–7). Dagon was once commonly thought to be a fish god, but modern excavations have shown that he was a god of grain. In fact, one of the Hebrew words for grain is dagan. Our god has delivered: The Philistine hymn of triumph reminds us of the language found in the Psalms.

16:26, 27 the pillars which support the temple: Numerous temples from this era with the supporting pillars described here have been excavated. Many were built around a courtyard. The roof, supported by the pillars, was where the spectators gathered. A crowd straining to see the spectacle of Samson would put considerable pressure on the structure of the building.

16:28–30 Samson demonstrated faith in calling upon God and in believing that God would help him. This is consistent with the praise of Samson in Heb. 11:32. Yet Samson's plea was basically a desire for revenge against the Philistines.

16:31 The story of the judges concludes with final editorial comments. Samson, the last judge, had been empowered by God's Spirit, just as the first had been. Despite the manifold failings of the judges themselves, God had delivered Israel and caused other nations to bow before Him. We can detect a general south-to-north pattern in the home areas of the judges and of most of the action. For example, Othniel, the first judge, was from Judah, in the south, and Samson, the last one, was from Dan, in the north. The judges' actions come full circle geographically, however, since Samson's exploits took place in the south. Despite the generally poor examples of the judges themselves, God had worked to deliver Israel and to protect His name and reputation.

17:1—21:25 The Book of Judges closes with two appendixes, the first in chs. 17; 18 and the second in chs. 19—21. They seem to be unrelated to the material preceding them and to each other. For instance, these chapters do not describe the cyclical pattern of sin, servitude, and salvation seen in the earlier chapters of Judges. While chs. 2—16 describe foreign threats to Israel, these last chapters show an internal breakdown of Israel's worship and unity. Furthermore, the events in these chapters appear to have taken place early in the period of the judges. Note that Phinehas, the grandson of Aaron who had figured in earlier events (Num. 25:6–15; 31:6; Josh. 22:30, 31), was still ministering before the ark at the time of the events of chs. 19—21 (20:28). The whole episode of the Danite migration (ch. 18) logically fits in the progression of events described in 1:34, during which the Amorites forced the Danites out of their allotted territory. Their migration in search of new land probably would have come soon after this, not some three centuries or more later. Thus, these chapters may have been written independently of the book's earlier chapters. Yet there is a certain logic to placing them at the end of the book. For one, the structure highlights the theme of the disintegration of Israel. The last chapters emphasize that "every one did what was right in his own eyes" (17:6; 21:25). The general tone of these last chapters is satirical and understated. The many violations of Mosaic law receive only minimal comments. However, a muted note of disdain for Israel's wanton behavior is evident in places.

17:1—18:31 The first of the appendixes concerns a man named Micah who created a private shrine. Migrating Danites seized Micah's priest and the symbols of his shrine, triggering the destruction of Laish.

17:1–3 These eleven hundred shekels of silver cannot help but remind us of the reward that the Philistine lords gave to Delilah. Micah, an Ephraimite, had stolen some silver from his mother, which he later returned to her. We learn that she had dedicated this silver to the Lord, but returned it to Micah so that he could make a carved image and a molded image. A carved image would be made of wood or rock. Carved is the same Hebrew word used in the Ten Commandments: "You shall not make for yourself a carved image." A molded image was one cast from a mold (2 Kin. 17:16). Micah's mother approved of his action, claiming that these images would be offered on the Lordbehalf. Today the temptation to mix elements of true worship of God with practices unacceptable to Him remains with us, albeit in different ways.

17:4, 5 a shrine: Literally “a house of God.” This was a perversion of the true sanctuary where all worship was to take place. At this time, “the house of God” was at Shiloh (18:31). Micah also made an ephod (8:27) and various household idols. The word for idols is the same one used in Gen. 31:19, the story of Rachel’s theft of Laban’s household gods. Such idols are condemned in 1 Sam. 15:23. Micah further violated the law by appointing his own son as his private priest. Micah sinned because his son had not descended from Aaron (as priests were supposed to be) nor was he even a Levite (Ex. 28:1; 40:12–15; Num. 16:39, 40; 17:8).

17:6–8 what was right in his own eyes: This editorial comment is echoed in the last verse of the book (21:25). The author suggests that times were so bad that people did whatever they wanted, not what was right in the Lord’s eyes (14:3). We may infer that a king who focused Israel’s attention on the Lord would have prevented the outbreaks of sin and oppression so prevalent during the time of the judges.

17:9 The Levite from Bethlehem in Judah had been living there as a resident alien. Levites did not have a permanent land inheritance, but they had been granted forty-eight cities, scattered throughout the other tribes’ territories (Josh. 21). However, Bethlehem was not one of these cities, and this Levite was seeking a place to settle down. He was only too happy to accept Micah’s offer (vv. 10, 11).

17:10–13 be a father and a priest to me: To be called a father was a title of honor (see the reference to Deborah as a “mother in Israel” in 5:7). Micah wanted the Levite to be his priest, since his priestly background would lend legitimacy to his service. Micah thought this would bring him Godfavor (v. 13). In later years, prophets were occasionally referred to as “fathers” (2 Kin. 6:21; 8:9; 13:14).

18:1 The Danites were looking for a place to settle because they had been unable to settle effectively in their allotted territory. Compare their allotment in Josh. 19:41–47 and their failure to capture it all in 1:34, 35.

18:2 The Danites decided to spy out the land, recalling the twelve spies who infiltrated Canaan in Moses' day (Num. 13) and the two spies that Joshua sent into Jericho (Josh. 2). The Hebrew word for spy is related to the word for foot, the idea being that spies went quietly on foot, scouting what they could see.

18:3 The Danite spies asked rapid-fire questions. Other places in Judges feature similar quick questioning (6:31).

18:4–7 The Danite spies found the city of Laish an attractive place to live and decided to seize it (vv. 7–10). The city was later renamed Dan (Josh. 19:47). the Sidonians, quiet and secure: On the Sidonians, see 3:3. The word for quiet is the same one that describes the "rest" that covered the land periodically (3:11). However, the word can also be rendered "unsuspecting."

18:8–14 Six hundred men was either a small part of the Danite army or a remnant that had survived recent fighting. Compare this figure with the 62,700 Danite soldiers in Num. 1:38, 39 and the 64,400 in Num. 26:42, 43.

18:15–20 Rather than condemning Micah's idolatry, the Danites took the gods for themselves. They then made Micah's Levite their tribal priest.

18:19, 20 The Danites' offer to Micah's Levite—be a father and a priest to us—was the same plea Micah had made earlier (17:10). Yet their offer was more attractive, for it allowed him to be priest over an entire tribe. The Levite's cynical acceptance of this opportunity for greater prestige indicates further how debased conditions had become. Even Levites were selling false spiritual services to the highest bidder.

18:21–29 As the Danites fled with Micah's priest and their stolen goods, they placed what they had stolen in front of them with the warriors behind them, as protection from being pursued. The Danites' power was too much for Micah and his neighbors, who turned back and did not attempt to recover what had been stolen from them. The Danites arrived at Laish, ruthlessly putting it to the sword and the torch, and they settled there, renaming the city Dan.

18:30 The Danites' priest and his descendants served the tribe for many years. This notice, written much later than the book's events, is a subtle reminder of Dan's later apostasy. Jeroboam I would establish idolatrous shrines in Dan and Bethel (1 Kin. 12).

18:31 Micah's image remained while the house of God was at Shiloh. Therefore, these events took place sometime before about 1050 B.C. when Shiloh was destroyed (Ps. 78:60; Jer. 7:12, 14; 26:6).

19:1—21:25 The concluding section of Judges is apparently unrelated to any preceding story. It concerns the brutal rape and murder of a concubine and the bloody events that followed. The story resembles that of the assault on Lot's home in Sodom (Gen. 19). A link here with the episode in Judges 17 and 18 is the Levite protagonist. In the former story, a Levite from Bethlehem travels to the hill country of Ephraim, while in the second, a Levite from the hill country of Ephraim travels to Bethlehem.

19:1, 2 A concubine was a female servant regarded as part of the family, often chosen to bear children. Several of the patriarchs had children with concubines: Abraham with Hagar (Gen. 16); Jacob with Bilhah and Zilpah (Gen. 30:4–13).

19:3–9 Obliged by custom, the Levite stayed in the home of his concubine's father for five days. Strict codes of hospitality still prevail in many Middle Eastern tribal cultures.

19:10, 11 Jebus (that is, Jerusalem): The city of Jerusalem was at this time in the hands of the Jebusites, and it is called "a city of foreigners" in v. 12. For more on the city and its early history, read Josh. 15:63.

19:12–14 Gibeah was four miles west of Jerusalem. Because it was in Benjamin, the Levite thought it would be a safer place to spend the night—a fatal misjudgment.

19:15–17 The open square of the city was a public area just inside the city gate. A traveler could expect an invitation to stay the night, but none was forthcoming from any inhabitant of Gibeah. an old man: The Levite received kindness from an outsider, an old man who was passing through Gibeah. Like the Levite, he was from the hill country of Ephraim.

19:18–21 The people of Gibeah were cold, even though the Levite had all that he needed with him, and even more than enough: he offered to take care of the old man and his servants, too.

19:22–26 The welcome offered by Gibeah was no hospitality at all; it was the hospitality of Sodom (Gen. 19), an outrageous affront to the Levite and especially to his concubine. The men of Gibeah demanded to have sexual relations with the old man's guest. Offered the Levite's concubine instead, they assaulted her until she was half dead. This section closely resembles Gen. 19:4–9; indeed, the author may have written this story to make the comparison with Sodom unmistakable, as if to say, "Things are as bad now as they were in the days of Sodom and Gomorrah!"

19:22 Perverted men is literally the “sons of Belial,” a phrase describing wicked or worthless people. The name Belial came to designate Satan, as it is used in 2 Cor. 6:15. That we may know him means that the men of Gibeah wanted to sodomize the Levite. The same expression is found in Gen. 19:5, where the men of Sodom wanted to force homosexual relations on Lot’s guests.

19:27–30 The Levite’s indifferent reaction to his concubine’s collapse is followed by a gruesome deed: After carrying her away, he cut her body into twelve pieces, sending a piece to each tribe. This gesture was practically a call to arms; Saul did the same with oxen (1 Sam. 11:7).

19:30 The phrase no such deed has been done is ambiguous; it is uncertain whether they were horrified by discovering the dismembered body or by learning about the cruel rape and murder.

20:1–48 An assembly of all Israel convened at Mizpah and decided to unite against Benjamin (vv. 1–11). The Benjamites, who apparently were not at the assembly (20:3), responded by joining the men of Gibeah for battle (vv. 12–17). After withstanding two assaults, Benjamin was routed and its cities obliterated. The spiritual decay of Israel had resulted in the destruction of its own people with a vengeance once reserved for pagan peoples.

20:1 From Dan to Beersheba is a common expression for the full extent of the land of Israel from north to south (1 Sam. 3:20; 2 Sam. 24:2; 1 Kin. 4:25).

20:2–8 The assembly usually means the congregation of Israel as assembled for a religious event (1 Chr. 28:8) or a military campaign (Num. 22:4; 1 Sam. 17:47).

20:9–14 The tribes agreed to send a tenth of their men (v. 10), choosing them by lot. God's role is not mentioned here. To their credit, the Israelite tribes were united together as one man, a quality notably absent up to this point in the Book of Judges.

20:15 The Benjamite force of twenty-six thousand men was considerably smaller than the Israelite army of 400,000 (v. 17).

20:16, 17 The Benjamites counted on seven hundred select men who were left-handed, an advantage since their shots would come from unaccustomed angles. Ironically, the name Benjamin means "Son of the Right Hand."

20:18–20 Judah first: The book begins and ends with Judah in this prominent position (1:1, 2). This is no accident, since the end of the book points toward the monarchy, whose true expression would come out of Judah.

20:21, 22 The Israelite coalition suffered an initial defeat, much in the same way that the men of Ai had defeated Israel some years earlier (Josh. 7).

20:23–25 Go up against him: The Lord graciously answered the Israelites twice when they called upon Him (v. 18).

20:26, 27 The Israelites suffered a second major defeat (v. 25). The result drove them to fasting and sacrificing at Bethel, something done very rarely in this period. The house of God literally reads "Bethel," and probably the town is meant. Bethel was a Benjamite town that had been religiously prominent since Jacob met God there (Gen. 28:16–19).

20:28–30 Phinehas was the one who had stopped the plague at Peor (Num. 25:6–11). The fact that he was still alive shows that the organization of the Book of Judges is not strictly chronological. The author likely placed this account at the end of the book to make the point even more strongly about the spiritual deterioration of the nation.

20:31, 32 The highways were probably made of stone or gravel. The Hebrew word means “something raised,” that is, a roadway elevated above the normal ground level (Is. 49:11).

20:33, 34 Baal Tamar: This is the only reference to this place, whose site is unknown. Its name means “Baal (lord) of the palm tree.”

20:35–37 The LORD defeated Benjamin as punishment for the heinous crimes committed in Gibeah (ch. 19) and for disrupting Israel’s unity, which He valued.

20:38–46 The burning of Gibeah and the resulting rout of the Benjamites are almost an exact replay of the ambush of Ai (Josh. 8:17–22).

20:47, 48 Six hundred men of Benjamin survived the rout. They would become the remnant that would carry on the tribe’s name (21:12–23).

21:1–25 After the devastating defeat of Benjamin, the remaining Israelites were struck with remorse because Benjamin faced almost certain extinction (vv. 1–7). Thus, ch. 21 tells of the provisions they made for the tribe's survival, though the means they chose were questionable or even brutal.

21:1–4 The details of an oath at Mizpah appear for the first time. It was presumably made when the people assembled at Mizpah before attacking Benjamin.

21:5–7 The great oath sworn by the Israelites provided the justification for punishing Jabesh Gilead and for providing wives for the Benjamites. Every tribe was expected to heed the Levite's call, since he had sent the concubine's corpse "throughout all the territory of Israel"(19:29).

21:8 Jabesh Gilead was a town east of the Jordan.

21:9–11 The phrase utterly destroy is found numerous times in the Book of Joshua in regard to the conquest of the Canaanites. However, there is no hint that God supported the bloodbath at Jabesh Gilead.

21:12–14 Four hundred young virgins were captured to become wives for the 600 survivors of Benjamin (20:47). Still, 400 were not enough, and the Israelites contrived to take more from Shiloh (vv. 19–22).

21:15–18 Void means "breach" and often refers to an outbreak of the Lord's anger (2 Sam. 6:8).

The Valley of Lebonah, situated between Shiloh and Shechem. This valley was mentioned in connection with a yearly feast celebrated at Shiloh (Judg. 21:19).

21:19 Some scholars believe that the yearly feast of the LORD in Shiloh was the Passover, held in the spring because of the dancing associated with it (vv. 21, 23); they point to the dancing of Miriam and the Israelite women after they had crossed the Red Sea as evidence for this practice (Ex. 15:20). However, the celebration was more likely the Feast of Tabernacles, celebrated in the fall, since vineyards are mentioned (vv. 20, 21). The grape harvest came in the early fall. This may have been the same event that drew Samuel's parents every year to Shiloh (1 Sam. 1:3).

21:20–23 The Benjamites were allowed to abduct enough women from Shiloh to supply every man with a wife. No justification is given except for the supposed needs of the Benjamites. To sidestep their oath, Israelites allowed the Benjamites to capture the young women. In this way, they could not be held responsible for giving brides to the 600, which they swore at Mizpah they would never do (v. 1).

21:24 every man to his inheritance: The Hebrew words here are the same as those found at the end of the Book of Joshua (24:28). However, the book's final comment (v. 25) indicates that times were far worse than they had been in Joshua's day.

21:25 The book ends with an editorial comment echoing the ones at 17:6; 18:1; 19:1. It is almost as if the author were weary and refused to dignify the state of affairs with more than, "Things are bad; they will get better under a king."

The Book of Ruth

THE BOOK OF RUTH IS A BEAUTIFUL STORY OF love, loyalty, and redemption. One of only two books in the Bible named after a woman (see Esther), this narrative masterpiece tells the story of the salvation of Ruth, the Moabitess. Through her relationship with her mother-in-law Naomi, Ruth learned about the living God and became His devoted follower. Abandoning her family and homeland, she demonstrated both her love for her widowed mother-in-law and her faith in Israel's God. Her faith was well placed, for God not only provided for her but also placed her in the messianic family line.

The account takes place during the time of the judges, a period of extreme spiritual and moral decay in Israel (c. 1380–1050 B.C.). The beautiful love story of Ruth contrasts strongly with the pervasive depravity of the period, giving a rare glimmer of hope in an otherwise bleak era.

The story itself reflects ordinary small town and rural life in Israel, specifically around Bethlehem. Details of cultural elements, such as the description of the barley harvest (1:22), the mention of the threshing floor (3:6), and the events at the city gate (4:1), add plausibility to the story. It is possible that the story was first circulated in Bethlehem by Naomi and her circle of women friends. Later, the author of Ruth retained some of the lovely feminine touches that grace this story.

The Book of Ruth underscores an overarching theme of the Bible: God desires all to believe in Him, even non-Israelites. This was God's plan from the beginning. He had covenanted with Abraham and his descendants in order to bless other nations through the Israelites and draw all nations to Himself (Gen. 12:1–3).

While demonstrating this one significant theme, the Book of Ruth makes some distinctive contributions of its own. One is the important idea of loyal love that is evident in the book. The Hebrew word translated as kindly in 1:8 means "loyal love" or "covenantal love." This is a genuine love that keeps promises. When the word is used of God, it refers to God's loving faithfulness to His promises. Even though Ruth was a foreigner and was not familiar with God's Law, she displayed this type of love and loyalty to her mother-in-law Naomi. She left her homeland in order to be with Naomi in a time of need. Boaz also showed the same noble quality by protecting and providing for Ruth, a widow of one of his relatives. Yet the story of Ruth ultimately illustrates how God Himself demonstrated such love. He rewarded Ruth for her loyalty to Him by giving her an honored place in the community of faith. He blessed her with a child who would become the ancestor of King David and later of the promised Messiah.

The Book of Ruth also emphasizes redemption. God's providential hand in redeeming Ruth and Naomi from poverty is evident. He controlled circumstances so that Ruth and Boaz would meet, and He prompted Boaz to fulfill the responsibilities of the "close relative" or the kinsman-redeemer (3:9). The kinsman-redeemer was "the defender of family rights." This individual was a close relative who had the financial resources to rescue a poverty-stricken family member, stepping in to save that relative from slavery or from having to sell the family's ancestral land.

In the story of Ruth, Boaz redeemed the land that Naomi was about to sell. He also took on another of the kinsman-redeemer's responsibilities, the obligation of providing an heir for Ruth's deceased husband, Mahlon. Dying without an heir was considered a tragedy in the ancient Middle East. To rectify this situation, the brother of a deceased man was expected to marry the widow in order to produce a child, who would be considered the heir of the deceased. This was called a levirate marriage. Boaz willingly took on this duty, even though he was not the nearest relative (3:12, 13). He bought the land from Naomi, married Ruth, and carried on the family name through the birth of their son. Through all these actions, Boaz exemplified the compassion and love of a redeemer. His life is an illustration for us of the compassion of Jesus, who is our Redeemer (Gal. 3:13).

Traditionally, Samuel has been identified as the author of Ruth. However, some Jewish rabbis have ascribed the writing to Naomi. If the references to David in Ruth 4:17, 22 are an integral part of the original book and not a later appendix, then the book was not written by either since both died before David's was crowned king.

Some evidence in Ruth points to the conclusion that the book was written during David's or Solomon's reign. First, the genealogy of David in 4:18–22 indicates this. Second, the first verse of Ruth implies that the book was written after the time of the judges. Third, the fact that the narrator had to explain ancient customs to the intended readers in 4:7 indicates that the book was not written at the time of the events. All this evidence may point to the authorship of Ruth during Solomon’s reign, a time regarded as the golden age of Hebrew writing.

Commentary

Can Anything Good Come from Moab?

The name “Moab” (Ruth 1:1) recalls two unpleasant incidents: the birth of Moab and the trouble his descendants caused Israel during their wilderness journey to the Promised Land. Moab was born in the aftermath of Sodom and Gomorrah. Lot fled Sodom with his family and, in effect, took the sin from the city with him into the wilderness. His wife disobeyed God’s instructions and was turned into a pillar of salt (Gen. 19:26). Lot’s daughters plotted to get their father drunk so that he might commit incest with them and father their children. One daughter gave birth to Moab, the other to Ammon (Gen. 19:30–38). In time, their descendants grew into rival nations that have contended with Israel to this day.

One of the most grievous offenses that Moab committed occurred during Israel’s wilderness wanderings. The king of Moab attempted to hire Balaam the seer to curse the Israelites, but Balaam eventually blessed them instead (Num. 22—24). However, the seer came up with a plan to seduce God’s people into idolatry by sending Moabite women to entice them. The plan worked and 24,000 people died as a result. Thus the Law prohibited a Moabite or Ammonite from ever becoming a member of the Israelite community (Deut. 23:3).

But the question raised by the opening of the Book of Ruth—can anything good come from Moab?—is a resounding yes! From Moab comes Ruth, and from Ruth, Obed; from Obed comes Jesse, then David (Ruth 4:18–22); and through David comes Jesus Christ (Matt. 1:1, 5, 6).

1:1 when the judges ruled: The events of Ruth took place before the establishment of the monarchy in Israel. The judges were God’s servants, who established the teachings of God’s Law and righteousness during a time of political, spiritual, and moral degeneracy. The story of Ruth shines as a bright spot during a dark age in Israel’s history. Moab is located east of the Dead Sea. The Moabites descended from Lot as a result of his incestuous relation with his older daughter (Gen. 19:30–37). The famine in Israel extended to Bethlehem even though its very name means “House of Bread.”

1:2, 3 Due to the famine, Elimelech, whose name means “God Is King,” journeyed to Moab with his wife and two sons. The names of his wife and sons also carry significance. Naomi means “Pleasant.” She became bitter when tragedy struck her family, but the story concludes with her bitterness being reversed (ch. 4). The names of the two sons Mahlon and Chilion mean “Sickly” and “Failing.” The early deaths of these two sons in Moab showed that their names were appropriate (v. 5). Ephrathites: Ephrathah was another name for the region of Bethlehem (Gen. 48:7; Mic. 5:2).

1:4, 5 The Moabite name Orpah may mean “Neck,” a term of physical beauty in that culture. The Moabite name Ruth connotes “Friendship.” While the Law of Moses did not prohibit Israelite men from marrying Moabite women, it did exclude Moabites from the congregation of Israel for ten generations (Deut. 23:1–4).

1:6, 7 the LORD: This is the first mention of God’s name in the story. God Himself is at the center of the book. This verse illustrates the mercy of the Lord, who supported even His disobedient people with food. He visited His people both for blessing, as in this verse, and for discipline (Ex. 20:5).

1:8 The Hebrew word (hesed) translated as kindly is often used to describe God, and means “loyal love.” The word expresses both God’s loyalty to His covenant and His love for His people. Here Naomi expressed the hope that the Lord’s covenantal love would extend to her daughters-in-law, who were outside the land of Israel and were not Jewish.

1:9 The concept of rest referred to here is the security that is found in marriage. Naomi acknowledged in vv. 8 and 9 that it is the Lord who intervenes in the lives of His people to bring them gifts and blessings. His providence is prominent throughout the Book of Ruth.

1:10–13 Naomi’s daughters-in-law insisted on returning with her. In response, Naomi pointed out that she could not provide husbands for them and expressed concern for their happiness. Her love for them is evidenced by the use of the personal words my daughters in vv. 11, 13.

1:13 grieves: Naomi was bitter (Heb. marar, “grieves” here) that she was without husband and sons and attributed her circumstances to God’s discipline.

1:14 In this verse, the responses of Orpah and Ruth are contrasted. Orpah did the expected thing and returned home. Yet Ruth unexpectedly stayed with her impoverished mother-in-law. Though understandable, Orpah's action meant that she had left the Israelites and their God. On the other hand, Ruth's action brought her into the Messiah's family line (4:18–22).

1:15 Naomi tried one last time to convince Ruth to return to Moab. The word for gods (elohim) refers to the deities of Moab. Here we are reminded that coming to Israel was also coming to the one Lord; remaining outside of Israel was remaining away from the covenant community.

1:16, 17 In a beautiful, emotionally charged poetic response, Ruth described her determination to remain with Naomi. Her assertion that Naomi's God would be her God is especially striking. This is an affirmation of faith in the Lord, the God of Israel. Ruth's use of the divine name Yahweh translated as the LORD in an oath indicates her commitment to the living God. She was choosing to cling not only to Naomi, her land, and her people, but also to her God. In effect, Ruth was forsaking all that she had ever known to follow the one true God. She was following in the footsteps of Abraham, who had forsaken his family and his homeland in response to God's command (Gen. 12:1, 4).

1:18–20 Naomi temporarily forgot or ignored the courageous and loyal commitment of Ruth. She wanted her name to reflect her bitterness over her circumstances so she named herself Mara, meaning "Bitter."

1:21 The concepts of fullness and emptiness appear here. Naomi left for Moab complete, with a husband and two sons. But now she returned to Bethlehem empty. She had no family except for Ruth. Her poignant question is an example of Hebrew parallelism, a device that heightens the expression of her emotion. Naomi was in utter despair over the Lord's dealings in her life. This makes it all the more remarkable that Ruth not only chose to stay with her but also to identify with her God.

1:22 The theme of return is prominent in this chapter. The word is even used of Ruth—an unusual word for the narrator to use since there is no indication that Ruth had ever been to Israel. Ruth the Moabitess: As the story explains, God extended His protection to Ruth even though she was a foreigner. Ruth and Naomi arrived at the beginning of barley harvest. Barley was the first crop to ripen, and this period would be the beginning of the harvest season. The fact that there was a harvest season indicates that the famine in Israel had ended (1:1, 6).

2:1 Boaz was related to Naomi's husband, Elimelech. This notice suggests the possibility of a solution for the distressed situation in which Naomi and Ruth found themselves. The status of a widow in the ancient Middle East was difficult at best. In times of trouble, the widow's situation was intolerable. That was why God commanded His people to care for the widow and the orphan (Deut. 24:19–22). As a relative, Boaz could stand up for the rights of these two women. He was described as a man of great wealth, a person of noble character and of high standing in the community. The name Boaz probably means "Swift Strength."

“glean”

(Heb. laqat) (Ruth 2:2; Lev. 19:10; 23:22) Strong’s #3950: The Hebrew word used here means “to gather together” or “to pick up.” In the OT, people are described as gleaning a variety of objects: stones (Gen. 31:46), money (Gen. 47:14), manna (Ex. 16:4, 5, 26), and even worthless men (Judg. 11:3). The prophet Isaiah used this word to describe how the Lord would “gather up” His people from among all the nations and restore them to their own land (Is. 27:12). The verb occurs thirty-four times in the OT, with twelve instances in Ruth 2. In this passage, Ruth makes use of the stipulations the Lord gave to Moses. God had told the Israelites not to completely harvest their fields; instead they were to leave some unharvested so that the poor and strangers in the land could gather it up for their survival (Lev. 19:9, 10; 23:22).

2:2 The Law of Moses allowed the poor to glean in the farmers’ fields (Lev. 23:22).

2:3–6 happened to come: Though Ruth did not intentionally go to the field of Boaz, the Lord providentially directed her steps.

2:7 The sheaves refer to bundles of grain. Ruth was not presumptuous here but in gentleness asked for a favor that she might have claimed as an entitlement. Yet as an alien, her opportunities for gleaning in the fields of Judea may have been severely limited.

2:8, 9 Boaz demonstrated extraordinary concern for Ruth’s provision and protection. He even thought of Ruth’s need for water in the heat of the day.

2:10 Ruth was overwhelmed by the remarkable display of favor by Boaz toward her, especially since she was a foreigner. In the dark days of the judges, many in Israel would not be treating other Israelite families justly, much less those from other nations. Note Ruth’s extreme act of submission and humility as she fell on her face before Boaz.

2:11, 12 Boaz explained that he favored Ruth because she had shown “loyal love” to her mother-in-law, Naomi. He then gave her a blessing, asking that God would abundantly reward Ruth for her remarkable loyalty. Boaz expressed the idea of God’s protection by saying that Ruth had come under God’s wings.

2:13 Now Ruth called herself the maidservant of Boaz. She no longer called herself a foreigner as she had in v. 10.

2:14–16 Boaz repeatedly demonstrated God's compassion toward the Moabite woman. Boaz went beyond the letter of the Law. He not only let Ruth glean; he also amply supplied her with food. Here we see how the Law could function in the lives of godly people. It was a guide to righteous living.

2:17–19 The amount of barley that Ruth gleaned was more than half a bushel, more than would normally be expected for a day's work. The generosity of Boaz and the labor of Ruth produced this substantial supply. Boaz exhibited the highest form of charity by giving in secret so as not to shame the recipient.

2:20–23 Naomi praised the Lord for His kindness, His "loyal love." God had not abandoned Ruth and Naomi. Instead, He had faithfully provided for their needs. After utter despair, Naomi once again placed her hope in God. Close relatives is the Hebrew word goel, introduced into the story here, to be repeated many times.

3:1 Once again, Naomi returned to the subject of security or rest, which she addressed in 1:9. In the first instance, she had asked God to provide her daughters-in-law the "rest" of marriage. Now she was determined to seek this rest for Ruth.

3:2 The threshing floor was located in a public place. There animals would trample the husks in order to separate the grain. Then the mixture would be tossed in the air so the wind would blow away the chaff. Boaz had to stay the night to guard his grain from thieves.

3:3 best garment: This probably referred to an outer garment that Ruth wore to keep warm in the night. eating and drinking: Festivity accompanied the end of the harvest.

3:4 uncover his feet: Ruth would remove the edge of Boaz's outer garment from his feet and lie down by his uncovered feet. Touching and holding his feet was an act of submission. This was a daring and dramatic action that would call for a decision on his part to be her protector—and, likely, her husband.

3:5, 6 Ruth's trust in her mother-in law was implicit.

3:7, 8 Ruth came softly, that is, secretly, so that no one would see her. That she came at night was also a means of protecting Boaz from embarrassment in case he decided not to exercise his duty as a close relative.

3:9 your wing: Ruth deliberately used the same word that Boaz used in reference to God in 2:12. Though she spoke here of the edge of the garment of Boaz, she was clearly asking him for protection and security in the same way that Boaz spoke of Ruth seeking God's protection. The final phrase, for you are a close relative, shows that she was seeking his refuge in the sense of requesting him as her marriage partner. Since her husband had died without giving her a child, it was the responsibility of a close relative to marry her in order to provide an heir for her deceased husband.

3:10, 11 Boaz understood that Ruth was making a marriage proposal and praised her for not seeking younger men to marry. He knew that Ruth's initiative was in keeping with the Law. A levirate marriage would provide her deceased husband with an heir (Deut. 25:5–10). In the ancient Middle East, not having an heir was considered a tragedy for the family. The particular kindness that Boaz spoke of was Ruth's loyal love toward Naomi in choosing to remain with her even though she faced poverty. virtuous woman: The high praise of Boaz shows that Ruth as a godly woman had not compromised herself.

“close relative”

(Heb. gaal) (Ruth 2:20; 3:12; 4:1, 6; Is. 60:16) Strong’s #1350: The Hebrew word refers to a relative who acted as a protector or guarantor of the family rights. He could be called upon to perform a number of duties: (1) to buy back property that the family had sold; (2) to provide an heir for a deceased brother by marrying that brother’s wife and producing a child with her; (3) to buy back a family member who had been sold into slavery due to poverty; and (4) to avenge a relative who had been murdered by killing the murderer. The Scripture calls God the Redeemer or the “close relative” of Israel (Is. 60:16), and Jesus the Redeemer of all believers (1 Pet. 1:18, 19).

3:12 The suspense in the narrative increases when Boaz announces that there is a relative closer than he. The nearest relative would have the opportunity to carry out that responsibility first.

3:13 Boaz wanted to take immediate responsibility for Ruth and Naomi, so he asked her to stay with him so she would not be exposed to any danger by returning to her home in the middle of the night. The statement as the LORD lives reinforces the resolve of Boaz to take responsibility for Ruth.

3:14 before one could recognize another: Ruth left at early dawn, in order to avoid anyone who might recognize her. Boaz probably did not want anyone to misconstrue what had taken place.

3:15 Again Boaz demonstrated loyal love or kindness by his gift of barley grain to Ruth and Naomi. laid it on her: Boaz probably helped raise the barley to Ruth’s head in order for Ruth to carry it home to Naomi.

3:16 Is that you: These words are possibly a comment on the radiance of the woman who life was about to change so radically.

3:17 empty-handed: The theme of emptiness and fullness is repeated here (1:21).

3:18 Naomi was confident that Boaz would see the matter through to its conclusion the same day. Boaz had repeatedly demonstrated that he was an upright and compassionate man by his continuing provision for the two women.

4:1, 2 Official and legal business typically occurred at the gate of a city, so it was natural for Boaz to speak with the other close relative there in the presence of the elders of the community. During the time of the kings, a ruler might come to the city gate to proclaim a public judgment. Friend in the Hebrew is something of a joke, meaning "a certain so and so."

4:3 One of the duties of the close relative was to redeem land that had been sold by the family due to poverty. sold: This verb could be translated "about to sell." Verse 5 indicates that the sale was still in the future, and v. 9 states that Boaz purchased the land from Naomi. Thus we should probably understand that Naomi is about to sell Elimelech's land. The use of the tense of this Hebrew verb describes an act in the process of completion. Jeremiah seems to indicate that family members had the right to purchase a relative's land before it was sold to someone outside the family (Jer. 32:6–12). This is the likely scenario here.

4:4 Boaz offered the land to the closer relative first; this man initially agreed to purchase it. The Law provided for land to stay within a family, even if it had to be sold temporarily due to poverty. The seller could redeem the land later, or a close relative could redeem it. If neither of these alternatives was possible, the land would be returned to the family in the Year of Jubilee, every fiftieth year. Land was not sold permanently because it ultimately belonged to God (Lev. 25:23).

4:5 To perpetuate the name of the dead makes it clear that the close relative was needed to buy the land but also to take Ruth as his wife. This was in accordance with the levirate law, which provided for an heir for the deceased. Here the dead relative was Mahlon, Ruth's husband (4:10). In carrying on the name of Mahlon, the line of Elimelech would continue.

4:6 When the close relative discovered that he was expected to marry Ruth, he declined his right of redemption because his own inheritance might be ruined. He apparently did not want the double responsibility of buying the field and supporting Naomi and Ruth. In addition, he did not want the field to be inherited by Ruth's future son instead of members of his own family.

4:7, 8 The removal of a sandal was part of a legal transaction in ancient Israel (Deut. 25:8–10). It would parallel the modern custom of concluding a transaction by signing a document or handing over a set of keys. By handing over his shoe, the close relative was symbolically handing over his right to walk on the land that was being sold.

4:9 The witnesses at the gate played a significant role in validating the transaction. Chilion and Mahlon: Elimelech's sons would have been the heirs of their father's land. from the hand of Naomi: The land was bought from Elimelech's widow, Naomi.

4:10 acquired: In addition to redeeming the land, Boaz also redeemed Ruth by taking her as his wife. In contrast to the land, Ruth was not bought. She did not require a purchase price nor was Boaz required to redeem her. He willingly chose to be her redeemer. Boaz was a blood relative of Elimelech, and he was financially able to take on the responsibilities of redemption. Mahlon: This verse adds the detail that Ruth had been the wife of the brother named Mahlon, a detail omitted from ch. 1.

4:11 The people and the elders affirmed the legal proceeding with their response, we are witnesses. Then the crowd gave Ruth a remarkable blessing by asking that the LORD make her like Rachel and Leah, Israel's founding mothers (Gen. 35:23–26). Even though Ruth was a Moabite, she was fully and eagerly accepted by the Israelites. The Law of Moses demanded the exclusion of the Moabites from the congregation of Israel for ten generations (1:22). In this exceptional case we see a beautiful example of the spirit of the Law being maintained. Both the loyal love of Ruth and of God are demonstrated in this story. Ruth loyally loved Naomi by leaving her homeland and serving her mother-in-law even in the worst of circumstances. In turn, God rewarded Ruth by extending His loyal love to her. He gave this foreigner a godly husband, accepted her as one of His people, and gave her a child who would be an ancestor of King David and ultimately of Jesus (vv. 13, 22).

4:12 The Book of Ruth is replete with allusions to the Pentateuch. Here the name of Tamar refers to another story about the spirit of the Law (Gen. 38). Certainly Tamar's behavior would not normally be commended. Yet she was desperate because her husband's brothers would not fulfill their responsibility to her, and in the end Judah praised her as more righteous than himself (Gen. 38:26). Even in Tamar's deplorable situation, God mercifully blessed her with a son, and this son Perez was an ancestor to King David (v. 18). One more woman had an experience strikingly similar to Ruth's: That woman was Rahab, the mother of Boaz (Matt. 1:5). Like Ruth, Rahab was a Gentile woman. Yet God extended His loyal love to Rahab because of her faith in Him and included her in the messianic line.

4:13 the LORD gave her conception: Children are a gift from God. He fashions every person in the womb of the mother (Ps. 139:13).

4:14, 15 Here the close relative is not Boaz but his newborn son, the grandson of Naomi. The women praised God for His provision for Naomi. They offered a blessing for the child, asking that his fame be extended throughout Israel and that he would comfort Naomi and nourish her in her old age. Naomi's emptiness had been replaced with fullness through the birth of this boy. Sons were considered a great reward, so for the women to state that Ruth is better to Naomi than seven sons was considerable praise for Ruth.

4:16, 17 The theme of Naomi's fullness continues to dominate as the neighbor women declared that a child was born to Naomi. His name was Obed, signifying "One Who Serves." The author at last reveals how Ruth, a Moabite woman, had become part of the royal Davidic line and, thus, the messianic line (Matt. 1:5). Her inclusion in the genealogy represents another beautiful illustration of Yahweh's loyal love (hesed) and His commitment to include Gentiles in the covenant community.

4:18–22 The story concludes with David's genealogy, beginning with Perez, the son of Judah and Tamar. This genealogy could have been added to the book long after the original writing was complete, but more probably the book as a whole was composed at a later date than the events described. The genealogy of David is not really an appendix but an essential element demonstrating the author's purpose, and the purpose of the Lord in the building of the family line of King David and the Messiah. The story of Boaz's redemption of a foreign woman points to Jesus' great redemption of all those who believe in Him.

The First Book of Samuel

———— FIRST SAMUEL RECOUNTS KING SAUL's extraordinary rise to power and influence and his subsequent tragic fall. In this sense, the book reads like a classic Greek tragedy or Arthur Miller's Death of a Salesman. Saul's good looks, his physical size, and his success in war made him an obvious choice to be the first king of Israel. But the author of 1 Samuel highlights Saul's tragic flaw—his disobedience of God's commands (13:7–12; 15:10–26). Because of his disobedience, God rejected him. Abandoned by God, Saul quickly lost his courage, became jealous of David's success, and eventually lost his mind. From the ashes of this tragedy, God raised up another king who would obey the directives of the one true King, the God of Israel.

First Samuel is appropriately named after Samuel, the principal character of the early narratives and the one who anointed Israel's first two kings, Saul and David. First and Second Samuel were originally one book, "The Book of Samuel" in the Hebrew Scriptures. When these Scriptures were translated into Greek, around 150 B.C., Samuel and Kings were brought together into a complete history of the Hebrew monarchy. This unit of Scripture was divided into four sections: First, Second, Third, and Fourth Kingdoms. Samuel and Kings were later separated again, but the divisions of the Greek translation persisted. The result was a 1 and 2 Samuel and a 1 and 2 Kings.

At the beginning of 1 Samuel, the nation of Israel was at a religious low point. Even the priesthood was corrupt (2:12–17). To make things worse, Samuel's sons, who served as judges in Beersheba, were also dishonest (8:2, 3). With such evil leaders as models, the people of Israel showed open disdain for the word of God and refused to listen to His prophet Samuel (8:19).

Yet in the midst of widespread corruption and apostasy, there was a righteous remnant of Israelites who faithfully worshiped God (1:3). The worship center of Israel at this time was located at Shiloh, where the tabernacle was set up (1:3; Josh. 18:1). However, even the contents of the tabernacle were not left undisturbed during these tumultuous and evil times. The ark of the covenant was captured by the Philistines (4:11), and after a seven-month sojourn among the Philistine cities (5:1—6:16), it was returned to Beth Shemesh (6:19) and then kept at Kirjath Jearim (7:1) until David brought it to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:1–17).

During this time, the Israelites became dissatisfied with the abusive rule of the judges (8:3). The people longed for the glories of a monarchy such as they saw in the surrounding nations. So the Lord allowed the Israelites to have their way. He gave them a king like the other nations: the handsome and tall King Saul (10:1). Although Saul appeared to be well-suited for leading a nation, his reign ended in tragedy because he ignored the word of God. Much of the action of 1 Samuel is associated with the tumultuous life, reign, and decline of Saul, contrasted with the rapid rise of the young and faithful David.

During this early period of the Israelite monarchy (c. 1050–970 B.C.), the great empires of the ancient Middle East were in a state of weakness. The Hittites of Asia Minor had passed into insignificance. Assyria was in a state of decline, and Egypt was weakened by internal conflict. The Philistines constituted Israel's main threat during this period. Their skill in working iron had given them a decided military and economic advantage over Israel. Yet the threat of the Philistines had a positive impact on Israel's political situation. It caused the infant nation to unite under the leadership of its first kings, Saul and David.

The purpose of 1 Samuel is to provide an official account of the rise of the monarchy during the time of Samuel and the development of it under Saul and David. The book particularly focuses on the rise of David during this period. In fact, the second half of the book and first half of 2 Samuel amount to an apology for David's rise to the throne. The similarities of this section to the Apology of Hattusilis, a thirteenth-century B.C. writing, are remarkable. In this ancient document, a Hittite king outlined the reasons for the legitimacy of his rule. Such an apology was particularly important in the case of a king—like David—who founded a new dynasty. Hattusilis's dynastic defense included the following elements: 1. A detailed description of the disqualifications of the preceding ruler (compare 1 Sam. 15:1–35).

2. An extended history of events leading up to the new king's accession (compare 1 Sam. 16:1–2 Sam. 5:17).

3. A defense of the new king's ability to rule, as evidenced by military achievements (compare 1 Sam. 17:1–58).

4. A record of the new king's leniency on political foes, in contrast to usurpers, who typically assassinated the former king (compare 24:1–10; 26:1–9).

5. A report of the new king's interest in religion (compare 2 Sam. 6:1–19; 7:1–29).

6. A conclusion that included a summary of the new king's reign, demonstrating the divine blessing on his rule as evidenced by the expansion of his kingdom and the establishment of peace with surrounding nations (compare 2 Sam. 8:1–18).

The similarities between the Apology of Hattusilis and 1 Sam. 15:1 through 2 Sam. 8:18 illustrate clearly how that part of First and Second Samuel serves as an apology for David's reign. Part of the apology is the irrefutable evidence that God Himself had chosen David for the throne (16:1–13). Initially, David was a surprising choice, an undistinguished member of a rural family. Yet his remarkable faith in the Lord distinguished David from his fellow Israelites and from Saul (17:1–51). God shaped David's character while he was on the run from Saul's erratic wrath. In these distressing times, David learned to trust in God for deliverance. Although he made mistakes, he always turned back to God for mercy. For this reason, David was called the man after God's own heart (13:14).

The Jewish tradition suggests that Samuel was the author of the first part of the book (chs. 1—24), and that the prophet Nathan and the seer Gad were the authors of the remainder, including 2 Samuel. Another editor at a later date could have taken the memoirs of Samuel, Nathan, Gad, and others and woven them under the guidance of the Holy Spirit into the wonderfully unified book we have today.

A number of critical scholars have dated the book around the middle of the sixth century, much later than the lives of Samuel and Nathan (c. 1100–1010 B.C.). It is obvious that at least some parts of the book were written after the death of Samuel (25:1; 28:3), and perhaps even after the division of the monarchy (27:6). However, there is no reference to the fall of Samaria to the Assyrians (722 B.C.), and it is reasonable to assume that the book was complete by the last quarter of the eighth century B.C. The eighth-century author used documents dating back to David's reign or shortly after (1025–900 B.C.). The author included eyewitness accounts, and the antiquity of some linguistic features indicate that parts of the book were written at an early period.

Commentary

The Rise and Rule of David

First and 2 Samuel were originally one book that gave an account of the transition between the period of the judges and the monarchy. First Samuel tells of the rise of David to the throne, and 2 Samuel deals with David's reign.

The demand for a king was based on the chronic moral and spiritual breakdowns that occurred under the judges. As 1 Samuel opens, Israel is again drifting under ineffective leadership. Eventually disaster strikes as the ark is captured by the Philistines. God graciously brings the ark back to His people and raises up Samuel as their judge. But as Samuel grows older, a debate ensues for and against a monarchy. Samuel's sons were not worthy to succeed him, and there seemed to be no other leadership on the horizon. Consequently, the people insisted on having a king, and God finally granted their wish. Yet Scripture says that this request was a "great wickedness" in that it was a denial of the Lord's right to rule over His people (1 Sam. 8:7; 10:19; 12:12, 17–20).

The problem was not that Israel did not need a king, but that the Israelites were not willing to serve the king that they already had—the Lord. How, then, would they follow a human king who had faults and failures? But God was already at work to produce a ruler of His own choosing. He allowed Saul to be anointed and reign temporarily, but His own plans called for David. First Samuel tells the story of how God brought David to the throne in spite of Saul's efforts to the contrary.

Second Samuel continues with an account of David's reign. At first he was king over Judah only, which he ruled for seven and a half years. During much of this period, he fought a war with the successors of Saul, until he finally gained control over all Israel.

1:1—7:17 The first seven chapters introduce the prophet Samuel, thought by many to be the greatest OT figure since Moses. Samuel is unique in ancient Israel in that he had three distinct roles, or offices, as a leader. He was been born into a Levitical family, so he served as a priest in Israel (10:8). He was also recognized as the last of Israel's judges and handled judicial decisions and disputes (7:6, 15; 12:11). And he was the first of a series of great prophets after the time of Moses (3:20).

1:1, 2 Ramathaim Zophim is another name for Ramah (v. 19), a village about five miles north of Jerusalem. The mountains of Ephraim refers to the hill country primarily occupied by the tribe of Ephraim. Elkanah, whose Hebrew name means "God Has Created," was a Levite (1 Chr. 6:26, 34). He is referred to as an Ephraimite since he lived in the territory of Ephraim.

1:3 yearly: The Law called for the Israelites to attend three annual pilgrim festivals in Jerusalem (Ex. 34:23; Deut. 16:16). The LORD of hosts is a military designation referring to God as the One who commands the angelic armies of heaven (1 Kin. 22:19; Luke 2:13; Rev. 19:14) and the armies of Israel (17:45). Shiloh, located about twenty miles north of Jerusalem, was the religious center for the nation at this time and the location of the tabernacle (Josh. 18:1). Eli, Hophni, and Phinehas served as priests at Shiloh, officiating at the sacrifices presented in the court of the tabernacle. Eli may mean "God Is High." Hophni means "Tadpole." Phinehas may come from an Egyptian word meaning "Black One."

1:4, 5 The double portion was designed to compensate Hannah for her lack of children and demonstrate Elkanah's love for her. the LORD had closed her womb: God is the One who provides the ability to conceive children (Gen. 33:5; Ps. 127:3).

1:6 Her rival refers to Peninnah, Elkanah's other wife, who took every occasion to flaunt her children before Hannah.

IN CONTEXT

The Custom of Polygamy

Polygamy was an accepted social custom throughout the ancient Middle East. It was also a common practice among the ancient Israelites. Although it may seem that polygamy deviated from God's original plan for marriage (as illustrated in Gen. 2:24), the practice was permitted under God's Law, particularly in cases of a childless first marriage or a levirate marriage (Deut. 25:5–10).

In ancient Israel, failure to have children was regarded as a family tragedy, for several reasons. In an agrarian culture, children were needed to help with the work of everyday life. Without sons, the family name would not be preserved, and without an heir, the family would be unable to maintain its place in the tribal allotments. Finally, a woman without children would never be the mother—or an ancestor—of the promised Messiah (Gen. 3:15).

Elkanah most likely took a second wife, Peninnah, for a reason that was legitimate in the ancient world: his first wife was barren. At that time, the blame for not having children was always assigned to the woman, and barrenness was often the cause of divorce.

Even though polygamy was an accepted custom, God's Law warned rulers against marrying many women (Deut. 17:17). Furthermore, the Scriptures record the tragic results of polygamy: turbulent and divided families.

1:7 she went up: The Law demanded that the men of Israel appear before Him on three festival occasions. Many brought their families with them, but it was not required that they do so. This verse shows Hannah's devotion to the Lord in that she also made annual treks to Shiloh to worship God. she wept and did not eat: Peninnah's constant taunting drove Hannah to depression.

1:8 While Peninnah provoked Hannah, Elkanah sought to encourage her. He suggested that his love for Hannah was a greater blessing than having ten sons.

1:9, 10 eating and drinking: The worship of God involved not only the sacrifice of animals, but also lavish banquets of meat and wine. Eli, Israel's high priest and judge (4:18), was from the family of Ithamar, Aaron's fourth son (1 Kin. 2:27; 1 Chr. 24:1, 3). The last high priest mentioned before him was Phinehas, the son of Eleazar (Judg. 20:28). It is not known why or how the office of high priest passed from the house of Eleazar to that of Ithamar. The doorpost of the tabernacle refers to the entrance of the place of worship, where people would approach Eli for judicial rulings. The term "tabernacle" (Heb. hŏkal), here, is used elsewhere for the temple or for a palace and thus suggests that the structure at Shiloh was no longer merely a tent but a semi-permanent structure, which preceded the great temple built in Jerusalem by Solomon.

1:11 Within the context of her prayer, Hannah made a vow to God. She promised that if God would give her a son, the child would be given back to God. Levites customarily served from age twenty-five to fifty (Num. 4:3; 8:24–26). Yet Hannah dedicated her son for lifelong service (the Bible speaks of only one other Nazirite for life, the judge Samson; Judg. 13–16). The words no razor shall come upon his head refer to the law of the Nazirite (Num. 6:2–6). The Nazirite vow involved a designated period of time (usually no more than a few weeks or months) during which there was a commitment to refrain completely from wine, from cutting the hair, and touching any dead body. Hannah promised that her son would be a Nazirite for life.

1:12–14 Eli watched her mouth: From a distance, Eli was unable to understand what Hannah was saying. Because of the long time she spent in prayer, Eli assumed that she had drunk too much wine.

1:15 Intoxicating drink is an older translation of the word (shekar) meaning "beer." Poured out my soul before the LORD is an excellent description of fervent prayer (Ps. 62:8; Phil. 4:6, 7; 1 Pet. 5:7).

1:16 The Hebrew for wicked woman, literally "daughter of Belial," means "without value." Belial was later used as a proper name for Satan (2 Cor. 6:15).

1:17, 18 Go in peace: Hannah's changed countenance seems to indicate that she experienced God's peace (Phil. 4:6, 7) as she waited for the answer to her prayer.

1:19 Elkanah knew Hannah means that he slept with her (Gen. 4:1). The word remembered indicates that God began to intervene on Hannah's behalf to answer her prayer.

1:20, 21 The birth of Hannah's son is part of a long history of godly women and men praying for a child as God's gift (Gen. 12:1–3). When Hannah gave birth, she named her son Samuel, which means "Name of God." She explained that she gave her son this name because I have asked for him from the LORD. There is a play on words in this verse, for "Samuel" sounds like the Hebrew words, "Asked from God" (v. 28).

1:22 until the child is weaned: Hebrew children were normally weaned when they were two or three years old.

1:23 According to the Law, Elkanah might have declared Hannah's vow a rash promise and prohibited her from fulfilling it (Num. 30:10–15). The fact that he did not do so shows his love and esteem for Hannah.

1:24, 25 three bulls: God's Law required that a burnt offering be given at the completion of a special vow (Num. 15:3, 8). Two of the bulls likely served as a present for Eli and the third one was sacrificed. One ephah was roughly five gallons. A skin of wine was for the drink offering.

1:26, 27 Hannah offered a testimony of what God had accomplished on her behalf. By telling others, she exalted God and praised Him for His gracious acts toward her.

1:28 lent him to the LORD: The Hebrew word translated lent has the idea of a complete giving up of the child to God. they worshiped: The Hebrew word for worship means "bow down." This is the humble response of grateful people who acknowledge the majesty of God.

Hannah's Song: Praising the King

Many people today debate the potential as well as the limits of big government. The books of 1 and 2 Samuel make interesting reading in light of that discussion, for they offer an account of Israel's transition from rule by judges to a Jerusalem-based monarchy.

Under the judges, the nation went through periods of political and spiritual health. But for the most part, the people turned away from God (Judg. 21:25). Would they do better under the kings?

Hannah's song (1 Sam. 2:1–10) answers that question from the outset of the book: no matter who "rules" Israel, whether judge or king, the Lord is Israel's true King (2:3, 10), salvation is from Him (2:1), and God's concern is often for the outsiders, the poor—people on the "bottom of the heap" (2:4–9).

The rest of 1 and 2 Samuel, as well as 1 and 2 Kings, bear out these truths: • When the people demanded a king (1 Sam. 8:4, 5), the Lord said that it was because they had rejected Him as their King (8:7).

• When the nation faced crises, it was not their king who delivered them, but the Lord (1 Sam. 11:13; 17:46; 2 Sam. 5:22–25).

• It was not Saul, the people's favorite, who firmly established the monarchy, but David, the eighth and youngest son of Jesse, a shepherd of Bethlehem (1 Sam. 16:7, 9–13; 18:23; 2 Sam. 7:12–16).

Hannah's song addresses our overconfidence in government of any kind. All government is ultimately established by God (Rom. 13:1–7). Ideally, governments should seek justice for all. But in the end, one's faith must not rest in the power of centralized control but in the power of God's justice, mercy, and salvation.

The modern village of Ramah, successor to the Old Testament city where the prophet Samuel was born (1 Sam. 1:19, 20) and buried (1 Sam. 28:3).

2:1–11 Hannah's Psalm of Praise to the Lord. Hannah rejoiced and praised Yahweh in response to answered prayer. The scene stands in contrast to her previous visit to Shiloh (1:9–15). Her words of praise may have been delivered in song as a personal testimony before the congregation of worshipers at the tabernacle. This passage is written in the same type of poetry as other psalms in the Bible; metaphor and simile abound. The sovereignty of God and His providential rule in every aspect of life is the basic theme of this song. The prayer is a powerful affirmation of this woman's deep faith in the living God. Hannah acknowledged God's salvation (2:1), holiness (2:2), knowledge (2:3), grace (2:8), and judgment (2:10). We may learn to number Hannah among the great psalmists in ancient Israel, just as we may learn to number Mary in the NT (Luke 1:46–55). Indeed the Psalm of Hannah was twice reused in biblical poetry. It served as the basis for the lovely Psalm 113, and both psalms were used and developed further in Marypsalm in Luke 1.

2:1 Hannah began her prayer by rejoicing in the Lord for having been given a child. My horn is exalted: Used figuratively, a horn represents power and strength, like that of an ox (Dan. 7:21; Zech. 1:18–21). With exalted horn means with head high, conscious of strength. Hannah's sense of strength was in God, who had answered her prayer.

2:2 No one is holy like the LORD: That which is holy (Heb. qadosh) is marked off, separated, and withdrawn from ordinary use. Holy is the opposite of profane or common. The image of a rock when applied to God, speaks of His eternality, stability, and reliability (Deut. 32:4; 2 Sam. 22:2, 3).

2:3 Hannah addressed all the proud, not only Peninnah, but all who boast. Since the God of knowledge knows all things, He will appraise our performance along with our words and our promises.

2:4, 5 Hannah mentioned three examples—military power, wealth, and the birth of children—of how God reverses human circumstances, humbling the proud and exalting the lowly. Mary made the same point in her song (Luke 1:46–55).

2:6 The word grave (Heb. sheol) refers to the place of the dead for both the righteous and the wicked (Gen. 37:35). The sovereign God who brings death also brings up from the grave. This verse may refer to God's power to resurrect the dead (Ps. 16:10; Dan. 12:2).

2:7, 8 dust … ash heap: These parallel terms describe the festering compost piles outside the city walls where people dumped their refuse, including the ash from ovens. It was there that beggars and lepers would sit and solicit alms. Hannah used the image to indicate the deepest degradation: God assists those in the worst circumstances (Ps. 113:7–9). The pillars of the earth is poetic imagery. Since the very "pillars" that uphold the earth belong to God, all creation is stable and secure under His care.

2:9, 10 In line with the pattern of ancient wisdom literature, Hannah contrasted the righteous and the wicked. The Lord would keep His saints from stumbling, but the adversaries of the LORD would face certain calamity. The Hebrew word for anointed means "Messiah." This phrase points to the ultimate King, before whom every knee shall bow (Phil. 2:10). Hannah saw the work of God in granting her a child as another step in the fulfillment of His promise to the mothers of Israel, that He would one day provide through them a Messiah.

(Heb. qeren) (1 Sam. 2:10; Deut. 33:17; Ps. 132:17; 2 Sam. 22:3) Strong’s #7161: This word denotes the horn of an animal or even the tusk of an elephant (Gen. 22:13; Ezek. 27:15). Animal horns were used as instruments (Josh. 6:5) and as flasks for the prophets’ anointing oil (16:1, 13; 1 Kin. 1:39). A horn was a symbol of power (1 Kin. 22:11; Mic. 4:13); consequently, the Lord is said to exalt the horns of the righteous and to cut off the horns of the wicked (Pss. 75:10; 92:10; Zech. 1:21). The wicked are told not to lift up their own horn (Ps. 75:4, 5). David in 2 Sam. 22:3 speaks of God as his “horn of salvation,” the title Zacharias prophetically gave to Jesus (Luke 1:69).

2:11, 12 Were corrupt is literally “sons of Belial,” persons of no value (30:22). did not know the LORD: They had no personal, intimate knowledge (Heb. yada). The priests were teachers of God’s Law and officiated at His sacrifices. How tragic for them to know so much about the things of God and yet not know Him personally.

2:13–15 The priests’ rightful share of a sacrifice was the breast and the right thigh of the animal (Lev. 7:34). Eli’s sons sinned by taking any part they wanted and demanding the meat immediately, before the part consecrated to God, the fat, had been burned on the altar (Lev. 3:3, 5).

2:16 if the man said: In this instance, the layperson knew God’s Word and the importance of obedience better than the priests.

Eli, the Failed Leader of Shiloh

Eli served as a priest and judge of Israel for forty years (1 Sam. 4:18). It was not an easy time in which to exercise leadership. Israel had no centralized government, and "everyone did what was right in his own eyes" (Judg. 21:25), including Eli's own sons, Hophni and Phinehas. They abused the sacrificial system and committed immorality with the women at the tabernacle (1 Sam. 2:12–17, 22).

Eli was in a position to stop these abuses, but he was not equal to the task. He was unable either to restrain his sons or to remove them from the priesthood, and he and his descendants fell under the scathing judgment of God (2:27–36). Yet one bright spot of hope emerged from Eli's household, the boy Samuel, who in contrast to Eli's wicked sons followed the Lord and grew up to be one of Israel's greatest judges (2:17, 18; 3:1, 19, 20).

2:17 abhorred: Eli's sons dishonored God by doing their priestly duties with irreverence and disrespect. Those who regularly handle the things of God are sometimes in grave danger of carelessly and presumptuously performing the sacred duties entrusted to them.

2:18 The linen ephod was a sleeveless garment that was worn by priests, especially when officiating at the altar (2:28; 22:18; Ex. 28:6–14;). Occasionally it was worn by others engaged in religious ceremonies, such as David (2 Sam. 6:14), and here by Samuel.

2:19 The little robe made by Hannah is different from the ephod mentioned in v. 18. It was probably a long outer garment like those worn by people of rank or special status. The fact that Hannah made such a robe indicated her love for her son, whom she could visit only on rare occasions.

2:20 the loan that was given: The word loan here indicates a complete giving up of the child to God (1:28).

2:21 visited Hannah: God came to Hannah to grant her request, as He had to Sarah (Gen. 21:1). The Hebrew verb "visited" (paqad) speaks of God's gracious condescension: He comes near to His people to meet their needs (Ruth 1:8). In other circumstances, God's visit may be for the purpose of judgment (Hos. 1:4).

2:22 The joy of aged parents is in the godly success of their children. Few pains are greater in old age than to realize that one's children are living in spiritual ruin.

2:23, 24 Eli's protests seem weak in view of the enormity of his sons' sins.

2:25 Nevertheless may be translated "therefore" here, pointing to the severe consequences of their sin.

2:26 Compare the description of Samuel childhood with that of Jesus (Luke 2:52). The contrast between Samuel and Eli's sons is inescapable.

2:27, 28 The man of God was an unidentified prophet or spokesman for the Lord. Your father is a reference to Aaron, the brother of Moses and Miriam and the divinely appointed founder of the priestly house in Israel (Ex. 4:14–16; Num. 3:1–4).

2:29 Eli had warned his sons of divine judgment (v. 25), but he had never really rebuked them for their sins (3:13). By neglecting his parental duty, he was in effect favoring his sons above God.

2:30 I said: As descendants of Aaron, Eli's family benefitted from the promise God had given to Aaron and his sons that they would be a priesthood forever (Ex. 29:9). Eli is another example of godly men in Scripture who were unsuccessful in their parenting roles as "father."

2:31–34 The prophet predicted the destruction of the priestly family of Eli. The judgment was partially fulfilled in the massacre of the priests of Nob (22:11–19), and was ultimately fulfilled when the priesthood was transferred to the family of Zadok in the time of Solomon (1 Kin. 2:26, 27, 35).

2:34 The deaths of Hophni and Phinehas would validate the truth of the prophecy (4:17).

2:35 The faithful priest refers to Zadok, who was faithful to God and to the line of David and Solomon (1 Kin. 1:7, 8; 2:26, 27, 35). To build him a sure house means to guarantee a long line of succession for this faithful priest. My anointed: The household of Zadok would continue to serve alongside the divinely anointed kings, and ultimately before the Coming One (the Messiah). Forever here may mean to extend through human history. The sons of Zadok will serve in the messianic temple during the millennium (Ezek. 44:15; 48:11).

2:36 The impoverishment predicted here was probably fulfilled when Abiathar, a descendant of Eli, was dismissed from the priesthood by Solomon (1 Kin. 2:27).

3:1–18 After the time of Moses, the greatest of Yahweh's prophets (Num. 12), there were numerous true prophets of the living God (one is indicated in the phrase "a man of God," in 1 Sam. 2:27). But Samuel was the first of a series of named and celebrated prophets formally appointed by God to speak His word to the people of Israel. The first part of ch. 3 records his call to the prophetic ministry.

3:1 The word translated boy means "youth." It was used of David when he slew Goliath (17:33). rare in those days: Samuel was called at a time of extremely limited prophetic activity, probably because there were so few faithful Israelites who would listen (Judg. 21:25).

3:2 lying down in his place: Eli apparently was quartered in the court of the tabernacle, where cells were built for the priests who served the sanctuary.

3:3 The lamp of God is the gold lampstand that was located in the holy place of the tabernacle (Ex. 27:20, 21; Lev. 24:2–4). The fact that it had not yet gone out indicates that Samuel's call took place just before dawn. The Hebrew text may be rendered, "Samuel was lying down in the temple of Yahweh," indicating that he slept as an attendant near the ark.

3:4–8 Three times Samuel mistook God's voice for the voice of Eli. Samuel had been assisting Eli in serving the tabernacle, but he did not yet know the LORD in an intimate and personal way. He had never heard God's voice. He had never received the word of the LORD by divine revelation.

3:9 Eli finally realized that God was speaking to Samuel and advised the young man what to do.

“hears”

(Heb. shama) (1 Sam. 3:10; 17:28; Gen. 3:10, Ex. 2:15; Is. 6:9) Strong’s #8085: The Hebrew word translated hears also means “to listen” or “to obey.” This important OT word appears over 1,100 times. It implies that the listener is giving his or her total attention to the one who is speaking. In some cases, the word connotes more than listening and indicates obedience to what has been said. Abraham was blessed not only for hearing, but for obeying God’s voice (Gen. 22:18, where the word is translated obeyed). In the present passage Samuel is listening for God’s word and is determined to obey it. This young man is an example of the kind of person God delights to use—one who is always ready to receive His Word and follow it.

3:10 the LORD came and stood: These words reflect Samuel’s very real sense of God’s presence. This appears to have been a theophany, a visible appearance of God, as in Gen. 12:7. Speak … hears: Samuel voiced his readiness to receive God’s revelation. “Hears” (Heb. shama) means “to hear with interest” and can be translated “obey.” Samuel was listening for God’s word and was determined to obey it.

3:11 I will do something: God is sovereign over judgment and calamity (Eccl. 7:13, 14; Is. 45:7).

3:12 from beginning to end: The judgment would extend from the death of Eli’s sons and continue until the whole prophecy given by the man of God (2:27–36) was fulfilled.

3:13 I have told him: The message was given through the anonymous “man of God” (2:27–36). I will judge: No descendants of Eli would serve as priest. made themselves vile: These were supposed to have been the esteemed priests of God, but they turned their privilege into disaster. he did not restrain them: Here we learn of Eli’s personal failure as a father. The word translated restrain occurs only here in the Hebrew Bible. It suggests a rebuke that sets things right.

3:14 shall not be atoned: Eli and his sons were guilty of presumptuous sin (Num. 15:30, 31). For such a sin, there was no atoning sacrifice.

3:15, 16 The doors of the house refers to the entrance of the court of the tabernacle. After the people settled in Canaan, the tabernacle was set up permanently at Shiloh, and a walled enclosure with doors replaced the curtains which once surrounded the sanctuary. Vision: The term here applies to the message given to Samuel, since it came through divine revelation.

3:17 The phrase God do so to you, and more also is an oath. Eli was saying, “May God do something terrible, and worse, if you don’t tell me the truth.”

3:18 Let Him do: Eli submitted to God and accepted God’s judgment. Even with all his failures as a father, Eli remained faithful to God.

3:19 the LORD was with him: This was the key to Samuel’s success as a prophet (Matt. 28:20). God remained with him. let none of his words fall: All the prophecies God delivered through Samuel were fulfilled.

Who Is “Called”?

Are only certain people “called” by God (1 Sam. 3:20)? The issue of “calling” tends to be confusing today. Sometimes people talk about their day-to-day work as if that alone were their callings. “I’m John. I’m a chemist,” or, “I’m Jane. I sell real estate.”Others believe that occupations such as the pastorate or missionary work are true “callings.” Pigeon-holing ourselves like this falls short what the Bible means by “calling.”

A Task Set by God

The Reformation leader Martin Luther had a phrase that helps correct insufficient views of “calling.” He said that a person’s entire life was a “task set by God.” In whatever we do—work or play, eating or sleeping, worshiping or relaxing—we have a responsibility to honor God, for He is Lord of all of life. From a biblical point of view, “calling” describes all of the responsibilities of all believers to serve God with all of their lives: • Every believer is called to belong to God. Paul indicated to the Christians at Rome that both he and they had the same calling (Rom. 1:1, 6). Likewise, he wrote to the believers in Ephesus that just as there is one Spirit and one body (that is, the church), “you were called in one hope of your calling” (Eph. 4:4).

• Every believer is called a child of God. In His love, God brings us into His family (1 John 3:1), through faith in Christ Jesus.

• Every believer is called to accept the work of Christ on our behalf. Though we are sinners deserving of judgment, Christ’s death on the Cross has “justified” us, made us able to stand before a holy God and receive His salvation and grace (Rom. 8:28–30; 2 Tim. 1:9). For this we have every reason to live lives of gratitude (1 Thess. 2:13).

• Every believer is called to become like Christ. Living the life God calls us to involves change in which we take on the character of Christ. That means resisting the temptation to turn away from Him, even though others may encourage us to do so (Gal. 1:6–9). It involves fleeing evil and pursuing good, fighting to maintain our faithfulness (1 Tim. 6:11, 12). Just as Christ is holy, so we are to develop holiness in everything we do (1 Pet. 1:15; 3:9). As we pursue Christlikeness, we can do so with the certainty that the Lord is helping us, equipping us for every good work (Phil. 2:12, 13; 2 Pet. 1:3–10).

• Every believer is called to serve God and other people. Christ has called us to Himself to live out our faith in a manner that is worthy of Him (Eph. 4:1–4). We have the privilege of declaring God's work through everything we do and say (1 Pet. 2:9, 10, 21).

• Every believer is called to become a citizen of the new heaven and new earth. The Christian life leads ultimately to the end of being "glorified," raised up to stand with Christ in eternal glory, pure and holy at last (1 Pet. 5:10; 2 Pet. 3:10, 11). In that day, we will celebrate the final coming together of Christ and all His faithful ones (Rev. 19:9, 10). Our obedience to the Lord right now confirms this ultimate calling (Matt. 5:19).

3:20 The expression Dan to Beersheba denotes the whole territory of Israel, from its most northern to its most southern point (Judg. 20:1). The term prophet (Heb. nabi) means "spokesman" and refers to one who speaks for another (Ex. 7:1, 2).

3:21 The LORD appeared again in Shiloh: The idea here is that God was present in the midst of His people, both to receive their worship and to speak through His prophet. Samuel's call at Shiloh provided the basis for an on-going prophetic ministry. The verse speaks of two means of divine revelation, visions and direct speech.

4:1 The Philistines, known in Egyptian texts as the "Sea Peoples," were Indo-Europeans who migrated from the Aegean Islands and Asia Minor to the eastern Mediterranean coastal region in the twelfth century B.C. Migrations had occurred earlier, for Abraham and Isaac had contact with the Philistines as early as the twentieth century B.C.. With their aggressive invasions and the fortress cities at Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, Gath, and Gaza, the Philistines established strong political and military control of the southern coastal plain of Palestine. With their iron weapons, the Philistines became a significant threat to Israelite security. The battle mentioned here took place between Ebenezer and Aphek. The name Ebenezer means "Stone of Help," and it commemorates Israel's victory at the same site about twenty years later (7:12). Aphek, located thirteen miles northeast of Joppa, was a strategic border city at the northern limit of Philistine territory (29:1).

4:2 The field refers to the flat coastal plain where the Philistines were able to use their chariots to great advantage (13:5).

4:3 The term people refers to the fighting men of Israel before there was a standing Israelite army. Elders refers to the family heads who gave leadership in politics and war before the creation of the monarchy. In preparation for their next battle with the Philistines, the Israelites brought the ark of the covenant from the tabernacle in Shiloh to the battlefield. It was the custom of ancient warriors to take symbols of their gods into battle so that their gods would deliver them (2 Sam. 5:21; 1 Chr. 14:12). This apparently was Israel's plan. They failed to recognize that God would be with them even if the ark was in Shiloh! it may save us: It seems that the Israelites viewed the ark superstitiously, believing divine power to be in the ark itself rather than in God.

4:4 who dwells between the cherubim: Cherubim are angels generally regarded as guardians of God's holiness (Gen. 3:24; Ex. 25:22; 2 Sam. 6:2; 2 Kin. 19:15; Pss. 80:1; 99:1; Is. 37:16; Ezek. 10:9). God revealed Himself to Moses from between the two cherubim mounted at opposite ends of the mercy seat of the ark of the covenant (Ex. 25:22; Num. 7:89).

4:5–7 the earth shook: The presence of the ark gave the Israelites a false sense of victory. God has come into the camp: The shouting of the Israelites at the sight of the ark struck fear in the hearts of the Philistines. They clearly viewed the ark as some sort of idol.

4:8–10 these mighty gods: The Philistines were polytheists, and they assumed that the Israelites also had many gods. The Philistines had heard the report of what God had accomplished for His people at the time of the Exodus (Deut. 2:25).

4:11 The loss of the ark, symbolic of God's presence among His people, was a great tragedy for Israel—even worse than the loss of life (v. 10). The ark probably never returned to Shiloh. The Lord destroyed Shiloh because of the wickedness of His people (Jer. 7:12), and archaeological excavations indicate that the city was destroyed around 1050 B.C., perhaps by the Philistines. The deaths of Eli's sons, Hophni and Phinehas, mark the first step in God's judgment on the house of Eli (2:34).

4:12 Torn clothes and dirt on the head were traditional signs of mourning (Josh. 7:6).

4:13–17 by the wayside: Eli was sitting by the city gate (v. 18), anxiously awaiting news of the battle.

4:18, 19 The loss of the ark was a catastrophic blow. In response, Eli fell off his chair and died—another sign of God's judgment on the house of Eli (2:33–36).

4:20 Like Rachel (Gen. 35:16–20), the wife of Phinehas died in childbirth. The words you have borne a son were spoken to comfort her as she was dying.

4:21 She possibly refers to the midwife attending the birth of Eli's grandson. The name Ichabod, meaning "No Glory" (Heb. i-kabod) reflected Israel's circumstances. The loss of the ark meant the absence of God's glory in Israel.

4:22 The explanation of the name Ichabod is repeated, emphasizing what the godly wife of godless Phinehas sensed as the greatest tragedy, the loss of the ark. This truly was a day of ignominy, long to be remembered in Israel.

5:1—7:2 These chapters record “the wanderings of the ark” and its eventual return to Israel. Chapter 5 presents an amusing though grim story of the havoc the ark caused among the Philistines while it was in their possession. Although they thought that its possession would be to their benefit, the Philistines had to learn a hard lesson: the holy ark of the covenant was not a magical box to be use as a good-luck charm. It was a representation of the living God, and He would not allow His holy ark to be associated in any manner with their pagan worship or temples.

5:1 Ashdod, one of the five chief Philistine cities, was about three miles inland from the Mediterranean Sea and about twenty-two miles south of Joppa.

5:2 Dagon, the chief god of the Philistines, was thought to control the weather and the fertility of the land. This god appears to be a Philistine adaptation of the Canaanite god Baal, who is sometimes referred to in ancient literature as the “Son of Dagon.” Philistia was an important grain-producing region; the worship of Dagon was thought to ensure a good crop.

5:3, 4 Twice the idol of Dagon fell prostrate before the ark—as if worshiping the Israelite God. The second time the head and hands were broken off. This was recorded in order to demonstrate the foolishness of worshiping an impotent god.

5:5 The destruction of Dagon’s idol resulted in the foolish Philistine custom of stepping over the threshold of Dagon’s temple (Zeph. 1:9). Apparently the threshold came to be regarded as taboo because of its contact with Dagon’s hands and head (v. 4).

5:6, 7 The Hebrew word translated tumors (ophel) literally means “swellings” and may refer to any kind of tumor, swelling, or boil.

5:8, 9 Lords (Heb. saren) refers to the rulers of the five cities of Philistia (6:4). To free themselves from the plague associated with the presence of the Israelite ark, they sent the ark to Gath, one of these cities.

5:10 The ark was sent next to Ekron, about six miles north of Gath. to kill us: Having heard of the plague associated with the ark, the citizens of Ekron were less than enthusiastic about receiving the Israelite war trophy into their city.

5:11 The phrase deadly destruction (Heb. mehumat-mawet, “a tumult of death”) is particularly grim. Once again, the judgment of God followed the ark.

5:12 The Hebrew word cry means a cry for help (Ex. 2:23).

6:1, 2 Diviners claimed to be able to predict the future and determine the will of their gods by observing such omens as the flight pattern of birds or the liver of a sacrificed animal (Num. 22).

6:3 The priests and diviners (v.2) warned against returning the ark empty. They advised the Philistine leaders to present an offering to appease the God of Israel in order to end the plague. In their understanding, the God of Israel was another deity among many, who had won some sort of contest with their god Dagon. trespass offering: The gift was to be a compensation for trespassing against God by capturing the ark.

6:4 The offering of gold was fashioned to resemble the tumors and rats that plagued the people. the number of the lords of the Philistines: The offering corresponded to the number of Philistine cities and their respective lords or kings.

6:5 give glory to the God of Israel: By sending the gifts back with the ark, the Philistines acknowledged that it was God who had afflicted them with tumors. This recognition would add to His glorious reputation among the nations.

6:6 The Philistine priests and diviners recalled the experience of the Egyptians and Pharaoh, who hardened their hearts against God at the time of the Exodus. God's salvation of the Israelites was internationally known (Deut. 4). The words of the priests and diviners imply that the ark should be returned to Israel before a worse calamity befell the Philistines.

6:7 The use of a new cart and cows that had never been yoked was designed to show special reverence for God on the part of the Philistines. take their calves home: The natural inclination of cows would be to return home with their calves. This was a test as to whether God was behind the plagues.

6:8, 9 let it go: Where the cows went was going to be left up to God. if it goes up the road: If the two cows left their calves this would be a clear sign to the Philistines that the plague of tumors had been the judgment of Israel's God. Beth Shemesh, a Levitical city (Josh. 21:16), was close to the border of Philistia, about eight miles east of Ekron. The name Beth Shemesh means "House of the Sun." It is likely that this ancient Canaanite city had been known for its temple to the sun god.

6:10–12 along the highway: The Hebrew literally reads "along one highway," indicating that the cows did not deviate onto any side roads. The lowing of the cattle was their plaintive crying for their calves. These cows were drawn by a strong power in the opposite direction from where their natural inclination would lead them. This would make an undeniable impression on the Philistine farmers, who knew the strong maternal instincts of cows.

6:13 wheat harvest: Wheat planted in the fall and harvested in the spring.

6:14 offered the cows as a burnt offering: Although Deut. 12:4–14 required that sacrifices be offered only at the central sanctuary, it seems that this law would not have been applied in view of the recent destruction of Shiloh. Since Beth Shemesh was a Levitical city (Josh. 21:16), there would have been priests available to officiate at the sacrifice.

6:15 Mosaic law stipulated that only the Levites could handle the ark, and even they could not touch it directly (Num. 4:5, 15). offerings … sacrifices: These were in addition to those mentioned in v. 14.

6:16 The lords or kings of the Philistine cities had followed the ark at a distance to see what would become of it.

6:17 Although there is no indication in the text that the ark was ever in Gaza or Ashkelon, these cities apparently fell under the same plague as the other Philistine cities; therefore, they contributed to the trespass offering (v. 3). Ashkelon, located on the Mediterranean coast about ten miles south of Ashdod, is one of the oldest, largest, and most important cities in the Holy Land (only Jericho is regarded as an older city in ancient Canaan). Archaeologists have found evidence of human occupation there that dates back to the Neolithic period (7500–4000 B.C.). The city covered some 160 acres. Herod was a native of Ashkelon, and in his later years he adorned the city with palaces, temples, and a large stoa. Gaza, another Mediterranean coastal city, was located about twelve miles south of Ashkelon. It was important commercially as the last stop on the Via Maris, or coastal highway, before entering the desert of northern Sinai. Samson once carried the city gate to a mountain top near Hebron (Judg. 16:1–3, and it was at Gaza that Samson ended his life by pulling down the pillars of the Philistine temple (Judg. 16:21–31).

6:18 Abel here is unrelated to the name of Adam and Eve’s son (Gen. 4:2). This term may be a place or site name that more precisely locates the large stone.

6:19 The Lord brought judgment upon certain men of Beth Shemesh who were guilty of the presumptuous sin of gazing into the ark. They had shown a lack of reverence for the holy things of God and had directly violated Mosaic law (Num. 4:20).

6:20 Who is able to stand: Since God is holy, He requires those who minister or serve Him to be separated from all that is contrary to His holy character. The people responded in terror and frustration. They knew of the troubles that the ark had brought to the Philistines; now, they believed, they were next.

6:21 The people of Beth Shemesh were so disturbed by the tragedy that they requested the inhabitants of Kirjath Jearim to remove the ark from their city. Kirjath Jearim was about ten miles west of Jerusalem.

7:1 Eleazar, whose name means “God Is Help” or “God Is Power,” was consecrated (literally, “set apart”) to care for the ark. Eleazar was probably a member of the priestly family since there was no judgment on his ministry before the ark.

7:2 it was there twenty years: Most likely, it was twenty years before Samuel called the assembly at Mizpah (v. 5). The ark remained at Kirjath Jearim for about a hundred years. It was taken there just after the battle of Aphek around 1104 B.C. and remained there until David brought it to Jerusalem in his first year as king over all Israel, around 1003 B.C. (2 Sam. 5:5; 6:1–18).

7:3 If you return to the LORD: Repentance from sin and expressions of loyalty to God were prerequisites for the restoration of divine blessing (Deut. 30:1–10; 2 Chr. 7:14). The expression foreign gods is a general term for the idols of Canaan. Ashtoreths is the plural form of the name of the Canaanite goddess of fertility, sexuality, and war. The rites connected with her worship usually involved sacred prostitution. Sexual rituals in the Canaanite temples were designed to prompt the gods to make the earth fertile. prepare your hearts … serve Him only: They were not just to turn away from false gods but also to deliberately turn to the living God (1 Thess. 1:9). The constant teaching of Torah (Deut. 6:4) is that Yahweh is unlike the gods of the nations. He is not one of their number or merely one better than they. He and He alone is the living God, and He and He alone is to be worshiped by His people. He brooks no rivals, has no associates, tolerates no compromises with the gods.

7:4 the Baals: In ancient sculptures, Baal was depicted with a horned helmet. In one hand he grasped a club or mace and in the other a shaft of lightning or a spear with leaves. In some sculptures, he stood on the back of a bull. The plurals Baals and Ashtoreths refer either to the many images of these gods or to the various local forms under which these gods were worshiped.

7:5 Samuel gathered the people for a prayer meeting at Mizpah, about eight miles north of Jerusalem. The city was the capital of Judah after the fall of Jerusalem (2 Kin. 25:22–25). I will pray: Samuel, like his mother (1:10–16; 2:1–10), repeatedly exhibited a commitment to prayer (8:6; 12:19, 23; Ps. 99:6; Jer. 15:1).

7:6 poured it out: The pouring of water was symbolic of repentance (Ps. 62:8; Lam. 2:19). Samuel judged: Samuel acted as chief magistrate, rendering decisions and settling disputes.

7:7 The Israelite gathering at Mizpah alerted the Philistines of a potential uprising. They immediately organized an attack.

7:8 Do not cease to cry out to the LORD: The Israelites did not want to engage in battle unless Samuel was praying for victory. In contrast to the debacle at Aphek (ch. 4), the Israelites were no longer depending on the ark as a magical talisman. They now wanted to depend solely on the power of God through prayer.

7:9, 10 a suckling lamb: According to Lev. 22:27, no animal could be sacrificed until it was at least eight days old.

7:11 Beth Car is not mentioned elsewhere in Scripture; it must have been a place of high ground overlooking Philistine territory.

7:12, 13 To commemorate the victory and acknowledge the Lord's intervention, Samuel set up a memorial stone on the battlefield and named it Ebenezer, meaning "Stone of Help." Samuel followed Joshua's practice of commemorating the victories of God for His people with stone markers (Josh. 4). The victory at Ebenezer was so decisive that the Philistines made no more attacks against the Israelites during Samuel's judgeship.

7:14 Ekron and Gath were Philistine cities near Israel (5:8, 10). The frontier settlements which the Israelites had been forced to evacuate could now be taken again. Amorites may refer to the original inhabitants of Canaan (Gen. 15:16), or to the hill dwellers of southern Canaan (Num. 13:29; Josh. 10:5).

7:15–17 This summary section speaks of Samuel's ministry in a positive manner. It is a necessary element because the next section will describe Israel's quest for a king in the manner of the other nations of the day (ch. 8). The narrator wishes the reader to know that this quest for a king was not due to any fault in the person or ministry of Samuel himself.

7:16 In addition to his religious duties as prophet, Samuel served as a circuit judge. Bethel, the "House of God," was where Jacob had his famous dream (Gen. 28:10–22). Gilgal was where the Israelites had first camped after crossing the Jordan River to conquer Canaan (Josh. 4:19, 20). It was about one mile from Jericho.

7:17 Ramah was about five miles north of Jerusalem.

8:1—15:35 The second major section of 1 Samuel brings a new personality, Saul, and a new institution, the Israelite monarchy. While Saul functioned as Israel's first king and military leader, Samuel continued to serve as the spiritual leader of the nation (1 Sam. 12:19–28).

8:1–22 Chapter 8 serves as a transition between the years of the judges and the institution of the monarchy. The chapter records Israel's demand for a king so they might be like all the nations (8:5, 20). Their demand for a king was in once sense their rejection of Yahweh as the ultimate ruler over Israel. But this also served to achieve the will of Yahweh in the ultimate selection of David, the king who would be the prototype of the Coming King, the Lord Jesus.

8:1 made his sons judges: It was highly unusual for Samuel to appoint his sons to assist him in judging cases. Judges were individually appointed by God, not by their fathers.

Wayward Children

Scripture urges parents to raise up their children in the ways of the Lord (Prov. 22:6; Eph. 6:4), but it makes no guarantees as to how the children will turn out. Sometimes parents of the utmost integrity see their children utterly reject God. Such was the case for Samuel (1 Sam. 8:2, 3). No one knows how differently things might have turned out had Samuel confronted his sons and, as a last resort, taken them before the elders. The legacy of his family is a sober challenge to parents and their children.

8:2 Joel means "The Lord Is God." Abijah means "My Father Is the Lord." Beersheba was at the southern extremity of Israel (3:20), about forty-eight miles south of Jerusalem. It was here that Abraham and Isaac had dug wells and formed alliances with Abimelech, king of the Philistines (Gen. 21:22–34; 26:1–33).

8:3, 4 One wonders if Samuel, like Eli, had not given proper attention to his family (notes at 2:22, 23, 29). God's standards and expectations for the judges is clear in Deut. 16:18–20. They were not to distort justice or take bribes. Samuel's sons missed the mark and dishonored God. They used their office and authority for personal gain and perverted justice. It is almost unbelievable that the sons of Samuel were as wicked as the sons of Eli, given the fact that Samuel's ascendancy was based in large part on the wickedness of Eli's sons.

8:5 make us a king: Two factors contributed to the elders' request for a king: (1) the corruption of Samuel's sons, and (2) their desire to follow the pattern of the all the nations.

8:6 There is nothing wrong with the concept of a monarchy. God had made provisions in His Law for the appointment of a king over His people (Deut. 17:14, 15). Yet Samuel was displeased because he felt that the demand for a king indicated a rejection of his own leadership. Samuel took the matter to God in prayer.

8:7, 8 they have rejected Me: The error of the elders of Israel was their failure to recognize God as their true King (12:12). to you also: The Lord drew a parallel between the Israelites' forgetfulness of His gracious acts and their lack of appreciation for Samuel.

8:9, 10 forewarn them: Samuel was called to warn the Israelites that a king would not solve all of their problems. In fact, having a king would create many hardships. The word behavior (Heb. mishpat, often meaning "judgment," "justice") refers to the "right" or "prerogative" that the king would claim. Israel's king would rule with arbitrary and absolute power.

8:11–17 First, a king would draft young men to serve in the military, farm his fields, and prepare for war. Run before his chariots is a reference to the king's state carriage. Runners would serve as messengers, announcing the king's coming. Second, a king would draft young women to work in his palace and serve in his court. Third, a king would tax the people's crops and flocks. He would take the best of their products. take a tenth: The proceeds of this tithe would be used to pay the salaries of the king's officers and servants. Fourth, a king would appropriate the servants of the Israelites and their finest young men and donkeys. Citizens would be forced into the king's service as well as slaves. Fifth, the king would take away the people's personal freedom.

8:18, 19 cry out … not hear: Since the Israelites were deliberately choosing their own path, they could not expect God to deliver them from the trouble that would inevitably result.

IN DEPTH

The King of Israel

Was it God's will for Israel to have a king? Certainly it was, for God had indicated that the kingship was part of His plan for Israel in a number of prophecies (Gen. 49:10; Num. 24:17; Deut. 17:14–20).

Although kingship for them was not wrong in itself, the way the Israelites were demanding it was wrong. The people clearly stated their motives for wanting a king. First, they wanted to follow the practices of the neighboring nations (8:5). Second, they wanted a king to lead them into battles (8:20). Both motives amounted to a rejection of the God of Israel as their King (8:7).

The Lord had demonstrated on numerous occasions that He would fight the Israelites' battles. From the miraculous collapse of Jericho's walls (Josh. 6:20) to Gideon's rout of the massive Midianite army (Judg. 7:19–22), God had delivered His people again and again from their enemies. Why did they need a king now to lead them into battles?

What is more, God had given the people His Word, the prophets, and the judges to guide them. But as the tragic history of Judges demonstrates, the people ignored God's guidance and followed the practices of their neighbors (Judg. 3:7). Now, once again, the people were following their neighbors instead of the living God and the Word He had given them. Although Samuel clearly communicated God's warning to the people, they stubbornly preferred their will to God's.

In the end, God allowed the Israelites to have what they wanted. He gave them a king like those of the other nations. The tall and handsome Saul would have been the perfect choice for a king. But through Saul's tragic reign, God taught the Israelites that they needed a king who was not like the kings of the other nations.

They needed a king who would obey God's word instead of following his own will, a king who would trust in God instead of himself. In the shadow of Saul's mistakes, God trained young David to walk in His ways so that He could eventually lead the nation in righteousness.

8:20 and fight our battles: The Israelites were looking for human leadership on the battlefield, instead of recognizing that God would lead them in battle—and win (Ex. 15:3).

8:21, 22 Samuel heard … and he repeated them: Samuel acted as mediator between the people and God.

9:1—10:27 This section records the commencement of the monarchy and how Saul was anointed privately by Samuel and then presented publicly before all Israel.

9:1 Saul's father, Kish, was from the tribe of Benjamin. The term a mighty man of power suggests that he was something like a feudal lord—a wealthy landowner and a leader in time of war. The same term is used of Boaz (Ruth 2:1).

9:2 Saul means "Asked For." Choice (Heb. bachur) suggests that Saul was in the prime of manhood. Both his physical stature—taller than any—and personal appearance—handsome—were striking. Saul was endowed with what seemed to be great potential for leadership and service. In these respects, Saul was a king like those of "all the nations" (8:5).

9:3 The early history of Saul is rather endearing on many levels. Despite his great looks and physique, he is sent on a simple journey by his father, as any other son might have been sent. Further, the writer uses a journey motif to develop his theme. Saul went on a search for donkeys, quite unaware that he would be sought (as the meaning of his name; v. 2) for higher glory.

9:4 The search for his father's donkeys took Saul north from his home at Gibeah (10:26), through the mountains of Ephraim. Ephraim was the tribal inheritance of Joseph's son (Gen. 41:50–52), directly north of Benjamin (Josh. 16).

9:5 worried about us: These words speak of a person of responsibility and of sensitivity to the needs of others. The words also speak well of Kish, Saul's father. The story of Saul is a classic example of tragedy in the literary sense. As in the stories of a great Greek king, Saul was an individual of enormous charm, great abilities, and splendid prospects, who rose to the heights of power in his nation but then, due to an inner flaw, declined into disaster.

9:6 This city refers to Ramah, Samuel's home after the destruction of Shiloh (1:1; 8:4). The term man of God refers to someone who was recognized for his prophetic ministry (1 Kin. 12:22; 13:1; 2 Kin. 23:17).

9:7 Saul was concerned that he had no present by which to honor Samuel for helping them find the missing donkeys. He recognized the principle of remuneration for services rendered (1 Cor. 9:5–14). Here, too, we find in Saul admirable qualities. When all the qualities of Saul described in these verses are put together, one is amazed to find how poorly he ended! We may also observe that many of the qualities that we so admire in his son

Jonathan (chs. 18; 20), and perhaps also in his daughter Michal (chs. 18; 19), were imparted in his home, and under his direction. Is it possible that he is the good father we search for in the Bible?

9:8 Saul's servant unexpectedly produced one-fourth of a shekel of silver, which would serve as adequate compensation for the prophet's ministry. A shekel was about 11.4 grams.

9:9, 10 This verse is an explanatory note of an ancient custom to later Israelite readers. Seer (from the Heb. verb raa , "to see") refers to one who is able to see what is hidden from the eyes of ordinary people. Prophet (Heb. naba, "to prophecy") refers to one who speaks for God (Ex. 7:1).

9:11 The city is Ramah.

9:12–15 A high place (Heb. bama) was an elevated site of worship located on a hill or on an artificial platform in a temple. The Canaanites were known for building their places of worship on hills (Num. 33:52; Deut. 12:2–5). Nevertheless, pious Israelites appear to have used such facilities legitimately after the destruction of Shiloh and before the construction of Solomon's temple (1 Kin. 3:2). Sadly, the misuse of such high places to worship false gods eventually undermined the worship of God and contributed to the rise of idolatry in Israel (1 Kin. 11:7; 12:26–33).

9:16, 17 It seems significant that Saul is referred to here as commander (Heb. nagìd, also translated as "prince," "ruler," or "leader"), rather than as king (Heb. melek). The royal throne ultimately belonged to the line of Judah (Gen. 49:9, 10).

9:18 Asking Samuel directions to the seer's house at the entrance of the city was the final step in a remarkable sequence of events which God sovereignly superintended to bring about the anointing of Saul.

9:19 All that is in your heart does not seem to refer to the matter of the donkeys, for Samuel immediately assured Saul that the donkeys had been found. Perhaps Saul was brooding over the problem of the Philistines.

9:20 all the desire of Israel: Samuel probably had in mind the honor and privileges that would come to Saul and his family through the monarchy.

9:21 smallest of the tribes: Benjamin was the second smallest tribe at the first census following the Exodus (Num. 1:36, 37). The tribe was reduced to 600 fighting men during the punishment of Benjamin for the atrocity at Gibeah (Judg. 19; 20). the least of all the families: If Saul's father was “a mighty man of power,” these words contain a certain amount of self-depreciation (v. 1).

9:22 The hall was where local dignitaries sat for sacrificial feasts at the high place.

9:23 which I gave you: Samuel had been instructed by God to be prepared for this special encounter.

9:24 Giving Saul the thigh was intended to honor him in the presence of the other guests (Gen. 43:34).

9:25, 26 A house in ancient Israel usually had a flat roof which could be used for drying flax or as a place to relax. It appears that Saul slept on the roof (v. 26).

9:27 Tell the servant to go on: The anointing of Saul was private. Later, he would be publicly installed as king before all Israel (10:17–27).

10:1 A better new chapter break might have been at what is now 9:27. The use of olive oil in the anointing process has ancient roots. Ultimately all true anointings for special offices and functions point to the truly Anointed One, the Messiah Jesus. kissed him: Peoples of the ancient (and modern) middle East often greet one another with a kiss on the cheek. Here the kiss may have been one of genuine affection. the LORD has anointed you: There were two kinds of anointings in the biblical period. A ceremonial anointing involved pouring olive oil on the head or body of the person to be honored (Ps. 133:2). An official anointing used the same process but signified a consecration or setting apart for religious service (Ex. 29:7; 30:25; Lev. 8:12). The anointing of a ruler was actually a religious act. That is why David had such high regard for Saul, refusing to lift a hand against "the LORD's anointed" (24:6). His inheritance: The land of Israel was God's gift to His people, but it would return to God's direct control should the people prove unfit to manage it (Deut. 27—30).

10:2 Rachel's tomb: Rachel had died giving birth to Benjamin on a journey from Bethel to Bethlehem, and she was buried along the way (Gen. 35:16–20). in the territory of Benjamin: Rachel was buried near Bethlehem, which is in Judah (Gen. 35:16–20). Perhaps her burial site was very close to the border between Benjamin and Judah. Zelah is mentioned only here and must refer to a town then near Rachel's tomb. father … caring: This is a nice familial touch in the story. Saul's later estrangement from his son Jonathan (chs. 18—20) cannot be blamed on a lack of interest in him by his father.

10:3 The terebinth, sometimes translated oak or elm, refers to a strong tree, native to the land of Israel, which grows to a height of around thirty-five feet. Tabor is an apparent reference to Mount Tabor, in the Valley of Jezreel, where these trees were prominent.

10:4 For strangers to offer Saul two loaves of bread would have been a remarkable sign. Their bread would have been for use in the worship of God. For them, giving the bread to Saul substituted for a sacred act.

Bands of Prophets

The prophets appear as religious ecstatics living in groups or bands (1 Sam. 10:5). “Prophesying” in this context was a recognizable form of abnormal behavior, like a trance. In Greek tradition also, the oracles of the gods were not delivered in a normal way. According to Heraclitus, the oracles were ambiguous, like riddles.

10:5 The Hebrew word translated hill (giba) probably refers to Gibeah, Saul’s hometown (11:4). Gibeah of God was perhaps the full name of the city, due to its proximity to a significant high place (v. 13). Philistine garrison: The Philistines dominated the land and had set up a military outpost in Saul’s hometown. A group of prophets may refer to members of the “school of the prophets,” which was probably instituted by Samuel for the purpose of preparing young men for prophetic ministry.

10:6–8 The Spirit of the LORD refers to the same Holy Spirit who came upon Othniel, Gideon, Jephthah, and Samson (Judg. 3:10; 6:34; 11:29; 13:25; 14:6, 19; 15:14). The expression be turned into another man may mean spiritual regeneration or a marked advance in spiritual growth.

10:9 God gave him another heart: In Hebrew this expression literally reads, “God changed him for another heart.” There is debate as to whether this refers to a work of God’s Spirit which prepared Saul for kingship or to the act of spiritual regeneration. It may seem that Saul’s subsequent attitudes and behavior do not reflect a genuine spiritual life. Yet Saul seems to have struggled with sin and desired to worship God (14:34, 35; 15:24–34).

10:10 God worked through His Spirit in Saul’s life so that he was able to exercise a prophetic gift. This was not a vocation for Saul but an opportunity.

10:11 As a result of the Spirit’s mighty working in Saul, the people asked, Is Saul also among the prophets? Some have taken this as an expression of contempt, but this implies a low view of prophets and prophecy. Rather, the question simply expresses surprise at Saul’s sudden change in character.

10:12–16 But who is their father: The implication of this question is that the fathers of the prophets were not important people. The prophets in any case did not obtain their gift by inheritance, but by God's will.

10:17, 18 Mizpah was where the Israelites had gathered for a time of spiritual revival before their victory over the Philistines (7:5).

10:19 rejected your God: Samuel reiterated his earlier admonition (8:10–18), warning the people of their attitude—which was actually a rejection of God's kingship. Clans were a smaller family unit than tribes.

10:20, 21 The choice of Saul as Israel's first monarch was made by casting lots, a means of determining God's will in answer to "yes" and "no" questions. The lots were cast like dice. The principle underlying the use of lots was an active confidence in God's control of all events.

10:22, 23 hidden among the equipment: This may reflect Saul's modesty, or perhaps his hesitancy and self-doubt over assuming the position of national leader.

“king”

(Heb. melek) (1 Sam. 10:24; Deut. 17:14) Strong’s #4428: The term king may describe a petty ruler of a small city (Josh. 10:3) or a monarch of a vast empire (Esth. 1:1–5). An ancient king’s jurisdiction included the military (8:20), the economy (1 Kin. 10:26–29), international diplomacy (1 Kin. 5:1–11), and the legal system (2 Sam. 8:15). He also functioned as a spiritual leader (2 Kin. 23:1–24), although Israel’s kings were prohibited from some priestly functions (13:9–14). The Bible presents David as an example of the righteous king who set his heart on faithfully serving God (Acts 13:22). God’s promise to give David an everlasting kingdom (2 Sam. 7:16) has been fulfilled in Jesus Christ, whose human ancestry is through the royal family of David (Luke 2:4).

10:24 The phrase him whom the LORD has chosen reflects the sovereignty of God in the area of His permissive will. Although the Israelites decided to have a king, it was the Lord who selected Saul.

10:25 the behavior of royalty: Samuel taught the people what to expect from a king, possibly reviewing his instruction in 8:11–18 and God’s laws for kingship in Deut. 17:14–20.

10:26 Gibeah, located just three miles north of Jerusalem, served as the first capital of the Israelite monarchy.

10:27 Some rebels questioned Saul’s military leadership and refused to honor him with the gifts customarily given a king. But Saul held his peace in order not to provoke the situation.

11:1–15 This section explains that the initial opposition against Saul (10:27) was overcome as he proved himself a capable military leader.

11:1 Nahash, whose name means “Serpent,” was commander of the Ammonites, descendants of Lot who occupied the fringes of the desert east of the territories of Gad and Manasseh (Gen. 19:38). Jabesh Gilead is the Israelite city of Jabesh, located in the region of Gilead east of the Jordan. Gilead seems to be used rather loosely in the Hebrew Scriptures, being applied to regions between the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea, but always to the east of the River Jordan.

11:2 put out all your right eyes: The condition of surrender demanded by Nahash was not only cruel and humiliating but would have made the Israelite warriors unable to fight.

11:3, 4 The elders of Jabesh Gilead asked for seven days in which to find help before conceding defeat. Nahash agreed to the proposal, since he apparently was not prepared to take the city by force and wanted to avoid a long and costly siege.

11:5 Saul, coming behind the herd: Although Saul had been appointed king, he did not assume governmental authority at once. Saul continued farming until he could answer Israel’s expectations of him as king by delivering the Israelites from their enemies (8:20).

11:6 the Spirit of God came upon Saul: The Holy Spirit empowered Saul to deliver the citizens of Jabesh.

11:7 Two oxen were customarily yoked together for work. Saul’s call to arms was accompanied by a threat. His distribution of the pieces of the oxen throughout Israel is reminiscent of the grisly story of Judg. 19:27—20:1. The fear of the LORD begins with an awesome awareness of who God is (Prov. 2:5) and ends with a proper response to good and evil (Prov. 16:6).

11:8 Bezek was thirteen miles northeast of Shechem, due west of Jabesh Gilead on the other side of the Jordan. The distinction made between Israel and Judah in the numbering of the warriors (15:4; 17:52) may indicate that the book was either written or edited after the division of the monarchy in 930 B.C.

11:9 by the time the sun is hot: The sun becomes hot before noon.

11:10 The message to Nahash may have been designed to lull the Ammonites into a false sense of security.

11:11 Saul divided his forces into three companies so that he could attack at the same time from different directions (Judg. 7:16). the morning watch: The Israelites divided the night into three watches—nine to twelve, twelve to three, and three to six in the morning (Ex. 14:24–27; Judg. 7:19; Lam. 2:19). Saul's attack probably took place at dawn, before the Ammonites had armed themselves for battle.

11:12 Saul's victory over the Ammonites gave him the support and allegiance of the people of Israel. Some went so far as to suggest that those who had previously questioned his rule should be put … to death (10:27).

11:13 the LORD has accomplished salvation in Israel: Saul recognized that the victory over the Ammonites could be attributed to God alone and refused to heed the suggestion of his overly zealous supporters.

11:14, 15 It was to Gilgal, the first Israelite camp west of the Jordan at the time of the conquest (Josh. 5:10), that Samuel called the tribes to renew the kingdom. Although the monarchy had been inaugurated at Mizpah, there had been some question there about Saul's qualifications and abilities to lead in battle (10:17–27). As a result of Saul's victory over the Ammonites, the Israelites enthusiastically endorsed his kingship.

12:1–25 Chapter 12 records Samuel's farewell address at Gilgal as he relinquished the leadership of the twelve tribes to Saul. This is a bittersweet moment for Samuel, informing the reader of the inner heart and personal struggles of this man of God. It is noteworthy that leading characters in the Bible struggle with hope and doubt, with triumph and frustration, and with acceptance and challenge of the divine will.

12:1, 2 walking before you: Saul was leading Israel and attending to the nation's needs. Samuel referred to the two reasons cited by the elders of Israel in their demand for a king: (1) Samuel's old age and (2) his sons, who had demonstrated their unworthiness for public office (8:5).

12:3–5 Samuel began his charge to Israel by establishing his own integrity. before the LORD and before His anointed: Samuel asked whether anyone wanted to accuse him before God and His anointed king. The Israelites cleared Samuel of any impropriety or injustice in the administration of his duties as judge. Samuel's past record was established to inspire confidence in his present exhortation.

12:6, 7 Righteous acts refers to the benefits that God had bestowed on His people. These acts testified to the righteousness of God in blessing His people by fulfilling His covenant promises.

12:8 Samuel summarized the descent of Jacob's family into Egypt (Gen. 46), the Egyptian oppression (Ex. 1:8—22), the Exodus from Egypt (Ex. 2—15), and the conquest of Canaan (Josh. 1—12).

12:9 Samuel recounted the nation's apostasy and subsequent divine discipline. Sisera was a Canaanite general (Judg. 4:2–22). Moab: The Moabites were descendants of the incestuous relationship of Lot and his eldest daughter (Gen. 19:30–37). The Moabite oppression is recorded in Judg. 3:12–30.

12:10 After a period of oppression, the Israelites repented and cried out to the Lord for deliverance. The Baals and Ashtoreths were Canaanite fertility deities (7:3, 4).

12:11 Jerubbaal, also known as Gideon, delivered Israel from the Midianites (Judg. 6—8). Jephthah defeated the Ammonites (Judg. 11).

12:12 The threat of Nahash was probably felt long before the threatened attack of Jabesh Gilead (11:1–3) and was probably a factor in Israel's request for a king (8:20).

12:13, 14 The fear of the LORD is not merely a pious attitude but a serious and obedient response to the revelation of God's holy character.

12:15, 16 The consequences for disobeying God's covenant are outlined in Deut. 28:15–68.

12:17, 18 The season for wheat harvest in Israel is the months of May and June. send thunder and rain: The land of Israel receives its rainfall during the winter season. For rain to fall during the wheat harvest would be most unusual. The miracle was intended to convince the people of their great wickedness in demanding a king. The miracle also served to enhance Israel's respect for both the LORD and Samuel.

12:19, 20 Do not fear: By this Samuel meant, "Do not fear the death penalty for disobedience."

12:21 Empty things refers to false gods and idols (Is. 44:9–20).

12:22 His great name's sake: In ancient times, one's name stood for one's character. The name of God speaks of His reputation and attributes. For God to abandon His people would be inconsistent with His reputation for faithfulness (Ex. 34:6; Deut. 31:6; Josh. 1:5; Heb. 13:5).

12:23, 24 Samuel assured the people that he would not forget to pray for them. For Samuel, a lack of prayer was a moral compromise, a sin. In fact, his life illustrates the importance of prayer (7:5; 1 Thess. 5:17; James 5:16). Although he was leaving his official duties as judge over Israel, Samuel promised to continue to teach the people.

12:25 The words swept away anticipate God's ultimate judgment of captivity and exile from the land (Deut. 28:41, 63, 64).

13:1–23 One of the reasons why the Israelites wanted a king was to provide military leadership (1 Sam. 8:20). The greatest threat to Israelite security in Saul's day was the Philistines, a powerful military people who ruled the coastal plain and had established several outposts in the hill country. Chapter 13 tells of the preparations for Saul's first encounter with the Philistines.

13:1 one year … two years: This verse provides a chronological note recording the date of this encounter with the Philistines relative to Saul's reign as king. Since Acts 13:21 reveals that Saul ruled over Israel forty years, the two years must refer to the period of reign up to a particular event —likely Saul's encounter with the Philistines described in this chapter.

13:2 Although Saul had raised a citizen militia to rescue Jabesh Gilead (11:7–9), here he selected and trained a regular, standing army. Michmash was seven miles north of Jerusalem. Gibeah of Benjamin was four miles southeast of Michmash.

13:3 While Saul was in Michmash, his son Jonathan attacked the Philistine garrison at Geba, about a mile southwest of Michmash. The two sites are separated by a deep ravine. The trumpet was a ram's horn used to signal and summon the military. Hebrews refers to the Israelites. The name may be connected with the name Eber, the ancestor of Abraham (Gen. 10:24), or it may be related to the Hebrew verb meaning "to cross over," since Abraham "crossed over" to the land of Canaan.

13:4 Saul had attacked: Either Jonathan had been acting under Saul's orders or Saul took credit for his son's victory. Saul withdrew his army to Gilgal in keeping with Samuel's instructions to him at his anointing (10:8).

13:5 Beth Aven was about a half mile west of Michmash.

13:6 the people hid in caves: The limestone of the hill country region contains many natural caves which could be used as hideouts in time of attack.

13:7 The land of Gad and Gilead refers to the region south and north of the River Jabbok, which flows into the Jordan from the east. Gilgal, located northeast of Jericho in the Jordan valley, was the appointed place of Saul's meeting with Samuel (v. 8).

A Craving for Results

Saul lost his kingdom because of his craving for results. He wanted to defeat the Philistines so much that he offered a burnt offering, which it was not his place to do (1 Sam. 13:8–14). He was determined to do things in his way and according to his timing rather than God's. So God found a man "after His own heart" (13:14), a man who would get results, but do so by following God's plans.

Actually, getting results is not a leader's main job. The primary task is to create a climate where others can make things happen and accomplish goals. That climate has a variety of dimensions: technical (task-oriented), behavioral (relationship-oriented), political (power-oriented), and spiritual (God-oriented). If a leader concentrates on the immediate task at the expense of the other dimensions, the outcome may be short-term results but long-term losses.

13:8, 9 Waited seven days refers to the instruction given to Saul by Samuel after his anointing (10:8). Samuel had told Saul to wait seven days at Gilgal until Samuel came to offer sacrifices. Concerned that the people were losing courage and starting to scatter, Saul assumed priestly prerogatives and offered the burnt offering himself (Lev. 1). With this action, Saul tragically disobeyed both the Law of Moses and the instructions of God's prophet.

13:10–12 as soon as he had finished: Samuel's delay may have been intended as a test of Saul's obedience. Saul cited four justifications for his disobedience: (1) the soldiers were scattering; (2) Samuel had not come as promised; (3) the Philistines were gathering their forces at Michmash; and (4) there was imminent danger of Philistine attack.

13:13 Saul was soundly rebuked by Samuel. The Hebrew word foolishly here is a powerful play on words that serves to strengthen the contrast that the text will establish between Saul and David. It sounds like the word later used to describe David, but with the opposite meaning (18:5, 30). By this brilliant but subtle interchange, the contrasting characters of the two principals of the book are vividly demonstrated. Saul played the fool; David exhibited a wisdom beyond his years or experience. Saul's principal sin was failing to keep the commandment God had given through Samuel (10:8).

13:14 your kingdom shall not continue: Although Saul would retain his throne, his descendants would not carry on his dynasty. A man after His own heart is God's description of David, a man with many faults, but a man whose spirit was sensitive to God's will.

13:15, 16 Saul's army had dwindled from 3,000 (v. 2) to only six hundred men.

13:17 The Philistines sent their raiders to harass the Israelites in the hopes of weakening Israelite resolve or forcing a decisive engagement. Ophrah was located about seven miles north of Michmash.

13:18 The twin towns of Beth Horon (Upper and Lower) were located west of Geba, about two miles apart on a ridge guarding the approach to the hill country from the coastal plain.

13:19 no blacksmith: The Canaanites and Philistines learned how to forge iron from the Hittites. Although they were not great in numerical strength, the Philistines were able to dominate Israel. By the end of David's reign, the Israelites also had acquired iron technology (1 Chr. 22:3).

13:20 Sharpen may also be translated "to forge." The plowshare is the metal part of the plow that penetrates and breaks up the soil. A mattock is like a pickax but has blades instead of points. It is used for digging and breaking up soil that cannot be reached by a plow.

13:21 The pim was approximately two-thirds of a shekel. Based on what is known of ancient Israel's economy, the charge was exorbitant. The points of the goads refers to the sharp ends of prods used to direct cattle. The Israelites did not have the resources to forge iron implements for agriculture, much less for warfare.

13:22 The weapons available to the Israelite soldiers would have included slings, bows and arrows, and numerous instruments made of bronze.

13:23 The pass of Michmash is the deep gorge that separated Michmash and Geba.

14:1–47 This chapter tells the story of Israel's victory over the Philistines and Saul's rash vow, which nearly led to the death of his own son. The chapter also illustrates Saul's ongoing lack of wisdom and discretion in leadership.

14:1 he did not tell his father: Saul would have thought Jonathan's plan was reckless.

14:2 Gibeah, Saul's home, was about three miles southwest of Geba, where Jonathan was camped at the Philistine garrison he had captured (13:3, 16). Migron was located near Gibeah.

14:3–5 The genealogy of Ahijah, the high priest and descendant of Eli, is given in full. His name means "My Brother Is the Lord."

14:6–8 The term uncircumcised was an Israelite designation for the Gentiles, who did not share the distinctive mark of God's people under the Old Covenant (Gen. 17:10–14).

14:9–13 The assault of Jonathan and his armorbearer on Michmash was an act of faith, not a foolhardy adventure. The response of the Philistines, come up to us, was taken as a sign that God was leading and would grant them victory. The taunting words of the Philistines were turned into a challenge for the young men to display faith in God.

14:14 about half an acre: The Hebrew text reads "half a yoke of land." A yoke of land was the area a pair of oxen could plow in one day.

14:15, 16 The defeat of the garrison at Michmash left the Philistines in a state of panic. The earth quaked may refer to an actual earthquake, which added to the panic and confusion of the Philistines, or it may be a way of saying that the Philistines were shaking from fear.

14:17 call the roll: Saul had to have the troops mustered before he realized that his own son was not present.

14:18, 19 Bring the ark of God here: According to 7:2, the ark at this time was at Kirjath Jearim. There is no mention of its being moved before it was brought to Jerusalem by David. The ancient Greek translation of 1 Samuel reads "ephod," and this may be what is meant. The Urim and Thummim were kept in the breastplate of the ephod and were used to determine the will of God (Ex. 28:30; Num. 27:21; 1 Sam. 23:9–12). Furthermore, Ahijah was present and wearing the ephod (v. 3). Withdraw your hand: A disturbance in the Philistine camp distracted Saul from his consultation with the priest (that is, Ahijah), and he canceled the inquiry.

14:20 against his neighbor: There was such confusion in the Philistine camp that it was hard to tell friend from foe.

14:21 The Hebrews who were with the Philistines were deserters or mercenaries.

14:22, 23 The mountains of Ephraim refers to the mountainous region occupied by the tribe of Ephraim, just north of Benjamite territory.

A Foolish Order

Some situations, such as war, call for tough-minded leadership that makes great demands on people. In Saul's war with the Philistines, he ordered his troops to forego food until they had vanquished the enemy (1 Sam. 14:24). Apparently Saul intended the command to be a noble challenge to his men. After all, why should they relax and enjoy a good meal when their longtime enemies, the Philistines, remained unbeaten? Yet the order was truly foolish, for it deprived the men of needed energy to fight the battle.

14:24 Cursed is the man: Saul foolishly ordered that none of his soldiers should eat until he had taken vengeance on his enemies. Unlike Jonathan, he did not view the battle as the Lord's (v. 12).

14:25, 26 The bees had produced so much honey that it had flowed from their combs in the trees to the ground.

14:27 Due to his absence (vv. 1–17), Jonathan had not heard his father's oath. He did what any reasonable soldier would do and helped himself to some honey as he pursued the Philistines.

14:28–30 Jonathan recognized the foolishness of the unnecessary hardship imposed upon the soldiers by his father. Saul is marked by acting rashly, without thought of consequence—another unacceptable leadership failing.

14:31 Aijalon was located at the edge of the Philistine coastal plain, about eighteen miles west of Michmash.

14:32 ate them with the blood: The Israelite soldiers began to eat the captured Philistine livestock without first draining the blood, in violation of God's Law (Lev. 17:10–14).

14:33, 34 roll a large stone: Saul realized the serious nature of the offense and had a stone table set up to slaughter the animals and drain the blood properly.

14:35 Saul built an altar to thank God for his victory over the Philistines.

14:36–38 Let us draw near to God: Saul was anxious to finish off the Philistines but decided to ask for God's counsel about it. God's silence was taken by Saul as an evidence of sin in the camp.

14:39–45 he shall surely die: This was Saul's second foolish oath (v. 24).

14:46 their own place: As a result of Israel's victory, the Philistines left the hill country and returned to their settlements on the coastal plain.

14:47 Moab and Ammon, descendants of Lot (Gen. 19:30–38), occupied regions east of the Jordan and the Dead Sea. Edom, descendants of Esau (Gen. 36:8), occupied a region southeast of the Dead Sea. Zobah was the Aramean kingdom in the Bekah Valley. The Philistines occupied the coastal plain west of the hill country.

14:48 The victory over the Amalekites, nomadic desert tribesmen who lived south of the hill country, is recorded in 15:1–9.

14:49 In 1 Sam. 31:2 and 1 Chr. 8:33, the names of Saul's four sons are given as Jonathan, Abinadab, Malchishua, and Esh-Baal (Ishbosheth in 2 Sam. 2:8). Jishui is probably a second name for Abinadab.

14:50, 51 Ahinoam means "My Brother Is Pleasant."

14:52 took him for himself: Saul drafted the strong and brave young men into his army.

15:1–35 Israel's war with the Amalekites (14:48) is recounted in detail because it led to the breach between Saul and Samuel and Saul's subsequent rejection as king. Chapter 15 is significant in preparing the way of David's accession to the throne by demonstrating Saul's disqualification for kingship.

15:1 The LORD sent me: Samuel referred to his part in Saul's appointment to add weight and authority to the command that he was about to give.

15:2 The Amalekites were a nomadic people who lived in the region of the Negev, the dry land south of Judah (Num. 13:29).

15:3 The expression utterly destroy is literally "to put under a ban," similar to the ban placed on Jericho at the time of the conquest (Josh. 6:17, 18). The fact that no spoil was to be taken reflects God's judgment on the sins of the Amalekites (Deut. 7:2–6; 12:2, 3; 20:16–18). While such judgment is severe, it came at the command of a holy and just God. A holy God cannot let sin go unpunished.

15:4 men of Judah: Early in the period of the united monarchy, the distinctions between the northern tribes of Israel and the southern tribe of Judah began to be noted (11:8).

15:5 The Amalekites were a nomadic people. The term city must refer to their main settlement.

15:6 The Kenites, who had been loosely associated with the Israelites since Moses' marriage to the daughter of Jethro, a Kenite (Judg. 1:16; 4:11), were a nomadic offshoot of the Midianites (Num. 10:29).

15:7 Havilah refers to a district of northeast Arabia. Shur was the western part of the Sinai peninsula bordering Egypt. The campaign against the Amalekites covered extensive territory.

15:8 took Agag king of the Amalekites alive: This was a direct violation of the Lord's command (v. 3). Saul devoted the rest of the people to the ban but saved the life of the king.

“utterly destroyed”

(Heb. c*haram*) (1 Sam. 15:9; Ex. 22:20; Deut. 13:15; Josh. 6:18) Strong’s #2763: In the ancient world, anything sacred or defiled was considered inappropriate for common use. This Hebrew verb refers to the “setting apart” of inappropriate things, usually because of defilement associated with idol worship. According to Deut. 13:12–15, Israel was to destroy everyone and everything that was wicked enough to be considered defiled. Violation of this command cost Achan his life (Josh. 7) and Saul his throne (15:9–11). Paul reminds us that we are all wicked, and as a result are defiled and deserve destruction. Yet God in His mercy has chosen to save those who place their trust in Jesus (Rom. 3:10–26).

15:9–11 By sparing Agag and the best of the spoil, Saul was following his own desires instead of serving as an agent of God’s judgment. Perhaps he wanted to gain prestige by bringing home the spoil of the Amalekites.

15:12 Carmel, a town located seven miles south of Hebron, would have been on Saul’s route home. The monument that Saul set up was probably intended to commemorate the victory over the Amalekites. Saul then returned to Gilgal, where the Israelites had convened before their war with the Philistines (13:8–15).

15:13 Blessed are you was a form of ancient greeting (Gen. 24:31). Note that Saul’s words I have performed the commandment of the LORD are the exact opposite of God’s evaluation (v. 11).

15:14 this bleating: The words are almost humorous, were the situation not serious.

15:15–19 When confronted by Samuel, Saul excused his disobedience by blaming the people. He also sought to justify sparing the best of the sheep and the oxen by suggesting that he intended them for sacrifice.

15:20, 21 I have obeyed the voice of the LORD: Given another chance by Samuel to get things right with God, Saul persisted in affirming his innocence.

15:22 to obey is better than sacrifice: Samuel emphasized that sincerity and obedience were the prerequisites for worship that pleased God. There are those who have used this and similar verses to argue that God never intended that sacrificial worship be used to honor Him. Yet such verses do not undermine sacrificial worship; they place it in the true context of the importance of the heart of the person who comes to worship the living God.

15:23 Saul's independent, rebellious actions were as much a denial of God's authority as the recognition of Satan's supernatural power through witchcraft. Witchcraft (Heb. qesem) was condemned by the Law (Lev. 19:26, 31; Deut. 18:9–14) and was punishable by death (Ex. 22:18). Saul's stubborn disobedience was essentially an act of idolatry because it elevated his will above God's will. He also has rejected you: Saul failed to realize that he was not a sovereign and independent ruler like other monarchs. Instead, he was an agent and representative of the divine King. Saul's rejection of God's word resulted in the rejection of Saul as God's royal representative.

15:24, 25 I have sinned: In response to Samuel's rebuke, Saul confessed his sin and explained that because he feared the people, he obeyed their voice. Saul led the people by catering to their wishes.

15:26, 27 How sad the words of Samuel must have been. Saul had disobeyed God one time too many; for him, there was no return.

15:28 The accidental tearing of Samuel's robe (v. 27) served as a sign that God had torn the kingdom from Saul. For a similar incident, see 1 Kin. 11:30. The neighbor who would receive the kingdom was David (16:11–13).

15:29 the Strength of Israel: This designation of God occurs only here in the Bible. The phrase can also mean "the Glory of Israel." will not lie nor relent: God's decision to reject Saul was irrevocable.

15:30, 31 Saul's requests for forgiveness and desire to worship God suggest that, despite his flaws, he was a sincere believer in God. Samuel may have discerned that Saul's confession in v. 30 was more sincere than the one recorded earlier (v. 24).

15:32, 33 Bring Agag: Samuel determined to do what Saul had not done. He executed Agag in order to obey God's clear command (v. 3). The verb translated hacked … in pieces may simply mean "executed." before the LORD: The execution was an expression of divine judgment.

15:34, 35 See evidently means "to give attention" or "to regard with interest." The point is that God was through with Saul as king, and so was Samuel.

16:1—31:13 The next section records David's rise to the throne. David was known as a man after God's heart (13:14). His faith was so exemplary that centuries later God was pleased to be called "the God of David" (2 Kin. 20:5; Is. 38:5). David contributed to the worship of the Lord by planning the building of the temple (2 Chr. 28:11—29:2) and by writing many psalms (2 Sam. 23:1).

16:1 Fill your horn: The ram's horn served as a vessel for the anointing olive oil (10:1). Jesse the Bethlehemite was the son (or descendant) of Obed, the son of Ruth and Boaz (Ruth 4:21, 22). He is identified in relationship to his home town, Bethlehem, located about six miles south of Jerusalem, on the caravan route from Jerusalem via Hebron to Egypt. Bethlehem means "House of Bread," perhaps indicating that it was the grain center for its region. It is also possible that the name is an Israelite modification of an earlier, Canaanite name for the town, once dedicated to Lahmu, an old Canaanite deity of war. If so, the contrast is wonderful: the coming Prince of Peace (Is. 9:6; Mic. 5:2) would be born in a town that originally was devoted to a temple for the god of war! I have provided Myself a king: God made it clear to Samuel that this king would be of His choosing.

16:2, 3 Samuel's concern for his life was not unwarranted in light of Saul's suspicious nature and spiritual degeneracy (18:11). A heifer is a young cow. say, 'I have come to sacrifice': God did not instruct Samuel to lie, but instead He provided a legitimate opportunity for Samuel to visit with Jesse and his family. By performing the anointing in Bethlehem while officiating at a sacrifice, Samuel would avoid arousing the suspicions of Saul.

16:4 Because Samuel's visit was unexpected, the elders of the town wondered if he had come to execute judgment (7:15, 16).

16:5 The Hebrew word for peaceably (shalom, "peace") means "things as they ought to be." The word sanctify means "to set oneself apart" by means of ceremonial washings and purifications (Ex. 19:10, 14, 22). he consecrated Jesse and his sons: Apparently, Samuel personally supervised the purification of the father and his sons.

16:6, 7 Eliab means "My God Is Father." said: Samuel was probably saying these things to himself. The appearance and stature of Jesse's oldest son, Eliab, commended him to leadership. But these were the very things that had commended Saul (9:2). Instead of looking at appearances, God searched the heart. Thus, God gave Samuel a new perspective. The state of a man's heart was far more significant than natural ability and physical appearance.

16:8, 9 Abinadab means "My Father Is Noble." Shammah may come from the word that means "He Hears." The parade of sons began with the oldest, in a typical patriarchal manner. The assumption was that the firstborn would receive a higher rank than his brothers. Yet often God's way surprisingly reversed this expectation.

16:10 It is not clear in this verse if the number seven means in addition to the three already named or inclusive of them; 17:12 suggests the latter.

16:11 Are all the young men here: After looking at Jesse's seven sons, Samuel wondered if someone had been left out. In fact, the youngest was out in the field, caring for his father's flock. keeping the sheep: In ancient times, both divine and human rulers were frequently compared to shepherds (Ezek. 34). The famous Babylonian king Hammurabi described himself as a shepherd for his people. The fact that David was tending the sheep at this particular moment is something of a divine foreshadowing of his appointment as the king of Israel. will not sit down: The idea is that Samuel would not budge until the last son was brought before him.

16:12 Ruddy means "reddish," referring to complexion and perhaps hair color. bright eyes: The Hebrew words may also be rendered beauty of eyes. good-looking: God made it clear to Samuel that He did not choose David on the basis of his good looks (v. 7). This was a bonus to David's inner worth. the LORD said: It is not clear whether anyone but Samuel heard these words of God. anoint him: David was anointed with olive oil. This religious ritual consecrated him to the kingship.

16:13 In Hebrew, came upon means "rushed upon." David was empowered by God's Holy Spirit for the work of ruling God's people, just as Saul had been (10:10). David means "Beloved."

16:14, 15 departed from Saul: After the Spirit of God came upon David, Saul was no longer empowered by the Spirit to serve as king. It appears that the ministry of the Holy Spirit was selective and temporary in the lives of OT believers. distressing spirit from the LORD: This affliction has been understood in various ways: (1) demon possession as divine punishment; (2) demonic attack or influence; (3) an evil messenger, like the one sent to entice Ahab (1 Kin. 22:20–23); or (4) a spirit of discontent created by God in Saul's heart (Judg. 9:23). Whatever it was, it was immediately noticed by Saul's servants (18:10).

16:16, 17 Whatever Saul's problem was, it was temporarily relieved by music (v. 23). It was generally believed in ancient times that music had a beneficial influence on those with sullen or morbid natures.

16:18 a mighty man of valor, a man of war: David the shepherd boy had not yet demonstrated his military abilities. The glowing description given by the courtier may have been exaggerated but was included here by the author because it anticipated what David would become in light of his reputation (17:34, 35).

16:19, 20 Send me your son David: Given the events in the first part of this chapter, this is an amazing turn of events, and the mark of a great story-teller.

16:21 David's appointment as Saul's armorbearer may have taken place after his victory over Goliath (17:55–58). Perhaps it is mentioned here because it fits well with the theme of David's early service in Saul's court. Alternatively, it is possible that David was first in favor with Saul, then fell from favor only to be restored again.

16:22 Stand before me is an expression for entering the king's service (1 Kin. 10:8).

16:23 Empowered by the Spirit of God, David was able to drive away the distressing spirit (v. 14) with his soothing music (18:10). The verse suggests a lengthy period of time.

The Valley of Elah, site of the battle between David and Goliath (1 Sam. 17).

17:1–58 This section provides a major demonstration of David's right to rule God's people. In ancient Near Eastern thought, several elements worked together to form the ideal of kingship. Among them was the idea of the Warrior-Hero. This chapter shows Saul cowering in his tent with his armor and weapons in a useless heap, and it contrasts David marching out to war merely with a sling, but empowered by the living God. There are two battles here. One is the outer battle on the field; the other is the inner battle in the king's tent!

17:1 The Philistine and Israelite armies were gathered in the Elah Valley, about fifteen miles west of David's hometown of Bethlehem. The Philistines were camped between Azekah and Sochoh, on a hill (v. 3) south of the valley. Azekah, strategically located on a hill, was one of a string of fortresses built along the western boundary of Judah to guard the major roads penetrating the region. Sochoh was one of the cities that would later be fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chr. 11:7). The description, which belongs to Judah, reminds us that the Philistines were encroaching on Judean lands.

17:2, 3 The Valley of Elah is an east-west valley leading from the hill country of Judah toward the lowlands of the Philistines. The valley would have been suitable for the Philistine chariots had it not been for a steep ravine that extended up the middle of the valley. The war chariot of the Philistines had iron fittings and was the most advanced weapon of the day. Probably the ravine prevented a full-scale assault by the Philistines, causing the long delay before engaging in battle (v. 16).

17:4 champion: The Hebrew expression is literally "a man who is a go-between," meaning a warrior who will fight in single combat as a stand-in for the entire army. His opponent needed to be as strong as he was. The most likely person to serve in this role was Saul. When he was chosen as king, it was noted that Saul stood head and shoulders over his countrymen (9:2). However, Saul made no move to oppose the braggart buffoon from Philistia. The cubit was about eighteen inches and a span was nine inches. Thus Goliath (the name may mean "Conspicuous One") stood nine feet, nine inches tall.

17:5, 6 bronze helmet: Ordinary troops had leather helmets. Goliath's coat of mail was made of overlapping plates of bronze sewn on leather. This armor weighed five thousand shekels or about 125 pounds. Bronze armor refers to the greaves that protected Goliath's legs. bronze javelin:

This oversized weapon was designed for hurling. Between his shoulders means strapped to his back.

17:7, 8 The spear was a weapon designed for hand-to-hand combat, like a long sword. six hundred shekels: The head of Goliath's spear weighed about seventeen pounds. shield-bearer: There are two different Hebrew words for "shield." One (magen) refers to a small round shield usually worn on the left arm. The other (sinna), used here, refers to a much larger, oblong shield, often carried by the shield-bearer as the soldier moved into battle. Goliath was a veritable war machine.

17:9, 10 Defy is an unusually harsh word meaning "to put under reproach" (vv. 25, 26). As the account later makes clear, the defiant taunts of Goliath were as much against the God of Israel as against the fighters (vv. 26, 36).

17:11 they were dismayed and greatly afraid: The army was sick with dread. Perhaps the Israelites had forgotten the victories God had given Israel in times past. Forgetfulness of God's past deliverance diminishes one's confidence in the face of present conflict.

17:12–15 that Ephrathite: Ephrathah was a family name in the tribe of Judah, the area where Bethlehem was located (Mic. 5:2).

17:16 The forty-day delay in the battle may have been due to the inability of the Philistine chariots to cross the deep ravine of the Elah Valley, which separated the armies. The number "forty" appears to play a significant role in biblical narratives. If a month is reckoned at thirty days, a period of forty days would be regarded as an extended, lengthy period of time. It certainly was a long period for Israel to hear the taunt words of this insufferable braggart!

17:17–19 In ancient times, soldiers usually lived off the land they conquered or depended on personal supplies that they or someone else brought from home. Jesse sent David with provisions—grain, loaves, and cheeses—for his sons and their officers. An ephah was a measure of grain, about five gallons.

17:20–23 rose early in the morning: These are the same words that were used of Abraham when he set out on his fateful journey to Moriah (Gen. 22:3). going out to the fight: The soldiers were going out to the battle line, but only to shout their taunts. the supply keeper: This wording suggests that what David did for his brothers was an ordinary service performed by families for their sons on the battlefield.

17:24 fled … afraid: The fear of the Israelite army was shameful. Perched on the fortified hillside, none of them was in immediate danger.

17:25 Saul promised riches, exemption from taxes and the duty of public service, and his daughter’s hand in marriage to the one who would defeat Goliath.

INSIGHT

A Battle of the Gods

Bible readers often focus on the human drama of the encounter between David and Goliath: A young shepherd boy confronts a seasoned man of war and kills him with a stone. But the contest was also between the gods of the Philistines and the Lord of Israel (1 Sam. 17:26, 36, 37, 43, 47). It was not uncommon in the ancient world for military "champions" to represent their armies in one-on-one combat. Victory was awarded to the side of whichever man prevailed. Goliath stood for the Philistines as well as for the gods of the Philistines. David represented both the people of Israel and the Lord.

17:26 Uncircumcised is used as an expression of contempt for a pagan person.

17:27, 28 David's oldest brother, Eliab, was rather abrupt with David. pride … insolence: This language is similar to that used to describe the rage of Joseph's brothers against him (Gen. 37).

17:29 Is there not a cause: David protested his innocence of the charges of pride (v. 28). There was reason to be agitated—not at David, but at the Philistine.

17:30–32 your servant will go: David weighed the difficulties from a divine perspective. Here was an opportunity for God to display His power.

17:33 Saul showed no evidence that he recognized David as the boy who had played the harp before him (16:23). There were probably many minor servants who waited on the king, and Saul may simply have not recognized David out of the context of the royal court.

17:34–37 David's past victories over a lion and a bear gave him the faith to trust God for victory over Goliath. For David, the issue was more a theological crisis—the Israelites' lack of faith—than a military one.

17:38, 39 Instead of putting on his own armor, trusting God, and going to the field of battle, Saul attempted to put the oversized armor on a young boy. Saul's armor was designed for a large man. David could not even walk in it, much less fight in it.

17:40, 41 his staff: Unprepared to face Goliath as an armed soldier, David prepared to face him as a shepherd. five smooth stones: David's experience had taught him how important shape, size, and uniformity were to achieve accuracy with a sling. A sling was the typical equipment of a shepherd. It was a hollow pocket of leather attached to two cords. Putting a stone in the pouch, the slinger would whirl it around his head to build up momentum. Releasing one of the cords would hurl the stone at its target. Slingers were a regular part of armies in the ancient Middle East (Judg. 20:16).

17:42 David lacked the signs of age and the scars that one would expect of a battle-seasoned champion. Unlike most soldiers of Israel, he had not yet grown a beard.

17:43, 44 The appearance of a boy as his challenger offended the pride of Goliath. Further, Goliath saw the shepherd's staff (v. 40) and was angry because David appeared as if he were out to beat a dog instead of a giant. cursed David: Goliath treated David as contemptible. The word translated cursed is the same word used in Gen. 12:3. Since Goliath had cursed one of God's people, God was bound by His covenant to curse Goliath.

17:45 Hosts refers to the armies of heaven and of Israel, over whom God is Commander in Chief. The name of the LORD speaks of God's covenantal relationship with the Israelites. David was depending on the power of God as the Warrior and Defender of His people (Ex. 15:3).

17:46, 47 David intended his victory to demonstrate to all the earth that: (1) the God of Israel exists, and (2) that He delivers His own against overwhelming odds. David's words the battle is the LORD's put the contest into proper perspective.

17:48, 49 hurried and ran: Part of David's strategy was to rush the giant. Guided by the Lord, David skillfully hit the right spot on his forehead with a powerful blow.

17:50, 51 cut off his head: This was an indignity to a fallen foe and the decisive sign that he was dead. It filled the Philistines with terror.

17:52, 53 The Israelites pursued the Philistines north toward Ekron and east toward Gath. Shaaraim, meaning "Two Gates," is mentioned in Josh. 15:36 next to Sochoh and Azekah.

17:54 At this time, a part of Jerusalem was occupied by Israelites, but the citadel of Jebus was still in the hands of the Jebusites (Josh. 15:63). Later, it was captured by David when he became king over all Israel (2 Sam. 5:6–9). David took Goliath's head to the part of the city that was under Israelite control. David kept Goliath's armor, but the giant's sword was later deposited in the sanctuary at Nob (21:9).

17:55 Abner, one of Saul's generals, was also Saul's cousin (14:50). He was another seasoned soldier who was silent and inactive in the face of Goliath's taunting words. whose son is this youth: How does this question fit with the fact that David had been serving as a musician in Saul's court (16:18–23)? Saul's unstable mental condition (16:14, 15) may have affected his memory. Saul may have recognized David as his court musician but forgotten the name of David's father. He would need to know it in order to reward David's family (v. 25). It is also possible that in his question, Saul's principal interest was not David's identity, but the possibility that David was a contender for the throne of Israel.

17:56–58 your servant Jesse: In identifying his father, David likely intended to emphasize that Jesse was no threat to the king, that he was a loyal servant of Saul.

18:1 soul of Jonathan was knit: It has become customary today to speak of “male bonding.” Perhaps the most interesting male friendship in the Bible is the story of Jonathan and David. As the story progresses, Jonathan’s friendship to David would even make him (Jonathan) an enemy of his father.

18:2 Like his son Jonathan, Saul was captivated by David. He conscripted him anew to his court (16:19–23; 17:15).

18:3 This covenant was a mutual agreement in which David and Jonathan were bound to care for the needs and attend to the interests of each other. It was a treaty as between equals, yet these two men were not exactly equals. Such a relationship had to be initiated by Jonathan because he was a member of the royal household. as his own soul: These words, repeated for emphasis (v. 1), describe the unselfish nature of Jonathan’s love for David.

Jonathan Transfers His Claim to the Throne

When Saul had offered David his armor and sword (1 Sam. 17:38, 39), David returned them. In 1 Sam. 18:4, Jonathan handed over to David his robe, military gear, and sword. With David's acceptance of the sword, he became who Jonathan was, the heir apparent to the throne of Israel. By his actions, Jonathan acknowledged God's decision that David should rule, and he stepped aside. Saul also knew what had happened with this transfer of the royal insignia (1 Sam. 20:30, 31).

18:4 sword … bow … belt: These were treasured items that would not have been casually surrendered. With these gifts Jonathan ratified his covenant with David. In retrospect, Jonathan's action was symbolic of a transfer of royal power from Saul's family to David.

18:5 behaved wisely: This description is a part of an ongoing subtle contrast between David and Saul. The phrase reveals that David was acting with skill and achieving success. It should be contrasted with the description of unwise actions of Saul (13:13). set him over the men of war: David did not replace Abner (17:55); he was simply acknowledged as a national military hero.

“dancing”

(Heb. mecholah) (1 Sam. 18:6; 21:11; 29:5) Strong’s #4246: The verbal root of this Hebrew word means “to whirl” or “to move in a circle.” This is probably indicative of the type of dancing described here. When this word is used, there is regularly an association with joy, sometimes contrasted with mourning (Ps. 30:11; Jer. 31:4, 13; Lam. 5:15). Singing and playing instruments (especially the tambourine) are often mentioned in connection with dancing (Ex. 15:20; Judg. 11:34; Ps. 150:4). Although women usually do the dancing, men are also said to dance (Jer. 31:13). The ancient Israelites danced to celebrate the victories that God had given them (18:6; Ex. 15:20; Judg. 11:34). This was an exuberant expression of praise for their Creator and Deliverer (Pss. 149:3; 150:4; Jer. 31:4).

18:6 when David was returning: An event in the immediate aftermath of the famous battle of ch. 17 is mentioned here. Women came together from across the land to celebrate the national victory and their new national champion. to meet King Saul: The suggestion is that this was the usual pattern.

18:7 The popular song which celebrated David’s military achievements became widely known, even among the Philistines (21:11). thousands … ten thousands: The poetic use of exaggeration is evident here. David had not yet slain even a dozen people, much less thousands. The women did not intend to offend the king; they were simply praising God for His ever-increasing benefits to the nation.

18:8 the saying displeased him: Saul saw David’s abilities and achievements as undercutting his own prominence among the people. the kingdom: To Saul, there appeared to be no honor left for David except for him to take the throne. Ironically, this is exactly what God had determined.

18:9 eyed: Saul looked at David suspiciously, seeking any sign of betrayal or reason of mistrust.

18:10–13 The expression he prophesied can be used of legitimate prophecy or the erratic prophetic ecstasy associated with the ravings of false prophets and pagan priests (1 Kin. 18:29; 22:12). Whatever the case here, God was judging Saul for his previous disobedience by allowing his mind to become troubled.

18:14, 15 behaved wisely: See 13:13. the LORD was with him: David's relationship with God was the key to his success.

18:16 he went out and came in before them: David's military activities elevated him to prominence before the people.

18:17–20 While Saul had previously promised to give his daughter to the man who killed Goliath (17:25), here he linked the marriage to future conquests, hoping that David would be killed by the Philistines.

18:21–23 that she may be a snare to him: Saul hoped that offering Michal in marriage would lead to David's death. I am a poor … man: David did not have the resources to bring a wedding dowry fit for a king (v. 25).

18:24, 25 In many cultures of the ancient Middle East, a dowry was paid by the bridegroom to the father of the bride as economic compensation for the loss of a daughter who helped around the home. one hundred foreskins: The foreskins would be proof that David had killed that many Philistines.

18:26, 27 the days had not expired: Apparently there was a time limit during which David had to fulfill the conditions of the dowry. two hundred men: David provided twice the number that Saul required.

18:28, 29 David's success in such dangerous exploits led Saul to believe that the LORD was with David. Significantly, the text adds that Saul' daughter loved David. With the marriage now in force, Saul had unwittingly placed a part of his family "in the enemy's hand." This brought a new element to Saul; he was now afraid of David.

18:30 The war with the Philistines continued, as did David's brave exploits. behaved more wisely: This significant phrase meaning "to act with skill" is again contrasted with the phrase meaning "to play the fool," used of Saul in 13:13. David's successful military engagements gained him increasing honor and recognition.

19:1 When Saul's scheming efforts failed, he brought Jonathan and all his servants into the plot. Apparently, Saul did not know about the friendship of David and Jonathan. The Hebrew verb translated delighted (Heb. haphes) describes laughter, enjoyment, and pleasure.

19:2, 3 Loyal to his covenant of friendship, Jonathan pledged to intervene on David's behalf before his father (18:3).

19:4, 5 his servant: Jonathan's strongest argument was that David's actions demonstrated loyalty to Saul. innocent blood: Jonathan reminded his father of God's Law. By having David killed, Saul would incur the guilt of bloodshed (Deut. 19:10).

19:6, 7 Saul swore: Following the normal form for making such an oath, Saul says literally, "If he would die!" He means, "I will not allow him to die."

19:8–10 David's actions are contrasted with Saul's. Each time there was war with the Philistines, David had more opportunities for great exploits. Saul himself no longer went to war. He stayed at home sulking about David's victories.

19:11 tomorrow you will be killed: Because of her great love for her husband, Michal told David about Saul's plot. The story of David's escape is alluded to in the title of Ps. 59.

19:12 Window here may refer to an opening in the wall to allow in light and air or to the lattice work on a structure on the roof.

19:13 The Hebrew word for image is used elsewhere in Scripture to indicate household idols (Gen. 31:19, 30–35; Judg. 18:17–26; 2 Kin. 23:24; Ezek. 21:21; Zech. 10:2). Some have suggested that here the word means a life-sized object of a man. However, there is no evidence that ancient Israelites kept such objects in their homes. The cover of goat's hair and clothes was used to make it appear that David was still in bed.

19:14 He is sick: Michal loved her husband so much that she was willing to go against her father's wishes, to lie for David and even to die for him. The fact that she lied is a part of the drama of the story and does not necessarily endorse the practice of lying.

19:15–17 Saul's decaying mental and spiritual state is reflected in his words to his messengers. He feared and hated David so much that he was willing to murder a man lying sick in his bed.

19:18, 19 Facing a serious personal crisis, David went to Samuel at Ramah for help. Together David and Samuel went to Naioth ("Dwellings"), a community within the city of Ramah.

19:20, 21 The working of God's Spirit distracted Saul's messengers from their purpose and protected His servant David.

IN CONTEXT

Wells

In the ancient Middle East, wells like the one at Sechu (1 Sam. 19:22) were critically important to the life of cities and towns. Even in favorable locations, water tended to vanish at times during the summer months. Without a well to tap the water table or an underground stream, civilization was impossible to maintain.

Many different types of wells are mentioned in the Bible, though English translations tend not to distinguish between dug wells (John 4:11, 12), natural springs (Ps. 84:6), also called living springs (Neh. 2:13), and hewn cisterns (Gen. 16:14; 2 Sam. 17:18). Wells in Canaan were usually dug through solid limestone rock, sometimes to a great depth to keep them from running dry in the summer. Jacob's well, which still exists, is seventy-five feet deep and at one time may have been twice that.

Some wells had a curb or low wall of stone around the top to keep people and animals from falling in. The lip also formed a brace for users to use in letting down their buckets to draw water. Jesus probably sat on a curb of this sort when he talked to the woman at the well in Samaria (John 4:6). If a well was especially large, it was sometimes furnished with descending steps that allowed a person to dip directly from the pool of water (Gen. 24:16).

Because of their strategic importance, the ownership and use of wells tended to become a matter of dispute (21:25; Ex. 2:17–19). However, wells also served to bring people together and to remind them of important events in their heritage (Gen. 24:11, 20; John 4:6–14).

19:22, 23 Sechu is not mentioned elsewhere in the Bible. It was probably north of Jerusalem in the region of Gibeah and Ramah.

19:24 lay down naked: Ancient Israelite culture looked with disdain on nudity in public. It is probable that Saul removed his royal robe but retained his inner tunic. Here Saul's plan to kill David was totally thwarted by God's protective hand.

20:1, 2 You shall not die: Jonathan was certain that Saul would not kill David. It is possible that Jonathan was unaware of the events of 19:8–24 and was trusting in Saul's solemn oath not to kill David (19:6).

20:3 David impressed the seriousness of the situation on Jonathan with an oath. Do not let Jonathan know this: David suggested that Saul had kept his plans from Jonathan to avoid causing his son grief.

20:4 Jonathan's words reflected his covenant of friendship with David (18:3). He had vowed to help David.

20:5, 6 The first day of the month, the New Moon, was observed as a religious festival (Num. 10:10; 28:11–15). It was customarily celebrated with a sacrificial meal and rest from work (2 Kin. 4:23; Is. 1:13; Amos 8:5). yearly sacrifice: Apparently Jesse's family gathered for a special time of worship during the New Moon celebration (v. 5).

20:7–11 The words deal kindly may also be rendered "show covenant loyalty" (Heb. hesed). In other words, David was asking Jonathan to be faithful to his word. He had initiated a covenant of friendship (18:3). if there is iniquity: Since David had done no wrong, he was certainly not worthy of death.

20:12, 13 If the news was good toward David, Jonathan would send a messenger to inform his friend. If the news was evil, then Jonathan would inform David personally. All of this was couched in a solemn oath.

20:14, 15 the kindness of the LORD: Jonathan used the same Hebrew word meaning "covenant loyalty" that David had used earlier (v. 8). Both Jonathan and David were appealing to their covenant of friendship as a basis for acts of kindness. Whatever the outcome of the rift between Saul and David, Jonathan appealed to David to protect his own life and the lives of his descendants. Jonathan knew that David might someday take the throne, and he was well aware of the ancient custom of a new king killing the offspring of his predecessor (1 Kin. 15:29; 16:11; 2 Kin. 10:7).

20:16–18 Jonathan and David reaffirmed their covenant of friendship. Jonathan made a covenant: This refers to the agreement Jonathan sought from David in vv. 14, 15. Let the LORD require it: Jonathan prayed that the Lord would hold David accountable to the obligations of the covenant. Out of love for David, Jonathan again requested that David reaffirm his vow (18:1; 19:1). David and Jonathan were holding each other accountable.

20:19 The stone Ezel was likely a familiar landmark.

20:20–24 Jonathan declared that the LORD would be a witness to the covenant of protection which he had arranged with David (vv. 14–16).

20:25–29 he is unclean: Noticing that David's seat was empty, Saul assumed that ritual uncleanness must have prevented his participation in the feast (Lev. 7:20, 21; 15:16). Since ritual uncleanness was only temporary, Saul's suspicions were aroused when David was absent on the second night of the feast. The reference to Abner suggests that David might have been threatening Abner's position as the general of the army.

20:30, 31 your mother's nakedness: Saul suggested that Jonathan and his mother with him were shameful because of Jonathan's apparently despicable behavior. Aware of David's increasing popularity, Saul knew that David would likely displace Jonathan from the throne. Here, Saul demonstrated his selfish concern for his family's welfare over God's sovereign will. Compare Eli's appropriate response to God's judgment (3:18).

20:32–34 his father had treated him shamefully: Jonathan, the loyal friend of David, was so upset he would not eat because of how David had been insulted by his father.

20:35–40 On the third day, Jonathan went to the field to signal to David that he should flee the court of Saul. However, Jonathan's love for David would not allow him to stop at a mere signal. He got rid of his servant on a ruse and at great personal risk went to meet David one last time.

20:41, 42 Before parting, David and Jonathan wept together. Both were valiant warriors but also men of tender hearts. They were loyal friends and committed to each other even in difficult circumstances. At their parting, the two friends reiterated their covenant of friendship (18:3; 20:14–16).

21:1—31:13 This third major section of 1 Samuel records the adventures of David as a fugitive. During most of this period he was fleeing from Saul and his army, and during these years suffered greatly. Through these difficult years David learned lessons on prayer, praise, and trusting the Lord. The "fugitive years" of David correspond to the "wilderness of Midian years" in the life of Moses. In both cases, the Lord used the perversity of man and the constrictions of condition and environment to shape, mold, and model His servants for greater work for His glory.

21:1 Nob was a priestly community; the tabernacle was relocated there after the destruction of Shiloh. Ahimelech, the great-grandson of Eli (1:9), was serving as high priest. His name means "My Brother Is King." was afraid: His fear may have been due to rumors of a breach between Saul and David. Since David was a respected soldier and a member of the royal court, it would be unusual for him to travel alone.

21:2 The king has ordered me: David deceived Ahimelech into believing that he was on a secret mission for the king. His lie unwittingly precipitated a tragedy for the priests of Nob (22:6–19). I have directed my young men: David apparently had arranged a rendezvous with a small band of men (21:4, 5; 22:2; Matt. 12:3, 4).

21:3–5 no common bread: In response to David's request for provisions, Ahimelech explained that the only bread available was holy bread, sometimes called the "showbread," which had been displayed before the Lord in the tabernacle (Ex. 25:23–30; Lev. 24:5–9). According to God's Law, this bread could be eaten only by priests. David explained to Ahimelech that his men had avoided ritual impurity, having had no contact with women for three days (Ex. 19:15; Lev. 15:16–18). in effect common: David argued that the bread was no longer sacred because new bread had replaced it before the Lord.

21:6 the priest gave him holy bread: The Talmud explains this apparent breach of the Law on the basis that the preservation of life takes precedent over nearly all other commandments in the Law (Lev. 24:9). Jesus referred to this incident in Matt. 12:2–4; Mark 2:25, 26, in His discussion with the Pharisees concerning the Sabbath. The spirit of the Law was kept by Ahimelech's compassionate act.

21:7, 8 Doeg, an Edomite, witnessed the encounter between David and Ahimelech and passed the word along to the king. Doeg was not at the tabernacle as a spy but as a man detained before the LORD—that is, under a spiritual vow.

21:9 Having fled Gibeah without weapons, David laid claim to the sword of Goliath, whom David had killed in the Valley of Elah (17:40–51). The sword was wrapped in a cloth to prevent the blade from rusting and had been placed behind the ephod, the high priest's ceremonial robes.

21:10 Achish ruled the city of Gath, one of the five major cities of the Philistines (6:17). Various sites have been proposed for the location of Gath. The most widely accepted is about twelve miles southeast of Ashdod.

21:11 David the king: This remark is an exaggeration of a rumored takeover of the throne by David. His military exploits certainly commended him to kingship. The popular song sung in his honor after his victory over Goliath had reached the ears of the Philistines (18:7; 29:5).

21:12, 13 These verses provide the background for Ps. 34 and perhaps Ps. 56. In Ps. 34, Achish is referred to as Abimelech, which was apparently a dynastic title used by the Philistine rulers (Gen. 20:2; 26:1). very much afraid: David's life was in jeopardy. If the superscription of Ps. 56 relates to this incident, David was seized by the Philistines. He had come for a place of refuge from Saul but found himself in the hands of the Philistines. Madness was associated in ancient times with being controlled by a powerful spirit. David changed his demeanor and behaved as though he were insane, writing graffiti on the doors of the gates and drooling.

21:14, 15 Achish had no interest in adding an insane soldier to his army. The title of Ps. 34 indicates the conclusion of this incident. The king "drove him away, and he departed."

22:1 After David's escape from Gath, he gathered his family and followers at a cave near the city of Adullam, about ten miles southeast of Gath and sixteen miles southwest of Jerusalem. The cave of Adullam was where David composed Ps. 142 and possibly Ps. 57.

22:2 David soon attracted a considerable following of those who were oppressed and discontented with Saul's rule. Everyone who was in debt apparently refers to those who were in danger of being sold into slavery by their creditors (2 Kin. 4:1). Captain is a general term for a political, military, or religious leader. The four hundred men soon grew to 600 (23:13). They were a group of drifters and debtors, troublemakers and those who were troubled. David expressed his disappointment when he realized that none of the men were there to support him (Ps. 142:4).

22:3, 4 The name Mizpah means "Watchtower"; this was probably a fortress in Moab. The region of Moab was located east of the Dead Sea. David's family connection with the Moabites is related in the story of Ruth (Ruth 1:4–18; 4:21, 22).

22:5, 6 Following the advice of the prophet Gad (2 Sam. 24:11), David left the stronghold and hid in the forest of Hereth, the location of which is unknown. The tamarisk tree is well-suited for hot, dry places, growing well on sandy, desert soils (Gen. 21:33).

22:7, 8 the son of Jesse: Saul perhaps was unwilling to refer to David by name (20:30, 31). Saul suggested that the Benjamites could not expect blessings under the rule of David, who was from the tribe of Judah.

22:9–13 Doeg sought to ingratiate himself with Saul by betraying Ahimelech, the high priest who gave David provisions and a weapon (21:1–9). he inquired of the LORD for him: This is not mentioned in 21:1–9, although Ahimelech seems to admit it in v. 15.

22:14–16 as faithful as David: In answering the charges against himself, Ahimelech inadvertently defended David. To hear the loyalty and faithfulness of David defended must have annoyed Saul considerably. knew nothing: Ahimelech made a case for his innocence by declaring his ignorance of the breach that had occurred between Saul and David.

A Watershed Event

Certain decisions and incidents can be watershed events in the lives of ordinary individuals, authority figures, and even nations. The tragic massacre of the priests of Nob (1 Sam. 22:16–19) was such a moment.

When Saul instructed his followers to cut down Ahimelech and eighty-four of his associates, he was showing his true colors as to his religious convictions and commitments. Up until that command, most in Israel followed him out of respect for his position as king, even if they disagreed with his policies. But now he was crossing a line that even his own guard refused to cross (22:17). He was placing himself in direct opposition to the religious establishment in Israel. Thus, Saul began to lose a great deal of loyalty among his subjects on that day.

Not surprisingly, word of the slaughter quickly made its way to David (22:20–23). He was now perceived as the preserver of religion in the nation, as opposed to Saul, who had become the destroyer of God's people and priests.

22:17–19 would not lift their hands to strike the priests: The soldiers attending Saul knew better than to raise their weapons against the priests of the living God. They must have viewed the sentence as unjust or an act of sacrilege. Seeing a further opportunity to win Saul's favor, Doeg, a Gentile, carried out the slaughter of the eighty-five priests (21:7).

22:20, 21 Abiathar had not been among the eighty-five priests killed by Doeg at Gibeah. He escaped from Nob before the massacre. According to 23:6, he met up with David at Keilah.

22:22 I have caused the death of all the persons: David recognized that his deception led to the massacre of the priests and their families (21:1–9). In the sovereignty of God, the destruction of the priests of Nob was a partial fulfillment of the prophesied judgment on Eli's house (2:27–36). But the sovereignty of God never nullifies personal responsibility for one's actions (Acts 2:23).

22:23 he who seeks my life seeks your life: David and Abiathar were both regarded as enemies by Saul. safe: David offered Abiathar protection.

The priest remained with David and provided a valuable service (23:9). He brought the ephod with him and inquired of the Lord for David (23:2, 6).

23:1 Instead of turning to Saul, their king, the people of Keilah appealed to David for deliverance from the Philistines. Located in a region of low hills about fifteen miles southwest of Jerusalem, Keilah belonged to the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:44). Threshing floors were hard, flat surfaces where grain was trampled or crushed to separate it from the straw. Sometimes threshing floors served as storage areas. The Philistines raided the threshing floors after the Israelites had harvested and processed the grain.

23:2, 3 David inquired of the LORD: David sought the will of God concerning whether the Lord had called him to deliver Keilah. David recognized that need does not necessarily constitute a call to a particular ministry. here in Judah: The men had taken risks in associating themselves with David in Israelite territory, but they sensed that there would be increased risks if they left the hill country of Judah.

23:4–6 Abiathar did not join up with David until he was at Keilah. The account of this meeting was apparently included earlier to complete the narrative of what happened to the priests of Nob (22:20–23). The ephod was the outer vest of the priest. Its value was probably due to the Urim and Thummim attached to the breastplate. By means of the Urim and Thummim, God could be consulted and His will determined (Ex. 28:30; Num. 27:21).

23:7, 8 a town that has gates and bars: Saul assumed that it would be easier to capture David in a fortified city than to chase him all over the wilderness. Saul had not fought against the Philistines, the enemies of his people, for some time. But in an attempt to capture David, he was willing to destroy an entire Jewish town.

23:9–12 Bring the ephod here: David sought the will of God through the Urim and Thummim, which were attached to or inside the breastplate of the ephod (v. 6). David used the ephod to find out whether he was safe staying in Keilah. He asked two questions of the Lord: (1) Would Saul come to Keilah in pursuit of him? (2) Would the people of Keilah betray him to Saul? David received a “yes” answer to both questions.

23:13, 14 The number of David’s followers had increased fifty percent, from 400 (22:2) to six hundred. Strongholds refers to the various hideouts where David and his followers found refuge. The Wilderness of Ziph is the barren region about four miles southeast of Hebron. This region had many ravines and caves in which David’s men could hide.

23:15–18 Jonathan … went to David: This was the custom between the two; Jonathan initiated their friendship. To visit David, his father's archenemy, would have been risky for Jonathan. his hand in God: Both men had a fervent love for God, and Jonathan encouraged David to continue his obedient walk with the Lord. Jonathan recognized that David was destined to be Israel's next king and was content to take second place beside him because it was God's will. Finally, David and Jonathan renewed the covenant of friendship and protection which they had established earlier (18:3; 20:14–17).

23:19–29 While fleeing in the wilderness, David narrowly escaped being captured by Saul. This incident provides the historical background for Ps. 54.

23:19 Jeshimon may not be a proper name but a term meaning "waste" or "desert." The term is used here of the barren wilderness of Judah, which is in the vicinity of Ziph.

23:20–23 crafty: David's boyhood work as a shepherd gave him plenty of opportunity to learn the geography of the region and to become familiar with the hiding places of the wilderness.

23:24 By the time the Ziphites returned to Ziph, David and his men had moved to the Wilderness of Maon, a desert region to the south. Maon, a city of the Judean hill country (Josh. 15:55), was located about five miles south of Ziph.

23:25–28 Although Saul and his men managed to surround David's hideout, a report of a raid by the Philistines forced Saul to withdraw, allowing David to escape.

23:28 The place of David's near capture was named the Rock of Escape to commemorate his deliverance.

23:29 En Gedi, meaning "Spring of the Kid," was an oasis east of Hebron, very near the shore of the Dead Sea. The site was noted in biblical times for the fresh water spring and lush vineyards (Song 1:14).

Pledging Allegiance

David spared Saul's life twice—once in the cave at En Gedi (24:1–7) and again in the Wilderness of Ziph (26:2, 7–12). Even though Saul was demented, unfit for office, and bent on destroying David, David refused to take his life, because Saul was the Lord's anointed (24:6).

David was even troubled in conscience for having cut the garment that Saul was wearing (24:5). It's similar to the way Americans "pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States … and to the republic for which it stands." To David, the robe of Saul represented the king.

David's respect for Saul's position serves as model for the high respect that God's people today should have for government and its officials. Like David, we may not care for the people in office or their actions, but we can respect the position, since government is ordained by God (Rom. 13:2).

All officeholders—whether they are Christians or not God-fearing people—deserve our respect and prayers (1 Tim. 2:1, 2). A governmental position invested by the prayers of God's people, anointed by God's representative, and confirmed with an oath of office invoking God's help—such an office is undeniably God-ordained.

Paul indicated that even "secular" governments, such as the autocratic Roman Empire, are God-ordained (Rom. 13:1–7). Likewise, secular governments carry out God's sovereign purposes. For example, He called Cyrus, the pagan king of Persia, His shepherd and His anointed (Is. 44:28—45:1).

24:1, 2 The Rocks of the Wild Goats is another name for the area of En Gedi.

24:3 sheepfolds: At night, shepherds in this wild area would gather their sheep into a protective rock enclosure. A low stone wall would keep the sheep from wandering. The shepherd would position himself at the entrance of the sheepfold to guard against animals of prey and thieves. Often a cave with a wall built across its mouth served as a sheepfold in the wilderness. Attend to his needs (literally, "to cover his feet") is a euphemism for a bowel movement.

24:4 the LORD said to you: These words are not recorded elsewhere in Scripture. Perhaps they are given as the interpretation of the immediate events by David's men. corner of Saul's robe: Saul may have laid his robe aside, enabling David to cut off a piece unobserved. The piece of cloak would serve as proof that Saul had been completely at David's mercy.

24:5 David's heart troubled him: David was conscience-stricken. He knew it was wrong to assault the Lord's anointed king (vv. 6, 10). Even though David had not really done anything to hurt the king physically, the fact that he had reached out with his knife troubled him.

24:6 The LORD forbid: David had a high regard for the LORD's anointed king. To cut off a portion of Saul's robe constituted for David an act of disrespect for God's representative, even though that man was seeking to take David's life.

24:7 That David did not allow his men to slay Saul demonstrates that he was not an opportunist seeking a chance to take the throne through any means. David had a high regard for the office of kingship in Israel, even though the present ruler regarded him as a personal enemy.

24:8, 9 My lord the king: These words of respect from the voice that Saul knew well must have been quite stunning to him. and bowed down: This was not religious worship but an act of respect for Saul's position as king. David seeks your harm: Some people in Saul's court were falsely accusing David of trying to overthrow Saul.

24:10 the LORD delivered you today into my hand: David recognized God's sovereignty in bringing about the circumstances that gave him an opportunity to kill Saul.

24:11 My father is a warm term of affection and respect (2 Kin. 5:13; 6:21). It also reminded Saul that David was in fact his son-in-law. your robe: There could be no clearer evidence that David was not out to harm the king.

24:12 David dedicated to the LORD the matter of his relationship with Saul. God alone could settle the matter and bring about perfect justice (Deut. 32:35; Rom. 12:17–21).

24:13 Wickedness proceeds from the wicked: The meaning of the proverb is that only a wicked man would seek to do evil against another. Since David did not take advantage of the opportunity to kill Saul, he was most certainly a good man.

24:14, 15 David likened himself to a dead dog and a flea in contrast with the king of Israel. How could something as worthless as a dead dog or as insignificant as a flea be of any danger to Saul?

24:16–18 The words my son serve here as an expression of endearment. Saul lifted up his voice and wept: Saul's tears reflect his remorse at seeking to do David harm. However, it was a short-lived remorse (26:2). more righteous than I: For a similar admission, see the account of Judah and Tamar (Gen. 38:26).

24:19 may the LORD reward you with good: Saul prayed for God's blessing on David.

24:20, 21 swear now to me by the LORD: Saul asked David to commit himself by oath to (1) preserve Saul's family and (2) preserve Saul's name.

24:22 David swore to Saul: David agreed to Saul's requests and kept his promise (2 Sam. 9:1–13; 21:6–8). While Saul returned home to Gibeah (10:26), David remained in hiding. He apparently had no great confidence in the lasting value of Saul's expression of remorse.

25:1 Then Samuel died: Samuel's death may have taken place while David was in the Wilderness of En Gedi (24:1). His death (or at least the recording of it) came at a propitious time. David had just been acknowledged as the successor of Saul by the king himself, and there was a short-lived truce between the two parties. Samuel's popularity was evidenced by the fact that the nation of Israel assembled at Ramah to honor him at his burial. After Samuel's death, David journeyed south to the Wilderness of Paran, a desert area in the northeast region of the Sinai peninsula.

25:2 Maon was located in the Judean hill country (Josh. 15:55), about eight miles south of Hebron. Carmel was located on the edge of the Judean wilderness, about a mile north of Maon. Like the times of harvest, the shearing of the sheep was a festive occasion.

25:3 The personal conduct of Nabal suggests that his name, meaning "Fool," was appropriate (v. 25). It is not known whether he used this name himself or whether it was something other people called him. Nabal was a descendant of the house of Caleb, which had occupied the area at the time of the conquest (Judg. 1:20). Abigail, a woman of wisdom and beauty, stood in stark contrast to the foolish nature of her husband. Her name may mean "My Father Is Rejoicing." The text also shows her wisdom (Prov. 31:10). Good understanding is a noun (Heb. sekel) related to the terms used to describe David in contrast to Saul.

25:4–9 Nabal lived in a wilderness area and owned thousands of sheep and goats, and so was a prime target for thieves. David and his men had generously protected Nabal's flocks and possessions (vv. 15, 16, 21). Since it was the time of sheepshearing, Nabal would have had plenty of cash from the sale of wool to reward David and his men for their services.

25:7 nor was there anything missing: David and his men had provided protection and had not taken advantage of their position or authority.

25:8, 9 David sent his men on a feast day, when most people display an extra measure of generosity. Please give whatever comes to your hand: Apparently, no price had been set for the services rendered.

25:10 Who is David: Nabal pretended not to know David. He added insult to injury by suggesting that David might be just another runaway servant.

25:11–14 Nabal lived in a region where water was scarce (Josh. 15:19).

25:15, 16 Nabal's own men testified to the care and protection they received from David and his men.

25:17 For he is such a scoundrel: The servants were so angry at their master that they spoke this way of him to his wife! The Hebrew phrase translated scoundrel is literally "son of Belial" or "son of worthlessness."

25:18 Taking matters into her own hands, Abigail gathered an abundance of goods to compensate David and his men. skins of wine: In ancient times, wine was carried in flexible containers made from animal skins. The Hebrew seah was a measure equivalent to one-third of an ephah or about one-fifth of a bushel.

25:19–21 Go on before me: Abigail wisely sent the provisions ahead to forestall any hostility caused by her husband's insulting behavior.

25:22 May God do so, and more also: David made an oath calling down God's judgment on his enemies should he fail to kill everyone who worked for Nabal.

25:23–31 Abigail's address to David is a masterpiece of charm, wisdom, and grace. She was able to avert a potentially disastrous situation in numerous ways: (1) by showing the respect for David that her husband had not shown; (2) by using humor concerning the name of her husband; (3) by acknowledging faith in the living God; (4) by confessing the wrong done to David; (5) by making restitution to David and his men; (6) by asking forgiveness for the transgression; (7) by recognizing David's right to the throne; (8) by helping David to put the present slight into a life-long perspective.

25:23, 24 Abigail's acts of humility were in strong contrast to the boorish behavior of her husband (vv. 10, 11). She did everything she could to show respect to David when he was angry and to obtain his forgiveness for the wrong Nabal had committed against him.

25:25 For as his name is, so is he: The name Nabal was quite fitting for a foolish man. Abigail's humor at her husband's expense was designed to save his life (vv. 21, 22).

25:26 as the LORD lives: Abigail showed herself to David to be a woman of truthfulness, piety, and faith.

25:27 This present means the provisions mentioned in v. 18. These gracious gifts expressed Abigail's desire to make things right.

“forgive”

(Heb. nasa) (1 Sam. 25:28; Gen. 4:13; Ps. 32:1, 5) Strong’s #5375: This Hebrew word means basically “to lift up,” “to bear,” or “to take away.” The word can apply to a person lifting up various objects including one’s hand in an oath (Ezek. 20:5, 6), one’s face to show favor (Num. 6:24–26), and one’s voice in sorrow or joy (Gen. 27:38; Is. 24:14). The sense of “bearing” is often used in reference to sin or its punishment. Thus this Hebrew word was used to describe how the scapegoat “bore” the sins of Israel (Lev. 16:22) and how the Suffering Servant would “bear” the sins of the world (Is. 53:12). The idea of “taking away” is also frequently associated with sin. This activity is usually identified as a characteristic of God (Num. 14:18; Mic. 7:18). The NT describes God’s forgiveness by stating that Jesus both bore our sins and took them away (1 Pet. 2:24; 1 John 3:5).

25:28 an enduring house: Abigail’s words indicate that she expected David to succeed Saul and enjoy a lengthy line of successors (v. 30).

25:29–31 bound in the bundle of the living: This metaphor reflects the custom of binding valuables in a bundle to protect them from injury. The point here is that God cares for His own as a man cares for his valuable treasure. sling out: This metaphor signifies God’s complete rejection of David’s enemies. no grief to you: Abigail sought to show David that the present slight was nothing compared to his future glory.

25:32–35 respected your person: A literal translation of this phrase would be “I lift up your face.” This is the opposite of Abigail’s bowing down before David when she first met him (vv. 23, 24).

25:36 Nabal’s tremendous folly is seen in this scene. His wife has just saved his life, but he, unaware that he was even in danger, was engaged in an evening of excess! Abigail continued to show wisdom by not attempting to speak to her drunken husband that night.

25:37, 38 his heart died within him … like a stone: Nabal apparently suffered a stroke and became paralyzed. the LORD struck Nabal: Nabal’s death was the result of God’s judgment.

25:39, 40 David gave praise to the Lord, for it was God who had exacted justice and not David himself. This story is a splendid example of the biblical motif “‘Vengeance is Mine, I will repay,’ says the Lord” (Deut. 32:35; Rom. 12:19).

25:41, 42 to wash the feet of the servants: Washing the feet of others was a servant's task. Abigail expressed her willingness to do the most menial jobs. This was a genuine expression of her gratitude to David.

25:43 Ahinoam became the mother of David's oldest son, Amnon (2 Sam. 3:2). Jezreel is not the city in the north, but a town in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 15:56).

25:44 David was without Michal, his first wife (18:27). Saul had given her to another man during David's absence.

26:1 The Ziphites were from Ziph, four miles southeast of Hebron. They traveled about 25 miles north to report to Saul at Gibeah. The hill of Hachilah has been identified with a ridge about six miles southeast of Ziph (23:19). Jeshimon is probably not a proper name but a term meaning "waste" or "desert." The term is most likely used here of the barren wilderness of Judah, which is in the vicinity of Ziph and extends east toward the Dead Sea.

26:2–4 Apparently forgetful of the events of 24:16–22, Saul led his men into the wilderness in pursuit of David. The similarities between the events of ch. 24 and the events here are striking. The Wilderness of Ziph refers to the desert region around Ziph and eastward.

26:5 Abner the son of Ner had served as a very successful commander of Saul's army.

26:6 Ahimelech the Hittite was a non-Israelite who had joined David's force, probably as a mercenary soldier. The Hittites were a powerful, military people who ruled central Asia Minor during the second millennium B.C. Abishai, David's nephew (1 Chr. 2:15, 16), volunteered to go with David into Saul's camp. Abishai became a leader among David's men (2 Sam. 23:18).

26:7 Saul's spear was a symbol of his authority (18:10; 19:9).

26:8 Abishai seems to have had a bloodthirsty nature (2 Sam. 16:9; 19:21). He promised not to strike Saul a second time, meaning that his first blow would be fatal.

26:9, 10 David once again refused to stretch out his hand against the LORD's anointed (ch. 24). He would not assassinate Israel's divinely appointed king (10:1). the LORD shall strike him: David knew that God would remove Saul from office according to His own perfect timing.

26:11, 12 take now the spear and the jug of water: These items would prove that David had been close enough to Saul to kill him but had refrained from doing so. David's visit to Saul's camp went undetected because the Lord had caused a deep sleep to fall upon the soldiers.

26:13, 14 calling out to the king: David did not shout directly to Saul; instead, he taunted Abner, Saul's general.

26:15, 16 The spear and the jug of water served as evidence of Abner's negligence and proof of David's goodwill.

26:17, 18 Is that your voice, my son David: Saul recognized the familiar voice, as he had near the cave at En Gedi (24:16).

26:19 If the LORD has stirred you up against me: David contemplated the possibility that God was using Saul as an agent of divine discipline. If this was the case, David expressed his willingness to offer an atoning sacrifice, an offering. On the other hand, he called for God's judgment on any evil men who had stirred up Saul against David. Go, serve other gods: This phrase reflects David's view that his exile was virtually equivalent to being forced to abandon the worship of God, since there were no sanctuaries to God outside Israelite territory.

26:20–22 David likened Saul's actions to pursuing a flea (24:14), hardly fitting for a royal figure. The partridge was known to flee for safety by running rather than flight. When fatigued, it could be captured with sticks or a net. Saul once again confessed his sin (24:17). He asked David to return home, promising not to make another attempt on his life.

26:23 Righteousness and faithfulness are characteristics of God Himself, which believers may share.

26:24, 25 David requested that his life be valued as much as he valued Saul's life. As the two parted, Saul recognized that David would eventually prevail (24:20). This was the last meeting between Saul and David.

27:1 Now I shall perish someday by the hand of Saul: The evidence pointed to the contrary (13:14; 23:17; 24:20). Perhaps David was depressed. As he had done earlier in fleeing from Saul, David journeyed west toward the coastal plain and entered the land of the Philistines.

27:2 Various sites have been suggested for the location of Gath. The most widely accepted is about twelve miles east of Ashdod, or about twenty-four miles west of Jerusalem. Achish seems to have welcomed David. Perhaps he had heard of the split between David and Saul and was anxious to strengthen his own army with David's six hundred fighting men.

27:3, 4 David dwelt with Achish at Gath: David's move to Philistine territory delivered him from the immediate danger of Saul and provided him an opportunity to further develop his leadership and military skills (vv. 8–12). His time in Philistia also gave David knowledge of the geography of the region, which would serve him well during his later Philistine wars. As David had probably expected, his sojourn in Philistia put to an end to Saul's pursuit of him.

27:5 why should your servant dwell in the royal city: David suggested to Achish that it was too great an honor for him to continue to dwell in Gath, the city of the king. Perhaps David wanted to be free from constant surveillance by the Philistine authorities and from continued exposure to Philistine religious practices.

The mound of Ziklag, a city which served as a base of operation for David's army during his years of struggle with King Saul (1 Sam. 27:6).

27:6 Achish established David as his vassal over Ziklag, one of the cities of the Israelite Negev. The city was originally assigned to Judah (Josh. 15:31) and was located about thirteen miles north of Beersheba. Therefore Ziklag has belonged to the kings of Judah to this day: This editorial note must have been added to the historical narrative after the division of the monarchy (930 B.C.). Before that time, there were "kings of Israel," but not of Judah.

27:7 Ziklag remained David's headquarters until Saul's death, when David moved to Hebron (2 Sam. 1:1–4).

27:8 During his sojourn in Philistia, David convinced Achish that he was serving the Philistines. Yet he used Ziklag as a base for raids on desert tribes in the northern Sinai. These peoples were enemies of the Israelites. The Geshurites lived to the southwest of Israel (Josh. 13:2), between Philistia and Egypt. The Girzites are mentioned only here. The Amalekites were a nomadic people who lived in the dry land south of the hill country (Num. 13:29). Shur was the border region separating Egypt from northern Sinai. The Israelites had wandered in this region after crossing the Red Sea (Ex. 15:22).

27:9, 10 Where have you made a raid today: Although David pretended to serve the interests of Achish, he was actually attacking the enemies of Israel. The southern area of the Jerahmeelites was the part of the Negev occupied by the family of Jerahmeel, one of the clans of Judah (1 Chr. 2:9). The Kenites, who were loosely associated with the Israelites since Moses' marriage into the family of Jethro, a Kenite (Judg. 4:11), were a nomadic offshoot of the Midianites (Num. 10:29). In fact, David was on friendly terms with both the Jerahmeelites and Kenites (30:29).

27:11 The complete destruction of human life seems to be the only way David was able to avoid discovery. David might also have reasoned that he was working to complete the destruction of the people of the land that had not been done fully during the time of the conquest (Josh. 23:4, 5).

27:12 he will be my servant forever: David's deception was so effective that Achish concluded that his switch in allegiance was permanent.

28:1–25 This chapter marks the spiritual low point for king Saul, recording one of the darkest hours of his reign. It also presents an incident that greatly troubles interpreters, the description of a man being summoned from the dead. Saul faced an imminent attack by the Philistines. With the prophet Samuel dead, and with heaven silent, Saul resorts to spiritism, only to learn of his own impending death and Israel's defeat. The tragedy of his life had nearly come to its bitter end.

28:1 in those days: The events of ch. 28 occurred during the time David was living at Ziklag as a vassal of the Philistine king. gathered their armies: All the time Saul was king, the Philistines were at war with Israel (14:52). you will go out with me: Since David was a vassal of Achish, the Philistines expected him to join them in their campaign against Saul. David faced a terrible dilemma.

28:2 Surely you know what your servant can do: The words of David were deliberately ambiguous. His life would have been at risk had he refused to join Achish so he was forced to wait for God's deliverance. one of my chief guardians: David found himself not only in the Philistine army but assigned as one of the king's chief bodyguards.

28:3 Samuel had died: He could no longer be counted on to bring forth a word from the Lord. The term mediums refers to necromancers, those who presume to communicate with the dead. Spiritists (Heb. yiddeonim) is a general term for those who have contact with spirits. In keeping with God's Law, persons associated with necromancy and spiritism had been expelled from the land of Israel (Ex. 22:18; Lev. 19:31; Deut. 18:9–14). The medium at En Dor was one of the few such persons still known to live in the land (v. 7).

28:4 The village of Shunem was situated in the Valley of Jezreel, on the south slope of the Hill of Moreh. The Israelite forces were camped about five miles south of the Philistines on the mountain range of Gilboa.

28:5 Saul was so afraid of the forthcoming battle that his heart trembled greatly. Saul's persistent disobedience had left him completely without confidence in God's presence and protection.

“inquired”

(Heb. shaal) (1 Sam. 17:56; 28:6; Judg. 18:5; Job 8:8) Strong’s #7592: The basic sense of this word is “to ask something of someone.” One can ask for an object (1:20; Ps. 137:3) or for information (Gen. 43:7; Job 38:3). The Hebrew phrase translated “inquired of the LORD” occurs eleven times in the OT, all in Judges and 1 and 2 Samuel (Judg. 20:23; 2 Sam. 2:1). The Hebrew verb itself occurs a total of 172 times in the OT. On three occasions the context indicates the meaning “to lend” (1 Sam. 1:28 (twice); 2:20), and in another three passages it means “to borrow” (Ex. 22:14; 2 Kin. 4:3; 6:5). Thus when the children of Israel left Egypt they probably asked, not borrowed, the goods they took with them (Ex. 3:22; 11:2; 12:35). This Hebrew word is broad enough to encompass the idea of prayer, as in the famous verse: “Pray (ask) for the peace of Jerusalem” (Ps. 122:6).

28:6 In the midst of his fear and anxiety, Saul inquired of the LORD, but there was none that came. The comment in 1 Chr 10:14 that Saul “did not inquire of the LORD” is not a contradiction with this verse. It is rather a summary that points to the fact that Saul went to the medium for counsel rather than persistently seeking a word from the Lord. God did not answer Saul by dreams as He had Joseph (Gen. 37:5–10); nor by the Urim and Thummim as He had the high priest (Ex. 28:30; Num. 27:21); nor by prophetic revelation as He had Samuel (3:10–21).

28:7 Find me a woman who is a medium: Rather than repent of his sin and continue to seek God’s forgiveness, Saul turned to a forbidden source of counsel (Ex. 22:18; Lev. 19:31; Deut. 18:9–14). This tragic decision resulted in his death (1 Chr. 10:13). The Law of the Lord called for the death penalty on mediums (Lev. 20:27). En Dor was located in the Jezreel Valley, about a mile northeast of the Hill of Moreh.

28:8 Saul disguised himself: In light of his purge of mediums and spiritists from the land, Saul could not expect much help should his identity be known. Conduct a séance for me literally means “bring up for me.”

28:9 Why then do you lay a snare for my life: The woman was aware of what Saul had done to those of her profession. She recognized the risk of being punished with death for practicing necromancy (Ex. 22:18) and sought to make sure that her visitor was not laying a trap.

28:10 Saul swore to her by the LORD: While engaging in a practice that was practically a denial of God's sovereign control of everything, Saul swore in God's name that he would protect the woman.

28:11 Saul sought the help of Samuel because he had anointed him as king and had spoken God's word to Saul before (10:1).

28:12 When the woman saw Samuel: When her séance really worked, the seer finally saw that her client was Saul. The appearance of Samuel has been interpreted in various ways. It has been suggested that the appearance took place in Saul's mind, as part of his psychological breakdown. The church fathers believed that a demon impersonated Samuel and appeared to Saul. Others have thought that the medium was a fraud who tricked Saul into thinking that he saw Samuel. It seems best to follow the early view that this was a genuine appearance of Samuel which God Himself brought about. Several points favor this interpretation: (1) The medium was surprised (v. 12). (2) Saul identified the figure as Samuel (v. 14). (3) The message Samuel spoke was clearly from God (vv. 16–19). (4) The text says that the figure was Samuel (vv. 12, 15, 16). There is no inherent difficulty with God bringing back the spirit of Samuel from heaven and allowing him to appear to Saul, in spite of the woman's evil profession.

28:13 What did you see? Apparently only the woman saw the spirit of Samuel. The word spirit is the term usually translated from the Hebrew Bible as "gods" or "God" (Heb. elohim). Here this word appears to have been used by the woman in her startled state to describe something she had never experienced before. It is, she said, as though a "god" has appeared, apparently referring to the unearthly appearance of the spirit. What a moment this must have been for her! Necromancers were either superb con artists or (rarely) in league with evil, demonic powers. Yet in this case the woman found herself unwittingly in league with Yahweh!

28:14 The mantle was a prophet's robe, such as the one Samuel had worn when he was alive. It was this robe that Saul once had torn (15:27).

28:15 The words bringing me up may be understood as meaning simply "up from the grave." This phrase indicates that the Israelites believed in life after death.

28:16, 17 the LORD has departed from you: These startling words are merely a restatement of what Saul himself acknowledged in v. 15. Samuel was not so much making an affirmation as he was pointing out the contradiction between Saul's words and actions. Even though Saul had said that God had departed from him, he was still seeking a word from the prophet of God.

28:18 Samuel traced Saul's disobedience and judgment back to his failure to destroy the Amalekites, particularly Agag (15:2–9).

28:19–23 Saul and his sons would die in the battle with the Philistines the very next day. The words with me simply refer to the grave. This text is not intended to provide a final answer concerning Saul's spiritual status. At the very least, it assumes the reality of life after death. no strength: Saul's sinful actions in seeking out a medium resulted in his complete collapse. He was terrified, sick, and totally weakened.

28:24, 25 Unleavened bread was baked without yeast and could be prepared without waiting for it to rise.

29:1, 2 Aphek was about thirteen miles northeast of Joppa. a fountain which is in Jezreel: The Israelites gathered at a prominent but unidentified spring in the Valley of Jezreel. passed in review: Apparently, the Philistine troops convened at an agreed-upon rendezvous to be reviewed and arranged in companies.

29:3 David was in a predicament, for he would not fight against his own people. He could do nothing but wait for the Lord to provide him with a means of escape from this dangerous situation. Achish came quickly to David's defense when the other princes questioned David's loyalty. Achish had found no fault with David since his "defection" from Saul.

29:4 Make this fellow return: Achish was unsuccessful in persuading his fellow princes and soldiers to accept David and his men as part of the Philistine forces. They feared that David and his men might switch their allegiance back to Saul. See 14:21 for an example of what they feared.

29:5 Saul has slain his thousands: The popular Israelite taunt song (18:7) continued to echo in the ears of the Philistines (21:11).

29:6 Achish was thoroughly deceived by David's display of loyalty. as the LORD lives: Achish swore by the name of the God of Israel to impress David with the sincerity of his confidence in him. Achish had been close enough to David to know the language that David would understand best. The lords here are the Philistine rulers.

29:7, 8 go in peace: This farewell was much more than a courtesy. Achish was releasing David from any further obligation that he had incurred when Achish had made David a vassal king in Ziklag (27:6). But what have I done: David, who seems to have been a pretty fair actor, feigned surprise that Achish would dismiss him from the engagement.

29:9 Achish had been deceived by David. Good here means "blameless." The comparison with an angel of God appears again in 2 Sam. 14:17.

29:10 your master's servants: Achish was referring to Saul as David's master.

29:11 After the departure of David and his men, the Philistines marched north from Aphek (v. 1) to the Valley of Jezreel.

30:1 The attack on Ziklag took place on the third day after David and his men left the Philistine army at Aphek. The Amalekites were a nomadic people who roamed the Negev, the dry land south of the hill country (Num. 13:29). For their attack on the Israelites after the Exodus from Egypt (Ex. 17:8–13), they were placed under divine judgment (Deut. 25:19).

30:2–5 carried them away: Rather than kill the citizens of Ziklag, the Amalekites probably intended to make them slaves. Among those who were taken captive were David's two wives (v. 5), along with the wives and children of his men.

30:6 David faced a serious crisis in his leadership. He was distressed not only because of his personal grief but by the difficult situation pressing on him. the people spoke of stoning him: It is often the nature of unhappy people to vent their frustration through acts of hostility against their leaders (Ex. 17:4). strengthened himself in the LORD his God: Unlike Saul, David knew where to turn in a time of crisis (Phil. 4:13). He had learned to wait on God, confident of God's eventual deliverance (Ps. 40:1–3).

30:7, 8 Abiathar, whose name means "The Great One Is Father," was the son of Ahimelech, the high priest from whom David had received provisions at Nob (21:1–9). The Urim and Thummim were attached to the breastplate of the ephod that David requested be brought to him (Ex. 28:30). By means of the Urim and Thummim, God could be consulted and His will determined.

30:9 The Brook Besor emptied into the Mediterranean Sea just south of the Philistine city of Gaza (6:17).

30:10 weary: The weariness of David's men was due to the fact that they had traveled about eighty miles from Aphek to Ziklag (29:1; 30:1), only to set off immediately in pursuit of the Amalekites.

30:11–13 found an Egyptian: A sick slave had been left by the Amalekites to die in the wilderness (v. 13). Life had been so devalued by the Amalekites that it was considered more economical to replace a slave than provide medical treatment for him when he was sick. cake of figs and two clusters of raisins: These foods were a regular part of the diet of David's men (25:18).

30:14 The Cherethites (2 Sam. 8:18; 15:18; 20:7, 23) were a clan closely related to, if not actually a part of, the Philistines (Ezek. 25:16; Zeph. 2:5). The southern area of Caleb refers to the part of Judah which was inherited by Caleb (Judg. 1:20).

30:15 In exchange for protection, the Egyptian agreed to lead David and his men to the Amalekites.

30:16 eating and drinking and dancing: The Amalekites were enjoying the booty they had taken from Philistia and Judah, including Ziklag.

30:17–21 Twilight here probably means just before first light in the morning. It is likely that David attacked the Amalekites in the early morning and that the battle continued through the next day. God was faithful to His earlier promise (v. 8); David's men were able to recover their wives and possessions. Not only did the men of David recover their own possessions, but they were able to capture the flocks and herds of the Amalekites. These animals were driven before the other livestock as they returned triumphantly to Ziklag.

“worthless”

(Heb. beliyaal) (1 Sam. 30:22; Job 34:18; Prov. 6:12) Strong’s #1100: This word has the basic sense of “unworthy” and “wicked.” It occurs in the OT most frequently in phrases like “worthless men” (30:22; Prov. 6:12) and “worthless rogues” (2 Chr. 13:7). Worthless people are said to dig up evil (Prov. 16:27) and to plot wickedness (Nah. 1:11). This word became a proper name for Satan during the inter-testamental period. Thus Paul asked, “What accord has Christ with Belial?” (2 Cor. 6:15).

30:22, 23 wicked and worthless men: These men insisted that the spoil captured from the Amalekites should not be divided with the men who stayed at the Brook Besor with the supplies. with what the LORD has given us: David pointed out that the booty captured from the Amalekites was actually a gift from God, who had given them the victory.

30:24, 25 For who will heed you in this matter: David questioned whether the men who waited at the Brook Besor would accept the proposal of the warriors who wanted to exclude them from any part in the spoil. they shall share alike: David’s band of warriors were one, although they had different strengths and abilities. They would share equally in the fruits of victory.

30:26–31 David also shared the booty taken from the Amalekites with the elders of Judah. This goodwill gesture helped David reestablish his relationships among the leaders of Judah after his stay in Philistine territory.

30:27 Bethel is not the well-known city of Benjamin, but probably the Bethel of Josh. 19:4. Ramoth of the South may be the same city as Ramah of the South (Josh. 19:8), whose location is uncertain. Jattir, a Levitical city (Josh. 21:14) allotted to Judah (Josh. 15:48), was about thirteen miles southwest of Hebron.

30:28 Aroer was a village about twelve miles southeast of Beersheba. The village of Siphmoth has not been identified. Eshtemoa was a Levitical city (Josh. 21:14) in the hill country of Judah.

30:29 Rachal is of uncertain location. The Jerahmeelites were one of the clans of Judah (1 Chr. 2:9).

30:30 Hormah was where the Israelites were first defeated by the Canaanites (Num. 14:45). The location of the city, allotted to Judah (Josh.

15:30) and to Simeon (Josh. 19:4), is uncertain. Chorashan and Athach are also of uncertain location.

30:31 Hebron, also known as Kirjath Arba (Gen. 23:2), was soon to become David's capital (2 Sam. 5:3). Hebron was captured by Joshua and given to Caleb (Josh. 14:13). It was a Levitical city (Josh. 21:11) and a city of refuge (Josh. 20:7).

31:1 Mount Gilboa was a small mountain range in the eastern part of the Jezreel valley.

31:2, 3 Saul's fourth son, Ishbosheth, was apparently not present at this battle, since Abner promoted him to king after Saul's death (2 Sam. 2:8–10).

31:4 Saul took a sword and fell on it: This account of Saul's death is different from that given by the Amalekite in 2 Sam. 1:6–10. His story was probably a fabrication intended to win David's approval.

31:5 In a demonstration of loyalty, Saul's armorbearer joined his master in death.

31:6 all his men: This does not refer to the whole army (v. 7), but rather to men who were particularly associated with Saul, perhaps his royal bodyguards.

The mound of Beth Shan, the city where King Saul's body was hung by the Philistines (1 Sam. 31:7–10), overlooks the ruins of a Roman theater in the foreground.

31:7 The other side of the valley refers to the Valley of Jezreel. they forsook the cities and fled: As a result of Israel's defeat, many of the cities of northern Israel were abandoned. The people fled to remote regions to escape the Philistine menace.

31:8, 9 the Philistines came to strip the slain: Battlefield looting was the rule in ancient times. The victors gathered clothes, weapons, and armor from the slain. to proclaim it in the temple of their idols: The victory of the Philistines was announced to assembled worshipers as a public testimony of the greatness of their gods in overcoming the Israelites.

31:10 The armor of Saul was placed in the temple dedicated to the worship of Ashtoreth, or Ishtar, the Canaanite goddess of fertility and war. Beth Shan was at the junction of the Jezreel and Jordan valleys, about four miles west of the Jordan. Although Saul's body was fastened to the wall of the city, 1 Chr. 10:10 records that his head was displayed in the temple of Dagon.

31:11 The inhabitants of Jabesh Gilead had been delivered from the threats of Nahash the Ammonite by Saul in his first military campaign as king of Israel (11:1–11).

31:12 the valiant men arose: Out of gratitude to Saul for delivering their city, the men of Jabesh Gilead risked their lives to recover the bodies of Saul and his sons and to give them a proper burial. burned them: Cremation was not the normal practice for disposing of the dead among the ancient Hebrews. The reason they burned the bodies of Saul and his sons may be that the corpses had been mutilated by the Philistines (v. 9).

31:13 Although the bodies of Saul and his sons were burned, the bones were recovered and buried. Later, David exhumed the bodies of Saul and Jonathan and had them reburied in Benjamin (2 Sam. 21:11–14). fasted seven days: In ancient Israel, fasting was a way of expressing sorrow in mourning. With their fasting, the men of Jabesh showed their respect for Israel’s first king.

The Second Book of Samuel

—————— SECOND SAMUEL RECOUNTS THE TRIUMPHS and defeats of King David. From his rise to the throne to his famous last words, this biography describes a remarkable, divinely-inspired leader. As king, David took a divided and defeated Israel from his predecessor King Saul and built a prominent nation. Like most political biographies, Second Samuel highlights the character traits that enabled David to succeed: his reliance on God for guidance (2:1), his sincerity (5:1–5), and his courage (5:6, 7). But the book also describes the tragic consequences of David's lust (12:1–23) and pride (24:1–17). By presenting both the strengths and the weaknesses of David, the book gives a complete picture of a very real person, a person from whom we can learn.

Second Samuel is named after the prophet Samuel, even though he does not appear in the narratives of the book. This is because 1 and 2 Samuel were originally one volume. When the Hebrew Scriptures were translated into the Greek language (around 150 B.C.), the books of Samuel and Kings were united as a complete history of the Hebrew monarchy. This collection was divided into four sections: First, Second, Third, and Fourth Kingdoms. Samuel and Kings were later separated again, but the divisions of the Greek translation persisted. The result was a 1 and 2 Samuel and 1 and 2 Kings, corresponding to the four sections of kingdoms in the Septuagint.

Second Samuel covers the period from the death of Saul (c. 1010 B.C.) to the end of David's career (c. 970 B.C.). During the forty years of his reign, David welded the loose-knit tribes together into a strong monarchy and transformed the youthful nation into a military power able to dominate surrounding nations. After capturing the Jebusite fortress, Jerusalem, David made it his capital. This new site became the powerful geographical base for the establishment of David's empire. Then David began to free the Israelite territory from Philistine and Canaanite domination. In doing so, David extended his kingdom by military conquests to the north, south, east, and west (ch. 8).

In addition to military conquest, David was the first of Israel's kings to use marriage alliances as an important dimension of the nation's foreign policy. Marriage alliances between royal houses as a means of concluding treaties and cementing relationships between states were common occurrences in the ancient Middle East. The first such marriage alliance is alluded to in 3:3, where Absalom, David's third son, is called "the son of Maacah, the daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur."

David's conquests and alliances gave him control of territory from the border of Egypt to the Euphrates. This was largely due to David's strong military presence in comparison with the general weakness that characterized Egypt and Mesopotamia at this time. For a brief period, Israel was as strong as any nation of the ancient world.

The unifying theme of 2 Samuel is the establishment of the kingdom of Israel, progressing from a diverse group of divided and warring tribes to a solidified kingdom under David. However the purpose for recording these events was not merely to have an "official" record of David's reign. Throughout the narrative, there is a continuing interest in the rule of God over His people. The book emphasizes that it was God who rejected Saul for his disobedience, chose David for the throne, and disciplined David for his pride. God was still the true King of Israel.

The key to David's successful reign was his relationship with the Lord. God had described him as a man after His own heart (1 Sam. 13:14). In his youth, David had demonstrated his strong faith in God by challenging a giant with only a few stones and his faith in God's strength (1 Sam. 17:45–51). In his adulthood, he continued to rely on God for guidance and strength (2:1; 5:19). Early in his reign, he demonstrated the importance of his religious convictions to all Israel by bringing the ark of the covenant to Jerusalem in the midst of a lavish celebration before the Lord (6:1–23). Following that, his eagerness to build a temple for the glory of the Lord was known to all (7:1–3). With such actions and the numerous songs he wrote in praise of God, David led the Israelites back to the true worship of God. Even when he sinned, he demonstrated to the people his repentant heart before the living God (12:13–23; 24:17–25). In the final analysis, David's religious leadership was the most significant part of his reign.

Through all the triumphs and tragedies of David's reign, God was acting in the national and personal events of His people in order to accomplish His will. The Lord gave David a glimpse of His ultimate will in the promises He gave him, commonly called the Davidic covenant (7:12–16). In this unconditional covenant, God promised David an eternal dynasty, an eternal throne, and an eternal kingdom. Ultimately, a righteous King greater than David was coming. He would be David's son and would rule from David's throne forever (Is. 9:7). This promised King is Jesus (Luke 1:31–33; John 1:49).

Jewish tradition holds that the prophet Samuel wrote 1 Sam. 1—24, and that the prophets Nathan and Gad composed the rest of 1 Samuel and all of 2 Samuel. It is quite evident that some sections of 1 Samuel and all of 2 Samuel were written after the death of Samuel (1 Sam. 25:1; 28:3). Indeed, some notes may have been added even after the division of the monarchy in 930 B.C. (1 Sam. 27:6). In the absence of any reference to the fall of Samaria, the capital of the northern kingdom, it is reasonable to assume that the books were complete by 722 B.C. The majority of the composition of the Books of Samuel may have been done during David and Solomon's reigns (c. 1010–930 B.C.), with only a small number of notations coming from later periods.

Commentary

1:1—10:19 David's spiritual qualifications for his role as Yahweh's select king are highlighted by his concern for the ark and by his desire to build a temple for the worship of the Lord. His military qualifications are evidenced by his successful campaigns of conquest on the surrounding territories. These were glory years for David. During this time David served God well and enjoyed the evidence of God's blessing.

1:1 The death of Saul is recorded in 1 Sam. 31:3–5. The Amalekites were a nomadic, marauding people who roamed the southern part of Canaan. They were fierce enemies of Israel until they were brought under Israelite control in the time of David. Ziklag was one of the Israelite cities of the southern desert or Negev, originally assigned to Judah (Josh. 15:31). David was granted authority over the city when he served as vassal to Achish, king of Gath (1 Sam. 27:6).

A Survivor Arrives at Ziklag

The survivor who arrived at Ziklag with news of Saul's death (2 Sam. 1:1, 2) must have been weary not only from battle with the Philistines but also from his long journey. Mount Gilboa, where the battle had been fought, was in the north of Palestine; Ziklag was about 90 miles to the south in the Negev, or southern Judah, near the boundary with Edom.

1:2 clothes torn and dust on his head: The man was in mourning (1 Sam. 4:12). He fell to the ground to show his support for David as Saul's successor to the throne of Israel. In these actions of mourning and humility, the man attempted to demonstrate the one who was to become king.

1:3 escaped from the camp of Israel: The army of Israel had fallen in defeat to the Philistines, but the man had escaped from the battlefield.

1:4 The words How did the matter go lead the reader to anticipate the climax in the narrative, which comes to David from the messenger: the people have fled, many are dead, and so are Saul and Jonathan. The mention of Saul and Jonathon was the focal point for David in the rest of the encounter. Compared with their deaths, the loss of the battle was as nothing.

1:5 How do you know: David sought verification for the report. It is said that the first casualty in war is truth; rumors, lies, and distortions are not innovations of modern war. David needed to know the truth of the Amalekite's assertion.

1:6–10 The Amalekite's report of Saul's death is different from the account in 1 Sam. 31:4, which states that Saul died by falling on his sword. It appears that the Amalekite's story is a fabrication. Perhaps he sought recognition or reward from David by claiming to have slain Saul.

1:6–8 Mount Gilboa is a small mountain range located in the eastern part of the Jezreel valley.

1:9 In this context, anguish (Heb. shabas) refers to the agony of death.

1:10 I was sure that he could not live: According to the Amalekite's story, since Saul had no hope of recovery, there was justification in putting him to death. The crown was a mark of royalty. The bracelet was an ornament worn on the upper part of the arm. Apparently, it was the custom for kings to go into battle in royal regalia (1 Kin. 22:30). The Amalekite brought these items to David in order to substantiate his story.

1:11 tore them: Tearing one's clothes was a traditional expression of mourning in ancient times (3:31; Gen. 37:34).

1:12 the people of the LORD: David and his associates mourned not only for the fallen king and prince, but also for those who had died from the ranks of Saul's army. This is surprising, for it was the same army that had been attempting to capture and kill David. He did not see them as enemies, but as members of God's family.

1:13 Where are you from: David's question might have been designed to determine whether the Amalekite resided in Israel or in Amalekite territory to the south. He might have been wondering how the man could be so ignorant of David's respect for Saul's life.

1:14 David's use of the phrase the LORD's anointed indicates that even though Saul was his enemy, David respected Saul's divine right to be king. With Saul's anointing, God had declared a sacred relationship between Himself and Saul (1 Sam. 10:1); Saul as king served as God's representative and ruler over His people. David repeatedly refused to harm him because of this (1 Sam. 24:6; 26:9).

1:15 execute him: David apparently believed the Amalekite's story and had him put to death on the basis of his own testimony. David's execution of the Amalekite was a strong statement to those under his command that he had no part in Saul's death and did not reward it in any way. Thus he exemplified respect for authority and distanced himself from the charge of being a usurper.

1:16 Your blood is on your own head: The Amalekite, not the executioner, was morally accountable for the shedding of his own blood.

1:17–27 David's eulogy over Saul and Jonathan is a highly poetic, intensely personal, and emotionally charged expression of sorrow over a national tragedy (compare 3:29). This is a psalm that reveals a great deal about David, the man after God's own heart (1 Sam. 13:14). The song focuses particularly on the loss of David's friend, Jonathan. It is arranged in three unequal movements (vv. 19–24; 25, 26; 27), which gradually diminish in force. Each strophe (section) opens with the exclamation, "How the mighty have fallen!" (vv. 19, 25, 27).

1:18 The Hebrew phrase the children of Judah means not young people but the descendants or tribe of Judah. the Song of the Bow: The words for “the Song of” do not appear in the Hebrew, leading some to suggest that the men of Judah were to be instructed in warfare and the use of the bow (Ps. 18:34; 144:1; 149:6). Others suggest that the poem was known as The Song of the Bow, based on the reference in v. 22. It is also possible the title refers to the tune for the song. The Book of Jasher was perhaps a collection of hymns about of Israel’s wars, in which important events and national figures were commemorated in poetry (Num. 21:14–18; Josh. 10:13).

1:19 The beauty of Israel refers to Saul and Jonathan. High places alludes to Mt. Gilboa (v. 6), where the warriors died.

1:20 Gath and Ashkelon are mentioned as representatives of the Philistine cities (1 Sam. 6:17) that would rejoice over the deaths of Israel’s royal family. These two cities joined with Ekron, Gaza, and Ashdod to form the Philistine pentapolis, or five-city league.

1:21, 22 no dew nor rain: A curse was pronounced on the mountains of Gilboa, the scene of the military disaster (1:6; 1 Sam. 31:8). not anointed with oil: Shields were normally wiped with oil to cleanse, polish, and protect them. Saul’s shield was declared useless because it had not protected him from death.

1:23, 24 Eagles and lions were poetic symbols of speed and strength. weep over Saul: David invited the women of Israel to lead in public lamentation for Saul, whose military exploits elevated the standard of royalty and enriched the nation (1 Sam. 14:47). David did not want the women of Philistia to sing (v. 20), but he invited the women of Israel to lament.

1:25 How the mighty have fallen: The poetic repetition of these words from v. 19 prepares the reader for the shift in focus of the poem to Jonathan.

1:26 The Hebrew word for distressed (sar, often “trouble”) means a tightness or constriction, as though life itself were closing in. Your love: David compared Jonathan’s love with that of women in its depth and loyalty. David was not afraid to speak of his deep and genuine love for his friend.

1:27 How the mighty have fallen: The third repetition of this phrase (vv. 19, 25) brings the psalm to its painful conclusion. The phrase weapons of war is a figurative reference to the fallen warriors.

2:1—4:12 This section recounts the early history of David's kingship, when he reigned over Judah at Hebron. This was a period of conflict between two rivals—David, who took the throne of Judah, and Ishbosheth, Saul's surviving son, who took the throne of Israel. It is a record of treachery, betrayal and power-plays—all the painful ring of modernity.

2:1 David inquired of the LORD: Before taking an important step, it was David's custom to seek the will of the Lord (1 Sam. 23:2; 30:8). This was sometimes done by means of the Urim and Thummim which were attached to the breastplate of the priest's ephod (Ex. 28:30; Lev. 8:8; Num. 27:21; Deut. 33:8; 1 Sam. 23:6–9; Ezra 2:63; Neh. 7:65). The Lord directed David to Hebron (1 Sam. 30:31). Its central location—about 20 miles south of Jerusalem—and defensible position made it a suitable capital for David.

2:2 his two wives: David's marriages to Abigail and Ahinoam are recorded in 1 Sam. 25:2–43.

2:3 The ancient name for Hebron was Kirjath Arba (Gen. 23:2), meaning "Town of Four." Apparently, the town had four suburbs, one of which must have been Mamre (Gen. 35:27); hence, one may speak of the cities of Hebron (Josh. 21:11).

2:4 anointed David: This is actually the second anointing of David. The first had been performed by the prophet Samuel while Saul was still king (1 Sam. 16:13). The first anointing was a mark of God's intention; this second anointing was the recognition by the people of Judah that David was truly the Lord's anointed (5:3). Jabesh Gilead was on the north bank of the Jabbok River, about seven miles east of the Jordan. The men of Jabesh Gilead had risked their lives to provide Saul and Jonathan a proper burial (1 Sam. 31:11–13).

2:5–7 sent messengers: David's sincere action of appreciation for the kindness of the men also announced to them that he was ready to act on their behalf, because he was now the anointed king of the tribe of Judah. Translated kindness here, the significant Hebrew term hesed is elsewhere translated as "mercy" or "merciful kindness"; it may also be rendered as "loyal love." It is the key term in the Psalms to describe the character of God. Here David prays that Yahweh will repay their act of loyal love by His own acts of "kindness and truth." let your hands be strengthened: David made an appeal to the men of Gilead for their strong support of his kingship. However, their loyalty to Saul's dynasty prevailed, and Jabesh Gilead became the headquarters of Ishbosheth, David's rival.

2:8 Ishbosheth means “Man of Shame.” His original name Esh-Baal, meaning “Man of the Master” or “Man of the Lord,” was changed because “Baal” suggested Baal worship (1 Chr. 8:33, 9:39). Mahanaim, the capital of Gilead, was north of the Jabbok (1 Kin. 4:14). It was named by Jacob when he saw the encampment of the angels of God around his own camp (Gen. 32:2). The name means “Double Camp.”

2:9 Gilead usually refers to the central part of the Israelite territory east of the Jordan; here the term probably refers more generally to all of that territory. Ashurites is apparently a variant of the term Asherites (Judg. 1:32), referring to the tribe of Asher. The territory of Asher extended north from Mount Carmel along the Mediterranean coast and east into the foothills of the mountains of Galilee. Jezreel refers to the broad valley between the mountains of Galilee and the mountain range to the south. Ephraim and Manasseh occupied the central district north of Benjamin, the small plateau just north of Jerusalem.

2:10, 11 While David was king in Hebron for seven and a half years, Ishbosheth reigned for only two years. The difference may mean that Ishbosheth took about five years to recover the northern territory from the Philistines after Saul’s defeat. His reign of two years would be his reign over “all Israel” (v. 9).

2:12, 13 Gibeon was about six miles northwest of Jerusalem. pool of Gibeon: Excavations at El-Jib—the site of Gibeon—uncovered a rock-cut pool 37 feet in diameter and 82 feet deep. A spiral staircase of 79 steps cut in the rock leads to the bottom. The pool was meant either to store rainwater or to provide access to the water table. Joab: David’s nephew became a competent military commander of David’s forces (10:7–14; 12:26–28).

2:14–17 Abner proposed a contest between champions to determine the outcome of the conflict between Ishbosheth and David (1 Sam. 17:38–54). This was not a friendly game that he proposed; it was a fight to the death in order to determine a victor. Yet the outcome of the contest would presumably save many lives. The two groups of twelve faced each other. Two champions contended at a time, each killing the other, until all twenty-four had died. Had one group of champions clearly triumphed over the other, the contest would have determined the future ruler of Israel. fierce battle: Since the contest between the champions was a draw, warfare between the two armies ensued, with David’s men claiming victory.

2:18 Joab, Abishai, and Asahel were brothers, all sons of David's sister Zeruiah (1 Chr. 2:13–16). The wild gazelle was renowned in Israel for its beauty and swiftness.

2:19, 20 Asahel knew that if Abner was dead, Ishbosheth's power base would dissolve, and the tribes could be united under King David.

2:21, 22 Abner, confident that he could defeat Asahel, wanted to avoid the blood feud that would likely develop if he were to kill Joab's brother. It also appears that Asahel, renowned for his speed (v. 18), did not have on the body armor that would have made a fight with Abner a fair contest. Abner pleaded with Asahel to turn aside or at least to put on armor.

2:23 Unable to deter Asahel from pursuing him, Abner stabbed him with the blunt end of his spear, which was the end opposite the spear head. It was probably pointed so that it could be stuck in the ground (1 Sam. 26:7).

2:24 The battle was turning in favor of David's supporters, and the brothers Joab and Abishai (v. 18) were in hot pursuit of Abner. They did not know at this time that their other brother, Asahel, had been killed (v. 30). The hill of Ammah and the town of Giah are mentioned only here and have not been identified.

2:25 the children of Benjamin: The men of Saul's tribe were among the strongest supporters of Abner and Ishbosheth.

2:26–28 devour forever: Recognizing that continued fighting would only result in further loss of life and deepened hostility, Abner and Joab agreed to call off the conflict. The use of silver trumpets to signal the army was established at the time of Moses (Num. 10:1–10). Here, the trumpet, a ram's horn or shofar, was used to mark a truce between the warring sides.

2:29–31 Abner's army retreated across the Jordan and returned to Mahanaim, Ishbosheth's headquarters (vv. 8, 12).

2:32 After burying Asahel at Bethlehem, six miles south of Jerusalem, Joab and his men marched another fourteen miles to Hebron, David's capital (v. 1).

IN PLACE

Civil War Between North and South

After the death of Saul, David did not immediately ascend to the throne of a united Israelite kingdom. First he was crowned king of Judah, which he ruled for seven and a half years from the city of Hebron (2 Sam. 2:1–7, 11). During much of this period, a civil war was fought between David and the heirs of Saul (3:1). One of these sons, Ishbosheth, (or Esh-Baal, 1 Chr. 8:33), pieced together a kingdom in the north, aided behind the scenes by Abner, one of Saul's generals (1 Sam. 2:8, 9). A great deal of blood was shed in determining whether David or Ishbosheth would ultimately rule Israel (2:12—4:12).

This tragic period in the nation's history was a reflection of the people's earlier insistence on having a king (8:4–9, 19–22). Had they waited for God to appoint a ruler in His own good time, the heartache of Saul's reign might never have happened and the years of civil war after he died could have been avoided.

3:1–39 The account of Abner's defection to David and his subsequent murder by Joab left Ishbosheth's kingship in a precarious state.

3:1 a long war: The conflict between the followers of Saul and the followers of David was not limited to the battle recorded in ch. 2. Hostilities continued between the two royal houses, with David gradually gaining ascendancy.

3:2 David began his reign in Judah with two wives, Ahinoam and Abigail. In Hebron, he married four more wives, each of whom bore him a son. This was despite the warning against polygamy in Deut. 17:17. Amnon, notorious for having violated his sister Tamar, was later murdered by Absalom (ch. 13). Amnon's mother, Ahinoam, is not the same as Saul's wife Ahinoam (1 Sam. 14:50).

3:3 Chileab is called Daniel in 1 Chr. 3:1. The story of his mother, Abigail, is found in 1 Sam. 25. She is not the same as Abigail the mother of Amasa (17:25). Absalom died at the hands of Joab (18:14). Absalom's mother, Maacah, is identified as the daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur. Geshur was the Aramean kingdom on the east side of the Jordan, northeast of the Sea of Galilee. David used marriage alliances to conclude treaties and cement relations between Israel and foreign nations. However, such alliances were forbidden by God's Law (Deut. 7:3).

3:4 Adonijah attempted to take his father's throne just before David proclaimed Solomon king (1 Kin. 1). Shephatiah and his mother, Abital, are mentioned only here and in 1 Chr. 3:3.

3:5 Ithream and his mother, Eglah, are mentioned only here and in 1 Chr. 3:3. in Hebron: These six sons, each from a different mother, constituted the royal family during David's reign over the house of Judah. The dynastic lists in Chronicles include four sons of David by Bathsheba (1 Chr. 3:5) and nine other sons whose mothers are not named (1 Chr. 3:6–8).

3:6, 7 The phrase strengthening his hold implies that Abner was usurping Ishbosheth's authority, becoming the power behind the throne. father's concubine: Ishbosheth's charge, that Abner was having sexual relations with one of Saul's concubines, was serious. The royal harem was the property of the king's successor. Taking a king's concubine was tantamount to claiming the throne (16:20–22). Rizpah plays out another tragic role in 2 Sam. 21.

Giving Birth to Trouble

David is an illustration of the fact that success in a career does not necessarily translate into success in personal and family life. While the "house of David { his position and stature as king-designate} grew stronger and stronger" (1 Sam. 3:1), his family life was headed for serious trouble.

Evidence for that can be found in the list of David's six sons born at Hebron (3:2–5). Each was born to a different wife, which indicates that David was strengthening his political ties through marriage, a common practice for ancient kings. But we see that in David's case it was a foolish practice. Not only did David's polygamy violate the Law (Deut. 17:17), it also led to enormous problems as he tried to blend his various families together. For example, David's son Amnon violated his half-sister Tamar, then was killed by her avenging brother, Absalom. That led to a bitter estrangement between Absalom and his father that resulted in the treason and, ultimately, the death of Absalom—all to David's great regret (2 Sam. 13—18).

David's polygamy also set a poor example for his successor, Solomon, who expanded his kingdom while marrying 700 wives and 300 concubines. Just as the Law had predicted, these women turned his heart away from the Lord to idols (1 Kin. 11:3). The Lord judged him for that sin by allowing the kingdom to be divided after his death (11:9–13). David demonstrates the biblical principle that the sins of the parents can extend "to the third and fourth generations" (Ex. 20:5).

3:8 Am I a dog's head: In the ancient Middle East, dogs were scavengers, living off dead animals and garbage, and were viewed with contempt (9:8; Deut. 23:18; 1 Sam. 17:43; 1 Kin. 22:38; 2 Kin. 9:36). that belongs to Judah: Since Judah was the enemy of Israel, this phrase intensifies the metaphor.

3:9, 10 The phrase may God do so to Abner is a prayer for divine judgment should Abner fail to keep his oath. The words as the LORD has sworn indicate that Abner knew that David had been divinely chosen to succeed Saul (vv. 17, 18). The expression from Dan to Beersheba is used to refer to the whole territory of Israel from its northern to its southern border, a distance of about 150 miles (Judg. 20:1; 1 Sam 3:20).

IN CONTEXT

Abner's Outrage

Ishbosheth's accusation that Abner, his father Saul's general, had sexually violated the late king's concubine outraged the seasoned veteran. The charge amounted to impugning the commander's loyalty and accusing him of attempting to steal the throne for himself (2 Sam. 3:7, 8).

It was common for wealthy and powerful men in the ancient world to own concubines, female slaves with whom they were free to have sexual relations. Concubines were not considered "full" wives, but they did enjoy certain rights that common slaves did not.

Had Abner actually intended to stage a political coup, he probably would have taken Saul's concubine for his own, the way conquerors commonly did in that era (compare 16:15–22).

3:11, 12 Whose is the land: The implication here is that the land could be David's if he entered into a binding agreement with Abner, because it was Abner who actually held all the power.

3:13 David's first wife Michal (1 Sam. 18:17–27) was left in Gibeah when David fled from Saul's court (1 Sam. 19:11–17). She was later given by Saul, perhaps out of spite, to a man named Palti (1 Sam. 25:44). This action may have been a burst of spite on Saul's part. David's request that she be brought back may have indicated his love for her. Certainly, we remember the notices of her love for him (1 Sam. 18:20, 28; 2 Sam. 3:5). A more cynical reading of the text may suggest that David needed to have Saul's daughter "in his camp," so to speak, to help to align the hearts of the northern tribes to his cause.

“covenant”

(Heb. berith) (2 Sam. 3:12; 23:5; Gen. 6:18; 15:18; Ex. 2:24; Jer. 31:31) Strong’s #1285: Generally, the word covenant refers to an agreement between two or more parties. The term often refers to God’s self-imposed obligation to reconcile fallen humanity to Himself. God’s redemptive plans throughout history promise salvation and blessing to those who obediently serve Him. God made several covenants with His people in the OT. He made a covenant with Noah after the Flood (Gen. 9:9–17), a covenant with Abraham (Gen. 17:15, 16), and a covenant with David (2 Sam. 23:5). These covenants prefigure the supreme covenant made through Christ’s sacrifice on the Cross. Jesus initiated the New Covenant which Jeremiah foresaw (Jer. 31:31–34).

3:14, 15 David’s request for Michal was formally addressed to Ishbosheth. This might have been a difficult demand for Ishbosheth since Michal was his sister. However, he was powerless to thwart Abner’s plan. a hundred foreskins: David mentioned the number which Saul had originally asked for; David actually paid him double (1 Sam. 18:25–27).

3:16 Michal’s second husband appears brokenhearted at her forced removal from his home. Nothing is said of Michal’s feelings; however she grew to despise David (6:16). Bahurim was near Jerusalem, east of Olivet (16:5).

3:17, 18 For the LORD has spoken: The Bible does not record elsewhere the divine promise quoted by Abner and referred to in vv. 9, 10. It is possible that this was a revelation that God gave to him alone.

3:19 David faced the most opposition from Saul’s tribe, Benjamin. Abner personally campaigned for David’s kingship in this tribe. After winning support for David in Israel, Abner proceeded to Hebron (2:1) to announce the people’s decision to acknowledge David as king.

3:20, 21 The negotiations between Abner and David were productive. Plans were laid for David’s rule to be extended over the northern tribes. The use of the feast as the setting for establishing their new political alliance has many parallels in ancient times as well as modern. There is something about eating together that provides an occasion for forming and deepening friendships and for providing intimacy. The amicable conclusion was noted in the words and he went in peace.

3:22, 23 The words gone in peace are repeated (v. 21), to emphasize that the hostilities between David and Abner had been resolved.

3:24, 25 What have you done: Learning of Abner's visit, Joab challenged the king for allowing the commander of a hostile army and a cousin of Saul to come and go from Hebron without being apprehended and put to death. He insisted that Abner was trying to trick David with a display of good faith and sincerity, and that his real purpose was to gather intelligence.

3:26 The action of Joab is entirely his own at this point. The location of the well of Sirah is uncertain, but it may be identified with the spring and reservoir about a mile north of Hebron called 'Ain Sarah.

3:27 stabbed him: This was an act of treachery, especially in Hebron, a city of refuge (Josh. 20:7). In a city of refuge, a blood avenger could not slay a murderer without a trial (Num. 35:22–25). Joab wanted to avenge the death of Asahel his brother, who was killed in the course of a battle (2:18–23).

3:28, 29 My kingdom and I: David issued a public proclamation denying any involvement in the murder of Abner. The death of Abner was not only an act of treachery, but also a great blow to David's hopes for a peaceable unification of the nation under his control. Let it rest on the head of Joab: This verse forms a strong curse on the household of Joab. Both a discharge (Lev. 15:2–33) and leprosy (Lev. 13) made the afflicted person ritually unclean, an outcast from the community. The phrase leans on a staff describes one who is crippled, lame, or blind.

3:30 Abishai was Joab's other brother (2:18). His involvement in the murder of Abner is mentioned only here.

3:31, 32 Tear your clothes: These actions were associated in ancient times with mourning the dead (1:11; Gen. 37:34). Sackcloth (Heb. saqqim) was coarse material, in contrast to more comfortable clothing. followed the coffin: David led the funeral procession.

3:33, 34 as a fool dies: Certainly a warrior like Abner deserved a more noble death. How much better for Abner to have died fighting than to have been stabbed to death while under a promise of safe passage. Your hands were not bound: Abner was not guilty of any crime that required him to be bound with chains and fetters.

3:35 The murder of Abner had the potential of breaking the fragile union of the twelve tribes. David refused to participate in the meal that was customarily served to mourners after the burial as evidence of his genuine remorse. In his oath God do so to me, and more also, David prayed that God would do the worst thing imaginable should he eat food before sunset (compare a similar oath by Abner in 3:9).

3:36, 37 All Israel refers to the people of the northern tribes and the Benjamites, who would be inclined to suspect David of plotting the murder of Ishbosheth's military commander. All the people became confident of David's innocence.

3:38 His servants refers to David's confidential servants or advisors. The words a prince and a great man reflect how highly David regarded Abner.

3:39 Weak (Heb. rak) means "tender" or "sensitive," in contrast with the term harsh (Heb. qashim), used to describe Joab and Abishai. "Weak" may refer to David's emotional state due to the murder or Abner. He may also be alluding to his sense of inadequacy in dealing with the crime perpetrated by Joab. Unable to deal with the matter, he committed retribution to God (but see 1 Kin. 2:5, 6, 28–35).

4:1 Saul's son Ishbosheth lost the heart to act as king, since Abner, his primary supporter, was gone. Israel was troubled at the possibility of an attack by David's men.

4:2, 3 The fact that Baanah and Rechab were from the tribe of Benjamin, the tribe of Saul, makes their actions all the more reprehensible. Beeroth was one of the four cities of the Gibeonites (Josh. 9:17), with whom Joshua had made a covenant. For some reason, the Beerothites fled to Gittaim and their city was reoccupied by Benjamites (Neh. 11:33).

4:4 Merib-Baal, which means "The Master Is Advocate," was the original name of Jonathan's son (1 Chr. 8:34; 9:40). The author of Samuel changed it to Mephibosheth, meaning "He Scatters Shame," apparently to avoid the idolatrous implications of the word Baal.

4:5, 6 The house of Ishbosheth was at Mahanaim (2:8, 12). Ishbosheth was taking his midday rest, as perhaps were the members of the palace guard.

4:7 The murderers fled by way of the plain, meaning by way of the Jordan valley.

4:8–12 The account of the punishment of Ishbosheth's murderers is similar to the record of David's dealings with the Amalekite who claimed to have killed Saul (2 Sam. 1:1–16). The similarity between the two accounts provides an air of suspense. The reader knows how David will view this deed, but the assassins are in blissful ignorance of how the king will "reward" their actions.

4:8–10 Rechab and Baanah brought the head of Ishbosheth to David, perhaps in hopes of receiving a reward. They used the spiritual language the LORD has avenged to describe their despicable actions. Yet their lofty words did not fool David. The oath as the LORD lives implies that David was under God's protection. There was no need to kill Ishbosheth to defend David's life. Someone was the Amalekite who claimed to have killed Saul (1:2–16).

4:11 Ishbosheth was viewed as a righteous person since he was innocent of any wicked deed or crime. He had simply assumed royal power after the death of his father Saul.

4:12 The execution of the assassins was justified on the basis of Gen. 9:5. Their corpses were hanged, or impaled, by the pool in Hebron, which was frequented daily by the people of the city. Their bodies warned the people of the consequences of such foolish and evil actions. David demonstrated his respect for the slain son of Saul by having the head of Ishbosheth buried in Abner's grave at Hebron.

Modern Hebron, successor to the ancient city of the same name, which served as David's headquarters during the early years of his reign (2 Sam. 5:1–5).

5:1 All the tribes refers to tribal leaders, such as elders and heads of clans (v. 3). We are your bone and your flesh means “we are your relatives” (Gen. 29:14; Judg. 9:2). The representatives of the tribes of Israel acknowledged their solidarity as a people.

5:2 The words led Israel out speak of David’s service as a military leader during Saul’s reign. The word shepherd is a vivid metaphor of the relationship between a king and his people. The Scriptures apply this metaphor both to God and to human rulers (Ps. 23:1; Ezek. 34:1–10).

5:3–5 before the LORD: Making a covenant was not merely a civil arrangement but a sacred occasion. they anointed: This was David’s third anointing (2:4; 1 Sam. 16:13). His first anointing was in anticipation of his rule; his second was acknowledgment of his rule over Judah; his third was acknowledgment of his rule over the entire nation.

INSIGHT

An Invincible Fortress?

The Jebusites assumed that they were invincible because of their strong fortifications (2 Sam. 5:6). But they failed to realize that God had determined to give David the victory, and so their well-defended citadel fell (5:7). Psalm 24 may recall this victory. As if mocking the defiant boast of the Jebusites, that "David cannot come in here," the psalm offers a ringing chorus, "The King of glory shall come in!" (Ps. 24:7).

5:6–9 David's first move as king was to conquer Jebus, which came to be known as Jerusalem. The name Jerusalem may mean "Foundation of Peace." The city itself was strategically located in the hill country near the border of Judah and Benjamin, making it a foreign wedge between the northern and southern tribes. Although the city was attacked by men from both Benjamin and Judah, the Jebusites were not driven out of Jerusalem at the time of the conquest (Josh. 15:63; Judg. 1:21). The city had a long history. An earlier name of Jerusalem was Salem, known because of its righteous king Melchizedek (Gen. 14:18–20). Mt. Moriah—where Abraham had prepared to offer Isaac—was also located at Jerusalem (Gen. 22:2). Jerusalem would eventually become not only the site of the temple, but also the place where Jesus died and rose again.

5:6 The Jebusites were one of the Canaanite tribes living in the Promised Land (Gen. 10:16–18). Jerusalem was on a hill just south of Mt. Moriah, with steep cliffs on all sides except the north, making it a natural fortress. The defenders felt able to boast that the blind and the lame would be enough to defeat David.

5:7 Jerusalem is referred to as the stronghold of Zion. The word Zion originally applied to the Jebusite stronghold, which became the City of David after its capture. As the city expanded to the north, encompassing Mt. Moriah, the temple mount came to be called Zion (Ps. 78:68, 69). Eventually the term was used as a synonym for Jerusalem (Is. 40:9).

5:8 The water shaft extended about 230 feet up from the Gihon spring to the top of the hill where the Jebusite fortress was situated (2 Chr. 32:30). The tunnel gave the city a secure water supply in the event of a siege. The phrase the lame and the blind became something of a taunt, which David turned first into a challenge, and then into a victory song.

5:9 The term City of David is used in Luke 2:11 to refer to Bethlehem, the city of David's birth. Here the term refers to Zion, the city from which he ruled Israel. The term Millo is derived from the Hebrew "to fill," and means "mound" or "terrace." The "Millo" has been identified by archaeologists with the terraces built on the eastern slope of the city which formed supporting walls for the buildings above. Excavations at the city of Jerusalem continue unabated, hampered only by the twin facts that this is a living city and that these places have great religious significance. It is difficult to excavate in places where people live and work, and some religious authorities have objections to excavations in areas that may once have been sacred sites.

5:10 God of hosts may also be translated "God of Armies" (6:2). The hosts (Heb. sebaot) are the armies of angels that are at the Lord's command (v. 24).

INSIGHT

The Start of a Long Friendship

The initiative shown by Hiram of Tyre (2 Sam. 5:11) was perhaps the wisest investment he ever made. His trade with David blossomed into a friendship with David's successor, Solomon, which resulted in an extraordinarily lucrative contract for cedar and other resources for the temple.

5:11, 12 International recognition of David's rule came quickly. Because of the thirty-three year reign of David in Jerusalem (v. 5), some suggest that the Hiram mentioned here may have been the father of the ally who assisted Solomon in building the temple (1 Kin. 5:1–10). This would lead one to conclude that the name "Hiram" may have been a throne name in Phoenicia, even as "Pharaoh" and "Abimelech" (Gen. 20:2; 26:1) were throne names in Egypt and Gerar. However, the wording of 1 Kin. 5:1 suggests that this is the same figure, for "he had always loved David." Tyre, located on the Mediterranean coast north of Israel, was a Phoenician city noted for its commerce, craftsmen, and wealth. Hiram's kindness toward David was probably prompted by economic interests, for he could profit from trade with Israel. The house that Hiram had built for David must have been sumptuous for the place and time. Most buildings in Israel were made of stone. The use of cedar wood added elegance to David's palace. Certainly he spoke of his home with reasonable pride (7:2).

5:13 These marriages reflect David's involvement in international treaties and alliances which were sealed with the marriage of a king's daughter to the other participant in the treaty. Concubines, wives who did not have the legal rights of a true wife, were part of a royal harem. The status of kings in ancient times was often measured in part by the size of their harems. Yet for Israel's kings, there had been a warning from God against acquiring many wives (Deut. 17:17).

5:14 Shammua is known as Shimea in 1 Chr. 3:5. Shammua, Shobab, Nathan, and Solomon were David's sons by Bathsheba (1 Chr. 3:5), the wife of Uriah. David planned Uriah's death so that he could marry Bathsheba (ch. 11). The child born of David and Bathsheba's affair died in infancy (12:15–23).

5:15, 16 The lists in 1 Chr. 3:5–9 and 1 Chr. 14:4, 5 record two additional sons, Nogah and another Eliphelet (Elpelet in 1 Chr. 14:4).

5:17–25 The Philistines were Indo-Europeans, actually, Mineon Greeks, who migrated from the Aegean Islands and Asia Minor to the eastern Mediterranean region about 1200 B.C. The Philistines established a strong political and military organization on Israel's southern coastal plain and were for many years a major threat to the Israelites. It was during one of Israel's wars against the Philistines that young David first became a national hero (1 Sam. 17). The Philistines may have ruled as a class of warrior-lords over the indigenous Canaanite populations in their areas. They were powerful warriors who made brilliant use of the chariot, the "tanks" of the ancient world. These then hi-tech military machines made them especially strong on the coastal plain, but these chariots were not as effective in the highlands of Judah. The Philistines are characteristically spoken of with great disdain by David and his compatriots as "the uncircumcised" (1 Sam. 14:6; 17:26; 31:4; 2 Sam. 1:20).

5:17 The Hebrew word translated stronghold means "mountain fortress," suggesting a fortress other than Jerusalem. Therefore, it is possible that these attacks took place between the time when David was anointed over all Israel (v. 4) and when he captured Jerusalem (vv. 6–10).

5:18 The Valley of Rephaim, or "Valley of the Giants" (21:15–22), extends southwest from Jerusalem toward the coastal plain. The significance of the valley as a strategic approach to Jerusalem is evidenced by the fact that the Philistines made a second attempt to capture the city from this route (v. 22).

5:19, 20 As was his custom, David inquired of the LORD before engaging the Philistines in battle (2:1; 1 Sam. 23:2; 30:8). In matters of warfare, David was not presumptuous. He wished to know the will of God in choosing his battles and their timing.

5:21, 22 The idol images which the Philistines had taken into battle to assure them of victory were captured and carried away by David's men. This looting would have been regarded by the Philistines as a defeat of their gods by the God of Israel. According to 1 Chr. 14:12, David and his men burned the idols.

5:23 Mulbery trees (Heb. bekaim) appears only here and in the parallel passage in Chronicles (1 Chr. 14:14). Some scholars prefer the rendering "balsam trees."

5:24 God was suggesting that the sound of rustling leaves in the treetops was in fact the sound of His angelic army going forth to attack (2 Kin. 6:17).

A Long-Overdue Victory

David's decisive defeat of the Philistines (2 Sam. 5:25) was a major breakthrough for the establishment of his kingdom. For years the Philistines had harassed the Israelites, who seemed unable to completely vanquish them. But by pushing them back as far as the Gezer, David was setting up the Philistines for the knockout punch they would soon receive from the Egyptians.

5:25 The Geba mentioned here is not the Geba of 1 Sam. 13:3, which was six miles north of Jerusalem. This Geba was most likely located south, in the Valley of Rephaim. Gezer was about 20 miles northwest of Jerusalem.

6:1–23 David was intensely interested in the worship of Yahweh and gave considerable attention to the ark of the covenant, which had lain neglected during the reign of Saul. Chapter 6 tells of the transfer of the ark to the new capital at Jerusalem. Since the loss of the holy ark had happened in an early battle with the Philistines (1 Sam. 4; 5), David's determination to restore the ark following his impressive defeat of the Philistines (2 Sam. 5) was most significant.

6:1 The thirty thousand men were not all the men of Israel capable of bearing arms, but the best of them.

6:2 Baale Judah, meaning "Masters of Judah," was also called Baalah and Kirjath Jearim (Josh. 15:9; 1 Chr. 13:6). It was a city on the border of Judah and Benjamin, about 10 miles northwest of Jerusalem. The Name, the LORD of Hosts: The personal name of God is revealed in Ex. 3:13–15, where the context reveals that the LORD is the mighty God of the patriarchs who intervenes on behalf of His people. At times the Name of God is accompanied by the designation "of Hosts" (5:10), referring to the angelic armies of the universe (1 Kin. 22:19; Luke 2:13) as well as the armies of Israel (1 Sam. 17:45). Cherubim are angelic beings generally regarded as guardians of God's holiness (Gen. 3:24; Ex. 25:22; Pss. 80:1; 99:1). God revealed Himself to Moses from between the two cherubim mounted at opposite ends of the mercy seat over the ark of the covenant (Ex. 25:22; Num. 7:89).

6:3, 4 they set the ark of God on a new cart: The Law was specific that the ark was to be carried by the sons of Kohath, not by a cart or any other vehicle (Ex. 25:14, 15; Num. 3:30, 31). David was doing what the Philistines had done (1 Sam. 6:7, 8). The ark had been taken to the house of Abinadab after its recovery from the Philistines (1 Sam. 7:1, 2). The sons of Abinadab should probably be understood in a broader sense as "the descendants of Abinadab."

6:5 Played literally means they "made merry" with dancing and music (v. 21). The worshipers had a variety of string, wind, and percussion instruments. Sistrums refers to Egyptian instruments consisting of rings hanging loosely on metal rods that make a rattling sound when shaken.

6:6 A threshing floor was a place for processing grain, separating kernels from the chaff (Ruth 3:2). In order to steady the ark when it seemed as though it would fall, Uzzah put out his hand.

6:7 Although Uzzah's violation was unintentional, his error cost him his life. God had warned His people that not even the Levites could touch the holy objects of the tabernacle; the death penalty had been specified for violators (Num. 4:15).

6:8 David became angry—not at himself for the carelessness that resulted in this calamity, but at God. He named the place of the tragedy Perez Uzzah, recalling what had happened.

6:9 David was afraid of the LORD: The tragedy of Uzzah rekindled a necessary "fear of God" in the heart of David. Properly understood (Eccl. 12:13, 14), the fear of the Lord is essential to the pursuit of obedience and holiness.

6:10, 11 Obed-Edom was a Levite of the family of Korah, and later one of the doorkeepers for the ark (1 Chr. 15:18, 24; 26:4–8). He was called the Gittite because he was from the Levitical city of Gath Rimmon (Josh. 21:24).

6:12 That the ark had been a source of blessing to the house of Obed-Edom renewed David's interest in finding a way to bring it to Jerusalem.

6:13 This time the ark was carried (Ex. 25:14, 15), rather than transported by cart. Some interpreters think that the procession was halted and sacrifices were offered every six paces. It is also possible that the sacrifices were offered only once after the ark bearers had advanced the first six paces, thus consecrating the solemn procession.

6:14 The Hebrew word translated danced (mekarker) here literally means "whirled." The linen ephod was a short, sleeveless garment worn by priests (1 Sam. 2:18). David wore it to honor the Lord in view of his priestly activities that day (v. 13).

6:15 Shouting was an expression of celebration and triumph (Is. 44:23). The trumpet refers to the ram's horn or the shofar (2:28).

A Love That Turned to Hate

Michal's story is tragic and bitter. She fell in love with the handsome David right after the young warrior defeated the giant Goliath (1 Sam. 18:20, 28). He further demonstrated his heroism by killing two hundred Philistines for her hand in marriage (1 Sam. 18:27). Michal's love for David must have only increased. Unfortunately, her love and her life turned sour.

As a result of Michal's feelings for David, she became estranged from her father King Saul. She risked her life in order to save David (1 Sam. 19:11–18), but the result was that she became separated from her first love. Perhaps in retribution for her protection of David, Saul gave Michal to another man, Palti. While living with her new husband, Michal saw her father and her brother Jonathan die in battle, and her other brother Ishbosheth was murdered by assassins.

It appears that Palti loved Michal deeply, for when she was forcibly removed from his home he wept uncontrollably (3:15, 16). We might conclude that she had grown to love him. Yet David demanded that she come back to him. Michal's reunion with David was hardly pleasant. David was no longer the young, courageous warrior who served her father's household. Instead, he was the man who replaced her father on the throne. Moreover, she would have to compete with at least six other women for King David's attention.

It is not likely that the mere actions of David, as he celebrated before the Lord at the return of the ark, brought about Michal's hatred of him (6:16). Her hatred had probably grown over the years. Her sarcastic words on David's great day of religious and spiritual joy came from a lifetime of pain (6:20). Unlike her brother Jonathan, Michal did not accept her God-given lot and trust God for her future happiness (1 Sam. 23:16–18). Instead, she became bitter not only at David but also toward God. Tragically, Scripture gives no indication that there was any healing for Michal. She died childless (6:23).

6:16 Michal, Saul's daughter, had been given to David in marriage (1 Sam. 18:27), and then to another man (1 Sam. 25:44) after David had fled from Jerusalem. Abner, Ishbosheth's military commander, had arranged her return to David (2 Sam. 3:13–16).

6:17 David erected a tent, no doubt patterned after the tabernacle of Moses, to serve as a temporary shelter for the ark until a more permanent building could be constructed. burnt offerings: See Lev. 1. peace offerings: See Lev. 3.

6:18 he blessed the people: David acted as a priest for the congregation; in this respect, he is a type of the Savior Jesus who is the great King and Priest.

6:19 A distinctive feature of the peace offering (v. 17) was that a portion would be eaten by the worshiper as a fellowship meal before the Lord. David shared this meal with those who participated in the celebration. A cake of raisins was a sweet treat (Song 2:5) sometimes used for religious offerings in Canaanite rites (Hos. 3:1) as well as in the worship of God.

6:20 to bless his household: At the moment of his greatest spiritual experience, David took pleasure in the prospect of bringing God's blessing to his home, only to be met by the curses of his wife. The scornful remark about David's uncovering himself no doubt refers to the priestly attire worn by the king instead of his royal robes (v. 14). Dancing about in this short garment, David had exposed more of himself than Michal thought appropriate. The term base fellows refers to empty persons, those of no value or worth.

6:21 David rebuked Michal by reminding her that God had chosen him in place of her father Saul, an evidence of divine blessing on his religious commitment and enthusiasm.

6:22 David declared that he would gladly be even more undignified and humble in his own sight to worship the Lord and to be held in honor by those who shared his spiritual values.

6:23 Michal's childlessness was the result of either estrangement from David, or perhaps divine punishment because of her refusal to join in the celebration of God's name. Thus there was no successor to the throne from the house of Saul. His sons were all dead, and his daughter remained childless. It is evident from this verse that Michal had not had children with Palti during her years as his wife.

7:1–29 This chapter records the establishment of the Davidic Covenant, which amplifies and confirms the nation or seed promises of the Abrahamic Covenant (Gen. 12:1–3). The issues of this chapter are of immense theological importance. They reach all the way to the coming of Savior Jesus and especially to His coming reign on the throne of David.

7:1 The house refers to the palace that the Phoenicians had built for David (5:11). Rest from all his enemies probably refers to the peace that prevailed after David's defeat of the Philistines (5:17–25).

7:2 Nathan was a personal advisor to David. As a prophet (Ex. 7:1, 2), he spoke for God, advising David on religious matters. Nathan later confronted David regarding his sins of adultery and murder (12:1–15). He helped Bathsheba secure the throne for Solomon (1 Kin. 1:10–45), aided in the establishment of music in the temple worship (2 Chr. 29:25), and chronicled the reigns of David and Solomon (1 Chr. 29:29; 2 Chr. 9:29). Although there was nothing immoral about dwelling in a house of cedar, David realized he had to give his attention to spiritual priorities.

7:3, 4 Nathan encouraged the king to follow the leading of his heart and build a temple for the ark. However, he spoke on the basis of his own understanding and not as a word from the Lord. His words the LORD is with you indicate in this context a general blessing and not a specific utterance of God.

7:5 Although Nathan had at first encouraged David to build a temple for the ark (v. 3), the Lord revealed that this was not His intention at all. The question Would you build a house for Me to dwell in implied a negative answer.

7:6 A tent was a traveler's dwelling. The tabernacle (Heb. mishkan) was the portable structure or the "dwelling place" of God in the midst of His people (Ex. 25:9, 22).

7:7 Throughout the history of God's dealings with the Israelites, never once did He reprove them for failing to build Him a permanent sanctuary. The word shepherd is a metaphor of leadership and was used throughout the ancient Middle East to refer to national leaders (Ezek. 34:2). The Great Shepherd is, of course, God (Ps. 23).

7:8 The formal and profound nature of the text is emphasized by the use of the name LORD of hosts. God reminded David of His gracious dealings in taking him from the humble role of a shepherd to serve as king over His people.

7:9 A great name or reputation was highly valued by the Hebrews. As God promised to make the name Abram great (Gen. 12:2), so He promised David that his name would be renowned.

7:10 God promised to provide Israel a secure dwelling place in the land of Israel. No longer would the Israelites be exposed to repeated attacks from their enemies, as had happened during the time of the judges.

7:11 house: David wanted to build God a house—that is, a temple (vv. 2–7). Instead, God intended to build David a house—that is, a dynasty of long duration.

7:12 The first provision of the Davidic covenant was that David would have a son for whom God would establish a kingdom. This son would be Solomon (1 Chr. 22:6–10).

7:13 House here refers to the temple (1 Kin. 6). God also promised to establish the throne of Solomon's kingdom forever (1 Chr. 22:6–10). This is not to say that Solomon would rule forever. Rather, the right to rule, represented by the image of the throne, would always belong to his descendants. Further, there would always be a male heir who would be able to rule.

7:14 iniquity: The sins of David's sons would require divine chastening (1 Kin. 11:1–13). The rod of men and blows of the sons of men would serve as instruments of chastening (1 Kin. 11:14, 23).

7:15 Although Solomon's sins would justify chastening, God promised that His mercy would not be removed, as was necessary in the case of Saul (1 Sam. 13:13, 14; 15:22, 23).

7:16, 17 Here God capsulized the provisions of the Davidic Covenant. The Lord promised that David's house, kingdom, and throne will endure forever. In other words: (1) the line, or house, of David will always be the royal line; (2) the right to rule will always belong to David's offspring; (3) the right to a literal, earthly kingdom will never be taken from David's posterity. The promise does not guarantee that the rule by David's posterity would never be interrupted (Hos. 3:4, 5). Indeed, it was interrupted when Judah was taken into exile (2 Kin. 25:1–21). However, the prerogative to exercise the privilege of ruling would always belong to the Davidic dynasty (Ps. 89:20–37). In Luke 1:32, 33 the angel Gabriel promised that Mary's son, Jesus, would receive the throne, house, and kingdom promised David and his posterity. The ultimate fulfillment of this promise will be realized at the Second Advent when Christ returns to reign over His people (Rev. 20:1–6).

7:18 The words sat before the LORD indicate that David was in the tent which served to house the ark. Who am I, O Lord GOD: David's rhetorical question reflected his sense of unworthiness to have been extended such a gracious promise (vv. 12–16).

7:19, 20 David acknowledged that what God had done for him so far was far greater than anything he deserved. As if this were only a small thing, God now extended the promise concerning David's dynasty far into the future. All of human history leads inevitably to the rule of Christ on earth. This is its destiny, its prophetic fulfillment, the final meaning of all history.

7:21 For Your word's sake alludes either to earlier promises of God concerning Judah, the royal tribe (Gen. 49:10; Num. 24:17), or to the prophecy of David's kingship (1 Sam. 13:14).

7:22, 23 All that we have heard with our ears refers to the shared tradition regarding God's work in history (Deut. 4:32–40).

7:24 Your people Israel: At the heart of God's promise to David was the continuation of His promise to the nation of Israel (Gen. 12:1–3).

7:25 Having praised God for His gracious works, David prayed for the fulfillment of the promise. As David undoubtedly knew, God's will would be accomplished whether he prayed for it or not. But like David, when we pray in God's will for God's will, we became a part of His will. We also become an expectant people, ready to respond to God with great praise when He has accomplished His will (Ps. 142).

7:26, 27 The name of God refers here to His reputation. David wanted God's reputation to be magnified through the fulfillment of His promise.

7:28, 29 You are God, and Your words are true: David acknowledged that God could be trusted to fulfill His promise.

8:1–18 Chapter 8 records the expansion of David's kingdom as the Lord blessed and prospered him. The wars undertaken against surrounding lands were designed to protect Israelite settlements in Transjordan and the nation's frontiers against possible invaders. God gave David many great victories, which expanded both his empire and his fame. There was also within the military conquests of David the fulfillment of the stated foreign policy for Israel in Torah; Israel was to eliminate the Canaanite peoples, who were under God's judgment, and they were to subjugate the surrounding nations to the rule of Israel and the rule of God (Deut. 20).

8:1 The Philistines seem to have migrated from the Aegean Islands and Asia Minor to the eastern Mediterranean region around 1200 B.C. They settled on the coastal plain of Israel and developed a relatively advanced culture and a powerful army. The Philistines were a major threat to Israel during the reigns of Saul and David (5:17; 1 Sam. 13:5; 17:1; 23:1; 28:1).

8:2 The Moabites were descendants of the incestuous relationship between Lot and his older daughter (Gen. 19:36, 37). These people occupied the land opposite Judah, east of the Jordan River and the Dead Sea. This verse may indicate that David spared the young Moabites (whose height was a line) and executed the adults (whose height was two lines). In any event, the survivors became vassals, or servants of David. Centuries later, the Moabites won their freedom from being vassals to Israel (2 Kin. 1:1).

8:3 David's campaign to the north resulted in the defeat of Hadadezer, who ruled the Aramean kingdom of Zobah, which extended north of Damascus.

8:4 hamstrung: David disabled the horses by cutting the back sinews of the hind legs to prevent them from being used for military activity (Josh. 11:6, 9).

8:5, 6 The use of the term Syrians is a common misunderstanding. The Hebrew text uses the term "Arameans." The existence of Syria as a political entity began in the Hellenistic Period (332–63 B.C.). At the time of David, the region was called "Aram" and the people "Arameans."

8:5 Damascus, located at an oasis near the foot of the Anti-Lebanon mountains, was one of the most strategically located cities of the ancient world. Damascus lay at the crossroads of the two main international highways—the Via Maris, leading south and west to Egypt, and the King's Highway, leading from the east side of the Jordan south to Arabia.

8:6 The garrisons of Israelite soldiers were intended to keep the Syrians of Damascus under David's control.

8:7 Shields of gold were splendid trophies of war (1 Kin. 10:16, 17).

8:8 Betah, an Aramean city, was also known as Tibhath (1 Chr. 18:8). Berothai, also known as Berothah (Ezek. 47:16), was about 30 miles northwest of Damascus.

8:9 Hamath was about 100 miles northeast of Damascus.

8:10 The rich gifts of Toi, king of Hamath, reflect his desire to establish friendly relations with his powerful new neighbor. The gifts may also indicate that Toi voluntarily submitted to David and became his vassal.

8:11, 12 The silver and gold that David received from the nations he conquered were turned over to the priests to be used in building the temple (1 Kin. 7:51).

IN CONTEXT

Being Remembered

David made a name for himself in the Valley of Salt (2 Sam. 8:13, 14), probably the wasteland plain southwest of the Dead Sea. But while his exploits greatly increased his reputation among his own people, they sowed lasting bitterness elsewhere, which would come back to haunt his successor, Solomon.

The "name" that David earned came at the expense of the lives of 18,000 Syrians, who probably were people of Edom. God explicitly commanded his people not to "abhor" the Edomites, since they were descended from the same ancestor, Jacob (Deut. 23:7, 8). Yet David's general, Joab, carried out a six-month campaign of genocide "until he had cut down every male in Edom" (1 Kin. 11:15, 16). This delighted the Israelites, who had long hated the Edomites.

However, an Edomite boy named Hadad watched the slaughter before his father's servants escaped with him to Egypt. He never forgot what he had seen. Years later, after David had died and his son Solomon had turned away from the Lord, God allowed Hadad to come back to Palestine, where he became a perennial thorn in Solomon's side (11:14, 19–22).

8:13 Name refers to the reputation David gained as a result of his military exploits.

8:14, 15 David reigned over all Israel: As a result of David's conquests, the sovereignty of Israel extended from the Gulf of Aqaba and the River of Egypt to the Euphrates River—the very region God had promised Abraham in Gen. 15:18. The words translated judgment and justice together mean "genuine justice." David was careful to see that the decisions he made and the laws he enforced were "fair and right" for all.

8:16 Joab, the commander-in-chief of David's army, had led the successful attack on the city of Jebus, which became David's capital Jerusalem (1 Chr. 11:6, 7). Joab was David's nephew; Zeruiah, his mother, was David's sister (1 Chr. 2:13–16). Jehoshaphat the recorder kept track of state business, brought appropriate concerns to the king's attention, and advised him on official matters. His career extended into the reign of Solomon (1 Kin. 4:3).

8:17 Zadok and Ahimelech are mentioned as the principal priests during David's reign (15:24; 1 Sam. 22:20–23; 1 Kin. 1:7, 8). The scribe served as secretary of state, drafting official documents, handling correspondence, and maintaining court records.

8:18 The Hebrew words Cherethites and Pelethites have been variously understood as referring to "executioners," "runners," "Cretans," or "Philistines." The form "Pelethites" may have been created to avoid the suggestion that the Philistines were too intimately associated with David's army. Whatever their identification, "the Cherethites and the Pelethites" always appear as parts of David's army (15:18; 20:23). Chief ministers (Heb. kohanim, and usually meaning "priests") were confidential advisors.

David’s Cabinet

Under David, the Israelite monarchy became firmly established. The description of David’s cabinet gives a helpful picture of how the government was organized: • Administrative duties were supervised by David’s sons (2 Sam. 3:2–5; 5:13, 14). David also governed through garrisons, governors, and vassal kings (8:6, 14). This system was later streamlined by Solomon, who named twelve district governors, two of whom were sons-in-law.

Like other kings in the ancient world, David had an official recorder, Jehoshaphat, whose main role was to keep a written record of David’s exploits and decisions for history’s sake.

A man named Seraiah functioned as David’s scribe. In later years, scribes were mainly concerned with copying, editing, and teaching the Law. But during the monarchy, scribes were similar to secretaries of state or chancellors.

• Legal matters were mainly David’s responsibility. As king, he took over a role handled by the judges prior to the monarchy. It was his job to set the tone for administering justice by setting policy, deciding legal questions, prosecuting offenses, and appointing judges (1 Chr. 26:29).

• The military was under Joab’s command. However, Benaiah was placed over the Cherethites and Pelethites (2 Sam. 8:18), who probably acted as David’s personal bodyguard.

• Religious matters were handled by Zadok and Ahimelech, the priests. The latter was the grandson of Ahimelech, the priest at Nob who had shown kindness to David, for which he and his fellow priests were massacred by Saul (1 Sam. 21, 22).

9:1–13 David displays his loyalty toward Jonathan (1 Sam. 20:42) by ministering to the physical needs of his crippled son, Mephibosheth. This incident must have taken place at least fifteen years after Jonathan's death, for Mephibosheth was five years old then (2 Sam. 4:4) and now he has a young son.

9:1 for Jonathan's sake: David and Jonathan had entered into a covenant of friendship and protection that was to extend to their offspring (1 Sam. 18:3, 4; 20:14, 15, 42).

9:2 Ziba was a servant of king Saul (16:1–4; 19:29).

9:3 The kindness of God recalls the words of the oath that Jonathan had David swear (1 Sam. 20:14).

9:4 Machir the son of Ammiel was a man, apparently of wealth and position, who extended hospitality to David during Absalom's revolt (17:27–29). Lo Debar was about 10 miles south of the Sea of Galilee just east of the Jordan.

9:5, 6 Once he was made aware of Jonathan's son, David did not hesitate to fulfill his covenant commitment to his friend. He immediately sent for Mephibosheth to be brought to Jerusalem.

9:7 Do not fear: Mephibosheth had good reason to be afraid. It was usual in the ancient Middle East for founders of new dynasties to kill the children of former rulers to keep them from trying to regain the throne in the name of their families. The land of Saul refers to the house and property at Gibeah which was claimed by David when he took the throne (12:8). To eat bread at the king's table was not a temporary honor; it meant that he would have a pension from the king. continually: These privileges and provisions would continue throughout Mephibosheth's life.

9:8, 9 such a dead dog as I: Dogs in Israel were regarded as unclean scavengers, and were generally viewed with contempt (2 Kin. 9:34–37; Prov. 26:11). Mephibosheth used the expression as a figure of speech. The remark reflects his low self-image and his astonishment at the grace being shown him.

9:10 your sons and your servants, shall work the land for him: The size of Saul's estate is reflected in the fact that Ziba had 15 sons and 20 servants. that your master's son may have food to eat: Although Mephibosheth would always have a place at David's table as a member of the royal court, the income from Saul's estate would provide for his house and family in Jerusalem.

9:11 In his dealings with Mephibosheth, David exemplified God's grace. Mephibosheth was wonderfully blessed, not because of anything he did, but because of David's faithfulness to a covenant promise. Likewise, believers are blessed, not because of any good work (Eph. 2:8, 9), but because of God's faithfulness to the New Covenant (Jer. 31:31–34) and the promises of the gospel. As Mephibosheth was regarded as an adopted son—like one of the king's sons—with attendant privileges and blessings, so believers have been adopted as sons and daughters into the family of God (John 1:12; Rom. 8:15; Eph. 1:5).

9:12 The family of Saul continued through Micha for several centuries (1 Chr. 8:34–40).

Keeping Promises

Many people today have grown skeptical of the campaign promises of politicians. Scripture presents David as a leader who kept his promises. David had sworn that he would show "kindness" (Hebrew, chesed, "devotion") to Jonathan's descendants (1 Sam. 20:11–16, 42). So once he was installed as king, David asked whether any of Saul's descendants (and therefore Jonathan's relatives) remained alive (2 Sam. 9:1). Jonathan's son Mephibosheth was found, and David kept his promise (9:7–13).

9:13 Mephibosheth had become lame as a result of a fall that had occurred when his nurse was fleeing from Gibeah after the report of the deaths of Saul and Jonathan (4:4). For more on the story of Mephibosheth, read 16:1–4; 19:24–30; 21:7.

10:1–19 This section records the details of 2 Sam. 8:12 regarding David's campaigns against the Ammonites and Arameans. This war was the fiercest and most dangerous struggle that the Israelites experienced during David's reign. The story is told here as background for the account of David's sin with Bathsheba, which occurred while the Israelites were fighting the Ammonites (2 Sam. 11:1).

10:1 The king of Ammon was Nahash (v. 2), probably the same Nahash who was defeated by Saul at Jabesh Gilead (1 Sam. 11:1–11).

10:2 as his father showed kindness to me: The occasion of Nahash's kindness is not recorded. One possibility is that Nahash, an enemy of Saul, had given aid to David during his war with Ishbosheth (2:8–4:12). to comfort him concerning his father: David wanted to console Hanun over his father's death and to congratulate him on his new position as king.

10:3 David's gesture of kindness was met with suspicion by the king's advisors, the princes. They suspected that David had sent the men as spies for the purpose of planning an attack on the city of Rabbah (11:1).

10:4 David's servants were abused and humiliated. The beard was regarded in Semitic culture as a significant aspect of a man's appearance. Cutting off half the beard was a very serious insult. Hanun doubled the insult when he cut off their garments, leaving the soldiers indecently exposed.

10:5 To prevent their further humiliation, David ordered the messengers to remain in Jericho until their beards grew back. Jericho was just west of the Jordan and 15 miles northeast of Jerusalem.

10:6 Made themselves repulsive could be literally translated, "made themselves stinking." To protect themselves against Israelite revenge, the Ammonites hired 33,000 mercenary soldiers from several Aramean states to the north. Beth Rehob and Zoba were Aramean citystates located north of Israel. Maacah was a small Aramean kingdom east of the Jordan whose territory was assigned to the half-tribe of Manasseh (Josh. 12:5; 13:11). Ish-Tob was a town at Et-Taiyibeh, 45 miles northeast of modern Amman, Jordan.

10:7 Although mighty men is used elsewhere to mean a select group of David's warriors (16:6; 20:7), the context here suggests that the whole army of Israel is intended.

10:8 The gate was an important part of a city's defensive fortification. The gates of fortified cities usually had towers which gave the defenders an advantage over enemies seeking to break through. Some cities had multiple gates. If attackers broke through one gate, they would find another gate in front of them. The Ammonites fought near the gate so they could retreat into the walled city if the battle turned against them. The mercenary soldiers were in more exposed positions in the field.

10:9 before and behind: Joab had allowed himself to become trapped between two enemy forces—the Syrians and the Ammonites. If he attacked either enemy separately, his rear troops would be exposed to the other. Joab decided to risk attacking both forces at the same time.

10:10, 11 Abishai, Joab's brother, was placed in command of the rest of the militia in order to attack the people of Ammon. Abishai was one of David's mighty men (23:18). He was a brave warrior (1 Sam. 26:6–9) and a successful commander (1 Chr. 18:12, 13), but was impetuous and perhaps even bloodthirsty (16:9; 19:21). He had played a part in the murder of Abner (3:30).

Joab, a Man Born to War

The picture of Joab that emerges from the Bible is of a man who cared little for what a fight was about, as long as he was in it. Apparently he was a born fighter, and Scripture records only his many successes as David's military leader: against the Jebusites (2 Sam. 5:7; 1 Chr. 11:6), the Edomites (2 Sam. 8:13, 14; 1 Kin. 11:15, 16), the Syrians (2 Sam. 10:6–14), and the Ammonites (11:1, 2, 14–25; 12:26–29). During this last conquest, Joab became an accomplice in David's plot to kill Uriah.

Joab's political instincts seemed to be based on expediency and self-preservation. He functioned as a mediator between David and his estranged son, Absalom (14:1–33), but later killed the arrogant rebel (18:10–16). Afterward he urged David to reconcile himself to the loss of his son and avoid a mutiny of the army (19:1–8). On other occasions, Joab killed Abner (3:22–39) and Amasa (20:8–10) to advance his own prospects, and even supported Adonijah in his bid to succeed David (1 Kin. 1:7). This last treachery eventually cost Joab his job and his life (2:5, 6, 28–35).

10:12, 13 Joab's exhortation, be of good courage, and let us be strong, is reminiscent of God's charge to Joshua at the beginning of the conquest (Josh. 1:6, 7). may the LORD do what is good in His sight: Having done his best to prepare for the battle, Joab took confidence in the sovereignty of God.

10:14, 15 As the battle turned against the Syrians, the people of Ammon fled for shelter behind their city walls. The city refers to Rabbah (11:1), the capital of the Ammonites.

10:16, 17 Hadadezer ruled the Aramean kingdom of Zobah, which extended north of Damascus (8:3). The River refers to the Euphrates, designated by God as the northeast boundary of the Promised Land (Gen. 15:18). The 1780–mile-long Euphrates River rises in the mountains of Armenia in modern Turkey and eventually joins the Tigris to empty into the Persian Gulf. With some uncertainty, Helam has been identified with Alma, 35 miles east of the Sea of Galilee. Shobach is also spelled "Shopach" in 1 Chr. 19:16.

10:18 seven hundred charioteers: According to 1 Chr. 19:18, “seven thousand” charioteers were killed. One of these texts must be the result of a copyist’s error. Probably seven hundred is correct.

10:19 All the kings who had been vassal rulers under Hadadezer transferred their allegiance to David. The word served indicates that they submitted to Israel’s authority and brought them tribute (8:2).

The Season of War

As any military strategist knows, the advantage is usually to the aggressor—the army that takes the offensive and uses the element of surprise. For that reason, ancient kings tended to make war in the spring of the year (2 Sam. 11:1), when road conditions were most favorable and troops could move quickly and without warning to an enemy. In Palestine, the rainy season occurs during the cool winter months. Summers are very hot, and the fall is marked by unpredictable thunderstorms off the Mediterranean. Thus the spring was the best season for kings to engage in warfare.

11:1–27 This chapter marks a low point in David's career. He yielded to temptation and committed adultery with Bathsheba. This sin led to another, the murder of David's remarkably faithful soldier, Uriah, Bathsheba's husband.

11:1 Kings in the ancient Middle East went to battle in the spring of the year, when they could be assured of good weather and an abundance of food along the way. David sent Joab and his army to besiege the Ammonite capital of Rabbah. But instead of going off to war with his army, David remained at Jerusalem.

11:2 from the roof he saw a woman bathing: In ancient times, Israelite houses had an enclosed courtyard. Bathsheba was actually in her own house. very beautiful: Scripture rarely describes the physical appearance of people, but both Bathsheba and David (1 Sam. 16:12) are described as being of exceptionally fine appearance.

11:3 Bathsheba means "Daughter of Sheba." In 1 Chr. 3:5, her name is given as Bathshua.

11:4 she came to him: David was using his power as king to take advantage of Uriah's wife. It is difficult to know what Bathsheba's part was in all of this. cleansed from her impurity: Lev. 15:19–24 called for seven days of purification following a woman's monthly period.

11:5, 6 told David: In Lev. 20:10 the command is clear that both parties in an adulterous relationship were to be put to death. But in practice, a woman who became pregnant might be forced to bear the shame and guilt alone. Bathsheba's situation was precarious because it would have been known that her husband was off at war.

11:7 David's approach to Uriah was casual, ordinary—and entirely feigned.

11:8–10 Go down to your house and wash your feet: David encouraged Uriah to visit his wife. It is likely that David's words, "wash your feet," meant that Uriah should sleep with his wife that night. The gift of food was given by David for Uriah and Bathsheba to enjoy together, to encourage them to be intimate.

11:11–13 The ark accompanied the army on their military campaign (15:24; 1 Sam. 4:3).

11:14–17 Whatever his thoughts, David is desperate now. One sin leads to another. Something unthinkable now becomes a possibility and a plan of action. David now acts in deceit and treachery.

11:14, 15 How sad that David would use the dangers of war to achieve his own ends, that he would send to his death an innocent man, and that he would have no thought of God, while Uriah was consumed with righteousness.

11:16–18 Valiant means outstanding in battle. David sent Uriah to where he thought the fighting would be fiercest.

11:19, 20 charged the messenger: Joab anticipated David's anger over the loss of life and the questions he would ask about why this was allowed to happen.

11:21, 22 Abimelech the son of Jerubbesheth refers to the son of Gideon. Jerubbesheth is also called Jerubbaal or Gideon (Judg. 6:32). Abimelech's death during the siege of Thebez is recorded in Judg. 9:50–55. Was it not a woman: For a soldier to die at the hand of a woman was regarded as practically a fate worse than death (Judg. 9:54).

11:23, 24 The report revealed that Joab did not follow David's orders exactly. David had told Joab to have Uriah killed by withdrawing soldiers from around him, leaving him to face the enemy alone. Perhaps Joab thought that this would be an obvious betrayal and would be difficult to explain to the other officers in the army. Instead, he devised a plan to have the soldiers fight near the wall. This maneuver endangered more soldiers and resulted in greater loss of life.

11:25, 26 the sword devours one as well as another: In other words, "This is war, some live and some die. Don't let it bother you." With this false bravado of nonchalance, David dismissed the messenger. What a contrast with David's responses to the message of the deaths of Jonathan and Saul (2 Sam. 1)! The pernicious work of sin works in the human heart.

11:27 when her mourning was over: Ordinarily, Israelites mourned a death for seven days (1 Sam. 31:13).

12:1, 2 There were two men: As king, David was the highest judge and the court of final appeal. The words one rich and the other poor present the story as a morality tale that would gain David's attention without raising his suspicions.

12:3 The poor man's ewe lamb was more a dearly loved pet than a farm animal. The details about sharing food and drink emphasize how precious the lamb was to the poor man.

12:4 he took the poor man's lamb: These words are reminiscent of 11:4, "David sent messengers, and took her."

12:5 David's anger was greatly aroused at the loathsome injustice that had been done. the man who has done this shall surely die: No capital crime had been committed; ordinarily, the rich man would not have been executed. Ironically, it was David who deserved to die for the crimes of adultery and murder (Lev. 20:10; 24:17).

12:6 he shall restore fourfold: David demanded that restitution be made to the poor man according to the Law (Ex. 22:1).

12:7 You are the man: It took courage and a strong commitment to the Lord for Nathan to speak these words to the king. David in his wrath could have retaliated against the prophet and had him executed. Nathan continued to present the words of God. It was the Lord who had made David king (2:4; 5:3; 1 Sam. 16:13), and it was He who had delivered David from Saul (1 Sam. 19:8–24).

12:8 your master's wives: Saul had had one wife, Ahinoam (1 Sam. 14:50), and one concubine, Rizpah (3:7). There is no indication that David married either of them after Saul's death. Since Ahinoam was the mother of David's wife Michal (1 Sam. 14:49, 50), the Law prohibited her from becoming David's wife (Lev. 18:17). The word translated wives (Heb. neshð) may also be translated "women," including the female servants and courtesans that became David's when he became king. I also would have given you much more: The grace of God to David was not something that was about to be exhausted; all David had to do was ask, and God would have granted him favor upon favor.

12:9 you despised the commandment of the LORD: David had broken the tenth, the seventh, and the sixth commandments (Ex. 20:1–17; Deut. 5:6–21), the ones about coveting, adultery, and murder. The word translated despised (Heb. baza) means "to think light of." This is the same term used of Esau, who despised his birthright (Gen. 25:34). killed him with the sword of the people of Ammon: Although David's own sword was clean, there was still blood on his hands.

An Innocent Victim

Uriah the Hittite was one of David's mighty men (23:39). The name Uriah means "Flame of the Lord" or "The Lord Is Light." The fact that he is called a Hittite suggests that he may have been a foreign mercenary who had become a worshiper of Israel's God. Immediately, a contrast is set before the reader. On the one hand there was David, the Lord's anointed, the regent of God on earth. On the other hand there was Uriah, a convert—a man who was not born in the faith of Israel but who willingly chose it for his own.

David used his authority as king to take advantage of Uriah's wife Bathsheba while Uriah was fighting a war for Israel. As a result of David's sin, Bathsheba became pregnant. David attempted to cover things up by calling Uriah home from battle. If Uriah had relations with his wife while on leave, he might believe the child was his. However, Uriah, the ever-dedicated soldier, refused to enjoy the comforts of home while his comrades were on the battlefield. In this, he showed himself to be more righteous than David. Uriah's words in 11:11 must have stung David's conscience. He had neglected his duty. Moreover, he had stolen the wife of one of his best soldiers while his warriors risked their lives for him. Yet David persisted in covering up his sin; he attempted to break Uriah's resolve by giving him too much to drink. But even the effects of alcohol did not soften Uriah's determination. Once again, he refused to enjoy the comforts offered him.

Failing to cover up his sin, David plotted the loyal soldier's death. Perhaps David could not face the shame of seeing Uriah after the warrior had learned that David had slept with his wife. David's orders—which were carried back to the battle lines by Uriah himself—were for Joab, the commander of the army, to put Uriah in the heat of battle, and then to withdraw the other soldiers so that Uriah would be left alone and killed. So Uriah died in battle.

After Uriah's death, David took Bathsheba as his wife as soon as possible, to make it appear that the child was legitimate. However, "the thing that David had done displeased the LORD" (11:27). Although David had managed to conceal his sin from the people, God knew about it all.

David's sin would not go unpunished (ch. 12). Even the King of Israel had to submit to God's discipline.

12:10, 11 The judgment pronounced on David and his family was threefold. (1) Bloodshed would persist all the days of David's life. (2) David's own family would bring adversity against him. (3) David's wives would be taken by another. These predictions of judgment were fulfilled in the violation of Tamar (13:11–14), the violent deaths of Amnon and Absalom (13:28, 29; 18:15), and Absalom's public appropriation of David's concubines (16:22).

12:12 David's sin was private, but God's discipline and correction were public.

12:13 I have sinned against the LORD: David did not attempt to rationalize his sin or to make an excuse for himself. A fuller expression of David's confession is found in Ps. 51. The LORD also has put away your sin: God accepted David's confession and extended divine forgiveness. you shall not die: This is an evidence of divine grace. David was deserving of the death penalty for adultery and murder (Lev. 20:10; Num. 35:31–33). God's grace is able to circumvent His own plan for punishment.

INSIGHT

You Are the Man!

Just as David was a man after God's own heart (1 Sam. 13:14), so Nathan was God's gift to the man after His own heart. Scripture introduces him suddenly, when David sought to build a temple to the Lord (2 Sam. 7:1, 2). Nathan revealed that God promised to establish David's dynasty, but that He wanted the construction of a temple to be left for Solomon (7:3–17).

Nathan's next appearance followed David's sin with Bathsheba. He pinpointed David's guilt with the stinging accusation, "You are the man!" Nathan's prophecy concerning David's house (12:10–12) came to pass with Amnon's rape of Tamar (13:1–20), Absalom's murder of Amnon (13:21–29), and Absalom's rebellion against his father and the violation of David's concubines (15:1–18; 16:20–23).

Nathan helped to prevent another of David's sons, Adonijah, from seizing the throne by reminding the king of his promise to make Solomon his successor (1 Kin. 1:11–27). He then assisted in the crowning of Solomon (1:32–40) before disappearing from the account.

12:14 Although David's sin was forgiven, the child born of his adulterous relationship with Bathsheba would die. David's actions had given an opportunity for the enemies of the LORD to blaspheme. The Lord could not ignore David's sins and give unbelievers an opportunity to say, "The God of Israel must not be very holy. Look how He tolerates sin in the life of the king!" While God forgives sin, He does not necessarily remove its consequences (Gal. 6:7).

12:15 The verb translated struck (Heb. nagap) is related to the noun (Heb. negep) used of the plague God brought to Egypt that caused the death of the first-born (Ex. 12:13). Here, in a sense, that plague that Yahweh had brought to Egypt so long ago now struck at the home of His king in Jerusalem. For David, like Pharaoh before him, had treated lightly the commands of God. the child: The baby seems not to have lived long enough to be named. Normally a child would be named at the time of circumcision, the eighth day (Luke 1:59).

12:16 pleaded: In this verse, we sense the heart of David in anguish before the Lord. fasted: Fasting is an expression of the intensity of a petitioner's concern. It says, "This matter is more important to me than food."

12:17 The elders of his house were the senior officials and advisors of David's royal court.

12:18, 19 The child died: There is no more grievous a line than this for a parent to hear. the servants of David were afraid: Those who had observed the intensity of David's grief before the death of his child expected that his rage would be uncontrollable when he learned that the baby had died.

12:20, 21 So David arose from the ground: Usually, we think of the process of grieving as following the death of a loved one. In David's case, his grieving began when the child became ill. Once the child was dead, there was nothing he could do but worship the Lord. he went into the house of the LORD: David left his palace and ascended Mount Moriah to worship at the tabernacle.

Public Humiliation

God promised that David's wives would be publicly violated by a member of his own household (2 Sam. 12:11, 12). This prophecy was fulfilled when Absalom lay with David's concubines (16:21, 22). However, the punishment involved more than public humiliation. It would be perceived by the public as though David had been deposed by a conquering ruler.

12:22 Who can tell: These words give us a remarkable insight into the meaning of prayer. As long as there is any possibility of God intervening in a new way, prayer should continue unabated. If one's hope is in God, then there is never the sense that it is too late until it is too late. God may intervene at the very last moment. Should He intervene and find us not still at prayer?

12:23 I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me: The child could not return to life, but David would someday join his son in death.

12:24 The name Solomon is related to the Hebrew word for peace, and means "Peaceable" or "Peaceful." the LORD loved him: God was not going to strike this child as He had the first one (v. 15). This child was God's choice.

12:25 Nathan the prophet was sent by the Lord to give Solomon the name Jedidiah, meaning "Beloved of the Lord" (v. 24). The Hebrew name is related to David's name, meaning "Beloved." The divinely sanctioned name, spoken by the prophet of the Lord, was the final symbol of God's forgiveness in the lives of David and Bathsheba.

12:26, 27 taken the city's water supply: Joab assured David that once he had done this the city could not hold out against a siege.

12:28, 29 lest I take the city: Joab wanted David to have the credit for defeating Rabbah and conquering the people of Ammon. So it was that David arrived with his elite corps and won the victory that was years in the making.

12:30 a talent of gold: The crown weighed about 75 pounds. It was an example of the opulence of the spoil from the city, which came in great abundance. It is possible that the crown was a symbol of the Ammonite god Milcom (1 Kin. 11:5).

12:31 saws and iron picks and iron axes: The foreign policy of ancient Israel was announced in Deut. 20. The Israelites were to exterminate the Canaanites and subjugate the other nations as God's judgment on the sins of those peoples. David punished the Ammonites in forced work parties with various tools and implements.

13:1 Absalom and Tamar were children of David and Maacah, daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur (3:3). Amnon, David's firstborn son, was the child of Ahinoam, the woman from Jezreel (3:2). loved her: Amnon's love for his half-sister was polluted by the passion of lust.

13:2 it was improper for Amnon to do anything to her: Marriage to a sister or half sister was forbidden by the Law of Moses (Lev. 18:11).

13:3 Jonadab was a cousin to both Amnon and Tamar. The Hebrew word translated crafty (hakam) is used elsewhere for those who are "wise," "technically skilled," or "experienced."

13:4–6 becoming thinner: Amnon's lust for his sister had made him obsessive; his was a self-destructive course of life. Sadly, he would destroy others as well. pretend to be ill: Jonadab, Amnon's shrewd cousin, devised a plan to lure unsuspecting Tamar into Amnon's bedroom. Feigning illness would be a means of gaining sympathy and avoiding the usual proprieties.

13:7–11 your brother Amnon's house: Apparently the royal princes had separate residences. This allowed Amnon to put his evil plan into action without the knowledge of the other members of the family. made cakes in his sight: Amnon was able to look from his bedroom into the courtyard where the baking was being done.

13:12 While Canaanites and foreigners might have condoned such practices, incest was forbidden among Israelites (Lev. 18:9, 11; 20:17). The words disgraceful thing translate a word (nebla) used elsewhere to refer to a grave sin or sexual offense (Gen. 34:7; Judg. 20:6).

13:13 The word translated fools is related to the word translated disgraceful thing in v. 12. he will not withhold me from you: While the Law forbade incestuous marriage (Lev. 18:11), this regulation may not always have been strictly observed. It is also possible that Tamar made this suggestion as a way of escaping her immediate danger, with no real thought to the possibility of marriage.

13:14 he forced her: The word can also mean, "he humiliated her." Victims of rape sometimes speak more strongly of their humiliation than of the physical pain they were made to suffer.

13:15 Amnon hated her exceedingly: Amnon's lustful passion, once gratified, turned to hatred. Probably there was a measure of self-hatred as well.

13:16 The words at the end of the verse, but he would not listen to her, repeat the phrasing of v. 14.

13:17 It is difficult to translate the contempt which Amnon had for Tamar. Referring to Tamar, Amnon commanded his servant in a tone one might use to speak of dumping trash.

13:18 she had on a robe of many colors: The exact meaning of this phrase is debated; recent study suggests that it refers to a long garment with sleeves.

13:19 Tamar put ashes on her head, and tore her robe: These were traditional signs of grief and mourning among peoples of the ancient Middle East (Job 1:20; 2:12). laid her hand on her head: This is another expression of mourning (Jer. 2:37). Tamar had much to mourn. She had lost her virginity. Shamed by her own brother, she was as good as dead—the prospect of marriage and family was ruined.

13:20 hold your peace … do not take this thing to heart: Absalom's words seem cold and heartless. Apparently, he wanted to avoid a public scandal. Absalom planned to take revenge, but wished to conceal his plan at that time. Desolate, the term used to describe Tamar as she lived in the home of her brother Absalom, is used of ravaged cities and ruined lands (Is. 6:11). We have no idea what the later history of Tamar was; no further information on her life is found in the Bible. It is likely that she lived the rest of her life in desolation, for a time under Absalom's protection. Later, Absalom named his daughter Tamar (14:27), perhaps in honor of his sister.

13:21, 22 David was very angry over Amnon's violation of Tamar, but did nothing to punish his son. This may have been because Amnon was David's firstborn (3:2) and was expected to succeed him on the throne. Amnon deserved the death penalty (Lev. 20:17).

13:23, 24 Absalom delayed his revenge two full years, evidently to catch Amnon off guard. Absalom planned to murder his brother to avenge his sister's rape and perhaps to enhance his own chances of making a bid for the throne. Having carefully planned the murder of his brother, Absalom invited the king's sons to a sheepshearing festival at Baal Hazor, a mountain about 15 miles north of Jerusalem. Ephraim here is not the tribe but a city about two miles south of Baal Hazor (2 Chr. 13:19; John 11:54).

13:25 David declined the invitation, offering the excuse that he did not want to be a burden on Absalom. he blessed him: David wished Absalom well. Given the outcome of the story, David's memory of his blessing on Absalom must have been a grief to him (v. 36).

13:26, 27 Why should he go with you: Absalom's request seems to have aroused David's suspicions. After all, David knew about the blood feud between the two brothers (v. 22). Nevertheless, Absalom persuaded his father to allow Amnon and the rest of the king's sons to attend the celebration.

13:28 Absalom's servants planned to attack Amnon when his heart was merry with wine—that is, after the wine had dulled his senses and put him off guard. Have I not commanded you: These words indicate that Absalom would take full responsibility for the slaying.

13:29 Fearing for their own lives, the king's sons fled. A mule, the offspring of a donkey and a horse, combines the size and strength of the horse with the surefootedness and endurance of the donkey. Although the Israelites were forbidden to breed such hybrids (Lev. 19:19), mules were imported into Israel. The mule was the preferred mount of royalty during this period (18:9; 1 Kin. 1:33).

13:30 Absalom has killed all the king's sons: The report that reached David was greatly exaggerated. This news must have been utterly shattering to David.

13:31 tore his garments: Tearing one's clothes was a sign of grief and mourning (1:11; 13:19).

13:32 Jonadab, a cousin both of Amnon and Tamar, had helped Amnon plan his encounter with Tamar (v. 3). Shimeah was David's older brother, the third son of Jesse (called Shammah in 1 Sam. 16:9; 17:13; Shimea in 1 Chr. 2:13). Jonadab knew that Absalom's treachery had been brewing ever since the violation of his sister by Amnon.

13:33 only Amnon is dead: These words of Jonadab are strange solace. It was true that only one of David's sons was dead, not all of them (v.30). Nevertheless it was still one of David's sons, and the oldest one at that. Further, the words that David should not take the thing to his heart are reminiscent of what Absalom had said to his brutalized sister (v. 20). This is little comfort for a grieving person.

13:34, 35 The statement Absalom fled is repeated three times (vv. 37, 38) to contrast Absalom's flight with the return of the rest of David's sons. The young man who was keeping watch refers to the watchman on the city walls whose job was to alert the citizens of approaching danger (Ezek. 3:17).

13:36 wept: The festival had turned to mourning. The rape of a daughter had led to the murder of a son. The disintegration of the family of David continued. The sons and servants wept. David wept.

13:37, 38 Talmai was Absalom's grandfather, the father of David's wife Maacah (3:3). He ruled as king of the Transjordan territory of Geshur, northeast of the Sea of Galilee. And David mourned for his son: This mourning must refer to Amnon, who had been killed. But it is somewhat ambiguous, placed in the context of Absalom's exile. It is possible that David's grief over the exile of Absalom was also an intense pain to him (v. 39).

13:39 As David's grief over Amnon's death gradually diminished, he longed to go to Absalom: Apparently, David wanted to see Absalom, but thought it inappropriate in view of the circumstances, or impossible due to the distance and royal commitments.

14:1–33 The subtle means whereby Joab coaxes David to call Absalom back from Geshur.

14:1 the king's heart: Joab's long association with David enabled him to know the king's thoughts. He was well aware that the king longed to be reconciled with his son, but that apart from some external prompting, he was not about to make the first move.

14:2 Tekoa, the hometown of the prophet Amos, was on the edge of the hill country, about six miles south of Bethlehem. a wise woman: Readers of the Bible are familiar with various vocations in ancient Israel, such as kings and priests, prophets and farmers. We know less about the wisdom movement. Along with other guilds, the "wise" were those who had particular skills and abilities in understanding human behavior, and they had insights into the ways in which God's world works (see the word in 13:3). The woman whom Joab brought from Tekoa must have been a well-known wise person in her region, but she was not among the wise counselors to the king, persons who would be easily recognized. The term "wise" (Heb. hakama, the feminine of hakam) suggests the idea of technical skill, aptitude, experience. This woman was experienced in dealing with human relations and skillful in reconciling differences (20:16). do not anoint yourself with oil: Olive oil was used in ancient times as a soothing lotion that made the skin and hair shine. Its use is associated with celebration and joy (Pss. 104:15; 133:2).

14:3–5 Joab gave the woman the story to tell to the king. As a wise woman (v. 2), she would know how to reply to David's responses and questions. fell on her face: The woman bowed before the king as a preliminary sign of her request for help. The same word is used for bowing before God when one comes into His presence for holy worship. my husband is dead: Although she had already described herself as a widow, these words may have been added for emotional effect.

14:6 The mention of two sons must have struck a chord in David; certainly he could not have been impassive when she described the one killing the other.

14:7 that we may execute him: The punishment for murder was death. The issue seemed clear, but the consequences for the woman were intolerable. So they would extinguish my ember: The woman used a graphic picture of the extinction of her family. The demise of a family name and the end of a surviving remnant or family line were crucial matters to the Hebrew people.

14:8 David apparently wanted to put the woman off with a promise of future action. Perhaps he was seeking to avoid having to defend the guilty son who was worthy of death. Perhaps he wanted to meet with his counselors or pray to the Lord for direction.

14:9, 10 let the iniquity be on me and on my father's house: The persistent woman expressed her willingness to bear any guilt if David would let the blood of her son go unavenged. David gave the persistent woman assurances of his protection, but was unwilling at this point to offer protection to her son.

14:11, 12 The Hebrew phrase avenger of blood joins the term sometimes translated kinsman redeemer to the word for blood. The kinsman redeemer is the protector of family rights. Here, the protector of the family would be expected to bring vengeance on one who had taken the life of a family member. Cities of refuge had been established under Moses for protection from the blood avenger in cases where the killing was accidental (Num. 35:9–34). In this case, the woman pressed David to the limit with respect to her son. David promised that not one hair of her son's head would fall to the ground.

14:13 you schemed such a thing against the people of God: She accused David of doing to the nation what her enemy was trying to do to her (v. 7)—taking away the heir to the throne. his banished one: Although not formally banished, Absalom was in his extended exile from Israel.

14:14 For we will surely die: The woman may be referring to Amnon (13:28–33). Amnon was dead, and no amount of punishment against Absalom would bring him back to life. God does not take away a life: God's will is to forgive sinners. The divine example is set in significant contrast with David, who had refused to forgive his son Absalom.

14:15 After speaking of David's treatment of Absalom, the woman returned to her story about her own family. the people have made me afraid: The woman said she was afraid that she would lose her own son to the avenger of blood (v. 7).

14:16 the man who would destroy me: Although the woman's life was not in jeopardy, the death of the son would mean the extinction of her family, depriving her of a future share in the workings of God among His people.

14:17, 18 as the angel of God: The woman suggested that the king had superhuman ability in the exercise of judgment. She used flattery and an appeal to piety to get David to act.

14:19, 20 David recognized the hand of Joab in the woman's charade. The woman explained that Joab was simply trying to be an agent for change in the relationship between David and Absalom. my Lord is wise: The wise woman knows she is not dealing with a fool. "Wise" here is the masculine term that corresponds to her as a "wise woman" (v. 2). She uses flattery to persuade David, saying that his wisdom is nearly divine: according the wisdom of the angel of God.

14:21, 22 the king has filled the request of his servant: Apparently, Joab had made other attempts to bring about the reconciliation of David and Absalom.

14:23 David's unwillingness to go himself may reflect some reluctance to forgive his son. Geshur was northeast of the Sea of Galilee. Talmai, Absalom's grandfather and the father of David's wife Maacah, ruled the region (3:3; 13:37).

14:24–26 do not let him see my face: David refused to grant an immediate audience to his son because he had not forgotten Absalom's heinous crime. his good looks: Absalom must have had the look of royalty. Many people must have viewed him as Israel's next king. By his charm and personal appeal, he later was able to lead the nation in a rebellion against his father (15:1–12). The reference to Absalom's long hair provides the background for the account of his death (18:9). Two hundred shekels was a considerable weight, about five pounds.

IN CONTEXT

A Sign of Strength

Absalom seems to have taken great pride in his hair, which apparently was so long and thick that it weighed several pounds when he cut it each year (2 Sam. 14:26). In ancient Israel, a full head of hair was considered a sign of strength and vigor. Thus Samson wore his hair long, though he did so because he was under a Nazirite vow and his hair was the secret of his strength (Judg. 13:3–5; 16:17). Baldness, on the other hand, was considered something of a disgrace (2 Kin. 2:23).

The deaths of both Samson and Absalom were related to their hair (and thus their strength). When Samson revealed to Delilah the secret of his strength, the Philistines cut his hair and paraded him in the temple of Dagon at Gaza, where he took his life in order to avenge himself (Judg. 16:15–30). Likewise, when Absalom fled from his army's defeat in the forest of Ephraim, his head caught in a terebinth tree, and he was dragged off his mule. Many believe that his hair was the cause of this accident, which made him easy prey for his pursuers (2 Sam. 18:9–15).

14:27, 28 In addition to three sons, Absalom had a daughter whom he named Tamar, perhaps after his sister (13:1). Apparently, Absalom's sons died in infancy. When he set up a pillar in Jerusalem to memorialize his name, he mentioned having no sons (18:18).

14:29–31 Joab's failure to heed Absalom's summons seems inconsistent with his earlier effort to bring about Absalom's return (v. 22). Joab's refusal to go to Absalom no doubt contributed to Absalom's simmering resentment of the royal house.

14:32 Come here, so that I may send you to the king: Perhaps Joab resented being treated like Absalom's servant. if there is iniquity in me, let him execute me: Absalom pleaded that his offense either be punished or completely forgiven.

14:33 the king kissed Absalom: The kiss was the symbol of their reconciliation. Although David and Absalom were reconciled, the seeds of bitterness that had been sown would soon bear the fruit of conspiracy and rebellion. David's protracted delay in coming to terms with his son ultimately led to disaster. For the moment, though, there was peace.

15:1—18:33 This section records the conspiracy and rebellion of Absalom, and it relates how David was forced to flee from Jerusalem when his son usurped the throne. This is a classic illustration of "you reap what you sow." David reaped the fruit of his long delay in coming to terms with Absalom. David had been in the unhappy position of having to forgive one son whom he loved, for killing another son whom he loved, who had raped a daughter whom he loved. Nonetheless, his harsh and unforgiving treatment of Absalom (14:24–32) was regarded as an insult that led the son to an act of treason.

15:1–3 chariots and horses, and fifty men to run before him: This royal treatment was intended to attract attention to Absalom and to remind the people of his relationship to David as heir to the throne (1 Kin. 1:5). The runners would announce the coming of his chariot. Absalom would stand along the way leading to the royal palace, welcoming and showing interest in visitors who had come to Jerusalem to present their cases before the king. good and right: Absalom ingratiated himself to the people. Only those who really had a complaint would make the arduous trip to Jerusalem in the hope that they might find favor with the king. When they were told that they were right, but that the present administration would not help, their frustration was only increased. no deputy of the king to hear you: The implication of Absalom's remark was that David was too busy to hear the case, yet too jealous of his own authority to delegate someone to deal with the concern.

15:4 Administration of justice, the proper relationship between people in society according to God's standard of righteousness, was a major concern of OT rulers and prophets (8:15; 1 Kin. 3:28; 10:9; Is. 1:17; Amos 5:24). Absalom was playing on the people's emotions when he presented himself as the answer to their need for justice, but had none to give them.

15:5, 6 When anyone approached Absalom with a show of reverence or respect, the prince would extend his hand, as one would with an equal. In ancient times, a kiss could serve as a greeting—a sign of friendship, affection, and loyalty (19:39). Absalom stole the hearts: Through personal charm and promises, Absalom managed to win the affection and loyalty of the Israelites.

A Theft of Hearts at the Gates of Justice

One way to gain a following is to criticize a public system and then lead people to believe that you could fix the problem if given the power. This was the strategy by which Absalom "stole the hearts of the men of Israel" (2 Sam. 15:6).

Absalom chose Israel's justice system as his platform from which to attack his father, David. As king, David was ultimately responsible for overseeing legal matters in the kingdom. Apparently the system did not function as efficiently as it might have, a fact that Absalom exploited (15:3). He placed himself near "the gate" (15:2), which was either the city gate, where commercial, civic, and judicial business was transacted, or the palace gate. There he intercepted people coming to David seeking legal redress.

Absalom, perhaps fearing that true justice might assert itself against his treasonous scheme, employed fifty bodyguards, along with a contingent of chariots and horses. David should have suspected such a large battalion of men guarding a known rebel. Yet apparently he ignored the threat that was stalking his reign right outside, in the gates of justice.

15:7, 8 Absalom sought David's permission to move to Hebron, about 20 miles south of Jerusalem, where he would have more freedom to start a rebellion. Since Absalom was born in Hebron (3:2, 3), it would probably not seem unusual to David that he would want to fulfill his vow there. Geshur in Syria was the region northeast of the Sea of Galilee.

15:9 How hollow the words Go in peace must have sounded later to David, as his memory cycled them in his mind. He sent his son with this blessing to Hebron for a recommitment to Yahweh and for His service. Actually, he had released his son to do his worst to effect his own destruction.

15:10 sent spies: Away from the attention of David and those loyal to him, Absalom began to enlist conspirators and sympathizers to join him in the forthcoming revolt. The slogan Absalom reigns in Hebron purposely alluded to David's kingship. David had been anointed king in Hebron (2:1–7; 5:1–5).

15:11 Absalom invited two hundred unsuspecting men to join him in Hebron for the supposed fulfillment of his vow (vv. 7, 8). No doubt he hoped they would give their support to him when they realized what was happening.

15:12 Ahithophel was from Giloh, a city in the mountains of Judah (Josh. 15:51).

15:13 The hearts of the men of Israel: By his deceptive practices, Absalom had gained the sympathy and support of the Israelites. One of the reasons he may have been able to do this was David's troubling rise to power. When David's power in Judah was confined to Hebron (ch. 2), he was resented by the supporters of Saul in the rest of the country. Old suspicions and resentments could be stroked again by a person who knew how to use people to his own advantage—a disreputable ability in which Absalom excelled.

15:14 Arise, and let us flee: David seems to have been taken completely by surprise. He was unprepared to thwart Absalom's rebellion. He fled from Jerusalem to avoid unnecessary risk of life and the tragedy of a military assault on the capital city.

15:15, 16 The loyalty of David's servants must have been a real encouragement in a time of such disloyalty from David's own family.

15:17 After leaving Jerusalem, David and the royal family stopped at the east edge of town before crossing the Kidron (v. 23), to allow his royal bodyguard to pass in review before him (v. 18). The need to flee the palace was immediate. But before those with him dashed off in headlong flight, David gathered them together to take stock of matters and to plan their next move.

15:18 The Cherethites and Pelethites were elite units of David's army. These trusted troops of David were not Israelites, but mercenaries from a variety of nations, possibly Crete and Philistia. They had been with David for years, owed him their loyalty, and would defend him and his family to the death. Gittites were either Philistine mercenary soldiers whom David had recruited during his stay in Gath (1 Sam. 21:10–15) or David's original followers from Gath (1 Sam. 23:13).

15:19 remain with the king: David gave his foreign mercenaries the chance to leave him. As foreigners, they were not obligated to fight in the coming civil war.

15:20 you came only yesterday: This is an obvious exaggeration, but reflects the fact that Ittai's association with David had been brief. He did not have the long-term relationship with David that the troops mentioned in v. 18 had. Mercy and truth be with you: David used the covenantal language of the biblical faith in his blessing on Ittai.

15:21, 22 As the LORD lives: With these words, the foreign military officer declared his abiding faith in and commitment to the God of Israel. These are words of the strongest oath, and they distinguish the true believer in various periods of Israel's history (1 Kin. 17:1, 12; 18:10). whether in death or life: Ittai's words are similar to those of another foreigner who came to faith in God—Ruth of Moab (Ruth 1:16, 17). Ittai's later appointment as commander of a third of the army (18:2) was David's way of showing his gratitude for such loyalty.

15:23 The Brook Kidron is a small stream that flows through the valley separating Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives during the rainy season (October through March). The way of the wilderness refers to the road leading through the wilderness of Judah to Jericho and down to the fords of the Jordan River.

(Heb. aron) (2 Sam. 6:2; 15:24; Ex. 25:10; 1 Sam. 4:3) Strong’s #727: This Hebrew word can be translated “chest” (2 Kin. 12:9) or “sarcophagus” (Gen. 50:26), but usually appears in the phrase aron haberith, which means “ark of the covenant.” The ark was a wooden chest overlaid with gold (Ex. 25:10–22), housing the Ten Commandments (Ex. 40:20), Aaron’s staff, and a pot of manna (Heb. 9:4). It sat in the Most Holy Place as a reminder of Israel’s covenant with God and His presence among them. When the Israelites became careless with the ark (1 Sam. 4:1–11), God allowed it to be captured in order to demonstrate that His covenant relationship with them transcended symbols and superstitions. What He required was continual obedience to His covenant and a contrite heart surrendered to Him (Ps. 51:17; Is. 57:15).

15:24–26 Zadok and Abiathar were the main priests functioning during David’s reign. They were loyal to David. They wanted to bring the ark, which David had brought to Jerusalem with a great celebration (ch. 6), back into the city. It was David who was going into exile, not the Lord; the symbol of God’s presence with His people would remain in the place of worship for the entire community. He will bring me back: David committed the entire situation to the sovereign care and will of God. Contrast David’s submission to the Lord’s will to Absalom’s deceitful words (v. 8). His dwelling place refers to the tabernacle that had been set up for the ark (7:6).

15:27 Are you not a seer: A prophet could come from any tribe, even from among the sons of Aaron. Thus, a priest could also be a prophet of the Lord (Zech. 1:1). David wanted the priests to remain in Jerusalem to minister in the tabernacle and intercede before God for him. Perhaps God would grant them a message that they could relay to him.

15:28 The plains of the wilderness refers to the Jordan valley near Jericho. until word comes from you to inform me: As vv. 35, 36 further explain, Zadok and Abiathar were to remain in Jerusalem to gather information for David. They could return a message from the Lord as well as news from the enemy camp.

15:29 back to Jerusalem: It was David who was going into exile, not the Lord. The symbol of God’s presence with His people would continue to be in the place of worship for the community.

15:30 head covered … barefoot: These were outward signs of mourning (Jer. 14:3; Ezek. 24:17). The Mount of Olives was located east of Jerusalem.

15:31 Ahithophel was Bathsheba's grandfather (11:3). A wise counselor (16:23), he had been in David's service (v. 12) but had switched his allegiance to Absalom. David's prayer was for his enemy to be confused. The name Ahithophel may mean "Brother of Folly." If so, it may have been a name given to him later on account of his defection from David.

15:32–34 where he worshiped God: Prior to the building of the Jerusalem temple, there was apparently a place of worship located on the Mount of Olives. Hushai proved to be a loyal friend of David (15:37; 16:16). Archite was the name of a family living on the southern boundary of Ephraim, between Bethel and Ataroth (Josh. 16:2). Hushai's torn robe and the dust on his head were signs of grief (1:11; 13:19). Rather than joining David's followers, Hushai was directed to return to Jerusalem to thwart the counsel that Ahithophel would be giving to Absalom.

15:35, 36 Hushai was given a key role in relaying information about the enemy to David through Zadok and Abiathar and their sons, Ahimaaz and Jonathan.

15:37 The word friend can mean a counselor or an advisor (1 Kin. 4:5).

16:1 Ziba, a long-time servant of both Saul and Mephibosheth, assisted David and his party with provisions for their initial flight. Summer fruits probably refers to fresh figs (Mic. 7:1) or fig cakes (1 Sam. 25:18). skin of wine: In ancient times, wine was carried in animal-skin containers. The skin expanded with the liquid when it fermented (Matt. 9:17).

16:2 The donkeys are for the king's household: Since a couple of donkeys (v. 1) would not provide sufficient transportation for the royal family, they might have been intended for David's wives to ride in turn.

16:3 Your master's son is a reference to Mephibosheth. Ziba had been in the service of Jonathan, father of Mephibosheth (9:2, 9). Today the house of Israel will restore the kingdom of my father to me: According to Ziba, Mephibosheth was staying in Jerusalem in hopes that Absalom's rebellion would result in his elevation to the throne. Even though David had shown special concern for Mephibosheth (ch. 9), the latter may have had some thoughts that this might be the time to advance the cause of the dynasty of Saul.

16:4 In the bleakness of David's experience when fleeing from his son Absalom, the loyal statements and actions of "outsiders" must have been comforting. First there had been the courageous action of Ittai, the Philistine from Gath, to align himself resolutely with David (2 Sam. 15:19–23). Now, with nothing to gain in the present circumstances, an aged servant of Saul brought donkeys, food, and wine as well as a warning concerning his own master, who was plotting to use the confusion of the present experience to his own advantage.

16:5 Bahurim was near Jerusalem, east of the Mount of Olives (3:16). Shimei the son of Gera was a distant relative of Saul (19:16–23; 1 Kin. 2:8, 9, 36–46). cursing continuously: These were not simple insults or merely the words of someone with a foul mouth. Shimei was asking God to destroy David (Num. 22:6).

16:6 threw stones: Throwing stones is a gesture of contempt, as if the fleeing king were merely a stray dog. Stones can also be dangerous weapons, as is shown by the fact that stoning was a normal means of capital punishment among the Hebrews (1 Kin. 21:13). All the mighty men refers to David's royal troops and bodyguards (17:8).

16:7, 8 Come out might be rephrased, "Go out" (into banishment and exile) or "Begone!" You bloodthirsty man: David was a man of war, and he was guilty of killing Uriah (11:14–27). But Shimei blamed the demise of Saul's family on David (v. 5)—an unjust charge (ch. 1). You rogue, literally "man of Belial," is an expletive against David that means worthless or useless. The blood of the house of Saul may refer to the murders of Ishbosheth and Abner, although David was completely innocent of their deaths (3:22—4:12).

16:9 Abishai was a nephew of David, the son of David's sister Zeruiah (1 Chr. 2:16). He was consistently devoted to David (19:21, 22; 1 Sam. 26:8). In the ancient Middle East, a dead dog was something utterly contemptible (3:8).

16:10 What have I to do with you: This idiom means that David did not share the feelings and views of Abishai. sons of Zeruiah: Apparently David considered that Joab, also a son of Zeruiah (1 Chr. 2:16), would share Abishai's willingness to kill Shimei. the LORD has said to him, 'Curse David': David might have remembered God's promise "to raise up adversity" for his sin with Bathsheba (12:11) and took Shimei's cursing as part of this discipline.

16:11 David argued that if his own son showed him no loyalty, there was no reason to expect respect from the Benjamite, that is, a person from the tribe of Saul.

16:12–14 the LORD will repay me with good: David hoped that the Lord would look upon his repentant heart and render a blessing to compensate for Shimei's curse.

16:15 Ahithophel, David's former counselor (15:12), had switched his allegiance to Absalom (15:31). In this context, the men of Israel refers to Absalom's followers.

16:16–18 Long live the king: Hushai deceptively professed loyalty to Absalom. In fact, these words could easily have applied to David for he was still the divinely sanctioned king. By using his words carefully, Hushai was able to lead his hearers to think he was praising Absalom, when in fact he was shouting for David. your friend: Absalom apparently was referring to Hushai's title, "David's friend" (15:37). whom the LORD: With these well-planned words, Hushai professed allegiance to whomever the Lord would choose as king. his I will be: Hushai's real allegiance was with David, who he knew was God's chosen one.

16:19–21 in the presence of his son: Hushai wished to imply that his allegiance to Absalom was the natural outgrowth of his loyalty to David. It was appropriate for a son to succeed his father, and for supporters of the dynasty to give their allegiance to the new king. Hushai was going to considerable effort to convince Absalom of his support. His words are capable of more than one meaning; David had other sons, and one would surely succeed him some day. Even the last phrase so will I be in your presence is capable of more than one meaning. Hushai was able to say, in these words, that he would continue to be loyal to David even while in Absalom's service.

16:22 Concubines were unofficial wives. In ancient times, taking over a king's harem was a recognized means of claiming the throne. When Ahithophel advised Absalom to have sexual relations with David's concubines, he knew that this would finalize the breach between Absalom and David. It was an irrevocable action. Up to this point, Absalom would have been able to back away from all that he had done and still be reconciled to his father. But once he violated the harem of David, he was set on a course of sure and final alienation from his father. The tent that Absalom pitched in the sight of all Israel was probably a bridal tent. Absalom made the people of Israel fully aware that he was engaging in sexual relations with his father's concubines. Putting the tent on the roof of the palace was an insolent act that was guaranteed to stir the populace one way or another.

16:23 at the oracle of God: Ahithophel had acquired such a reputation that his counsel was taken to be equivalent to a word from the Lord. He was not a prophet, but his words were received as if they were prophetic.

17:1, 2 Ahithophel realized that the fleeing king was in a vulnerable situation. He counseled Absalom to pursue and kill David and his followers in order to eliminate any chance that David would regain the throne. The twelve thousand men that he asked for would likely have had an easy time defeating the weary troops of David. I will strike only the king: Despite his celebrated wisdom, Ahithophel underestimated the loyalty of David's crack troops. Ahithophel might have been able to defeat David in a surprise raid, but David's loyal warriors would not have scattered.

17:3, 4 I will bring back all the people: Ahithophel tried to persuade Absalom that if he killed only David, the people would align themselves with Absalom, and peace would be restored in the land.

17:5, 6 Although Absalom was pleased with Ahithophel's counsel (v. 4), he did not accept it immediately. He summoned Hushai (16:16) to get a second opinion on the matter.

“advice”

(Heb. etsah) (2 Sam. 17:7; Job 38:2; Ps. 1:1; Prov. 8:14) Strong’s #6098: This Hebrew term has two primary meanings: “counsel” and “plan.” Both senses are used of God (Jer. 32:19; Is. 5:19) and man (2 Kin. 18:20; Prov. 20:5). While the counsel of the Lord stands forever, He brings the counsel of the nations to nothing (Ps. 33:10, 11; Prov. 21:30). One of the psalmists prayed to be guided by God’s counsel, a prayer not made by the rebellious people of Isaiah’s day (Ps. 73:24; Is. 30:1). The Hebrew kings typically sought counsel from advisors who were old, experienced, and wise; however, Rehoboam tragically sought out the counsel of his peers (1 Kin. 12:8, 13; Ezek. 7:26). Solomon describes those who heed counsel as being wise (Prov. 12:15; 19:20), and the psalmists proclaimed their reliance on God’s counsel (Pss. 16:7; 73:24).

17:7 Hushai, David’s confidant, set about to frustrate Ahithophel’s wise counsel. He realized that the plan proposed by Ahithophel would prove fatal for David. The words at this time leave room for an appreciation of Ahithophel’s past counsel and might have been intended to deter suspicion over his critical evaluation.

17:8 Mighty men (Heb. gibborim) are heroic fighting men. like a bear robbed of her cubs: Hushai used a strong simile to depict the ferocity of David and his men. There is no more dangerous foe in the woods than a mother bear who believes her cubs to be in danger. will not camp with the people: Hushai suggested that David, as an experienced warrior, would not camp with the civilian refugees. He would know that doing so would leave him vulnerable to attack and capture.

17:9 hidden in some pit: The countryside of Judah was riddled with caves, ravines, and hiding places. a slaughter: Hushai suggested that David could not be taken without some loss of life, and this would give rise to the rumor that Absalom was suffering a severe defeat.

17:10 Valiant (Heb. hayil) means well-trained and able to fight. will melt completely: Hushai suggested that even the bravest of Absalom’s soldiers would yield to panic when facing David and his veterans.

17:11, 12 all Israel: Hushai advised that Absalom was going to need a larger army than he presently had, and that Absalom himself should lead the force into battle. Dan to Beersheba means the whole country, from Dan in the north to Beersheba in the south, a distance of about 150 miles. like the sand: Hushai used this figure of speech to describe the army that would be needed to destroy David's forces. Hushai knew it would take time to gather so many men, and that time was what David needed the most. in some place: The implication of this remark is that Absalom did not know where David was hiding. as the dew falls on the ground: Because of Israel's proximity to the Mediterranean, the land is noted for having a significant and consistent dewfall, which falls on everything that is exposed. In that way, Hushai promised, the vast new army will be able to overwhelm all their enemies.

17:13 The river means any river, not necessarily the Jordan.

17:14 For the LORD had purposed to: This is a rare example of the narrator "intruding" into the story line to explain specifically how God worked in these events. Often we are left to draw our own conclusions.

17:15 Zadok and Abiathar the priests had stayed in Jerusalem at David's request (15:24–29). David had arranged for them to gather information about Absalom's activities and forward it to him through their sons (15:35, 36).

17:16 The plains of the wilderness means the Jordan valley in the vicinity of Jericho (15:28). Hushai told David to cross the Jordan since he could not be sure that Absalom would act on his counsel.

17:17, 18 Jonathan and Ahimaaz were the sons of Abiathar and Zadok. En Rogel was a spring or well south of Jerusalem at the junction of the Hinnom and Kidron valleys (Josh. 15:7; 18:16). a female servant: The young men would arouse suspicion by coming into the city, so a woman servant served as an intermediary. a lad saw them: The efforts of Jonathan and Ahimaaz to avoid detection were unsuccessful. Bahurim was on the east side of the Mount of Olives (16:5). The word translated well may also refer to a pit or cistern. Apparently, there was no water in it at this time.

17:19–22 Although the Jordan was not a large river, crossing it could be dangerous, even at the fords. David was safer once he got his family and followers across that barrier. There is a certain sadness in what David had to do. While the tribal allotments of ancient Israel included land on both sides of the Jordan, there was always an emotional understanding that the "real" land of Israel was west of the Jordan. David was truly in exile. Later, his enemies would charge him with having "fled from the land" (19:9).

17:23 Ahithophel committed suicide when he learned that his advice was not being followed. He apparently realized that Absalom's cause was doomed, and that when David returned he would be put to death as a disloyal subject.

17:24 Mahanaim was formerly Ishbosheth's capital (2:8). It was east of the Jordan and north of the Jabbok.

17:25 Absalom put his army under the command of Amasa, since Joab had remained loyal to David. who had gone in to Abigail: This is not the usual phrase for marriage, perhaps indicating that Abigail did not leave her father's authority completely.

17:26 Gilead refers to the mountainous region east of the Jordan and between the Yarmuk valley to the north and the Jabbok valley to the south. Gilead was famous in biblical times for its forests (Jer. 22:6), pasture lands (Num. 32:1–4), and the medicinal balms made from its plants (Jer. 8:22; 46:11).

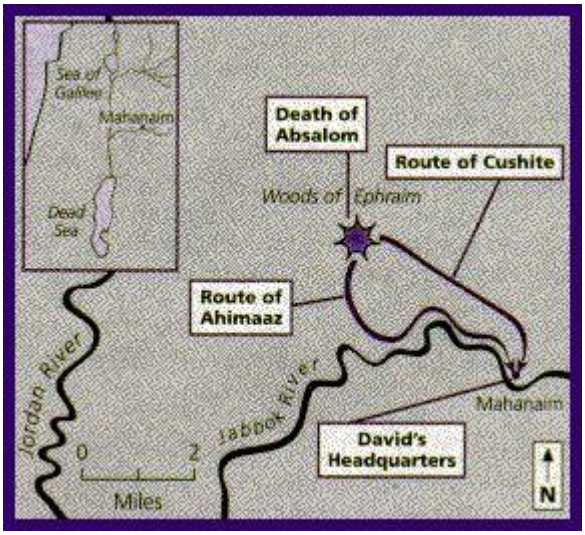
IN PLACE

Why Ahimaaz Outran the Cushite

Knowledge about the geography near Mahanaim, where David awaited word of the battle with Absalom (2 Sam. 17:27; 18:4–6), helps to explain how Ahimaaz arrived before the Cushite messenger (18:24–31).

The Cushite, probably an Ethiopian (2 Chr. 14:12), was apparently a swift and powerful runner. In fact, he may have been retained in Joab's army as an experienced herald (foot runner bearing a message). But he chose the direct route from the battlefield to Mahanaim. This took him over rugged terrain, as the city lay in a steep gorge carved out by the Jabbok River.

Ahimaaz was also a renowned runner (2 Sam. 18:27) and an experienced messenger, having already shuttled messages to David from Jerusalem during the rebellion (15:27, 36). Perhaps Ahimaaz was more familiar with the terrain, for he chose the "way of the plain" (18:23), the smooth riverbed of the Jabbok. The route was less direct but easier to run than that of the Cushite. As a result, Ahimaaz arrived first. Even so, he failed to tell David the sad news of Absalom's death.



17:27, 28 When David arrived in the fortified city of Mahanaim, he found a gracious reception. Shobi was a vassal king under David who ruled Rabbah, the capital of Ammon. Lo Debar was about ten miles south of the Sea of Galilee, east of the Jordan river in the Jordan valley (9:4). Barzillai was an old man of great wealth (19:31–39; 1 Kin. 2:7).

17:29 The rulers showed compassion to David and his weary followers. Jesus taught that kindness done to others in need would not be forgotten (Matt. 25:34–36).

18:1 To prepare for battle, David counted and reviewed his fighting forces. captains of thousands: Although only a small contingent of troops left Jerusalem with David, other loyal followers soon rallied to his cause.

18:2 David divided his men into three companies—a frequent military tactic in ancient times (Judg. 7:16; 1 Sam. 11:11). Abishai, the oldest son of David's sister Zeruiah (1 Chr. 2:16), was noted for his brave but impetuous spirit (3:30; 16:9; 1 Sam. 26:6–9). Joab, the younger brother of Abishai, had become commander of David's army as a result of his heroic leadership in the capture of Jerusalem (1 Chr. 11:4–6). Little is known of Ittai except that he was strongly committed to serving David and the Lord (15:19–22).

18:3, 4 You shall not go out: Although David wanted to accompany his men into battle (v. 2), he was persuaded not to go, both for his own protection and for the safety of Mahanaim (17:27). you are worth ten thousand of us: The Hebrew text underlying this phrase is somewhat cryptic. It may be a comparative statement, as in our translation, saying that David is worth more than the army (compare Ruth 4:15). The phrasing could also be read as an exaggerative flourish: "(David need not go because) now there are ten thousand like us."

18:5, 6 the woods of Ephraim: The battle took place in a dense forest north of the Jabbok river, east of the Jordan.

18:7, 8 Absalom's newly organized army, the people of Israel, were no match for the experienced soldiers of David. the woods devoured: Because of the rugged nature of the terrain and dense growth in the forest, more deaths resulted from the pursuit than from actual combat.

18:9, 10 The terebinth, sometimes translated oak or elm, was a strong tree, native to the land of Israel. It grows to a height of around 35 feet.

18:11 ten shekels: The shekel was the basic unit of weight, equal to 11.3 grams or about a half ounce. The belt was part of a soldier's equipment (1 Sam. 18:4; 1 Kin. 2:5).

18:12–15 against the king's son: The soldier had not forgotten David's command not to harm Absalom (v. 5). Since the spears did not kill Absalom immediately (v. 15), the word translated heart may refer to Absalom's trunk.

18:16 Joab blew the trumpet to signal the army to stop its pursuit. The death of Absalom meant the end of the rebellion. The trumpet was a ram's horn or shofar (2:28; 6:15).

18:17 Rather than returning Absalom's body to Jerusalem for honorable burial, Joab had it buried in a large pit in the forest. The heap of stones that covered the grave may have been symbolic of a stoning, the legal penalty due a rebel son (Deut. 21:20, 21).

18:18 The King's Valley was near Jerusalem (Gen. 14:17). to this day: The great monument that Absalom had erected for himself was still in existence when the narrator wrote this section of Second Samuel.

18:19, 20 Ahimaaz with Jonathan had carried the message from Zadok and Abiathar, urging David to flee across the Jordan (17:20, 21). The word avenged is used here in the sense of "delivered."

18:21–23 Cushite means someone of the land from Cush, the remote region of what is today southern Egypt and Sudan. let me also run: Ahimaaz could not be restrained from also running to David with the good news of victory. The plain was the floor of the Jordan valley. Ahimaaz took a longer route, but avoided the hilly terrain on the road taken by the Cushite.

A Royal Turns Out Wrong

The tragic account of David's son Absalom is a story of …

• appearance. Apparently he was the most handsome man in all Israel. His most notable feature was his thick, long hair, which he cut annually. Its weight was said to be 200 shekels, or several pounds (2 Sam. 14:25, 26).

• affluence. As a son of the king, he enjoyed the benefits of a royal family whose empire was on the rise. For example, Hiram of Tyre had built David a palace of cedar (5:11; 7:1, 2). Absalom may have had his own home at Baal Hazor, several miles north of Jerusalem, where he employed sheepshearers (13:23).

• advantage. He was next in line to the throne after his half brothers Amnon and Chileab. He also must have had a special place in his father's heart, for even after Absalom took Amnon's life, David longed to be with his son (13:39).

• anger. When Amnon violated Absalom's beautiful sister, Tamar, Absalom took revenge by luring Amnon to his country home, where he had his servants kill him after dinner (13:1–29).

• ambition. Reinstated after two years of exile, Absalom began building a power base among the people, right under the nose of David (15:1–6). When the time was right, he launched a rebellion to depose his father and rule in his place (15:7–18). His ultimate act of defiance was to violate his father's concubines, which in effect meant that he had assumed the throne (16:20–22).

• anguish. Under the seasoned command of Joab, David's troops severely defeated Absalom's army and, through an odd set of circumstances, ended Absalom's life tragically (18:6–15).

18:24 two gates: The city of Mahanaim evidently had a double gate. Between the outer and inner gates there were probably stone benches. The roof over the gate refers to the gatehouse or fortress located on the wall over the city gate. The watchman at the gate was responsible to warn the city of an approaching army and to announce the arrival of important visitors. Lifted his eyes is a common Hebrew idiom that means "looked" (Gen. 22:4).

18:25, 26 If he is alone: The fact that only one runner was approaching led David to assume that the news was good. Perhaps he assumed that a group of men running toward the gate would have indicated a rout. Yet the approach of another man complicated the picture.

18:27, 28 All is well: The messenger's greeting was shalom, the word usually translated peace. your God: Ahimaaz recognized God's strong association with David.

18:29, 30 Is the young man Absalom safe: David expressed his first concern, his interest in the welfare of his son. Ahimaaz did not give a straight answer to David, though he knew that Absalom was dead (v. 20).

18:31, 32 the LORD has avenged: Like Ahimaaz (v. 28), the Cushite gave God credit for delivering David. Furthermore he gave an honest answer to David's question about Absalom, although his words were carefully worded so as to soften the blow.

18:33 Was deeply moved (Heb. ragaz) can mean "quaked" or "quivered." David was overcome with sorrow. O Absalom my son, my son: The repetition of these words expresses clearly David's anguish.

19:1–3 the victory that day was turned into mourning: David's unrestrained expression of grief over the death of his son turned the well-deserved victory celebration into a day of mourning, not so much for Absalom himself, but for the grief brought upon David by his death (18:33). the people stole back into the city: What a description for the return of victorious warriors! Like cowards who had fled from battle, David's soldiers crept back into the city of Mahanaim (17:27), hoping to escape notice.

19:4 David covered his face as an expression of mourning (15:30). my son: His words, which were so touching when first announced (18:33), take on a grating sound when repeated many times.

19:5, 6 you have disgraced all your servants: Joab argued that by honoring his rebel son and neglecting his loyal soldiers, David had shamed and embarrassed those who had served him well. The words your enemies is literally "those who hate you." The words your friends is literally "those who love you." Princes refers to the captains of the army.

19:7 Speak comfort may be rephrased "speak to the heart." David would have to speak words of encouragement if he expected his troops to continue their support of his kingship.

19:8 The gate was the primary meeting place in ancient cities. So all the people came before the king: Although not directly stated, the context implies that David followed Joab's counsel by expressing appreciation to his loyal troops and faithful followers. For everyone of Israel had fled to his tent: This parenthetical note indicates that the rebellion ended and Absalom's followers returned home.

19:9, 10 The movement to restore David to power was not unanimous. Some Israelites thought that because he had fled from the land, David lost his right to rule. There may also have been some fear that David would avenge himself on those who had supported Absalom.

19:11 Zadok and Abiathar were priests who had remained in Jerusalem at David's request during the rebellion (15:24–29). The elders of Judah were reluctant to call David back to Jerusalem, perhaps because of their part in Absalom's insurrection (15:10, 11). David asked his friends, the priests, to begin the movement to invite David back to his throne. Apparently, he did not want to come into Jerusalem without public support for his rule.

19:12 My brethren refers to the elders of Judah (v. 11). David knew that he needed the support of his own tribe and its leaders to resume his leadership over the nation. Without their full support there was no hope for the renewal of his kingship.

19:13 Amasa, David's nephew, had commanded the army of Absalom (17:25). David offered him Joab's position as commander-in-chief of David's army. This offer was intended to secure the allegiance of Amasa and the rebel army, as well as to discipline Joab for killing Absalom against his orders (18:14, 15).

19:14 David's acts of diplomacy were effective; he was invited to return as king. The fact that David was the anointed of the Lord meant that God would ensure that David would be restored. But David could not simply wait in exile in a foreign land. He had to act on the belief that God would continue to work His will.

19:15 Gilgal, the first place the Israelites camped after they crossed the Jordan (Josh. 4:19, 20), was about a mile from Jericho.

19:16 Shimei, who had cursed David when he was forced to leave Jerusalem, no doubt feared that David would punish him for this outrageous behavior (16:5–8). He hurried to meet the king so he could make amends.

19:17 a thousand men of Benjamin: This large contingent was a very good sign to David that his old hostilities with the family of Saul were over at last. they went over the Jordan: Ziba and his sons forded the Jordan to assist David and his family in crossing.

19:18 Another interpretation of ferryboat is "ford," with the idea, "They crossed at the ford of the river."

19:19 what wrong your servant did: Shimei's confession showed genuine repentance and godly sorrow. He added no excuse, self-justification, or explanation (compare Saul's behavior in 1 Sam. 13:11, 12; 15:20, 21).

19:20 The designation house of Joseph was sometimes applied to the northern tribes (Ps. 78:67; Ezek. 37:16) since Ephraim, the tribe of Joseph's son (Gen. 48:5, 13–20), was the largest and most powerful tribe in the north.

19:21 Abishai once again (16:9, 10) called for the death of Shimei for cursing God's anointed (23:1).

19:22, 23 What have I to do with you: David often had to quell the fiery spirit of his nephew (16:10). David had spared Shimei's life once before because of the timing of his attack on him; here he spared his life again because of the timing of Shimei's repentance. You shall not die: The amnesty granted Shimei was apparently conditioned on his continued loyalty. When David was near death, he ordered that Shimei be put to death by Solomon (1 Kin. 2:8, 9, 36–46). David could not put Shimei to death himself because of his oath; however, his son could do it if there were just cause.

19:24, 25 Mephibosheth was actually the son of Jonathan and the grandson of Saul (4:4; 9:1–13). Ziba claimed that Mephibosheth, in the turmoil of Absalom's revolt, sought to advance the cause of the house of Saul (16:1–4). cared for his feet: The personal neglect of Mephibosheth must have been striking. He intended his personal appearance to be a sign of mourning David's absence.

19:26–31 Mephibosheth claimed that Ziba had taken advantage of him, since he was not able to saddle or mount his donkey without help. he has slandered your servant: At this point, David faced a dilemma. Who was telling the truth—Mephibosheth or Ziba? Why do you speak anymore: David found the whole issue too complex to sort out. divide the land: In this way, both Ziba and Mephibosheth would be provided for in a generous manner (16:14). let him take it all: Mephibosheth's final words indicated his submission to David's decision.

19:32–34 very aged: The eighty-year-old Barzillai had proven himself to be an extraordinary help to David during David's exile. This was an opportunity for David to repay his kindness. very rich: Barzillai did not need money; David's offer of a royal pension was based on his loyal friendship.

19:35, 36 Can I discern between the good and bad: There was no effective contrast between the opportunity David offered and Barzillai's present living situation at Mahanaim. What real difference would the change make in his life, since he was too old to enjoy the pleasures of the court? In going a little way across the Jordan with David, Barzillai fulfilled his duty as a gracious host.

19:37, 38 Chimham was later identified by the historian Josephus as Barzillai's son (1 Kin. 2:7). I will do for him: Because of his love for Barzillai, David promised to give a royal patronage to Chimham. This was similar to the provision David had made for Mephibosheth because of his love for Jonathan (ch. 9).

19:39, 40 The term all is figurative. It means that as a whole Judah supported David. Half means that the people of Israel were less enthusiastic.

19:41, 42 stolen you away: The people of Israel were annoyed by the fact that David's supporters in Judah had the greater part in bringing the king back from exile in the Transjordan. The men of Judah pointed out that even though they had a tribal relationship with David, they had never taken advantage of their privileged position.

19:43 The people of Israel were claiming a greater share in David's kingship since Israel's northern territory was formed by ten tribes. fiercer: This bitterness between the tribes of Israel and the tribe of Judah would lead finally to the division of the nation at the time of the death of Solomon, David's son (1 Kin. 12). In the present situation, it threatened to erupt into civil war, which would take place under the leadership of Sheba (ch. 20).

20:1 Sheba was from Benjamin, the same tribe as Saul. The term rebel, which also means “worthless person,” suggests that Sheba was a scoundrel. trumpet: As was usual for military signals (2:28; 15:10; 18:16; 20:22), Sheba sounded a shofar or ram’s horn. We have no share in David: These three lines of poetry form a campaign slogan or song of rebellion. Every man to his tents may be paraphrased, “Let’s go back home, and from there we can resist the king.”

20:2, 3 every man of Israel: There was a general rebellion among the northern tribes. From the Jordan as far as Jerusalem: The people along David’s route to Jerusalem expressed their loyalty to the king.

IN FOCUS

"Jerusalem"

(Heb. yerushalaim) (2 Sam. 5:5; 20:3; Is. 40:2; Zech. 2:12) Strong's #3389: The name Jerusalem is related to the word for "peace" (see the psalmist's prayer for "the peace of Jerusalem"; Ps. 122:6). During the reign of king David, Jerusalem was made the political and religious capital of Israel and became central to the unfolding of God's redemptive plan. Jerusalem is described variously in the OT as: the city of God (Ps. 87:1–3); the place where God has put His name (2 Kin. 21:4); a place of salvation (Is. 46:13); the throne of God (Jer. 3:17); and a holy city (Is. 52:1). The prophets foresaw an approaching time when Jerusalem would be judged because of its iniquity (Mic. 4:10–12), but in pronouncing judgment they could also see its glorious restoration (Is. 40:2; 44:25–28; Dan. 9:2; Zeph. 3:16–20). This vision of a restored Jerusalem included the hope of a New Jerusalem in which God would gather all His people (Is. 65:17–19; Rev. 21:1, 2).

20:4 Amasa, who had commanded Absalom's army (17:25), had been offered Joab's position as commander in chief of David's army (19:13). Apparently, he accepted the offer and was commissioned to put down Sheba's rebellion.

20:5, 6 But he delayed: Amasa's delay in carrying out David's order to gather forces against Sheba's rebellion could have resulted in a disaster like that of Absalom's revolt. Abishai, Joab's older brother (1 Chr. 2:16), was enlisted to take command of the soldiers of Judah and put down Sheba's revolt. David knew that Sheba's revolt was potentially more dangerous than Absalom's, since Sheba's rebellion was based on long-standing tribal animosity between Israel and Judah.

20:7 Joab's men are distinguished from the rest of David's army. Apparently, Joab maintained his own group of elite soldiers.

20:8, 9 Gibeon was about six miles northwest of Jerusalem. Joab apparently adjusted his sword so that it fell from the sheath as he stepped forward to greet Amasa (v. 4). Assuming a mere accident, Amasa did not pay attention to the weapon in Joab's left hand (v. 10). Are you in health, my brother: The term translated health is the Hebrew word shalom, meaning "peace." Brother is not just a formality here; Joab and Amasa were cousins, sons of two of David's sisters (1 Chr. 2:16, 17). Joab took Amasa by the beard: This friendly greeting, a preliminary to a kiss, was now a preparation for killing him.

20:10–12 wallowed in his blood: The bloody spectacle of Amasa lying on the road caused the soldiers to stop and think about what it might mean to follow Joab. One of the soldiers finally covered the corpse so that the shocking scene would not impede the movement of the soldiers any further.

20:13, 14 He probably refers to Sheba, who traveled the land attempting to raise popular support for his rebellion. Abel and Beth Maachah were cities in northern Galilee so closely connected that they became identified with each other. They were four miles west of Dan (1 Kin. 15:20; 2 Kin. 15:29).

20:15 A siege mound was used in ancient warfare to allow soldiers to reach the top of a city wall. The mound consisted of dirt and debris placed against the wall.

20:16, 17 a wise woman: See note at 14:2.

20:18, 19 The wise woman explained to Joab that Abel was famous for the wisdom and counsel offered by its citizens. In addition to being peaceable and faithful, Abel was noted as a mother city, or a recognized leader in the region. The citizens had done nothing to deserve the city's destruction.

20:20–22 his head will be thrown to you: Convinced that the death of Sheba would end the siege, the people of Abel cut off his head and threw it over the wall to Joab.

20:23 Joab was the overall commander of David's army, while Benaiah was in charge of the Cherethites and the Pelethites, foreign mercenaries who fought for David.

20:24, 25 Revenue may refer to forced labor (1 Kin. 12:18). The recorder, meaning "one who causes to remember," was responsible for keeping official records. The scribe was the king's official secretary.

20:26 Ira replaced David's sons (8:18) as chief minister, a word customarily translated priest.

A Spiritual Cause to a Natural Event

The three-year famine in the days of David was the result of Saul's violation of the standing peace treaty that Israel had with the Gibeonites (2 Sam. 21:1; Josh. 9:15, 19–21). This suggests two things: (1) Political commitments, such as peace treaties, have spiritual implications. God takes people's words—including the words of governments—seriously and expects people to honor their commitments. (2) Natural events may have spiritual causes. Scripture offers many illustrations that God may sovereignly allow and ordain such events for spiritual reasons.

21:1—24:25 This section forms an appendix recording several incidents that occurred earlier in David's life. They are presented to show other problems David faced, including famine and plague (chs. 21; 24), military exploits (chs. 21; 23), and how he learned to praise God in the midst of his trials (ch. 22).

21:1 Famine was a means of divine chastening intended to lead God's people to repentance (Deut. 28:47, 48). he killed the Gibeonites: About 400 years earlier, the Gibeonites had deceived Joshua and the Israelites into making a treaty that guaranteed their protection and security (Josh. 9:3–27). Saul had broken that agreement by putting some Gibeonites to death (v. 9). This incident was not recorded elsewhere.

21:2 The Gibeonites were Canaanites living near the site of present-day El-Jib, about six miles northwest of Jerusalem. Amorites is used here as a general designation for the original population of Canaan (Gen. 15:16). Saul's zeal for the children of Israel and Judah led him to attempt to exterminate the foreign element from the land of Israel. Righteous zeal can be an act of heroic faith (Num. 25). But when zeal is misdirected, it can have serious consequences (Rom. 10:2; Phil. 3:6).

21:3 The word translated make atonement (Heb. kaphar) means to remove sin or defilement by offering a substitute or paying a ransom. David offered to make a settlement with the Gibeonites for the wrong Saul had done. that you may bless the inheritance of the LORD: David wanted the Gibeonites once again to look with favor upon the people of Israel.

21:4–6 No amount of monetary compensation, silver or gold, would satisfy the Gibeonites for the wrong that was done. Nor shall you kill any man in Israel for us may also be translated, "It is not for us to put a man to death in Israel." The implication would then be that they had no authority, as a subject people, for taking blood vengeance. The Gibeonites sought justice in keeping with the principle of Num. 35:31, that a life demands a life. They asked David for royal authority to execute seven of Saul's descendants. The term hang suggests some form of solemn execution, followed by the public exposure of the dead body, which was impaled on a post (Num. 25:4). The words before the LORD indicate that the judgment was intended to satisfy divine justice (v. 1). Gibeah, about three miles north of Jerusalem, had been Saul's capital (1 Sam. 10:26).

21:7 because of the LORD's oath: Because of David's covenant of friendship with Jonathan, his son Mephibosheth was spared (1 Sam.

18:3; 20:8, 16). For the story of Mephibosheth, read 4:4; 9:1–13; 16:1–4; 19:24–30.

21:8 Mephibosheth, the son of Rizpah, is not the same as Jonathan's son of the same name (v. 7). Rizpah was Saul's concubine (3:7). The Barzillai mentioned here is not the same as David's loyal friend of 17:27.

The mound of Gibeah, a city where David allowed several of King Saul's descendants to be executed and displayed in humiliation because of Saul's slaughter of the Gibeonites (2 Sam. 21:1–9).

21:9 they hanged them: God's Law explicitly prohibited the punishment of a son for the sins of his father (Deut. 24:16; 2 Kin. 14:6, Ezek. 18:1–4, 14–17). Since there is no condemnation of David in the text and since God apparently honored the action and ended the famine (v. 14), it is possible that those who were executed had been implicated in the killing of the Gibeonites.

21:10, 11 Rizpah remained near the bodies, protecting them from scavengers, from the barley harvest to the early rains (late April to October).

21:12, 13 Beth Shan was at the junction of the Jezreel and Jordan valleys, about four miles west of the Jordan. from the street: Apparently the bodies of Saul and Jonathan had been suspended on a wall along a main street of the Philistine city (1 Sam. 31:10). Gilboa is a small mountain range in the eastern part of the Jezreel valley (1 Sam. 31:1). Those who had been hanged refers to the seven sons in vv. 8–10.

21:14 Zelah was a town allotted to Benjamin (Josh. 18:28). God heeded the prayer for the land: Divine justice had been satisfied. God responded to the prayers of His people, bringing an end to the famine.

21:15–22 This section records the exploits of David and his men against the Philistines. The word translated giant throughout this section (vv. 16, 18, 20, 22) means one of the Rephaim, a people living in Canaan who were noted for their large size (Gen. 15:19–21; Num. 13:33; Deut. 2:11).

21:16 The spear of Ishbi-Benob weighed three hundred shekels, or approximately seven and a half pounds.

21:17 Abishai was Joab's brother (3:30; 16:9–11; 20:6; 1 Sam. 26:6–9). You shall go out no more with us: David's men did not want him to risk his life in battle. The lamp of Israel refers to David, whose life and leadership provided righteous guidance for the people of Israel.

21:18 Sibbechai the Hushathite is listed in 1 Chr. 11:29 with David's mighty men.

21:19–22 Jonathan was David's nephew, the son of Shimea.

22:1, 2 While this psalm later became part of the congregational worship of Israel (Ps. 18), it began as David's personal and earnest expression of praise to the Lord. This song was composed when God delivered David from the hand of Saul during David's wilderness exploits. Perhaps an incident such as the one recorded in 1 Sam. 23:24–28 provided the impetus for David to write this "song of testimony."

22:3 the horn of my salvation: The horn of an animal was used for protection and defense. Hence, the horn stands for might and power.

22:4, 5 To be praised means "to be boasted about joyfully." God is not only worthy of our contemplative worship, but also to be celebrated for what He does for us.

22:6 Sheol is used in Hebrew poetry as a synonym for death. Many believe the word is derived from the Hebrew word meaning "to ask" or "to enquire." In the OT, Sheol is described as a place of "dust," referring to death (Job 17:16), as a place of "corruption" (Ps. 16:10), and as a "Pit" (Is. 14:15).

22:7–15 These verses describe God's active intervention in terms reminiscent of His appearance to Moses at Mt. Sinai, with earthquakes, thunder, darkness, and lightning (Ex. 19:16–20; Ps. 68).

22:16–19 The imagery used here recalls the miraculous parting of the Red Sea (Ex. 14).

22:20–28 David acknowledges six reasons for Yahweh's gracious deliverance: (1) because God delighted in David (v. 20); (2) because of David's righteousness (vv. 21, 25); (3) because of David's obedience to God's ways and statues (vv. 22, 23); (4) because David kept himself from iniquity (v. 24); (5) because God is merciful (v. 26); (6) because God saves the humble (David) and humbles the haughty (Saul; v. 28).

22:21 according to my righteousness: David believed that God would deal with people according to their conduct, punishing the wicked and blessing the righteous (Deut. 30:15–20). These words may appear self-righteous, but they must be compared with David's own confessions of sinfulness (12:13; Ps. 38:1–10). His righteousness was based on God's unfailing kindness to him (v. 51; Ps. 38:15).

22:22, 23 I have kept the ways of the LORD: One thinks of David's rash action of adultery with Bathsheba and his sending Uriah to die. How then could he say these words? Perhaps this psalm was written before those events had taken place. Yet, there were doubtless many other sins in David's life even before the sins of great notoriety. In any event, David was forgiven those sins when he acknowledged them to the Lord. As is the case with believers today, David could stand in a position of righteousness even as he strove, by the power of God's Spirit, to live in righteousness.

22:24–29 David did not claim sinless perfection. The word blameless is used of a person who is sound, wholesome, and has integrity (Gen. 17:1).

22:30, 31 run against a troop: David refers to a successful military pursuit (1 Sam. 30:8).

22:32, 33 who is God: The rhetorical question emphasizes the reality of God in contrast with false gods and idols (Is. 40:25).

22:34 Deer are noted for their swiftness, agility, and surefootedness. They are also a picture of graceful beauty.

22:35–40 It would take unusual strength to bend a bow of bronze (Job 20:24).

22:41–43 the necks of my enemies: This metaphor is taken from the custom of a victorious king putting his foot on the neck of a defeated foe as a sign of complete overthrow (Ps. 110:1).

22:44–46 as the head of the nations: Through his military exploits and international agreements, David was able to exercise control over many surrounding nations.

22:47–49 The LORD lives: This shout of faith became a motto in biblical times, particularly when shouted in contrast to the false gods of other nations, who had no life. Like a Rock, God is strong, steadfast, and a place of refuge (Ps. 91:1–3). Perhaps this metaphor recalled to David the many times he had taken refuge in rocks to elude his pursuers (1 Sam 23:25).

22:50 Because God delivered His own (vv. 48, 49), David vowed to praise Him. The word translated give thanks means "to confess publicly" or "to give public acknowledgment." It is the primary Hebrew word for praise in the Book of Psalms.

22:51 His anointed: David referred to himself as God's royal representative on earth. But the word anointed also points to David's descendant, King Jesus. He is the ultimate Anointed One, the meaning of the name Messiah. The name derived from the Greek word for anointed is Christ. It is not just the "last name" of Jesus, but His great title: He is the Anointed One who is anticipated by the promises of the OT.

23:1 The Hebrew word for thus says is a stylized term that is often used in prophetic speech. It adds significance to what is said and may be translated “the solemn utterance” or “a revelation.” This is a very impressive term in Hebrew poetry; here it is used twice in one verse. raised up on high: David recalled his humble origins as a son of Jesse, whom God sovereignly exalted to the throne of Israel. the sweet psalmist of Israel: Of 150 psalms in the Book of Psalms, 73 are attributed to David by the text. No person in the Scriptures is more closely associated with music in the worship of the Lord than King David.

23:2 The Spirit of the LORD spoke by: David claimed to speak the words of God through his inspired poetry (Ps. 139:4). This is a claim to the divine inspiration of the Scriptures, just as much as are the NT passages 2 Tim. 3:16; Heb. 1:1, 2; 2 Pet. 1:19–21.

23:3, 4 He who rules over men: David voiced God’s expectations for rulers. Bringing blessing like the light dawn after the rain, like a clear morning, like tender grass—each of these similes speaks of new life, purity, and refreshment. The function of the king was not to impoverish the nation. Instead, the king was to ennoble the people as he presented to them the refreshing will of God.

23:5 The establishment of the everlasting covenant that God made with David is recorded in 7:12–16. Here and in Ps. 89 are David’s celebrations of the covenant in song. Will He not make it increase: This rhetorical question expresses David’s faith that God would carry out His promise. The covenant was based on God’s sovereign, unchangeable will.

23:6, 7 sons of rebellion: The Hebrew word used here is one of contempt and scorn. It is the word that wicked Shimei hurled at David when the latter was fleeing from the rebellion of his son Absalom (16:7). The word was also used to describe Sheba, the scoundrel from the tribe of Benjamin (20:1). David anticipated God’s judgment upon the ungodly, who are likened to thorns fit only to be burned.

“mighty men”

(Heb. gibbor) (2 Sam. 23:8; Joel 3:9) Strong’s #1368: This word emphasizes excellence. In the OT, it is used for the excellence of a lion (Prov. 30:30), of good or bad men (Gen. 10:9; 1 Chr. 19:8), of giants (Gen. 6:4), of angels (Ps. 103:20), or even God (Deut. 10:17; Neh. 9:32). The phrase “mighty God” is used three times in the OT, including Isaiah’s messianic prophecy of the birth of Jesus (Is. 9:6; 10:21; Jer. 32:18). The Scriptures state that the mighty man is not victorious because of his strength (Ps. 33:16) but because of his understanding and knowledge of the Lord (Jer. 9:23, 24).

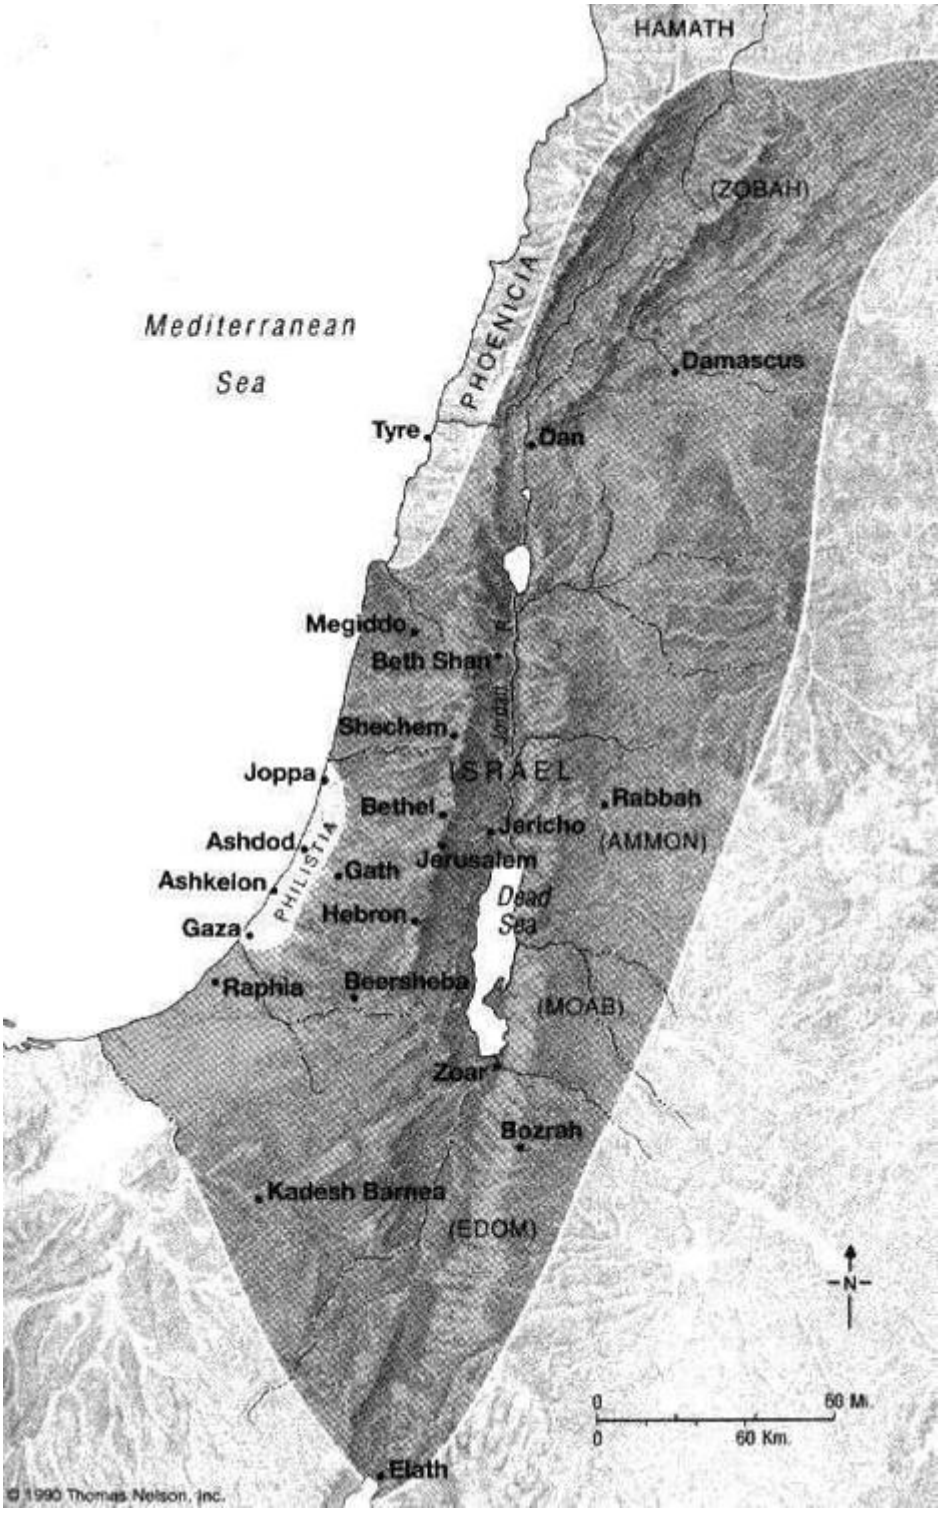
23:8–12 The term mighty men suggests that these were the elite of David’s troops, possibly his personal bodyguards. These men were heroes in the full sense of the word. Their listing must have inspired others to attain to such accomplishments. eight hundred: Although 1 Chr. 11:11 records three hundred, this figure is probably accurate (v. 18).

23:13, 14 The Valley of Rephaim was a route to Jerusalem (5:18). Bethlehem, David’s hometown (1 Sam. 16:1–13), was about six miles south of Jerusalem.

23:15, 16 poured it out to the LORD: The water had been provided at such great risk that David regarded it as too precious to drink, and offered it as a sacrifice. Ordinarily, wine was used for a drink offering (Lev. 23:13, 18, 37); here, water more costly than the finest wine was poured in celebration before the Lord.

23:17 David calls the water blood because it was brought to him at the risk of life.

23:18, 19 The exploits of Abishai, the brother of Joab, are detailed in the record of the life of David (2:18; 10:10; 1 Sam. 26:6–9).



The Davidic Kingdom

David's military exploits successfully incorporated into the Israelite kingdom the powers of Edom, Moab, Ammon, and Zobah.

23:20–23 Benaiah served as commander over the Cherethites and the Pelethites (8:18). He was in charge of David's personal bodyguards. The term his guard means "his obedience"—that is, those who were bound to obey and protect David. snowy day: A light snowfall is not unusual in the Judean hill country during the winter.

23:24–39 thirty: The list actually contains thirty-one names. Apparently, the number of active soldiers in this unit was kept close to thirty. With minor variations, this list is also recorded in 1 Chr. 11:26–41.

23:39 thirty-seven: This figure includes the three (vv. 8–17); Abishai and Benaiah (vv. 18–23); the thirty-one (vv. 24–39); and David's commander, Joab (v. 37).

24:1 the anger of the LORD: This is an ominous note with which to begin the last chapter. That the chapter is an appendix and not the last act, as it were, is the saving grace. He moved David: This comment indicates that David's actions were prompted by the Lord, while 1 Chr. 21:1 reveals that he was prompted by Satan. These remarks reflect two aspects of the same incident. Satan instigated the independent spirit that led David to number the people, but God permitted Satan to exercise this influence so that His divine plan might be accomplished (compare Gen. 50:20). Yet God's sovereignty never annuls human responsibility for one's actions.

24:2 The expression from Dan to Beersheba denotes the whole territory of Israel from its northern to its southern extremity, a distance of about 150 miles.

24:3, 4 why does my lord the king desire this thing: Joab, for all his faults, saw the error in David's plan (1 Chr. 21:3) and raised his protest in the form of a question. Why was this census considered sinful when God had commanded a numbering in the time of Moses (Num. 1:1–3)? David may have been trusting in military strength rather than God's protective care (Deut. 17:16). Verse 9 suggests that this census was the first step in preparing for a military draft. God's plan seems to have been for Israel to have a citizen army rather than a large standing army, so that Israel would trust in His protection.

24:5 The numbering began in the territory east of the Jordan. Aroer was about 14 miles east of the Dead Sea on the north bank of the Arnon River. Jazer was east of the Jordan, about six and a half miles west of present-day Amman.

24:6 Gilead was east of the Jordan between the Jabbok and Yarmuk rivers. Dan Jaan is thought to refer to the city of Dan, about 23 miles north of the Sea of Galilee. Sidon was on the Mediterranean coast north of Tyre.

24:7, 8 Tyre was on the Mediterranean coast about 35 miles northwest of the Sea of Galilee. The Hivites were Canaanites who occupied the region of Lebanon (Judg. 3:3), Shechem (Gen. 34:2), and Gibeon (Josh. 9:3). Canaanites is a general term for the non-Israelite inhabitants of the land. Beersheba was in the desert parts of Judah about 28 miles southwest of Hebron.

24:9 men who drew the sword: The numbers given refer only to men of military age. It is impressive that the division of Israel and Judah was so well established. This division would in the end result in a divided kingdom. The numbers—800,000 in Israel and 500,000 in Judah—are clearly rounded figures.

24:10 David's heart condemned him: David fell into sin on several occasions, but his heart was always sensitive to God's righteous will. He quickly confessed his wrong and sought restoration with the Lord. The text still does not state precisely what the sin was. However, we may surmise that David's intent in numbering the people had some sinister aspect to it—perhaps pride in the size of his empire.

24:11, 12 Gad, David's prophet or seer, is first mentioned in 1 Sam. 22:5. He may have been one of the writers or contributing editors of 2 Sam.

24:13 David was given a choice of three punishments for his sin: (1) seven years of famine, (2) three months of flight, or (3) three days of plague. Moses warned of all of these punishments for those who broke God's covenant (Deut. 28:15–68).

24:14 let us fall into the hand of the LORD: David calculated that God would be more merciful than a person. He apparently took the third option, a plague. Mercies speaks of a mother's tender compassion for her child. Even in the exercise of His wrath, God has mercy on those he disciplines (Hab. 3:2).

24:15 The nature of the plague is not specified, only that its origin was from the Lord. The number of those who died was very high, over three times the number of soldiers of Absalom's army who perished in his abortive rebellion (18:7).

24:16 The judgment was carried out by the angel of the LORD (Judg. 6:11–22). In a demonstration of divine grace, God withheld the plague from destroying the people of Jerusalem. A threshing floor is a hard, flat surface where wheat is crushed to separate the kernels from the straw. Araunah, called Ornan in 2 Chr. 3:1, was a Jebusite, one of the original inhabitants of Jerusalem.

24:17–21 David interceded on behalf of the people—these sheep—regarding the plague. He once again confessed his sin (v. 10) and asked God to hold him, rather than the people, accountable.

24:22 Threshing implements refers to the heavy, wooden sleds which were dragged over wheat during the threshing process to break it up.

24:23, 24 Araunah wanted to give David the threshing floor and the oxen for sacrifice. David was unwilling to offer to the Lord that which cost him nothing. This is a powerful principle for all worship and service before the Lord. If there is no cost, there is no real sacrifice. David understood and practiced the principle of sacrificial giving to the Lord (2 Cor. 8:1–4). the threshing floor: The threshing floor was located on Mount Moriah, where Abraham had bound Isaac (Gen. 22:2). Later, Solomon would build the temple at this site (1 Kin. 6; 1 Chr. 21:27—22:1; 2 Chr. 3:1). Fifty shekels of silver paid only for the threshing floor, the oxen, and the implements. The land that surrounded the threshing floor would cost considerably more —600 shekels or 15 pounds of gold (1 Chr. 21:25).

24:25 The burnt offering was the principal atoning sacrifice for unintentional sins (Lev. 1:1–17; 6:8–13). It was completely consumed upon the altar, except for the hide, which was given to the officiating priest. The peace offering was an optional sacrifice, which did not form any part of the regular offerings required in the tabernacle or temple (Lev. 3:1–17; 7:11–34). It was a voluntary expression of thanksgiving or worship. The preservation of Jerusalem and the purchase of the temple site prepared the way for the coming of David's successor, King Solomon. He would build the temple for the true worship of Israel's God.

The First Book of Kings

———— FIRST KINGS RECORDS THE LIVES OF A NUMBER of famous people, both good and evil. King David, King Solomon, and the Queen of Sheba are famous examples of righteous people searching after God's wisdom. On the other hand, Ahab and Jezebel are two notorious examples of wicked people discarding God's Law and rebelling against Him. To confront a man as wicked as Ahab, God sent someone more than equal to the task, the prophet Elijah. Often described as Israel's greatest and most dramatic prophet, Elijah displayed at Mount Carmel in an unforgettable way the power of God over the false god Baal and his four hundred prophets.

In the final analysis, 1 Kings is the story of one people headed down two different paths. It is a story of good kings and bad kings, true prophets and false prophets, and of disobedience and loyalty to God. Most importantly, it is a story of Israel's spiritual odyssey and God's faithfulness to His people.

The author of 1 and 2 Kings was heir to a long history of God's dealing with His people. In the two Books of Kings, the narrator presents a selected rehearsal of the events of the nation covering the period from the death of King David in the early tenth century B.C. to the fall of Jerusalem around 586 B.C. The author's focus is on the spiritual successes and failures in Israel's history.

First Kings begins this narrative with a detailed account of the great Solomonic era (971–930 B.C.; chs. 1—11). The narrative highlights Solomon's godly wisdom (1 Kin. 3; 4), his building projects, the temple and palace complex (1 Kin. 5—8), and then Solomon's spiritual failures toward the end of his reign. After Solomon's demise, the book addresses the division of the kingdom into a northern kingdom (Israel), made up of ten tribes under Jeroboam I, and a southern kingdom, centered in Judah under Solomon's son Rehoboam as king (12:1–24). Thereafter, the different fortunes of the two kingdoms are traced in terms of the blessings and punishments that come as a result of the people's obedience or disobedience to God's Law. The sorry picture of Israel's growing apostasy is sketched up to the accession of Ahaziah in the northern kingdom (853–852 B.C.) and the reign of Jehoshaphat in the south (872–847 B.C.). During this period, the two kingdoms had to face the rising imperialism of Assyria, particularly during the reigns of the Assyrian kings, Ashurnasirpal II (883–859 B.C.) and Shalmaneser III (859–824 B.C.).

Thus, the narrative of 1 Kings stretches from the high prosperity of the Solomonic kingdom in the tenth century B.C. to the insecurity of the mid-ninth century B.C. During this period, the internal spiritual weakness of the two Israelite kingdoms that would one day spell their defeat was beginning to take shape. The book covers an era of dramatic change.

The author's purpose in writing 1 and 2 Kings was not primarily to provide historical information. Instead, the author wanted to evaluate Israel's spiritual odyssey that resulted in God's chastisement (2 Kin. 17:7–23; 24:18–20). As a result, the author devotes considerable attention to evaluating the kings according to the way they responded to the responsibilities detailed in the Mosaic and Davidic covenants. The author notes specifically those who handled such responsibilities well, such as Hezekiah and Josiah. Moreover, the ministry of the prophets as God's authoritative messengers is highlighted. Particular attention is given to the ministries of Elijah (1 Kin. 17—19; 21; 2 Kin. 2:1–11) and Elisha (2 Kin. 2:12—8:15).

In the entire account, the necessity for a genuinely godly walk—one in obedience to God's Law—is underscored. Particularly in the accounts relating to Elijah, true worship of the living God is contrasted with the false religion of the Canaanites (1 Kin. 17; 18). The main difference between the true God and the false gods is that the living God faithfully fulfills His promises (1 Kin. 8:20, 23–26). Hence, special attention is given to God's promises in the Davidic covenant. In that covenant, God had promised to bless Israel (1 Kin. 2:4, 5, 45; 3:6, 14; 6:12, 13; 2 Kin. 8:19). Yet this blessing was tied to obedience: Israel's only hope for God's blessing and true success lay in obedience to God's word (1 Kin. 2:2–4). The failures of the Israelites to walk in God's ways and their subsequent chastisement can serve as a warning to us. At the same time, the prophets, who stood up for God's truth in a period of decline, can motivate us to stand for truth and righteousness in our time.

First and Second Kings were originally one book in the Hebrew canon, as were the Books of Samuel. The translators of the Septuagint, the Greek Old Testament of about 150 B.C., joined Samuel and Kings together and divided the resulting book into four parts. When Samuel and Kings were separated later, these four parts became 1 and 2 Samuel and 1 and 2 Kings.

Traditionally, Jeremiah was identified as the author of 1 and 2 Kings. However, contemporary critical scholarship has suggested that the books were the result of a compilation process that began with its initial composition in the late seventh century B.C. and concluded in the middle of the sixth century B.C. The proponents of this view have identified a Deuteronomic school of writers as the source of 1 and 2 Kings because of the emphasis in these books on religious orthodoxy (the Law and the temple), the ministry of the prophets, and the central place of the Davidic dynasty.

Evangelical biblical scholars have largely rejected the idea of a Deuteronomic school of writers. Many continue to endorse the traditional view that Jeremiah wrote the books of the Kings. They cite as evidence for his authorship his priestly origin, his prophetic activity, his access to governmental authorities at the highest level, and his great personal involvement in the complex religious, social, and political activities that occurred during the collapse and fall of Judah in the early sixth century B.C. Certainly no other single person would have been in a better position to know the spiritual situation of the day and to have access to the state records, historical information, and source material necessary for writing 1 and 2 Kings.
