You can use the custom tokens in the app to note down the multiple roles someone is giving you. That's what most players do if they're not using an external notepad.

Smifull commented 25 days ago

No, because on day 1 they are not fulfilling the ability of thinking they are the demon.

You can however have a starting Lunatic who thinks they're a No Dashi or something like normal, and then on n3 tell them they are a different demon as if they've been summoned. I've seen this done when the Lunatic figured it out on day 2.

Bonus points if they clock it once again, so on a later night you now tell them that they are the Fang Gu as if they've caught the jump.

To be clear, throughout all of this they are still just the Lunatic.

Smifull replied to Mejiro84 1 mo. ago

This really doesn't hold water if you look for one second at the team on the other wide of the WoTC office. Magic: the Gathering has had creature types like this for decades and it's worked remarkably well for them.

Does it have beast as a type? Then anything that specifically includes beast works. Anything that excludes beast doesn't, no matter how many other types it has.

Something like a Barber or Pit Hag changing character, then changing back.

Droisoned players still have their ability, it's just functionally turned off.

3 Reply Share

r/BloodOnTheClocktower • Barber/Banshee question

Smifull commented 1 mo. ago

No and no.

If a dead player gains the Banshee ability by any means then they will not be 'active' as they have to have the ability at the time the demon kills them.

Similarly if an active Banshee loses their ability then later gains it back, they will no longer be active as it's a new instance of the ability.

The idea of public transport isn't meant to get people off of bikes and walking, it's to get them out of cars! Most car journeys have 2 people in, and cars are hugely inefficient space wise. If there's 20 people on a bus that take up the space of 2 cars that's 5x more efficient and makes the roads less congested for everyone, as well as being more environmentally friendly.

Season 1 uses Kids on Brooms.

The rules for NSBU are available on the dropout store, but I'm not sure if they plan to do a full release like this for NSMM

Smifull replied to Jaylightning230 3 mo. ago

The rules for using characters from both versions together say that it only really works if the game is using 2024 rules with 2014 characters in it. That means things like potions and grappling should be the new rules for all characters, along with basically everything that isn't directly on the character sheet.

We have a similar rule of "one player missing, the rest of us continue" and it helps a lot. 1 - There are only 2 non-traveller players alive, which is the Evil wins condition. The game ends as soon as Adam is executed and dies so the Butcher never gets a chance to nominate again.

2 - When a traveller is exiled they die and gain a ghost vote like everyone else would. This also happens if they are killed by other means, most commonly the demon killing at night.

3 - If by interact you mean talk to players publicly and privately etc, then yes they can. Once dead the traveller is just like any other dead player, just with the possibility of travelling away if they need to.

A while ago I remember watching a very silly video on YouTube with a script that was basically just Athiest. Fisherman, Drunk and Legion. I can't for the life of me find it and was hoping someone else would know what I'm talking about. It was probably either on Patters, Arif, Gen con or TPI's channel since that's who I normally watch.

replied to ElectricalWaltz3136 5 mo. ago

It has been clarified that when characters like Carnibal and Philosopher get abilities where other players learn who they are, they should still learn they are the role the ability belongs to, so on the latest guidance they should learn that "Tom is the Nightwatchman" even if Tom is a demon with the Nightwatchman's ability.

Smifull

replied to Puzzled-Party-2089 5 mo. ago

Not quite. The actual hierarchy is Good wins ability > Evil wins ability > Good wins base rules (No demon alive) > Evil wins base rules (2 players alive)

So in this case it's the Evil wins ability of the Goblin vs base game no demon alive, so Evil would win. Only exception is Lil' Monsta, but that's a whole other kettle of fish

Did a quiz this week which had a round of "here are 10 shitty mutant powers from the x men comics. Which 5 did I make up?"

Had silly things like teleport 10cm, explode... once, shapeshift only your knees, poop ice cream, know when someone last farted. And I won't say which of these were real.

Shab is a pretty good addition, but I'd also want to add either another evil killing role or a good protection role so it's not immediately obvious when two people are dying every night. This would also help the Po disguise itself somewhat too.

Not quite. The actual hierarchy is Good wins ability > Evil wins ability > Good base rules (No demon alive) > Evil base rules (2 players alive)

So in this case it's the Evil wins ability of the saint vs the base game no demon alive, so Evil would win. All assuming the Lil' Monsta write up doesn't eventually go against this. [+1 day to Lil' Monsta write up]

Smifull replied to Fearless-Egg3173 8 mo. ago

I'm currently mid SIA rewatch and if it helps at all they do fairly quickly realise school is best as an opener occasionally, and I can't think of any recently which were actively focused/set in the school.

Of course the main characters are kids so there are some scenes that happen to be at school because that's where children often are, but it's hardly a focus at all past the series 1 opener.

If knowing this encourages you to power through the first few eps that's awesome because even as an adult I am still enjoying the rewatch of this series which does have some doctor who all time greats such as The Trickster which is a shame to miss out on imo.

Smiffull commented 10 mo. ago

You have both Undertaker and Canibal on the script, which are a bit redundant, but you also don't have a grim peeker like Spy or Widow, which makes these incredibly hard to bluff for evil.

If you're looking at removing the Poisoner like others have said, maybe replace it with a Widow?

Smiffull commented 1 yr. ago

I think you did as well as can be expected. I've been in the same situation as ST and it's annoying, but I can't think of really any scenario where I would show a sage dead players, vortex or not, it feels pretty bad to be attacked and then be shown almost useless info. If the sage was already outed and town were confident in the vortex world then I think this is on the demon picking a bad target more than anything.

I agree on the spy interaction being very powerful, not sure how to fix it there though. Since it is ST choice who is poisoned it might not be too powerful, but if you want to tone it down I might suggest removing the living condition from the poisoning. ST should normally pick living players but if evil is running away with it then it can go on a dead player.

Is there a reason you chose to make it that the chosen play only might die? If they've managed to solve effectively a puzzlemaster in a single day, and then nothing happens that's a real feels bad moment. Also only poisoning until dawn could make it really hard to find your target since there's not that many good characters waking up each night (not counting the first)

Hey folks, I'm working on my first custom script for Halloween, and would appreciate some honest feedback. The idea behind it is trick or treating, as the name suggests, with players having lots of choices, and not quite being sure what's good and honest, or if they're being messed with.

One thing I'm aware of is lack of outsider manipulation, so I think Sentinel as standard would be good.

I think people are throwing around the word filler far too much recently. Just because we didn't directly tie in with Thrawn or Gideon or whoever the big bad of the season is going to be, it doesn't mean it was filler. We got development of Bo Katan finding her way in this new society. Dinn gamering respect and gratitude from Paz Vizla who had previously been at least somewhat antagonistic. Grogu beginning his mandalorian training. We also learned more about the watch and their values.

And it was a shorter episode at around 30 minutes so it was actually quite a tight episode without much fluff or timewasting. It packed the story in efficiently.

Filler comes from older anime like DBZ where the studio had to fill time and do episodes outside of the source material so the characters and story remained pretty much exactly the same at the start and the end of the episode, which we definitely didn't have this week.

I heard that the production team reached out to the mandalorian mercs this season, a fan group of cosplayers who already have their own high quality armour sets, similar to how the stormtroopers at the end of S1 were mostly the S01st legion, a trooper cosplay group. I don't know for sure, but I assume a scene like this with a lot of mandos probably used them.

Chat notifications while minimised?

My group uses a mix of discord and foundry (switched from roll20) for our games, and I often find I miss chat messages when I'm in the other window. Is there a module or setting like in roll20 that makes noises when there are new messages and the window is minimised?

I'm terrible at presents, both hunting what I want and buying. A couple years ago my aunt shared an amazon wishlist in the family group chat and a bunch of us followed suit. How much do you actually write for your character's backstory?

I'm starting a new game soon and have my backstory as a series of loose bullet points. Usually I write it out with a paragraph on their early life/background, another paragraph or two describing a key event that put them on their current path, often when they get their class or whatever, and do this more as narrative and prose, and then the last paragraph is a summary of where they're at now. But I'm struggling to assemble my latest character in this fashion and I thought I'd get some ideas on how other people write up their backstory. So what's your process? How much do you write, or do you just keep it all in your head and discussions with the GM? Any other tips you...

Smifull replied to Megavore97 3 yr. ago

In the interview with Jeremy Crawford he said that it's mostly to deal with that random 5% chance a Bugbear will just one-shot kill your lvl 1 fighter and that's no fun.

He also talked about how he sees recharge abilities as a pseudo critical for monsters, as a way to have a big hit and instill fear in the players, but it's more at the DM discretion when it comes out. And the rolling for recharge still keeps it partly random, but a bit more controlled to avoid that bad feeling. I'm hoping this means when the new monsters come out we see recharge being used more freely to reflect this design choice.

Smifull

commented 3 yr. ago

My trick is offering inspiration to any player who can give a good recap at the start of the session. I have one player who usually does it, and a couple of maybe notetakers. There's usually something they've remembered I didn't write down and I can get a sense of what they're latching onto. And of course if they miss anything major I'll chip in.

Also inspiration is lost if not used at the end of a session to encourage them to remember and use it

Like others here have said, you might want to look into genderfluid or bigender as a place to start, but remember you don't have to pick a label straight away, and it can always change if you realise something else fits better later on.

Firstly, if you don't know someone's gender, what pronouns do you use for them until you do? Hint: singular they is grammatically correct even without non binary people using it.

Secondly, gender identity doesn't care about biology, it's unique to the individual and their experience. So as another enby, fuck you and your narrow minded take.

In the UK we have VAT at 20%. So if the cost of the item the customer is paying is £3 then you just divide by 6 (120%) and you get £0.50 of VAT on a £2.50 item.

Alternatively if you want to take £3 then you divide by 5 (20%) and add the £0.60 on and write the price tag at £3.60

Most of streamers don't upload full VODs I'm afraid. Some have edited highlights (like duncan) on their YouTube channels, but you can watch most VODs on people's twitch channels as most of the yogs have them available for free. I know it's not as convenient but if there is a streamer or series you want to follow this is the best way to do it as far as I know.

I think that book is now of questionable canon now as parts of it were directly contradicted by the clone wars seige of mandalore. I don't think there was anything too major but things like the final fight with maul and the colour of her lightsabers don't match up. As I understand the roughly accepted order of precedent for contradictions in canon sources would be films > tv shows > other extended media so I could see them doing something similar with going over the same beats as the book in bad batch but reinterpreting it.

Because standard aspect ratios are designed for horizontal movement, but with superheroes half of them can fly or leap and there a lots of tall characters with weapons making vertical swings so it allows you you focus on a lot of that without unnecessary background things. Also makes it more like the panels of the comic books it's based on.

Properly formed armour wouldn't put pressure on your chest when hit (unless it dents and deforms) because there is a cavity above the chest, and the contact points are to the sides, not in the centre.

Even with an indent, you shouldn't get bruising because there are other layers under the plate armour, and the only contact points of the chestplate should be on the sides, no contact in the middle at all.

Shadiversity has three great videos on this topic you should check out and he debunks this argument. The main points place that if there were two distinct breast shapes, deflecting a blade into the middle would still reduce much of the force that there isn't a real threat. And there would be sufficient armour around the head and neck there's no way it would slide in and stab/clip there anyway. But more realistically than

There are then three of the 'y' in there ones, up and away ones, and only two ones, because they wouldn't have two breast shapes, but one long 'monoboob' with no dip in the middle.

Can I trademark the name of my friend's existing business for a joke?

My friend runs an online community for gaming, with a few hundred members. He does make some money off it but this is nowhere near his main income stream. It has been inactive for several months. Another friend and I, who have known him for years and we are all good friends, have often messed with him in inconsequential ways every now and again, and recently discovered that the community name has not been trademarked. We saw that we can get a trademark for £170 on the gov website and naturally we figured we could trademark the name and tease our friend with it. Obviously we wouldn't take any action against him, it's just something to jokingly wave l...

Technically the graveyard gets exiled before blessing is on the stack as the mill and exile are all the same ability, so once it resolves it has to complete it all before anything else can happen, such as a triggered ability going on the stack.

This is why your opponent can rope you at 0 life if you take them to 0 with a priest of forgotten gods and they rope you while choosing the sacrifice. The game loss is a state based action which won't be checked until the ability has fully resolved

In paper, if there is an infinite loop and no player can break or interrupt it in any way, it's a draw. Because in this loop there is no "may" ability, the same would happen in paper as it did on arena. If this was an optional trigger, the player could just say "I do this a trillion times" and then continue.

Smifull commented 5 yr. ago

If you're paying for the adventures to host at the store, I'd have a word with the store owner or whoever is in charge about them at least compensating you for that. And if AL is a fairly big thing then they might consider having a set of books, or at least the phb, available for anyone in the AL games to peruse, even if it's just for an hour before/after the game for character creation/levelling stuff and during the session for reference.

It shouldn't hurt to at least explain your situation to the organiser and see if you can reach something that works for you both.

 You either know the rules well enough to lay out homebrew rules on session 0, or you don't know the game well enough to start making stuff up on the spot.

Smifull commented 5 yr. ago

It's not technically a finesse weapon, you just have a feature letting you use dex, so sadly it still doesn't count for sneak attack, and unarmed strikes are the same.

It looks to me that while an illusion, mirage arcane can be physically interacted with, even saying that you can carry a created rock out of the area.

It also says that truesight allows you to see the original terrain, but still interact in every other way the same.

Based on that I'd say the wall always blocks the arrow, and truesight just lets the archer see behind said wall.

Every character is proficient in unarmed strikes, but I think that's in the weapons section of the phb not the classes so it's often missed. Monks just get better damage on them than normal folks

👍 1 🗑️ 🗨️ Share ...

 r/DnD • Weekly Questions Thread #2019-14

Smifull commented 6 yr. ago

So when you roll to hit, you roll 1d20+12 (d20+dex+prof) then if that meets or beats the target's AC you roll damage, which is 1d10+6 (weapon damage+dex)

Also worth noting that all your monk weapons also deal 1d10 of the relevant damage as well since you're high level

👍 1 🗑️ 🗨️ Share ...

 r/DnD • Weekly Questions Thread #2019-14

With those stats, you're right on everything but the damage, so looks like you're all sorted if you can get it to work with the app you're using

👍 1 🗑️ 🗨️ Share ...

 r/DnD • Weekly Questions Thread #2019-14

Smifull commented 6 yr. ago

I'm not sure how you got those numbers

If your dex is 22/23 (+6 mod) and you're above 17th level (+6 prof) then those numbers are correct, but at that level your unarmed strikes and monk weapons should be dealing 1d10+dex and your dex score can't go above 20 without special magic items or DM houserules

If you share your level and stats it might make it easier to help

Also in 5e blunt isn't a damage type, you should be dealing bludgeoning damage with an unarmed strike

Also, when you action surge now you can end up with four attacks.

Two from the main action, and another two from the action surge action as each of these uses extra attack.

This also applies when you get three and four attacks eventually.

Burn tends to focus almost entirely on hitting face with instants and sorceries, with only a few creatures on the board, often utilising cards like electrostatic field and spear spewer for more burn on face

RDW is a little more creature focused and plays cards like steam kin and chainwhirler to hit face more reliably

There is a lot of overlap, but these are the main differences

Well this comment was apparently just slightly ill timed because in the 2018 errata they actual have a fix for contagion.

I can't link because I'm on mobile, but in short the target is poisoned until they fail/pass the three saves, and then they're either cured or you choose the disease they suffer and either way they're no longer poisoned.

Hopefully this is a happy medium.

Sadly the effects of contagion don't actually take effect until they've failed all the saves, which makes it from a broke spell into an almost worthless one because by the time it takes hold the target is likely dead already

Just as a side note for playing on roll20, you can also find games that are solely text based, so you don't have to worry about a mic. I currently play two text based and one voice game on roll20 and actually prefer the text because I have a fairly squeaky voice, so it's hard to play a tough person using a mic, but in text you just have to describe it.

Help with a valour bard

So I'm currently playing a valour bard who mainly uses a heavy crossbow, and I've come to a problem. We just hit level 4, and I'm not sure if I should take crossbow expert for when I get extra attack, or up my dex by 2 (to 18) and get expert at level 8. My cha is already 18, so that's not an issue, and I mainly buff anyway. So should I get crossbow expert and have it do (almost) nothing for two levels, or up my dex to 18 for the +1 to lots of things and have extra attack being (again, mostly) useless for two levels And thanks in advance

Like I said, it's not for everyone, but it rewards our style of play without being as powerful as the dmg option.

Also, enemies get the same benefit, so if everyone gets the benefit, it isn't so bad anyway.

But what you choose to do at your table is your choice. I was merely offering a compromise

I just want to say that your average damage is in fact 13, because you do get to add dex to the unarmed strike, for 1d8 (4.5) + 3 + 1d4 (2.5) + 3 total.

It's a common mistake, but the rule for two weapon fighting are the exception, not the rule. (See polearm master and great weapon master for other bonus action attacks)

Smifull replied to TAB1996 7 yr. ago

One counter to this point, while still perfectly valid, is to make sure your players are ok with actually playing irl. If someone has made a character who spends most of his time in bars and taverns, it's not unreasonable to assume they'd be pretty good at the game, but this might be the complete opposite to the actual player, who's never picked up a cue in their life. I know I wouldn't feel great if my character was undermined because I personally aren't good at a game.

TL;DR: If you want to play irl, make sure all the players involved are ok with this too

The attack action lets you attack with any weapon/unarmed strike, sometimes more than once if you have the extra attack feature. You can also grapple or shove with the attack action

The multiattack action lets you make specific attacks, as specified in its description. There is no flexibility in multiattack, but often you get more than you would with the attack action, hence why most monsters use it.

Martial arts die can't be used for claws, because they are neither monk weapons or unnamed strikes, they are natural weapons.

You also can't flurry after a multiattack because multiattack is not the attack action. You also aren't attacking with a monk weapon/unarmed strike, so you couldn't flurry anyway.

We had been sent on a quest to retrieve a powerful gem that had been stolen by the cult of the dragon, and were approaching their base, which we knew contained a white dragon, presumably the final boss. So, I'm playing a monk (currently level 2, soon to be 3) and I'm planning to go way of shadow at level 3. He grew up on the streets, so he learned to fight hard and stay mobile, and is now a part of the local thief's guild. At level 3, I will get shadow arts, which allows me to learn the minor illusion cantrip and cast spells for ki points. My conundrum is that it doesn't feel right to have him casting spells, so the DM and I are trying to re-flavour them as more practical effects. Our ideas so far are as follows:

Reposting from the previous thread because it was barely up before it was replaced with this one.

Context: I'm playing a wizard in a campaign, and the party were captured and we barely managed to escape with our lives, let alone our equipment. Thankfully, we found a friendly shop keep who allowed us to restock on basic equipment etc. so I do have a focus now and everyone has weapons, but we also leveled up during this time.

Question: How do I handle my new spells learned from leveling up? My DM has said that I can use some normal parchment and add them to my spellbook if I find it. I'm also going to write my 5 prepared spells onto parchment for 10 gp total (all I have left) so I don't loose them when I change my prepared spells. Thankfully the only spell I lost was find familiar because I was level 1 with 18 int.

This is a temporary solution because we will be going back for our gear soon. Also, I can't afford a new spellbook.

How would you handle this?

Context: I'm playing a wizard in a campaign, and the party were captured and we barely managed to escape with our lives, let alone our equipment. Thankfully, we found a friendly shop keep who allowed us to restock on basic equipment etc. so I do have a focus now and everyone has weapons, but we also leveled up during this time.

Question: How do I handle my new spells learned from leveling up? My DM has said that I can use some normal parchment and add them to my spellbook if I find it. I'm also going to write my 5 prepared spells onto parchment for 10 gp total (all I have left) so I don't loose them when I change my prepared spells. Thankfully the only spell I lost was find familiar because I was level 1 with 18 int.

How would you guys handle this?

Edit: This is a temporary solution because we will be going back for our gear soon. Also, I can't afford a new spellbook.

Depending on their level, a cloak/slippers of elvenkind are great for a sneaky rogue. Berserkers also want better weapons too.

Hope this helps

r/DnD • [5e] Rogue Multiclassing advice

Smifull commented 8 yr. ago

This is a common multi class, and can work well, but there are two things to watch out for:

1. Both rogue and monk are very bonus action heavy classes. With cunning action and a lot of ki abilities using your bonus action, you may find yourself overwhelmed on that front.
2. Whilst you can use strength or dexterity for your monk unarmed strikes, they aren't finesse weapons, and so you can't sneak attack with them unless your DM says otherwise. There was a sage advice on this but I'm on mobile so can't link it.

Sorry for any formatting/spelling errors. I'm on mobile.

TLDR: watch out for intense bonus action usage and no sneak attack on unarmed strikes.

This isn't my idea, but I thought you might like it/find it amusing:

Step 1: Buy a slave woman

Step 2: Have her wear a dress, but not underwear

Step 3: Insert bag of holding into her vagina

Step 4: Proceed to pull a greatsword from her vagina

I made a huge toolkit for running sandbox campaigns. Contains 88 36-item tables covering spell generation, monster generation, NPCs, treasure, cities, wildernesses and dungeons. Tables can all be rolled with 2d6.

Smifull

commented 8 yr. ago

Just a point, 2d6 is more favoured to the middle of the table. 1d12 is much fairer [5e] Wand of Wonder for 1st Levels?

I am a new DM and have just started DMing Lost Mine of Phandelver (Spoilers). I have also just read the DM's guide and really want to see a wand of wonder in practice. I was thinking I could sneak it into the goblin's horde. Most of my players are fairly experienced. I am torn between fulfilling my indulgences and sticking to the book, so I turn to reddit for help. Is this a great or terrible idea?

That was the last session I played with that group. I had other things going on in my life at the time.

Story wise, I pretended to get rid of the axe, but, as per the curse, kept it. I then wandered into the wilderness, possibly to return?

 r/DnD • What are your best/funniest natural 20's?

Smifull commented 9 yr. ago

We are fighting an adult black dragon. I didn't know it, but my half-orc barbarian had just found a berserker's axe.

I chug a potion of acid resistance and a potion of stone giant strength and charge with my new '+1 axe'. I land the first blow and I'm pumped in my frenzied rage.

I get caught in the breath weapon.

Me: No problem, I'm resistant.

DM: Roll a wisdom save.

Me: What? Ok. (I have -2 wis) 8. What now?

DM: You'll see...

The fighter comes next to me and attacks the dragon some more. My turn comes:

Me: I swing at it again!

DM: Roll a d2

Me: (Now worried) Ok.. 1

DM: Filled with rage you swing viciously, but not at the dragon, but at your friend next to you. Make your 3 attacks.

Me: Sh*t. Sorry about this... 18, 22, Natural 20!

DM: Roll damage

Me: Don't make me kill him...

First two attacks deal moderate damage, but He's still just about standing, the cleric can help him out in a minute.

The crit comes along: Max damage on all dice, including the bonus dice for Half-orc and barbarian.

DM: (To other player) How much HP does that take you too?

Him: Completely dead.

DM: (Calmly, like some sort of psycho) You swing and take his head clean off.

The entire table glares at me as if I had a choice and I just soak in the hate, knowing it is the DM that will get it after the session has ended.

TL;DR: I went berserk. Critted the fighter next to me and rolled max damage on everything. His head flew in the air

 r/DnD • Multiclassing for all the wrong reasons

Smifull commented 9 yr. ago

I play a bardbarian in my current campaign.

We found the skeleton of Bigby (of hand fame) and over one hand was a portal. We throw stuff in, then hold a bone half in. When we pull it out it has been shredded.

The wizard decides he still wants to go in, so I tie a rope around him and he goes through. After a few seconds I pull on the rope and I lose 20ft of rope as it gets shredded. Great.

Meanwhile, unknown to my character, the wizard came out in a battle with a prankster bard and a rogue, almost unharmed, after Bigby's hand was summoned.

30 mins later, I decide to jump in and save him. I end up on the 7th level of hell among 6 20th level characters in the middle of fighting and arch devil. I am level 3 with no spells, rages or inspirations left and so I panic.

I run out the door as fast as I can, and on the way this exchange happens:

Me: I cast vicious mockery on the arch devil!

DM: I will say this only once: Are you sure?

Me: No.

DM: Good.

Me: I cast it on the bard that summoned the hand.

And that is how to play a chaotic neutral bardbarian
