Fear The Floof or: How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Roast the Bluechecks

The infamous Twitter thread claiming to reveal Taylor Lorenz's age, as well as the quietly wealthy status of a number of well-known journalists and commentators i The following Twitter thread is from @FearTheFloof. He is a known non-giver of fucks. I am archiving this thread here because I fear it will be deleted from Twitter. FearTheFloof's account has already been limited once, and one must assume it will happen again.

For posterity, this thread is presented here in its original form, and it has not been edited. To my understanding, there are a number of factual errors regarding Ben Collins and Matt Yglesias. I do not know how material these errors are, but my understanding is this thread is about 90% correct.

I like this thread because it angered the shitlibs. Do your own fact-checking if you wish to verify the content itself.

One of the most fascinating things about the modern age we live in is the population of journalists almost exclusively being from mega rich families and the fact they have done such a good job of hiding it from the internet.

The most extreme case of this is Carlos Maza. Right out of Wake Forrest University he worked for Vox pushing extreme left wing views & targeting anyone on the right no matter how poor or middle class.

What almost no one knew was he was a billionaire.

What's amazing about this is almost no one knew his mother & step father were tech billionaires with multiple mansions, yachts & private planes. Maza was raised in a $10.8 million dollar mansion in Boca Raton, FL.

Until his termination at Vox there was no Google result you could get that could tell you anything on Carlos Maza's background. Nothing. A complete memory hole. For almost 10 years he was able to use his massive platform to cancel anyone he saw fit to & abuse his power unchecked.

It wasn't until he was fired from Vox for being too much of a left wing extremist (just let that sink in) & he began his failed YouTube career did anyone do any digging into how this guy afforded some of the most expensive real estate in New York with no income...

A billionaire journalist who went to Christopher Columbus High School & Wake Forrest University was able to cosplay working class socialist attacking poor & working class people for years without anyone knowing his real background.

Taylor Lorenz might actually be an even worse offender of this hypocrisy. While also born to fabulous wealth & privilege she has the family power to keep her past off the internet even after it became known.

She can actually get it removed forever from the internet.

While this woman of wealth & privilege can doxx even the poorest, weakest, least powerful people in the internet, publishing all their private information, address, work places and phone numbers.
She can apparently get anything about herself wiped from the internet forever...

What we do know is he is a 47 year old man who went to Emerson College which cost... wait for it... a whopping $75,000 a year to attend in todays dollars.

A very private, very exclusive, buy your way in College founded in 1880 for rich white people to buy an exclusive education.

Some of the rich & powerful have not made the effort to hide their wealth & privilege as they are so rich & powerful they have no fucks to give about you knowing they can crash you... insert the Matt Yhlesias type journalist.

NevilleTheCat @FearTheFloof · 3h

Matthew Yglesias 41 years old was born to Rafael Yglesias, millionaire screenwriter & novelist. His paternal grandparents were novelists Jose Yglesias and Helen Yglesias.

That's Generational wealth.

Matthew Yglesias was admitted to Harvard under its legacy program because his father also went to Harvard. Nice gig.

He did graduate top of his class with a degree in... philosophy.

So it seems his dad didn't go to Harvard, but there are a lot of hits that he was admitted under the legacy program.

On that one I'll take the L.

It does seem pretty well documented he had a multimillion dollar trust fund he used to buy his NY condo with cash.
