

Hello AC,

“Ghost Who Walks” here...

Excuse the large type. Here are some thoughts on “The Beam,” both about what it might really be and a possible way to defeat or shield from it or make it less harmful. You never know, this may be worth looking into. At any rate it won’t cost anything more than a bit of time to grasp the two or three simple concepts involved and possibly a few bucks for materials, if you decide to look into the possible “cure.”

Also included here is a .txt version of this PDF, both Epub and PDF copies of “The Mage of Java” by Kosta Danaos (reviewed here: <https://www.simonandschuster.com/books/The-Magus-of-Java/Kosta-Danaos/9780892818136>), and a paper dealing with something you can make/build known as “Orgonite.”

Disclaimer

Some, maybe you, will find this ludicrous and maybe it is, but you never know. I have not tried or accomplished anything related to this, mainly because I have not ever needed to.

What is The Beam?

There is an old proverb that claims “What is here is everywhere; what is not here is nowhere.” If you are subjected to The Beam, then it has got to be something that exists in our world and has been known before or is knowable by people other than those now using it. Electricity is an example. I AM ASSUMING that The Beam is based upon what Taoists call Chi Energy, which has other names from other people, including some people now considered frauds or not credible. Wilhelm Reich called it “Orgone” energy. He thought that he’d discovered it.

Whatever the case -- and whether the rest of Reich’s work was fraudulent or not (the feds thought it was real enough to take direct action against the man), one thing is certain. The energy, whatever you care to call it, is real and has been known and used by people of various cultures, civilizations, and “religions.”

Reich may be one of the few who have created or discovered physical means to unleash this energy, BECAUSE ‘ancient Taoist sages, for example, would have trained to do such things with their own body, thus avoiding need for technology, tools, and industry.

Reich devised several contraptions for accumulating, working with, or delivering this energy. There was a “box” consisting of alternate layers of organic and inorganic material. There was a tube thing he could connect to the accumulator box and focus the energy towards some remote thing, for example, a thunderstorm or storm cloud.

By unfortunate accident, Reich learned that the energy could be made “negative” or damaging. He called that “DOR” (Deadly ORgone).

This DOR could degrade, injure or cause death to people, animals, and plants.

From what you relate, Beam operators are typical Stasi drones, who are not particularly special or intelligent, or skilled, operating the thing on their targets from some nearby location (neighboring house, etc.).

Alternately, perhaps the people in the nearby house report your status (e.g. “lights out, probably asleep” etc.) and activity level to some remote location, where someone else operates by aiming the thing at you or tuning into your “frequency” to send it your way, if that is possible (assume that it is possible in a Royal Rife type of way.) Or maybe the neighbors acquired something such as a hair, nail clipping, or maybe even a photograph.)

Assume that to be true. Does it rule out what alleged Taoist practitioners know and have perhaps done? No. The Taoists just practiced to develop skills to use their body as the accumulator and also as the projector.

Are there “Taoist” workers who can collect and focus the energy they know a Chi, and project it?

The attached book, by the Greek martial artist, Kosta Danaos reports that some Taoists can do that.

This book is a “must read,” to anyone interested in the phenomena, though if you only want to make and activate the defense, you probably don’t need to read Kosta’s book.

Of course, it had to be an obscure branch or Taoism, located in some obscure location, and only one practitioner. Obviously no organization would want info leaked, due to fear of government reprisal etc. and obviously, being Taoists, there was no large organized group, but rather small cliques of masters and followers.

Here is why that’s relevant.

Among the Chinese people of knowledge, Knowledge has always been hoarded, only grudgingly taught and transmitted, with the main guy withholding much or most of the secret from his pupils.

Thus, knowledge is not widely spread and can become lost from time to time.

PLUS, the talent is only achieved by long practice.

For instance, allegedly to develop the “power,” one must be able to meditate in a special way and begin concentrating Chi in a certain area of the body.

You must meditate this way for, say, fifty hours in order to accumulate the energy to reach “Stage One.”

However, the mind wanders, meditation is not so easy, SO it will take you fifteen years of daily practice to have spent fifty (real) hours of this meditation.

Similar to the guitar guy who “has played for years” but is not very good yet because he hasn’t been able to get past the first chapter of the music book and he is not a personal friend and frequent visitor of Eric Clapton.

NOW THEN...

From what you relate, it seems likely that nearby people who operate The Beam may actually be using some mechanized method to deliver and focus whatever energy it uses.

This is probably why they seem to be still developing their Beam Machine, or whatever, attempting to create a “box” that anybody can operate, much like a “gun.”

More on the Chi Power

According to Kosta D's contact in Java, a Taoist named John, there are subsequent levels of power. In other words, distinct levels, John was something like Level Three out of a possible Seventy Two levels. But nobody now alive is higher than level Five and inconveniently, it is possible to make simple mistakes that will set one back, or even kill one, when attempting to reach the Second level. Some of the killing is by obscure diseases that may take a while to show up.

That's all you need to know about the energy that is probably being used. If you just learned anything new, it is probably that there are at least a few people walking around who can use Chi energy just like they do in some of those low budget Kung Fu movies where the bad guy shoots lighting bolts from his hands.

I recall that while John could light a paper on fire, he didn't often do much more and he usually limited himself to minor healing. One of his nicknames was Dynamo Jack. There's a you tube video or two.

Whatever you do, be sure to read “The Magus of Java,” especially since you are into Taoist Medicine.

Defense Against The Beam?

Given that Cabal is (probably) using a physical “machine” or method for shooting people with the negative energy, there must be a physical method for shielding from, diminishing, re-directing, or grounding that energy. Wilhelm Reich supposedly had a way to suck DOR energy into an accumulator (it would have been an “attractor,” then, and grounding it or bleeding it off.

You can look up all that if you like, but here’s the solution that seems likely.

Reich’s Orgone accumulator accumulated Orgon by using layers of alternating organic and inorganic material on a box -- say, layers of wool felt and rock-wool. He was trying to cure people by having them sit in large boxes of this type.

In modern times, not sure when this began, but it was at least 25 years ago, somebody made mini orgone accumulators by taking organic resin and casting it around a large number of inorganic particles.

Basically go to Home Depot or a Boat Supply company and buy a gallon of resin and some hardener.

Then take a muffin pan and fill the little cups with metal shavings from the scrap bucket of a machine shop. Pour in the activated resin. When the stuff cures up, pop out the “muffins” and you have a dozen or so little orgon things.

You have successfully made “ORGONITE.”

There can be more to it than that and I have included a 41 page paper presenting the basics and offering ideas about what you can put into the “muffins.”

Basically, though, the basic Orgonid muffin works pretty well, though many people add little quartz crystals, copper wire coils of various windings, and more. You know how “fashion” and “trends” work. People, being people, are often inclined to craft very nifty and artistic-looking pieces, even though the things still allegedly work if they are rough and ugly.

Supposedly though, small crystals are useful. At least, if the things work at all.

“What do you mean, ‘work?’”

People seed the muffins around cell phone towers and places like that. Supposedly they can make a difference. These muffins are sometimes called “Tower Busters.”

People also make them a bit larger, with a conical profile obtained by casting into a plastic funnel.

Also doable: Cast into a small two quart bucket with one or more copper pipes projecting upwards. Use a five gallon bucket if you can afford such size. The small ones are just fine, though.

How does it work?

Apparently, the energy Orgone and DOR is drawn into the cast item, and because it is strewn internally with hundreds of metal shards or shavings, the spaces of inorganic resin between the metal pieces cause the same effect as having alternating layers of organic and inorganic sheeting. Do not use dust instead of bigger shavings because the dust will settle together too densely and lack enough space between the particles.

Most Important Take Away (maybe)

There's no need to get fancy (expensive) unless you seek a decorative quality, though intention may add something to the mix. Who knows Supposedly, you could cast up a batch or two of the muffin-size units and place them around your bed, home, and yard. You should notice something, if they work.

If they work...

People have been diligently making and using these for at least twenty years. You know how suggestible people can be, but still.

Reich's work was seen as an existential threat by government bad actors. Enough so they took great pains to destroy his prototypes, burn all his papers, and clap him into prison for years, so in my opinion, we must take seriously the ideas that Orgone energy is real and Reich's physical machine type manifestation devices were the solution to avoiding decades of meditation and study, etc., to obtaining results.

We should also then agree that the Orgonite composite material can have some effect if used properly and since they supposedly negated the effects of harmful microwaves from phone towers, etc., they may very well diminish, ground, or negate the effects of The Beam, which probably uses DOR Deadly Orgone or Microwaves, or some combination.

The End.

Note: Ghost Who Walks is a handle that I use. The email that I put in to post on your Blog is one I obtained for such purposes, but I lost the password and never use it these days. If this works in any way, you might inform readers about it. If it proves totally useless, you also ought to inform us of that fact. In a perfect world, the Enemy Cabal could be neutralized by Orgone Muffins.