

Inky's experience in VirtuxVE with ReiiFlynn as CEO

Initial contact and Recruitment

I met Reii through one of the talents since they were interested in me being their character designer on 09/10/23.

I officially joined the company 02/06/24 by signing a contract.

Unpaid Commissions

Reii owes me around $4000 in total. I haven't been paid by him for over a year since his last payment (09/11/2023) which was the only payment I have gotten from him when the talent wanted me to make her reference sheet. I've worked a total of 10 pieces since I have met Reii. I have completed 7 pieces before their due dates or no deadline was given whereas the rest of the 3 pieces were in concept or scrapped. I would work on the projects on average 4-6 hours at a time, 5 days a week. Prior to the contract he has already commissioned me to do projects and has not paid me. I have given him multiple reminders but he would either say excuses such as being in surgery, house being flooded, and being sick or avoid and change the topic.

Power imbalance

In the beginning we got friendly and developed a close friendship. He would always come to me when something happened which in the beginning was 2-3 times a week and vent. Most of the conversations we had was him gossiping and venting to me about the talents, his roommate, our Co-CEO of the VirtuxVE, and other big and small agencies. I lent an ear and justified his feelings in my head, but in the back of my mind I felt it was wrong. I always felt conflicted because he was my friend and got me a job opportunity in this agency. Reii was my boss and I looked up to him for his ambition and determination to start up an agency. I should've taken the payment upfront but I believed that he was my friend and since he was my boss then eventually I would be paid soon. I really thought the harder I worked, then he would eventually pay me.

Personal Testimony Anecdotes

Reii would indirectly say talents were decently sized streamers and busy for whatever reason like streaming or projects they were doing at that time. Hearing that made me feel burdened when it came to interactions with talents which has prevented me from creating a relationship with them. The one talent that I talked to was the one that introduced me to Reii.

I felt like he controlled my creativity to his own advantage. For example, he told me that he wanted a redesign but recently I found out that he also was asking another artist the same as well at the same time.

Evidence of Reii telling me that he will pay me:

Hey inky, just an update. You'll be receiving your first half payment for merch on the 30th when I'm back, so make sure your bank account and details are all set up, that way paypal doesn't have an excuse. Otherwise, I'm happy to pay with wise anyways

Inky Dinky Doo 22/09/2024 02:43

Reii [VIRTUX] 22/09/2024 04:59

nono its oki

i understand

Here is the invoice that I sent him that are not paid through paypal (everything after that, I requested payment to be sent to my bank account):

Led me to distrust others in the company

At the time that I had started working for this business he would begin to spread rumours and lies about our Co-CEO, such as him not paying rent, not doing his job that he was being “paid” to do or being an overall liability for the agency. I believed him for a long time and didn’t trust our Co-CEO until everything came to light, in the end he WAS paying for his rent and never had a contract with the agency and therefore wasn’t even being paid to begin with. Reii would also spread misinformation about the talents in the agency such as not listening to him giving the money or just him complaining about them being annoying by asking for updates etc.

False Promises:

- Told me that I would be a vtuber as Virtux's mascot, Riri.
- He offered to gift me a PC from Starforge.
- He offered to gift me GamerSupps products.
- Told me that I am going to be Virtux's merch artist.

Reii had made a lot of promises to me, some larger than others but still all broken in the end. I put too much faith into him and too much trust. I should've kept things less personal and more professional when it comes to a boss and employee setting, but no boundaries were set so I thought everything was fine.

Going Forward:

The situation has brought me a lot of stress, pain and hurt. I feel bad for all the talents involved who have now grown to be really good friends of mine. I feel bad for those who haven't been paid yet just like me and I hope that anybody involved can face a little, we'll just have to see what the future holds.

Thank you for reading and I'll be continuing my art journey separate from any agency.
