He is a vile man to idolize. All Vaccines are against God, do not worship at the altar of Jenner science. "Soon, smallpox vaccination was common practice around the world. It was completely eradicated in 1979." If small pox is dead why are they still vaccinating against it? <https://www.bbc.com/future/article/20200928-how-the-first-vaccine-was-born> If they work why did more people die? Vaccine book back image <https://files.catbox.moe/ek0fhi.jpeg> Excerpts: The name derived from the Latin for cowpox, vaccinia. He converted a rustic summerhouse in his garden into his Temple of Vaccinia and invited local people to be vaccinated after church on Sunday. He used doctors and trusted experts to push it. "It's a theme that we see now in terms of vaccine advocacy and ensuring acceptance of a vaccine is the right message delivered by the right person." In 1803, the ship sailed for South America. On board were 22 orphans to act as vaccine carriers. "There is no way of mass-producing vaccine, so they give it to a child," explains Najera. "The child will develop the lesion, then they take it from their child a couple of days later, give it to the next child and so on and so forth down the line."

Such a theory is not far fetched given that the 2001 anthrax attack in the US originated at Fort Detrick, a US Army bioweapon facility. Because the FBI's anthrax investigation was closed against the advice of the lead FBI agent in the case, there are likely conspirators still working in the US government. In such a scenario the primary focus of stopping a bioweapons attack must be to apprehend the conspirators or the attacks will never cease. Approving a vaccine, utilizing novel RNA technology without extensive testing is extremely dangerous. The vaccine could be a bioweapon and even more dangerous than the original infection."

"and the amounts of a potential protein produced by the truncated mRNA would be too low to constitute a safety risk." "Conceived three decades ago, RNA based therapeutics have long inspired imaginations for their theoretical potential to transform cells of the body into "an on-demand drug factory." But despite heavy investment by the biotech industry, bench-to-bedside translation was constantly hindered by the fragility of mRNA. Over the years, researchers attempted to resolve intrinsic instability by encapsulating mRNA in nanocarriers made of polymers, lipids, or inorganic materials. Lipid nanoparticles (LNPs) were chosen by Moderna, Pfizer-BioNTech, CureVac, and Imperial College London for their COVID-19 vaccines. This has attracted the attention of specialists in the field of pharmaceutical biotechnology, some of whom have raised concerns about further unknowns. In a rapid response posted on bmj.com, JW Ulm, a gene therapy specialist who has published on tissue targeting of therapeutic vectors, raised concerns about the biodistribution of LNPs: "At present, relatively little has been reported on the tissue localization of the LNPs used to encase the SARS-CoV-2 spike protein-encoding messenger RNA, and it is vital to have more specific information on precisely where the liposomal nanoparticles are going after injection."
