fairly among the countries of the European Union. That is what President Ursula von der Leyen of the European Commission said on Friday morning in a debate on the heat waves in Southern Europe.

“ In countries such as Italy, Greece and Spain it is currently very hot, while in the Netherlands and Belgium it is too cold for the time of year. European cooperation in this area could be better ”, says Von der Leyen.

Southern European countries are getting relatively high temperatures, while Northern Europe could easily absorb some of the heat. Unfortunately, there is currently no agreement on the mutual exchange of temperature. ", says Von der Leyen. "

Von der Leyen does not yet know exactly how such an exchange system should be put into practice: "I am not going to talk about the details now. We will figure that out in due course. "
